The Ark was made of Good Stuff; the Cypress Wood, which would keep sound, and breed no Worms. The Church-Mystical will most certainly be so. And they that belong to the Church-Visible should be so. [Psal. 119.80.]²¹⁷

Many Carpenters no doubt wrought with Noah about the Ark; who yett were themselves Drowned after all, among those, whose Foundation was overflowed with a Flood. Even so, There are very many, whose Talents and Labours are employ'd about Church-Work all their Dayes; And yett these very Persons go down to the Congregation of them that Roar under the Waters. [1. Cor. 9.27. Matth. 7.23.]²¹⁸

214 Mather's typological explication of Noah's Ark appears to lean on his uncle's Figures and Types of the Old Testament (1683) 92–97, by Samuel Mather. See also Edward Taylor's Upon the Types (1989) 2:627–48. The fourfold method – literal, allegorical, tropological, anagogical – was still a common exegetical tool and can be found among Protestants of the period as much as among Roman Catholics. Athanasius Kircher offers his reading in Arca Noë (1675), lib. 2, cap. 9, pp. 149–54. See H. Caplan's "Four Senses," P.J. Korshin's Typologies (328–68), and M. I. Lowance, Jr.'s Language (160–77).

The Latin citation from Martin Luther, probably adapted from Adam Melchior's Vitæ Germanorum Theologorum (1620) 158, warns of "the wisdom of the world, which wants to put everything in order, and to look out for the Peace of the Church in the midst of the wicked."

216 See Samuel Mather, Figures (93, § 1). The ship of the Church cannot founder because piloted by Christ: "You will struggle in vain to sink the ship of Christ; / That vessel wavers, but it never goes down."

The Ark had a Door; And so ha's the Church too. Our Saviour saies, I am the Door. A CHRIST, must be Profess'd, Ador'd, Obey'd, by all that would be Admitted into the Church. They are not a Church, but as Tertullian expresses it, A Wasps-nest; who hold not the Truth as it is in Jesus.²¹⁹

The Ark had Passages for Light and Air, in the Upper-Story. No doubt, Noah, by Cranes and Ropes and proper Engines, pulling up, the vast Quantity of Excrements, in the Lower Story of the Ark, did here turn them out. Light as well as Breath was diffused, thro' agreeable Port-Holes of the Ark. The Church is likewise a Place of Light; and from a Glorious Christ, that Sun of Righteousness, it fetches all its Light. [Joh. 1.9. Psal. 119.105.]²²⁰

There were many Mansions and Chambers in the Ark; yett they all made but One Ark. Thus, the One Catholick Church ha's in it, many particular Congregations and Societies. And we should have some Care of all. [2. Cor. 11.28.]

There were Three Stories in the Ark. There are so in the Church; There is the Visible Church, and the Mystical Church, and the Triumphant Church: So many Ascending Stories. Our Blessed Noah, [JESUS] lodges in the uppermost.²²¹

There were all sorts of Creatures in the Ark; both clean, and unclean. And there are in the Church of God, Creatures of all Natures, both Good and Bad. But, It is credibly reported, That a sudden Flood in Somersetshire in England, produced a strange Agreement, between the most Quarrelsome Creatures, the Dogs and Hares, the Catts and Ratts, which were driven to the Top of the Hill together. The fiercest Creatures in the Ark, seem to have been under such a Cicuration. Certainly, They that visibly belong to the Church, ought to lay aside their Evil Natures.²²²

They that were in the Ark were Safe; and Safety was no where else to be mett withal. There satt Noah, – medijs tranquillus in undis. Our Salvation depends as much upon our getting into the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ. [Act. 2.47.]²²³

Mather may here refer to the 1607 flood in Somersetshire of which the anonymous pamphleteer reports that coneyes were sitting on the backs of floating sheep and cattle and other animals surviving side by side on the tops of hills, in A true report of certaine wonderfull overflowings of waters (1607), n.p. The fiercest creatures in Noah's Ark, as Mather assures us, were under a strange "Cicuration" or "taming" (OED).

Church, without Returning again unto it any more! Wither do they go? [Isa. 34.9, 10, 11.]²²⁴

| There seems to have been a Sabbath considered in the Ark: a Period of Seven Dayes observed by Noah. [Gen. 8.8, 10, 12.] There is so, and should be so, in the Church of our Lord. Dominicum Servasti? Christianus sum; Intermittere non possum.²²⁵ [197r]

As the Water buoy'd up the Ark, and carried it up towards Heaven; so the Church of God is Raised and Lifted up towards Heaven, by the Baptism which is used there. [1. Pet. 3.21.]²²⁶

When the Ark was made, a Flood then swept away a populous World before it. But there now remains a Fiery Flood, wherewith God will take Vengeance on a wicked World; The Diluvium Ignis, which we find celebrated in the Writings of the Ancients. The Poets tell us, of Pyrrha, (which Name carries Fire in it,) as the Wife of their Deucalion; and the Philosophers do frequently speak of an ἐκπύρωσις, A Conflagration, which is to come upon the World. Jo{se}phus would perswade us, That Adam himself left Prædictions of it. [2. Pet. 3.7.]²²⁷

To conclude; I will bring forth the Eight Persons, which were all that were in the Ark, to be unto us the Preachers of Righteousness, and of this awful Admonition;

There are but Few that shall be Saved.²²⁸

Q. You are not insensible, That some little, flashy, silly Pretenders to Witt, endeavour, to Ridicule the Account of Noah's Ark, as if it were a Fabulous Contrivance? v. 22.

A. One saies well; They betray their Ignorance in Naval Philosophy; That nothing improbable is asserted in the Scripture concerning the Capacity, or Manageableness of that Ship, ha's been confirmed, from an Experiment, which a celebrated Historian ha's recorded. Tis in Hornius's Arca Noë.²²⁹

²²⁶ See Samuel Mather, Figures (97, § 3).

²²⁸ Luke 13:23, 1 Pet. 3:20.

Peter Janslan ordered a Ship to be built, according to the Proportion of Noahs Ark. At first, the Contrivance was entertained with Laughter and Contempt, by the Seamen, who supposed it to be a ridiculous Business.

But afterwards it was found to be most convenient for a Merchant-man in Time of Peace, as being a swift Sailor, and managed with fewer Hands than other Ships. But the Inconvenience was, it did not carry great Guns; and in that Respect, it had a greater Resemblance to Noah's Ark, which was not intended for a Man of War.

Q. You know, there have been many Hypotheses invented by Ingenious Men, to satisfy us, How the FLOOD was brought about. Can you think of a better Entertainment for us, than some of those Hypotheses? v. 6.

A. Never was the Distemper, sometimes called, Hypothesimania, more discovered, than in the Hypotheses invented on this great Occasion.¹

Dr. Tho. Burnet, endeavours to demonstrate, that the Earth before the Deluge, had another Form, than it now appears to have; that there were neither Seas, nor Isles, nor Mountains, nor Vallees, any where, but the whole Body of the Waters lodg'd in the Caverns of the Earth. Hee feigns This, that so he may find a Storehouse, from whence may be drawn a sufficient Quantity of Water, to cover the Earth. Hee thinks, the whole Body of the Earth, which was an oily Crust, spread over the Abyss, to have been cleav'd asunder, and great Pieces of it broke here & there, & swallowed up in the Great Gulf; & while those that stood in their former State, make a show of Islands, and Mountains, those which are covered by the Waters, make Sea's and Lakes. Petrus Ramazzini, an Italian, writing on the Wonderful Springs of Modena, reflecting on this Hypothesis of Burnet, saies, that whatever of Novelty be pretended for this Fancy, the Fiction is very Ancient. Hee shoves, That Franciscus Patritius, in a Book, Of the Rhetoric of the Ancients, written in Italian, & printed at Venice, Anno 1562. ha's a Dialogue, which gives us this Hypothesis, as coming originally from an Abyssinian Philosopher in Spain; who quoted the Annals of Ethiopia for it.²

² Thomas Burnet garnered tremendous opposition for his Telluris Theoria Sacra (1681) and for its English translation The Theory of the Earth (1684, 2nd ed. 1691), a Cartesian explanation of the Creation and of the Flood. Mather here refers to Burnet's discussion in Telluris (lib. 1, cap. 4–8, pp. 24–82) and in Sacred Theory (1684), bk. 1, chs. 5–9, pp. 51–127. The information on "Petrus Ramazzini" and the "Abyssinian Philosopher" is extracted from The Abyssinian Philosophy Confuted (1697), by Robert St. Clair, MD (n.d.), who translated De Fontium Mutinensium (1692), a tract on the springs of Modena, by Bernardo Ramazzini (1633–1714), Italian professor at Modena and Padua, father of industrial medicine. According to St. Clair (Abyssinian 88–89), Ramazzini's work illustrates that Burnet's theory is really a third-hand affair, derived from the Italian historian, poet, and literary critic Franciscus Patritius, aka. Francesco Patrizzi (1529–97), whose Della retorica dieci dialoghi [Of the Rhetoric of the Ancients] (1562) identifies Julius Strozza and Count Balthazar Castillon as the secondary and the "Annals of Ethiopia" as the original source. Mather's "Abyssinian Philosopher" (St. Clair 89) is a second-hand pun on Burnet's theory of the watery abyss in subterranean caverns. The German philosopher Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz offers much the same theory about the waters hidden in subterraneous caverns, in his Protogaea (wr. 1691–93, publ. 1749), sec. 4, 6, pp. 9–11, 15–19.

Many Ingenious Men, have bestow'd Confutations, & some of them, very severe Castigations upon this Hypothesis, as being altogether unscriptural. And some of those, who have overturn'd this Hypothesis, have gone to establish others more Agreeable.³

Among these, I will not mention unto you, the Opinion of Mr. Whiston, about the Influence, which a Comet, in its passing along, and pressing upon the Earth, might have in producing the Flood; because tho' the Fancy be very Ingenious, yett it is altogether Arbitrary; and, I suppose, many do not think it Satisfactory.⁴

But I will mention to you, the Opinion of Dr. St. Clair, because it seems founded much upon Experiment.⁵

The Doctor holds the Cause of an Effervescence between an Acid and an Alkali, to proceed from the sudden Exclusion of Air, out of the Pores of the Liquors, & the Salts, by the two Contraries, closely uniting into one Body. Now, saies hee, "I had a Glass-Pipe, blown into the shape of a round Ball at the End, that was Hermetically Sealed, and bended into a Syphon, whose Legs were Parallel, but Distant from one another Three Inches, so that the Leg on which the Ball stood, was Nine Inches long, but the other Two feet long. The shorter Leg, and the Intermedial Pipe, I fill'd quite with Water, to the lower End of the great Leg, so that there was no Air left in the Space: Then I putt into it some Filings of Steel, about a Drachm and an half: and after the Filings were laid along, in the Intermedial Pipe, I putt to it, Oyl of Vitriol, thirty or forty drops, which mixing with the Water (for otherwise strong Oil of Vitriol, does not work upon the Filings) did immediately corrode the Iron, and sent up to the Ball so great a Quantity of this generated Air, as to fill it, and half the shorter Leg, in a very little Space; in which it was remarkable, that applying my Hand warm to the Ball, it did expand itself in an Instant, so much as to drive out the Water, at the longer Pipe; but on withdrawing my Hand, it contracted itself into half the Ball, where it hath stood ever since."⁶

For useful studies of the Burnettian controversy, see K. B. Collier's Cosmogonies (68–91) and M. H. Nicholson's Mountain Gloom (184–270).

3 Among the major attacks on Burnet's theory are Erasmus Warren's Geologia: Or a Discourse concerning the Earth before the Deluge (1690), William Whiston's New Theory of the Earth (1696), and John Keill's Examination of Dr. Burnet's Theory (1698), triggering refutations and counter-refutations.

4 William Whiston argues that a passing comet precipitated Noah's Flood and would also bring about the conflagration of the earth at the Second Coming (New Theory [1696], pt. 2, bk. 4, chs. 4–5, pp. 300–82) and "An Appendix," in New Theory, 5th ed. (1737) 459–78.

5 Robert St. Clair, MD, The Abyssinian Philosophy Confuted (1697).

6 Mather's citation is from St. Clair's "To the Reader" (Abyssinian C5v–C5r). An ancient unit of measurement, "a Drachm and an half" amounts to c. 41.015 grains or 2.656 grams – a very small amount. "Oyl of Vitriol" is an archaic designation for "concentrated sulfuric acid." St. Clair's contraption is depicted in table 2 of his Abyssinian Philosophy.

On this Experiment, the Doctor ha's his Thoughts raised, to consider, That there once were & still are, great Cavities in the Bowels of the Earth, full of Water. These Cavities, were made from the Beginning, for noble and worthy Uses. This Abyss did communicate with the Ocean; and in these Cavities, were generated Minerals and Metals; and by the Colluctation of several contrary Salts in the Abyss, might be generated an Air, & sometimes so suddenly, as to make Explosions, and horrible shakings and risings of the Earth. There were Mountains also in the Beginning; which is evident from the Existence of Rivers then mentioned. Now suppose, that at the Time of the Deluge, there happened such a Conflict of contrary Salts, Acid and Alcali, in the bowels of the Earth: There would be an Air generated, which in many Places being penn'd up, might cause Earth-quakes; and at the same Time some of this Exhalation escaping into the open Air, from thence might proceed Great Rains for forty Dayes Continuance, accompanied with Terrible Thunder & Lightning, to strike the greater Terror into the Wicked, that in their Fright, they might not find their Way to the Ark, which they had formerly so much despised, & by the Showrs be further hindred, if they attempted it. By the Air enclosed in the Bowels of the Earth, we may imagine, That the Water of the Abyss was dislodged, and so came out to overflow the Earth; (by which wee may interpret, the Opening of the Great Depths;) and this at the Passages by which the Abyss, & the Ocean did communicate; which so swelled by Degrees, till the Top of the Highest Mountains were covered.⁷

We may further infer, That the Air now being infected with mineral Steams, & in a great Measure composed thereof, might occasion that shortning of Mans Life, which happen'd quickly | after the Deluge. This, tho' it might not so visibly affect the stronger Constitutions of Noah and his Sons, yett might lay such a Foundation of Infirmities in their Posterity, as might anon shorten their Life to seventy or eighty Years. Wee may suppose likewise, that when the Heat of the Effervescence, & Ebullition, in the Bowels of the Earth, was over, the Waters returned by Degrees into the Bowels of the Earth, and so the Ocean, into the Bounds that were sett unto it by God.⁸

Q. We have not yett had before us, all the Hypotheses of the FLOOD, that are worthy to be considered? v. 6.

A. And therefore the Thoughts of that excellent Person, Mr. John Ray, shall be now employ'd, on this Occasion; that so our Apprehensions of that wonderful Revolution, may grow up into more of Consistency.⁹

⁹ Next in line is John Ray (1628–1705), the celebrated English naturalist, fellow of the Royal Society (FRS), and author of many physico-theological and millenarian works, which

2. We have not yet had before us, all the symbolisms of the Flood, that are worthy to be considered: p. 6.

1. And therefore, if I thought of that excellent person, Mr John Ray, shall be employed, on this occasion, that so of ~~some~~ Apprehensions of that wonderful Revolution, may ~~be~~ grow up in our more affection.

Concerning the Deluge, famous are the Testimonies of the Ancient Writers among the pagans.

Belus the Chaldean, and Ptolemy of Damascus, and others, mentioned by Procopius, have acknowledged the truth of this matter.

Suppose adds two ~~Testimonies~~ Testimonies more, Ous of Mithras, and another of Herodotus, only they are not without some fabulous Adornments.

From Alexander Polyhistor there is a passage brought by Cyril, which speaks of the Deluge, but of the Deluge of Noah.

And Plutarch in his Book, De Solertia Animalium, has the Story of the Deluge but out of the Ark.

Kircher in his Arca Noe, calls Democritus, that the Deluge of Ovid, and of Lucan, was no other than of Noah.

And, the Tradition of a general Flood, was very current, for thousands of years among all people, especially in the Countries near to which the Ark rested, & Noah afterwards lived.

And, that the Egyptians, under Manetho, in honour of the Egyptian, Sepius, Seneb, and Philopater, having on the River of Egypt, on the Ark, with a man & a woman standing before it, and a man & a woman looking out of it: and two birds above it; one flying with a Branch of a Tree in its mouth, another resting upon it. This Figure of it, and a discourse on it, out of Pseudo-crisostomus may be seen in Kircher's Arca Noe.

These traditions were continued long after the Jewish times, and the Deluge of the Scriptures; and yet they were done by pagans, which is a proof that among the pagans too, the story of the Flood was received.

But yet causes of the Flood are yet things, which Mr Ray proposes to rest upon.

But, some hold, that the Flood was altogether miraculous; and that the mingling of waters on purpose for this tremendous occasion; which being dispatched, it again destroyed them. This is called the Knot.

And yet there is no such mingling of waters in supposing a miraculous Operation in this awful matter. There needed only a Transmutation of some other Body into Water. Why might not the dense power and providence, now being together such Natural Agents, as might change the Air into Water? If so Air, and all the Bodies composed with it, were changed into Water, they might make a Bulk of water, of equal Quantity with the Bulk of the Air, and so great a Perpetual condensation and Refraction. This Barred Illumination Kircher alleges, that the Deluge was the suspension of the Flood.

Seco, totum illud aëreum Spectrum, effudit ad supernam Regionem, præpositum dei Virtutis in Aquas, per inspicabilem nubium condensationem multitudinem, quæ repeditur, contraxitque, cupit ubi. has tamen fuit, ut non supernas cum inferiori in Oceanum committat, sed illius cupit in Oceanum committat, sed illius cupit in Oceanum committat, sed illius cupit in Oceanum committat.

But yet sacred Scripture mentions not the condensation of the Air into Water. Which for without further consideration of the cause of the Flood, which are there more expressly mentioned.

The opening of the Windows of Heaven, is assigned for one of the causes. This means, the causing of all the Water suspended in the Air, to descend in Rain upon the Earth. A Rain that continued forty days, night, perhaps and continued forty days, together.

And yet the opening of the Windows of Heaven, will afford us small Quantities of Water. In the History of the Creation, they are opposed with the Water here under command, as if they were incommensurate, and almost equal. And experience tells us, that from the clouds, in an hour on wet ground, there will come down wonderful Floods. These things we call, water-spouts, will in a very little space make a great inundation for a wonderment. And yet reading of the Scriptures will tell you, that the Rain was such, as was of the Universal Deluge.

And breaking up of all the

Concerning the Deluge, famous are the Testimonies of the Ancient Writers among the Pagans.

Berosus the Chaldean, and Nicolaus of Damascus, and others, produced by Josephus, have acknowledged the Summ of the Matter.

Eusebius adds Two Acknowledgments more; one of Melon, and another of Abydenus; only they are not without some fabulous Adulterations.

From Alexander Polyhistor, there is a Passage brought by Cyril; which quotes Intimations of the Flood, from the Timæus of Plato.

And Plutarch in his Book, De solertiâ Animalium; has the Story of the Dove sent out of the Ark.

Kircher, in his Arca Noë, hath demonstrated, that the Deucalion of Ovid, and {of} the ancients, was no other than our Noah.¹⁰

Indeed, the Tradition of a General Flood, was every where current, for thousands of Years among all People; especially in the Countreyes near to which the Ark rested, & Noah afterwards lived. It is remarkable, That the Apameans, coined Moneyes, in honour of the Emperours, Septimius Severus, and, Philippus Arabs; having on the Reverse, the Figure of an Ark, with a Man & a Woman standing before it, and a Man & a Woman looking out of it; and Two Doves above it; one flying with a Branch of a Tree in its Mouth, another resting upon it. The Figure of it, and a Discourse on it, out of Falconerius, may be seen in Mather also puts to good use in his Christian Philosopher and his Threefold Paradise. Mather here excerpts Ray's Miscellaneous Discourses Concerning the Dissolution and Changes of the World (1692) 56–101; Ray presents a fuller discussion of the same material in his popular Three Physico-Theological Discourses, third edition (1713), Discourse 2, chs. 1–2, pp. 62–120; John Edwards cites the same ancient sources as evidence of the Noachide Flood (Discourse 1:118).

¹⁰ Ray (Miscellaneous 56–60, 62; Three Physico [1713], 62–68) refers to the standard sources: the story of the Flood and the Ark in Armenia, by the Chaldean historian Berosus and by the Syrian Nicolaus of Damascus (friend of Herod the Great), as excerpted in Josephus Flavius's Antiquities (1.3.6) and in Against Apion (1.19). Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica (9.11–13, 19) cites Melo (Apollonios Molon), the famous Greek rhetorician and grammarian of Rhodes (2nd–1st c. BCE), who authored a polemic Against the Jews; and the Assyrian historian Abydenus (2nd c. BCE), author of a multivolume history Assyriaka kai Babyioniaka. Bishop Cyril of Alexandria cites the Greek polymath Alexander Polyhistor of Miletus (born c. 105–c. 40 BCE), in Contra Julianum (1.6–10, 18), and Plato's Timæus (22a–c). These venerable Fathers of the Church felt called upon to defend the primacy of the Mosaic history (and of Christianity) against those of the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans, whose chronicles related many similar stories to those in the Torah. For Cyril of Alexandria as for his fellow apologists, the teachings of Moses are far older than those of Pythagoras of Samos, of Thales of Miletus, of Solon, or even of Cadmus – all of whom inadvertently collected the wisdom of Moses in their sojourn through the Fertile Crescent, where (allegedly) distorted versions of the Pentateuch were taught as genuine revelations of the Egyptian, Phoenician, and Babylonian priests. Thus Plutarch – like the Israelite Lawgiver – has Deucalion send a dove out of the Ark, in De Sollertia Animalium (968 F), Plutarch's Moralia (12:377). In the same manner, the German polymath Athanasius Kircher asserts the identity of Ovid's Deucalion (Metamorphoses 1.315ff) with the biblical Noah (Gen 6–10), in his Arca Noë, in tres libros digesta (1675), lib. 2, c. 6, pp. 136–42, where Kircher cites all the standard sources of the ancients.

Kirchers Arca Noë. These Moneyes were coined indeed, long after our Saviours Time, and the Divulcation of the Scriptures; yett they were done by Pagans, which is a Proof that among the Pagans too, the Story of the Flood was received.¹¹

But the Causes of the Flood are the Things, which Mr. Ray proposes to insist upon.

First; Some hold, That the Flood was altogether Miraculous; and that the Almighty created Waters on Purpose for this tremendous Occasion; which being dispatch'd, He again destroyed them. This is to cutt the Knott. And yett there is no such mighty Absurdity in supposing a miraculous Operation in this awful Matter. There needed only a Transmutation of some other Body into Water. Why might not the Divine Power and Providence, now bring together such Natural Agents, as might change the Air into Water? If the Air, and all the Bodies commixed with it, were changed into Water, they must make a Bulk of Water, of æqual Quantity with themselves; unless we grant a Peripatetical Condensation and Rarefaction. The learned Athanasius Kircher alledges this, as the undoubted Instrument of the Flood. *Dico, totum illud aereum spacium usque ad supremam Regionem Aeris, præpotentis Dei Virtute, in Aquas, per inexplicabilem nubium coacervatarum multitudinem, quâ replebatur, conversum esse: cujus ubertas tanta fuit, ut Aer supremus cum inferiori in Oceanum commutatus videri potuerit, non Naturæ Viribus, sed illius cujus voluntati et imperio cuncta subsunt.*¹²

But the Sacred Scripture mentions not the Conversion of the Air into Water. Wherefore we will rather consider the Causes of the Flood, which are there more expressly mentioned.

11 Ray, Miscellaneous (62–62) and Three Physico (67–68). The “Apamaeans,” inhabitants of one of six cities by that name in Bithynia, Coele-Syria, and Mesopotamia (KP), coined money in honor of Roman Emperors Lucius Septimius Severus (193–211 CE) and of Marcus Julius Philippus (244–49 CE), an Arab from Shahbā, near Damascus (OCD). These ancient coins are reproduced in table 1 of Ray’s Three Physico (between pp. 68–69) and in Kircher’s Arca Noë (lib. 2, c. 6, p. 138) – both authors relying on Octavius Falconierius, aka. Ottávio Falconieri (1636/46–76), abbot of St. Girolamo de Fiesole, Italian archeologist, and man of letters, whose Inscriptiones athleticæ nuper repertæ (1668), depicts the Phrygian coins (sect. 5), which both Ray and Kircher reproduce in their own works.

12 Ray, Miscellaneous (65 ff, Three Physico, ch. 2), here recites (and then rejects on biblical grounds) the old Cartesian notion that God transmuted the element of air into water (and back again) to inundate the highest mountains on earth with water upwards of 15 cubits (Gen. 7:20). Ray’s colleagues Robert Boyle and Sir Isaac Newton were similarly debating whether the element air could be transmuted into water (see M. T. Walton, “Boyle and Newton” 11–18). Mather’s Latin citation from Kircher’s Arca Noë (lib. 2, c. 5, p. 132) is here taken at second hand from Ray, whose translation of Kircher’s Latin text Mather omits: “I affirm, that all that Aëreal Space that reaches up to the supreme Region of the Air, was, by the Power of the Omnipotent GOD, and Instrumentality of an inexplicable Multitude of Clouds amassed together, wherewith it was filled, changed into Water, so that the upper and lower Air might seem to be transmuted into an Ocean, not by the Strength of Nature, but of Him to whose Will and Power all things are subject” (Miscellaneous 65, and Three Physico 71–72).

The Opening of the Windowes of Heaven, is assigned for one of the Causes. This means, the Causing of all the Water suspended in the Air, to descend in Rain upon the Earth; A Rain that continued Forty Dayes, nay, perhaps one hundred & fifty Dayes, together. These Treasures of the Air, will afford no small Quantities of Water. In the History of the Creation, they are opposed unto the Waters here under Firmament, as if they were ισορροπα, and almost æqual. And Experience tells us, That from Thunder-Clouds, in an hour or two's Time, there will come down wonderful Floods. Those things we call, Water-Spouts, will in a very little Space, make Inundations to a Wonderment. And the Reading of the Septuagint will tell you, That the Rains were such, at the Time of the Universal Deluge.¹³

The Breaking up of all the | Fountains of the Great Deep, is assign'd for another of the Causes. By the Great Deep, our ingenious Ray, understands, the Subterraneous Waters, which communicate with the Sea. That they do so, we see from the Caspian and Mediterranean Sea's; which receive into themselves mighty Rivers, and yett have no visible Out-lets: Nay, the latter ha's also abundance of the Ocean poured into it, by the Streights of Gibraltar. People have said, (until Dr. Halley has demonstrated otherwise) They must needs discharge their Waters, into the Abyss of Waters under the Earth. By the breaking up of the Fountains of the Great Deep, we may understand, the Making of great Issues and Apertures, for the Subterraneous Waters, to rush out upon the World. [202v]

As for the Sea itself, it is no where above a German Mile deep; in most Places, not Half so much. We may take Half a Mile as a middle Term; or Two of our Miles; which bears little Proportion, to the whole Terraqueous Globe; the Semi-diameter whereof, is about Three Thousand Four hundred & forty Italian Miles. How the Abyss below may be circumstanced, is as yett unknown unto us.¹⁴

It is affirmed, That the River Volga, pours as much Water into the Caspian Sea, as in a Years Time, would make up a Mass of Water, æqual to the Globe of the Earth. And the Hourly Effusions of the River Po in Italy, are by Ricciolus computed to amount unto 18000000 cubical Paces of Water. Whence a learned Writer ha's inferred, That all the Rivers in the World together, do Daily discharge Half an Ocean of Waters into the Sea.¹⁵

¹³ Ray (Miscellaneous 66–69; Three Physico 72–75), Gen. 7:11, 8:2 (LXX).

¹⁵ Ray's discussion in Miscellaneous (82) and Three Physico (77–78) draws on the bulky Almagestum novum (1651) and on Geographiae et hydrographiae reformatae (1661), by the Italian

And yett Mr. Edmund Halley, offers Probabilities, That Springs and Rivers, every where, owe their Original, unto Vapours condensed on the Sides of the Mountains. And it is demonstrated, That the Magnitude of Rivers, or the Quantity of Water they evacuate, is proportionable to the Length and Heighth of the Ridges from whence they have their Fountains. But Mr. Ray will hardly allow, this to be all the Original of the Rivers, in the Europæan and more Temperate Countreyes; tho' in the Hott Regions, the Vapours are more considerable. He will have the Rains to come in, for a vast share in the Matter. Now ordinarily [Communibus Annis,] the Rain that falls in a whole Year, amounts not unto above one Quarters Continual Rain. And if this Rain, thus intermitting will suffice for a Daily Effusion of Half an Ocean, it is clear, that if it should Rain without any Intermission, in forty Dayes continual Rain, there would be distill'd upon the Earth, Eighty Oceans of Water.¹⁶

The Water falling upon the Earth, must have some Time to Run into the Sea; But in the Time of the Flood; it fell much faster than it could Run; & it had those that broke out of the Fountains of the Abyss to accompany it. In Forty Dayes there might be a prodigious Amassment of Waters. And yett Mr. Ray, concurs with Mr. Warren, that there is no necessity to Raise the Waters Fifteen Cubits above the Tops of the Highest Mountains. Nor does he think, That the Fall of the Rains for the Flood, is to be limited unto Forty Dayes. It was Forty Dayes before the Ark floated; but the Rains fell for One hundred & Fifty Dayes.¹⁷

But after all, our Ingenious Ray, comes to that, which he thinks the most probable of all the Causes, that ever he ha's heard assigned for the Deluge. This is; That the Glorious GOD, at this Time changed the Center of the Earth, and sett it nearer to the Middle of that Hæmisphære, which was then principally Inhabited. Hereupon the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, must needs press upon the Subterraneous Abyss; By the Mediation thereof, they must force the Water upward, and compell it to run out at those Wide Mouthes, which were made by the Divine Power, breaking up the Fountains of the Great Deep. We may suppose this, a gradual Emotion. And the Waters thus poured out, from the Orifices of Jesuit astronomer Giovanni Battista Riccioli (1598–1671), who tried to establish the ratio of water to land and the earth's radius.

16 Ray's Miscellaneous (82, 84, 85, 95) and Three Physico (97–98, 106–107, 111–13). "Communibus Annis" (Miscellaneous 95) is nothing else but the "annual rainfall in the region."

17 Ray, Miscellaneous (95–96), ultimately agrees with Erasmus Warren (fl. 1680–1714), Rector of Worlington, Suffolk, who posits in his Geologia Sacra (1690), chs. 15–16, that there was not enough water to inundate the highest mountains on earth, but only enough to cover the sides of the mountains about 15 cubits in most places (300–55), and in A Defence of the Discourse (1691) 165–69, 172–75, 190–197. Thus Ray agrees with both Burnet and Warren that the Noachide Flood involved neither a new creation of water, nor the transmutation of air into water, nor the falling of any supercelestial waters. For a helpful review of the debate, see K. B. Collier's Cosmogonies (ch. 8, pp. 81–91).

the Fountains, upon the Earth, the Declivity being changed by the Removal of the Center, could not flow down to the Sea again, but must necessarily stagnate upon the Earth, & overflow it: But afterwards, the Earth returning to its old Center, the Waters then returned unto their ancient Receptacles.¹⁸

Hitherto, we do not see America drowned. Mr. Ray thinks, it needed not, as being at this | time unpeopled. But we have notorious Proofs, in our Subterraneous Occurrences, that the Flood reached unto America. Wherefore, I see not, why the same Cause operating a little further, might not overwhelm This, as well as the other Hæmisphere. But Mr. Ray proposes another Solution. That is; That the Divine Power might at this Time, employ the Instrumentality of some Natural Agent, which is to us at present unknown, to depress the Surface of the Ocean, so as to force the Waters of the Abyss, thro' the forementioned Channels, and make the whole Surface of the Earth feel the Effects thereof.¹⁹ [203r]

An unusual Pressure upon the Superficies of the Ocean, would produce Tragical and Marvellous Things!

I will here add something from our Incomparable Newton;

The Universal Flood, he thinks, can no better Way be accounted for, than by supposing the Center of Gravitation removed for a Time, towards the Middle of the then Inhabited Parts of the World. And a Change of its Place, but the two Thousandth Part of the Radius of this Globe, were sufficient to bury the Tops of the Highest Hills under Water.²⁰

18 Ray (Miscellaneous 98–99; Three Physico 117–18). The theory that a sudden change in the center of the earth's gravity may have triggered the Flood was also offered in Robert Hooke's "Discourse of Earthquakes" (Posthumous Works, Discourse V, pp. 321–22, 349–50).

19 Ray excludes America from "drowning" in the Noachide Flood, "it being in all probability unpeopled at that time" (Miscellaneous 99–100). In the third edition of his Three Physico-Theological Discourses (1713) 118–19, he adds that even though José Acosta, Antonio de Herrera, Agostino Corata, and Lupus Gomora report similar flood narratives from Peru and Mexico, God, who operates through secondary causes, would have had to resort to miracles, "requiring twenty-two oceans of water" to inundate the entire globe "fifteen Cubits above the Tops of the heighest Mountains." Among the seventeenth-century physico-theologians who excluded America from Noah's Flood or rejected its universality are the great Gerhard Mercator (1512–94), in Atlas, sive Cosmographicae Meditationes de Fabrica Mundi (1595); Samuel Purchas, Purchas his Pilgrims (1626), bk. 8, ch. 1, § 1, p. 791; Isaac de La Peyrère, in Men Before Adam (London, 1656), bk. 4, chs. 7–9, pp. 239–58; Isaac Vossius, in Dissertatio de vera aetate mundi (1659) 53; Georg C. Kirchmaier, De diluvii universalitate dissertatio prolusoria (1667) 3–60; Edward Stillingfleet, Origines Sacrae (8th ed.), in Works (1709), pt. 1, pp. 1–3, 337–39, pt. 2, p. 9; Erasmus Warren, in Geologia (1690) 300–55 and in A Defence of the Discourse (1691) 165–69, 172–75, 190–97, 209; and William Whiston, New Theory of the Earth, fifth edition (London, 1737), pt. 2, bk. 4, ch. 4, Corollary 2, p. 405. See also D. C. Allen's Legend (ch. 5) and N. Cohn's Noah's Flood (ch. 4).

20 Sir Isaac Newton – like his disciple William Whiston – believed that a comet (probably Halley's Comet) – was responsible for the Flood. Yet unlike Whiston, who subsequently lost his Lucasian Chair of Mathematics at Cambridge for his anti-Trinitarian Arianism, Newton was circumspect enough to withhold from the press anything that might contradict the verity

In the Midst of these Philosophical Contemplations, I was refresh'd with a Poetical One, which tho' perhaps too rudely apply'd by the Author, is excellently well express'd.

"Thus when the Great Creator of the Earth,
Would Drown that World, to which He first gave Birth;
Commission'd Storms of Rain rush down from High,
Thro' the wide Sluices of the clouded Sky;
But while without Effect those Waters fall,
And only Wash the Surface of the Ball,
Heav'n's mighty Voice, in dreadful Accents spoke,
The Vast Abyss loud Peals of Thunder broke;
Imprison'd Seas impetuous Passage found,
And roll'd a Liquid Ruin o'er the Ground;
The Roots of Mountains from their Seats are torn,
And floating Islands on high Billowes born;
Lightnings keen Flashes swiftly downward fly,
And rattling Thunder cracks the trembling Sky;
From frowning Heaven, each dreadful Plague is hurl'd,
And Nature groaning, quits the Delug'd World."²¹

Q. By what other Hypothesis ha's the Flood been explained? v. 11.

A. What if wee should suppose, that the Earth before the Flood, was nearer to the Sun, than it is Now?²²

And so, the Terrestrial Globe, & Aërial Mass made quicker Gyrations, than they do Now:

By Consequence, neither Dayes nor Years, were so long as Now; but the Air was more Pure, Fine, Ethereal! This helps us to conceive the Longevity of the Antediluvian Patriarchs.

of the Bible. See Newton's A Treatise of the System of the World (1728) 10–28; and Edmond Halley's "Theory of the Variation of the Magnetical Compass" and his "Account of the Cause of the Change of the Variation of the Magnetical Needle," both appearing in Miscellanea Curiosa (1705) 1:27–42, 43–60.

²¹ The choice of language, imagery, and doggerel rhythm – all point toward the poetry of Sir Richard Blackmore (1654–1729), physician to William and Mary, poet, and sometime school teacher. Among his best-known works are Redemption, a poem in six books; and The Creation, a philosophical poem in 7 books; King Arthur, a heroic poem on the Arthurian legend; and A Paraphrase upon the Book of Job. Cotton Mather seemed to like Blackmore's poetry sufficiently to mention him several times. See Mather's annotations on Job 1:1–3 ("BA"), Diary (2:105, 141), and Threefold Paradise (192).

²² See Thomas Burnet's Sacred Theory of the Earth (1684), bk. 2, ch. 3, pp. 194–96.

And so, the Sins, which provoked God to drown the Primitive Earth, might be such as had some Rise from too lively a Motion of the Blood.

The Vapours then could not Ascend far, or Hold up long, in so rarify'd an Air; hence there were no Tedious Rains, but Nightly Dewes; as the Sacred Pages intimate. And hence, No Rainbow before the Flood.

The Sins of Men being risen to an Extremity, what if the Almighty removed the Earth, to a further Distance from the Sun? Whence the Atmosphære of the Air, for a while Pressing unæqually on the Globe, the Ocean must needs come Tumbling in upon the Land; and the like Disorder of the Atmosphære, might also bring horrible Rains upon the World.²³

Q. Can we Illustrate the History of the Flood, with any Hypothesis of it, found in the Writings of the ancient Pagans? v. 11.

A. You will smile, if I tell you of such a Commentator, as Seneca upon Genesis. However, if you please, we will make him one!

Seneca treating of that Fatal Day, as he calls it, when the Deluge shall come, (for he fancied it still to come,) quæstions, How it may come to pass? [L.III. Nat. Quest. c. 27.] whether by the Force of the Ocean overflowing the Earth; or by the Swelling of Rivers, or by perpetual Rains without Intermission, or by the Swelling of Rivers, and the Opening of New Fountains; or, there shall not be one Cause alone of so great a Mischief, but all these things concur, Uno agmine ad exitium humani generis. This last Resolution, he thinks, is the Truth; and he has, in the last Chapter of that Book, these Remarkable Words.

“Where hath not Nature disposed Moisture, to attack us on all sides, when it pleases? There are huge Lakes which we do not see; much of the Sea, that lies hidden; many Rivers that slide in secret. So that there may be Causes of a Deluge on all Sides, when some Waters flow in under the Earth; Others flow round about, which being long pent up, overwhelm it; and Rivers join with Rivers, Pools with Pools: – And as our Bodies sometimes dissolve into Sweat, so the Earth shall melt, and without the help of other Causes, shall find in itself, what will drown it: – There being in a sudden, every where, openly, and secretly, from above, & from beneath, an Eruption of Waters.”

²³ The incredible longevity of the antediluvian patriarchs was a frequent topic of discussion among the physico-theologians of the day. Standard explanations such as those that linked man's declining longevity with Adam's lapsus and his offspring's moral decay were as common as those that sought to establish natural causality such as the change of climate, nutrition, and living conditions after the Flood. Robert Hooke's "Lectures and Discourses of Earthquakes," dating to the 1680s, provides one of the best summaries of the theories of the period, in Posthumous Works (Discourse 5, esp. pp. 322, 346–48), but his successors surpassed his achievements: Ray's Three Physico (Disc. 2, ch. 3, pp. 122–23), Burnet's Theory of the Earth (1691 ed.), bk. 2, chs. 2–5, pp. 140–74; Whiston's New Theory (1737 ed.), pt. 2, bk. 2, ch. 7, pp. 125–33; bk. 3, ch. 3, sec. 35–45, pp. 246–62.

These Words are, as Dr. Patrick saies of them, written as if he had been directed, to make a Commentary upon Moses.²⁴

Q. Were there any Mountains before the FLOOD? v. 20.

A. It seems probable, There were. See Deut. 33.15. Psal. 90.1, 2. Prov. 8.22, 23, 25. Besides, Tubalcain, is said to have been an Instructor of every Artificer in Brass & Iron; there were then Metals before the Flood; which are scarce to be found, except at the Root of Mountains.²⁵

Q. Why must the Sea, and the Fish, be excused, from that Curse of the FLOOD? v. 21.

A. This Quæstion was moved unto Austin of old; and if there were more Flourish than Judgment in his Answer, yett lett the great Character of such a Father, procure some Reverence unto it.

*In peccato primi hominis, terra de quâ gustaverat, statim maledicitur. Quâ in renotandum, ipsa animalia, quæ maledictam terram manducaverunt expertia maledictionis esse non posse, præsertim quum terra cum suis animalibus, maledicta erat. Iterum ergò alia adhuc quæstio surgit: Quarè Deus etiam Aquis in Adæ maledicto non maledixit? Cui facilè imè respondetur, quòd non Aquam contrà interdictum Domini bibit, sed de Terræ Fructu homo comedit, exceptis quoque his Rationibus, Aquis à maledicto Adæ Deus pepercit, quoniam per Aquam diluere maledictionem illam paraverat, quod in Diluvio est factum, et nunc per Baptismum indulgetur: Nam in Aqua et Spiritu cuncta humana corporalia crimina simul et spiritualia purgantur. Aquatilia enim maledicto vindictæ non succumbunt, quia in maledictionis participatione non sunt. Ac per hoc Dominus, cum mortis humane maledictum Resurgendo deposuerat, non Terrestrialium sed Aquatiliu carnem Animalium comedebat, cum ad confirmationem Resurrectionis coràm Discipulis, piscis assi partem, et favum mellis manducavit.*²⁶

²⁶ According to St. Augustine's De mirabilibus sacrae scripturae. lib. 1: De Moysi Pentateuche, cap. 4. [PL 35. 2155], "in the sin of the first man, the earth which he had enjoyed was immediately cursed. In view of this, the animals themselves, which had eaten [from the fruit of] the cursed earth, could not be immune from the curse, especially when the earth had been cursed along with its animals. Again therefore another question arises: Why did God not also curse

After all, doubtless, the Flood threw the Sea into horrible Disorder, and many Fish were thereby destroy'd.²⁷

Q. What was the Employment of Noah, during the long Year, that he was in the Ark? v. 24.

A. I will Transcribe to you, the Words of Strigelius, in an Oration of his, De Doctrinâ Physicâ.

*Quas operas fecisse putandum est hunc senem, cum Menses Tredecim lunares inclusus Arcâ inter horribiles Aquarum sonitus veheretur? Sanè rem Rusticam exercere, aut Rempublicam consilio regere non potuit. Functus est igitur munere et officio tum Philosophi tum Concionatoris, et suos Auditores non modò de Deo, de venturo liberatore, de Vitâ aternâ docuit, sed etiam disseruit de Naturâ Rerum, et quàm multæ huic impressæ sint dulcissimæ imagines, sapienter monuit. Corvum ex Arcâ emissum, nec revertentem, quòd cadaveribus laniandis occupatus esset, comparavit Doctore πλεονεκτικῷ, qui utilitatem suam sic tuetur, ut quicquid agat, ad eam referat, oblitus commodorum Ecclesiæ. Columbam verò redeuntem cum oleæ ramo, boni ac salutaris Doctoris Imaginem esse dixit, qui magis de Ecclesiæ salute et conservatione angitur, quàm de Suâ et liberorum incolumitate. Neque verò dubium est, hunc præstantissimum Philosophum locorum rationem accuratè descripsisse, ut sciret egressus ex Arcâ, quâ in parte orbis Terrarum esset, et quantum à patriâ distaret. Collegit enim Historiam primæ Ecclesiæ, quæ ante Diluvium sapientiâ et virtute floruit, et Temporum seriem diligenter annotavit. Hic Scholasticis aperis, haud dubiè optimus senex damna Diluvij levavit.*²⁸ the waters by Adam's curse? To which it is very easily replied, because man did not drink water against the Lord's prohibition, but he ate from the fruit of the earth; and aside from these reasons, God spared the waters from Adam's curse because he had planned to wash away that curse with water, which was done in the flood, and which is now bestowed through baptism. For in water and the Spirit all the sins of mankind both bodily and spiritual are cleansed. Indeed, the aquatic animals did not suffer the curse of vengeance, because they did not share in the curse. And because of this the Lord, when he put aside the curse of human death by his resurrection, did not eat the flesh of land animals but of aquatic animals, when at the confirmation of his resurrection among the disciples, he ate roasted fish and honeycomb."

²⁸ Mather's excerpt from De Doctrina Physica, by Victorinus Strigelius, aka. Victor Strigel (1524–69), German theologian, student of Melanchthon at Wittenberg, and professor of theology at Leipzig and Heidelberg, is most likely part of either Oratio de Noha (1565), Oratio de Studiis Doctrinae Christianae (1563), or Orationes XXX. (1583). At any rate, Strigelius asks, "What tasks should we suppose this old man carried out, when he was shut up in the Ark for thirteen lunar months, being carried among the horrible sounds of the waters? He certainly could not farm, or govern a republic with his counsel. He was therefore engaged in the office and duties of a philosopher and a preacher, and taught his listeners not only of God, of

But alas, the Feeding of the Creatures in the Ark, & the Cleansing it from their Excrements, was an Employment for Noah, and his Three Sons, enough to make a Proverb for the most employ'd People in the World.²⁹

Q. When you meet with any agreeable System of the Flood, it may add unto our Treasures, if you'll communicate it? v. 24.

A. In the Philosophical Transactions, for the Year, 1700. N°. 266. there is a Letter of one Mr. Abr. De la Pryme; which ha's in it these Passages, worth Transcribing.³⁰ "From the petrified Shell-fish and all sorts of Creatures, found lodged in Rocks and Stones, and the Bowels of the Earth all over the World, it does most fully & sufficiently appear, that there was a Time, when that the Water overflowed all our Earth, which could be none but the Noachian Deluge.

"It appears also, that in that Deluge, the Earth suffered wonderful great Violence & Force; that Seas were raised into Mountains, and Mountains sunk into Seas, that Beds of Shells had sometimes such Weights of Earth, & Peeces of Mountains and Rocks flung upon them, that they were crushed in Peeces, and others squeezed Flat.

"Now the difficult thing is, how this Deluge happened, and how these Shells come thus to be found over the face of the whole Earth, & even deep in its Bowels. I know very well, the great Disputes and Contests, that are amongst the Learned, concerning these two Particulars, and what wonderful Systems and Theories they have formed, to solve the same; all which have a great deal more of Art, than of Nature in them."³¹ the coming liberator, and of eternal life, but he also explained the nature of the world, and wisely taught them how many charming imaginings are stamped upon it. He compared the raven – which, when sent out of the Ark, did not return, because it was occupied with tearing dead bodies to pieces – to a greedy teacher, who looks after his own interests such that whatever he does is to his own advantage, and forgets the well-being of the church. He said that the dove, however, which came back with an olive branch, is a picture of a good and useful teacher, who worries more about the prosperity and preservation of the church than his or his children's safety. And indeed there is no doubt that this outstanding philosopher had accurately written out an account of places, so that on his exit from the Ark he might know what part of the world he was in, and how far he was from his homeland. Indeed, he put together the history of the first church, which before the Flood flourished in wisdom and virtue, and he diligently recorded the sequence of the seasons. With these scholarly works, doubtlessly, this excellent old man lessened the damage done by the Flood."

29 Perhaps Mather alludes to the fifth labor of Hercules in the stables of King Augeas (Pseudo-Apollodorus, Bibliotheca 2.5.5).

30 The following paragraphs – excerpted from Letter VI, dated Sept. 14th, 1700, "A Letter of the Reverend Mr. Abr. De la Pryme to the Publisher," by the Yorkshire antiquary and minister at Hull, Abraham de la Pryme (1671–1704) – appear in Philosophical Transactions 22, no. 266 (Sept. / Oct. 1700): 683–85.

31 De la Pryme alludes to the dispute arising from Thomas Burnet's Sacred Theory (1684) and involved such combatants as Erasmus Warren (Geologia [1690] and A Defense [1691]), John Ray (Miscellaneous Discourses [1692] and Three Physico-Theological Discourses [1693]), John Beaumont (Considerations On a Book [1693]), John Woodward (An Essay towards a Natural

“My notion of the Ante-diluvian World, is, that it had an external Sea, as well as Land, and Mountains, Hills, Rivers, and Fruitful Fields and Plains; that it was about the Bigness that our Earth is at present of; and that when God had a Mind, for the Wickedness of the Inhabitants that dwelt thereon to destroy the same by Water, He broke the Foundations, and subterraneous Caverns and Pillars thereof, with most dreadful Earth-quakes, & caused the same to be, for the most Part, if not wholly, absorb’d and swallow’d up, and covered by the Sea’s that we now have, and that this Earth of ours rose then, out of the Bottom of the Antediluvian Sea in its room; just as many Islands are swallowed up, and others thrust up in their Stead.

“Neither is this at all contrary to the Scriptures, but the most concordant unto it, of all others. Moses saies, That the same Day, that Noah and his Family, and all the Creatures that should be saved, entred the Ark, then the Rains began to fall, and presently after, the Fountains of the Great Abyss were broken up. That is, It Rained very Hard; and the Foundations of the Earth being Dissolved, the Earth began to subside, sink down, and yield, and to press upon the great subterraneous Caverns of Water, which there upon all broke out, | and sprung up, and so overflowed, and by Degrees, drowned, this whole World. And the Waters prevailed, continually, saies Moses; That is, by reason of the Earths further sinking; for the more and deeper it sunk in, the higher did the Waters rise above it: So that at the Last, they covered the Tops of the Highest Mountains, that were in the Ante-diluvian World, fifteen Cubits, and upwards, and every thing that moved on the face of the whole Earth, died. And then, as this Old Earth sunk in, so our New One, was lifted up, to ballance the Sinking of the other; and as it ascended, the Waters rolled from off it continually, and in 150 Dayes, it became free of them, and the Ark rested itself upon, or rather against, the Hills, which were afterwards called, Ararat. [208v]

“Thus, in most Probability, was the Old World, drowned and destroyed, and thus had we that whereon we now dwell, in its Place, and that which Plato tells some 6 or 700 Years before Christs time, That in old Times, there was an huge Island, much bigger than Asia and Africa putt together, abounding with all the Delights of Nature, swallowed up in the Atlantic Ocean by dreadful Storms, and an huge Earthquake and Flood, I quæstion not at all, but that this was the Antediluvian World, that they meant, a very great Part of which was absorb’d and drown’d there, which account thereof they might have both by Books, and Traditions from their Fore-fathers, seeing that one of them that was in the very Ark, was the first that peopled Egypt.”³²

*Non placet.*³³

³² De la Pryme refers to the well-known tradition of Atlantis, in Plato's Critias (108e, 113c–121c) and Timaeus (24e–25d). The first of the Ark to people Egypt is Noah's son Ham.

Q. How much Water, do you Imagine, the Ark drew? v. 4.

A. Your Quæstion is a little curious. But some thus answer it.³⁴

The Ark drew Water Eleven Cubits; and that shall appear by this Collection. On the first Day of the Month Ab, the Mountain Tops, were first seen; and then the Waters had fallen Fifteen Cubits; which they had been Threescore Dayes adoring; namely from the first Day of Sivan; and so they had abated the Proportion of One Cubit, in four Dayes. By this Account, wee find, that on the Sixteenth Day of Sivan, they had abated but Four Cubits; and yett on the Next Day, the Ark resteth on an Hill, when the Waters yett lay Eleven Cubits above it. This is Dr. Lightfoots Computation.³⁵

Q. Some Observations, if you please, upon the Dove, that Noah sent out of his Ark? v. 8.

A. There are some, who think, that the Threefold Emission of the Dove out of the Ark, was Figurative of the Threefold Banishment from the Land of Canaan, at length inflicted on the Israelites; the first, when they served the Egyptians, the Second, when they served the Babylonians, the Third, when they serve (as they now do) the Romans; and as the third Time, the Dove returned no more, so of this Third Stroke there shall be no End, until the End of this World, and the Second Coming of our Lord.³⁶

Some compare the Raven to the Law, and the Dove to the Gospel: Tis only the Gospel that brings us Advice, that the Flood of Divine Wrath upon the World, is asswaged, and that God is Reconciled.³⁷

Others carry this Figure, to Points of Morality. The Raven is the worldly Man; (Such as Demas, 2. Tim. 4.10.) The Dove is the Christian that can find ³⁴ See Appendix A.

³⁵ Mather here excerpts John Lightfoot's annotations on Gen. 7, 8, 9, in A Few, and New Observations (1642) 9. The "Sixteenth Day of Sivan" correlates to June 23 in the Gregorian calendar.

Rest no where but in the Church of God; whom the Lord accordingly receives, as Noah did the Restless Bird; (according to Psal. 73.2, 17, 26, 28.)³⁸

My dear Doctor Franckius obliges me, with a Flight upon the Wings of this Dove unto our Saviour. Columba hæc quum non invenisset Quietem volæpedis sui (Infanti enim CHRISTO, ne in Diverserio quidem nec viro, quo reclinaret caput, erat locus) *donec in cruce meretur, redire debebat ad eum à quo æmissa erat; intromittenda quippe in Arcam quam reliquerat.*³⁹

But, What if we should say? The Dove was a Figure of the Holy Spirit, which descended (you know) as a Dove, upon our Lord, at his Baptism. That Spirit brings with it, Fruits like those of an Olive-branch. (See Gal. 5.22.) And it resteth on the Church only; which is the Antitype of the Ark. And as the Dove returned unto Noah, on the Seventh Day, so does the Spirit mostly visit us, on our Sabbath. (Consider Joh. 20.19, 22. and, Act. 2.1. and Rev. 1.10.)⁴⁰

Q. Well, but the Raven? v. 8.

A. I have hitherto taken a Liberty to speak of the Raven, as not Returning to Noah in the Ark after its going forth. And indeed, I found in a Manner all the World, of this Opinion. The Greek is full for it; And so are every one of the Ancients, but only Procopius. Austin and Cyril proceed so far, as to say, That the Raven perished in the Waters. However, you must then suppose he left his Mate, hatching, or at least with Egg; And indeed, the Hebrewes have a Fable, That this was the Reason why Noah chose to send him out.⁴¹

But after all, I will now be no longer confident in that Opinion. For consulting the Original, I find it may very well be rendred, It went forth, Going out

³⁸ "Demas," probably a contraction of "Demarchus," was evidently a fellow prisoner with St. Paul in Rome (Philem. 24; Col. 4:14), but seems to have abandoned the apostle for the love the world (2 Tim. 4:10). (SBD). See Appendix A.

³⁹ Mather's Pietist correspondent August Hermann Francke (1663–1727) of Halle, Germany, relates that "This dove, since it could not find rest for its 'wing' (for there was no room for the infant CHRIST to rest his head, nor conversely when he was a man, until he earned it on the cross), had to return to the one by whom it had been sent out; it naturally had to be allowed in the Ark which it had left."

⁴⁰ Bochart, Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 6, col. 33–36).

and Returning. There is nothing to Hinder, but much to Invite, our Thoughts, That the Raven often Returned unto the Ark; and, why may we not think, That Noah as often took him in?⁴²

I Judge it not worth the while, to entertain you with the Jewish Fagment, in Agudda, That the Reason why the Raven kept about the Ark, was Quia de conjuge sua sollicitus erat; ne scilicet se absente ab alio iniretur. Upon which the Filthy Writers add, I know not what other Impertinencies. Nor to Relate out of Beresith Rabba, How the Raven pleaded with Noah, why he rather than any other Creature should thus have his Life exposed? And Noah answered, That the World might well enough spare the Raven out of it. But the Almighty interposed, That He should one day have Occasion for the Raven, to feed His Prophet Elias.⁴³

Q. A Discovery made, of the Dove, employ'd by our Father Noah? v. 8.

A. We are annually visited in our Countrey of New England, at the Beginning of Winter, with a Water-Dove, that stays for a little while on our Shore near the Sea, and then goes off again to the Sea, without Returning any more, till the Return of the Year. Tis one of the loveliest Birds that fly; and a Dove in every thing, except what qualifies it for the Element it is designed for. The Cock and Hen are paired, as our Doves use to be. They are of a deep Azure-Colour; spotted and streaked with White. The Cock has a fine Topple Crown, & feathers of a Deep Yellow under his Wings. The Hen is blue, & full of white Spotts all over her Body. Their Noise is a little superiour to that of our Doves on the Land. Their Cooings differ a little from these; about as much as the Voice of a Wild Goose from that of a Tame One. Their soft, yett sprightly Murmurs, are more like the gentle Cadence of Waters, than the melancholy Notes of our common Turtle. They differ from the Doves of the Land, in this; that their Bill is a little flatted: and they have the Membranes between their Toes, wherewith Water-fowl use to ⁴² This solution is also suggested by several other rabbinic commentators (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:112–13).

⁴³ Bochart, Hierozaicon (pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 12–13, col. 213–15). According to the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin (108b), the raven complained that God and Noah hated him because – even though only one pair of ravens was allowed to enter the Ark – it was the raven that was sent on its dangerous mission. Rashi and others explain that the raven was loath to leave the Ark, because the bird of ill omen suspected Noah to have amorous designs on the raven's mate (!). Be'er Basadeh has it that Noah countered, "Of what use are you to the world? You can be used neither for food nor for sacrifice." Likewise, the Levush speculated that the raven was afraid Noah would crossbreed its mate with another species; Rashi and the Midrash Aggadah (Midrash Rabbah, Gen. XXXIII:5) explain that the raven could not be dispensed with because the fowl was appointed to supply the prophet Elijah with food in his own time (1 Kings 17:6), in Mikraoth Gedoloth (Genesis 1:111–13). Bochart's comment is informed by rabbinic tradition: "Because he [the raven] was worried about its wife, namely that, in his absence, someone else might have congress with her." Bochart's "Agudda" (209) refers to the Midrash Aggadah; and "Beresith Rabba" refers to the Midrash (Genesis) Rabbah (Gen. XXXIII:5).

- [211r] be accommo-|-dated. When they swim about our shores, they often come upon the Land and they are very frequently seen to have in their Bills, a Small-Branch of our long-lived Cedar, which is green with us all the Winter, & growes on our Beaches as well as on our Mountains. They are as delicate a Dish, as we can be Regaled withal; Sweet and Fatt; esteem'd a Royalty among our Natives. Our Indians call them Coecoe-on-Sogelande; which is as much as to say, The Messenger at the Great Rain. This is a little surprizing. And my Friend from whom I have this Communication, together with the agreeable Sight of the Bird, concludes with this Remark, That be sure, they are one sort of Dove, that found a Shelter, in the Ark; and it is Rational to suppose, that so wise a Pilot as Admiral Noah might send forth a Fowl, that could Swim as well as Flie, on the great Occasion we have been apprised of.

Upon the whole, I confess myself proselyted unto the Opinion, That This was the Dove. This, that I have now in my Study before me.⁴⁴

Q. Upon that Expression, Go forth out of the Ark, Thou and thy Wife, What is there observable? v. 16.

A. Dr. Patrick saies, He does not think the Observation of some of the Jewes absurd; who by comparing this Verse, with ch. VII.13. make this Collection; That while they were in the Ark, the Men did not cohabit with their Wives; it being a Time of great Affliction: but they kept asunder, it seems, in separate Apartments. Thus R. Elieser, in his Pirke; where tis thus gathered by R. Levita. When they went into the Ark, it is said, Noah and his Sons entred; and then, Noahs Wife, & his Sons Wives. Behold, saies he, here the Men are putt together, & the Women together. But when they come out of the Ark, it is here said, Go forth, Thou & thy Wife, and thy Sons, & thy Sons Wives. Lo, here they are coupled, as before they were separated. Compare v. 18.⁴⁵

⁴⁴ John Winthrop (1681–1747) of Connecticut, son of Wait-Still Winthrop, supplied Mather with a specimen of this unidentified water-dove, which became the material basis for Mather's "Curiosa Americana" (1720, 1723), his scientific communication to the Royal Society of London (Holmes, Bibliography 1:202, item 35; 1:204, item 5). An earlier specimen that the younger Winthrop had promised his friend in Boston evidently fell prey to Winthrop's cat (K. Silverman, Life 246–47). Nearly one hundred years ago, George L. Kittredge tried to track down Mather's disquisition on "The Water Dove" in the "Biblia Americana," but could not locate it ("Scientific Communications" 46). Mather's scientific description of the American passenger pigeon (Extopistes migratorius) – now extinct – appears in his Christian Philosopher ("Essay 30," pp. 204–08). An earlier draft version of this essay intended for the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society is included in Mather's collection of "Curiosa Americana" (1713–1717), in the MF Edition of the Cotton Mather Papers (Reel 5, item 1 # 5).

⁴⁵ Mather's source is Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 8:16, in Commentary (1:40). Patrick's own source is Rabbi Levitas of Jamnia, who is cited in Guilielmus Henricus Vorstius's

Q. I find, Fowls, Beasts, and Reptiles, of all Sorts coming forth at last out of the Ark; but before I lett them go, I must bee satisfied, first, How they were all Stow'd, and then, how they were all Fed, in that wonderful Vessel? v. 17.

A. You must Remember, That the Ark was Three-Hundred Cubits Long, Fifty Cubits Broad, & Thirty Cubits High; (the Proportion found in the Exact Body of a MAN!) and so it contained 450000 Square Cubits within the Walls of it, if wee don't abate what was taken away in the Sloping of the Roof. Suppose the Cubits to bee the Holy, which were Seven Hands Breadth, whereas the Vulgar was but Six; and you behold here a Vessel, which might carry more than Forty two Thousand Tuns, allowing Two Thousand Weight unto the Tun. You must also Remember, That the Ark, had Three Stories in it; each of them Fifteen Foot High a Piece; abating the Sloping of one foot & an half at the Top; and it may bee some Room for Ballast under the Floor at the Bottom. Well; Now Allow, the Lowest Story of the Ark, for Beasts; as for Insects and Reptiles, they needed no considerable Habitations; there were a thousand Corners for them. Again, Allow the Highest Story of the Ark, for Birds; and why might not Noah also, with his Family, bee Nested among them there? Lastly, Allow the Middle Story of the Ark, for the Food, needful to mentain these Creatures. Now, they that are well-studied in Natural History, will easily find Stables enough in the Lower Story, for all the Beasts; and Cages enough in the Higher Story, for all the Birds, yett known unto us; and a deal of Room to spare. But now for the Food for all these Creatures! For That wee allow'd the Middle Story, besides abundance of Spare Room wee may likewise have in the other Stories for the Purpose. For the Birds, none will bee scrupulous, where to supply Them with Granaries; the same Floor that held their Coops, would also hold more than enough to feed them all. But for the Beasts, the Way is to bring them unto a certain Proportion. I say then, All the Beasts in the Ark, that fed on Grass or Hay, would not require a greater Proportion than Ninety Two Oxen; All the Beasts, that fed on Roots or Fruits, would not require a greater Proportion than Twenty One Sheep; All the Beasts, which devour Flesh, exceeded not the Proportion of Twenty Seven Wolves; tho' it bee quæstion'd indeed, whether any Bruits before the Flood, or at least within the Ark, were at all carnivorous. Now you may lay in, at the rate of Forty Weight of Provender a day, for every Ox and a whole Sheep a day for every Wolf; besides a sufficient Quantity of Provision for all that fed on other Things; And, yett by Computation, you'l find the Ark affords Room enough & enough to hold far more, than thus would serve the Turn for the Three Hundred & Seventy five Dayes that they were under their Confinement.

translation of פירקין רבי אליעזר [Pirke Rabbi Elieser] Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. 23, p. 52; and in Friedlander's translation Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 23, p. 169).

This is according to Buteo's Computation.⁴⁶

I'll Resume it anon, and Speak to it more particularly.

I will only by the way take notice, That the Dissertations Sur La Bible, published lately at Paris, give us a particular Description of the Ark, and answer all Objections relating to its Dimensions. The Author alledges the Ark, (a Deduction being made for the Plank) to have been 1781377 Cubical Feet of Contents. If we compare this mighty Structure, with our Vessels, & measure it by the Tun, each Tun according to the Marine Settlement being 42 Cubical Feet, the Ark must have been 42413 Tun Burden; So that it was greater alone, than 40 Ships, of 1000 Tun each, and allowing 20 Hundred Weight for each Tun, it might have carried 84826 Pound Weight French. In that Space, he places all the Animals and their Provisions, in very good Method & Order.⁴⁷

But as I said, we will anon speak to it, a little more particularly.

Q. We have lately conversed with an Exercitation of the learned Heidegger, about the ARK. It is not amiss for us, now to fall into some Conversation with him, about the FLOOD? v. 19.⁴⁸

A. It shall be endeavoured.

The Præservaⁿtion of the World, is owing, to a Peculiar People, which God will præserve in it, until He ha's præpar'd them for Heavenly and Eternal Glory. But when that People for whom the World stands, is become Degenerate, the very Foundations are destroy'd. And what shall the Just One do, on this deplorable Occasion? He can take Delight in the World no longer; no longer cherish a Root ⁴⁶ The entire paragraph on the Ark's measurements, capacity, and layout are extracted from Joannes Buteo's "De arca Noë," in Opera Geometrica (1554) 17–18. The subsections on the size of the Mosaic cubit and the Ark's capacity appear on pp. 11–12 and 17–18, respectively. Much of the same debate appears in Mather's previous annotations on Gen. 5:22 (above). The idea that the size of Noah's Ark is in the same proportion ("length, breadth, and height") as Christ's human body appears in St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei (15.26), in NPNFi (2:306), and in St. Ambrose' De Noë et arca liber uno (cap. 6) [PL 14. 368B–369A]. The great polymath Athanasius Kircher, leaning on Buteo, offers much the same in his De Arca Noë (lib. 1, cap. 9, pp. 33–35), and so does John Edwards in his Demonstration of the Existence and Providence of God (1696), pt. II, ch. 6, pp. 122–23. See also D. C. Allen's Legend (78–79).

⁴⁸ Mather refers to his lengthy excerpt from Heidegger's Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (1:320–40, Exerc. XVII: "De Arca Noë") in Mather's annotations on Gen. ch. 6. His excerpts (below) are from "Exercitatio XVIII: De Diluvio Noetico" (Heidegger 1:340–79). In his "Note Book of Authors," Mather identifies as his sources William Perkins's Works (1631) 2:456, "A Treatise of the Imagination" (on Gen. 8:21); and Anthony Burgess's The Doctrine of Original Sin (part 3, ch. 9, p. 402), on Gen. 8:21, but ultimately dropped these references during a later revision process.

that bears nothing but Gall and Wormwood. The Sethites were now become like the Cainites; all overwhelm'd in an universal Flood of Corruption. And awful is the Observation of Heidegger; *Nunquam atrocius Dei in Mortales ira grassatur, quàm ubi Infidelium Mundus, et Ecclesia, sese simili impietate involvit.*⁴⁹

There were an Hundred and Twenty Years of Patience, yett allow'd unto a wicked World, after the Lord had intimated His Purpose, to destroy them for their Wickedness, if they Repented not. No Repentance then appearing, the Lord ordered Noah, to make ready an Ark as fast as he could; for a FLOOD should come and carry all before it. And whereas we read, It Repented the Lord, that He had made Man upon the Earth: concerning the Divine Condescension in such an Expression, the Words of Austin deserve to be considered: [De Civitate Dei, L.15. c. 25.] *Neque enim sicut Hominem, ità et Deum cujusquam facti sui pœnitet, cujus est de omnibus omninò rebus tam fixa sententia, quàm certa præscientia. Sed si non utatur Scriptura talibus Verbis, non se quodammodò familiaris insinuabit omni generi Hominum, quibus vult esse consultum, ut et perterreat Superbientes, et excitet Negligentes, et exerceat quærentes, et alat Intelligentes. Quod non faceret, si non se prius inclinaret, et quodammodò descenderet ad jacentes.*⁵⁰

As the Year then began at Autumn, so did the Flood; and on the Seventeenth Day of the Second Month.⁵¹

Then, Gen. 7.11. The same Day were all the Fountains of the Great Deep broken up, and the Windowes of Heaven were opened. The vast Quantities of Water, in the Bowels of the Earth, were brought up, and spread out, upon the Face of the Earth. The Root of the Name /תְהוֹם/ for, The Deep; is to be found in the Arabic Word, /تِهَام/ which signifies, To be astonished: It intends, a Space of such Dimensions, as would render the Spectators astonished. The Quantities of Subterraneous Waters lodged in this Abyss, are utterly unknown to us. By the Windowes of Heaven, we will not understand, those Planets, and Constellations, which the Astrologers call, The Watry Ones. Mechlinius indeed, in his Com-

⁵⁰ Heidegger (1:348–49, Exerc. XVIII, § 7). Mather's second-hand Latin quotation from St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei (15.25) [PL 41. 472] signifies, "for He [God] does not, like man, repent of anything He has done, because in all matters His decision is as inflexible as His prescience is certain. But if Scripture were not to use such expressions as the above, it would not familiarly insinuate itself into the minds of all classes of men, whom it seeks access to for their good, that it may alarm the proud, arouse the careless, exercise the inquisitive, and satisfy the intelligent; and this it could not do, did it not first stoop, and in a manner descend, to them where they lie" (NPNFi 2:306).

mentaries on Albumasar, pretends to find by his Astronomical Computations, That the Flood was preceded and prædicted, by a Conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn, in Cancer, over against the Argolic Ship, which, you must suppose, had Noahs Ark in the Signification of it. This Notion, defended by Tiberius Calaber, underwent a Fiery Confutation from Hieronymus Armellinus, a Dominican, as carrying Heresy in it. And indeed, it carries Absurdity enough. Maresius ha's well chastised, the Absurdity of those who would in our Dayes revive such Idle Opinions; particularly, P. Serrarius, who pretends a mighty Flood once foretold from a Conjunction of the Planets in Pisces. About the Descent of any Supra-Cæstrial Waters, on this Occasion, we shall find a Difficulty to conceive any thing. The Windowes of Heaven, are a very apt Metaphor for the Clouds. The Opening and Shutting of Heaven, are Expressions, by which the Coming or the Failing of Rain from the Clouds, is described. A great Plenty afforded from Heaven, is called, An Opening of the Windowes of Heaven. [2. King. 7.2. Mal. 3.18. Isa. 24.18.]⁵²

It is admirable to Read Seneca discoursing upon a Flood, which he supposed still to come; [Nat. Quæst. L.3. c. 30.] And saying, That, à primo Die mundi, quando mergerentur Terrena Decretum est. He considers the Watery Condition of the World; and he adds; ubi non Humorem Natura disposuit, ut undique nos, cum voluisset, aggredi posset? After our continual Encounter with Waters upon Digging, he proceeds, Adjice nunc, quòd immanes sunt in abdito lacus, et multum [214v] Maris conditi, multum Fluminum per | operta labentium. Undique ergò erunt causæ Diluvio, cum aliæ aquæ subinfluant terras, alia circumfluant, quæ diù coercitæ Vincent, et omnes omnibus jungent, paludibus stagna. Omnia tunc ora Fontium

52 Heidegger (1:350–52, Exerc. XVIII, §§ 10, 11, 12). The Hebrew word תְּהוֹמִים (tehowm) or תְּהוֹם (tehom) is commonly rendered “the deep” (Gen. 8:2) [Strong’s # 8415]. Mather here refers to Henry Mechlín, whom Heidegger identifies as a disciple of Albertus Magnus, editor of, and commentator on, astrological manuscripts by Albumasar (Abu Ma’shar), one of the greatest astrologers of Islam (d. 886). A Latin translation of Albumasar’s astrological studies appeared as Introductorium in astronomiam Albumasaris Abalachi (1489). The identity of Tiberius Calaber has so far escaped my notice, but Hieronymus Armellinus (Geronimo Armellini) was an Italian theologian, astronomer, and Dominican inquisitor of Mantua (d. 1530), in DNSP (42). Samuel Maresius (1599–1673), aka. Samuel des Marets, was a French Reformed theologian, professor at Sedan and Groningen, and prolific author. His popular textbook Collegium theologicum (1645) went through many editions; the 1673 edition identifies more than 100 of his publications. In a public disputation at the University of Groningen, Maresius attacked the millenarian speculations of his colleague Petrus Serrarius, aka. Pierre Serrurier (1600–69), a Dutch mystic and millenarian, whose Brevis dissertatio de fatali et admiranda (1663) and subsequent defense Apologetica responsio ad Clarissimum Virum D. Samuelem Maresium super omnium planetarum in Sagittario (1663) had elicited a lively disputation at Groningen, because Serrarius claimed that Noah’s Flood had come about through the alignment of planets in Sagittarius. Serrarius subsequently collected his views in Vox Clamantis in Babylone (1663) where he defended his earlier argument against Maresius’s refutation. An English translation of this work appeared as An Awakening Warning to the Wofull World (1663). The controversy is briefly covered in B. Glasius’ Godgeleerd Nederland (1856), pp. 344–45. On Serrarius, see E. G. E. van der Wall, “Petrus Serrarius” (1987). On astronomy in colonial New England, see S. E. Morison’s “Harvard School of Astronomy” and R. Lockwood’s “Scientific Revolution.”

implebit, et majore hiatu solvet. Quemadmodum corpora nostra ad egestum venter exhaurit; quemadmodum eunt in Sudorem Vires: ità Tellus liquefiet, et alijs causis quiescentibus, intrà se quo mergatur, inveniet; sic magna omnia coitura crediderim. Nec erit longa mora exitij. — Statim undique ex aperto, ex abdito, supernè, ab infimo aquarum fiet irruptio. Nihil est tam violentum, et incontinens suū, tam contumax infestumque retinentibus, quàm magna Vis undæ; utetur libertate permissa, et jubente Natura, quæ scindit, circuitque complebit. Ut ignis diversis locis ortus, citò miscet Incendium, flammis coire properantibus: Sic momento redundantia maria se committent. Nec ea semper licentia undis erit; sed peracto exitio generis Humani, extinctisque pariter Feris, in quarum homines ingenia transierant, iterum Aquas Terra sorbebit: Natura pelagus stare, aut intrà terminos suos furere coget; et rejectus è nostris sedibus, in sua secreta pelletur Oceanus; et antiquus ordo revocabitur. One can scarce read these Words of Seneca, without Astonishment. Heidegger saies of them; Oratio ità concepta est, ut de industriâ explicare voluisse Mosen videri posset. Philo was better acquainted with the History of a Matter, which was to Seneca still a Prophecy. Having declared, in his Discourse, De Abrahamo; How the Inundation of Wickedness in the World, called for an Inundation of Water, which overwhelmed the Creatures on the highest Mountains; He mentions, the Rising of the Ocean, and its breaking in upon the Earth; and a vast afflux of Rivers and Fountains in the Earth; as producing this horrible Flood; which Things were accompanied with fearful Showres, and Lightnings and Thunders from above; ὡς νομίσαι τὰ μέρη τοῦ παντός εἰς μιὰν φύσιν ὕδατος ἀναστοιχειούμενα σπευδεῖν. Ut videretur totus mundus abire in naturum Aquarum.⁵³

53 Heidegger (1:352–53, Exerc. XVIII, § 12). The long second-hand citation from Seneca's Naturales quaestiones (3.30.1, 3–7), which Mather puts to similar use several times over (see above and below), appeals to Mather because the ancient pagan author seems to confirm the verity of the Bible: And saying that “from the very first day of the universe, [nature] decreed when earthly things would be submerged.” Seneca adds, “Nature has put water everywhere so that she can attack us from all sides when she chooses.” He proceeds, “Add the fact that there are immense lakes hidden underground, a vast quantity of hidden sea there, and many rivers flowing through concealed channels. On all sides, then, there will exist causes for the deluge, since some waters flow beneath the lands, others flow around them. For a long time they have been restrained: but they will conquer, joining streams to streams, swamps to marshes. Then the sea will fill up the mouths of all the springs and expand them in wider openings. Just as the belly drains our bodies in voiding wastes, just as our strength goes off in sweat, so the earth will liquefy and, even though other causes are inoperative, the earth will find within itself the cause by which it is to be submerged. Still, I am more inclined to believe, all things will combine in the catastrophe. There will be no long delay in the destruction. — Immediately from all sides, from the open and the hidden, from above, from below, there will be an irruption of the waters. There is nothing so violent as the full force of water, nothing so uncontrollable, so unyielding, so destructive against any restraints. It will utilize any freedom permitted to it and, as its nature dictates, it will fill up whatever it has divided and surrounded. Just as fire starting in different separate areas will quickly unite its blaze with flames that hurry to meet each other, so in a moment the seas, overflowing at numerous places, will come together. But the water will not have this freedom for ever. When the destruction of the human race is completed and the wild animals, into whose savagery men will have passed, are equally extinct, again the earth

The Fiercer Fury of the Flood, in this horrid hurly-burly of Nature, kept growing for Forty Dayes together. It held on, tho' with a Lesser Fury, till an hundred and fifty Dayes, (which whether Torniellus and Salianus will, or no, must have the Forty Dayes aforesaid, for a Part of them:) were expired.⁵⁴

The Water gott up Fifteen Cubits, above the Highest Mountains. But whence could there be fetch'd such a Store of Water? Suppose the Flood might reach Five Miles in Height. À Lapide tells us, The Mathematicians at Rome, did by their Computations demonstrate this, to answer but unto the Two hundred & Eighth Part of the Terrestrial Globe. And Water is Ten Times as fine and rare as Earth; who can tell, (thinks our Heidegger) but God might rarify a considerable Part of the Earth into Water? And, Partem bis millesimam trecentessimam octogesimam Terræ in vapores resolutæ, ad implendum spacium hoc quinque milliarium abunde fuisse. The Two Thousand three hundred & Eightieth Part of the Earth, turn'd into Water, would answer the Intention.⁵⁵

All the People, as well as the other Animals, (except what were in the Ark), perished in this horrendous Desolation. The Hebrew Doctors, [in Codice Sanhedrin, c. 2.] tell us, They were all Damn'd as well as Drown'd; and, Vita æternæ exortes. And Pererius ha's a large Disputation, to maintain, Omnes illos qui Diluvio perierunt, Inferno damnatos esse. But our Heidegger uses more Moderation. He thinks, That after the Flood was begun, many might be brought unto a Serious and a Saving Repentance; And, Nulla penitentia sera, quæ seria. Yea, the Lord might bring on the Flood with more Liesure, which He might have brought on at once, to give an Opportunity for the Repentance of Some, whom He would then receive unto Mercy. And so, [1. Pet. 4.6.] Tho' they were Judged in the Flesh, yett their Spirits live unto God, and shall arrive to Everlasting Life. It will absorb the waters. Nature will force the sea to stay in its place or to rage within its own boundaries, and the ocean will be ejected from our abode and driven back to its own secret dwelling place, and the ancient order of things will be re-established." Heidegger (1:352) glosses on Seneca's doomsday scenario that "the speech is written in such a way that one could see Moses as wishing to explain industriousness." Finally, Philo Judæus (De Abrahamo 8.43.4–5) is given the last word on this catastrophe: "so that one might have thought that all the parts of the universe were hastening to dissolve themselves into the one element of the nature of water" (Works 414). As usual, Mather omits the Greek diacritics, even though they do appear in Heidegger (1:353).

54 Heidegger (1:354, Exerc. XVIII, § 14 and previously in 1:214, Exerc. XII, § 11). Mather (via Heidegger) refers to Annales sacri et profani (1611), by the Italian Jesuit Augustine Torniellus (1543–1622), and to Annales ecclesiastici Veteris Testamenti (1620), sec. 3, by Jacobus Salianus, aka. Jacques Salian (1557–1640), French Jesuit and professor of theology at the Institute of Ignatius in Avignon.

55 Heidegger (1:355, Exerc. XVIII, § 16). Cornelius à Lapide, aka. Cornelis van den Steen (1567–1637), Flemish Jesuit, professor of Hebrew at Louvain and at Rome, discusses the Noachide Flood waters, in his In Pentateuchum Mosis commentaria (1637) 106–08 (on Gen. 7:11–24). Heidegger's wishful thinking (1:355) is only partially translated by Mather: "That the two-thousand-three-hundred-and-eightieth part of the earth, after the earth had been turned into vapor, was more than enough to fill this space of five miles."

was an Extreme on the other Hand, in Jerom, to think, That their Souls were all Saved, & that their Temporal Punishment made full Satisfaction for their Sins.⁵⁶

But why must the Brute and Mute Animals, which never sinned, bear a Part in this Destruction? Ambrose in his Treatise, De Noe et Arcâ, is prolix upon this Quæstion. He saies; Man had the Dominion over these Creatures, and the Commander falling in the Battel, the | Army might fairly look to perish with him. Yea, Man was their Head; and when the Head is cutt off, tis no Wonder if Death sieze upon all the Members. But there is more Flourish than Reason, in these Passages. Ambrose proceeds therefore to a Third, which ha's more of Prægnancy in it. Quia Rationis expertia non propter se, sed propter Hominem, generata sunt Animalia: Hominis enim causa esse præcepta sunt, ut eorum subjectione humana præstaret conditio. The Creatures were created for Man; and Man being destroy'd, they are justly destroy'd with him. The Sin of Man ha's brought the Creatures under Vanity; and Man is punished, when they are destroyed. [Consider, Gen. 8.21.] Besides, God had made no Covenant with the Creatures; and might without any wrong to them, exterminate them, for many wise Purposes, tho' they never Sinned against Him.⁵⁷ [215r]

The Insolent Attempts of Peirerius, and some others, to restrain the Flood, unto Palæstine, or to some few Countreyes thereabouts, are not worthy of any laborious Confutation. The Ruines and Reliques, every day found in the Subterraneous World, which could proceed from nothing but the Flood, abundantly confute the Impiety of those Men, and make it most evidently appear, that the Flood was Universal. Of the Triflers, who will now quæstion the Universality of the Flood, we must say, with the Apostle Peter, They are willingly Ignorant.⁵⁸

56 Heidegger (1:356, Exerc. XVIII, §§ 18, 19). The Mishnaic and Gemaraic commentators in the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin 107b and 108a (not c. 2) assert the loss of eternal life of all those who perished in the Flood (Mishnah, tractate Sanhedrin IV.10:3a). Mather's second-hand citation from the Portuguese theologian Benedictus Pererius, aka. Benito Pereira (c. 1535–c. 1610), appears in Commentariorum et disputatonum in Genesim (1596–1602), tomus 2, lib. 9, Disput. 3. Pererius insists that “All those who perished in the Flood are damned in hell.” Heidegger's more hopeful position (1:356) that “None who seriously repent shall be [damned]” appears to be based on St. Jerome's Questiones Hebraicum in Genesim (on Gen. 6:3) [PL 23. 948]. Here, the great Latin Father emphasizes God's mercy rather than justice and gives those antediluvians another chance: God does “not preserve them for everlasting tortures, but ... pay[s] them here what they deserve” (Hebrew Questions 36).

57 Heidegger (1:357, Exerc. XVIII, § 20). St. Ambrose's De Noë et Arca (cap. 10, § 33) [PL 14. 375C] argues that “because the animals were created without reason not for themselves, but for Man: they were ordered to exist for man's sake, so that, by their subjection, the human covenant might be superior.”

58 Heidegger (1:357–58, Exerc. XVIII, § 21). Isaac La Peyrère's Men before Adam (1655) posits that the two Mosaic creation accounts (Gen. 1 and 2) suggest two separate creations of men – pre-Adamites (Gentiles) and Adam and Eve's children (Jews) – is controversial in yet another way: “That the Flood of Noah was not upon the whole earth, but only upon the Land of the Jews. Not to destroy all men, but only the Jews” (bk. 4, ch. 7, p. 239 [chapter heading]). La Peyrère had good precedent for limiting the Flood to a local event and enlisted Eusebius Pamphilus,

By this Flood, the Earth itself was considerably damnified in its Fertility. The Roll of the Salt Water over it, must needs bring the Upper Lay of the Earth, under unspeakable Confusion. Indeed Chrysostom, confines the Destruction only unto the Animals upon the Earth. But, In the Denunciation of the Flood, the Words run, I will destroy them with the Earth. Heidegger will not have the Earth to be Destroy'd; but yett it must be greatly Impaired. He will not have the Notion of De Salas the Spaniard, humoured; Non eundem Orbem, quem Aquae cat{a}clysmi hauserunt, mortalibus esse redditum.⁵⁹

When the Wrath of Heaven, was executed on the World, the Ark must have Mercy remembered unto it. – And then the Almighty,

Nubila disjecit, nimisque Aquilone remotis,

Et Caelo Terras ostendit, et aethera Terris.⁶⁰

By the powerful Influences of God, the Waters returned into their several Receptacles: and the Return began on the Seventeenth Day of the Seventh Month. Anon the Ark rested on the Mountains of Ararat; a Region, which is by Josephus Ben Gorion, understood for Iberia, and that Part of Scythia, which lies between Armenia, and the Passages of Caucasus, as far as Tanaïs, and the Palus Mæotis. Temporarius makes these Mountains, to be the same with the Caucasæan; from whence, he supposes the Sons of Noah, by slow Steps, to make their Descent, unto the Fields of Babylon. Caucasus according to Ptolomy, is between Paropanisus and Imaus; There it rises Highest; and as Arrianus tells us, It is bald there, as being alwayes covered with Ice and Frost. Pliny for this Cause, thinks it called, Graucasus, in the Scythian Language; Quòd sit Nive candidior. Heidegger falls in Strabo, Scaliger, Servius, Solinus, and Salmasius as evidence (Men before Adam, bk. 4, ch. 9, pp. 248–58). Peter dismisses willful triflers in 2 Pet. 3:5.

with the common Opinion, which places, the Mountains of Ararat, in Armenia; as indeed the Text is actually read, in the Vulgar. Thus Theodoret saies Ἀραράτ την Ἀρμενιαν καλεῖ. And the Armenian Mountains, the Learned will have the Lott fall, on those that were distinguished, by the Name of Gordean; which Name is variously written in the Monuments of the Ancients. Yea, if we will depend upon R. Benjamin, we may design the Place, with yett more of Particularity; It was Four Miles from the Island of the Son of Omar; which you will find in the River Tigris, over against old Ninive, between Mozales and Nisibis.⁶¹

By the First Day of the Tenth Month, were the Tops of the Mountains, by the Decrease of the Waters, again become Visible. Forty Dayes after this, Noah sent forth a Raven, to learn something about the further Desiccation; for that Bird, would be likely to be drawn by the Scent of Carcases, unto some considerable Distance from the Ark, if the Waters had been considerably Dry'd from off the face of the Earth. The Raven was often Sent out, and as often Return'd; and at last probably remain'd with Noah, (as Heidegger thinks,) till the general Egress of all the Creatures. Indeed, the Greek Version expressly denies any Return of the Raven; and, as the Syriac Version followes it, so do all | the Fathers, but Procopius. [216v] The Vulgar Latin does the like; which gives Paulus Burgensis, the Trouble of many Enquiries. Heidegger sticks to the Hebrew Text; and ha's the most ancient Authorities to establish him. And that Clause in the Text confirms the Matter; Going forth and Returning, until the Waters were dried up from off the Earth. Noah having the Experiment of the Ravens often Returning, did often venture him out, in Expectation, that if he Returned no more, he might conclude, the Waters were then retired.⁶²

61 Sefer Josippon, which the anonymous author (10th c.) attributed to (Pseudo-) Joseph ben Gorion, a general in the war against the Romans (1st c. CE), has also been attributed to Joseph ben Gorion ha-Kohen (Josephus Flavius). This Hebrew narrative covers the period of the Second Temple to the Roman conquest of Masada and is largely extracted from Josephus Flavius's Antiquities and Jewish Wars (EJ). Josephus ben Gorion locates Mt. Ararat in the traditional region of Armenia (Josippon [1541], lib. 6, cap. 96); much the same appears in an English translation, published as The Wonderful and Most Deplorable History of the Latter Times of the Jews (1662), ch. 5, pp. 344–47. Joannes Temporarius, aka. Jean du Temps, locates Mt. Ararat in a mountainous chain of the Caucasus, in Chronologicarum demonstrationum (1596). And Ptolemy (Geographia 6.18, Tabula Asiae IX), Flavius Arrianus (Alexandri Anabasis 3.28.5–6; Historia Indica 8.2.10–11), Theodoret (Interpretatio in Jeremiam, p. 752, line 14) [PG 81. 752], Rabbi Benjamin of Tudela (Itinerarium [1633], p. 107), and Heidegger (1:361) – all agree to disagree. According to Pliny (6.19.50), the Scythians “call Mt. Caucasus Croucas, which means ‘white with snow’ [which is whiter than snow]” R. Benjamin locates the Ark's resting place in what is between the modern Nusaybin (SE Turkey) and modern Mosul (NW Iraq). For a summary of Ararat's traditional location, see JH (139).

62 Heidegger (1:363–65, Exerc. XVIII, § 28). According to the Septuagint (Gen. 8:7) and the Syriac Version (in Brian Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, vol. 1), the raven did not return until the water on the earth was all dried up. Procopius disagrees, in his Commentarii in Octateuchum, on Gen. 8 [PG 87. Pt. 1.286]; and the Jewish converso Paulus Burgensis, aka. Paul of Burgos (c. 1351–1435), bishop of Carthage and Burgos, examines the issue in detail in his

The next Experiment he made, was upon a Dove; a Docible Bird, and Sociable to Man, flying long and far, & feeding on Seeds, lying on the Earth; & one that will Return to its Nest, when its Flight ha's been a wondrous Distance from it. He sends out the Dove, probably on the Seventh Day after the Raven. The Dove upon its first going forth, found a Necessity of Returning, without any good Intelligence. But after Seven Dayes more, the Experiment being Renewed, the Dove returned, with the happy Token of an Olive-leaf in her Mouth. Probably, all the other Trees had lost their Leaves; for the fancy of the Hebrew Masters, is not worth mentioning; Quia dixerat Columba coram Sancto Benedicto; Domine omnium orbium, sint cibi mei amari tanquam oliva hæc, qui traduntur manu tuâ; non verò Dulces, qui dantur manu hominis. Nor is there any Truth in the Fancy of R. Levi, & R. Abba, that the Dove gathered its Olive-leaf, on Mount Olivet, which (from Ezek. 22.24.) they say, the Flood reached not; Nor will we mind the Fancy of Tostatus, and other Papists, that the Gates of Paradise were opened, for the Dove there to pluck off its Olive-leaf. On the Southern Side of the Gordyean Mountains, to which both the Wind and the Heat might invite the Dove, there is the Land of Assyria, which was very Fertile in Olive-trees. The King of Assyria calls it, you know, Terra Olive Olei; i.e. Olivæ ferentis oleum. Was not here a good Place, for the Dove to be supplied at? And that the Leaf should remain Green under the Waters, will not be wondred at, by those who Read Bocharts Quotations on this Occasion; especially one from Theophrastus, in his History of Plants; which, to save the Labour of Greek, we will give you, as Pliny has contracted it; [L.13. c. 25.] In mari rubro sylvas vivere; laurum nimirum et olivam ferentem baccas.⁶³

Additio ad Postillam, generally bound with the Postilla of Nicholas of Lyra's Biblia sacra cum glossis ... Nicolai Lyrani Postilla & moralitatibus, Burgensis Additionibus (1545).

⁶³ Heidegger (1:365–66, Exerc. XVIII, §§ 30, 31). Heidegger cites Vortius's Latin translation of פרקי רבי אליעזר [Pirke Rabbi Eliezer] Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. 23, p. 52. Here Rabbi Eliezer relates, "The dove spoke before the Holy One; Lord of all worlds, Let my food be bitter like this olive, and let it be granted by Your hand, and let it not be sweet, and be given by the hand of man" (Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer, ch. 23, p. 168). Mather condenses Heidegger's citation slightly. R. Levi and R. Abba ben Cohana both agree that the dove plucked the olive branch from the Mt. of Olives in Eretz Israel, which was spared from being inundated by Noah's Flood, in the Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XXX:VI). Alfonso Tostado (1400–55), bishop of Avila, consulted the same source (Genesis Rabbah XXX:VI), where he quotes R. Berekiah to affirm that the gates of paradise were opened for the dove to fetch its olive branch, in Commentaria in Genesim, in Opera omnia (1728 ed.) 1:121–60. Among the "other Papists" that Mather does not mention are Bellarmine and Malvenda (Heidegger 1:366). The King of Assyria calls it the "Land of Olive Oil," or rather, "rich in Olive Oil." Samuel Bochart (Hierozyicon, pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 6, col. 29) quotes Theophrastus's Historia plantarum (4.7.1–2). Skipping the Greek citation from Theophrastus (which Bochart and Heidegger do supply), Mather adds a line from Pliny (13.25) that in our modern, revised editions (13.50.139) reads, "In the Red Sea, flourishing forests of bay and olive [berries] are found."

From the Olive-leaf might Noah gather, that even the κατώτερα μέρη· the Lower Parts of the Earth, began to partake in the Benefits of Exiccation; For as Columella tells us, Modicos clivos amant oleæ.⁶⁴

Noah tarried yett Seven Dayes more, and then once more, sent forth the Dove, which returned not unto him any more. Nor did he now presently come forth. He might apprehend the Earth still too plashy and muddy, to be trod upon: [which is the Reason assign'd by Abenezra.] But the chief Reason, was his most Resigned and Absolute Obedience unto the Great GOD. He would not Stir, till the Great GOD, whose Providence he had hitherto so wonderfully subsisted upon, should order him. At last, on the Twenty seventh Day of the Second Month, he receives the long desired Order; Go forth of the Ark; He goes forth; & expresses his Gratitude, with a Sacrifice.⁶⁵

It is a Matter well worthy of a Curious and Attentive Contemplation; That the Apostle Peter, [1. Pet. 3.19, 20.] makes Baptism, the Antitype of the Flood. Our Heidegger carries the Matter, much to this Effect. The Old Man in us, answers to the Old World, which was before the Flood. Both have a Curse belonging to them. The Old World was Destroy'd, and Buried by God in the Waters. We read of Evangelical Waters. The Blood of our Saviour, washing away the Guilt of our Sin; and the Spirit of our Saviour extinguishing the Life of Sin in us, are compared unto Waters; [Ezek. 36.26.] By these Waters, the Old Man comes to an End, in our Souls. The Holy Seed, in the Midst of the Waters, and raised by them, & on them, was preserved in the Ark. Our Saviour, the Ark of the Faithful, does thus præserve His Faithful People. The Efficacy of the Blood and Spirit of our Saviour, the Influences whereof are felt by all that enter into the Kingdome of God; [Joh. 3.5.] these do Drown the Old Man in us, and produce a New Man, which lives unto God.⁶⁶

But then, the Ark will prove a Type of our Saviour; out of whom, there is no Salvation.

And we may add, That Noah, while he lay Coffin'd up, as one Dead, in the Ark, yett had a strong Faith in God, for his being brought forth Alive: Even

⁶⁵ Heidegger (1:367, Exerc. XVIII, § 33). Aben Ezra (Ibn Ezra) says as much in his commentary on Gen. 8:13: “Only the surface of the earth dried; the soil itself was swampy and hence not yet firm enough to walk upon. The earth did not fully dry until later” (Commentary 1:117). Rashi pinpoints the same date for Noah’s exit from the Ark, in Mikraoth Gedoloth (Genesis 1:115).

⁶⁶ Heidegger (1:365–68, Exerc. XVIII, § 34).

so, when we are lock'd up, in the Grave, yett we may keep Alive, the Faith of a Resurrection to Everlasting Life.⁶⁷

[217r] | But the Comparison between the Flood and our Baptism, is to be well apprehended. The Meaning is, That our Baptism is a Figure as well as the Flood; and they are a like Figure; a Figure of the same Thing. Both of them, have the same Spiritual Signification. The Waters of both, are to represent the Abolition of our Old Man, our Sin; and our Elevation towards Heaven; unto an Heavenly Temper. But then, to come at these Benefits, there must be, Interrogatio bonæ conscientiae ad Deum; with a Good Conscience, we must, Interrogare Deum de præmio, et rem promissam ab eo repetere, ac restipulari. The Covenant of God, lies at the Bottom, of all.⁶⁸

Upon the Flood and the Ark, the Ancients, especially Austin, and Ambrose, and Jerom, and Cyprian, are very Fruitful and Witty in their Allegories. Austin, in his Treatise, De Civitate Dei, [L.15. c. 26.] compares the Ark, both to our Saviour, and also to the Church, (or City of God) suffering various Jactations in the World. The Ark was made of Wood; And the Wood of the Cross, ha's prov'd the Safety of the Church. The Dimensions of the Ark, answering to those of an Humane Body, lead us to think of our Saviour. The Door of the Ark, he makes to be answered, by the Wound in the Pierced Side of our Lord. The Square Timbers of the Ark, he sees answered, in the Stability of the Saints. He finds two Apartments here; for the Church of the Jewes, and the Church of the Gentiles. The Three Stories of the Ark, lead him to think on the Three Sons of Noah; by whom we have Mankind Præserved and Repaired. He supplies us with more Allegories, in his Treatise, against Faustus the Manichee, who denied, That in the Books of the Hebrewes there was any Prophecy of our Saviour. Ambrose compares the Giants, unto Carnal Men; who mind nothing but their Bodies, and worldly Grandeur. The Drowning of Men and Bruits together, he sees resembled in the Condition, whereinto the Souls of Men, are brought by their Passions. The Opening of the Windowes of Heaven, and the Breaking up of the Fountains of the Great Deep, he finds too much exemplified in the Minds of Men; Magna naufragia, cum mentis pariter et corporis, sensuumque omnium Turbo et Procella miscentur. The High Mountains overwhelmed with the Flood, he likens to our Five Senses. The Grace of our Saviour, he would have prevailing over them. The Crow sent out of the Ark, when the Earth began to dry, he compares to the Abdication of Black and Unclean Lusts, from a Mind wanting to be purified. Then succeeds a Dove; Quia

malitiam simplicitas, et culpam virtus resolvit. The Olive-branch in the Mouth of the Dove, he compares to the Speech in the Mouth of Wisdom and Vertue.⁶⁹

Others of the Ancients flourish on the Olive-leaf. It was long afterwards a Symbol of Peace, among many Nations. Livy, and Polybius, will tell you enough of it. Ovid cannot forbear, a, Pax ades, upon the mention of it. The Crown of Peace, was made of an Olive-branch. Columbus found Footsteps of this Notion, among the very Americans.⁷⁰

Many more Mysteries, did the Ancients find, in the Emission of the Raven and the Dove. The Threefold Emission of the Dove, they found answerable to the Exile of Israel from the Land of Promise, in their Threefold Captivity; the Egyptian, the Chaldean, and now the Roman; upon which last, they do not Return any more, until the Second Coming of our Lord. Some of them compare the Raven, to the Law; the Dove, to the Gospel. The Law brought no Hope of our Peace with God, and our Deliverance from the Curse. The Gospel brings that Olive-branch.⁷¹

The Traditions about the Flood, which were found among the ancient Pagans, are given us, by our Heidegger. But I chuse rather to fetch them from some other Quarters; and you shall shortly have them under certain peculiar Advantages.⁷²

69 Heidegger (1:370–71, Exerc. XVIII, §§ 36, 37). St. Augustine's allegorical witticism appears in his De Civitate Dei (15.26 and 27) [PL 41. 472–473]; Ambrose's in De Noë et Arca liber uno (cap. 12, 14) [PL 14. 361], St. Jerome's in Contra Iovinianum (lib. 1, § 16) [PL 23. 236A], and St. Cyprian's in "Epistle 73.11: To Pompey" and "Epistle 74.15: Firmian to Cyprian" (ANF 5:389, 394). St. Augustine (City of God 15.26), in NPNFI (2:306), mentions this denial of Faustus, the Manichean, and comes up with a curious allegorical reading of the Ark's size and the preaching of the gospel, in Contra Faustum Manichaeum (12.14) [PL 42. 207], in NPNFI (4:188). St. Ambrose's comparison of the giants to carnal men is also given in his De Noë et Arca (cap. 14, § 49), as is Mather's Latin adaptation [PL 14. 384], which reads, "great shipwrecks [occur] when a whirlwind and a storm are stirred up, [and likewise] of the mind together with a body and [when] all the senses are stirred up." In St. Ambrose's allegorical interpretation, the dove left the Ark after the raven, "because honesty offsets malice, and virtue offsets blame" (De Noë et Arca, cap. 18, § 64) [PL 14. 391D].

70 Heidegger (1:371, Exerc. XVIII, § 38). Livy (29.16.6–7; 30.36.4) relates how the ten Locrian delegates carried olive branches as a symbol of peace, and Scipio carried such a branch to Hannibal in Carthage; Polybius tells as much in his narrative of Hannibal's Alpine crossing (Historiae 3.52.3 ff). Ovid's summons, "Come, Peace" appears in Fasti (1.712). And Christopher Columbus finds footsteps of the olive-branch, symbol of peace, among the Native Americans of Hispaniola. According to the "Libretto" manuscript, Columbus was welcomed by some of the naked Indian girls on San Domenica with "leaping and dancing" as each of them "gave the olive branch which they carried in their hands to the Captain" (J. B. Thacher, Christopher Columbus 2:502).

71 Heidegger (1:371–72, Exerc. XVIII, § 39). For the threefold emission of the dove and its signification, see Samuel Bochart's Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 6, col. 33–34).

72 For an exhaustive listing of the ancient traditions, consult Heidegger (1:372–78, Exerc. XVIII, §§ 40–43).

All that we will here add, is this; That the Americans too, have such Traditions among them. Josephus Acosta, and Antonius Herrera, assure us, that they found the Memory of the Flood, preserved among the Indians of Cuba, and Mechoacana, and Nicarag{u}a. Corata tells us, of a Tradition among the Peruvians; Terras eas omnes aquis mersas latuisse, perisse homines exceptis paucis, qui in ligneis vasa se receperunt; and that they continued in their Vessel during this Flood, until the Waters were dried up; which they found out, by sending out their Dogs from time to time, that at last returned Dry unto them. Gomara tells us of a Tradition among the Mexicans; That of old, they had more Suns than one; whereof one perished in a Flood; unàque cum eo homines, et quicquid in Terris esset. Martin Martinus also tells us, That the Chinese have a Tradition of a Flood, in an History very agreeable to what we have in the Book of Genesis.⁷³

Q. We attempt several Wayes to solve the Phænomena of the Flood; and provided our Hypotheses have no unscriptural Extravagancies in them, tis not amiss to produce them. It is possible, there may be something in each of the Hypotheses, near the Truth, and those things which we observe in separate Illustrations, might several of them concur in that wonderful Revolution. Lett us therefore entertain ourselves with another Hypothesis?

A. It shall be one of Mr. Erasmus Warren, who writes a Geologia, to confute the Theory of Burnet, and to declare the true Condition of the Earth before the Deluge.⁷⁴

73 Mather's source is Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 6:17 (Commentary 1:35). Joseph Acosta's popular Naturall and Morall Historie (1604), bk. 1, ch. 25, pp. 70–71, relates the tradition of the Flood among Native Americans. Another apocryphal story of the Flood is told by Montezuma's Indian subjects, in Historia general de los hechos, 8 vols. (1726–30), by the Spanish explorer and historian Antonio de Herrera y Tordesillas (1559–1625); an English translation of Herrera's History, by Capt. John Stevens, was published in London as The General History of the vast Continent and Islands of America (1725). Here we learn that Mexican Indians believed that "the World had been twice destroy'd; once by Floods and once by Tempests, when the Earth had been turn'd topsy turvy, and that the Men who then liv'd were Giants, whose Bones were found in the Clefs" (2:292, vol. 2, decad. 2, bk. 4, ch. 5, p. 292). The unidentified Spaniard Augustine Corata perhaps relates the same story of the giant Nephilim, whose bones were found in Peru, in Agostino Zárate's Historia del descubrimiento y Conquista del Perú (1555), lib. 1, cap. 5. At any rate, Corata's tradition confirms the Noachide Flood: "That all those lands lay hidden, submerged under water, and that all men perished, except a few who retreated in a wooden vessel." The Spanish historian Francisco López de Gómara (1511–64) relates in his Historia de Mexico (1554) 297–98 that according to a Native American tradition of the Flood, there were five suns, "and one [perished] with as many humans as were on earth." Last but not least, the Italian Jesuit missionary Martino Martini (1614–61) relates the Chinese tradition of the Flood, in his oft-cited Sinicae historiae decas prima (1659), lib. 1, pp. 12–13.

74 Mather summarizes the main argument of Erasmus Warren's Geologia (1690), one of the several physico-theological cosmologies written in response to Thomas Burnet's Sacred Theory (1684).

In the first Place, he sounds the Waters of the Flood, with the Plumbline, which Moses ha's reach'd out unto us. He takes it for a Mistake, what ha's commonly been supposed; That the Waters were Fifteen Cubits higher than the Highest Mountains. They were indeed but Fifteen Cubits high in all, above the Surface of the Earth. Not, that they were no where Higher, than just Fifteen Cubits, above the Ground; they might in most Places, be Thirty, Forty, Fifty Cubits High, or more. For if all the Hills were gone, the Surface of the Earth would still be higher, the further it is from the Sea. Thus Helvetia is reckoned the Highest Countrey in Europe; and sends forth Four great Rivers into the Four several Quarters of the European World; the Danube Eastward, the Rosne Westward, the Rhine Northward, and the Po Southward. When the Flood ascended Fifteen Cubits {above} the Earth, where it is highest, (suppose the Hills pared off) much of the Earth might be Four or Five times as Deep under Water.⁷⁵

The Holy Text saies, That the Waters prevailed Fifteen Cubits upwards. But Mr. Warren thinks, This might be meant of the Earth only; and yett well deserve to be called, a Great and Exceeding Prevalence. Where it speaks of the High Hills and Mountains, it only saies of them, They were covered. And so indeed they were; and Fifteen Cubits upwards too; that is to say, on their Sides, not above their Tops: the Bottoms of them stood so deep in the Waters. The Original may bear this Interpretation; and the Septuagint seems not to disallow it. Thus when Q. Curtius would express a Sitting about a Table, he saies, They were, Super Mensam; and a Sitting about a Banquet; they were, Super Vinum et Epulas. And so here; Super Montes, may be, About the Mountains.⁷⁶

Mr. Warren thinks, he ha's a Demonstration, That the Waters of the Flood, never were Fifteen Cubits above the Tops of the Highest Mountains. For, we read; Gen. 8.4. The Ark rested on the Mountains of Ararat. And this was, on the Seventeenth Day of the Seventh Month: And yett then, you'l find the Deluge was at the Highest; the Hundred and Fifty Dayes, from the prevailing Flood, which began, on the Seventeenth Day of the Second Month, were just then expired. Well; But there are Mountains in the World, very much Higher than those of Ararat; which tis generally agreed, are the Mountains of Armenia. Sir Walter Rawleigh is very positive in it; That those Mountains, are not of equal Stature to many other Mountains in the World. He confirms his Assertion, from the best Cosmographers; and even from Ey-Witnesses; who affirm the Mountains of Armenia, to be far Inferior & Undersett, unto diverse other Mountains, both in that Part of the 75 Warren, Geologia (ch. 15, § 2, pp. 300–01). The “Rosne” river is an archaic name for the Rhône in SE France. Mather erroneously copies “ascended Fifteen Cubits of the Earth”, whereas Warren’s text (301) reads “above the Earth” (underscoring added). I have elected to restore Warren’s original idiom.

76 Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, § 3, pp. 325–26). Gen. 7:19–20 (Septuagint). Warren uses as his idiomatic proof text passages from Quintus Curtius Rufus (7.4.7–8; 8.4.30): “Super Mensam” and, respectively, “Super Vinum et Epulas” suggest that the banqueters were “at the table” or “amid wine and feasting.”

World, and elsewhere. Castaldus particularly, makes Mount Athos far superiour to any of them. Solinus will give a Superiority to Mount Olympus. Herodotus will advance the famous Mountains of Atlas above those {of} Armenia. Or, if he be too fabulous to be relied upon, Varenius will venture his Wager upon the Head of the Pike of Tenariff. And some will be for the Andes in America. But Caucasus alone might have done our Business; for That is a Part of Taurus, as the Mountains of Ararat also are; but it is known unto all, to be much Higher than they. Now the Mountains of Ararat, being much Lower than several others; and the Ark resting on them, when the Flood was at the Highest; if the Waters had risen Fifteen Cubits, above the Tops of the Highest Mountains, the Ark must have been plunged under Water, & have been wholly swallowed up.⁷⁷

[219r] If we should not allow, either a Synecdoche, or an Hyperbole, in the Words of Moses, that seem to intim{at}e the Covering of the Highest Mountains, (tho' those Figures are very frequent in the Sacred Scriptures, and in all the Languages of | the Orient:) we may know, That in the Holy Style, to Cover, does not alwayes mean, To Surmount, and, Over-top, and Over-whelm; Sometimes, it means, only to Surround the Object, or to be About it in great Abundance. Thus, the Precious Stones, were a Covering to the Tyrians; [Ezek. 28.13.] Thus, the Jewes were said to Cover the Altar of the Lord, with Tears: [Mal. 2.13.] Thus Moses himself, saies; The Quails covered the Camp: [Exod. 16.13.] which is explained; [Num. 11.13.] They fell round about the Camp.⁷⁸

Our Warren indeed, will hardly concede, That the Flood prevailed so far, as to carry up the Ark, unto the Top of the Mountains of Ararat. It might be said, very truly, to Rest upon them; tho' it were only By them; or not far from the Foot of them. The Civil Story about the Ark on the Top of those Mountains, is all along chargeable, either with Uncertainty, or with Incongruity. Josephus brings it in, with a, λεγεται. So tis said. And only with a, προς τω ορει, neither; or, Near the Mountain. The Story he brings out of Nicolaus Damascenus, of some saved

⁷⁷ Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, pp. 327–29). The popular History of the World (1614), by Sir Walter Rawleigh (Raleigh), was reprinted many times. The italicized quotation from Raleigh is from History (bk. 1, ch. 7, § 10, subsec. 10, p. 122). The Italian geographer and cartographer Jacobus Castaldus, aka. Giacomo Gastaldi (c. 1500–66), is best known for his elegant Universale descrizione di tutta la terra conosciuta (1562) – filled with detailed maps of the known world. The Roman historian Gaius Iulius Solinus (Collectanea rerum memorabilium, cap. 9 and 40) raises the height of the Macedonian Mt. Olympus, home of the Greek pantheon, above that of the Armenian Ararat – old rivalries never die. Herodotus, the father of historiography, relates that Mt. Atlas – according to eyewitnesses – is so tall that its summit can never be seen because it is always covered by clouds (Historia 4.184). The last word is given to the famous Dutch physician, geographer, and cosmographer Bernard Varenius (1622–50), whose Geographia Generalis, 2nd ed. (1681), is the best mathematical treatise on geography of his age. Though admitting a degree of subjectivity, Varenius reports that the volcanic Pico del Teide of Tenerife (11,645 feet or 3718 m), Canary Islands, is by some esteemed the highest mountain in the world. Ships can see the Pike at a distance of more than 60 miles (Geographia Generalis, lib. 1, cap. 10, prop. 3, pp. 69–70).

⁷⁸ Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, pp. 330–33).

at this time, upon the Mountain Baris, and yett the Ark floating up to the Top of the Mountains there, is inconsistent with itself. What Benjamin the Jew, reports, That one Omar built a Mahometan Synagogue of the Materials of the Ark, but that the Prince took it down, è cacumine duorum montium, from the Top of Two Mountains; is very unlikely. How came the Ark to be so divided? What Eusebius, and Cyril, and Chrysostome, and Epiphanius, and Isidore, tell us, of the, λεψανα, the Reliques of the Ark, to be seen on the Tops of these Mountains, in their Days; was doubtless an Hear-say imposed upon them.⁷⁹

Well; but, methinks, our Warren can hardly keep his Head above Water, when that Passage comes rolling over him; Gen. 8.5. The Waters decreased continually, till the Tenth Month, and on the First Day of the Month, were the Tops of the Mountains seen. I am in Pain to think, what he will Answer! – His Answer is; Parts of Mountains, that are far from the Highest, have been called, The Tops of the Mountains. Thus we read; [Amos. 1.2.] The Top of Carmel shall wither. By the Top, is meant, the Sides, yea, and principally, the Lower Parts of the Sides. We read; [Exod. 19.20.] Moses went up to the Top of Mount Sinai. And yett the very Top, was inaccessible, not only for the Difficulty of Ascent, as Josephus assures us, but now for the Terrible Fire, that was flaming there. He add; That here may be meant, the Tops of some Lower Mountains, which were quite covered with the Waters. But if this will not satisfy; He proposes, That the Tops of the Mountains, may be said to be Seen, at the Time aforesaid; on the account of their Emergency out of Darkness, & not out of Water. Doubtless, the Flood brought on a Time of Horrible Darkness; All the Vapours contained in the Atmosphere, turn'd apace into Clouds and Rains. And the Darkness which presently came on the World, as the Desolation by the Flood began, might be necessary to rescue the Ark, from the Rude Assaults of wicked Men, who in their Consternation, might have made a forcible Assault and Entry upon it. We read, The Waters Returned from off the Earth continually. The Word sometimes intends, a Return of a thing into its first Principles. The Return of the Waters into Vapours, might be one thing intended 79 Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, § 4, p. 333–37). Josephus Flavius introduces the story of the Ark with “It is said.” The Greek phrase πρὸς τῷ ὄρει suggests “at” or “near the mountain.” Josephus excerpts an ancient tradition from Nicolaus Damasceneus, that many escaped Noah’s Flood by climbing to the top of Mt. Baris (Armenia), and “one who was carried in an ark came on shore upon the top of it; and that the remains of the timber were a great while preserved” (Antiquities 1.3.6). The Spanish traveler R. Benjamin of Tudela relates in his Itinerarium Benjamini Tudelensis (1543, 1633) that Omar ben al Khataab dismantled Noah’s Ark, which rested between the tops of two mountains, and built a mosque from it in the City of Geziret ibn Omar (Itinerary [1633] 52). Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 9.11–12) cites Abydenus (Assyrian History), Berosus (Babylonika), Josephus (Antiquities 1.3.6), and others to assert that fragments of the Ark still survive in the Armenian mountains and that pieces of it are carried off by the devout for charms, souvenirs, or amulets. Cyrillus Alexandrinus (Contra Julianum 1.7.21), Joannes Chrysostom (De perfecta caritate) [PG 56. 288, lines 1–2], Epiphanius’s Panarion 18.3.3–4 (Epiphanius 1:217, lines 6–8), and Isidore Pelusiota – all relate rumors and hoary traditions of how pieces of the Ark can be found near Mt. Ararat.

here. While this was doing, the Air probably must continue in an hideous Darkness; & be mightily overcast, bemisted, and conspissated. The Tops of the Mountains became visible at length; not by the Sinking of the Waters below the Tops, whither they never ascended; but by the Clearing up of the Sky, & the Wearing off of the unusual Fogginess. And yett this Visibility thereof, might be ascribed unto the Decrease of the Waters too; for the Tops of the Mountains could not be seen, until the Waters were so diminished, that they could not afford Vapours enough, to Darken the Air any longer. Had not the Atmosphere been in such a Turbid Condition, by Vapours, a most vehement Frost, must have seized upon the Waters of the Flood; and this would not well have consisted with the other Circumstances, which were come, & coming on the World. The Mountains which were now seen, by the Return of the Atmosphere so far towards its old Consistency, probably could not yett be seen by looking right on; but rather by looking upwards: for the lower Regions of the Air, were very Foggy still. The Highest Parts of the Mountains, by thrusting up aloft, intercepted the Light-someness of the glimmering Sky, and by terminating the Ey-sight, they came to be discerned. And therefore indeed, we read of only the Tops of them, seen.⁸⁰

[220v] | That the Earth was fearfully Benighted in the Time of the Flood, seems intimated, from the Promise after the Flood, that there should after this, be no Intermission of Day, any more than of Seed-time and Harvest.

But our Warren ha's another Objection, to gett over; and that is, The Possibility of Mens escaping the Flood, by flying to the Mountains, if the Waters rose but Fifteen Cubits on their Sides, and the Tops of the Spacious, and Aspiring Mountains were bare, all the Time of the Flood.⁸¹

Before I give you, his Direct Reply to this Objection, I will go back, to his Explication of some Terms, that occur, in the Relation that Moses ha's given us, about the Causes of the Flood.

We read, The Fountains of the Great Deep were broken up. There were vast Caverns contained in the Antediluvian Mountains. These Caverns were burst open. Waters fetch'd from the Caverns in huge Rocks, are said to be, [Psal. 78.15.] In Abyssis Magnis; or, In the Great Deeps. These Caverns, tho' called, Great Deeps, were above the common Surface of the Earth, & the Waters issuing thence, came Running down upon it. Indeed, Moses uses the Singular Number; but as a Plural Number sometimes is putt for a Singular; (for instance, the Ark resting on the Mountains of Ararat;) so, a Singular Number sometimes is putt for a Plural: (for instance, the Quail; Exod. 16.13.) And tho' the Great Deep, is in the Singular Number, yett, the Fountains of it, are in the Plural; yea, and the Psalmist goes as far to meet Moses, as Moses to meet the Psalmist; for, [Psal. 78.15.] tho' in the Words of the Psalmist, the Substantive, Deeps, be in the Plural Number, the ⁸¹ Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, § 6, p. 344).

Adjective, Great, is in the Singular. Such Caverns of Waters in the Mountains, are inclosed in so very thick Walls, that we must not wonder at it, if they are not easily discovered in our Dayes. They were so closely immured before the Flood, that if the Almighty GOD, had not then broken them open, we might unto this Day, have remained ignorant of them. And when these mighty Cisterns of Nature were emptied, no Wonder that the Sides of many of them caved in, and most craggy Deformities, which look like the Ruines of a Dissolved World, were every where produced. The Crowns of several Mountains might sink down; others that were broached, & but not wholly drawn off, have stood gaping ever since, & been Receptacles of a vast Capacity both for Men & Beasts; like the Cave in Engedi. Palestine, as Josephus will inform you, was full of them; and Strabo will inform you, what are in Arabia.⁸²

But then, in Conjunction, with this wonderful Store of Waters, there were the vast Rains that fell for Forty Dayes together. And in this Way, we are supplied with Waters enough, without a Recourse, either to the Burnettian Romance; or, to a New Creation of Waters; or to Super-Cælestial Waters; or to a Change of the greatest Part of the Mass of the Air into Water; a Change, which it seems, is hardly yett justified by Experiment; tho' the Lord Verulam allowes of it; Descartes subscribes to it; and our Admirable Boyl himself, leaves it undetermined.⁸³

The Apostle Peter seems to intimate, [2. Pet. 3.5, 6.] That in the Flood, the Earth stood, part out of the Water, and part in the Water. Had all the Tops of the Mountains, been Covered with the Waters, the Slime on the whole Surface of the Earth for many Years after the Flood, must have been such, as to have rendred all Husbandry unpracticable. Attica after a far less Flood, could not be peopled again for the Space of Three Hundred Years. But now, immediately upon their coming out of the Ark, the Creatures enter upon Regions, where they have an agreeable Soyl and Sustenance provided for them. And the Scripture intimates, that for a considerable while after the Flood, Men still chose Mountains for their Habitation.⁸⁴

It is time for us, now to hear our Warren more directly Replying to the Objection, which we saw running down upon him. He saies; For People to ascend these High Mountains, when the Flood was coming in, was no such easy Matter. The Waters came horribly pouring down, with an astonishing Power and Plenty, from the lofty Mountains. And the pitchy, swollen, loaden Clouds, hanging and bagging about them, emptied themselves there, like pressed Spunges, and ran down in furious and mighty Torrents. No doubt, there were Water-Spouts, like the Ecnephia, or Exhydria, which at the Sea, they sometimes meet withal; and the Hills were full of such prodigious Cataracts. The Higher Sort of Mountains, like the Alps, were covered with Snow. Immense Quantities of that Snow melted apace, and added unto the dreadful Torrents. And the Waters which herewithal gushed out from the Caverns of the Great Deep, so increased the fierce Down-falls of the Waters from the Mountains, that no Mortals could ascend them; And all attempts to ascend them, were like running into the Sea, to be saved

Plato, Timaeus (49c, 4–5); Philo Judaeus, De Somniis (1.20.4–5) and De aeternitate mundi (19.103.5–6); and Heraclitus, Allegoriae (ch. 40, secs. 12–13). In the late Renaissance, Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam (1561–1626), still maintained this ancient philosophical mainstay, that the element air can turn into water, as his experiments seemed to confirm several times over, in his oft-reprinted Sylva Sylvarum: or A Naturall Historie in ten Centuries (1627), Century 1, Experiments 27, 76–82, pp. 8, 24–26. The great René Descartes (1596–1650) agreed with his colleague across the English channel and affirmed that the particles of air can change into water, in his Principia Philosophiae (1644), pars 4, art. 48, pp. 218–19. Lastly the admirable Robert Boyle (1627–91) felt his experiments were inconclusive, in Nova Experimenta Physico-Mechanica (1661), Experimentum XXII, pp. 103–20, esp. 108–10.

from Drowning. And if any Houses | or Creatures, were now so High upon the Mountains, as to be above the Water-mark of the Flood, yett the Downfalls of the Waters, would have ruined them all. Which might be one main Reason, why God appointed Noah, to build an Ark, and not an House or a Towre on any High Mountain, to præserve himself, and what was to be præserted with him.⁸⁵ [221r]

If any Creatures had any Subterraneous Dwellings, these also must perish. If the Water soaked not in upon them, yett it so squeez'd the Earth upon them, or so stop'd the Pores of it, that they must needs be smothered.⁸⁶

We cannot easily find a Quantity of Waters, to exceed the Limits that have hitherto been proposed. According to Mersennus's Account, Forty Dayes Rain, might raise the Waters an hundred & fifty foot. But Osiander and others, make it sufficient for no more than to sett the Ark afloat. [see Gen. 7.17.]⁸⁷

The Return of the Raven (if he did Return,) was from some other Cause, than the Excess of the Waters, not suffering his Access to any of the Mountains. But Warren is positive, (and he ha's Bochart to friend,) that the Raven did not Return at all. Accordingly, Tis a Proverb among the Arabians; He staires as long as Noahs Raven. The Latin Proverb is near akin, Corvus nuncius, or, Corvum misimus. Indeed, the Dove, being a more nice, & tender Bird, and wanting a good Food & a warm Roost, gladly flew back to the Ark, where it had been so well accommodated. Therefore, the Second time of its going forth, it returned not until the Evening; the Coolness of the Evening, made it sensible, that it wanted a convenient Lodging. It might have returned the Third Time; only the pleasant Air, tempted it so far from the Ark, that perhaps it could not presently find the Way back again.

Finally; There was an Omnipotent, Immediate, Miraculous Hand of God, in the whole Affayr; and by this Hand, the Ark was preserved from staving and wrecking, in this general, and horrendous Desolation of the World.⁸⁸

⁸⁵ Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, § 6, pp. 344–35). The Latinized Greek words “Ecnephiae” or “Exhydriae” are now better known as “hurricanes.”

⁸⁶ Warren, Geologia (ch. 16, § 7, p. 346).

Q. Upon that, The Lord said in his Heart, I will not again curse the Ground, any more for Mans sake, for the Imagination of Mans Heart is evil from his Youth? v. 21.

A. It may be read, The Lord spoke to his Heart; that is, to Noah's; to wit, to comfort him. To speak to ones Heart, is to comfort him. Thus the Ancients understood it.

But then, Dr. Gell would by all means, have us change the Word of supply, in the thing here spoken; and instead of, is, read, was. It looks very strange here, to make that a Motive of Mercy, which was just before a Motive of Wrath. It looks very sad, thus to leave the Case of Mankind, as desperate. An Atonement is now made, & the Sacrifice which Noah presented, (with an Eye to that of our Glorious JESUS) is accepted; and the Lord now saies; I will not again curse the Ground any more for Mans sake, as I have done, because the Imagination of Mans heart was evil from his Youth.

But, Lett the Gloss of my incomparable Friend, the famous Dr. Franckius, be brought into Consideration. The Lord said to His Heart, that is, To His CHRIST. The Thought is admirable.⁸⁹

⁸⁹ Mather excerpts An Essay toward the Amendment of the last English-Translation of the Bible (1659), Sermon II, esp. pp. 59–60, by Dr. Robert Gell (1595–1665), Anglican minister and rector of St. Mary Aldermary, London, and chaplain to the archbishop of Canterbury. I have as yet been unable to determine to which of August Hermann Francke's Pietist works Mather refers. Francke's homily Faith in Christ (1709) is still extant in the remains of the Mather libraries (Tuttle, "Libraries" 329). The Catalogus Librorum Bibliothecae Collegij Harvardini (1723, 1725) does not list any of his works. For Francke's influence on Mather, see R. Lovelace's American Pietism.

Q. A Remark on That; The Fear of you, and the Dread of you, shall be upon every Beast? v. 2.

A. Dr. Nieuentyt, in his, Religious Philosopher, observes, That unto this Day, this ha's Place in the most Devouring & Pernicious Creatures.

For, besides that of their own Nature, they chuse to live in Wildernesses & uninhabited Countreys; We meet with a Remarkable Evidence, in the German Ephemerides, [ix & x Years] That a Lion will never assault a Man, unless compell'd thereto by Hunger, Self-defence, or the Discharge of a Gun against him. And in relation to Tygers, we read the Following Passage; *They are afraid of White and Naked Men, like ALL THE WILD BEASTS of Asia and Africa, and avoid | them, as it were with a Kind of Reverence; and it is without Exemple, that they have attack'd any such.*⁹⁰ [224v]

And in my own Countrey, when the Bears ever now & then appear in mighty Numbers, I could never hear of any Man assaulted, much less Devoured, by any of them.⁹¹

Q. Upon the Prohibition of Blood? v. 4.

A. It is Monsr. Jurieu's Remark, That the Command is to pour out the Blood of every Animal, before the Flesh of it be eaten; And that a Sacrifice is therein Proposed & Required. The Command of Sacrificing is here inculcated. The Interpretation of Aben-Ezra, and those who follow him, alledging that the Design of this Command, is to raise in Men an Aversion for Cruelty, is not so very probable. For certainly there is much Cruelty in eating the Flesh of an Animal, as in tasting the Blood.⁹²

⁹⁰ Mather here quotes from The Religious Philosopher, 3 vols. (1718–19), Contemplation XXII, secs. 2–3, vol. 2:630–31, by Dr. Bernard Nieuwentyt, or Nieuwentijdt (1654–1718), a Dutch physician, who acknowledges as his own source the “German Ephemerides,” or Miscellanea curiosa medico-physica academiae naturae curiosorum, sive ephemeridum medico-physicarum Germanicarum curiosarum, 30 vols. in 25 (1670–1706), the German equivalent to the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society. Mather, via Nieuwentyt, refers to Miscellanea curiosa, vol. 9 (1679), 9th and 10th year, p. 453.

Every Effusion of Blood was considered as a Sacrifice. Consider, 1. Chron. XI.19. And Lev. XVII.10.

This is a Thought highly worthy to be prosecuted.

Q. How shall one understand that Passage, Your Blood of your Lives will I require, at the Hand of every Beast will I require it? v. 5.

A. The Hebrew Interpreters thus understand it; Puniam eos qui Homines Bestijs objecere: The Cruelty of throwing Men to be devoured by Beasts, is herein especially referr'd unto.⁹³

Q. That Passage, Whosoever sheds Mans Blood, by Man, shall his Blood be shed, how may it be taken? v. 5.

A. According to Grotius, Non male illud, Per Hominem, Sic interpreteris, ut morti devotus intelligatur, non is tantum, qui manu suâ perpetravit Homicidium, sed et is qui mandavit.⁹⁴

Munster is of the Opinion, That in the Antediluvian World, no Murderer dy'd by the Hand of the Magistrate, (any more than Cain;) but that God Himself took the Judgment into His own Immediate Hands. After the Flood, the Lord communicate unto Man, Part of his Power over Life and Death, in the special Case of Murder. Et hic est Fons, ex quo manat totum Jus Civile et Jus Gentium. Here is the Institution of Magistracy; For, if God give the Magistrate a Power over the Life and Death of other Men, he ha's it much more, over their Estates and their lesser Interests.⁹⁵ commentary on Gen. 9:3–5 is concerned with the Noachide prohibition of eating slaughtered animals (wild or domestic) that are not properly bled; for “nefesh” or “life’s blood” belongs to God (Commentary 1:122). Jurieu (Critical History 1:244–45), Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:40–41), and John Selden (De Jure Naturali, lib. 7, cap. 1, pp. 783–91) identify Maimonides’s More Nebuchim (Part 3, ch. 48); i.e., Guide (3.48.370–72) as their principal source. Indeed, Maimonides provides a whole set of kashruth instructions on kosher meat, esp. in his Schechita. See also Rashi, Ramban, and Sanhedrin 59b, in Mikraoth Gedoloth on Gen. 9:4 (Genesis 1:119).

⁹⁴ According to Hugo Grotius’s juridical explanation in his Annotationes (on Gen. 9.6), in Opera Omnia Theologica (1:10), “This ‘by man’ is not wrong; you should interpret it this way: that the one who is understood to be condemned to death is not only the one who has committed murder by his own hand, but also the one who has ordered it.” See Appendix A.

⁹⁵ Sebastian Münster adds in his Hebraica Biblia Latina (1:22), annot. (b), “And here is the fount from which all Civil Law and the Law of the Nations flows.”

Q. The Use of the Rain-bow directed unto Noah, is there then any thing in Pagan Antiquitie to commemorate it? v. 9.

A. The Poets observing a Change of Weather, to bee intimated by the Rain-bow, make it, The Messenger of the Gods. But when wee read, that Passage in Gen. 9.9. That it is a Token of the Covenant between God & Man, one would incline to think, That the Pagans had so far known the Sacred Writings of Moses, & from hence in their fanciful Way, advanced this Meteor to bee, Internuntia Deorum, as they call it, and, Θεων Αγγελος, as Homer styles it; an, Angel of that Covenant, which assures the Præservation of the New World. This is their Iris, which is from Εἶρω i.e. Αγγελῶ, or perhaps from the Chaldee Ir, an Angel.

And on this Occasion wee may add, There are Fiery Apparitions, often mentioned in the Old Testament, as, the Burning Bush, and the Flaming Chariots: And wee read, that God appointed Holy Fire to bee kept alwayes on the Altar. Hence perhaps it was, that Fire was | Mars, a God, and worshipped by the Chaldeans and Persians, and it was in such Request, among the old Romans, that they ordered the Vestal Virgins, to keep it unextinguished.⁹⁶

Q. Was there any Rainbow before the Flood? v. 13.

A. There is nothing in Scripture, to make us think there was; nor indeed any thing in Nature, unless we will assert this manifest Untruth, That every Disposition of the Air, or every Cloud, is fitly disposed, for the Producing of a Rainbow. This is well argued by Dr. Jackson, who adds, That if other Natural Causes depend upon the Final, (as the Scripture-Philosophy teaches us,) they who acknowledge the Scripture, have no reason to think, that the Air had before the Flood, that peculiar Disposition, which is required unto the Production of the Rain-bow; when this wonderful Effect, had no such Use or End, as it hath had ever since. For it was appointed by God, as a Witness of His Covenant with the New World; a Messenger to secure Mankind from Destruction, by any Universal Deluge any more. If it had appeared before the Flood, the Appearing of it after the Flood, would have been but a poor Comfort unto Noah, & his Timorous Posterity.

⁹⁶ Thomas Jackson (Works vol. 1, bk. 1, ch. 16, § 7, p. 55) argues that Jupiter's calming the waters for the Argives' return from Troy (Homer's Iliad 15.258–61) is one such proof of pagan knowledge of the Mosaic writings. The "Internuntia Deorum" or the "messenger between the gods" [and man] also called "theon angelos" (Scholia in Homerum: Scholia in Iliadem 3.121, line 2 of scholion) is yet another – if Jackson and Mather are to be believed. The flaming chariot (the sun) of Apollo, the Pharsi or Zoroastrian fire worshippers, and the Roman vestal virgins stoking the flame on the altar – all are seen as having had their origin in the Mosaic scriptures. See especially Gerard Vossius's De Theologia Gentili (1641) lib. 2, cap. 12–13, pp. 365–74, Edmund Dickinson's Delphi Phoenicizantes (1655), below, and Thomas Hyde's Historia Religionis Veterum Persarum (1700), cap. 8–9, pp. 150–69.

The ancient Poets, had a better Philosophy, when they feigned Iris, to be the Daughter, or (as we would now speak) the Mother of Wonderment; Θαύμαντος ἔκγονον. And the Messenger of Jupiter and Juno. Homer accordingly represents Iris, as being sent with a peremptory Command unto Neptune, That he should not aid the Græcians; by the Swelling, we may suppose, of the Waters.⁹⁷

The Rain-bow does, as it were, say, That God will not again Drown the Earth, altho' the Clouds have Thickned, as if they Threatned it. Indeed, the Rainbow is a Natural Sign, there will not be much Rain after it appears, but that the Clouds begin to disperse. The Rain-bows made by the Reflection of the Sun or the Thinner Clouds, become a Pledge that GOD would not suffer them to Thicken any more for a General Inundation. Yea, the admirable Form of this Glorious Circle (as tis called by the Son of Syrach, Eccles. XLIII.12.) bent by the Hands of the Most High, does naturally excite one, to look beyond the other Causes unto the Final. Finally, we see two things in the Mixt Colours of the Rain-bow; The Destruction of the Old World by Water, & of the present World by Fire.⁹⁸

Q. Why is it said, Ham the Father of Canaan? v. 22.

A. You may easily guess, at the Design of Moses, relating to the Canaanites.

But there are also some odd Circumstances, which make the Opinion of the Hebrew Doctors, not improbable, That Canaan first saw Noah, in his indecent Posture, & made Sport with it unto his Father; who did not Reprove him as he should have done, but also sported on it. He proclaimed it in the Street, publicly mocking of it; and this no doubt with some singular Degree of Profaneness as well as Derision. For tis probable, he laughed at the Promise of the Messiah, which he had often heard his Father speak of, but now thought him incapable to Begett.

⁹⁸ The apocryphal Liber Ecclesiasticus (early 2nd c. BCE) is attributed to Jesus, Son of Syrach (Ben Sira). Though the rainbow may promise that the earth would never again be destroyed by water, yet 2 Peter 3:12 presumably foretells the destruction of the world by fire.

Whereas we read, He knew what his younger Son had done. Some fetch an Argument from hence, that Canaan first made himself Merry with his Grandfather; who is here called, his Younger Son, or his Little Son; but Ham was neither Little nor Younger, but his middlemost Son.⁹⁹

Q. What may be observable in the Different Style of Noah, when Blessing of Shem, and when Cursing of Cham? v. 25, 26.

A. The Blessing of Shem is begun with This; Blessed be the Lord God of Shem: it is directed unto God. The Cursing of Cham, (in Canaan) is more immediately directed unto himself; Cursed be Canaan. Bochart observes, That there is a notable Mystery in this Enallage of Persons. The Guilty Sinner is cursed in his own Person, because his own Sinfulness is from none but himself; Mali fomes et scaturigo est in ipso Homine. But the Patriarch delighting in the Piety of his other Son, chuses to Bless God, rather than the Son on that Occasion; An Acknowledgement of God, as being by His Grace, the Author of all that Piety. Consider, Phil. 2.13. and, 1. Cor. 15.10. and, Psal. 115.1. and Mat. 5.16.

And especially, if we have pious and worthy Children, we must ascribe unto God alone, all the Glory of it.¹⁰⁰

Q. A further Thought on this Form of Blessing; Blessed be the Lord God of Shem? v. 26.

A. The Words are, as Dr. Gell observes, according to the Idiom of the Hebrew Language, a Metalepsis; whereby we understand the Antecedent out of the Consequent; the Blessing of Shem out of the Blessing of God. q.d. “The Lord God so heap His Blessings both Temporal and Spiritual, upon Shem, that both he, and whoever shall see it, may say, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem, who by His Blessings on him, hath declared himself the God of Shem, in Covenant with him & his.”¹⁰¹

Q. What is, The Dwelling of Japheth in the Tents of Shem, which is promised in the Blessings of Noah upon his Children? v. 27.

A. I know of no such Matter promised, or so much as mentioned.

Indeed, I have heard this Matter touch’d upon, in a Thousand Prayers and Sermons. But our good Men have quite mistaken the Matter. The Antecedent, ⁹⁹ Mather’s immediate source is his old vademecum Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:43). According to Pirke de R. Eliezer (ch. 23, p. 170), Canaan castrated Noah by tying a string around Noah’s testicles and subsequently derided his grandfather in the market place. The Zohar (1:73b) says much the same. Rashi from the Talmud (Sanhedrin 70a) and the Midrash Rabbah (XXXVI:7) even speculates that Noah was sodomized (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:126).

¹⁰¹ Mather’s citation appears in Robert Gell’s An Essay toward the Amendment (1659), Sermon III, p. 93.

unto that Relative [HEE] is not Japheth, but GOD. The Blessing of Japheth was to be Enlarged; his Posterity was to occupy the Largest Portion of the Habitable World. But the Blessing {of} Shem was, the Dwelling of God in his Tents: his Posterity was to enjoy the most notable and singular Tokens of the Divine Presence among them; Yea, when God Himself came to Tabernacle, or Pitch His Tent, in Flesh, [Joh. 1.14.] it was in that Posterity.¹⁰²

Q. A Note upon the Blessing of Japhet? v. 27.

A. The Jews take special Notice of it, that Noah in Blessing of Japhet uses only the Name of אלהים / God; a Name known among all Nations.

Joachimus Langius apprehends, That there is promised unto Japhet, a Dominion over the Inhabitants of Canaan. In the Fulfilment whereof, when the Jews becoming the Inhabitants of Canaan, came to imitate the Manners of those Canaanites who were their Predecessors, & so to deserve the Name of Canaanites, the Romans who were the Offspring of Japhet, should sieze upon their Land, & bring them into Servitude.¹⁰³

Q. The Curse upon Cham, does it not Justify our Enslaving the Negro's, wherever we can find them? v. 27.

A. The whole Family of Cham was not concern'd in that Curse. None but Canaan, the youngest Son of Cham, is mentioned; and he is Thrice mentioned. The Negroes are not the Posterity of Canaan. The Imprecation of the Patriarch, seems to be little more than a Prophecy, of the Canaanites Overthrow & Reduction, under the Power of the Israelites, who were the Posterity of Shem. And, as one observes, the Recording hereof by Moses, doth seem especially to Justify, or a least Encourage, the Israelites, in Dispossessioning them.¹⁰⁴

Q. What Remarkable is there, in the Effects of Noah's Blessing and Cursing his Offspring? v. 27.

A. Mr. Mede hath an Observation, That there hath never yett been a Son of Cham, that hath shaken a Scepter over the Head of Japhet. Shem hath subdued Japhet, and Japhet hath subdued Shem; But Cham never subdued either. This made Annibal, a Child of Canaan, cry out with Amazement of Soul, Agnosco fatum Carthaginis; I acknowledge the Fate of Carthàge. [Livy. L. XXVII in fine.]¹⁰⁵

Q. Austin thinks it enough to bespeak the Title of a Prophet, for the Patriarch Noah, that the Ark which he made, Prophetia nostrorum temporum fuit. But he may be further entituled unto it, from his marvellous Prophecy, about his Posterity; which now calls for some Illustration? v. 20–27.¹⁰⁶

A. We will again consult our learned Heidegger; and principally employ his Lucubrations, to furnish our Illustrations on this noble Subject.

We find the Patriarch overtaken with Wine, after his coming out of the Ark, into his New World. The Hebrewes and the Fathers do generally agree, That he was wholly a Stranger to the Nature of Wine, and that the Inebriating Power of it, was utterly unknown to him; or, that it was, as Chrysostom expresses the Matter, δια το μη ειδεναι της μεταληψεως τα μετρα εις μεθην εξεκυλισθη, Quòd ignoraret modum hauriendi Vini, Ebrietati succubuisse. But our Heidegger looks on this, as an uncertain and an ungrounded Opinion; and will not be persuaded, That the Use of Wine had been all this while unknown unto the World; when Vines were so common, & the Long Lives of the People gave them Opportunity enough to find out what Use they might be putt unto; And our Saviour makes Drunkenness one prevailing Sin among the Antediluvians. That Expression, And Noah began to be an Husbandman; will not imply, That there was no Husbandry before the Flood. It only implies, That Noah sett himself to restore the Artes βιωτικαι which had formerly been practised. Yea, and the Word ought rather to be rendred, as Canaanites of the Holy Land, in Matthew Poole's commentary on Gen. 9:25–27 (Synopsis Criticorum 1:114–16). See S. R. Haynes, Noah's Curse (2002), chs. 2–3.

¹⁰⁵ Mather's extract from Joseph Mede is at second hand from Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:44). Mede's observation appears in Works (1664), bk. 1, Discourse XLVIII (on Gen. 10:5), p. 378. Mede points out that the Carthaginians fell because they were from the stock of Canaan (378, note) – not that Hannibal was aware of this nicety. The Latin quotation, whose translation Mather supplies from Mede (via Patrick), is adapted from Hannibal's contrite acknowledgement: "agnoscere se fortunam Carthaginis fertur dixisse" (Livy 27.51.12), that he "recognized the destiny of Carthage."

Onkelos and Jonathan have done it; Et permansit. The Great Calvin at last leaves the Matter so; Ego hoc in medio relinquens, potius ex ebrietate Noë descendum esse arbitror, quàm fœda et detestabilis sit ebrietas.¹⁰⁷

The Conjectures and the Traditions of the Jewish Expositors, How Noah came to know, what had befallen him, relating to his Denudation, in his Drunkenness, are not worth a Recitation. Tis enough, that we say, with Chrysostom, He learn'd it by Enquiries of his Two Sons, of Shem and Japhet.¹⁰⁸

The Prophecy that followes, is Tripartite. The First Article, is, a Malediction upon Cham; who had been so horribly Abusive unto his Father. But it seems wonderful, that Canaan the Son of Cham, should be the Object mentioned; and a State of Servitude be assigned unto him. The Hebrewes, and Theodoret, and Procopius Gazæus, and Lyranus, and Abulensis, and others from them, tell us, That Canaan was the first who saw his exposed Grandfather, and impudently and petulantly play'd upon him; and that his Father Cham, was by his Informations call'd into the Mockery. But this is not a Thing Declared in the Scriptures; and therefore the Conjecture is as easily Rejected, as Received. Chrysostom therefore tells us, It was, δια τινα λογον εγκεκρυμμενον. Ob Rationem occultam. But the most solid Answer of all, is that given by Austin; [Quæst. 17. in Genesin.] Queritur, Quarè cum Peccans Cham in Patris offensâ, non in se ipso, sed in Filio suo Canaan Maledicatur? Nisi prophetatum est, Terram Canaan, ejectis Canaaneis indè, et debellatis, accepturos esse filios Israel, qui venient de semine Shem. Theodoret speaks to the like Purpose, and makes the Words of Noah, rather a Prædiction, than an Imprecation; a Prophecy that the Posterity of Canaan should one day be outed by the Israelites, who descend from Shem, & should possess themselves

¹⁰⁷ Heidegger (1:408, Exerc. XX, § 2). Even though Heidegger lists Maimonides and R. David Kimchi as sources for denying Noah's knowledge of wine and its effect (Hachut Hameshulash 1:237), Rabbi Ibn Ezra, Abarbanel, Ramban, Rashi, and others, tend to disagree. They more than hint that Noah was familiar with wine and its potency – even to the point of desiring inebriation (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:125–26). Joannes Chrysostom, In Genesim (homiliae 1–67 [PG 53. 263, lines 33–34], maintains that apart from planting the first vineyard, Noah was also the first person to experience inebriation and “through ignorance of the proper amount to drink [wine] fell into a drunken stupor” (Homilies in Genesis 29.6, pp. 202–03). The sins of the antediluvians paralleling those of the present (i.e., Mather's time) are suggested in Matt. 24:38–39 and Luke 17:27. The Latin-Greek compound Artes βιωτικαι [biotikai] suggests “the arts pertaining to life”; i.e., here: “agriculture.” Both the Targums Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uziel, in Walton (4:17) read, “and he devoted [himself],” or “And Noah began to be a man working on the earth” (Etheridge 1:53, 185). In his commentary on Gen. 9:20, John Calvin, too, acknowledges that Noah's supposed ignorance of cultivating vines is frequently used to excuse Noah's drunkenness, and concludes that “leaving this question undetermined, I [Calvin] rather suppose, that we are to learn from the drunkenness of Noah, what a filthy and detestable crime drunkenness is” (Commentaries 1.1:300).

of Palæstine; δεδιττομενος δε τους υστερον εσομενους μη πλημμελειν εις γενεας. Deterrens autem posteros, ne peccent in parentes. The unsearchable Judgments of God, visit the Sins of Parents, on the Children; but Canaan only is mentioned here, lest the Judgments threatned should seem to belong unto all the Children of Cham. And Moses would raise the Hopes of the Israelites, about the Success of the great Expedition, which was yett before them. The Divine Sovereignty is display'd in this Matter. And it is a Mistake in any to imagine, That the Blackness of the Ethiopians & other Children of Cham, arises from the Curse of Noah upon him. The True Cause of their Blackness may be this. They were made very Brown, by the Hott Sun striking upon them. They disliked this Colour. With proper Juices and Unguents, it was their Custome, to change their Brown into Black; and, Versa est postea Ars in Naturam: Nature itself by Degrees conform'd, unto what had been by Art a long while Introducing. Vossius observes, That the Figure of the Noses, among the Moors, and other Nations, | was by Degrees at length confirmed from Artificial into what is now Natural among them.¹⁰⁹ [228v]

The Blessing of Shem, is; Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his Servant. God must be acknowledged as the Author and Giver of all the Piety in Shem; and pious Shem would chuse to hear the Lord God Blessed, & Praised for it. The first Article of the Blessing is; That JEHOVAH would be the God of Shem. A Fæderal Speech; An Excellent Thing! Vast Glories are in it. God will not be the God of a Sinner, lest He appear Like unto him. God will therefore Justify the Sinner, to whom He becomes a God, that so He may hold Communion with him. He that is Justified ha's Peace with God, and Hope of Everlasting Life, both for Soul and Body. This brings us anon into the Heavenly City. The Surety of this Covenant, is the Messiah; whom Noah now foresees

109 Heidegger (1:410–12, Exerc. XX, §§ 5, 6). Theodoret (Quæstiones in Octateuchum, Quest. 58, p. 55, lines 1–5), Procopius Gazaecus (Commentarii in Octateuchum, on Gen. 9:18–22) [PG 87. Pt. 1. 302], Nicholaus de Lyra (annotations on Gen. 9, in Postilla Super Totam Bibliam [1492], vol. 1, n.p.), and Alfonso Tostado of Avila, aka. Abulensis (Commentaria in Genesim) – all put the onus on Canaan. Theodoret argues that because Ham had sinned as a son against his father, Noah punished Ham through his own son. Chrysostom (In Genesim Homilia 29.20) [PG 53. 269, line 21] seems to sidestep the issue of Canaan's culpability for his father's sin of disrespect, for Chrysostom argues that Noah cursed Canaan "for some hidden reason" (Homily in Genesim 29.20, p. 212). St. Augustine's rhetorical answer appears in his Questiones in Genesim, Quest. XVII, on Gen. 9:25 (Questiones in Heptateuchum, lib. 1) [PL 34. 551]: "It is asked, for what other reason is Ham, when sinning against his father, cursed not in himself, but in his son Canaan, other than because it was prophesied that the Canaanites would be subdued and cast out from the land of Canaan, and that the children of Israel, who would come from the seed of Shem, would take it." Theodoret adds that Noah's curse of Canaan is not only prophetic (Quæstiones in Octateuchum, Quest. p. 55, lines 10–11) "but [should also] deter future generations from sinning against their parents." Finally, the farsighted Isaac Vossius (1618–89), Dutch humanist, classical scholar, tutor of Queen Christina of Sweden, and subsequently canon of Windsor, attributes the Africans' Negroid features and skin color to nature and nurture – not Noah's curse, but adds in his Observationes ad Pomponium Melam (1658), notitiae, pp. 304–05, that by applying unguents, "art was afterwards turned into nature."

among the Offspring of Shem. He must be born in the Tents of Shem. [Compare, Gen. 17.7.] The other Article of the Blessing is; That Canaan should be subdued, and the Land of Canaan possessed, by the Offspring of Shem. [Compare again; Gen. 17.8.] This was to be a certain Pledge unto them, That the Messiah should be born there, and there purchase Life Eternal, for all that should Believe on Him. Well might our Patriarch have the Name of Shem; or, A Man of Name. His Prerogatives were famous; and, as the Son of Syrach saies, [ch. 49. v. ult.] εδοξαδι υπερ παν εν τη κτισει Αδαμ. Gloriam adeptus est, Super omnia in creatione hominum; i.e. inter homines creatos.¹¹⁰

The Blessing of Japhet is; God shall enlarge Japhet, and he shall dwell in the Tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his Servant. The First Article of the Blessing is, That in the Division of the Earth, the largest Portion by far should fall to the Posterity of Japhet. The Next Article of the Blessing, is, The Dwelling of Japhet in the Tents of Shem. Some refer this Dwelling in the Tents of Shem, not unto Japhet, but unto God, who had afterwards His Tabernacle, and His Temple, and His People, among the Israelites. Thus Philo, and Onkelos, and Theodoret, and Lyranus, and Abulensis and others; who to this Purpose bring that Passage; Psal. 132.13. The Lord hath chosen Zion, He hath desired it for His Habitation. N. Fuller largely prosecutes this Interpretation; and Interprets and Considers the Text, as pointing to the Messiah, who took among the Jewes, that Humanity, which He made His Tabernacle. Our Heidegger still argues for Japhet. He finds the Promise of the Messiah, in that of the Lords being the God of Shem; so he thinks, there was no need of Repeating it. And the next Clause, Canaan shall be his Servant; this doubtless refers to Japhet. The Tents of Shem then are the Church of God; which continued a long while among the Sons of Shem. There must be a Time, when the Posterity of Japhet, shall be brought into the Communion of the Church; and acknowledge the God of Shem for their God, renouncing all their Idols. The Vocation of the Gentiles, which was to follow upon the Death of our Saviour, was understood by the Ancients, by Chrysostom, and Jerom, and Austin, in this Prophecy. The last Article of the Blessing, is; That, as the Land of Canaan must once be conquered by the Children of Shem, so afterwards there should be a Conquest made of it, by the Children of Japhet. A shrowd Intimation of what the Jewes have suffered from the Gentiles, by the hand of God upon them, for their Unbeleef.¹¹¹

For Philo Judaeus, see Quaestiones et solutiones in Genesim (2.76); for the Targum Onkelos, see Walton (3:296), on Ps. 132:13; for Theodoret, Quaestiones in Octateuchum (Quest. 58, p. 55, lines 11–22); for Nicholas de Lyra, his annotations on Gen. 9:20–27, in Postilla (1492), vol. 1, n.p.; and for Alfonso Tostado (Abulensis), in his Commentaria in Genesim (1728 ed.). Nicholas Fuller’s Christological explication appears in his Miscellaneorum Theologicorum (1616), lib. II, cap. 4, esp. p. 173. The vocation of the Gentiles

These few Words of Noah, deserve to be esteemed, as, Canon prophetiæ, et omnium ferè subsequentium prophetiarum epitome.¹¹²

All Christians do with Admiration behold the Accomplishment of this Prophecy.

In the Division of the World, Shem gets only a Part of Asia Major. Cham gets, with Africa, a very little Part of Asia. But Japhet shares all Europe; All Asia Minor; A very great Part of Asia Major; And probably, all America over and above.

The Church of God was for diverse Ages, remarkably maintained, and confined, among the Sons of Shem. A Partition-wall excluded the Chamites and the Japhetites.

The Land of Canaan was vanquished and possessed, by the Sons of Shem, under the Conduct of Moses and Joshua.

Here the Messiah was born, and came to Tabernacle among us.

Then the Romans, the Sons of Cittim, descended from Japhet, siezed upon the Land of Canaan.

The Sons of Shem are cast out of the Tents of Shem, and the Sons of Japhet are called in. All the Epistles of our Apostle Paul, except one, are directed unto the Sons of Japhet.

| But are we to have no Sons of Cham gathered into the Communion of the Church. Egypt and all Africa, ha's once had Christianity in it. And many who are called Christians are there still to be mett withal. There is now to be no Distinction. [see Col. 3.11.] The Sons of Cham, are not in the Noetic Prophecy, excluded from the Tents of Shem. And yett, inasmuch as they are not mentioned, we may suppose the Japhetites to have a peculiar Prerogative in the Church of the Gentiles. We have seen it surprizingly exemplified. The Church in Africa, is horribly buried in Hæresy and Apostasy; Betimes it became so. The Church in Europe ha's had more of Evangelical Purity; The Light of the Gospel hath shone there, much more gloriously. Antichrist indeed ha's appeared there. But still he has been Resisted and Opposed, by a Number of the Faithful. And anon, mighty Nations & Peoples, have shaken off their Obedience unto him. The Liberty & Purity of the Christian Religion, Longè Latius et Lætius per Dei Gratiam, inter Japheti posteros emicat, quàm unquam inter Semi et Chami posteros effloruerit. It has most flourished among the Sons of Japhet.¹¹³ [229r] as prefigured in Japheth's posterity acknowledging the God of Shem is proposed by Joannes Chrysostom (Homilies in Genesis 29.26, p. 217); by St. Jerome on Gen. 9:27, in Questiones Hebraicæ in Genesim [PL 23. 950A] (Hebrew Questions on Genesis 38); and by St. Augustine, in De Civitate Dei (16.1–2) [PL 041. 475–478], in NPNFi (2:309–11).

113 The remainder of Mather's excerpt here is also from Heidegger (1:414–15, Exerc. XX, §, 10). The liberty and purity of the Christian religion, Mather cites Heidegger, “shines out much more widely and successfully, by the grace of God, among the descendents of Japheth, Q. What became of Noah after the Flood? What Habitations did hee seek? and what Remembrances ha's hee left? v. 28.

A. Coming out of the Ark, the first Habitation of Noah, was on the Mountains of Ararat, which the Latins call, the Cordyaean, or Gordyaean Mountains. The Village which hee there erected, hee called by the Name of Themanin, as Euty chius the Patriarch of Alexandria tells us in his Arabian Annals; which Themanin signifies Eight, and it was as much as to say, Nos octo sumus. Hee tarried not long here, but returned unto his own former Countrey, of Ogyge, or Palestine, from whence the Ark, had, by the Force of the Flood been fluctuated. When Mankind was increased, they swarmed into New Colonies; and tho' Shem remained in Palestine, yett Cham went into the Countrey of Χημια, which is now called Egypt; and Noah, with Japhet, his eldest Son, travelled into Italy; where they forthwith founded a City, which they called Chethim, or Kittim. The Words used in those Antiquities of Hetruria, found by Inghiramius are very notable, to this Purpose. And besides, you know how the Romans are called in the Scriptures. [Num. 24.24. Dan. 11.29, 30.] Cedrenus also, in his Annals, informs us, That they who of old were called Cetij, were by Telephus, who had the Syrnyme of Latinus, called, Latini.¹¹⁴ than it ever blossomed among the descendents of Shem and Ham." The inclusion of Ham's descendents among the Raised Saints is also part of Mather's eschatology (Threefold Paradise 312–13) and in Terra Beata (1726) 35.

114 Mather's primary source for his commentary on Gen. 9:28 is "Diatriba de Noae in Italiam adventu," appended to Delphi phoenicizantes (1655), by Dr. Edmund Dickinson (1624–1707), English alchemist, atomist, and physician to the royal household, now best remembered for his Physica Vetus et Vera (1702). Dickinson's association of Noah with pagan heroes is not unique and can also be found in Mathias Prideaux's An Essay and Compendious Introduction (1650) 5 ff, and in Edward Stillingfleet's Origines Sacrae (1709) 369–70. Dickinson ("Diatriba" 1–4; Delphi 75, 138) acknowledges as his textual source for parts of this paragraph Contextio Gemmarum, sive Euty chii Patriarchae Alexandrini Annales (1656) 1:40, 43, edited and translated by the great Orientalists John Selden and Edward Pococke, who made available in a dual-language edition the Arabic Annales (Nazâm al-jawhar), by the Christian physician and historian Euty chius of Alexandria (877–940). Euty chius's Annales went through many editions in the seventeenth century. The Latin phrase from Euty chius's Annales (43) reads, "We are eight." Dickinson (Delphi 75) identifies as his source for the "Antiquities of Hetruria" an Etruscan fragment Hetruscarum Antiquitatum Fragmenta ab Inghiramio edita (1636), lib. I, pp. 7–9, 14, and lib. II, pp. 132, 142, by Curzio Inghirami (1614–55), an impoverished Italian nobleman of Volterra, Tuscany, who forged a large number of supposed Etruscan documents. Neither Dickinson nor Mather is aware of Inghirami's forgery, which like that of Anniius of Viterbo (1432–1502), is among the more amusing hoaxes of the Renaissance (see I. Rowland, Scarith 2–44; E.N. Tiggerstedt, "Annius" 2: 293–310; and C.R. Lagota, "Annius"). Georgius Cedrenus (fl. 11th c.), a Byzantine monk who authored Compendium historiarum (1:245), informs Dickinson that Telephus Herculis Latinus (son of Hercules by Auge) called the "Cetij" by the name of

Noah, coming into Italie, ha's been Remembred by sundry Names, among his Posteritie. First, One of Noahs Names, was

JANUS.

At first, they pronounced it, Janes. But the Hebrew Word, Jajin יַיִן for Wine, was the true Original of it; and so you see, his famous Vineyard commemorated. The Greeks therefore call Noah, by the Name of Οἰνώτριος, or, Vinifer. And Cato, with others, do say, Janus, primus invenit Far et Vinum, et ob id dictus fuit Priscus Oenotrius. The Planters also, which Noah carried with him, were called, Oenotrij. Antiochus Syracusanus, a most ancient Writer, particularly mentions them; Οἰνώτρους πρώτους τῶν μνημονευομένων ἐν αὐτῇ κατοικήσαι. Moreover, the Thuscians, employ'd, a Ship, for the Memorial of Janus; in his Coins, there was hee on one Side, & a Ship on t'other; with an Eye to the Ark of Noah. They also drew Janus as a Bifrons; Whence Ovid,

Multa quidem didici; sed cur Navalis in ære,

*Altera Signata est, altera forma Biceps?*¹¹⁵

This was, but because Noah saw the Two Worlds; the Old & the New. Furthermore, After the Flood, the Lord established His Covenant with Noah; the Name, Covenant, is no less than Seven Times repeted, after his Egress: hence Janus was feigned the Præsident of all Covenant and Concord. Add, That Janus was called, by the Syrname, of Pater; and considered, as the Father of all the Hero's who have obtained a Place among the Gods. Hee was therefore denominated, Consivius; à Conserendo, i.e. a Propagine generis Humani, quæ Jano Authore conseritur. How well does all this agree to Noah! Janus was also called, Chaos, who imprægnating of Terra, begat us all. This Terra was but the Wife of Noah; and there was an Occasion for this Fancy fetched from the Text [Gen. 9.20.] where Noah is called, Vir Terræ. You know יָרֵא denotes an Husband, as well as a Man. And this Wife of Noah, is therefore styled among them, Aretia; which is but from the Hebrew Word אֶרֶץ for, Earth. Finally, tell mee why the Mythical Writers “Latini” – no doubt, a common enough Euhemerist endeavor to identify the mythical origin of the Romans with the descendants of Noah.

115 Dickinson, “Diatriba” (4–7). The Hebrew word יַיִן (Yahyin) [Strong’s # 3196] does signify “wine.” The Greek Οἰνώτριος (Oinotrios), or “Wine-bringer” appears in its association with Italian vineyards in many Greek texts – here, for instance, in Dionysius Halicarnus (Antiquitates Romanae 1.12.1–2) and in the fragment by Antiochus of Syracuse (below). Perhaps because of such loose linguistic associations Sir Walter Raleigh vehemently objected to the “fiction, That the Italian Ianus was Noah” (History of the World, bk. 1, ch. 8, § 5). Dickinson identifies De Originibus, by the Roman orator and historian Marcus Porcius Cato, aka. Cato the Elder (234–149 BCE), as his source, but the citation does not appear in Cato’s text. At any rate, the Latin citation reads, “Janus first discovered grain and wine, and because of this he was called the Ancient Wine-bringer.” Dickinson’s Greek citation from a fragment by the ancient Greek historian Antiochus Syracusanus (fl. 5th c. BCE), appears in Fragmenta (Frag. 3, lines 4–5). The Thuscians (citizens of a N Italian province), depicted the double-faced (Lat. “bifrons”) Janus on their coins. Ovid (Fasti 1.229–30) describes this coin as follows: “I have learned much indeed; but why is the shape of a ship stamped / On one side of the copper coin, and a two-headed figure on the other?”

tell us, that in the Reign of Janus, all the Dwellings of Men, were well hedged with Religion and Sanctity; if the exact Righteousness of Noah [Gen. 6.9.] bee not therein referr'd unto. Hence Janus in their old Rituals, is called, Cerus Manus; which is as much as to say, Sanctus, Bonus: For Cerus, in the old Latin was the same with Sanctus; whence came, Ceremonia, the same with Sanctimonia: And Manus, or Manuus, was the same with Bonus; whence Dij Manes, are Dij Boni, so confessed, à suppliciter eos venerantibus, propter metum mortis; as Immanes are the Contrary. This by the way, explains a most obscure Passage in Leander Albertus, who sais, that in a most ancient Chronicle, hee found it written, Post Universale Diluvium, ducentis viginti quinque annis, maxima multitudo Hominum, in hunc Tractum, nunc Italiam dictum, sub Ducibus BONO, TUBAL, CAMBISE (perhaps it may bee read, Camese) et alij adnavigavit. BONUS, was Noah, whose Mystical Name, was Manus.¹¹⁶

Another of Noahs Names; was

VADIMON, and VERTUMNUS.

The Thuscians, after his Death, call'd him Vadimon. But Vado signified the same that Verto; and hence they called him likewise Vertumnus. Yea, Xenophon intimates that hee was the first, Proteus; which from the Egyptian Proto, was of the same Signification. Janus was thus denominated, because hee taught the Rules of Astronomy, & the Turns of the World; et ob id illum existimârunt habere divinam Naturam, et movere atque Veitere Caelos, et elementa, et cuncta Vertibilia. Whence hee was counted, Vertentis Anni Dominus. Or, because, being the first builder of Temples in Italy, and Institutor of Sacred Rites, after-ages worshipped him with such Rites, ut rem Inchoatam benè verteret, ad finemque feliciter perduceret.¹¹⁷

¹¹⁶ Dickinson, "Diatriba" (7–10). The Roman senator and praetorian prefect Ambrosius Theodosius Macrobius (fl. 400 CE) explains in his celebrated Saturnalia (1.9.16) that Janus is revered as "Consivius" (a derivation of "conserendo," i.e., "sowing"), because "from the propagation of the human race, which was sown by Janus as the author." Instead of "vir terrae" ("man of the earth"), the Vulgate calls Noah "vir agricola" ("farmer" or "husbandman") and the Hebrew text calls him עֵשָׂא (iysh), suggesting "man" and "husbandman" [Strong's # 0376]. The Hebrew noun עֵרֶט (erets) signifies "earth" [Strong's # 0776]. Mather's "Mythical Writers" include Macrobius's Saturnalia (1.9). The "Dij Manes" and "Dij Boni" were called "good souls" and "good spirits, by those who worshipped them humbly, out of the fear of death." The Latin citations are from Joseph Justus Scaliger's edition of De verborum significatu (1575), by the Roman lexicographer Sextus Pompeius Festus (fl. late 2nd CE). The "obscure Passage" is adapted from Descriptio totius Italia (1557), "Umbria Italiae Regio Tertia," p. 129, by the Italian Dominican historian and topographer Leander Albertus (1479–1552), and translates, "two-hundred and twenty-five years after the Great Flood, a very great multitude of people sailed into that region which is now called Italy, under the leadership of Bonus, Tubal, Cambyes and others."

¹¹⁷ Dickinson, "Diatriba" (10–11), draws on the infamous forgery, by Johannes Annius of Viterbo (Giovanni Nanni), whose Antiquitatum variarum volumina XVII cum commentaria (1498) incorporated supposedly rediscovered manuscripts by such ancient historians as the Babylonian Berosus, the Egyptian Manetho, the Persian Metasthenes, Q. Fabius Pictor, and others. Dickinson is not the only one who falls prey to Friar Annius's forgery; Johann Heinrich Alsted includes him in his famous Scientiarum omnium encyclopaediae (1649) 1:103; and Athanasius Kircher, in his De arca Noë (1675), lib. 3, pars 3, cap. 5–7, pp. 204–22. Mather was

A Third of Noahs Names, was

GALLUS.

Hear the Remarkable Words of Xenophon. Ogyges plures fuere, Primus Atavus Nini (that is, Noah) quem Babylonij Gallum Cognominant. Quod in Inundatione etiam superstes, alios eripuerit, et genuerit. Hinc sagæ, apud quos navigio salvatus est, et ereptus, Ratem vocant Gallerim, quæ undis salvet. The Thuscians therefore | called, Ships, by the Name of Geleæ. You must know, that גל / Gal, signifies, [232v] Fluctum et Aquarum copiam. So Noah was called Gallus, for the Rains & Floods wherein hee was concerned. And Pliny tells us, that the Græcians called the Ancient Italians, Umbrios (ἀπὸ τοῦ ὀμβρίου) quod Inundatione Terrarum Imbribus superfuissent. But Solinus tells us, that the Umbri, were the Offspring of the old Galli; and Cato tells us, that Janus came out of Scythia, cum Gallis progenitoribus Umbrorum. From his Grandfathers Name of Gallus, did Gomer also come to wear the same Name; whence came the Nations of the Galli, & the Galatæ, of whom Josephus reports, that they were once called, Gomerites. Jerom tells us, that the Galatians to whom the Apostle wrote, were a Colony of the ancient Galli; and Livy tells us, that they were the Posterity of the Celtæ who were the same; and it seems, in Pauls time, they spoke the same Language, that the Gauls or French, did, in Triers. Ammianus Marcellinus assures us, Gallos Græcus Sermo Galatas appellat. Probably, from גל / Rain; (whence the Welch Word, Glau,) as if they had been called, Impluviati, or, Inundati.¹¹⁸ aware of this forgery, but does not hesitate to excerpt the story of Noah's travels to Italy, from Dickinson, who himself had accepted as authoritative Curzio Inghirami's forgery Ethruscarum Antiquitatum Fragmenta (1636). See E. N. Tigerstedt, "Ioannes Annius and Graecia Mendax" (2:293–310), and W. E. Stephens, "Berosus Chaldaeus" and "Etruscans." The passage from Annius's forgery "Xenophon de æquivocis," in Antiquitatum (1498), pp. d–iii(r) – d–iiii(r), reads, "and because of this they considered him to have a divine nature, and to move and turn the Heavens, and the elements, and all that can be turned." Janus was counted "The Lord of the Turning Year" and he was worshipped in after-ages "that he might turn well what had begun and lead it happily through to its goal." (Dickinson attributes the Latin original of the latter passage to Donatus's "Epistle to Horace").

118 Dickinson, "Diatriba" (11–12, 13–14). Dickinson's quote from "Xenophon de æquivocis," in Annius's forged Antiquitatum (1498), pp. d–iii(r) – d–iii(v), translates, "there were several Ogyges; the first was Atavus Nini (the great-great-great-grandfather of Noah), whom the Babylonians call Gallus. Because, surviving even in the flood, he rescued others and reproduced. Hence those (along with whom he was saved and rescued by the vessel) rightly call the boat, which rescues people in the sea, Gallerim." The Hebrew word גל (gal) signifies "heap, wave, billow," "rolling waves" (Gen. 31:48) [Strong's # 1530]. The science of etymological and philological derivations was still in its infancy in the seventeenth century, and homonymic similarities between sounds of different languages were frequently taken as evidence of their linguistic kinship. The Latin explication of the Hebrew "Gal" signifies "fluctuation and copious water." The Latin adaptation (with Mather's Greek parenthesis from Dickinson) appears in Pliny (3.14.112) and reads, "The Umbrians (from the ombrou ["a storm of rain"]) for having survived the rains after the flood [inundation of the earth]." Solinus makes the Umbrians the offspring of the Galli, in his (De mirabilibus mundi, cap. 2). Marcus Porcius Cato (De originibus [proem]) argues that Janus came out of Scythia, "with the Umbrians the offspring of the Galli." Josephus

One more of Noahs Names, was,

XISUTHRUS.

Possibly the Greeks framed this Name, from the Hebrew Zuz, ingeminated; which signifies, Postis, Porta, Limen; and Such, you know, Noah was unto the World. Alexander Polyhistor, has told us, that in the Dayes of Xisuthrus, there was a great Flood; but that Xisuthrus, by being warned of it, escaped, with all Birds, Reptiles, and Cattel, in an Ark, whereto hee was directed. So much is by Cyriel quoted from him. And from the same Author, Abydenus adds, That hee sailed into Armenia, and that when the Storm, which made the Flood, was abated, hee sent forth certain Birds, to discover whether any Part of the Earth were yett above Water; but the poor Birds having no Dry Place to light upon, returned again unto him. The Greeks tell us, That hee who thus præmonished Xisuthrus, was Κρόνος, (or Saturn.) by whom they meant, the True God, the Ancient of Dayes. Hence, Damascius relates, that the Phœnicians and Syrians, called Saturn, by the Name of EL; or as ha's been learned out of Sanchoniathon, by the Name of IL: to whom also, tis added, the Seventh Day was consecrated. Whence tis, I suppose, that the Greeks report Saturn, to have been worshipped among the Jewes.¹¹⁹

There was a Fifth of Noahs Names; & that was

OENOTRIUS.

Flavius reports that "Gomer founded those [nations] whom the Greeks now call Galatians [Galls], but were then called Gomerites" (Antiquities 1.6.1). In his commentary on Gen. 10:2, St. Jerome insists that "Gomer actually refers to the Galatians" (Hebrew Questions on Genesis 39); see also Jerome's Interpretatio Chronicae Eusebii Pamphili cui subjecta sunt [PL 27. 511A]. Livy (5.34.1–2). The Germanic tribe of the Treveri on the Mosel River was conquered by Julius Caesar (58–50 BCE); the Roman city built on the Mosel was named Augusta Treverorum (Trier, SW Germany) in honor of Caesar Augustus. Ammianus Marcellinus (Historia 15.9.3) assures us that "the Greek language calls the Gauls Galatians." Finally, Dickinson's linguistic derivation of the Celtic ("Cambro Britannica") word "Glau" from the Hebrew "galath" is untrustworthy. The Latin words "Impluviati" and "Inundati" suggest "down-pouring" and "flooding."

119 Dickinson, "Diatriba" (14–15). From the Hebrew root "Zuz," suggesting to Dickinson (Lat.) "door post," "gate," and "threshold, entrance," Dickinson derives "Zizus," leading to "Xisuthrus" or "Xisouthros," tenth king of the Chaldeans, according to Berosus's Sumerian King-List. According to Berosus, King Xisuthrus (Noah) is awarded immortality after Kronos (Saturn) revealed to him in a dream the impending flood (Babylonika 2), in Berosus and Manetho (49). Dickinson's source is Cyrillus Alexandrinus (Contra Julianum 1.7.4–7), who excerpts a fragment from Cornelius Alexander Polyhistor (Fragmenta F4a # 273). Likewise, Cyril Alexandrinus (Contra Julianum 1.7–8), quoting from an excerpt of Abydenus (fl. 2nd–3rd c. CE), relates that Xisuthrus (Noah) sailed to Armenia and sent out birds from the Ark to test if the waters had subsided. The Neo-Platonist Damaskios (c. 458–c. 533 CE), last principal at the Athenian Academy, relates that the Phœnicians and Syrians call Kronos (Saturn) by the name "EL" and "Bel," as well as "Bolathen," in Photius (Bibliotheca, Codex 242, Bekker page 343b, 21). According to a fragment of (Herennius) Philon of Byblos (Fragmenta [Jacoby] F 3c, 790, F fragm. 2, line 99), the supposed pre-Trojan historian Sanchoniathon, relates that Kronos (Saturn) was called Ἰλὼν or "IL"; hence the seventh day, Saturday, being named after the Graeco-Roman god.

This was fetched from Olvov, as That is from /יין/ Jajin, which is Wine, in the English Word, from thence also derived. You know the Story herein referr'd unto. And hence Tuscany, yea, all Italy, was once called, Oenotria.¹²⁰

A Sixth of Noahs Names, was

OGYGES.

Hence, in the Epitaph of Ninus, his Great Grandfathers Grandfather, Noah, is distinguished, by the Name of Celius, Phœnix, OGYGES. And Xenophon reckons the First Great Flood, Sub prisco Ogyge; it was the Ogygian Flood. Now Ogyges, as Bolducus would have it, is a Word corrupted, of the Hebrew עֹגְסֵה Oghose, which signifies, Sacrificator panis subcineritij. Or, if you will, from Ogy, redoubled, which is the same, Subcineritij panis, in sacros usus aptator. This agrees well enough, to Noah, that Renowned, Sacrificer. Whence, in the Annals of Eutychius Alexandrinus, Noah dying, charged Shem, to advise Melchisedec, Neque aliam ibi offerat oblationem, quàm Panem et Vinum, quæ Deo offerat. And so Janus is hee, who, they say, first Invented and Applied Corn, for Sacred Uses.¹²¹

Among the rest of Noahs Names, was,

DEUCALION.

And this, not the Thessalian, but the Scythian, Deucalion. Lucian gives us a Narrative, That when all Mankind perished in a Flood for their daily Wickednesses, Deucalion alone was left, in Secundam videlicet generationem, prudentiæ simul et pietatis gratiâ. Hee sais, Deucalion went into a great Ark, with his Wife and Children; and at the same time, Two of all sorts of Creatures that live upon Earth, came unto him, without Hurting of him; and Jupiter producing an exact Concord among them, thus præserted them all. Plutarch also sais, Deucalion by sending forth a Dove out of his Ark, learn'd how the Weather was abroad.

And what ha's Moses himself written plainer of our Noah? Well might Philo then assure us, that the Chaldeans call him Noah, whom the Greeks call, Deucalion; ἐφ' οὗ τὸν μέγαν κατακλυσμὸν συνήβη γενέσθαι.¹²²

¹²¹ Dickinson, "Diatriba" (16–18). For the "Epitaph of Ninus," Dickinson relies on Annii Viterbo's forgery of Xenophon's De æquivocis. Solinus also associates Ogyges with Deucalion (hence Noah), in his De mirabilibus mundi (ch. 11). So, too, Jacobus Bolducus, aka. Jacques Bolduc (d. 1646), French Capuchin theologian, in his De Ecclesia ante legem (1626), asserts that the name for the legendary King "Ogyges" is derived from the Hebrew word "Oghose," which signifies "sacrificer of bread baked under embers," or (better yet) "adaptor of bread baked under embers for holy use." Finally, Dickinson's citation from Contextio Gemmarum, sive, Eutychii Patriarchæ Alexandrini Annales (1656) 1:45, has the dying Noah charge his son Shem to advise Melchizedek, "neither to make any offering to God other than bread and wine."

Furthermore, consulting Diodorus Siculus, you'll see among the Names of Noah,

S O L and C O E L U M.

The Father of the Egyptian Pan, that is, of Cham. This was, as Macrobius tells us, the Name of Janus; and hee was Noah. Hence Ennius, quoted by Lactantius, tells us, Initiō primus in Terris Imperium Summum Caelus habuit. Noahs teaching of Astronomy, and foretelling of Events, was the reason of his having this Name. Hence, hee was a Bifrons, yea, a Quadrifrons, unto them that call'd him, Janus; as being Lord, not only of the Rising and Setting Sun, every Day, or the Diespiter; but also of the Four Seasons in the Year. Moreover, also from Heaven and Earth all things proceed; so from Noah, & his Wife, Titea, that is, Terra; called also, P̄α, which is but the Anagram of "Ερα, the Earth.¹²³ But lastly, must also come in, among the Names of our Noah. Saturn, I say, who was in the Orphæan Hymns παγγενέτωρ, and γενάρχη; the Husband of the Newly mentioned Rhea; the Vir Terræ. And unto him, did Husbandry use to bee ascribed, as you may see at large in Plutarch, and Macrobius. Yea, The Vineyard, and the Drinking of Noah, ha's made Saturn the Patron of such Matters, in the Ethnic Religions and you are not Ignorant, what were the Employments of the Saturnalia. Add, Saturn, and his Wife, were born ex Oceano, et Thetide: Why so, but because Noah, with his Family survived the Flood.

S A T U R N,

the Scythian Deucalion, by which Mather probably means the Chaldean Noah. Deucalion is to have lived in the region E of the Caucasus or Atlas mountains. The story of and distinction between the two Deucalions appears in Lucian's De Syria dea (12–13, Works 4:350–53) as does the Greek original, which Dickinson here translates into Latin: Deucalion alone was left "unto the second generation because of his wisdom as well as his pious works" (De Syria dea 12; Works 4:351). Plutarch tells his version in Moralia: De sollertia animalium (968 F, lines 3–6). Philo Judæus (De praemiis et poenis 4.23.6–7) assures us that "it was in his [Noah's] time that the great deluge took place" (Works 666).

¹²³ Dickinson, "Diatriba" (20–23) and Delphi (38–39). Diodorus Siculus (1.10.4; 1.12.6; 1.18.2) relates that the Egyptians were well familiar with the story of Deucalion's flood (Noah); that Helios (Sol) and Pan (Coelum) were among the first gods who established cities in Egypt; and that according to one Egyptian tradition, the inhabitants of the Thebaid region revered their god Pan and gave his name to one of their cities called "Chemmo," which signifies "City of Pan." Macrobius (Saturnalia 1.7.19–25; 1.9.1–18) relates that Janus and Cameses were co-rulers over Italy when the land was called Camesene, that Janus had two faces (forward and backward looking), and that he also minted coins, especially one with a ship on its reverse side, commemorating the arrival of Saturn, whom Janus made co-ruler and honored by instituting the Saturnalian rites. Lactantius (Divinarum institutionum 1.13) [PL 6. 189B], quoting the Roman poet and dramatist Quintus Ennius (239–169 BCE), points out that "In the beginning, Coelus first had the supreme power on the earth" (ANF 7:26). In Mather's interpretation, then, Noah is not only a "double-faced" but also a "four-faced" Janus or the "Diespiter" (dies pater, i.e., Father Day), which is another name for "Jupiter" (Varro, De lingua Latina 5.66; 9.75, 77). Thus Noah's wife (Deucalion's Pyrrha) is by Diodorus Siculus (3.57.1–2; 5.66.2) called "Titaia" (Titaea), whose name was changed to "Gê," and by Dickinson associated (via "Ges" or "Gaia") with "Terra" ("Earth"), also called "Rhea" from the anagram "Era" ("Earth").

Q. Upon the Coming of Noah out of the Ark, we have a New World begun. The Restitution of the World, will afford unto us, various and excellent Matters to be discoursed on? v. 29.

A. The Pagans, and especially the Stoicks, had their Traditions of a Great Year, that should bring a Revolution upon the World, wherein it should both ἐξυδατῶνται, and ἐξαυχμῶνται both, Exaquescere, and, Exignesce. But, there is little Occasion for us, to trouble ourselves, with the Stoical Notions about the, παλιγγενεσία of the World. It is enough to repeat what Seneca saies, [Nat. Quæst. L.III. c. 30.] *Rejectus è nostris sedibus in sua secreta pelletur Oceanus; et antiquus ordo revocabitur. Omne ex integro animal generabitur, dabiturque terris homo inscius scelerum, et melioribus auspicijs natus. Sed illis quoque innocentia non durabit, nisi dum novi sunt. Citò nequitia subrepat; virtus difficilis inventu est, rectorem ducemque desiderat. Etiam sine magistro vitia discuntur.*¹²⁵

124 Dickinson, "Diatriba" (24–26). In Orphica (Hymni 4.1; 13.8), Saturn or "Ouranous" (Uranus) is called "paggenetor" ("father of all") and "genarches," ("begetter"), hence husband of Rhea, the "husband of the Earth." Plutarch (Aetia Romana et Graeca 275 A–B), Plutarch's Moralia (4:73–74), and Macrobius (Saturnalia 1.7.25) ascribe the invention of husbandry to Saturn (Uranus). The Saturnalian rites – instituted by Janus – were celebrated among the Greeks and Romans (December 17–22) in honor of the God Saturn and involved rites similar to our modern Mardi Gras, along with exchanging gifts, eating, drinking, and related merriments. See for instance Lucian's Saturnalia (5, 13–19, 25–35; Works 6:94–95, 106–15, 122–35). According to Plato, Uranus (Saturn) and Ges (Gaia); i.e., heaven and earth, were born of the Ocean and of Tethys, and in their turn procreated Phorcys, Kronos, Rhea and the rest of the Titans (Timaeus 40e–41a). All these curiosities and more can be found in Edward Dickinson's Delphi Phoenicizantes and in its appendix "Diatriba de Noae in Italiam adventu" (1655). Much of the same material appears in An Historical Treatise of the Travels of Noah into Europe (1601), which Richard Lynche excerpted and translated from Annius of Viterbo's forgery Antiquitatum variorum (1498).

125 Here, Mather returns to mining Johann Heinrich Heidegger's Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (1:381–82, Exerc. XIX, § 1). According to Diogenes Laertius's biography of Zeno (Vita Philosophorum 7.141–42), the Stoics, the disciples of Zeno of Citium (335–263 BCE), maintained that the world as a living entity is mutable because its constituting parts are constantly changing, dissolving, and recombining; hence its elements can turn into water ("exydatoutai") or turn into fire ("exaychmoutai") or regenerate themselves ("palingenesia"). The Greek words appear in Diogenes Laertius (Vita philosophorum 7.141.9) and in Philo Judaeus (De aeternitate mundi 21.107.1, 7), suggesting "dissolution by water," "conflagration," and "regeneration" (Works 719); the Latin translations appear in Censorinus (De die natali liber 18.11). Seneca (Naturales quaestiones 3.30.7–8) is again put to good use here: "The Ocean will be ejected from our abode and driven back to its own secret dwelling-place, and the ancient order of things will be re-established. Every living creature will be created anew and the earth will be given men ignorant of sin, and born under better auspices. But their innocence, too, will not last, except as long as they are new. Vice quickly creeps in. Virtue is difficult to find; it needs a director and guide. Vices can be learned even without a teacher."

The Renovation of the World upon the Coming of Noah out of the Ark, is now to be considered. And it is Remarkable, That the First Thing done in this our World was, An Action of Piety; The Offering of a Sacrifice unto GOD; with an Eye to the promised SEED of the WOMAN, upon whose Account alone, the World is at all præserted. Josephus tells us, That the Fear of another Flood made Noah offer this, as a Sacrifice by way of Deprecation. But there is no Intimation of any such Matter in the History. Wherefore, as Heidegger saies, Nihil hoc Josephi commento utimur. However, the Pagans had some Tradition of this Noetic Sacrifice. Only they made it a Peace-Offering, whereof Part was burnt on the Altar, but Part was Cutt-off, (call'd, Praecisium, and, Prosicium,) to be eaten by the Sacrificers. They say, Prometheus, (the same with Noah,) was the Author of this Custome.¹²⁶

The first mention of an Altar occurs on this Occasion. Tho' that Adam also used an Altar, there is no Reason to make any Quæstion. The Matter and Figure of the Altar must remain unknown to us; But probably Chrysostom is in the right, when he calls it, Θυσιαστηριον εσχεδιασμενον, Altare tumultuariâ operâ constructum.¹²⁷

The Reparation of the World, is owing to the Antitype of that Sacrifice which Noah offered; the Object of Noah's Faith, when he offered.

There ensued a Promise, That the Order of Nature in the World should not fail. And, That an Universal Flood should no more drown the World. That Clause, that seems to assign the Cause of this Promise; For the Imagination of Mans Heart is Evil from his Youth; ha's tortured Interpreters. But in the Particle, [For] there is, Remotio illius causæ, quæ maledictionem Terræ invexit; It is as much as to say, Notwithstanding.¹²⁸

Among other famous Occurrences on this Occasion, There is the Law of Slaughter. It runs in these Terms; Surely, Your Blood of your Lives will I require; At the Hand of every Beast will I require it; and at the hand of Man, at the hand of every Mans Brother will I require the Life of Man; whoso sheddeth Mans Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed: for in the Image of GOD made He Man. It will hardly be worth our while, to recite either the Jewish, or the Grotian Interpretation of this Law; or the Controversies which learned Men have managed with them thereupon. It shall be enough, to observe, with our Heidegger, That in this Law, we have Three Things to Countenance and Influence the Instauration of the World. First, That no Man may seek the Life, or shed the Blood of another Man. Secondly, That who ever shall shed the Blood of any Man, shall, whether it be Man or Beast, have the Pena Talionis executed on him. Thirdly, That the Executioner of this Punishment, shall be Man in Authority; or, if he fails, it may be expected, that GOD Himself will do it, by His own immediate Hand. Or, by some Hand and Plague of His Providing. The Observation of Heidegger upon it, is this; *Ejus Comminationis veritas, rebus ipsis et tot experimentis, quibus Deus, vel per Magistratum, vel per Singularia Judicia, homines ultus est, cognita est, ut prolixiori explicatione minimè indigeat.*¹²⁹

Thus ha's the Great GOD consulted the Tranquillity of Humane Society. And Men proceeding according to the Rules of Reason, may | transfer this Law, to some other Crimes, besides Formal Murder. For, as Grotius observes; *Sunt quædam quæ Vitæ equiparantur; ut, existimatio; pudor Virginalis, Fides Matrimonij, aut sine quibus vita tuta esse non potest, ut Imperij Societatem Continentis Reverentia; Adversum quæ qui faciunt, ij Homicidis meliores non videntur.*¹³⁰

But the Restauration of the Church in the World, was the great Thing to be now considered. The Promise of the Blessed Seed of the Woman, that was to break the Serpents Head, was not yett accomplished. And almost all the Seed of Eve, was now destroy'd in the Flood. Wherefore, the Great GOD, now enters into a Covenant with Noah, That the World should be destroy'd with a Flood no more. The Church of God ha's a peculiar, a singular Concernment in this Covenant:

129 Heidegger (1:394–96, 400–01, Exerc. XIX, §§ 17, 18, 22). The italicized proscription against the shedding of blood appears in Gen. 9:5–6. The rabbinic commentary on these two verses is manifold. Rashi (from Midrash Rabbah, Gen. XXXIV.13) interprets the opening of Gen. 9:5 as a proscription against suicide; Ibn Ezra reads it as a prohibition against the murder of a fellow human being; Ramban distinguishes between the mere spilling of blood (through a wound) and the shedding of blood (murder) that represents the soul. Furthermore, Rashi and the Targum Jonathan (Etheridge 1:183–84) make intentional murder and accidental killing a capital crime to be avenged by the next of kin, especially if the person who commits involuntary manslaughter does not go into exile or ask pardon (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:119–20). R. Bechai (Bachya) ben Asher adds that even those who do not practice procreation also commit murder, for according to the Talmudic tractate Yevamot 63 (and R. Akiva), the person who abstains from procreation “is guilty of diminishing G’d’s image in the world” (Midrash Rabbeinu Bachya, 1:191). The renowned Dutch legal scholar Hugo Grotius addresses the “Law of Retaliation” or “Jus Talonis,” in his De Jure Belli ac Pacis (1625), lib. 1, cap. 2, art. 5; lib. 2, cap. 20, art. 8; Rights of War and Peace (1:190–94, 2:966–71). Finally, Heidegger’s observation (1:401) translates, “The truth of this threat – since the very means by which God has punished men, either through a magistrate, or through singular justice, have been tried so many times – is known, such that a longer explanation is hardly necessary.”

130 Heidegger (1:401, Exerc. XIX, § 22). Grotius observes, “there are some Things which we prize equally with our Lives; as Reputation, Virgin-Chastity, conjugal Fidelity; and those Things without which our Lives cannot be safe, as Reverence for our Sovereigns; against which those who offend are to be accounted as bad as Murderers” (De Jure Belli ac Pacis, lib. 1, cap. 2, art. 5; Rights of War and Peace 1:193).

which the Prophet Isaiah, has not obscurely intimated. [See Isa. 54.9, 10.] The Churches coming to Righteousness, by the Messiah, and to the Inheritance of the Righteous, lies enwrapped in this Covenant. And that Passage, Neither shall all Flesh be cutt off, carries an Intimation, that God will become the God of All Nations, and bring some of All Nations into His Kingdome. [Compare, Heb. 11.7.] The Præservation of all the Creatures, is for the Sake of the Church, as that of the Church is for the Sake of a Glorious Christ. [Ponder, 1. Cor. 3.21, 22, 23.]¹³¹

And the Rainbow given as the Sign of this Covenant, leads us to think of the Saviour, whom we find appearing with a Rainbow about His Head [Rev. 10.1.] when the Flood of Antichristian Ignorance and Wickedness is going off the World. Ambrose gives us a Mystical Exposition of the Bow in the Cloud, which renders the Matter more obscure than it is. He will not have the Rainbow intended; but, Virtus Invisibilis Dei, A secret Efficacy of God, Extending sometimes, and sometimes Remitting, the Exercise of His Power, & Justice, and Mercy in the Government of the World. Quam ideò in Nubibus dicit poni, quia tunc maximè opus est Divinæ auxilio prudentiæ, quandò agmina Nubium in Procellas Tempestatesque coguntur. The Lord saies, I will place my Bow there, not, my Arrow. Hear Ambrose glossing upon it; Ideò Dominus in Nubibus Arcum magis quàm sagittam ponit; id est, non illud quod Vulneret, sed quod habeat Terroris Indicium, Vulneris Effectum habere non soleat.¹³²

We need not go to Suidas, for a Definition of a Rainbow; That it is, Νεφους υγροτης κατ' εμπτ ωσιν ηλιου πεποικιλμενου, οιον τον τοξον. Iris est Nubis Humiditas variatæ ob Solis Incursum, Arcus instar. Every body knowes the Rainbow, the Figure, and the Colour of it. The Natural Signification of the Rainbow, is thus delivered by Seneca; Non easdem, undecunque apparuit, minas adfert. A meridie ortus, magnam vim Aquarum vehet. Vinci enim non potuerunt, nisi valentissimo sole: tamum est illis Virium. Si circà occasum refulsit, rorabit et leviter impluet. Si ab ortu circàve surrexerit, serena promittet. By the Poets, it was called, νετομαντος, Pluvius Vates. But Pliny makes the Signification much more Dubious; Nam ne pluvios quidem, aut serenos Dies, cum fide portendunt. The Supernatural Signification of the Rainbow, is much more determined: Namely, That there shall not come another Universal Flood upon the World; but that God will preserve a Church in the World, and make it Righteous, and bring it to Inherit the World;

¹³¹ Heidegger (1:401–02, Exerc. XIX, §§ 24, 25). Gen. 3:15, 9:11.

¹³² Heidegger (1:402–03, Exerc. XIX, §§ 25, 26). Heidegger argues that “Therefore He said that this [the rainbow] was placed in the clouds, because then there is the greatest need for the help of divine wisdom, when armies of clouds are gathered into gales and tempests.” Ambrose’s gloss in De Noë et Arca (cap. 27, § 104) [PL 14. 408B] seconds this interpretation: “Therefore the Lord placed a bow in the clouds rather than an arrow; that is, not that which wounds, but that which has the sign of fear, and is not accustomed to have the effect of a wound.”

and all this for the Sake of the Messiah; whom we afterwards find appearing with a Rainbow about Him.¹³³

Some will have, the Rainbow, to be a Sign, (of the Covenant made with Noah.) of that Sort, which they call, at least, Quodammodò Naturale; inasmuch, as it is only seen, when the Clouds are so thin, as to give no Apprehension of Showres enough to make another Flood: Qui enim possit (as Valesius expresses it) cum neque Cælum totum obductum nubibus sit, neque quæ adsunt, sunt valdè densæ. Thus, Thomas Aquinas, and Cajetan, and Javel, and Cardan, and among the Hebrewes, R. Levi Ben Gerson, who is also followed by Vossius. But our Heidegger will not subscribe to this. For the Flood was accomplished, not by meer Showres, but by some Supernatural Circumstances.

The Rainbow was a Sign, purely by Institution: as Water is in Baptism; as Bread and Wine, in the Eucharist.¹³⁴

133 Heidegger (1:403–04, Exerc. XIX, §§ 27, 28). The quotation from the medieval lexicon Suda (Alphabetic letter iota entry 598, lines 1–2), along with its Latin translation, signifies, “a rainbow is the wetness of a multi-colored cloud against the sun’s onset, resembling a bow.” Seneca (Naturales quaestiones 1.8.8), commenting on Virgil (Georgics 1.380), does not deem the rainbow as an auspicious sign at all, for “it offers different threats depending on where it appears. When it rises in the south it will bring a great rainstorm; for the rains cannot be dispersed by the strongest sun, so great is their force. If it shines towards the west there will be dew and a light shower.” The Greek epic poet Euphron of Chalcis (b. 275 BCE), librarian of Antioch, called it “yetomantos,” a “nimbus” or “arc” (i.e., “rainbow”) associated with an “ominous rain shower” (Fragmenta 89, line 1). Pliny (2.60.150) is more hesitant to attach either a bad or good omen to rainbows, “for they do not reliably portend even rain or fine weather.”

134 Heidegger (1:404–05, Exerc. XIX, § 29). Some interpreters who do also acknowledge the covenantal signification of the rainbow call it “in a certain respect a natural” sign. Francisco Vallesio (fl. 16th century), Italian physician to Philip II of Spain, also discourages such doomsday scenarios in his De Sacra Philosophia (1608), cap. 9, p. 98, arguing, “For who can [think there could be another flood] since the whole sky is not covered over with clouds, and those that are there are not very thick?” Even though Mather quotes Vallesio (Valesius) at second hand from Heidegger (1:404), Mather evidently owned a copy of Francisci Vallesii De Sacra Philosophia (1608); this reprint in the Mather Family Libraries [AAS Library # 0646] bears the signatures of Thomas Shepard (1658), of Cotton Mather (no date), and of Samuel Mather (1726). Cotton Mather’s list of authors (here borrowed from Heidegger) does not provide further specifications. However, St. Thomas Aquinas sticks to a purely natural signification of the rainbow, in his Treatise on Vices opposed to Religion (Question 95), arguing that the rainbow sometimes presages fair weather only “in so far as its cause is the cause of fair weather” (Summa Theologica 3:1597–98, pt. 2.2, Q95, A5). Mather also refers to Chrysostom Javellus (1472–1538), an Italian commentator on Aristotle and Aquinas, in his Meteorologica (1527), lib. 7, cap. 3, ult.; to Cajetan, aka. Giacomo de Vio (1469–1534), an Italian cardinal, who wrote significant commentaries on Aquinas and Aristotle; to Hieronymus Cardanus (1501–76), the renowned Italian physician and mathematician, who published a commentary on, and Latin translation of, Ptolemy, De astrorum judiciis, cum expositione Hieronymi Cardani Mediolanensis medici (1658), lib. 2, cap. 2, textu 72; to Rabbi Levi ben Gers(h)on (1288–1344), French rabbi, philosopher, and biblical commentator, whose Hebrew Commentarius in Pentateuchum [Peirush ha-Ralbag ‘al ha-Torah] was first published in Mantua, Italy (c. 1476–79), and to Gerard Vossius, who acknowledges some of the same sources in his De Theologia Gentili (1641), lib. 3, cap. 13, pp. 788–89.

[235r] | And yett there is in the Rainbow, some Sort of Analogy, with the Covenant, whereof it is Instituted for a Token. The Rainbow is naturally a Sign, that the Rains will not be Great nor Long; and that Fair Weather is anon to be expected. The Covenant of God is accordingly, that the World, shall not be any more so Destructively as once it was, Rained upon; and especially, That the Church in the World shall be præserv'd. Tho' the World, and the Church, may be obnoxious to dreadful Judgments of God, and a Flood of Divine Wrath may prevail very far upon it, and rise as it were up to the Neck; yett the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it, the Fountains of the Deep, shall not break out, and prevail so far, as utterly to overwhelm it. Our Heidegger carries on the Similitude; That the Three Colours of Red, and Green and Blue, in the Rainbow, intimate the Sweet Mixture of Justice and Mercy, accomplished by the Blood of the Covenant. The Rainbow never fills a Circle, nor makes more than a Semi-Circle. The Kingdome of our Lord, in His Church, is herein a little Represented; Part on Earth, Part Above. Our Saviour was on Earth, when He suffered for us, and began His Kingdome. He went up from Earth to Heaven; and will come down from Heaven to Earth again. The Afflictions attending the Kingdome of our Lord, in the World, & the Enemies not yett all wholly subdued, make the Condition of a Semi Circle too agreeable unto it. The Circle will not be filled up, till the Kingdome shall be Delivered up unto the Father, and God shall become All in All.¹³⁵

Was there any Rainbow before the Flood? Aben Ezra thinks, No; And so do many Christians. But our Heidegger saies, Oppidò falluntur. God speaks not of the Rainbow, as a New Thing. He seems to speak of it, as a Thing that had been already placed in the Clouds. He invites us to look on the New Use which He now assign'd unto it. As in all Sacraments, the Things employ'd, were existing before; The Sacramental Importance is afterwards enstamp'd upon them.¹³⁶

The Pagans had a mighty Opinion of the Rainbow. The Poets made a Goddess of it. Plato and Plutarch, and Apollodorus, make it the Daughter of Thaumas, because of the Admiration which Men agree to behold it withal. In their Theogonie, Iris was the Messenger of Juno. Juno signified, the Air; and the Rainbow indicates the Constitution of it. Acosta tells us, That he found the Rainbow worshipped, even among the Peruvians in America.¹³⁷

¹³⁵ Heidegger (1:405, Exerc. XIX, §§ 29–30).

Q. On the Conduct of Divine Providence, in the Flood, and following Occurrences? v. 29.

A. I will translate some notable Words of Brentius, which my incomparable Franckius, in one of his Programmata, does recite with a great Remark upon them.

“Initio quum homines multiplicarentur. – In the Beginning, when Men were multiplied, & gave themselves up to their Pleasures, Neglexerunt concionem de Adventu Christi; All preaching about the Coming of CHRIST, was neglected among them. They Planted, saies our Saviour, they Sow’d, they Built, they Married Wives. God therefore said, My Spirit shall not remain in Man; for he is Flesh; they care not for my Spirit, nor for what ha’s been preached about the Coming of CHRIST. Wherefore, that God might Restore Preaching on the Coming of CHRIST, He destroyed the whole World with a Flood; and præsaved a Few, by whom the Prophecies about the Coming of CHRIST were propagated. Afterwards Abraham and Isaac and Jacob were made Choice of, that CHRIST might come of their Posterity, and Progeny. Therefore God permitted no Man to hurt them; He rebuked Kings for their sakes. Anon, Pharaoh must perish, because it was his Purpose to destroy the Israelites, of whom CHRIST was to come. The Canaanites were likewise destroy’d, that so the Nation of Men, of whom CHRIST was to come, might have a Countrey, wherein He might sett up the Preaching about the Coming of CHRIST, and Sacred Rites for such a Purpose. The Nations were destroy’d, that so God might accomplish His Oath unto the Fathers. But the principal Thing in His Oath was, The Seed in which all Nations were to be blessed. Afterwards, when the Babylonians would not release the Jews from their Captivity, and there was danger lest the Race whereof CHRIST was to descend, might be lost, for the Præservaion of this Race, that most potent Monarchy must be destroy’d. So was it said of Cyrus; I the Lord, which call thee by thy Name, am the God of Israel. For Jacob my Servants Sake, and Israel mine Elect, I have even called thee by thy Name. In short, Omnia Regna Terræ necesse habuerunt operam suam conferre, ut conservaretur Genus, e quo CHRISTUS erat Venturus. Et quod Regnum moliebatur huic Familiæ exitium, hoc internecone peribat. It was necessary for all the Kingdomes of the Earth, to contribute unto the Præservaion of the Family, whereof CHRIST was to come. And whatever Kingdome attempted the Ruine of this Family, Death and Destruction was the Portion of it.”¹³⁸ of Thaumias, rarely serves as messenger, except when Zeus sends her to fetch the sacred water by which the gods are to swear an oath. Finally, the Spanish historian José Acosta relates that the Peruvian Indians venerate the rainbow, in Naturall and Morall Historie (1604), bk. 5, ch. 4, p. 336.

¹³⁸ The second-hand citation is extracted from Programmata diversis temporibus (1714), by the Halle Pietist August Hermann Francke, a copy of whose work was available at Harvard in Having cited this Passage of Brentius, I will add the Elogium which Glassius bestows upon that Interpreter.

*Dignissima profecto sunt hujus Insignis Theologi Scripta exegetica, præsertim in Veteris Testamenti Libros, quæ diligenter evolvantur ab omnibus, qui Theologiæ et Philologiæ Sacræ studio addicti sunt: quippe Doctrinæ Cælestis omnigenæ, et observationum variarum ex Hebræo Textu plena.*¹³⁹

Mather's time (Catalogus 101). Francke paraphrases this passage from Joannes Brentius, aka. Johann Brenz (1499–1570), German Lutheran Reformer, whose Operum reverendi et clarissimi theologi (1576) 1:86–87 and 108–09 appears to be the source in question. See also Brenz's "Explicatio Epistolæ Pauli Ad Galatas" (cap. 3), in Operum (1588) 1:848. Brenz's jeremiad Etzliche Buss Predigten aus den schrecklichen Historien von der Sündfluth (1595) has much to offer on Mather's millennialist closure. At any rate, the passage from Brenz (via Francke's Programmata) relates that "all the kingdoms of the earth inevitably had as their task to unite, so that the race from which CHRIST was to come might be preserved. And the kingdom that was planning destruction for this tribe perished in a massacre."

¹³⁹ Mather's elogium, most likely from his own copy of ΧΡΙΣΤΟΛΟΓΙΑΣ [Christologias] Mosaicae (1649), by Salomon Glassius, aka. Glass (1593–1656), professor of theology at Jena (Thuringia), states that "The written interpretations of this outstanding theologian [Brentius] are certainly most worthy, especially those on the books of the Old Testament, which most diligently elucidate everything to which theologians and holy philosophers have devoted their studies. As you can see, they are full of heavenly teachings of every kind and of various observations from the Hebrew text." The copy of Glassius' work in the Mather Libraries at the AAS [# 0087] bears Samuel Mather's signature on the cover page, yet without date.

Q. The Rise of the several Nations in the World, and of their Scatterings thro' the World, can bee well given from the Tenth Chapter of Genesis. But I am somewhat Inquisitive after the Rise of those Ancient and Famous Oracles, which were in so much Repute, among the Primitive Gentiles; especially, those of Dodona, and of Delphos.¹ Can you from that Chapter, fetch any Notable Remarks thereupon? v. 1.

A. Yes. To lay aside all the Fabulous, and Egyptian, or Græcian Shams of Antiquity, the true Story of these things, is this.²

Noah, finding his Posterity so increase{d}, that Palæstine, could not hold them, hee left Shem in Syria, hee sent Cham to Egypt, and went himself, with Japhet, into the Countrey that is now called Italy; where hee built a City, called Chethim, (afterwards Volterra) which proving the Metropolis of Tuscany, all Italy was afterwards from thence denominated. After some Years, applying himself only to Religion & Husbandry, hee left the Government of his Posterity, in that Place, to Japhet; who ordered Javan, to settle himself in those Attic Regions, which were called, Ionian. But Chethim, the Son of Javan, went over to Inhabit the Island, which after his own & his Countreyes Name, was called, Chethima; and hee either carried or ordered, further Colonies over to Macedonia; whence

1 In ancient times, consulting oracles was among the principal means of divining the will of the gods. Questions posed to the deities or their priestesses could range from the mundane and individual (marriage, conception, sowing, and harvesting) to the extraordinary and matters of state (warfare, political alliances, rulership). The oracle at Dodona, dedicated to Zeus Naïos in Epirus (NW Greece), is among the oldest Hellenic places of divination and centered on the sacred oak of Zeus, who would reveal his will to supplicants through rustling leaves or perched doves on its branches. Of much greater significance than the shrine at Dodona is Apollo's oracle at Delphos in the foothills of Mt. Parnassus near the Gulf of Corinth. From the sanctum sanctorum of Apollo's temple, the navel of the world, the prophetess (Pythia) revealed in a trance Apollo's frequently ambiguous decision (OCD). For the Egyptian oracles and their influence on those of Dodona and Delphos, see Herodotus (2.57–63).

2 Like his contemporaries, Mather here rejects the Greek, Egyptian, and Chinese chronologies, which assigned thousands of years more to the history of mankind than Judeo-Christian chronologies would allow for in the seventeenth century. Archbishop James Ussher for one spoke for most English Protestants when he dated the year of Adam's creation to 4004 BCE, in Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti (1650); those who followed Joseph Scaliger's Opus de emendatione temporum (1583) or Guilielmus Vorstius's Chronologia sacra-profana a mundi conditu (1644) argued for slightly earlier dates. William Whiston's A Short View of the Chronology of the Old Testament (1702) and Sir Isaac Newton's Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms Amended (1728) are representative of those for whom the primacy of biblical chronology was imperative. See F. C. Haber's Age of the World (chs. 2–3), A. T. Grafton's "Historical Chronology," and P. Rossi's Dark Abyss of Time (chs. 20–22).

it was called, Γῆ Χετῖμ. Dodanim, another Son of Javan, pass'd over to Epirus, & built a City, which, with the whole Province, was call'd by the Name of Dodona. In this Place, Dodanim erected a Temple, wherein the People of {the} Neighbourhood, might Assemble, to Seek the Face of God, and Hear the Præcepts of their Father Noah preach'd upon. I hope t'wil bee no unwelcome Digression, if I Repeat unto you, the Matter of the Sermons preached in that Illustrious Temple, from the Fragments, of the Tuscan Antiquities, which have been præserv'd unto our Age. Wee are there told, That the great Vandimon, or Noah, thus express'd himself, unto his Offspring.³

My Sons and Grandsons, Hear my Words, and bee Attentive to the Speeches of your Father. Blessed be that God, before whom I have found Favour, and who rescuing mee out of the Waters, lest what Hee had made, should wholly perish, reserved mee, for the Reparation of Mankind, which ha's perished so far by the Showres of His Anger. Wherefore, being not ungrateful to the Most Great Æsar [that is, Creator] Fear Him alone, and Serve Him, with your Minds, because Hee is worthy of it, and Hee hath done many Good Things for you; in one Word, because Hee is God. If the Most Great Æsar bee alwayes your God, you will never want any Thing. Lett not His Altar bee polluted. Lett no Man do, as Cain did, seek his Brothers Blood. Lett there bee an Union among you, that shall never bee broken. You have now a City, which I have here built for you, in this Mountain; but you must multiply, and then do you Build more: And when this Mountain growes too strait for you, choose other wholesome Soyls, for your further Accommodation. So long as you keep from Dissensions, all things will prosper among you. As for him that shall not Fear God, but shall Dissent from His Brethren, cast him out from among you; because the Discord of Brethren, confounds all things. My Sons, Don't you offend God, by Fornication, by Injustice, by Wickedness: But Remember the God, that made you, and that sav'd you from the Waters, and that created all things for you, and subjected all things to you. God Exalts the Good, but Hee Destroys the Wicked; Love Him alone, and 3 This and the following paragraphs are extracted from Edmund Dickinson's Delphi Phoenizantes (1655), ch. 9, esp. pp. 75–91. Dickinson's main text and appendix incorporate an intriguing meta-history of Noah's meanderings through Asia Minor and Italy, documents that Mather had previously mined for his commentary on Gen. 9 (see above). The colony established by Noah's great-grandson Chittim or Kittim (Gen. 10:4–5) in Macedonia is called "Ghe Chetiim" or "the land of Chettim" (Dickinson, Delphi 75). See also Matthew Poole's Works (2:28–30) for the debate on locating the Chettim or Kittim anywhere from Cyprus to Italy. Mather acknowledges as his source (via Dickinson) the "Tuscan Antiquities," published as Ethruscarum Antiquitatum Fragmenta (1636), a collection of forged Etruscan manuscripts by Curzio Inghirami. Mather's identification of "Chethim" as "Volterra" in "Tuscany" (N Italy) illustrates how widely accepted Inghirami's pious fraud had become. The identification of "Vandimon" as "Noah" is discussed in Inghirami's Ethruscarum (lib. I, pp. 7, 19). Like many of his contemporaries, Dickinson did not appear to doubt the honesty of Inghirami or the authenticity of the startling Etruscan fragments, even though the documents seemed to suggest that the ancient Etruscans knew more about Noah and the Second Coming of Christ than Moses and the NT apostles combined (see I. D. Rowland, Scarith). For "Vandimon," Noah's supposed Etruscan name, see also Mather's commentary on Gen. 9 and Dickinson's "Diatriba" (10–11).

*Do all things in His Fear; so you shall bee Replenished with an Abundance of Corn and Wine and Oyl; the Sons of your Brethren shall become your Servants, and your Kingdome shall endure forever. The Sacred Rites, and all that I leave with you, do you keep alwayes, and Instruct your Children in them. God Bless you, and fill you with His Blessing, and quickly send you the King, that shall deliver you from the Power of another over you.*⁴

But it was not long before a fearful Degeneracy overtook the Posterity of those that had been thus Instructed; they soon left and lost the Religion of their Fathers, and the very Name of that Jehovah who was the God of their Fathers, came to bee changed among them. So that at last, in that very Place, where Dodanim had his Church, there succeeded the horrid Ceremonies & Superstitions, of the Dodonæan Oracles. Yea, all the Diabolical Oracles of Greece, were once the Schools of the True Religion. Satagebat enim Nequissimus ille κακοδαίμων [as my Author, Dickinson, expresses it] *Eâ imprimis loca, quæ Religione simul, ac Antiquitate Sacrata erant, occupare; atque in Impietatis et Imposturæ Domicilia convertere.*⁵

From Dodona there went some Notable Spark unto Delphos, or, Pernassus, who erected at that Place, the like Magical Instrument of Irreligion; which the Greeks relate, under the Figure of a Dove, coming from Dodona thither. Possibly, the same Name of, Πελειᾶς, which in the Thessalian Language, signifies, as well a Dove, as a Prophetess, may bee the Occasion of the Stories being disguised by such a Fable. When this Hee | or Shee, came to Delphos, they sett up μαντεῖον [238v] there; which quickly became so famous, that all the World made their Visits thereunto. The Hill where this oraculous Delphos now stood, was called, Pernassus; but originally, it was, Larnassus; from /הר/ Har, a Mountain, and /נחש/ Nachash, Divination; in which the Greeks, misunderstanding the Servile Præfix ל for a Radical, called it by the Name of Λαρνασσος, that is, Mons Augurij. But because the prophetic Spirit, there issued out from a certain Gap in the Ground,

⁵ Dickinson, Delphi (78–79). Dickinson argues that the oracles of Greece, once schools of true religion, had been usurped by demons: “For that most wicked evil demon busied himself,” Dickinson reasons, “chiefly with taking over those places that had been made sacred by both their religiosity and their antiquity, and converting them into dwellings of irreverence and deceit.” Both Cotton and Increase Mather knew much about “Kakodaimon” – demons or spirits that could imitate the shape and voice of living people. See Cotton Mather's Memorable Providences (1689), Wonders (1693) xiii–xvii, 10–11, 52–53, and Threefold Paradise (114–19, 220); and Increase Mather's Illustrious Providences (1684), esp. chs. 6–7, pp. 168–247. See Appendix A.

the Mountain might also be called, פֶּרַע נַחֵשׁ Parai-nahas, i.e. Hiatus Divinationis, and the Greeks then had a further Opportunitie to Turn the Name into Πάρνασσος; which in Process of Time, it came to wear. Here doubtless, the Sons of Javan, celebrated the Worship of the True God, in a Temple for Him alone; Quæ in hoc monte [to give you the notable Observation of my Dickinson, in his own Words] Reor, haud impurè peragebatur, usque dum nescio quis Idololatra et Mystes è Dodonâ profectus, eò pervenerat; omnia sub Religionis specie corruperat; Novos Cultus Instituerat; Atque Oracula, Dæmone et Mysterio plenus, edidisset. Here, the Usage was, for a certain Woman, sitting upon a Tripes, to receive the Vapour, or, if you will, the Spirit, of the Cave, over which, it was placed; the Dæmon, which the Scripture calls, Ob, entred into her. Shee was then immediately taken with an extraordinary Trembling of her whole Body; shee Quaked, and shee Foamed horribly; and so there issued from her, the Prophecies, which enchanted all the World into a Veneration of them.⁶

I'll Insist no further on this Matter; but only from the Passage last mentioned, putt you that Quæstion, *Whether you now think the QUAKERS, to BEE SO NEW A SECT, as they have commonly been accounted?*⁷

Q. Was there one Mizraim, the Son of Cham, the first King of Egypt? v. 6.

A. So wee read, In Libro Juchasin; but some Do not Beleeve the Story, They beleeve tis but a Story; they suppose, there never was a Man of that Name, in the World. The Text is, they say, to be thus understood; "Cham was the Father of the Nation that afterwards went by the Name of Mizraim, that is, of the Nation by whom the Land of Egypt was afterwards Inhabited.” And, I doubt not, but several other Names, in this Chapter, are to bee understood, with such a sort of Application. As for מִצְרַיִם, or, Mitzrajim, tis the very Name of the Land of Egypt, from the Word מִצּוֹר, or, a Fortification; because no Land was by Nature so Fortify’d as Egypt was. But inasmuch as Egypt was divided, into the Upper Egypt & the Lower Egypt, a Name thus of the Dual Number, Mitzrajim, was putt upon it.⁸

⁷ Mather's hoary gibe at the Quakers – borrowed from Dickinson (91) – does indicate that religious tolerance was no virtue. See especially Mather's Magnalia Christi Americana (1702), bk. 7, ch. 4, pp. 21–29. Here ends Mather's excerpt from Dickinson's Delphi Phoenicizantes (ch. 9).

Q. Wee read, Cush begat Nimrod; and the Beginning of Nimrods Kingdome, was Babel. But wee look for Cush in Africa? v. 8, 10.

A. It seems rather, that Nimrod gave the Name of his Father Cush, to his Plantation at Babylon, on Euphrates. And it is not improbable, That the Chashdim, or, Chaldees, whose Capital City was Babylon, might have their Name thence, by a Change of the U into an A, common enough to other Nations, and an Addition of the D at the End.

Q. That Expression of, Nimrods being a mighty Hunter before the Lord? v. 9.

A. Becman in his, Analecta Historica; published at Francfort, 1709, ha’s a Notion, which I know not whether every one will subscribe unto it. He concludes from this Expression, That Nimrod was a Good Man; Because the Passages of Scripture where we meet with this Expression, are all taken in a Good Sense; but one, [Gen. XIII. 13.] where the same Expression is modified by other Terms.⁹

Q. Moses having mentioned the Four Cities, which were the Beginning of Nimrods Kingdome, adds, Out of that Land [of Shinar,] went forth Asshur, & builded Niniveh: How do you understand it? v. 11.

⁹ Mather translates a passage from Analecta Historica quibus res sacrae et profanae (1709), by Johann Christoph Becmann (1641–1717), a German Lutheran theologian of Thuringia.

A. Some, according to this Translation, will have this Assur, to have been the Son of Shem, who, having built Ninive, & founded the Assyrian Kingdome, Nimrod dispossessed him, or his; or, some other Way obtaining it, joined it unto the Babylonian, as Julius Africanus hath delivered. But others contend, That this Assur, is the Name of the Countrey, and not of a Man; and that it is to bee read, out of that Land hee [that is, Nimrod,] went forth into Assur, (i.e. Assyria,) and builded Niniveh. Otherwise, it would bee out of the Way, for Moses, to mention the Son of Shem in this Place, where hee is in hand, with the Generation of Cham; neither could it bee peculiar unto him, to go out of this Land, and build Niniveh; seeing all Mankind almost, at the Division of the Earth, went out of it. The last Reading only, makes the Sense entire; for, how else could the Four Cities properly bee said, to bee the Beginning of Nimrods Kingdome, except hee added More unto it? Lastly, This seems very urgent; That, in Scripture, Assyria is called, [Mich. 5.6.] The Land of Nimrod. To this Purpose, Howel, in his Institution of History.¹⁰

Q. According to the Mosaic Account, We find all Nations of Men here descended from One Man; and the Account is unquæstionably True. Yett, you know, some have doubted, how tis possible for Blacks, and Whites, to be the Children of One Man. A little Philosophy upon it, may be serviceable? v. 20.

A. And you shall have Dr. Grewes:

Tis true, Living and Breeding within the Torrid Zone, or without it, is not enough alone, to produce this Difference. For the Ethiopians, and the Malabars, tho' in Part æqually distant from the Line, yett these are no more than Duskish, those are Cole-black. And it is said, That all over America, there are no Blacks, but only at Quaveca. Yett this hinders not, but that the Climate may co-operate with the Native Causes; which seem to be chiefly these Three. First, The Distribution of the Capillary Arteries more numerously into the outer Part of the Skin. Secondly, A less Proportion of Capillary Veins, to return the Blood from thence. Thirdly, The extream Thinness of the Cuticle. Hereby some smaller Part of the Blood becoming stagnant there, it, like any other Blood when it is Dry, or upon a Bruise, turneth Black. And therefore, even among the Ethiopians, there is a Sort of Breed, which is neither Black, nor White, nor Tawny; but, as tis likely from the Make of their Skin, of a Pale, and a Dead, Complexion. In Blacks themselves, the Palms of their Hands, and the Soles of their Feet, where the Cuticle is much Thicker, and into which the Capillary Arteries do shoot more sparingly, are of a Whitish Red. Where these then, and it may be some other, Native Causes, meet with a suitable Climate, we may suppose they never fail to produce a Black Breed. So, in Part of the Province of Quantung in China, the People who are near the Torrid Zone, are Black; but in that of Peking, the most Northerly, they are White. And some Climates may be fitter to breed Blacks, than others; which, tho' of the same Latitude, yett may not be so Hott; or, the Heavens or the Earth, may be different on some other Accounts. Every Florist can tell, how great an Alteration, the Transplanting of some Flowers, only from the Field, into a Garden, will make in their Colours. And every good Herbalist, can tell, the Difference in Plants of the same Kind, growing in several Parts of the World, yea, tho' in the same Latitude. Nor is the Woolly Hair of the Blacks, any stranger, than for a Naked Dog, when brought from an Hott to a Cold Climate, to become Hairy. If we must have one Adam for Whites, and another for Blacks, must we not have a Third for Tawnies? If one for White, & another for Black Skins, why not one for White, and another for Black Hair? and another for Red? Properties, which in a Breed of Parents, alwayes in the same Climate, & both of the same Colour, would be as constant in the Hair, as in the Skin. And were it not as necessary to have original Standards of Dimensions, as well as of Colours? One for the gigantic Breed of Asia, and another for the Dwarfs of Lapland?

To this Purpose, our Dr. Grew, in his, Cosmologia Sacra.¹¹

Q. Which Way shall wee determine, who was the Eldest Son of Noah, from the Words, Unto Shem, the Brother of Japhet the Elder? Should it bee rendred, Frater Japheti majoris, or, Frater Japheti major? v. 21.

A. On the Occasion of this Enquiry, here may bee Introduced for you, a copious Entertainment.¹²

11 Mather's source is Cosmologia Sacra (1701), bk. 4, ch. 4, § 10, pp. 186–87, by Dr. Nehemiah Grew (1641–1712), Fellow of the College of Physicians and plant anatomist. The identity of "Quaveca" – probably a homonymic spelling of a South or Central American place name – remains unidentified. Grew's knowledge of physiology and of the origin of the different human races has liberated him (and Mather) from his contemporaries' belief that Africans, as descendants of Ham, are dark-skinned because of Noah's curse (Gen. 9:20–27). In his soteriological and eschatological writings, Mather did not exclude Africans from eternal bliss. See Mather's Negro Christianized (1706) 2, 18–20, 23–25; and Threefold Paradise (312–13). See also S. Haynes's Noah's Curse, and M. Minardi, "Inoculation Controversy."

12 The Latin distinction between Shem "the elder Brother of Japheth" or Shem "the brother of Japheth the elder" has given rise to a lively debate between Joseph Justus Scaliger, Joannes Cocceius, and Franciscus Vatablus, and can be traced in the massive collection of commentaries Critici Sacri (1:164–68) and in Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:133–34). The following four manuscript pages of "BA" are extracted from The Thagmical Art: or, the Art of Expounding Scripture By the Points (1698), by Walter Cross (d. 1701), English nonconformist minister in

It is known, That the Oracles of God, in the Old Testament, are accommodated, with ACCENTS, to the Number of Thirty; that is to say, Three Emperours, Five Kings, Eight Dukes, Five Lords, and Nine Ministers. But the Right Use of these ACCENTS, hath not been known for these many Ages.¹³

Besides the many other Arguments to prove, the Hebrew Accentuation to be of Divine Original, and not the Invention of the Tiberian Masorites, there is this to render it finally Incontestable: By the Help of this Hebrew Accentuation, more than by any one thing, we recover the Oracles of the Old Testament, unto the Sense and Service of the Christian Faith, from the vile Glosses, wherewith such Rabbins as the Wretches of Tiberias have depraved them.¹⁴

Rope-maker's Alley, Moorfield (London), and itinerant preacher in Utrecht. A copy of this work was available at Harvard library during Mather's time, see Catalogus Librorum (1723) 75.

13 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 1, pp. 3–5). Mather borrows the distinction between the different types of Hebrew aspiration and cantillation marks from Cross, but the classification of the Masoretic punctuation signs as “Imperatores,” “Reges,” “Duces,” and “Comites” is derived from Scrutinium sanctum scripturae ex accentibus (1636) and from Grammatica Hebraea (1638), two popular Hebrew grammars composed by Samuel Bohlius (1611–39), professor of theology and Hebrew at the Lutheran University of Rostock, in NE Germany. Through these popular works, Bohlius introduced among Christian Hebraists the rabbinic tradition of dividing the Masoretic accentuation marks into two systems: (1) “melakhim” or “kings” and (2) “meshartim” or “servants, ministers” – the former governing the Masoretic cantillation marks for Job, Psalms, and Proverbs (“accents of the three books”) and the latter for the remaining OT books (“accents of the twenty-one books”). Walter Cross (p. 3) also alludes to Johannes Buxtorf's epitome of Hebrew grammar Thesaurus Grammaticus Lingua Hebraicae (1603), translated by John Davis, schoolmaster, and published as A Short Introduction to the Hebrew Tongue (1655). For Hebrew learning in seventeenth-century New England, see D. S. Pool's “Hebrew Learning,” I. S. Meyer's “Hebrew at Harvard,” and S. Goldman's Hebrew and the Bible in America (esp. parts 3 and 5), and Goldman's God's Sacred Tongue (ch. 2).

14 Cross summarizes the seventeenth-century debate about Hebrew accentuation in chs. 2–3. The Basel Hebraist Johannes Buxtorf, the Elder (1564–1629), published Tiberias, sive, commentarius masorethicus (1618–19), in which Buxtorf asserted the coterminous existence of the Hebrew vowel points and letters along with the authenticity of the Hebrew texts. However, the French Hebraist and professor of theology at Saumur, Louis Cappellus (1585–1658), rejected such pious claims. By comparing Hebrew parallel texts (Samaritan) with translations of the Hebrew text (f.e. LXX), Cappel demonstrated that Hebrew as a language and the texts of the Hebrew Bible had undergone tremendous changes over a long period of time: neither the verbal inspiration of the language along with its vowel points nor the accurate transmission of the ancient texts could be claimed any longer. Cappel presented his argument in Arcanum punctuationis revelatum (1624) and in his Diatriba de veris et antiquis Ebraeorum litteris (1645). Perhaps because of professional jealousy or because he wanted to defend the accomplishments of his famous father, Johannes Buxtorf, the Younger (1599–1664), responded with his Dissertatio de litterarum hebraicum genuina antiquitate (1643) and with Tractatus de punctorum, vocalium atque accentuum in libris V.T. hebraicis origine (1648) by asserting that both the Hebrew text and its vowel points were not only uncorrupted but divinely inspired and given to Moses or Ezra at the latest. Cappel replied with his Diatriba (1645) to which Buxtorf, the Younger, rejoined with Tractatus (1648) and his Anticritica seu vindiciae veritatis hebraicae adversus Ludovicum Cappellum criticam (1653). Cappellus answered yet again in his massive Critica Sacra, 6 vols. (1650); finally, after the death of both disputants, Cappellus's son Jacques laid the issue to rest by publishing his fathers Vindiciae arcane punctuationis, in Commentarii et Notae Criticae in Vetus Testamentum (1689). Walter Cross's Thagmical Art builds on their criticism; he accepts

Learned Men, have much bewailed, the Loss of this Key of Knowledge. R. Jehuda Levita, the Author of Cosri, who lived about Seven hundred Years ago, was the last, that wee find, had any skill in this affayr. And the Writers of late Comments on him, such as R. Jehu Muscatus, tell us, That the heaps of our Comments, arise from Ignorance of the Accents. Arcavolti, in his Grammar entituled, Area Aromatica, about an hundred Years ago, makes the same Lamentation. And all that any Grammars ordinarily show about the Accents, is the Change of some Vowels, by their Presence. R. Calonymus, above an hundred Years ago, saies, The Use of them is lost, thro' the Frequent Exiles, Travels, Poverty, & Distresses of the Jewes; neither ha's any made it their business to Recover it, altho' it bee of so great Moment. The famous Buxtorf in his Thesaurus, tells us, The Accents are the best, & most necessary Help, for finding out the Sense of the Holy Scriptures; but neither wee, nor the Jewes, have any sure, & constant Rule about them. And his learned Son, in his Anticritica, tells us, No doubt, their Use is great, but the Jewes Confess and Bewayl the Loss of this Knowledge: and yett they doubt not, but that they have certain Rules and Methods. Hottinger, in his Erotemata, saies the same; And it is well said by Bohlius, The Certainty of the Explication of Scripture, cannot bee attain'd, while the Skill of the True Accentuation is neglected in our Academies.¹⁵

Cappel's position, but claims that the vowel points of the Tiberian Masoretic texts – introduced by 6th-c. rabbis – distort the meaning of the Hebrew original, which Cross wants to liberate from centuries of distortions and mistranslations. Mather, of course, had participated in this debate with his 1681 Harvard M.A. thesis "Puncta Hebraica sunt originis divinae" (Diary 1:26) and first adopted Buxtorf's position, but later recanted and agreed with Cappellus (see Samuel Mather's Life 5–6). S. Burnett (Christian Hebraism, ch. 7) provides a helpful analysis of the debate between the two Buxtorfs and the Cappels.

15 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 3, pp. 74–75). R. Jehudah Levita, aka. Judah Ha-Levi (c. 1075–1141), renowned Spanish rabbi of Tudela, authored the rabbinic apologia Liber Cosri (c. 1140). Christian commentators principally turned to the Latin translation of this work by Johannes Buxtorf, the Younger, Liber Cosri Continens Colloquium se Disputationem De Religione (1660), a defense of Judaism against four competing doctrines: (1) the philosophy of Aristotle as expounded by the Arabic philosopher Avicenna (980–1037), (2) Karaism, the teachings of a Jewish sect that rejected rabbinic tradition and all OT books, but the Pentateuch, (3) Islam, and (4) Christianity. For the value of Liber Cosri in Mather's time, see Jacques Basnage's History of the Jews (1708), bk. 7, ch. 1, pp. 585–88. R. Jehuda Muscatus, whom Richard Simon identifies as a commentator on Judah ha-Levi's Liber Cosri, has not yet been further identified (Critical History [1682], bk. 1, ch. 29, p. 190). Arcavolti's Hebrew grammar, Area Aromatica (1602), is by Samuel ben Elcanan Jacob Arcavolti (Arkevolti, Arcolti), an Italian rabbi born in Padua, who flourished in Passau, Germany (1550s). Johannes Buxtorf (the Younger) cites him repeatedly in his Liber Cosri (DUSE 1:148). R. Kalonymus ben David, Italian rabbi and Hebrew grammarian, added a final chapter ("De Accentibus") to Mikneh Avram: Peculium Abramae (1523), a Hebrew grammar by the Italian physician, translator, and grammarian Abraham ben Meir de Balmes (1440–c. 1523), personal physician to Cardinal Dominico Grimani. De Balmes's grammar appeared in a dual language Hebrew-Latin edition and was published by Daniel Bomberg, the famous printer of the Mikraoth Gedoloth, in Venice (EJ). Mather (via Cross 75) refers to the popular reprint of Kalonymus's De Accentibus (1594), which appeared as an appendix to De Balmes's Grammatica Hebraea (1594), published in Hanover, Germany. Johannes Buxtorf, the Elder, published his famous Thesaurus Grammaticus Lingua Hebraicae (1603), and his learned

Now this Bohlius, a most Ingenious Man, began the Discovery, or, I may rather say, the Recovery, of this excellent Skill, publishing the First Rudiments of it, A. C. 1636. But being short-lived, hee Finished it not; Wasmuth proceeded further in it, about Thirty Years after. And since him, several have yett further Improved it; especially Ledeburius, in his Catena, which cost him Eight Years Study; and Varenius, and Reinbeck. But after all, one Mr. Walter Cross, ha's been very laborious to beat out this Matter, into more Perfection; and in a Book published 1698. hee hath so far found out the Rules of the Hebrew Accentuation, that if Ingenious Men will prosecute it, it will prove a vast Blessing to the Church of God, & the Sacred Oracles will bee better Interpreted, Illustrated, & Determined, than they have been for many Ages, yea, or in any Ages. This New Author, (newly alas, deceased) saies to his Reader, *I challenge thee, and I dare challenge any, to bring mee the Text, out of which I shall not make New Discoveries by it, that hee saw not before; Thou wilt bee a gainer in every Verse.*¹⁶ son Johannes Buxtorf, the Younger, defended his father's belief in the divine inspiration of the Hebrew vowel points, in Anticritica (1653). Johann Heinrich Hottinger (1620–67), renowned Swiss theologian, Orientalist, and rector of the University of Heidelberg, published Erotematum linguae sanctae (1647), a popular epitome of Hebrew grammar used to prepare students at the Gymnasium for their entrance requirement at the university. Finally, Mather (via Cross 75, 78) refers to the commentary on Isaiah 12, by Samuel Bohlius, the short-lived Lutheran professor of theology and Hebrew at the University of Rostock, whose Commentarius Biblico-Rabbinicus in Esaiae cap. VII & seqq. (1636) is the work in question. The historical debate about the origin of the Hebrew accent marks is aptly reviewed in R. A. Muller's "Vowel Points" and in M. Olender's Languages of Paradise (21–36).

¹⁶ Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 3, p. 78). After publishing Scrutinium sanctum scripturae ex accentibus (1636), which popularized the rabbinic system of dividing the Masoretic accentuation marks into two classes, Bohlius published several additional Hebrew grammars. Bohlius's disciple Matthias Wasmuth (1625–88), professor of theology and Oriental languages at the University of Kiel, continued Bohlius's efforts to systematize the Masoretic points and published Institutio Methodica Accentuationis Hebraica (1664), Hebraismus Facilitati et Integritati sua Restitutus (1664), and several other Hebrew grammars. Cross (26, 78) quotes at second hand Ledeburius's Catena and preface to שלשלת המורה (1647) from Cappellus's Vindiciae arcani punctuationis (1689) 906. Augustus Varenius (1620–84), Lutheran professor of theology at the University of Rostock, published many theological works, including his Decades Mosaiscae (1659). Likewise, Andreas Reinbeck (1641–1705), superintendent of the Lutheran churches of Brunswick, published two hefty volumes on the accentuation marks of the Masorah, Doctrina de accentibus Hebraeorum (1692). Walter Cross's challenge to his reader, here quoted by Mather, appears in Thagmical Art ("To the Reader," p. A7).

referred unto, before you have read Thirteen Chapters of the New. More than Forty Psalms are there quoted; some of them six or seven Times over. The New Testament would bee a very little Book without the Old. Now tis Impossible to render Thanks enough unto Heaven, for a Key that shall open to us, the Treasuries in those Heavenly Oracles. Our Cross ha's help'd us, not a little, in our coming at such a Key, as wee have in our Hebrew Accentuation. Hee calls it, THE TAGHMICAL ART; because the True Sense and Savour, /תעמ/ of the Divine Oracles, is hereby convey'd unto us.¹⁷

It hath been complained by some, That Scepticism, hath grown up in the Garden of Criticism. And it is Thilo's Complaint, Some do by Accident promote this, when they propose the different Sentiments of the Learned, without Decision. In which Number (saith hee) the famous & most laborious Work of POOL, is to bee reckoned. For, what one builds, another destroyes, and the Opposition distracts the Mind, and leaves the Tender Conscience in Fluctuation, but fills the Cavillers Mouth | with Arguments. How few (saies hee) were the Arguments of the Papists, to prove the Scriptures not being a sufficient, perspicuous, & perfect Rule, until now [242v]

17 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 3, pp. 63–64, and ch. 1, pp. 2–3). The followers of Marcion of Sinope, Pontus (d. c. 160 CE), and those of the Babylonian Mani of Seleucia (c. 216–76 CE), share the conviction that two different forces in the universe vie for supremacy: Marcion, for one, taught that the Creator God (Demiurge) and the God of Love (embodied in Jesus Christ) were antagonistic, with the latter overthrowing the former – just like Zeus had done with the Titans who brought him forth. For this reason, the OT God of the Hebrews – just like the OT – had been replaced by the God of the NT. Similarly, Mani argued that the cosmic forces of darkness and light were struggling for preeminence, the former being responsible for the mixture of good and evil existing in matter. Rooted in Persian Gnosticism, Manichaeism asserted that Buddha, Jesus, and all the other prophets were sent to assist in the task of liberating the light (held captive in the physical universe) from the forces of darkness. Both philosophies thus dismissed the OT cosmology as outmoded if not outright harmful. The Anabaptists of the Westphalian city of Münster (NW Germany) were an offshoot of radical Protestants during the early sixteenth century. They rejected infant baptism, preached Unitarianism, polygamy, and communitarianism – and all sorts of evils which the rancor of their enemies could invent. The Munsterians fell in 1535, when the imperial forces breached the city walls. The disciples of Simon Menno (c. 1498–1561), a Frisian preacher from the Low Countries, had much in common with the Anabaptists of Germany, with whom they were frequently equated. Like their radical brethren, the Mennonites rejected infant baptism, transubstantiation, and the doctrine of the Trinity; yet unlike them, the Mennonites were pacifists and practiced their creed with strict adherence to moral standards. Finally, the Socinians – disciples of Fausto Sozzini (1538–1604) in Italy and in Poland, and of John Biddle (c. 1650) in England – held that even though Jesus Christ was born by supernatural agency, he was merely a human (albeit perfect) being. If Christ were to be revered at all, then only as an exalted moral teacher, as a representative of God – not as God incarnate. Consequently, there was no propitiatory sacrifice of the Redeemer, no eternal punishment, no original sin: Adam and Eve would have died of natural causes anyway with or without sin, and their offspring can redeem themselves through sincere repentance and good works. Thus Mather (via Walter Cross) can lump together Marcionites, Manichaeans, Munsterians, Mennonites, and Socinians, for they all held one heretical principle or other that the Trinitarians such as the Calvinists, Lutherans, and Roman Catholics found objectionable. The Hebrew word תעמ (ta'am) [Strong's # 2940] suggests “taste, judgment, discretion.”

they see every Particle of Sacred Writt, dissolved into various Senses, by the Patronage of learned Critics? But now, our Industrious Cross, makes it evident, That wee have, in the well-understood Hebrew Accentuation, a great Medium, to keep the Mind like a Rock, stable against such Winds & Tides of Temptation; wee may fix ourselves, in the Unmoveable Sense of the Scripture. It may bee, These are the Points, which our Saviour said, should not bee utterly lost. However, the Commentators, that have taken Measures from them, such as Geierus, and Cocceius, but above all, Varenius, are much to bee relied upon. This Accentuation, ha's been well called, The Queen of Criticism. It is a Rare Jewel; and, Reinbeck truly saies, our laborious Translators, were like the Old Marriners, who Coasted it along by the Help of former Translations; but knew not the Magnetic Vertue in the Points of this Compass.¹⁸

For my own Part, I have not yett had the Time, to make any Progress, in the Skill of the Tagmical Art; and therefore I shall not attempt here to lay down the Rules of it. All I shall do, shall bee, to offer you some of Mr. Crosses Operations, upon several of the Sacred Oracles.

Wee'l begin with the Text, which introduced all this Discourse; Shem, the Brother of Japhet the Elder. There were but Three Sons of Noah, and learned Men have challenged for each of the Three, the Primogeniture. Abravanel, with many others, were for Shem. Lydiat is for Ham. Aben-Ezra, with the most, is for Japhet. And some will have them Trines, all Born at one Birth. But now the Accent Merca, being here putt under Japhet, shewes that Japhet and Elder, are construed together, as a Substantive and Adjective; Japheti majoris. And [ch. 9.24.] the Accent Katon joined unto Ham absolutely, shewes that Ham is younger than either of the Two.¹⁹

18 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, p. 92 and "To the Reader," p. A8). Mather probably refers to Valentin Thilo (1607–62), professor of rhetoric at the University of Königsberg, East Prussia, who published two handbooks of rhetoric (1635, 1647), but is now mostly remembered for his Lutheran hymnals. Thilo refers to the massive collection of biblical criticism in 9 vols. Critici Sacri (1660), edited by John Pearson et al., and to Matthew Poole (1624–79), who was renowned for gathering the most important critical studies of the Bible into his Synopsis Criticorum (1669–76). Martin Geierus (1614–80), professor of theology and Oriental languages at the University of Leipzig, published, among other things, De Ebraeorum luctu lugentiumque (1656). Johannes Cocceius (1603–69), Dutch Reformed professor of theology and Hebrew at Franeker, was one of the most distinguished theologians of his time. His pertinent work here is his Lexicon et commentarius sermonis Hebraici et Chaldaici (1669). Finally, August Varenius's Decades Mosaicæ (1659) and Andreas Reinbeck's Doctrina de accentibus Hebraeorum (1692) have both been cited above.

19 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 96–97). For much of the debate, see Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:133–34). R. Isaac ben Judah Abarbanel, also Abravanel (1437–1508), Portuguese statesman, philosopher and biblical exegete, was much revered by Christian Hebraists for his commentaries on the Pentateuch (Venice 1579) and on the major and minor prophets (see B. Netanyahu, Abravanel 251–53). Johannes Buxtorf, the Younger, translated Abarbanel's commentary on the Pentateuch into Latin: Dissertationes philologico-theologicae ... Accesserunt, R. Isaaci Abarbenelis (1662). The Anglican theologian, chronologist, and astronomer Thomas

Again, Gen. 3.15. I will putt Enmity between Thee, & the Woman, & between thy Seed & her Seed. There is upon, Woman, an Accent of that special Quality, that intimates the Quality of the Enmity; The Enmity between Christ, and Satan, with all his Seed, is infinitely more, than what is between the single Beleever, Eve, and Satan.²⁰

Wee will offer some further Glosses, assisted & maintained by our Accents. Wee read, in Deut. 6.4. The Lord, our God, is One Lord. But R. Simeon Bar Jochas, Author of the most ancient Book Zohar, in the Time of Adrian, about one hundred Years after our Saviour, observed, that the Accents made a Stop, between, Jehovah, and, One; and therefore hee thus rendered it, The Lord, our God, the Lord; They are one. Yea, the Book Zohar so renders it; These Three are one: and John; [1. Ep. 5.7.] seems to quote this Text. It is there added, Weigh this Great Mystery of Faith, penetrate into this Secret, if thou study not this, it were better thou hadst never been born; Hear, O Israel, That They, Jehovah, our Adorable One, Jehovah; They are in one Unity. And it is confirmed, from Deut. 4.35.²¹

Varenius, therein Justified by the Accents, thus reads, Psal. 49.15. Like Sheep are they laid in the Grave, Death shall feed on them; And the Upright shall have Dominion over them in the Morning. Then shall their Rock come to Destroy Death; Hee shall come from His Habitation. [i.e. from the Heavens.]

Again, Psal. 10.15. Break thou the Arm of the Wicked Man, and the Evil; Seek out his Wickedness, till thou find None. Here is an Intolerable Disorder in this Translation. Lett the Accents bee attended, & it will bee thus Translated, Break thou the Arm of the Wicked; and then, as for the Evil Man, if thou seek for his Lydiat (1572–1646), who challenged the astronomical calculations of Kepler and Scaliger, argues for Ham's seniority in his Emendatio Temporum (1609) 4. Yet Ibn Ezra represents the majority of interpreters (including Ramban and Rashi), arguing for the seniority of Japheth (Commentary 1: 134–36). The Hebrew accent mark "Merca" [.] is placed below the letter ך (yud) of יָפֶֿתֿ (Japheth), but קָטוֹן (qaton) "Katon" (Gen. 9:24), signifies "younger" [son] and is not an accent mark as Mather erroneously implies in his manuscript, where he writes "the Accent Katon joined unto Ham," but an appositive referring to Ham, as Walter Cross's original explication asserts, "Katon being joined to Ham" (97).

²⁰ Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 110–11).

²¹ Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 2, pp. 31–32). The Zohar (Book of Splendor), also called Midrash de Simeon ben Yohai, is the principal text of cabbalistic literature and Jewish mysticism. It consists of a collection of midrashic precepts, homilies, and disquisitions on different topics, and was attributed to Simeon bar Yohai, pupil of R. Akiva (c. 150 CE), during the reign of Roman Emperor Hadrian (117–38 CE). However, modern scholars point to the Spanish cabbalist Moses ben Shem Tov de Leon (c. 1240–1305) as the author of most if not all of the Zohar. First printed in Mantua (1558–60) and in Cremona (1559–60), the Zohar went through many reprints and was partly translated into Latin by the Protestant mystic of Silesia Christian Knorr von Rosenroth (1636–89) and published as Kabbala Denudata (1677–84). Mather (via Cross, ch. 2, pp. 31–32) quotes from the Zohar, where JHVH Eloheinu JHVH are mystically perceived through "faith: in a vision of the Holy Spirit" (Soncino Zohar, Shemoth, Raya Mehemna, p. 43b). Mather's interpretation reflects his Trinitarian beliefs.

Iniquity, thou shalt not find it. q.d. They'l never leave Iniquity, while they have any Means to pursue it withal.

In Gen. 1.2. there is an Accent upon Earth, which intimates, that Moses's intent was now to discourse only upon Earth, & how the Earth was brought by several Degrees, to its Perfection, that it might bee Man's Habitation.²²

R. S. Aben Tisben, saies, The Figure of Irony, is known by the Affixed Points. But saw our Commentators any such Points, on Gen. 3.22. Man is become as one of us? To Imagine, that our Great Messias, at His first Enttring on His Office, of publishing the Gospel from the Bosome of His Father, should compleat His First Sabbath, with an Irony upon our Misery, wee shall not find another on His poor Church, in all His Ministry.²³

In that famous Text; Deut. 10.12. And now, Israel, what doth the Lord Require of Thee? – The Accents here, do excellently Illustrate the Fear of God. *What, O Israel, doth the Lord require of thee? Only Fear God, – and this too shall bee for thy Good.*²⁴

Wee read, in Isa. 9.3. Thou hast multiplied the Nation, and not Increased the Joy. Our Translation, followes the Chetib, לרֹב/ and not the Keri, לרַב/ whereas the Presence of Tiphca here, shoves, that Not, is not here; For a Negative should bee joined unto the Verb, in the Hebrew, by a Minister. Here being an Accent, that is usual to an Acquisitive Dative Case, it should thus bee rendred, Thou hast multiplied the Nation, and to it increased Joy. Thus, Isa. 49.5. Tho' Israel bee not gathered, should in Truth bee, *To Him Israel shall bee gathered.*²⁵

[243r] The Case of Naaman, worshipping in the House of Rimmon, hath been often canvassed. Especially in Luthers Time, on the Prince of Saxony's carrying the Sword before the Emperour to Mass, tho' not without a preceding Protestation; And now, in our Time, on | the French Tyrants becoming Master of Strasburgh. But the Accents now determine this Translation for the Words of Naaman. *In this Thing, the Lord pardon thy Servant. When my Master came into the House of Rimmon, hee lean'd on my Hand, and then I worshipped in the House of Rimmon. In that I did worship in the House of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy Servant in this Thing.*²⁶

²⁶ Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 93, 96). Naaman, the Syrian, was commander-in-chief of Benhadad, king of Syria, whom he supported in the temple of Rimmon (2 Kings 5:18). Prince Frederick III, the Wise (1465–1525), Elector of Saxony, though ceremonially carrying the sword of Holy Roman Emperor Charles V (1500–58) in a procession at the Diet of Worms

That Place, Isa. 16.1. Send yee the Lamb, to the Ruler of the Land, from Sela to the Wilderness, unto the Mount of the Daughter of Zion. The Stops here are all wrong. And the Sense is also damnified, by ordering the Lamb to bee sent unto two most opposite Places. But the Accents teach us thus to Read the Words; *Send yee the Ruler of the Lands Lamb, from the Rock of the Desart, to the Mountain of the Daughter of Zion.*²⁷

That Place, Eccl. 8.2. I counsel thee to keep the Kings Commandment, and that in regard of the Oath of God; may bee thus Translated, sufficiently to the Satisfaction of many. But if you consult the Accents, you'l thus Read it: *As to mee, keep the Kings Command; and as to the Most High, keep the Words, the Oath of God.*²⁸

In that Place, Judg. 6.24. And Gideon built an Altar there, and called it, Jehovah Shalom; this Version favours the Photinians and the Socinians, who, to invalidate the Argument of our Saviours Deity, fetch'd from the proper Name of God, Jehova, ascribed unto Him, now plead, it is ascribed unto other Things, as here, unto the Altar. But now observe the Accents! You'l here see Tiphca under Jehovah, which proves that Jehovah must not bee joined unto Shalom. Wherefore the True Version is, *The Lord called it Peace.*²⁹

The Accents will teach you thus to read a Text, which by such Criticks as De Dieu, ha's been wonderfully confounded; even that in Isa. 25.5. *As the Heat in a dry Place, thou shalt bring the Noise of Strangers: As the Heat by the Shadow of a Cloud: the Song of the Terrible shall bee brought low.*³⁰

That Passage, Eccl. 5.8. The King himself is served by the Field; the Accents determine to bee more truly thus; The King is for the Land, who is served.

(1521), hid Martin Luther in the Wartburg Castle, when the emperor placed Luther under the imperial ban. Walter Cross, like many of his Protestant peers, deplored the Treaty of Ryswick (1697), which officially consigned the Free (Protestant) City of Strasbourg, occupied by the Roman Catholic troops of Louis XIV since 1681, to France at the end of the War of the Grand Alliance (1688–97). For Mather's dismay at the "Infamous Peace" of Ryswick relating to his eschatological hopes, see Threefold Paradise (225–26) and Diary (1:213, 214, 256, 397–99).

27 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 97–98).

28 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, p. 99).

29 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, p. 101). Mather (via Cross) refers to Photius (c. 810–c. 895), patriarch of Constantinople, who over the period of his long life was variously deposed from and reappointed to the See of Constantinople by imperial and papal edicts in their conflict over authority in the E and W Roman Empire. In this respect, Mather links the Photians – those who depose men in authority – with the Socinians who, as Unitarians, "deposed" Christ from the triune Godship.

30 Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, p. 101). Ludovicus de Dieu (1590–1642) was a Dutch Orientalist, pastor of a Leiden congregation, and regent of the Walloon College. His numerous exegetical and linguistic studies of the Bible were collected in his distinguished Critica Sacra, sive animadversiones (1693). His Hebrew grammars include Compendium grammaticae Hebraicae (1626) and Grammatica trilinguis Hebraica, Syriaca, et Chaldaica (1628). Mather here refers to De Dieu's Animadversiones in Veteris Testamenti (1648) 498, on Isa. 25:5.

Varenius, by the Accents, thus renders, Eccl. 3.18. I said in my Heart, according to the State of the Sons of Men, there is need they choose a God, and that they see that they are Beasts, I say that they are Beasts to themselves.

Thus, Eccl. 8.11. Because the Decree is not executed, the Work of Wickedness goeth on with Speed; therefore the Heart of the Sons of Men is full in them to work Wickedness.

Thus, Eccl. 9.1. *Man knoweth neither Love nor Hatred; but all those things are before Them; i.e. God, in the Plural Number.*³¹

Schmidt thus corrects, Judg. 5.15. The Princes of Issachar were with Deborah. Issachar also was with Barak: In the Valley was the Enemy thrust under his Feet: In the Ranks of Reuben, there would have been the likes for they were great Men in the Thoughts of their Heart. And again; Judg. 5.22. *The Hoofs of the Horses were Broken; from Tramlings were the Tramlings of the Mighty Ones; i.e. they trode down one another.*³²

Numberless, I say, Numberless other Texts, might bee cleared from a World of Confusion, by the Consideration of the Accents.

But among the other Services to bee done by the Accents, there is one very considerable in This; That as wee were saying, they Rescue many Texts, from the false Glosses, which the Modern Jewes, in Opposition to Christianity, do putt upon them.

Take an Instance or Two. Wee Christians beleeve the Deity of the Messiah, because tis said in Jer. 23.6. Hee shall bee called, Jehovah our Righteousness. The Jewes, and R. Saadiah for one, go to Rob us, of this Text, by thus Translating, Jehovah shall call Him, Our Righteousness. Whereas, (and Aben-Ezra himself acknowledges it,) there is a Tiphca on Vajikra, and a Merca on Jehovah; the one divides call, from, Lord, the other unites Lord, and Righteousness; Thus wee again recover it into our Hands, *Jehovah our Righteousness.*³³

Thus, after all the Fruitless Attempts of the Jewes, to make the Titles, in Isa. 9.6. all or most of them, the Titles of God the Caller, and not of the Child that is Called, the Accents will make us again the Owners of that famous Text. It should bee Translated, There is a Child born to us, the Son who was given unto us; And then, His Præ-Existence before His Birth, countenancing of it, the following Epithites are all given unto Him.³⁴

³¹ The three preceding paragraphs are from Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 103, 105).

³² Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 106–107). Sebastian Schmidt (1617–96), professor of theology at Strasbourg, published several commentaries on the Bible, including a commentary on the book of Kings, In Libros Regum annotationes (1697).

R. Menasseh ben-Israel, would fain so read the Prophecy, Gen. 49.10. Nor a Law-giver from between his feet forever; for Shilo shall come. Whereas mind the Accents. There is Athnac upon, his Feet; and Itib, is upon עַד, which is a Minor to the Accent on Shilo; all shoves that it must bee read in another Clause, thus; Until Shilo shall come.³⁵

It is now also become Incontestable, That Hab. 2.4. is to bee rendred, The Righteous by Faith shall live.

But I'll proceed no further, at this Time, & in this Place; Only I'll shutt up all, with One Illustration more, which Mr. Cross ha's upon, Gen. 12.6. which wee read, Abraham passed thorough the Land, unto the Place of Sichem, unto the Plain of Moreh; And the Canaanite was then in the Land. Spinosa, and after him, the Author of the Five Letters, [One for Immoralities, a Monster of Mankind,] urge, That Moses could not bee the Author of the Book of Genesis, or, as F. Simon saies, of any more than Part of it. For the Canaanite was not in the Land when it was written, The Canaanite | was then in the Land; It implying, that the Canaanite was now driven out of the Land, when this Book was written. But now, Mr. Cross demonstrates from the Accents, That the last Clause of the Verse is to bee read, For that Canaanite was then in the Land; And that Moreh was a Man, and not a Place. The Text only saies, That Moreh, even that Canaanite, was in the Land, in the Time of Abraham, & the Owner of it; but in Jacobs Time, Sechem the Hivite possessed it.³⁶

Upon the whole, I am far from now being offended, as Capellus was, at Ledeburius, for saying, "That certainly the Sin must bee very Great, & the Divine Judgments on the account of that Sin very Severe, that God should suffer so precious & inæstimable a Treasure to lye hid in His Church undiscovered;" And yett I am not very confident of the Stress that he, & some others may lay upon it.³⁷

³⁴ Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 4, pp. 136–37).

³⁷ Cross, Thagmical Art (ch. 2, pp. 25–26). Mather (via Cross) refers to Vindiciae arcani punctuationis, in Commentarii et notae criticae (1689) 906, where Louis Cappellus takes exception to his fellow Hebraist Ledeburius. Between "undiscovered;" and "And yett ..." Mather cancels, "At that I join with him, and ask you to join with mee, introducing the Free Grace of

If it be as they think, I hope, some Ingenious and Judicious Men, will pursue the Discoveries thus begun, and open to us Glorious Treasures in the Oracles of God, with their Illustrations upon them. Doubtless, they will all have the same Experience with Mr. Cross, who saies, I never was forced by Absurdness and Unreasonableness in Sense to forsake these Points; but often could find no Place for the Sole of my Foot, until I took them for my Guide.

And, now, tho' I have done with Mr. Crosses Improvements of the Taghmical Art, yett I cannot but insert in this Place, however it may seem otherwise out of its Place, a further Curiosity, which I find among Mr. Crosses Improvements. While the Accents lead him to speak something of Sarah's Speech to Abraham, where hee discourses on the Rhetorical Use of the Accents, to describe the Passions in the Mind of a Speaker, hee is led into an Observation, of this Importance.³⁸

Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, Represented the Church, whereof Lot was a Backsliding Part, who falling in Love with the Fatt Valleyes of the Earth, brought Leanness into his Soul, and Ruine upon his Family. Melchisedeck, represented our Blessed Jesus Meeting & Blessing the Church, with His Visible Presence, as their King, after Hee hath by His Invisible Power assisted them to Triumph over all their Carnal Enemies. This will bee at the Time of the End, when One of the cheef Enemies conquered shall bee, the King of Shinar, which was the Countrey of Babylon. But that wee may go a little further in Typification; The Ten Years of Abrahams Pilgrimage (from Charan, thro' Canaan, to Egypt, and so back to Mamre, the Place of his Abode, and from thence to his Victory) did, by putting a Year for a Day, signify the Churches Pilgrimage in this World, until the Coming of Melchisedek; Ten Times 365 Years, that is, 3650 Years. Hee then paid his Tenth to Melchisedec, by which hee acknowledged, not only this Victory, but all his Riches, to bee from the Blessing of the Lord of Hosts, and particularly, all his Protections during his Ten Years Difficulties. It may bee, this High-Priest read a Lecture of this kind unto him, when hee Blessed him, which might more particularly occasion his Paying this Tenth unto him. Wee may then draw a Line of Time.³⁹

God; who will Restore it, in this forsaken Age." In its stead, Mather interpolates in the margin of his manuscript the paragraph's final sentence. His excision and interpolation reveal Mather's increasingly ambivalent attitude toward interpreting problems of textual transmission and interpolation in the Bible as signs of cosmic displeasure.

This indeed marvellously Harmonizes with other Prophetical Periods. But wee must leave it unto Time, to confirm or confute the Expectation. In the mean Time, tis Mr. Crosses Opinion, That until the Second Coming of our Lord, wee owe our Tythes unto Him; and that they who neglect paying them, are guilty of Sacriledge, and Robbers of God.⁴¹

Q. The Division of the Earth, among the Three Sons of Noah, is admirably related in the Mosaic History. Will you bestow some Illustrations upon this choice Monument of Antiquity? v. 32.

A. Give your Attention.

JAPHET, the eldest Son of Noah, had Seven Sons, who peopled Europe, and Part of Asia the Less.⁴²

⁴⁰ Cross, Thagmical Art (177–78). Mather incorporated his extract from Thagmical Art into “BA” sometime in 1701 and hinted that the Second Coming might occur sometime in 1736. For Mather’s eschatological calculations, see Smolinski, “Introduction” (Threefold Paradise 60–78).

⁴² Until at least the end of the eighteenth century, virtually all biblical commentators relied for their study of Old Testament geography on Geographia Sacra (1646), by Samuel Bochart (1599–1667), eminent French Huguenot scholar, theologian, and Orientalist. Now mostly remembered for his massive work on biblical geography and for his Hierozoicon (1646), a study of biblical bestiary, Bochart was the foremost authority on these topics; his works went through several editions and reprints in the Netherlands, Britain, and Germany. He was certainly not the only one who traced the postdiluvian dispersion of Noah’s offspring throughout the world. Readers – less versed in Latin – might turn to the ever popular Dr. Edward Wells (1665–1727), rector of Cotesbach in Leicestershire, whose 3-volume An Historical Geography of the Old Testament (1711–12) was reprinted until the nineteenth century. Much of what Mather extracts from Bochart was also digested in Well’s Historical Geography (vol. 1). For Bochart’s discussion of Japheth and his offspring, see Geographia (1707), pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 1–15, col. 147–202. All references are to the fourth edition of Bochart’s Geography (1707) – unless otherwise specified.

1. Gomer. His Progeny seated themselves in the North-East Part of that Lesser Asia; which contains Phrygia, Pontus, Bithynia, and a great Part of Galatia. These were the Γομαρείς, according to Josephus; called by the Latins, Galatæ. Among these was the City Comara, according to Pliny; and Mela speaks of the Comari. The People of this Tract were, as Herodotus, & other ancient Historians testify, call'd, Cimmerij: who, according to the Judgment of Criticks, that least indulge Fancy, had their Name from Gomer; these tell us, that Gomeri, Comeri, Cumeri, Cimbri, and Cimmerij, are the same. The old Germans, are thought by them, to have been a Colony of these Gomerians; for German is but a Corruption of Gomerian. The old Galls, were another Colony of the Gomerians, who by the Græcians were called Γαλάται, or Καλάται, and contractedly Κέλται, Celtæ: For it appears, that the Cimbri, or Cimmerij, were the ancient Inhabitants of old Gallia. And our Ancestors, the Britains, were of the same Stock; our Camden proves, that they descended from the Galls, or Celtæ, who were the Gomeri, or Cimbri, of old: the Inhabitants of Cumberland, as hee thinks, retain the Name still; these were the true Britains, the Cimbri, or Cumbri, or, as they were afterwards called, the Cambri. But this latter Denomination was peculiarly carried away, by those that fled into the British Cimmeria, or Cambria, now called Wales, in the Time when the Saxons raged in the Southern Parts of Britain.⁴³

Gomer had Three Sons.

Ashkenaz, was hee, to whom there did belong Troas, or Phrygia, the Lesser; where is the River Ascanius, and a Countrey call'd Ascania, which probably took their Names from him. Hence the Ascanian Port, and the Ascanian Isles, in Pliny; and the Name Ascanius, tis observed, was much used in these Parts.

Riphat, had a Seat in Pontus & Bithynia, especially in Paphlagonia, whence (as the Jewish Historian remarks) the Paphlagonians, were called, Riphatæ, and afterwards, by Contraction, Riphaei; And in Mela, there is mention of Riphaces.

Togarmah, had Phrygia the Greater, and Part of Galatia. Josephus therefore saies, That the Phrygians were known by the Name of Tygrammines.⁴⁴

2. Magog. From him were the Scythians, who dwelt on the East, and North-East, of the Euxine Sea: for, Pliny saies, that Scythopolis, and Hierapolis, which the Scythians took, when they conquered Syria, were ever after called, Magog. And it is granted by Ptolomy, that the proper Name of that Place was Magog. Josephus confirms this, when hee saies, That the Scythians were called Magogæ by the Græcians, & thence infers, that the Scythians had their Original of Magog, the Son of Japheth.⁴⁵

3. Madai. From him descended the Medes; for Madai, is in the Bible, the Name for Media. Another Seat of his Offspring was Macedonia, anciently call'd Æmathia, or, Æmadia, which is the same with Madia; for tis usual, in changing a Name out of one Language into another, to præfix a Vowel or Dip[h]thong. And a People of this Place were called, Μῆδοι or Μαῖδοι.⁴⁶

4. Javan. Hee, tis likely, came first into Greece; and afterwards into the more Western Parts of Europe. From this Javan (whom the LXX call Ἰωάν) the Jones, or Jaones (as Homer and Strabo call them) the original Græcians, had their Original. Josephus is peremptory for it; Ἀπὸ δὲ Ἰαυάνου Ἰωνία, καὶ πάντες Ἕλληνες γεγόνασι, from Javan came Jonia, and all the Greeks. Gre{e}ce also is in the Scripture called Javan. [Dan. 10.20. and 11.2.]⁴⁷

Javan had Four Sons.

Elisa, had for his Portion, Achaia, and Part of Peloponnesus, as ha's been inferred from This, that in this Countrey they meet with Ellas, and the Elysian Fields; and the City Eleusis, and Elis a City of Peloponnesus, all taking their Names from this Elisas. And some also make him the Parent of the Æoles, in Greece.⁴⁸

| Tarshish, was hee who inhabited the Countrey of Tarsis, on the Coast of the Mediterranean Sea; whence Tarshish is a Word signifying the Sea. Probably, [246v]

(Antiquities 1.6.1); and for the Riphacians, Pomponius Mela (De Chorographia 1.98, 104, 106, 109; 2.1; 3.31, 36).

⁴⁶ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 14, col. 193–98). Greek: “Medoi” or “Maidoi.”

⁴⁸ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 4, col. 155–56).

hee seated himself in Cilicia, the chief City whereof was Tarsus; and the People whereof, were of old called, The People of Tarsus.⁴⁹

Chittim. His dwelling seems to have been Lycia, and Part of Pamphylia; for the Countrey Cetis, mentioned by Ptolomy, and the People Cetij mentioned by Homer, shew that the Sons of Cittim, or the Cittaens inhabited there. In the Book of the Maccabees the King of Macedon is called, the King of Cittim. And because there were several Colonies of them sent into Cilicia, this also bears the Name of, the Land of Chittim, and Chittim, [Isa. 23.1, 12.] from whence Alexander came to destroy Tyrus, which is there prædicted. Ptolomy tells us, That Cetis is a Region of Cilicia; Cyteum is in Crete, saith Pliny. There is a Cittium in Cyprus, according to Strabo. And Josephus relates, that Cetios was the Greek Name of Cyprus itself; and thence, hee saith, all the Greek Islands were called Chittim. Italy too was peopled by the Chittians, and is therefore to bee understood by this Name. The Jerusalem-Targum so Interprets the Word in Gen. 10.4. And when tis said, The ships of Chittim shall come against thee, [Dan. 11.30.] some understand it, of the Romans, by whom Antiochus was to bee disturbed.⁵⁰

Dodanim. Hee seated himself in Epirus, and Part of Peloponnesus. The Name is kept up, in the City Dodona, (which is in Epirus) near to which was Jupiters Oracle, who therefore had the Name of Dodonæus. This Jupiter, was our Dodanim, who was the Græcian Saturn.⁵¹

5. Thubal. Hee seems to have taken up his First Habitation, about the South-East, of the Euxin Sea, where dwelt the Albani, Chalybes, Iberi, who were called Antiently, Thobeli, saies the Jewish Antiquary, from this Thubal: For which Cause, Ptolomy also speaks, of a City here, that had the Name of Thubilaca. Some of the Iberi, were, from those Parts, translated into Spain, which was thence called Iberia; and so the Spaniards are to bee reckoned the Sons of Tubal.⁵²

6. Meshech. To him fell Cappadocia, the Inhabitants whereof were the Meschini, and Moschi, saies the Jewish Antiquary; and Strabo, Mela, and Pliny, also ⁴⁹ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 7, col. 165–71). See Patrick on Gen. 10:4 (Commentary 1:46).

⁵² Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 12, col. 179–86). Josephus (Antiquities 1.6.1); Ptolemy (Geography 5.12) mention them. Some of his Posterity were placed in Scythia, and the adjacent Regions; whence wee find Meshech and Tubal (which are commonly joined in Scripture) are Words expressive of Scythia; [Ezek. 32.26.] and Magog is likewise joined with them. [Ezek. 38.2, 3.] Moreover, tis probable, that the Moscovites, are of the Race of Meshech, or Moshech, (for the Word is pronounced either way, as Melech, and Moloch;) for the Muscovites were originally from Scythia. It is remarkable, That the LXX render Meshech, in Ezek. 38.2. Ῥῶς Μεσέχ where the Name Rhos, gives the Denomination of the Russians, which is another Name of the Muscovites.⁵³

7. Tiras. Hee was the Progenitor of the Thracians; Thrax ha's a near Cognation to Thiras.⁵⁴

It is said, By the aforesaid Sons of Japheth, the Isles of the Gentiles were divided in their Lands: The Hebrewes, by /צִיִּן/ understand, not only those Regions, which are encircled with the Sea, and are most properly & usually called Islands, but all Countreyes divided from them by the Sea, or such as they could not come to but by the Sea. This is plain from several Texts of Scripture, where this Word is used; and the Greek νῆσος is also taken sometimes in so large a Sense. Accordingly, since there is no Part of the World call'd Christendome at this day, but what was divided from the Jewes by Sea, wee may gather how Large the Allotment of Japheth, & his Posterity, was. The Isles of the Gentiles, include, not only all Europe, with all the Isles appertaining to it, but all the Regions that lie North and West of Judea: or, as Mr. Mede expresses it, All the Countries, that ly above the Mediterranean, from the Mountain Amanus, and the Hircane Sea, Westward.⁵⁵

So much for Japhet, who was not unknown by Name unto the Pagans; Hence in Horace, wee have Japeti Genus; and in Lucian, Ἰαπετοῦ ἀρχαιότερος, is a Proverb, for what is very Ancient.⁵⁶

| SHEM, the middle Son of Noah; in the Division of the Earth, had Palestine, and all the Eastern Part of Asia. Hee had Five Sons.⁵⁷ [247r]

⁵⁷ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 1, col. 66–70).

1. Elam. This was the Parent of the Elamites that is to say, the Persians; for this was the primitive Name of that People. [Isa. 21.2. & 22.6.] and because Part of Media, was a near Neighbour, Elam is the Word, for the Land of Medes also. [Ezek. 32.24.]⁵⁸

2. Ashur. From him was Peopled, & Named, Assyria. Prophane Writers call him Ninus.

3. Arphaxad. His Posterity occupied Chaldea and Mesopotamia; and of his Race was Abraham.

4. Lud. From him were the Lydians in Asia the Less. And Bochart hath prov'd, That by the Ludim are meant sometimes, the Ethiopians.⁵⁹

5. Aram. His Abode was Aramea, or, Syria: for so tis call'd by the Greeks. Wherefore Strabo tells us, that Aram was the old Word for Syria; and that those who are now call'd Syrians, were herefore known by the Name of Arameans. And it is likely, That Armenia had its Denomination from Aram; for his Race probably were Inhabitants of Syria, & of Armenia the Great, which is as much as Aramenia.⁶⁰

Uz, the Son of Aram, had the Land of Uz.

And some think, that the Hebrewes had their Name from Heber, the son of Arphaxad; but others dispute it.⁶¹

There are some Writers, who would perswade us, That among the Divisions of the several Regions of the World, America, or the West-Indies, fell to the share of some of the Stock of Shem. This Part of the Earth, say Arias Montanus, and Vatablus, was possessed by Jobab, and Ophir, two of the Sons of Joctan. To confirm this Opinion, Brerewood and others, aver, that America is joined unto the Continent of Asia; & so the Passage was easy, Men & Beasts might easily travel thither. Genebrard also, with others, declare it their Opinion, that Ophir, where Solomon had his Gold, had its Denomination, from the Son of Joctan so called; and that this Place was that which is now called, Peru: for which they urge, 2. Chron. 3.6. the Name of that Gold, Zahab Peruajim, which latter Word, is the Dual Number, they say, of Peru. Vatablus tells us, t'was Hispaniola, in the Western Ocean; but others tell us, t'was the Eastern India, even that which was possessed by Shems Posterity, Ophir and Havilah, the Sons of Joctan. So say Ra-

⁶⁰ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 5, col. 74–75). Strabo (1.2.34) relates that the Syrians call themselves “Arimaeans and Arammaeans.”

banus Maurus, and Lyranus, and Pererius, and Maffæus, and Tzeta, and Lipenius, and how many more?⁶²

To these Indies, according to Josephus, did Solomons Navy make a Voyage; particularly, to a Region call'd heretofore Sophyra, now the Golden Land. With him agrees Varrerius, and adds, That this Golden Chersonesse, is the same, with the Place, that is at this Day called, Malacca, which is in the Kingdome of Pegu, 62 Bochart, Geographia (pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 46, col. 691–98) surveys some of the most important authors and their placement of Ophir, Solomon's fabled gold mines (1 Kings 9:28, 10:11; 2 Chron. 8:18). Benedictus Arias Montanus (1527–98), Spanish priest, Orientalist and antiquarian extraordinaire, published the final volume of the famous Antwerp Polyglot, Biblia Sacra, Hebraice, Chaldaice, Greece, et Latine (1571–72). His discussion of "Ophir" appears in Montanus's alphabetical Apparatus (complete with maps), appended to Biblia Sacra. Mather owned Montanus's Biblia Hebraica (1609). The French Orientalist Franciscus Vatablus, aka. François Vatable, or Waterbled (c. 1485–1547), was professor of theology and Hebrew at the Collège de France. His Biblia; Hebraea, Chaldaea, Graeca & Latina (1540) went through many editions. Both Montanus (annot. on the LXX 3 Kings 9:28, 10:11) and Vatablus (annot. on 1 Kings 9:28), in Critici Sacri (1:2513), locate Solomon's Ophir (Sophora) in the West Indian island of Hispaniola, which Christopher Columbus, invoking the riches of Solomon's gold-mines, had pinpointed as the most likely site for the fabled Ophir (Four Voyages, 2:6). Edward Brerewood (c. 1565–1613), professor of astronomy at Gresham College, argued that the Native Americans are descendants of the Tartars, who came over to the New World through an isthmus. In his Enquiries Touching the Diversity of Languages (1614), Brerewood asserted the contiguity of Asia and America, else Noah's descendants and the wild animals released from the Ark would not have been able to cross over into America: "Those parts of Asia and America, are continent [sic] one with the other, or at most, disjoyned but by some narrow channell of the Ocean, the ravenous and harmefull beasts, wherewith America is stored, as Beares, Lions, Tigers, Wolves, Foxes, etc. (which men as is likely, would never to their owne harme transporte out of the one continent to the other) may import" (ch. 13, p. 97). Gilbert Génébrard (1535–97), French Benedictine theologian and Orientalist, professor of Hebrew and exegesis at the Collège Royal, later archbishop of Aix, published Chronographia in duos libros distincta, 2 vols. (1567), an expanded volume in 4 books appearing as Chronographiae libri quatuor (1580). In vol. 1, he traces the dispersal of the postdiluvians and also points beyond Columbus's Hispaniola to the Andean Peru as the location of the Solomonian Ophir. Samuel Purchas, however, did not agree with this solution, because this Peruvian Ophir was out of reach of Solomon's fleet, in Hakluytus Posthumus, or Purchas his Pilgrimes (1625), vol. 1, ch. 1, § 8, pp. 66–82. For the vast Eastern India as the location of the sought-after Ophir argued Rabanus Maurus (c. 784–856), archbishop of Mainz (Germany), whose oft-reprinted encyclopedia De rerum naturis (1627), lib. 12, cap. 4, locates "Ofyr" in India. So, too, does Nicolaus de Lyra, in his annotations on Gen. 10:32, in Postilla super totam bibliam (1492), vol. 1, n.p.; and Valentinius Benedictus Pererius, in his Commentariorum et disputationum in Genesim (1596–1602). In his Historiarum Indicarum libri XVI (1579), lib. 4, Giovanni Pietro Maffaeus (1536–1603), an Italian Jesuit historian, locates Solomon's Ophir in "Pegu" in Malacca (Malay Peninsula), near Sumatra, where the Peguaris, the descendants of those Jews who worked Solomon's mines, founded their kingdom. Tzeta is as yet unidentified; perhaps Mather had in mind Joannes Tzetzes (12th c. CE), the Byzantine poet scholar, best known for his history Chilades, a poem of 12,000 lines on historical and literary subjects. Finally, Martinus Lipenius (1630–92), Lutheran theologian and author of the alphabetical handbook Bibliotheca realis theologica (1685), wrote his University of Wittenberg dissertation on the location of Ophir: Dissertatio geographica De Ophir (1658). He places Ophir "beyond the Ganges, at Malacca, Java, Sumatra, Siam, Bengal, Pegu" (Calmet's Great Dictionary [1797], vol. 2, "Ophir"). See also Mather's commentary on 2 Chron. 8:18.

and borders on Somatra. But Mercator holds the Place to bee Japan. Acosta, would perswade us, tis, Pegu, Siccus, Sumatra. Thus wide is the Difference of Authors about Ophir; they are as far asunder as the East and West Indies. And yett it may bee, after all, Ophir, is not in either of them. Volaterranus, and Ortelius, will have it bee Sophala, in the Ethiopic Sea, which belongs to Africa. But why mayn't Africa itself, or the African Shore, bee thereby intended? This may seem confirmed, from 2. Chron. 9.21. & 20.36. compared with 1. King. 9.28. & 10.22. and 22.48. where Ophir is called also Tarshish. For tho' this Name, does belong to the Cilician Port properly, which is on the other side of Africa, yett in a large Acceptation, it comprehended all the Mediterranean Sea, and that Part especially which wash'd the African Shores. Hither tis probable, that Solomons Fleet sailed.⁶³

CHAM, the youngest Son of Noah, had Africa, from whence his Posterity made some Excursion into Syria, and Arabia.

⁶³ The Jewish historian Josephus Flavius has Solomon's navy set sail for India and there at Ophir, or Aurea Chersonesus, the Golden Land, load his ships with 400 talents of gold (Antiquities 8.6.4). Also called "Sophira" (LXX, 3 Kings 9:28), this place name is often identified with the Homerite "Saphar" (Arrianus, Periplus mari Erythraei 23.1), by Pliny (6.26.104) called "Sapphar," by Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7, 41; 8.22.16) "Sapphara," and by Stephanus (556.1) "Sapphirinam" – a city on the coast of Arabia in the Arabian Sea, where (the great Hugo Grotius believes) Solomon's fleet sojourned to pick up their precious cargo (Annotationes, 1:148, on the LXX, 3 Kings 9:28). Caspar Barreiros, aka. Gaspar Barreiros Lusitanus (d. 1574), a learned Portuguese cleric and philologist, makes common cause with Josephus's geography, but places Ophir, the Aurea Chersonesus, in the Far East, in Malacca (modern Malaysia), in his Commentarius de Ophyra regione apud Divinam Scripturam commemorate (1561), a prized and frequently republished commentary. The famous geographer and mapmaker Gerardus Mercator (1512–94), Flemish geographer and court cosmographer of Wilhelm of Cleve, published his Atlas minor (1571) as a correction of Ptolemy's ancient maps. Mercator's English translation of Historia Mundi (1635) locates Aurea Chersonesus in Japan: "this Island hath such store of gold, that as Marcus Paulus Venetus witnesseth, the Royall Palace was cover'd, with streets of Gold, as we cover Houses with Lead or Brasse" (Historia Mundi 880). Frere José Acosta, treasured for his first-hand insight into South and Central America, published Naturall and Morall Historie of the East and West Indies (1604). He has no patience with those who wish to pin Solomon's Ophir to a specific place or city in America. Acosta particularly rejects Vatablus's Ophir in Hispaniola and Gênebrard's in Peru. Instead, the OT reference to Ophir and Tharsis must be broadly understood, as a general reference to East India or Asia as a whole (bk. 1, chs. 13–14, pp. 41–47). The Italian humanist, historian, and theologian Urban Raphael Volaterranus, aka. Raffaele Maffei of Volterra (1451–1522), is best known for his Commentariorum Urbanorum Raphaelis Volaterrani (1506, 1530) in 38 books. Volaterranus covers biblical geography in books 1–12. Finally, the highly popular and often reprinted Theatrum orbis terrarum (1570, 1592), a geography of the world by Abraham Ortelius (1527–98), Flemish royal geographer at the court of Philip II of Spain, was frequently consulted by those interested in biblical geography. Ortelius (Theatrum [1606], "Geography of the Holy Writers," p. j), singles out the Egyptian shore of the Red Sea as the most likely site of Ophir. Mather had access to this volume at Harvard Library (Catalogus [1723], p. 25), but relied on second-hand information for his discussion of Ophir. Samuel Purchase (Hakluytus Posthumus [1625], part 1, bk. 1, ch. 1, pp. 1–48) details the age-old debate about the location of Solomon's Ophir; for Sophala, see esp. § 8, p. 28.

Egypt, the most considerable Part of Africa, is called, The Land of Ham; and Plutarch assures us, that Chemia, or Chamia, was the ancient Name of that Place. Monsieur Bochart, renders it probable, that his Posterity launch'd out into Part of Arabia, that bordered upon Africa. 1. But that Cush, the eldest Son of Cham, was the Father of the Ethiopians, cannot bee denied by any Man, that well observes the Use of the Name Cushi, or Cushim, in the Sacred Writings.⁶⁴

Havilah, a Son of Cush, gave name to Havilah, which is placed by Strabo, in the Confines of Arabia, and Mesopotamia.⁶⁵

Whether the Arabian, or Ethiopian, Saba, or Seba, bee denominated from Sheba the Son of Cush, or from another of that Name who was his Grandson, or from a Third of that Name, who was the Son of Joctan, shall not here bee disputed.⁶⁶

2. Misraim. Hee was the founder of Egypt; for that is the Name of Egypt in the Old Testament. | From Josephus wee learn, That the Metropolis of this Province, (by some called Memphis) had the Name of Mezzara given to it, by the Jewes in his Time. To this Day, Egypt is called Mizraim, with the Jewes & the Arabians.⁶⁷ [248v]

3. Phut. Most Writers reckon him to have peopled Mauritania, Numidia, Lybia. Hence Pliny mentions a River in Mauritania, called Phut: of which River Jerom also speaks, telling us, that there was in his Time, a Region in Africa, which had its Name therefrom. Why may not Part (if not all) of Africa, bee meant by Phut; in Nah. 3.9. And why should it bee counted an extravagant Conjecture, if wee guess, that *Fet*z, or, Fez, a Kingdome of Mauritania, is a Corruption of that Word?⁶⁸

4. Canaan. From him sprang the Canaanites, often mentioned in the Oracles of Heaven. All the Countrey of Palestine was Part of Shems Portion; but Canaan invaded it, & thence it bore his Name. The learned Bochart thinks, this was the Ancient & Primitive Phœnicia; call'd φοινικη by the LXX. (Exod. 16.35.)

⁶⁶ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 8, 9, col. 221–22).

⁶⁸ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 33, col. 294–99). Ptolemy (Geography 4.1); Pliny (5.1.10; 5.8.43) mentions the “Perorsi” and “Pharusii,” a people of Mauretania; and St. Jerome on Gen. 10:6 (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 40) explains that while the Hebrews call Ethiopia “Chus,” Egypt “Mesraim,” and Libya “Phuth,” they call “the river of Mauretania ... Phut, and all the Libyan territory round about ... Phuthensis” to this day.

wherefore, shee that is called by Matthew, A Woman of Canaan, is called by Mark, A Syro-Phœnician. The Phœnicians, hee thinks, were originally Canaanites, & fled out of Canaan, when Joshua took Possession of that Countrey: they then scituated themselves on the Sea-Coast of Palestine, call'd by them afterwards Phœnicia; as the Britains, upon the Coming of the Saxons, betook themselves to that Part of the Countrey; which is now called Wales. This may bee confirmed, by a Remarkable Passage of Austin, in his Exposition of the Epistle to the Romans. Hee assures us, that the Peasants of Hippo, who were known to bee of the Race of the Phœnicians, when they were asked, who they were? would commonly answer, They were Canaanites. But indeed, Phœnicia, is a more extensive Term, than Canaan; for it seems to take in all the Countreyes that bordered on the Red-Sea. Phœnicia seems to have had its Denomination from $\phi\omicron\nu\nu\iota\varsigma$, the Name of Esau, or Edom, turn'd into Greek. Esau was called, Erythras, or Erythraeus, by Pagan Historians, which is the same with $\phi\omicron\nu\nu\iota\varsigma$, i.e. Rufus. Consequently, the Phœnicians, were all those People, that liv'd near the Red-Sea.⁶⁹

This was the Division of the World. Shem had the East; Japhet had the Northern & Western Parts; Cham lay between both.

Moses reckons up,

of Japhets Posterity	14.
of Shems ,	26.
of Chams ,	29.

In all, (with Shem, Ham, and Japhet themselves,) 72.

Some think, there are just so many Languages (or, Dialects) & so, of Nations.⁷⁰

To this Purpose, our Edwards, writing on the Excellency & Perfection of the Scriptures.⁷¹

⁶⁹ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 34, col. 299–302; and pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 1, col. 345–50). Although Bochart covers much of the same terrain, Mather here extracts his information from Hugo Grotius's De veritate religionis (lib. 1, sec. 16, annot. 62), in Opera omnia (3:21–22). The Greek name reads "Phoinike" (LXX Exod. 16:35). The "woman of Canaan" who asks Christ to cast out her daughter's demon is mentioned in Matt. 15:22, but she is called a Greek woman, "a Syrophenician by nation" (Mark 7:26). For St. Augustine, see his Expositio inchoata epistolae ad Romanos (lib. 1, c. 13) [PL 35, 2096]. The Greek appellation "phoinic," suggesting "purple-red" or "crimson," is Latinized as "Rufus"; i.e., "red-haired" and here fortuitously associated with Esau, who at his birth "came out red, all over like an hairy garment" (Gen. 25:25).

⁷¹ Mather seems to run out of steam here and merely refers his readers to John Edwards's disquisition on the original language(s) spoken by our protoplast and by Noah's descendants after Babel (Discourse 3:47–59). See Appendix A.

Q. Here may occur by the way, a Quæstion of some Consideration; whether all the Names occurring in the Sacred Genealogies, are the Names of particular Persons?

A. With Bochart, I answer, No. But many of the Names in the Genealogies, are the Names of Nations and Countreyes. For instance, when any Names are of a plural Termination; as, Cittim, and Rodanim.

And the Names of the Sons of Misraim, and of Canaan, all but Sidon and Heth; All of them are evidently the Names of Peoples, and not of single Persons. Thus, Hatsar-Maveth (in English, The Region of Death,) mentioned as the Son of Joctan; and Mesech, (from a long Tract of Mountains,) and Misraim, or Egypt, (so called from Straits,) and Put, or Africa, (so called quia sparsim habitatur,) Havila, a Part of Arabia (so called, from the Sands,) Lud one the Ethiopian, the other the Asiatic, (so called from the Mæanders of their Rivers,) Sidon, (so called from its Fishery,) Diklam, (so called from its Abounding with Palm-trees,) Ophir, (so called from its Wealth,) Jobab, (so called from its vast Wilderness:) All these were not the Names of Persons, but of Places.⁷²

Thus elsewhere, (1. Chron. 2.51, 52.) we find, Salma, the Father of Bethlehem; Hareph, the Father of Bethgader, and Shobal, the Father of Kirjath-jearim. And we find, 1. Chron. 4.14. Joab, the Father of the Valley of Craftsmen. Tis, as Bochart saies, Ut scias in Genealogijs etiam Loca et Populos, in Filiorum censum venire.⁷³

This Hint may be serviceable to many good Purposes.

We have been already entertained with a Summary Account, of the several Peoples in the World, and of their Descents. Nevertheless, the Incomparable Bochart, having, in his Phaleg, entertained us with many & charming Varieties on that Subject, & on the Tenth & Eleventh Chapters of Genesis, besides those, which we have already fetched out of him, it may be worth our while, to throw the Cheef of them, into One Collection; And it may be done under the ensuing Enquiries. v. 32.⁷⁴

⁷² Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 12, col. 85–87; lib. 3, cap. 6, col. 163–64; lib. 4, cap. 26, col. 264–65). Bochart argues that Put or Africa “was sparsely populated.” See also Mather’s sermon Hatsar-Maveth (1726).

Q. Where did Babel stand?

A. Bochart abundantly demonstrates the Mistake of them, who make Bagdad for to be in the Place of the Ancient Babylon. Seleucia that succeeded in the Wealth of Babylon, succeeded also in the Name. And Bagdad is now in or near the Place of Seleucia; but the horrid Ruines of the old Babylon, are about Forty Miles off, as Teixeira, an Ey-Witness, ha's assured us. Bagdad is upon the Banks of Tigris, and even there, Almansor did about the Year of our Lord 1095. remove it from one Side of the River to the other, because of its having suffered so much by Inundations, as the Persian Historian Emirchondus informed us; but Babylon was upon the Banks of Euphrates. Euphrates in the Fields thereabouts, runs into diverse Channels, or Branches. One of them is the Navigable River Tsartsar, whereto adjoins a City of that Name, about Nine Miles from Bagdad. A Second is, The River Almelic, or the Kings River, about Six Miles from the former, near which stands Alcatsar. A Third goes toward Sura; and a Fourth to Cusa, which are, as Benjamin tells us, a Day-and-halves Journey, from one another. Both the Græcian and the Roman, ancient Writers agree pretty much to this Account; save that they say nothing of Tsartsar. The Almelic particularly, is the same that Ptolomy calls, βασιλειον ποταμόν, and Polybius, βασιλικὴν διώρυγα. Abydenus calls it, An Horn of Euphrates. And it was called, Royal, because it was Dug, by the Kings Care & Cost. And it is thought, That this is the very same, that is called, Chebar, diverse times in the Prophecies of Ezekiel; and that it was called thus, from one Chebar, the Overseer of the Work. Unto this Purpose there is a notable Passage in Pliny, *Sunt qui tradunt Euphratem, Chobaris Præfecti Operâ deductum, ubi eum diximus findi, ne præcipiti cursu Babylonem infestaret.*⁷⁵

⁷⁵ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 8, col. 32–35). Mather, via Bochart (col. 32), quotes from Relaciones de Pedro Teixeira d'el Origen (1610), by Pedro Teixeira (d. c. 1640), Portuguese explorer of Lisbon, who traveled to the Far East, including India, Persia, the Philip-pines, and China. His travel narrative was translated into several European languages. Teixeira relates that according to the Persian historian Emirchondus [Geographia Arabs (i.e., Idrisi's Geographia Nubiensis), clim. 4, pars 6, p. 204], Abujasar Almansor (Abu Jasar Mansur), son of Muhammad, 21st Caliph, and second of the Abbaside dynasty, relocated Bagdad to the opposite side of the Euphrates (Travels of Pedro Teixeira, ch. 6, pp. 63, 69n, 70). Benjamin of Tudela describes the area in his Itinerarium (143) and Itinerary (69). Ptolemy calls the Almedic River “Basileion Potamon” or “King’s River” (Geographia 5.18.9) and Polybius “Basiliken dioruka” or “Royal Canal” (Historia 5.51.6, line 5). Abydenus calls the Armacales River “a branch of the Euphrates, and also of the Acracanus” (Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica (9.41.457c). Both Ezekiel (1:3) and Benjamin of Tudela (Itinerarium 142) mention this river but not the origin of its name (Itinerary 66). The Chebar River is frequently identified as “the Habor, or river of Gozan” (SBD). The notable passage from Pliny (6.30.120) reads, “The Euphrates was diverted into an artificial channel by Governor Gobares (Chobaris) at the place where we have stated that it divides, in order to prevent the violence of its current from threatening damage to the district of Babylonia.”

Now, that Branch whereon Babylon stood, kept the Name of Euphrates, because it was no Artificial Derivation from it. Only in the Book of Baruch it is called, Sud; which instead of Σουδ, should indeed have been Σουρ, Sur. Now, Sur, or Sura, or Sora, is the most famous Name of the Babylonian City, (whereof see the Nubian Geographer,) the same that in Benjamin is called, Mahasia.⁷⁶

The Fourth Branch, which runs to Cusa, or Kulpa, ha's various Names, in the old Historians, which there is no need of mentioning; only that Abydenus calls it, Ἀκρακάνων, Pliny calls it, Narraga, and Ptolomy calls it Baarsares.

These were those famous (Psal. 137.1.) Rivers of Babylon, whose Banks were so full of Willowes, that Babylon is called, Isa. 15.7. The Valley of Willowes.⁷⁷

Q. What became of the Tower of Babel?

A. Some look upon the City and the Tower of Babel, by an Hendiadys, to signify one thing; but the Text evidently makes them Two: tho' tis also evident, that the Tower was a Part of the City. Both Abydenus and Eupolemus intimate this, as well as Moses.

They, two, and the Sibyls, add, That God by a violent Storm of Wind, blew down the Tower. And Benjamin saies, In medio ejus cecidit Ignis è Caelis, qui diruit ipsos (lateres) usque ad fundamentum; It perished by Thunder and Lightning. But the Scripture saies no such Matter. There is rather Cause to think, That it stood long after the Dispersion, and that it was the very Tower of Bel, so largely described in the First Book of Herodotus.⁷⁸

Q. Who built the Tower of Babel, and when?

A. It was about the Time of the Birth of Peleg, that the Dispersion happened; And Peleg was born in the Hundred & first Year after the Flood. We must not then take in all that are mention'd in the Tenth Chapter of Genesis, for Actors in this Business. Noah was the Saturn, who had hitherto, in this Golden Age, governed his Children more by Love than Fear. Moses in his Account, Gen. 11.5. That the Children of Men, built the Tower, seems to distinguish the Builders, from the Faithful, whom he had formerly mentioned under this Distinction, The Children of God.⁷⁹

Abraham, and those of the Holy Line, before Abraham, seem to have continued with Noah, and to have no share in the Dispersion, or in the Transgression that caused it. Ur, the Place of Abrahams Residence, was not far from Corduena, where the Ark had rested. Ammianus, a Pagan Writer, saies of the Romans, Ad Ur Nomine Persicum venere Castellum, near Nisibis, and not very far from Corduena.⁸⁰

[250v] Yea, a worse Man than Abraham is to be excused, from having any Hand in this Matter; and that is, Nimrod. For Nimrod was now either a Child, or perhaps the Child unborn. Sinar | had probably lain desolate for some Years; All Men were afraid of carrying on so fatal an Undertaking as what had been begun there: But Nimrod probably resum'd the Courage to undertake it; and make the Beginning & Metropolis of his Kingdome, to be that very Place, where Mankind had received such a Remarkable Rebuke from Heaven. The Charms of the Soyl thereabouts, were very Inviting.⁸¹

Q. What was the Morter used in the Building of Babel?

A. Moses tells us, It was Bitumen, which we render, Slime. It is abundantly proved by Bochart, that this is the true Translation, of the Hebrew חֶמָר / Chemar, whereof the Pitts full in the Valley of Sodom, (Gen. 14.10.) were very famous. The best Sort in Judea, was of a Purple Colour; tho' tis ordinarily Black.⁸²

⁷⁹ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 10, col. 37–38).

Theodoret informs us, of his being assured by Travellers, that the Fountains in Assyria, did even in his Time, often boil up Bitumen with Water, and that they built their Walls with it. And other Authors there are, as namely, Strabo, and Dion, and Suidas, and Xenophon, who commend the Babylonian Bitumen for Buildings.⁸³

But that which is most entertaining, is, That almost all the Pagan Writers, who write about the Walls of Babel, give the very same Account with Moses. Herodotus, and Ctesias, and Theocritus, and Dion, and the Scholiast upon Theocritus, & the Scholiast upon Aristophanes, & Eustathius upon Dionysius, and Tzetzes, All these Græcian Writers, agree upon Bitumen, to be used in the Walls of Babylon. Trogus and Curtius, and Pliny, and Vitruvius, and Ammianus, and Servius upon Virgil, All these Roman Writers herein agree with the Græcian. The Passages are too many to be recited.⁸⁴

And that the Tower was built with the same, Arrian will satisfy you, saying, That the Temple of Belus (which was but the old Tower of Babel repaired) in the Midst of the City of Babylon, of an Immense Magnitude, was, ἐκ πλίνθου ὀπτῆς ἐν ασφάλτῳ ἡρμοσμένης. Ex cocto Latere structum, Bitumine ferruminatum. And, in fine, Diodorus tells us, It was τῆς δ' ὅλης οἰκοδομίας ἐξ ἀσφάλτου καὶ πλίνθου πεφιλοτεχνημένης πολυτελεῶς, Toto ædificio ex Bitumine et Latere summâ arte atque impensa extracto.⁸⁵

Q. How Big was the City of Babel?

A. 'Tho' it were a Great City, [Dan. 4.17, 30.] yett we have no Reason to give any Beleef unto those Romantic Reporters who made Aristotle Beleeve, That it was very near as big as the whole Græcian Peloponnesus. Indeed it must have been so, if what he saies were true, That after the City was taken, it was the Third Day before a Part of the City, became sensible of it. Bochart shewes, that there was an Error of the Scribe doubtless in this Matter; and that it should rather be read, That for a Third Part of the Day, a Part of the City continued Insensible of its being taken. It was taken before the Morning Light, and it was taken on a Festival-Day, when the People were buried in Sleep & Wine. And this is agreeable to Herodotus's, and Xenophons Account of it.⁸⁶

The Ancients generally make Babylon to be Forty five Miles in Compass. Especially Ctesias thus defines the City to be 360 furlongs in Circuit; and Cleitarchus makes it 365. Other Authors are Various and Inconstant in their Accounts; But these two, having lived at Babylon, & been Eye-Witnesses of its Magnitude, are to be relied upon.⁸⁷

For the Heighth of the Walls, we will therefore also not concern ourselves with Strabo, or Diodorus, or Curtius, or Apollonius. Wee will hear none but Ctesias, who saies, Their Heighth was πεντήκοντα ὀργυίων, Fifty Orgya's. Now every Orgya, had in it Four Cubits, or Six Feet.⁸⁸

The Thickness of them, if Strabo, and Curtius, make it Thirty two Foot, Marcian and Pliny make it Fifty, and so does Herodotus, and Orosius; but Apollonius no less than an Hundred. And Curtius tells us, That Four Chariots, (and Ctesias will tell you, no less than Six,) might meet there, without Jostling against one another.⁸⁹

⁸⁹ Strabo (16.1.5) and Quintus Curtius Rufus (5.1.25) make it 32 feet thick. The Latin encyclopedist Martianus Capella (5th c. CE) of Carthage (De arte rhetorica, lib. 6) agrees with

Q. How High was the Tower of Babel?⁹⁰

A. According to Herodotus, it must be a Mile High; To a Fourth Part of which Height, no building in the World, ever yett arrived; And yett Jerom raises this Tower to Four Times the Height of Herodotus. Yea, and Ado in his Chronicon adds more than One Mile unto Jeroms Four; concluding, Describunt et multa alia, quæ videntur incredibilia; and lett us e'en conclude This to be so too. The rather, because in the Account of Herodotus, upon which the following Writers have built, what ha's been taken for the Height, was really the Breadth of it; for so Ευρος is to be rendred. Much less may we follow the Jewes, who in their Book, Jalcut, carry up the Tower to the Height of Seven & Twenty Miles.

The most that we can find in the Pagan Writers, (and particularly in Abydenus, who fetches what | he saies, out of the Chaldæan Monuments) is, that they did, Τύρσιν ἡλίβατον ἀΐρειν, Erect an High Tower; only that Strabo speaks of, σταδία ρὸ ὕψος. The Pagan Writers have several Relations about this Tower, which are evidently so many Disguises of the Mosaic History. Because Nimrod, who was esteemed one of the Builders, is called, גִּבְרַ they say, T'was built by Giants. Because of Nimrod we read, Gen. 10.11. He went forth הָאָרֶץ הָרְחֹקָה / E Terrâ illâ; they say, The Giants were born of the Earth. Because Nimrod is called, An Hunter before the Lord, which some read, Bellator contrà Dominum; they say, The Giants made War against the Gods. Because tis said, The Top of the Tower was to reach unto Heaven; they say, The Giants built the Tower, to ascend thereby into Heaven. Because tis said in the Chaldaic History, that the following Dissipation, Pliny (6.30.121) and so do Herodotus (1.178) and the Spanish Presbyter Paulus Orosius (Historiarum 2.6) [PL 31. 758B], but Apollonius Tyanensis (Epistolæ 59) makes its thickness 100 feet. Q. Curtius Rufus (5.1.25) has “two four-horse chariots” (not four chariots) and Ctesias (Fragmenta 3c, 688, F fragm. 1b line 238) has six chariots pass each other on top of the walls of Babylon without hindrance.

90 The answer to this question is extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 13, col. 45–47). Mather's claim that Herodotus makes the tower a mile high is really based on Bochart's conjectures (col. 45), for Herodotus himself does not mention the tower's height at all, only that it is one stade (c. 607 feet) wide and long at the base, and has eight towers of decreasing size successively mounted on top of each other with a temple at its peak and stairs encircling the tower to the very summit (Historia 1.181). St. Jerome, in his commentary on Isa. 14:22–23 (Commentaria in Isaiam, lib. 5) [PL 24. 164A], and St. Adon(is) Viennensis (c. 800–875), archbishop of Vienne, France (Chronicon in aetates sex divisum, aetas secunda) [PL 123.(1785). 28C], multiply the tower's size yet again; Mather concludes, “they also describe many other things, which seem incredible.” The Greek noun “euros” suggests “in breadth.” In his Yalkut Makhiri (on Gen. ch. 11 and on Ps. 55, 145b), a midrashic anthology on the entire Hebrew Bible, by Yalkut Shimoni, aka. R. Shimon HaDarshan of Frankfurt (13th c.), the size of the tower is increased yet again. However, none seems as prolific as the first printed Hebrew edition of פרקי רבי אליעזר Pirke Rabbi Eliezer (Constantinople, 1514), which – a misprint no doubt – raised the tower's height to 70 “mils” (i.e., mille), or 140,000 cubits (221,666 feet). Vorstius's Latin translation, Capitula Elieser (1644), cap. 24, pp. 54–55, also retains this incredible size. See Friedlander's translation of Pirke (ch. 24, p. 176, n. 2 and 3).

was, Per quatuor ventos caelorum, which means no more than the Four Quarters of the World; they say, That the Dissipation was made by the Ministry of the Winds. And because the Word /פִּירָן/used by Moses here, signifies, not only to Scatter, but also to break in Peeces, and the Name for a Thunderbolt comes from it; they say, That the Tower was broken to Peeces; Benjamin adds, by Lightning too. The Greek Fable of the Theomachous Giants, attempting Heaven, by Mountains laid one upon another, was of this Original.⁹¹

Q. Into how many several Tongues, is the Speech of Mankind now Divided and Confounded?

A. Tongues are continually changing unto this very Day; and the Number of them is unknown. The Hebrew Tradition, of Seventy, or Seventy two Tongues, espoused so much by the Ancients, is altogether Fanciful; and we will not be at the Pains here to transcribe their Fancies.⁹²

Pacianus at length, an Author mentioned by Jerom, carried on the Number to One hundred & twenty; saying, Hebraeis sua Lingua est secundum copiam Domini, quae eam in centum viginti ora modulatus est. What Foundation he had for his Number, we know not. But what shall we say? In the one Kingdome of

⁹² Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 15, col. 53). The Hebrew tradition of seventy or seventy two languages (based on the number of Noah’s primary descendants forming a separate people) is recorded in many Talmudic tractates and Targums, including Shabbath (88b), Megilah (13b), Sanhedrin (17a). See also Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 24) 176; Midrash Rabbah (Exod. V:9, XXVIII: 6, Num. XIX:3); Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (Gen. 11:8), in Walton (4:19) and in Etheridge (1:190). However, there was no consensus among medieval rabbis. See for instance Ibn Ezra on Gen. 11:10 (Commentary 1:145) and Rashi’s annotations on Gen. 11:1. Epiphanes (Panarion 2.8–12, in Epiphanius 1:176, lines 4–13) relates that by the fifth generation after the Flood, Noah’s three sons had fathered 72 male offspring, who conspired to build the Tower of Babylon. God thwarting their plans, divided their common language into 72; Clemens Alexandrinus, quoting Euphorus (Stromata 1.21.142.1) mentions 75 (The Stromata, or Miscellanies 2:332).

Mithridates, which was not an hundredth Part of the World, there were Nations, of Twenty Two several Tongues. Yea, we read in Timosthenes about Three hundred several Nations, of so many Languages, making their Descent upon Dioscurias of Colchis. And Pliny speaks of the Romans using an hundred & thirty Interpreters, to dispatch their Businesses there.

All that we will add, is, That there are Twenty Languages, besides the Hebrew, mentioned in the Bible.

The Chaldee, the Arabick, the Canaanitish or Phœnician, the Egyptian, that of Ashdod, or the Philistean, the Persian, the Greek, the Latin, the Lycaonian, and the rest we find in the second Chapter of the Acts.⁹³

Q. Now for the Genealogies. Lett us begin with Shem, and his Offspring; who tho' he were younger than Japhet, yett was præferr'd before him in the Blessings of the Covenant. And here, first, Why may we not allow Shem, to be the same with Melchisedech?

A. By no means! The proud Jewes indeed, are very zealous to assert this Paradox: Their Pride cannot bear it, that a Stranger should in any regards be own'd a Superior to their Abraham. Whereas, tis expressly denied, That we have Melchizedeks Genealogy in the Bible; but Shems we have, as much as is possible; and he appears to us, no more without Father & without Mother, than without Offspring. Again, Levi was as much in the Loins of Shem, as of Abraham; and if Shem were Melchizedek, the Apostles whole Argument from thence, about a Priesthood of an Order above the Levitical, would fall to the Ground. Nor is it likely, that Shem should be Ruler in the Land of Canaan, a Spott of Ground that belonged unto his brother Cham. Nor would Abraham have been so much in the Circumstances of a Stranger in that Land, if his Great Grandfather had been the Ruler there. Nor can any likely Reason be assigned, why Shem should ly hid under the Disguised Name of Melchizedek.⁹⁴

Q. Well; The first Son of Shem, is Elam. Who are descended from him?

A. The Elamites of whom we read in the Second Chapter of the Acts. Concerning Lukes Enumeration, by the way, we may observe, That he begins Eastward, and proceeds Westward still, in the exact Order of the Lying of the People. These Elamites accordingly lay between the Medes and the Mesopotamians. From Isaiah and Jeremiah, and especially from Ezekiel, (ch. 32.24.) we learn, they were a very Warlike sort of a People. Agreeably hereto, Strabo and Nearchus, write, That they were a sort of a People who lived upon Spoil; & præsumed even to exact Tribute from the very Kings of Persia. They had Kings of their own, which as Jeremiah mentions, (ch. 25.25.) even so doth Strabo too. The Prophets mention their Arms: Isa. 22.6. Elam bare the Quiver; and, Jer. 49.35. I will break the Bowe of Elam. And Strabo accordingly Reports, about the Mountainous | Countrey of Elymais, It bred Souldiers, τοξότας τοὺς πλείστους, which for the most Part were Archers. Elam was taken sometimes more strictly, for only Elymais; but sometimes it also took in some of the Neighbouring Provinces, which extended as far as the River Ulam; and among the rest, Susiana, the Metropolis whereof, Susan, is mention'd by Daniel, (ch. 8.2.) and by Benjamin in his Itinerary, as belonging to Elam: Tho' the Elamites and the Susians, really were two Distinct People. [see Ezr. 4.9.]⁹⁵

Q. Assur is the next. Who from him?

⁹⁴ Both Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 1, col. 68–69) and Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 14:18 (Commentary 1:64) supply Mather with detail. For Melchizedek, see Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (Gen. 14:18) and Targum Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 14:17), in Walton (4:24) and Etheridge (1:199); so, too, the Midrash Aggadah and the Talmudic tractate Nedarim (32b) identify Melchizedek with Noah's son Shem (Gen. 14:18), as does Baal Haturim, which, in reversing the initial letters of the Hebrew designation מֶלֶךְ שָׁלֵם [melek shalem] "King of Salem" spells the name שֵׁם "Shem." Ergo, "this teaches that Malchizedek was Shem, the Son of Noah" (Baal HaTurim Chumash 1:114). If Melchizedek and Shem were one and the same person, Mather contends, then St. Paul's argument (Heb. 7:6) that the priestly Melchizedek was superior to the Levitical priests, would be fallacious. Mather and many others maintain that Melchizedek was none other than Christ himself. Pierre Jurieu's conjecture that Melchizedek was Noah's wicked son Ham would have seemed almost blasphemous (Critical History [1705], vol. 1, ch. 11, pp. 96–105).

A. The Assyrians; who were first (as Eustathius tells us) called, Assyres. This Name was indeed extended as far as the Assyrian Empire itself. Yea, Media and Persia itself came under it, as both Suidas and Virgil have intimated. The Ancients, very many of them, took the Name of Syrians and Assyrians, promiscuously. It is not worth our while, to quote the Authors, for this promiscuous Use of that Name. At last, Custome obtained, That the Syrians were distinguished from the Assyrians, by the River Euphrates; at least, by Tigris. Assyria then properly so called, was the Countrey about Ninive, which at length came to be called, Adiabene; and in the Hebrew Writers, הַדִּיב / Hadiab. Another Name used for that Countrey, in early Antiquity, was Aturia, or, Atryia. Xiphilinus notes this, out of Dion, and the Chaldee Paraphrase expresses it. From hence, Thuras, that ancient King of the Assyrians, The Son of Zamis, the Successor of Ninus, the famous Warrior, worshipped by the Assyrians for their Mars, and called, Baal, or Belus.⁹⁶

Q. Who from Arphaxad?

A. That Part of Assyria, which is in Ptolomy called Arrapachitis, was doubtless inhabited by his Posterity. It is a Mistake in Josephus, and others, That the Chaldeans were of old called, Arphaxadeans. They were called, Chasdim, from their Father Chesed, the Son of Abrahams Brother Nachor. Indeed we read of Ur of the Chaldees, before Chesed was born; but it is a Prolepsis. Ur signifies, A Valley; probably the City or Countrey so called, was in a Valley.⁹⁷

Q. Who from Aram?

⁹⁶ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 3, col. 72–73). Eustathius, 12th-c. Byzantine archbishop of Thessalonica, mentions that the Assyrians were first called “Assyres,” in his Commentarium in Dionysii (492.44). Both the Suda (Lexicon, alfab. letter alpha, entry 4289, lines 3–4) and Virgil (Georgics 4.285–94) intimate that Media and Persia were incorporated into the Assyrian Empire. Adiabene, the area near the two Zab Rivers in N Mesopotamia (Pliny 5.13.66; 6.17.44; Strabo 16.1.1, 18, 19) also became the name for Assyria, because politically it comprised the largest part of the territory of Assyria (KP). The Talmudic tractate Yevamoth (17a) identifies Hadyab (Adiabene) with Habor, and the Targum Jonathan ben Uziel on Gen. 10:12 calls it הַדִּיב [Hadiath] (Walton 4:18). Joannes Xiphilinus, in his epitome of Cassius Dio’s Historiae Romanae (68.26.4; Dio’s Roman History 8:411) mentions Aturia or Atryia as another name for Assyria, whereas Strabo (16.1.1–3) identifies Aturia as part of Assyria. For the early Assyrian god-king Thuras, son of Zamis and successor of Ninus (purported founder of the Assyrian empire), as well as for the Assyrian worship of Baal or Belus (Mars), Bochart (73) relies on Suda (Lexicon, alfab. letter theta, entry 417, lines 1–6) and on a fragment (Fragm. 5) by the Byzantine historian Joannes Antiochenus (7th c. CE).

⁹⁷ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 4, col. 73–74). For Arrapachitis, see Claudius Ptolemy’s Geographia (6.1.2, line 3); Josephus’s error occurs in his Antiquities (1.6.4).

A. There was a Junior Aram, descended from Nahor, whose Posterity, some of the Ancients took to be the Syrians. This might be true, concerning some certain Tribe of the Syrians; but the whole Nation of the Syrians doubtless owed their Original to Aram Senior the Son of Shem. Jacob, for his living in the Countrey of this People twenty Years, is called, [Deut. 26.5.] A Syrian. As our Lord is called, Jesus of Nazareth. The Arameans were not unknown unto the old Pagan Writers. Homer, and Hesiod, sing of them; and Strabo mentions them. The Name of an Aramean in Process of Time, grew so vile, as to signify, An Idolater. The Phrase was of a Chaldee Original; and we have it especially in the Talmuds. The Occasion might be, because the first Idolatry expressly mentioned in the Scripture, was that of Thare, Nachor, and Laban, who were by their Countrey Arameans; and the Jewes have a Tradition, of Terahs being the first Image-Maker that ever was in the World; and both Epiphanius and Suidas do countenance the Tradition.⁹⁸

In the Scripture, we find Six Places whereto the Name Aram is either a Præfix or a Suffix.⁹⁹

Aram-Naharajim, is as much as to say, Syria of the Two Rivers. It was the same with Mesopotamia, which lies between Tigris and Euphrates.¹⁰⁰

For Padan-Aram, the Arabic Tongue will inform us, That /פַּדְאן/ Phaddan, is the same with the Hebrew /שֶׁדֶה/ Sede; which signifies, A Fruitful Field. Yea, which Bochart wonders, that they who have gone to expound the Word Padan have never minded it, Padan-Aram, is by the Prophet Hosea, expressly called, [Hos. 12.12.] Sede-Aram. It was the Cultivated Part of Mesopotamia, which was opposed unto the Desart and Barren Part of it. You have this Distinction in Strabo himself; & both of them notably described in Xenophon; who saies, That in the Wilderness Part of Mesopotamia, there were Fields of Wormwood, sometimes, which might be compared unto Oceans. By the way, observe, That the Part of Mesopotamia, which lay next unto the Assyrians, was called, The Countrey of the Chaldees. This is intimated in the Speech of the Martyr Stephen. [Act. 7.2, 3, 4.] The Ur of the Chaldees, was the same whereof Ptolomy saies, The Countrey of Auranitis is adjacent unto Euphrates. Wonder not, that the Martyr Stephen ⁹⁸ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 5, col. 74–75). Bochart associates the Aramaeans with the “country of the Arimi” (Homer’s Iliad 2.783), and with the tribe of the “Arimoi” (Hesiod’s Theogoniae 304). Strabo mentions them in his Geographica (1.2.34 and 16.4.27). The Chaldean Paraphrast Onkelos on Lev. 25:47 points out their uncircumcised (hence idolatrous) origin (Walton 1:519). For the idolatry of Abraham’s father Terah (Thara, Tharra), Nachor, and Laban, see Josh. 24:2; Gen. 31:19. According to R. Hiyyah, Terah was the first maker of idols (Genesis Rabbah XXXVIII:13), a tradition which both Epiphanius Constantiensis (Panarion 3.4–5, in Epiphanius 1:177, lines 19–21) and Suda (Lexicon alphab. letter sigma, entry 254, lines 7–10) confirm.

extended Mesopotamia so far; for some of the Ancients (as Pliny) extend it as far as the Persian Sea, and so as to take in Babylon itself.¹⁰¹

Aram-Soba, tis plain, touched upon Euphrates itself. [Compare, 2. Sam. 8.3. and 1. Chron. 18.3.] Here was Palmyra; and here were the Palmyrenae Solitudines, mentioned by Pliny, and by Ptolomy. The Sabe and Barathena, mentioned by Ptolomy in Arabia Deserta, seem to be the Soba, and Berothai, mentioned in the Scripture. And it may be, an Error of the Scribe, ha's putt Nubæi, for Sobæi, in Pliny. Tho' they were so broken by the victorious Arms of David, that there is little mention of them any where, after the Dayes of Solomon.¹⁰²

Aram-Dammesek, or Syria of Damascus, lay between Libanus, and Antilibanus. That Illustrious Valley had many other Names, As, Hoba; The Valley of Aven; The House of Eden; and Hadrac, [Zech. 9.1.] The Inhabitants call it, Algauta.¹⁰³

Aram-Maacha, and, Aram-beth-Rehob, were Towns of the Canaanites, rather than of the Syrians.¹⁰⁴

Q. We have done with the immediate Sons of Shem; Lett us now acquaint ourselves with his Grand Sons; [which yett 1. Chron. 1.17. are called, His Sons; in the same sense, no doubt, that Laban is called, The Son of Nahor, Gen. 29.5. And Mephibosheth, is called, The Son of Saul; 2. Sam. 19.25.] Now, the first of these is, Uts?

A. And the Ancients unanimously take him to have been the Builder of Damascus; for which Cause the Arabians at this Day call the Countrey thereabouts, by the Name of Gaut; Tsade being usually turned into Teth.

This our Uts of Aram, had a Couple of Namesakes. One, the Son of Nahor, [Gen. 22.21.] whose Countrey was called Ausitis, by the Greeks, [Job. 1.1.] and his Posterity, were the Ausitæ, found by Ptolomy in Arabia the Desert. Another, among the Offspring of Edom, [Gen. 36.28.] from whom Idumæa was called, [Lam. 4.21.] The Land of Uz; which was in Arabia the Stony. There were then Three Lands of Uz, denominated so from Three several Persons; which not being well distinguished, have caused some Confusion.¹⁰⁵

Q. The Next was Hul?

A. Yes; And this is hee, that in Josephus is called, Otrus, and placed in Armenia. Bochart suspects, that he wrote, Otus; with an Eye to Otene, a famous Region in Armenia, mention'd by Pliny, and Quadratus; and by Ptolomy miscalled, Μωτῆνη, and in the Tables, Totene.

Most probably, the Seat of Hul, or חול/ was Cholobetene, a Government in Armenia; which in the Armenian Language, was, חולבֿית Cholbeth, or, The House of Hul. Ptolomy tells of several Cities in Armenia, called, Cholua, Choluata, Cholimma, Colsa, Colana, all which Names may seem to refer unto our Hul.¹⁰⁶

Q. Gether the next?

A. But we cannot find any Place or People, that can pretend Relation to him. It is not worth while to animadvert on the Error of the learned Mercer, in deriving the Acarnanes, the Cares, and the Bactrians, from him. It may more probably be enquired, whether from our Gether, may not be derived the Name of the River between the Carduchians and the Armenians, which the Greeks call, Centrites, mentioned both by Xenophon, and by Diodorus. But in the Arabian Paraphrase, Gether is called, Algerameka, that is, Giormok, or Algior mok. And

where that is, I leave you to the Nubian, for Satisfaction; or you may go look for it in Tartary.¹⁰⁷

Q. Mas was the last?

A. The same, is in the Chronicles called, Mesech. He seems to have occupied the Mountain Masius in Mesopotamia; from whence the River Saocora proceeding, is by Xenophon called, Μασκὰ. With Stephanus, the Inhabitants of this Place, are called, Masiani. The Moscheni of Pliny, about Adiabene, and Armenia Major, seem to be of this Original.¹⁰⁸

Q. Pass to the other Son of Shem, called Lud?

A. From him descended, as Josephus tells us, the Lydians, or, Ludians, which in Eustathius are also called, Ludeans. They being the same with the Mæonians, their having the Name of Lydians, from Lydus the Son of Atys, a Prince who Reigned long after Mæon, is a Greek Romance.¹⁰⁹

Lud is a Name that carries Obliquity, Tortuosity, Crookedness, in the Signification of it; being with a familiar Permutation of a Letter, which was usual between the Syrians & the Phœnicians, the same with Luz. The Phœnicians accordingly putt this Name upon two Places, that were famous for their Winding Rivers; There was the Lydia, where the Renowned Mæander had its winding Course, and there was the Ethiopian Lydia, where, as Herodotus expresses it, Nilus ran as winding as the Mæander. The Scituation of the former Lydia, is ¹⁰⁷ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 10, col. 82). Bochart's source is Idrisi (Geographia Nubiensis, climatis 4, pars 4). Joannes Mercerus, aka. Jean Mercier (d. 1570), Huguenot scholar extraordinaire, Orientalist, and professor of Hebrew at the Collège Royal of France, edited and translated into Latin the Chaldean Targums on the Hebrew scriptures. Mather (via Bochart) refers to Mercier's Commentarii in Genesin Mosis librum (1598). Both Xenophon (Anabasis 4.3.1) and Diodorus Siculus (14.27.7) mention the River "Kentriten" (Centrites) in this geographical location. The Arabian Paraphrast calls Noah's grandson Gether "Giarameca" (Walton 1:41) – the Latin transliterations of the Arabic version of the Pentateuch differing in the various polyglots: Complutensian (1514–17), Antwerp (1569–72), Paris (1629–45), and London (1654–57). As if getting tired of tracing the interminable number of places founded by the offspring of Noah's three sons, Mather refers his readers to Idrisi's Geographia Nubiensis (climatis 3, pars 5 and 9).

abundantly discovered in the Writings of the Ancients; and Pliny's among the rest, where we read, Lydia perfusa flexuosi amnis Mæandri recursibus; as well as in Maximus Tyrius, That Mæander flows into Lydia.¹¹⁰

The Poets have sufficiently celebrated the Mæander, as the Windingest thing in the World:

– liquidis Phrygius Mæander in undis
Ludit, et ambiguo lapsu refluitque fluitque.

Until the Roman Orator, makes the Word, Mæander, a Proverb for, Vafra et obliqua consilia.¹¹¹

Bochart thinks, That Moses here putts the Name of Lud, on that Son of Shem, who was the Father of the People that received the Name of Lydians from the Winding River of the Countrey inhabited by them; and this only on the Score of his having a Posterity of such a Denomination. And he shoves, how the Name of Mæon, might be fetched from Lud.

That they were of old called, Ludians, rather than Lydians, is plain from the Roman Words, Ludus, Ludo, Ludio, deduced from thence; These Lydians being the great Inventers of Playes, as Herodotus, and Hesychius, and Tertullian, and Isidore, and Dionysius Halicarnasseus, have particularly observed unto us.¹¹²

Q. What Remarks have we to make, upon Salah, the Son of Arphaxad?

A. Salah properly signifies, An Emission, to wit, of Waters. [Job. 5.10.] It is probable, That the pious Arphaxad, who was born Two Years after the Flood, for the Memory of that horrible Revolution among Posterity, called his Son, Selah. As that Illustrious Prophet Enoch, to prædict the Coming of the Flood upon the Death of his Son, putt upon him the Name of Methuselah. The ancient Pagans indeed in their Tradition, confounded the Story, by making Enoch, [their, An-nacus, or Channacus,] the same with Methuselah. They say, That Annacus lived above Three Hundred Years, and that the Oracle foretold, that upon his Death, all the People should also Dy; whereupon the Phrygians fell a mourning at such a rate, that, τὸ ἐπὶ Ἀννακοῦ κλαῦσιν, To weep for Annacus, was (according to Stephanus,) a Proverb for a very great Mourning.

From Selah, (according to Eustathius Antiochenus,) came the Susians; unto whom the Cossæans are enumerated by Ptolomy and Eusebius. That which confirms this Opinion is, That one of the principal Cities in Susiana, is called Sela. Ammianus mentions it, and so doth Ptolomy.¹¹³

Q. Well; but what shall we do with Cainan, the pretended Son of Arphaxad, who if he be admitted, makes but a Grandson of Selah?¹¹⁴

A. And hee'l make a deal of other Confusion too.

The Genealogy is Thrice Repeated in the Old Testament, and no Cainan so much as once found in it. Philo also, and Josephus, and the Chaldee Paraphrasts, and the Persian Interpreter, & both the Arabick, and the Vulgar, make Selah the Immediate Son of Arphaxad. Nor does Cainan appear in the Septuagint neither, [1. Chron. 1.] of the Roman, and Parisian Edition. In Berosus too, Abraham, δίκαιος ἀνὴρ, μέγας, καὶ τὰ οὐράνια ἔμπειρος, is in the Tenth Generation from the Flood; which he is not, if Cainan stand. And in 1. Chron. 1.24. the Masorites have a Marginal Observation, That every Name in the Verse, ha's a /ש/ Schin; which would have been false, if Cainan had stood between Arphaxad, & Shela. Nor can the Jewish Observation, of Two Thousand Years to Abraham, and then ¹¹⁴ Mather's response to this question is a continuation of his extract from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib 2, cap. 13, col. 88–92).

Two Thousand more, to the Messiah, (Duo Millia Tohu, and, Duo Millia Legis,) be undisturbed, if Cainan come in.¹¹⁵

And tho' we find Cainan, in the present Copies of Lukes Gospel, doubtless he was not there neither from the Beginning. Theophilus Antiochenus reciting the Genealogy, omitts him. And Irenaeus, affirms, There are Seventy Two Generations in the Genealogy given by Luke; whereas if Cainan be there, you will find Seventy Three. Julius Africanus, and Epiphanius, do both of them confirm this Omission of Cainan; & both of them expressly say, That Arphaxad begat Selah. And so does Jerom. And Beza had an old Copy of the New Testament, which had no Cainan in it. Bocharts conjecture is probable enough, That there being a Cainan, the Son of Enos, mentioned in the Thirty Seventh Verse, the Carelessness of a Scribe, entred the Name out of its Place in the Thirty Sixth Verse. The Error at first, was not much heeded; and the false Cainan getting some footing there, some Transcribers of the Septuagint, gott him into their Version also.¹¹⁶

Q. And now, for Heber, and those that were descended from Heber; First, Paleg, and from him Reu, or Ragau, and from him Serug, and from him Nahor, and from him Thare, and from him, Abraham?¹¹⁷

115 Arphaxad's genealogy (Gen. 10:22, 24; 11:10–13; 1 Chron. 1:17–18, 24) includes Selah (Salah) – not Cainan – as Arphaxad's son. The conundrum arises because the New Testament author of Luke 3:36 makes Cainan – not Selah – the son of Arphaxad. Significantly, the LXX (Gen. 11:23) does list Arphaxad as the father of Cainan, and Cainan the father of Sala, but Philo Judaeus (De mutatione nominum 35.189) and Josephus (Antiquities 1.6.4) do not. Likewise, Cainan is not mentioned in Gen. 10:24 in the Vulgate, the Syriac, the Arabic, or in the Samaritan Version; the same is true for the Persian Version and the Chaldee Paraphrasts: Targum Onkelos and Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (Gen. 10:24) – all in Walton (1:40–41; 4:18). The Roman (Sixtine) LXX (1586) and Parisian (1629–1645) editions of the LXX (1 Chron. 1:17) do not mention Cainan either. Mather's citation from a fragment of Berossus's Babylonika, which survives in Josephus's Antiquities (1.7.2) and in Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica (9.16.417b), calls Abraham "a man righteous and great, and skilful in the celestial science." Mather (via Bochart) here refers to Joseph Scaliger's edition of the Masorites. Tanna Eliyyahu mentions the ancient idea of "Two thousand (years) of desolation" and "two thousand (years) of the Law" (Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin 97a).

116 Luke 3:36–37. See also Theophilus Antiochenus's Ad Autolyicum (3.24), in ANF (2:118–19); Irenaeus's Adversus haereses (3.22.3), in ANF (1:455); Sextus Julius Africanus's Chronographiae (fragm. 9, lines 1–3), in ANF (6:131) and in Georgius Syncellus's Ecloga chronographica (96.14–18); Epiphanius (Ancoratus 59.4. 2–3) and De mensuris et ponderibus (671, 669 [Moutsoulas]); St. Jerome, on Gen. 10:24–25 (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 42). Mather (via Bochart 91) refers to Novum Testamentum. Interprete Theodori Bezae (1565), a dual-language Greek-Latin edition and translation with annotations by Theodore Beza (1519–1605), the famed Swiss Reformer and Calvin's successor, whose annotations on the omission of "Kainan" can be found in the corresponding places.

117 Mather's "Answer" is extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 14, col. 92–96).

A. The Name of Hebrewes came from Heber; and not from Abraham, as Artapanus, and Charax, imagined, unto which Opinion Augustine once inclined, but afterwards Retracted it: Nor from the Particle, עבר / περα, Trans, Ultrà, on the Score of Abrahams coming over Euphrates, as many of the Ancients have delivered. It is true, all the Sons of Heber were not called Hebrewes; They lost that Name, who neglecting by Degrees the Hebrew Tongue, accommodated themselves unto the Language of the Countreyes nearest unto them.¹¹⁸

None of Abrahams Ancestors wandred far from the Place of their First Habitation. Phalga was a Town upon Euphrates, perhaps in Remembrance of Phaleg here. In Assyria too was the Field of Ragau, whereof we read in the Book of Judith; the same doubtless with the Nisæan Camp, which is described by Strabo. It fed, according to Arrianus, One hundred & fifty thousand Horses; according to Diodorus, One Hundred & Sixty thousand.¹¹⁹

In Remembrance of Serug, there was the City Sarug, near to Charan, and not far from the Bridge, Manbeg.¹²⁰

Terah the Father of Abraham, was the Builder of Charan, a Town of Mesopotamia, in Remembrance of his Son of that Name, who dyed before him. The Town was famous, for the Battel & Ruine of Crassus; and among the Arabians, it holds its Name to this Day.¹²¹

Q. Joktan the Brother of Peleg, next calls to be considered?

A. Joktan, and his Thirteen Sons, have Countreyes particularly assigned by Moses, Their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a Mount in the East. It will be to little other Purpose therefore, than a needless Ostentation of Literature, to recite and refute, the many Mistakes of the Ancients, | about this [255r]

118 In an extant fragment of his Jewish History, Artapanus claims that “the Jews were called Ermiuth,” signifying in Greek “Judaeans” and “Hebrews from Abraham” (Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica 9.18.420a–b). Mather refers to a fragment of Chronica, by Charax of Pergamus, priest and historian of Greece and Rome (uncertain dates), in Stephanus (259.6–7). St. Augustine affirms his belief that the name of Heber, not that of Abraham, is the origin for the name of the Hebrews (De Civitate Dei 16.3), NPNFi (2:311–12), and Retractiones 2.16. [PL 32. 636]. Bochart (92–93) points out that according to Eusebius’s Chronicon and Praeparatio evangelica (9.18), Joannes Chrysostom, and Theodoret (Quaestiones in Octateuchum: Genesis. Quest. 62, pp. 57–58), the designation “Hebrew” was derived from Abraham, who came “over” the Euphrates into Canaan. Hence the particles עבר [eber], περὰ [pera], and Trans, Ultrà as applied to Abraham – all suggest the spatial adverb “over.”

119 Judith 1:6 (Vulgate). See also Epiphanius Constantiniensis (Anacephalaeosis, in Epiphanius 1:162, lines 11–15), Strabo (11.13.6–7), Lucius Flavius Arrianus (Alexandri anabasis 7.13.1), and Diodorus Siculus (17.110.6).

120 Luke 3:35. Idrisi (Geographia Nubiensis, climatis 4, pars 6, pp. 198, 203).

121 Charan, Haran (Carrhas). The Triumvir Marcus Licinius Crassus (115–53 BCE) died in his wars of conquest against the Parthians at the hands of Surenas near Carrhae (53 BCE). See Dio Cassius (Historiae Romanae 40.25–27; Dio’s Roman History 3:443–47) and Plutarch (Vitae parallelae: Crassus 29–33), Plutarch’s Lives (3:407–23).

Matter. We shall not find the Joktanites, either in Aria, (in Josephus corruptly writ, Syria,) where Josephus places them; or, in India, where they are placed by Eustathius, and Eusebius, and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle; but we shall find them in Arabia Felix. Tis the Tradition of the Arabians, that Joktan, (whom they call also Cahtan) was their Father. As descended from him, we find they are called κατανῖται, Catanita, in Ptolomy. And in the Territory of Meccha, at this very day, there is a populous Town called, Baisath-Joktan. Theophanes a famous Chronologer who lived about the Beginning of the Ninth Century, expressly derives the Amanites, (or, Homerites,) from the Tribe of Joktan; And Euthymius ha's the like, in his Maomethica. The Amanites, are the same with the Jemanites, (for so they were first called,) which is as much as to say, The People of the South.¹²²

Q. We will be more particular upon the Sons of Joktan; and begin with the Two first, Almodad, and Sheleph?

A. Almodad no doubt, gave Name to the Almodeans; a People by the Græcians called, Allumæotans. The Tables of Ptolomy show you 'em, in the Midst of Arabia the Happy, near the Springs of the River Lar. The Chaldee Paraphrase of Jonathan, makes Almodad, the first Inventer of Geometry; perhaps, because Moded is as much as to say, A Measurer.

Saleph seems to have been the Father of the Salapeni, whose Habitations were so remote, as at the very Neck of Arabia, near the Rise of the River Betius. The Ptolomæan Tables, do amiss to call them, Alapeni, for in the Text of Ptolomy, they are called Σαλαπήνοι.¹²³

¹²³ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 16, col. 99). For the Allumæotans, the River Lar, the River Betius, and the Alapenis or (S)alapenoi, see Ptolemy (Geographica 6.7.13; 6.7.23–24) and Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (Gen. 10:26), in Walton (4:18).

Q. The Next is Hatsarmaveth:¹²⁴

A. The Arabians pronounce it Hadramauth, or Chadramauth. And by the Greeks, because /π/ and /Σ/ are so ambiguously sounded, it is changed into a Thousand Forms. In the LXX, and the Fathers, we find, Ἀσαρμῶθ, and Σαρμῶθ, and, Ἀρμῶθ, and elsewhere, Ἀτερμῶθ. In Regius Theophrastus, tis Ἀδράμυτα. In Dionysius Periegetes, tis, Chatramis. In Strabo, tis, Chatramitis. The People belonging hereto, are by Artemidorus called, Atramotitæ; by Eratosthenes & Pliny, they are called, Chatramotitæ; by Uranius, they are called, Chatramotæ; by Ptolomy, Chatrimmitæ, and, Chatrimmitæ, and in the Tables, miscalled, Chatramonitæ. Nor are the Atramitæ, or, Adramitæ, mentioned by the three last Authors, diverse from these.¹²⁵ Now that these were in Arabia, was known to the Christian Fathers themselves. Hence in Eustathius Antiochenus, among the Sons of Joctan, is, Ἀσαρμῶθ ἀφ' οὗ Ἀραβες. And the Chronicon Alexandrinum, and Eusebius, to the like Purpose. And according to Epiphanius, this Ἀσαρμῶθ, was the first Inventor of the Arabic Tongue; tho' Gabriel Sionita, with fuller Proof assign the Invention of it unto his Father. And the Hadhramautic Dialect of it, is at this Day, counted the most barbarous. Hadramauth, or, Chatramitis, was a Countrey famous for Myrrhe, and Frankincense, in Ptolomy. Its Metropolis is called, Sabota by Pliny, Sabbatha by Arrianus, Saubatha by Ptolomy; and by the Arabian Geographer Sebam. It was a Mediterranean City; very populous; having Sixty Temples within its Walls, and seated on an high Mountain. The Sun was here worshipped, under the Name of Sabis, which no doubt was originally, Σαμς, or /שמש/, the proper Name for the Sun. Pliny saies, They paid the Tithe of their Frankincense unto him.¹²⁶

124 Mather's response is extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 17, col. 100–03).

125 For Chadramauth, see Ptolemy (Geographica 6.7.23–24). For Asarmoth, Zarmoth, and Armoth, see the LXX (Gen. 10:26), Eustathius (Commentarius in hexaameron, p. 760, line 13), Chronicon Alexandrinum (p. 55, line 2). “Adramuta” (Hadramyta), in the Arabian Peninsula, renowned for its frankincense and myrrh, appears in Theophrastus (Historia plantarum 9.4.2, line 3). Dionysius Periegetes (Orbis descriptio 957); Strabo (16.4.2, 4) calls them “Chatramotitæ” and their region “Chatromotitis.” The Greek historian Uranius Syrius (fl. 6 CE) mentions the Arabic Chatramotæ in Fragmenta (Fragm. 4, lines 1–5, and Fragg. 12, line 2). Ptolemy (Geographia 5.2.5; 6.7.25–26), Stephanus (689.8–12), Pliny (6.32.154, 161). The Greek geographer Artemidorus of Ephesus (fl. c. 100 BCE) is best known for his Geography (11 bks.), extant only in extracts by both Strabo and Pliny; the works of the Greek philologist and librarian of Alexandria, Eratosthenes Cyrenæus (c. 276–c. 194 BCE), survive only in fragments.

126 Eustathius Antiochenus (Commentarius in hexaameron, p. 760, line 13). Chronicon Alexandrinum (p. 55, line 2). Eusebius Pamphilus (Demonstratio evangelica 5.4.19). Epiphanius's Panarion (39.8.5–7), in Epiphanius (2:78, lines 7–15) lists Armot (not Asarmot) as the first speaker of Arabic after the confusion of the tongues at Babel. Bochart's learned Maronite friend Gabriel Sionita (1577–1648), professor of Oriental languages at Rome, of Arabic at the College of France (Paris), and principal contributor to the Paris Polyglot (1629–45), published many works of note, including Grammatica Arabica Maronitarum (1616). Ptolemy (Geographia

The Name of Hatsar-maveth signifies, in Hebrew, The Entry of Death; in Arabic, The Countrey of Death. How agreeable is this, with what we find in Arrianus? That it was a very Unhealthy Place; [ἐπίνοσοι δὲ δεινῶς οἱ τόποι.] Contagious to Passengers; and Mortiferous to the Frankincense-Gatherers. Myrrhe, and Aloes, and Cassia, and Cinnamon abounded there. And so did Serpents too (as Agatharchides tells us,) who use to abound in Spicy Regions; as if (saies our Author,) the Commodities of those Lands were envied unto the Children of Men. He tells of a yellow Serpent there, about a Span long, which if it sting a Man above the Loins, the Wound is incurable. It may be intended in Isa. 34.13. Herodotus reports, a winged Sort of Serpents, on the Trees that bore Frankincense. Behold, another Occasion, for the Name of Hatsar-maveth; besides what we have in an Arabic Book, about the Properties of Things, which they ascribe unto Aristotle, where tis expressly said, That Hadramot was a Place, Ubi Ventus (i.e. a pestilential Air) multos homines interfecit.¹²⁷

Q. Pass to Jerach, and see what Aspect he hath had upon the World?

A. Jerach is a Name, that ha's the Moon in the Signification of it. From him came the Jerachites; which are the very People that are called, Ἀλιταῖοι, in Agatharchides, and in Diodorus. The Reliques of them remain to this Day, near Meccha, called, The Sons of Hilal, (or of the Moon,) whereof there is mention in the Nubian Geographer. These People, mixed with the Cassanites, or the Gasandrans, or the Casandrians, (for they are the same,) occurring in many of the ancient Writers, were, as Herodotus tells us, great | Worshippers of the Moon, which was called, Alila, or, Alilat, (the same with Urania, as tis largely proved by Scaliger,) & is to this day called so. Such was the Respect of the Arabians to the New Moon, that after they turned Mahometans they have not laid it aside. Euthymius, and, Constantinus Porphyrogenneta, have a Form of Prayer, which they continue to direct unto it, notwithstanding their Enmity unto Idolatry in other Instances. And tho' they destroy all other Images, yett they reserve that of the New Moon, both in their Flags, & on their Moschs. The Ornaments upon the Ancient Ishmaelites, [Judg. 8.21.] were called, /שְׁהֲרִינִים/ Little Moons.¹²⁸

6.7.25), Pliny (6.32.155; 12.32.63; 12.35.68), Arrianus (Periplus maris Erythraei 27.10). Saubatha (Sabbatha), in Ptolemy (Geographia 4.7.8, 6.7.38, 8.22.14). Idrisi has "Scebam" and "Hadhrmut, in his Geographia Nubiensis (1619), clim. 2, pars 6, p. 51. For the worship of "Sabis" in his many temples and the use of frankincense, see Pliny (12.32.63) and his source in Theophrastus (Historia plantarum 9.4.5).

Our Sons of Jerach, (or of Hilal, as the Arabians at this day do call them,) removed from the South, to the East, of Meccha. We find in Ptolomy, over against the Shore of the Cassanites, an Island, called by him, Ἰεράκων νῆσος, which is his Mistake; for it should be Ἰεράχων νῆσος, An Island of Jerachites.¹²⁹

Q. Now for Hadoram?

A. Bochart places him in a Corner of the Eastern Part of Arabia, where were the Drimati mentioned by Pliny, near the Persian Sea; for he is careful to distinguish the Offspring of Hadoram, from that of Hatsarmaveth, or Hadhramaut; which he finds many Authors have confounded. We have there a Promontory, which is called κορόδαμος, Corodamus, no doubt, from the Name of our Hadoram.¹³⁰

Q. And for Uzal?

A. A Clause occasionally quoted by Drusius from the Book Juchasin, written by Abraham Zachut, a Jew of Salamanca, help'd Bochart at length to determine the Place of Uzal's Posterity, about which, he saies, he had otherwise been utterly at a Loss. He now finds Uzal, to be the same that ha's been also called, Sanaa, the Metropolis of Aljeman, a Kingdome in the Southern Parts (as the Name Aljeman intimates,) of Arabia Felix; described as a very Rich City, by the Nubian Geographer, and as a very Strong one, by Vartomanus. The Place was by the Arabians, called, Auzal, which among the Grecians degenerated into Ἀυζαρα.

¹²⁸ This and the following paragraph are extracted from Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 19, col. 109–12). The “Alilatoi” (Alilaei) are mentioned by Agatharchides (De mari Erythraeo 96.1) and by Diodorus Siculus (3.45.6). Idrisi (Geographia Nubiensis, climatis 2, pars 5). Herodotus (3.8). Mather’s unspecified reference is, perhaps, to Joseph Justus Scaliger’s Opus de emendatione temporum (1583). Herodotus (1.105, 131) and Pausanias (1.14.7) relate that Ἀφροδίτης Οὐρανίας (Aphrodite Ourania) bore the secondary name “Urania,” as in “Heavenly Aphrodite” (KP). The prayer to the “New Moon” (Aphrodite) does not appear in Euthymius, but in Georgius Cedrenus (Compendium historiarum 1:744, lines 15–24), in Georgius Monachus (Chronicon breve 110:873, secs. 14–15), and in Constantinus VII Porphyrogenitus (De administrando imperio 14.33–36). In the latter work, the Byzantine emperor charges his Muslim enemies with adoring the crescent moon, symbol of Aphrodite: “They pray, moreover, to the star of Aphrodite, which they call Koubar, and in their supplication cry out: ‘Alla wa Koubare,’ that is, ‘God and Aphrodite.’” The Hebrew noun הַשְּׁהֲרִינִים [hassaharonim] suggests (ornamental) “moons” or “crescents” [Strong’s # 7720]. See also Nicholas Fuller’s Miscellaneorum theologicorum (1616), lib. 1, ch. 13.

¹²⁹ Ptolemy (Geographia 3.3.8, line 8): “Ierakon nesos” (Hierakon Insula).

¹³⁰ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 20, col. 112–14). Pliny (6.32.152) has “Drymatina”; Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.11) has “Korodabon akron.”

Such a Place there was among the Gebanites, (according to Pliny.) who had Ocila for their Haven, which is the same that in Ptolomy is called, Ocelis. These Gebanites, were so called probably by the Syrian Merchants, from גבא Gaba, Tributum Exigere; because they were such cruel Tax-gatherers, or laid so severe Customs, on the Myrrhe & Frankincense, which was afforded by, or must be carried thro', their Countrey. They were also called, Catabenes, which is as much as to say, Accountants; from their exact Entry of all such Goods; and Pliny tells us, of a Share in the Goods, which therefore fell to these Rapacious Wretches.¹³¹

That Passage which we render, Ezek. 27.19. Dan also, and Javan, going to & fro, occupied in thy Fairs; Bochart thinks may be thus rendred, Dan also, and Javan, from Uzal, occupied in thy Fairs. q.d. All sorts of People were there; The Danites, which were the Near Neighbours of Tyrus; yea, and very Remote People too; even the Javanites, as far off as Uzal. For besides the Javanians, or Jonians of Greece, there were Javanites of Javan, a City of Jeman, in this Remote Arabia; Giggeius mentions it; And of this Jeman, was Uzal the Metropolis. The Prophet may say Javan from Uzal, διακριτικῶς, to intimate, that he did not mean Javan of Græcia. The Commodities mention'd by the Prophet are, Iron, Cassia, & Calamus. The Iron was imported by the Danites; the Spices by the Javanians, which therefore could not be those of Græcia, but those of Arabia, where Agatharchides, and Strabo, and Diodorus, and Arrianus, and an hundred more Authors, will supply you with those Commodities.¹³²

Q. The next is Dikla?

A. The Chaldeans, and the Syrians, tis well-known, call, A Palm-tree, by that Name; And it is the Name, that the Syrians putt upon that Part of Arabia the Happy, which most abounds with Palms. It ha's commonly been taken for that in the Way to the Red-Sea, described by Diodorus out of Artemidorus, as called, φοινίκων, for that Reason; and whereof Strabo saies, Its Fertility in Palm-trees is wonderful; and Procopius affirms, That nothing else does grow there: And Agatharchides, and Ptolomy, also do mention it. But Bochart shewes, the Sons of Chus, and not of Joctan, were the Inhabitants of that Countrey; from whom the Saracens were descended. We must therefore look further Southward in Arabia; and there among the Mineans, we shall have Pliny showing us, Fertiles Agros Palmetis. Dikla was the Name of the Countrey inhabited by the Mineans.¹³³

¹³¹ This and the subsequent paragraph are extracted from Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 21, col. 114–17). Joannes Drusius quotes from the book of genealogies Liber Iuchasin, or Sefer ha-Yuhasin (c. 1510), (lib. 4, in the end) by Abraham ben Samuel Zacuto (1452–c. 1515), the famous Jewish astronomer and historian of Salamanca. Drusius's citation appears in his commentary on Matt. 12:42, in John Pearson's Critici Sacri (6:373). Idrisi (Geographia Nubiensis, climatis 1, pars 6). The Italian traveler Ludovicus Vartomannus relates in his Novum Itinerarium (1511), lib. 2, cap. 8 and 10, that the city Sana (Sanāa), the Yemeni capital, is located on a mountain top “and is extremely strong” (Travels 78–79). The Greek place name transliterates “Auzara.” Pliny (12.35.68–69). Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.7, line 9). The Latin “Tributum Exigere” suggests “to extort tribute.” Pliny (6.32.153) mentions the “Catapani.”

Q. Obal is the next?

A. Who in the Arabic, would be called, Aubal. He seems to have gone from Arabia the Happy, & pass'd over the Water into Arabia Troglodytica, & given a Name to the Town, & the Bay, called, Abalitis, or Avalitis; for tis written both Wayes, as you may find in Pliny, in Stephanus, in Ptolomy, and in Arrian. Hence came the Myrrha Troglodytica, celebrated so much, in the Writings of the Ancients; especially of Dioscorides and Aetius. The Avalites, were that People, among whom, (according to Ptolomy) were found the Nubæ; which, Νόυβαι, or, Νῶβαι, (according to Hesychius) were the Pygmies of the Ancients; Bochart confirms this, with many Authorities; and, thinks the Abyssinians have some Affinity with them. It need not be wondred at, that the Posterity of Joctan found a Passage thus out of Asia into Africa. According to Pliny, the Mouth of the Red-Sea where they passed, is but Four Miles over; and Strabo, and Arrian, make it but Seven and an half. Yea, Vartomanus, an Eye Witness, makes it no more than Three. And the Arabian Geographer saies, People may see one another from one Side unto the other.¹³⁴

¹³³ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 22, col. 118–22). “Diklah” (Gen. 10:27; 1 Chron. 1:21) suggests “a palm grove,” but is also the name of a S Arabian tribe. Diodorus Siculus (3.11.2; 16.40.5) cites Artemidorus’s Geography (bk. 8) and refers to the “Phoinikon” (Phoenicians). Strabo (16.4.18). Procopius of Caesarea (c. 500–post 562), Greek historian and assistant to Belisarius in his various campaigns, mentions the infertility of the region in his De bellis (1.19.9) in Procopius (1:181), and so do Agatharchides Cnidus (De mari Erythraeo, sec. 87) and Ptolemy (Geographia 5.17.3; 6.7.21). Pliny (6.32.161) describes the land of the Minaeans as “fertile in palm groves.”

¹³⁴ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 23, col. 122–27). Arabia Troglodytica (Arabia of the Cave-dwellers) is a region on the W coast of the Red Sea. Pliny (6.32.157), Stephanus (144.17), Ptolemy (Tetrabiblos 2.3.71; Geographia 4.7.10), Arrianus (Periplus mari Erythraei 7.1, 25.3). The Greek physician Dioscorides Pedanius (1st c. CE), best know for his book on medicinal drugs, praises the superiority of the Troglodyte myrrh with its pale green transparency and biting scent (De materia medica 1.64.5–7). Aëtius of Amida (fl. c. 530–560), Greek physician in Alexandria and Constantinople, compiled his Tetrabiblon, an encyclopedia of medical knowledge in four sections. He mentions the myrrh of the Troglodytes in his Iatricorum (2.196.80–82; 3.113–117). Ptolemy (Geographia 4.8.27, 30). Hesychius mentions the “Nobai”

Q. Then Abimael?

A. This Name, if you putt it a little more Arabically, is, Abimâl; which is as much as to say, The Father of Mal, or, of the Malites. In Genealogies, tis common for Parents to be denominated from the Children begotten by them. Thus, 1. Chron. 2.49. we read of, Abi-Madmenah, and of Abi-Guibha; and, 1. Chron. 4.3. of, Abi-Etam.

Now Mali is in Theophrastus, one of the Four Metropoles, or, Provinces, of Arabia the Spicy. And the Malites are the same that Eratosthenes calls Minæans. You must know, that the Malites, with an usual Permutation, are by Ptolomy called Manites; and the Manites were one considerable Tribe of the Minæans.

And what if we should say, That Mali is contractly putt for Abimalia? Thus we read of, Sittim, for Abel-Sittim; of Baal-meon, for Beth-baalmeon; of Hermon, for Baal-Hermon; of Tholad, for El-Tholad; of Asan, for Bor-asan or, Bechor-asan; of Nimrim, for Beth-nimrim, or, Beth-nimrah; of Ataroth, for Archi-ataroth; and of Seba, for, Beer-Seba. What we read, Josh. 19.2. Beer-sheba, and Sheba; should be read, Beer-sheba which is Sheba; else the Thirteen Cities, (v. 6) will be Fourteen. Unto these, you may add, Salem, for Jerusalem.¹³⁵

Q. Sheba followes. Now there are no less than Four Sorts of People, whom we find of a Sabæan Original. For One of these, the Name begins with a /ð/ for the rest, with a /ʃ/. Two of these, were of Chams Posterity; Two of Shems. At present we are only concerned with the Offspring of Joctan?¹³⁶

A. Agatharchides, and after him, Diodorus and Artemidorus, and others, of the Ancients, do under the Name of these very Sabæans, comprise all those Four People, which inhabited the Foot of Arabia; the Sabæans properly so called, the Mineans, the Catabanians, and the Chatramotians. But we have only the proper Sabæans now before us. Eratosthenes is the first who distinguished these from the other Inhabitants of the Spicy Arabia, reporting their Metropolis to be Mariaba; which was near the Red Sea, between the Mineans, & the Catabanians. Dionysius Periegetes accordingly places them on the Shore of the Red-Sea; and so does Pris- in his Lexicon A–O (alphab. letter nu, entry 759). Pliny (6.33.163–64; 6.34.170) variously describes the mouth of the Red Sea as 4, 7, 7 ½ or even 12 miles wide. Strabo (16.4.4) makes the straits at Deirê “sixty stadia” (c. 18 miles) wide, and so does Arrianus (Periplus mari Erythraei 25.5–6). See also Vartomannus (Travels 57–58) and the Arabian Geographer Idrisi (Geographia Nubiensis, climatis 1, pars 5).

¹³⁶ This and the subsequent paragraphs are extracted from Bochart’s Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 25–26, col. 128–37). The two Hebrew characters are “samech” and “shin.”

cianus; & so Festus Avienus. And according to Ptolomy, they can't be far from the Bay of Arabia. Their Towns, Murane, and Marme, and Corolia, and Sabatra, does Pliny find bordering on the Red-Sea thereabouts. Theodoret & Procopius makes the Red Sea, to divide them from the Auxumites. Their Metropolis is called, Sabo, or Sabas, in the most ancient Writers; and in Philostorgius among the rest; the very same that others call Mariaba.¹³⁷

The Name of Mariaba, is interpreted by Pliny, to signify, Lords of All. The Verb /רַבָּא/ Rabba, signifies, we know, To bear Rule. And, according to the Arabic Way of making Words /מַרַב/ Marab, is as much as to say, Sedes Dominantium; which is æquivalent unto a, Metropolis. Whence there were several other Mariaba's, in Arabia; Pliny mentions Three in the same Chapter. And Ptolomy mentions diverse, which the Scribes carelessly write, Μαριαμα.¹³⁸

The Name Sheba, or Saba, seems to carry Eminency in the Signification of it. Agatharchides tells us, The Sabæans were so for their very Stature, & their, τὰ σώματα ἀξιολογώτερα. Thus we read, Isa. 45.14. Of, Sabæans Men of Stature. The Arabian Geographer also saies of them, Fastu, Jactantiâ et Superbiâ, reliquos populos superabant. Their Dignity, Number, & Power likewise was eminent; Strabo speaks of them, as, Μέγιστον ἔθνους, and Diodorus calls them, The most Numerous of the Arabian Nations.¹³⁹

And here dwelt, the Queen of Sheba, | that came unto Solomon. The Authorities for this, are not few nor small; and it is much more likely, than the 137 Bochart (130–32). Agatharchides (De mari Erythraeo, sec. 96, 97, 99); Diodorus Siculus (3.46.1); Artemidorus and Eratosthenes are the sources for Strabo's description of the Sabaeans, the "Catabenians," and the metropolis "Mariaba" (Geography 16.4.2, 19). Dionysius Periegetes (Orbis descriptio 958–59). Priscianus Caesariensis (5th–6th c. CE), Latin grammarian of Constantinople, authored several important Latin grammars including Institutiones grammaticae and Institutio de nomine et pronomine et verbo – both works markedly influencing the teaching of Latin in the Middle Ages. Bochart (130) cites the following lines from Priscianus: "Minæique Maris prope Rubri littora vivunt, / Atque Sabae post hos, nec non habitam Catabeni," which can be rendered, "And the Minaei live near the shores of the Red Sea, and the Sabaeans after them, and the Catabeni also dwell there." The Roman poet Rufius Festus Avienus (fl. c. 380 CE), a native of Volsinii (Etruria), in central Italy, translated Dionysius Periegetes's Greek poem Orbis descriptio into Latin and published it as Periegesis seu Descriptio orbis terrarum. Mather here refers to Periegesis (1126–1128). Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.23). Pliny (6.32.154). Theodoret (Quaestiones in libros Regnorum et Paralipomenon) [PG 80. 697, lines 34 ff, 756, lines 3–4]. Procopius Gazaues (Commentarii in Isaiam) [PG 87.2. 2384, lines 9 ff]. The church historian Philostorgius (c. 368–c. 440) of Cappadocia continued Eusebius's Church History with his own Historia ecclesiastica (12 bks.), extant only in Photius's ninth-century epitome. Mather (via Bochart 130) here refers to Saba, the chief city of the Sabaeans (Homerites) in Arabia Felix, as related in Philostorgius's Historia ecclesiastica fragmenta (bk. 3, ch. 4, frag. 4, line 5).

138 Bochart (131). Pliny (6.32.159). For the three different Mariba and Mariaba, see Pliny (6.32.157, 159, 160). Ptolemy mentions "Mariama," in his Geographia (6.7.37, line 7).

139 Agatharchides (De mari Erythraeo 97.7) relates that the Sabaeans were endowed with "magnificent bodies." The Arabian geographer Idrisi (Geographia Nubiensis, climatis 2, pars 6) chimes in with, "They overcame the other peoples by arrogance, boastfulness and pride." Strabo (16.4.19) speaks of them as "a very large tribe." Diodorus Siculus (3.46.1).

Opinion of Josephus, That Meroe was her Countray. The Hebrew Doctors, do some of them tell us, That her Countray was, Jeman; which admirably agrees with our Saviours calling her, The Queen of the South.

We read in Aben-Ezra, concerning the Sabeans, That in his Time, Women Ruled them; and saies Claudian,

Levibus Sabæis

Imperat hic sexus, Reginarumque sub armis
*Barbarie pars magna jacet.*¹⁴⁰

When the Sabeans fell upon Job, the Chaldee Paraphrase tells us, That Lilith was their Queen, & the Head of that Action. When the Saracens were converted, under Valentinian the Emperour, they were under a Queen, whose Name was Mauvia, by whom the Romans were considerably wasted. An Anonymous Geographer, who wrote under Constantius, affirms, of the Saracens thereabouts, – Mulieres his imperare dicuntur. Jemama a Countray of Arabia, near the Persian Sea, had its Name from Jemama, a Queen that once ruled there.¹⁴¹

The Sabeans, much more properly than the Meroites, may have, The Ends of the Earth, assigned them, as in the Words of our Saviour. And the Presents, which the Queen made unto Solomon, are much more agreeable unto the Sabæan Soyl, than unto the Ethiopian.

Bochart learnedly proves, Josephus's Account of this Queen, to be Fabulous, yea, to have no less than Ten Fables in it.¹⁴²

¹⁴¹ Lilith is identified as the queen of the Sabaeans by the Chaldee Paraphrase (Job 1:15), in Walton (3:5). Her name (let’s hope not her actions) alludes to the legend of the Sumerian and Israelite night demon Lilith mentioned in the Talmudic tractates Shabbath (151b), Eiruvin (100b), and Nidah (24b), Midrash Rabbah: Numbers XVI:25, Zohar (1:14b, 27b; 3:19a). Bochart relates (134) that the anonymous geography, written under Roman Emperor Flavius Valerius Constantinus (c. 272–337), was edited by Jacobus Gothofredus, aka. Jacques Godefroy (1587–1657). A famous French jurist and professor of law in Heidelberg and Geneva, Gothofredus drew on the vast library of his friend Claudius Salmasius (1588–1653), the French humanist and philologist, who succeeded Joseph Justus Scaliger at the University of Leiden. The Latin citation from Gothofredus’s Vetus orbis descriptio (1628) confirms that “women are said to have commanded them.” See also his edition of Antiquae historiae (1590–91). The identity of Queen Jemama of Arabia has as yet eluded my searches, but is most likely mentioned in Gothofredus’s Vetus orbis.

¹⁴² For “The Ends of the Earth,” see Deut. 33:17, Acts 13:47, Rom. 10:18. According to 1 Kings 10:10, the queen of Sheba gave to Solomon gold, spices, and precious stones. Bochart (135–37) raises not 10, but 12 objections to Josephus’s version of the queen of Sheba (Antiquities 8.6.5–6).

Q. We will discourse next upon Ophir?

A. That Name, in the Arabic Form, were Auphar; the Signification whereof is, To abound in Riches. Uphre accordingly, in the Feminine Gender, is as much as to say, Very Rich. And it is a wondrous Passage in Eupolemus, concerning David; That he built Ships at Ælan a City of Arabia, and therein sent such as were employ'd about Metals, unto the Island Urphe, an Island in the Red-Sea, rich in Mines of Gold, who brought Gold from thence into Judæa. For Urphe, read Uphre, and correct his Mistake, of David for Solomon.¹⁴³

There was a Land of Ophir, in Arabia, near the Sabæans. This was possessed by the Cassinites, of Ptolomy and Stephanus; the same that are called Gasandes, by Diodorus, and Casandres, by Agatharchides; All which Names carry Stores, Treasures, and Riches in them; even the Name of, Gaza, comes from them. Numberless Hints we have in the Writings of the Ancients, concerning the Gold of this Countrey; t'were endless to cite them. It is enough, that we find, the People knew no other Use of their Gold, but only to make Bracelets of it; for which Cause they exchanged it with their Neighbours, for other Metals, Weight for Weight, according to Diodorus; yea, according to Agatharchides, they gave Thrice the Weight of Gold for Brass, Twice for Iron, Ten Times for Silver.¹⁴⁴

Hence t'was, that the Sabæans, the Neighbours of these rude People, became so Rich; and we sometimes read of their Gold and Wealth, in the Scriptures: [Psal. 72.15. and Isa. 60.6. and Ezek. 27.22. and 1. King. 10.2, 10.] And Aelius Gallus in Pliny, cries them up, for the Plenty of Gold among them.¹⁴⁵

This Gold is called Ophir, from the Name of the Place that afforded it. [See Job. 22.24. and 28.16. and 1. Chron. 29.4.] Tis not probable, that Navigation was in Jobs Time so far improved, as to fetch Gold any farther than hence; or before the Days of Solomon.

¹⁴⁴ Bochart (col. 138). Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.6, line 1); Stephanus (365.14–18); Diodorus Siculus (3.45.6); Agatharchides (De mari Erythraeo 17.13, 96.1–2). Diodorus Siculus (3.45.8) argues that because of the “scarcity of copper and iron” the Alilaei and Gasandi Arabs trade their gold “for equal parts” of these inferior metals, but Agatharchides (De mari Erythraeo 96.17–20) argues they trade “one part of gold for three of copper or two of iron.”

¹⁴⁵ Bochart (140). Aelius Gallus (fl. 1st c. BCE), prefect of Egypt, misled by the legendary wealth of the Nabathaeans, made a disastrous expedition into Arabia (c. 26–c. 24 BCE). Pliny (6.32.160–61).

But then, there was another Ophir in India, whither the Ships of Solomon made their Three-Years-Voyages, & whence they brought Ivory, which these Parts of Arabia afforded not.¹⁴⁶

In what Part of India we shall find this Ophir, is yett unknown to us. The widest Conjecture that can be, is that which places it in Peru. Some seek it in Pegu. Josephus and most of the Ancients place it, in the Aurea Chersonesus, which is now called, Malacca. Others following the Chaldee, place it in Africa, & in Sophala, or (as Origen has it) Sophr there. Bochart is for having it in the Island of Toprobana, which he takes to be the same with the modern Zeilan. All the Characters of Ophir, mention'd in the Books, of the Kings and the Chronicles, he finds exactly agreeing to that Countrey. Paz also [Cant. 5.11.] and Uphaz [Dan. 10.5. and Jer. 10.9.] which is the Name of the Island of Ophir, we may find the Footsteps thereof, in Pasi a Bay, and Phasi a River of Taprobane, mentioned by Ptolomy. And Parvajin, may be a Name lying in Taprobane. Taph signifies A Shore; and Taprobane, may be no more than, The Shore of Parvan. The Phœnician Merchants, might carry the Name of Ophir, to another Countrey, besides that rich one in Arabia, inhabited by the Sons of Joctan. A Countrey æmulating that in its Gold, might very properly run away with its Name.¹⁴⁷

Q. The Next that stands before us, is Chavila?

A. And his Countrey is called, Chaulan, to this very Day; the Metropolis whereof, is, Chaulan-Du-Sohaim. The Chaulanites, in the Land of Tehamah (which was a Part of Arabia the Happy) were Neighbours to the Sabeans, and the Cassinites; and the same with the Carbi, mention'd by Agatharchides, & others;

¹⁴⁶ Archbishop Rabanus Maurus locates Ophir ("Ofyr") in India, in his oft-reprinted De rerum naturis (1627), lib. 12, cap. 4. Nicolaus of Lyra also opts for the Indian Ophir in his annotation on Gen. 10:32, in his Postilla super totam bibliam (1492), vol. 1, n.p. All these and more were most likely guided by Josephus Flavius's Indian Ophir, in Antiquities (8.6.4).

¹⁴⁷ Bochart (140–41). Among those who identified Ophir with the Spanish goldmines in Peru, in S America, are Archbishop Gilbert Génébrard, in his Chronographia (1567), vol. 1; and Manasseh ben Israel, in his Hope of Israel (sec. 38: 43–44). However, both José Acosta (Naturall and Morall History bk. 1, ch. 13, pp. 41–44) and Samuel Purchas (Hakluytus Posthumus [1625], vol. 1, ch. 1, § 8, pp. 66–82) ridicule the idea of Solomon's American Ophir. For "Pegu" on the Malay Peninsula, or in the Molucca Islands (SE Asia) argue Valentinus Benedictus Pererius, in Commentarium et disputationum in Genesim (Gen. 10:32); Giovanni Maffæus, in Historiarum Indicarum (1579), lib. 4; and Sir Walter Raleigh, in History of the World (1614), I.viii.v. 148–49). For Ophir in Africa, i.e., the Egyptian shore of the Red Sea, see Abraham Ortelius's Theatrum orbis terrarum (1606), "Geography of the Holy Writers," p. j; and Samuel Purchase' Hakluyt Posthumus (1625), part 1, bk. 1, ch. 1, § 8, p. 82). Both authors are evidently informed by the Chaldee Paraphrast (1 Kings 10:11–12, 21–22), in Walton (2:458). For Sophala (Sophr, Saphara, see Hugo Grotius's Annotationes (1:148), on the LXX (3 Kings 9:28). Bochart himself (141) opts for "Toprobana," or "Zeilan" (Ceylon), in the Indian Ocean. Finally, Ptolemy variously mentions "Taprobane," in his various places of his Geographia (1.14.7; 7.C.4; 7.4.T; 7.4.1).

which Carbi, are by King Juba in Pliny, called, Cerbani, and by Aelius Gallus called, Cembani. They are described by the Ancients, as a Warlike People; perhaps therefore their Name comes from /כַּרְבִּי/ Kerab, which signifies, War.¹⁴⁸

Q. And so at length, we come to the last of the Sons of Joctan. His Name was Jobab?

A. He was doubtless the Father of the Jobabites, expressly mentioned by Ptolomy, as next neighbours to the Sachalites. Jebab, in Arabic, signifies, a Desert. And that Part of Arabia, which was held by the Jobabites, was little other. For which Cause the Ancients take little Notice of it. And of the Moderns, Belleforestus, makes it all a Wilderness, not affording one City, for Sixty Leagues together.¹⁴⁹

Q. What Light have we, to confirm this Account, about the Scituation of the Joctanites, from the Words of Moses; Their Dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a Mount in the East?¹⁵⁰

A. Mesa, or Musa, or Muza, was a famous Haven on the Red-Sea, whereto the Egyptian and Ethiopic Merchants commonly repaired; going from thence farther Eastward, unto the Sapharites, where they furnished themselves, with all the Spices of Arabia. Look into Ptolomy's Tables, and you'll see the Scituation of it. Look into Pliny, and you'll see this Point of Geography further explained. But none speaks more expressly than Arrianus, who largely treats of Muza, as ἐμπόριον νόμιμον παραθαλασσίον. And of Saphar, as the Metropolis of the Homerites, Twelve dayes Journey distant from it. Muza, it seems, was one of the most famous Marts in the World; All Sorts of Traffick were there managed by all sorts of People. The mention of so noble a City, was enough to Indigitate the Habitation of the Joctanites. Near Saphar which lay Eastward of it, was the long Tract of Mountains, which were called Κλίμαξ, by the Græcians; but were called Saphar, from the Name of the adjoining Metropolis; As there are Numberless Instances in Antiquity, of Renowned Cities, and Neighbouring Mountains, that were ¹⁴⁹ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 29, col. 143). Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.24, line 7). Mather refers to François de Belleforest (1530–83), French historian and cosmographer, whose L'Histoire Universelle du Monde (1570) is probably the work in question.

¹⁵⁰ Mather's answer to this question is extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 30, col. 144–46). The italicized sentence is from Gen. 10:30.

Names-sakes. The Words of Moses therefore, were as much as to say, They dwelt in the Spicy Arabia, where those two Places, Mesa, & Sephar are well-known to the Trading Part of Mankind.¹⁵¹

Saphar was called in after-Ages, Tapharon; and Philostorgius particularly speaks of a Church gathered there by Theophilus Indus.

I will only add, That the Posterity of Joctan, would be thought the only Genuine Arabians. All other Arabians, they call ערב מהערבה / Arabes factos; As we read about בְּהִיּוֹדִים / Judæi facti; [Est. 8.17.] distinguished from true Natural Jewes, whereto may allude our Saviour, (Joh. 1.48. Rev. 2.9. & 3.9.) and His Apostle, (Rom. 2.29. and Gal. 2.15.)¹⁵²

Q. We have now done with Shem. Lett us converse for a while, with his elder Brother Japhet?

A. To the Share of Japhet, there falls no little Part of Asia, and all Europe, the most furnished, & most populous, & for many Ages, the most polite Part of the World.

The old Gracians own'd Japhet for their Father; & made the Name of Japhet therefore, a proverbial Nickname, for a Man that had a Doting old Age come upon him; whereof, you may read Hesychius.

The Sovereignty of Heaven præferr'd Shem the younger Brother, before Japhet, in the Blessing. And the Jewes note it, as a Matter somewhat Notable; That Noah in the Blessing of Japhet, mentions God only by the Name of Elohim; a Name known among the Gentiles; but uses the Name Jehovah in the Blessing of Shem, as intimating a Special Revelation of God, unto some of his Posterity.

In the Blessing of Japhet, God shall enlarge Japhet, every one sees an Allusion to his Name. The like Allusion is very frequent in the Scripture. God ha's remarkably fulfill'd it; in that unto Japhet's Portion pertains all Europe, (so full of People,) Asia the Less, and Media, and Part of Armenia, and Iberia, and Albania, and those vast Northern Regions, inhabited once by the Scythians, and now by the Tartars; | To say nothing, of America, which is likely, was much peopled by

Scythians. The Northern Countreyes, which fell to Japhet, an old Gothic Writer Jornandes well calls, Officinas gentium, et velut vaginas nationum.¹⁵³

Q. Japhet ha's, we find, Seven Sons; only two of them came into Europe, namely; Thiras, and Javan. The former took Possession of its more Northern Regions, the latter of its more Southern. Lett us begin with these!¹⁵⁴

A. Thiras and Θραξ, why may they not be the same? The rather, since in the Alphabet, which the Græcians received from the Phœnicians, the Letter ξ, is in the Place of Samech; And some of the Hebrew Writers, (as Joseph Ben Gorion) write /תִּרְאַסִּיָּה/ Thrasia. Yea, and in Greek too, a Woman coming out of Thracia, is called, Θραῦσσα and Θρηῖσση and Θρεῖσσα, which is not very unlike to Thiras!¹⁵⁵

It is very sure, that among the Ancients, we have Josephus and Eusebius, and Eustathius Antiochenus, and Epiphanius, and Jerom, and the Chaldee Paraphrasts, deriving the Thracians, from this our Thiras. And among the Thracians & their Neighbours, we have several Places, that have the Footsteps of his Name upon them. There was Athyra, a Town, a Bay, & a River, near Byzantium, whereof we read in Pliny, in Mela, and in Ptolomy. There was Tyrastasis, a City of Thrace; mentioned by Pliny, & by Demosthenes. There was Thrasus, a Tract of Land in Thrace, mention'd by Procopius. And there were the Trausi, a People of Thrace, near the Mount Hæmus, mention'd by Herodotus: According to Stephanus, the Greeks called them, Ἀγαθύρσους, which ha's the Name of Thiras in it. We have also Tyras, a City of Mysia, near a River namesake unto it; mention'd by Hero-

153 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 1, col. 147–51). Hesychius Alexandrinus (Lexicon A–O, alphab. letter iota entry 65, line 1). R. Abraham Ibn Ezra's gloss on Gen. 9:26 explains that "The Tetragrammaton is invoked in connection with Shem to honor Shem [the progenitor of the faithful Israelites]. It is not employed with regard to Japheth because he was not his brother's equal" (Commentary on Genesis 1:129). See also Rashi and Ramban (on Gen. 9:26). The Spanish Father Gregorio Garcia was evidently the first scholar to postulate the Scythian origin of the Native Americans, in his Origen de los indios de el nuevo mundo, e Indias occidentals (1607) – a large tome that summarizes the contemporary debate (see L. E. Huddleston's Origins of the American Indians 60–80). Jornandes (Jordanes), a 6th-c. Gothic historian and bishop of Ravenna, is best remembered for his extracts from Cassiodorus Senator's history of the Goths. Often reprinted, Jordanes's De origine actibusque Getarum Getica contributed to the seventeenth-century debate about the origin of the Native Americans. Jordanes (De origine, cap. 3, § 4, line 1) calls the northern countries, "the workshops of the races, and the sheaths, as it were, of the nations."

154 The following paragraphs are extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 2, col. 151–53).

155 Bochart refers to Joseph ben Gorion's Sefer Josippon, which survives in many different versions and translations. Bochart relies on the Latin Venice edition Historiae Iudaicae libri 6 (1544), lib. 2, cap. 8; and on Abraham ben Samuel Zacuto's Liber Iuchasin. The Greek place names transliterate respectively "Thrac," "Thrassa," "Thresse," and "Threissa."

dotus, and Strabo, and others. To which Tearus a River of Thrace, famous for its wholesome Fountains, may be added.¹⁵⁶

Thus, among the most ancient Names in Thrace, there was, Thuras, one of the Names of their God Mars. There was also Tereus, the Son of Mars, the first King of Thrace, among the Poets mightily sung of. Therops also was a King of Thrace; And Teres the King of the Odrysiens.¹⁵⁷

From Javan, why should we not agree with Josephus, and almost all Ancient and Modern Writers, that the Jonians are descended? The Græcians themselves, tis true, tell another Story, about the Original of the Name, Jonians; but a very unlikely one, and such an one probably as their Historians invented out of Necessity, upon their Ignorance of an Higher Antiquity. The Jaon of Homer, differs very little from the Javan of Moses. And under the Name of Jonians are to be comprehended, not only the Athenians, & their Colonies, (as Herodotus, and Heraclides, and Strabo, and Plutarch would have it,) but we find in Hesychius, that the Acheans and Bæotians were to be comprehended under it; and in Homers Hymn, the Delians. Yea, and why not Macedonia too? We are sure, the Sea that washes that, & its Neighbour-Nations, is called, The Jonian Sea. The Chaldee Interpreters also for Javan, do read, Macedonia. Nor was it Athens alone, that afforded those Colonies of Jonians, which under Androclus made a Salley into the Lesser Asia, & built no less than Twelve Cities there, whereof one was Ephesus, and Miletus another; Strabo saies, They were Thebans: Herodotus tells us, They had no less than Four several γλώσσης χαρακτῆρας, Idioms of Speech, among them.¹⁵⁸ In short, well-nigh all the Græcians were called Jonians, as tis confessed Epiphanius (Panarion 39.8.5 in Epiphanius 2:78, line 11) calls him “Theras,” progenitor of the Thracians and of their language; St. Jerome on Gen. 10:2 (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 39); Targum Jonathan ben Uziel and Targum Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 10:2), in Walton (4:17). Pliny (4.11.47) calls Athyras Athidas; Pomponius Mela (De chronographia 2.21); Ptolemy (Geographia 3.11.4, line 3). Both Pliny (4.11.48) and Demosthenes (384–322 BCE), the Athenian orator (Philippi Epistula 3.2), locate “Tiristasis” on the Gallipoli Peninsula near Marmara. Procopius Caesariensis (De aedificiis 4.11.20, Procopius 7:308–09, 311) mentions “Thrasou” and “Thrasarichû,” fortresses in various parts of Thrace; Herodotus (5.4.3). According to Stephanus Byzantius (12.1, 2, 6, 7), the Greeks called them “Agathyrsons.” Finally, Herodotus (4.89.14; 4.90.1) and Strabo (7.3.15–16) mention the Mysian Tyras.

¹⁵⁷ Homer (Iliad 5.507) has much to say about the furious God of War “Thouros Ares.” Both Lucian (Macrobii 10, Works 1:231) and Thucydides (Historiae 2.29.2) mention “Teres,” founder of “the great kingdom of the Odrysians,” an ancient people of Thrace residing between Abdera and the River Ister (Danube).

by the Scholiast upon Aristophanes. Hence Alexander is called, Dan. 8.21. The King of Javan. And the Pillar erected by Theseus upon the Isthmus, declared Jonian, to be extended thither. We read of Javan, Ezek. 27.13. That they traded the Persons of Men, in the Markets of Tyrus. There is a Passage admirably agreeable to This, in Heliodorus; That the Slaves, much in Use, were τὸ μὲν γένος Ἰωνικά, By Nation Ionians. And in Ælian, we find the Wife of Darius, mightily desiring to be served by Jonian Maids; and we find the like in Herodotus. And, which is pretty well akin to this; we find in Martial, a Commendation of Servants under this Character, – Argolicâ missus de gente minister; whereto some other Poets (especially Claudian) make a Consort. The Brass of Javan, is also mention'd in the Words of the Prophet Ezekiel: might be the Euboic Brass, whereof Strabo saies, They reckoned, there was the like no where else in the World. The Iron of Javan mention'd by the Prophet, might be, the Macedonian Iron; whereof the old Anonymous Geographer, published by Gothofredus gives us an Account; and there is a Remembrance, in an Edict of Paulus Æmylius, recited by Livy. Thø we have also found, you know, another Javan, for these Metals, in Arabia.¹⁵⁹

Q. Before we pass to the other Sons of Japhet, we may take notice of his Grandsons by Javan. One Son of Javan, was Elisha?

A. Bochart finds him, upon Peloponnesus; in which Elis was a most ancient and ample Region, Part whereof is in Homer called, Alisium. The Prophet Ezekiel speaks, Ezek. 27.7. of, Purple from the Isles of Elisha. There was great Fishing for the Purple-fish, on Peloponnesus, near the Mouth of Eurota. Pliny, and Pausanias, and Horace, & Statius, and others do celebrate it. It was also found in the Bay

Walton (4:17). According to Pausanias (7.2.8–9), Androclus, son of King Codrus of Athens, led an expedition to colonize Ionia and is to have founded Ephesus, Samos, Miletus, and other cities, which he captured from the Lydians (KP). Strabo (10.1.9); Herodotus (1.57.16).

159 Scholia in Aristophanem. Scholia in Acharnenses (Hypothesis-epigram-scholion sch ach verse 106). For the Pillar of Theseus and its inscription, see Plutarch's Theseus (25.3–4), Plutarch's Lives (1:54–56). Heliodorus (c. 4th c. CE) is the Greek novelist, whose Aethiopica (10 books) relates the story of Theagenes and the priestess Charicleia. Bochart's Greek citation is from Aethiopica (7.19.6, lines 1–3). Aelian (De natura animalium 11.27.1–5) recounts how Atossa, Darius's spouse, incited a war against the Greeks because she desired "Athenian women for her service." Herodotus (3.134.22–26). The Latin citation from Martial (4.66.9) refers to the availability of slaves in the market: "[No youthful page] sent from the Argive race stood by." Claudianus (In Eutropium 2.198–201) likewise extols the spoils of war, "won from an enemy, whose servants are fair captives of Argos or Thessaly, and who have won them slaves from Sparta." Ezek. 27:19. Strabo (10.1.9). Mather refers to Jacques Gothofredus's edition of the anonymous Vetus orbis descriptio (sub Constantio, cap. 34: de Macedonia), which mentions the softness of Macedonian iron and led. Livy (45.29) cites Roman consul Lucius Paullus Aemilus (d. 216 BCE), whose edict proscribed the use of such metals as gold and silver in Macedonia, but permitted the use of iron and brass. For Javan's brass ("bright iron") in Arabia Felix, see Ezek. 27:19.

of Corinth; and the Inhabitants of Phocis were generally such as catch'd it. Here likewise was Hermione, a Town famous for the Purple-fish; on which account we read of the, Purpura Hermionica, in Plutarch. And there were other Places hereabouts, famous for their Purple, which there is no need of particularizing. Only we may add, That they had here a particular Way of Dying Silks with Purple; and Bochart brings good Probabilities, that these admirable Silks may be especially intended, in that Passage of Ezekiel.¹⁶⁰

Q. Chittim was another of them?

A. Josephus will have the Chittians, to be the Cyprians; because on Cyprus, he finds the famous Town of Citium; and many of the Ancients follow him.¹⁶¹

Others have had other Conjectures, all which I omit, that I may make room for my Bochart's; which is, That the Chittim, are the Italians. It is not like, they should be the Macedonians, as the first Book of the Maccabees intimates; for that would confound Chittim with Javan. But it is clear, That in the Eleventh Chapter of Daniel, The Ships of Chittim, are the Ships of the Romans, under Cajus Popilius, thro' the Dread whereof Antiochus returned from his Egyptian Expedition, Re infectâ. And in the Prophecy of Balaam, the Generality of Interpreters, by Chittim do understand the Romans. Yea, both the Jerusalem, and Jonathans Targum, do read it, Lombardy: which would argue, That those Targums are not near so ancient, as the Jewes take them to be; but that they were made after the Longobards possess'd Italy, & so after, the Year 570. What can you make of this?¹⁶²

¹⁶² Bochart (160). 1 Macc. 8:5. Dan. 11:30. Gaius Popilius Laenas (fl. 175–158 BCE), Roman praetor and later consul, was instrumental in forcing the Seleucid King Antiochus IV Epiphanes (c. 215–164 BCE) to pull his troops out of Egypt (168 BCE) and thus return home “Re infectâ”; i.e., “without accomplishing anything.” Balaam's prophecy (Num. 24:24) foretells that ships from Chittim will afflict Asher and Eber. Both Ibn Ezra (on Num. 24:24, Dan. 2:39) and Rashi (Dan. 11:30) identify Chittim with the Roman Empire, even though Ibn Ezra admits that “Kittim” may also signify Greece as the third beast (Dan. 2:39). See also Saadiah Gaon – all in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Daniel, and in Ibn Ezra's Commentary: Numbers (4:212). The Targum Hierosolymitanum (Num. 24:24) identifies “Kittim” as “Liburnicis,” whereas the Targum Jonathan Ben Uziel identifies it as “Lambarnia” (Walton 4:290). Since the Germanic tribe of the Longobards did not settle N Italy until the middle of the sixth century CE, Mather (via Bochart) here dates the composition of these Targums to the post-Diaspora period. For

The Isles of Chittim, Ezek. 27.6. the Chaldee renders, The Province of Apulia. The Vulgar Latin hath it, The Isles of Italy. The Prophet is there speaking of the Tyrian Vessels, the Ivory Benches whereof, were made with Box-wood, (so Bochart reads it,) brought from the Islands of Italy; where Corsica especially, as Pliny assures us, was an Island famous for Box-wood. And Theophrastus, and Diodorus, admire the Box-trees of that Island. Nothing was better to afford Thwarts, or Seats, for the Tyrian Galleyes; if it were only for the Breadth of the Plank. And the Phœnicians were once Commanders of this Island. The Text which we render, The Company of Ashurites have made thy Benches of Ivory, brought out of the Isles of Chittim; should be rendred, They have wrought with Ivory thy Benches of Boxwood brought out of the Isles of Chittim.¹⁶³

In Latium we particularly find the City Κετία, Cetia, mentioned by Halicarnasseus, one of the Cities taken by Coriolanus, which Plutarch tells us, were populous ones. And in Stephanus we find, Εχέτια, Echetia, a City of Italy, the same, as it should seem with Echetia, famous among the Volscians, mention'd by Livy, and others. And near Cumæ, we find the River Cetus, where Aristotle tells us, Plants were petrified; the same no doubt, that is called Silarus, in Strabo, & others.¹⁶⁴

Bochart also thinks, that Cocinthus, the last Promontory and Boundary of Italy, mention'd by Polybius; was as much as to say חֹק כִּתִּים / Chok Citthim, The Bounds of the Chittæans. Yea, some of the Ancients assert, That Citians, or, Cetians was the very Appellation of the old Romans. So Eusebius, so Cedrenus, so Suidas, and so the Chronicon Alexandrinum. Yea, what will you say, if we find the very Name of Latines, in Chittim. The Name of Latine, according to Herodian, and Eutropius, was, à Latendo; because that Saturn, (Latuit) lay Hid there.¹⁶⁵

Mather's rankings of the various Targums, see his Essay X: Chaldæns. Or, some Account of the Jewish Targums, in Appendix (following Revelation).

¹⁶⁵ Bochart (159). Polybius Megalopolitanus (Historiae 2.14.5, lines 4–5). Bochart (or the printer’s devil) errs in listing “Eusebius” in this context. Not Eusebius, but the Chronographer Georgius Syncellus (Ecloga chronographia, p. 54, line 8) asserts that the Kitians were called Latini, who are the progenitors of the Romans. Georgius Cedrenus (Compendium historiarum, 1:245, lines 13–18), and more specifically the Antiochian chronographer of Syria Joannes Malalas Antiochenus (c. 480–c. 570), author of Chronographia (p. 162, lines 4–8), is the source

So saies Ovid;

Et dicta est Latium Terra Latente Deo.

So Virgil;

Latiumque vocari

Maluit, his quoniam latuisset tutus in oris.

This Fable we may lay aside; and now consider Bocharts Conjecture. The Sense of the Hebrew /כִּיִּים/ Chittim, is to be Illustrated from the Arabic Dialect, which is a Branch of the Hebrew Tongue; where, Chezim, signifies Lying Hid. That Place accordingly, in Jer. 2.22. should be rendred, Thy Iniquity is lying Hid before me.¹⁶⁶

[262v] But how comes that Passage, about the Destruction of Tyrus, by Nebuchadnezzar? Isa. 23.1. From the Land of Chittim it is reveled to them. Interpreters have rack'd their Wits upon that Subject. I will not so much as recite any of their Opinions, tho' some of them are witty enough. We will only observe, That Solomon Jarchi ha's given us a very probable Intimation, That not the Chiteans, but the Chuteans are here intended. The Double Jod here used, /כִּיִּים/ is enough to distinguish this Chittijim, from the Chittim whereof we have been all this while Discoursing. Now these Chuteans, were the same | with the Cissij, the Inhabitants of Susiana, at the East of Babylon. And now, tis no Wonder, that the Divine Oracle threatens them with Mischief out of that Quarter. Nor that it is foretold, they should have no Rest, after they should be carried into the Land of the Chuteans; for God had sett it to be Ruined; which was by Cyrus quickly accomplished.¹⁶⁷

There ha's been an old Puzzle, about the old Name of Italy, which was, Camesene. No Man ever yett gave a probable Account of it. Bochart, after all, for Bochart's Greek excerpt to which Mather here alludes. Chronicon Alexandrinum (Chronicon Pascale, p. 47, lines 18–19); Suda (Lexicon, alphab. letter lambda, entry 144, lines 1–3). Herodianus (Ab excessu divi Marci 1.16.1, lines 8–9) relates the old tale how Zeus expelled his father Saturn (Kronos), who went into hiding in Latium (Italy), which designation is derived from the Greek "lathein," suggesting "to hide" (1.16.1–2). In his Breviarium ab urbe condita (1.2), the Roman historian Eutropius (fl. 4th c. CE) attributes the designation "Rome" to Romulus, its founder. However, no etymological origin is given for the name "Latin" or "Saturn." Perhaps Mather (via Bochart) was thinking of the anonymous Origo Gentis Romanae (1.1–5, 3.8), where "Saturn is thought to have come first to Italy"; the old "King Latinus" is to have ruled over the region when Virgil's Trojan warriors arrived in Italy.

166 Bochart (159). The Latin citation from Ovid (Fasti 1.238) reads "and the country was called Latium from the hiding of the God." Finally, Virgil (Aeneid 8.323) chimes in with "that the land be called Latium, since in these borders he had found a safe hiding-place."

167 Bochart (160–61). Solomon Jarchi (R' Shlomo Yitschaki), better known by his acronym RASHI, in his commentary on Isa. 23:1, 12, distinguishes between Cyprus and Babylon, but does not appear to comment on the significance between the double jod of כִּיִּים [Kittim] (Isa. 23:12) and the single jod of כִּיִּים [Kittim] (Isa. 23:1). See also Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.6.1). Cyrus, the Medo-Persian ruler, conquered Babylon (c. 538 BCE) and initiated the release of the Jews from their captivity (Ezra 1:1).

thinks, That /כַּמָּס/ Camas, being in the Hebrew, To Hide; (of the same Import, with Chittim;) Camesene too may be no more than Latium.¹⁶⁸

Q. Dodanim was another?

A. But Bochart saies, (and proves it from 1. Chron. 1.7.) That the ancient Reading was not with /דָּ/ but with /רָ/ Rodanim. The Greek Interpreters indeed, apprehend the Rhodians, inhabiting the Island Rhodes, to be of this Original. But Bochart shewes, That the Name of Rhodes belonging to that Island, was later than the Time of Moses; (and some old Writers tell us, t'was from the Multitude of Roses growing upon it:) That another Name, (Yea, Nine at least,) formerly belonged unto that Island: And that the Island itself was then hardly extant; For according to Ammianus, and Pliny, and Heraclides and Pindar, it was of old, wholly hidden under the Sea.¹⁶⁹

The Rodanim, or the Rodanites therefore, according to him, came into France, where the famous River, Rhodanus, or the Rhosne, still retains a Remembrance of them. And he sufficiently confutes the Conjecture of Pliny, and of Jerom, That the River took its Name, from a Colony of People retiring thither, from the Island of Rhodes.¹⁷⁰

Upon that River stood Rhodanusia, a City of the Marseillians, mentioned by Marcianus Heracleota, and by Stephanus, and by Sidonius Apollinaris. And the Countrey thereabouts was called, Rhodanusia, and the People, Rhodanenses, as you find in Ireneus. And what shall we think of the City Roane, at this day so considerable.¹⁷¹

¹⁷⁰ Bochart (col. 162–63). “Rhosne” is an archaic spelling of Rhône, a river in SE France. Pliny (3.4.33); St. Jerome (Commentaria in Epistolam ad Galatas, Praefatio, lib. 2) [PL 26. 354C].

¹⁷¹ Bochart (163). Bochart’s reference to the little-known Graeco-Roman geographer Marcianus Heracleota, aka. Heracleensis (fl. 3rd–4th c. CE) seems erroneous (KP). Bochart’s Greek citation (omitted by Mather) is now ascribed to the geographer Pseudo-Scymnus (Ad Nicomedem regem, vv. 1–980, lines 207–10), ostensibly Scymnus of Chios (2nd c. BCE), to whom fragments of a geographical treatise on Greek settlements on the Mediterranean coast have been attributed. Stephanus Byzantius (546.1–2); Sidonius Apollinaris, aka. Gaius Sollius Modestus Apollinaris Sidonius (c. 430–c. 490), bishop of Clermont (Gaul), mentions the Gallic settlement Rhodanusia, i.e., Lyon (Epistolae, lib. 1, ep. 5, sec. 2) [PL 58. 452–455B]. Ireneus

The Name Rodanim here is of a Plural Termination. And the Intention of Moses may be, that the Rhodanians, or the Gauls, were of the Posterity of Javan. Bochart thinks, That they were a Red-Hair'd People; and Rodanim carries Red in the Signification of it, as he proves out of the Arabick. Which agrees with what Livy saies, Gallis promissæ et rutilatæ comæ. And Virgil, Aurea casaries ollis, atque aurea vestis.

And, Lucan,

— pars flavos gerit altera crines.

And Silius, and Martial, and Claudian, And Diodorus, and others. Yea, Pliny tells of a Sort of Soap, made of Suet and Ashes, invented among them, to tinge their Hair with a Red Colour, they so much affected it. And in the Tactics of Urbicius, The Galls are usually called, τὰ ξανθὰ ἔθνη, The Yellow Nations.¹⁷²

Q. Tarsis another?

A. To some of the Ancients, he appears the Original of the Cilician Tarsus, to some of Carthage. But Eusebius more pleases my Bochart, than any of the rest; who saies; Θαρσεῖς ἐξ οὗ Ἰβηρες. The Iberians, or Spaniards are from him.¹⁷³

This is very sure; The Phœnicians, in Ages not much later than that of Moses, did sail into Spain. Yea, Part of the Dispossess'd Canaanites fled thither, as Part of them did into Bœotia, Part into Africa. Procopius informs us of the Pillars to be seen about Tangier, declaring themselves to be erected, by those that fled from the Face of Joshua the Robber. And not far from hence was the Temple (Adversus haereses 1.7.6, lines 1–2) and Against Heresies (1.13.7), in ANF (1:336). Roanne (rather than Roane) is a French provincial town to the NW of Lyon.

at Cadiz, where Hercules was worshipped as Appian, and Arrian, and Diodorus tell us, after the Phœnician fashion.¹⁷⁴

In Strabo we have many things about the Opulency of Spain; especially near the Straits; whereof Homer having some Inkling, did there place his Elysian Fields, and the Isles of the Blessed. It is confessed by Strabo, that the principal Places hereabouts, were held by Phœnicians. And the Names of the principal Places there, Bochart with much Curiosity, finds to be of a Phœnician Original. Among the rest, I take notice of Carthage, (for such City there was in Spain.) which Bochart saies, in the Phœnician was, Carthada, which was as much as to say, καὶνὴ πόλις, or, New-town. Solinus accordingly saies, Carthadam dixit, quod Phœnicum ore exprimit Novam Civitatem; and Eustathius and Stephanus confirm the Etymology. Spain itself, had its Name from שַׁפָּן Saphan, A Coney: q.d. Cuniculosa Regio; the Phœnicians finding the Countrey quite over-run with that Creature; so that in Augustus's Time, the Souldiers were forced for to petition for Help against `em.¹⁷⁵

The Name Iberia, doubtless comes from the Hebrew, עֵבֶר Eber, or the Chaldee, Ibra, which signifies, A Passing over to what is beyond. It is of a Phœnician Extract. For That Phrase, The Ends of the Earth, the Syriac uses this very Word. The Spaniards were accounted then to live there. Here the Ancients found, according to Strabo, τέρμονας τῆς οἰκουμένης, The Bounds of the Habitable World.¹⁷⁶

| A World of Authors tell us, of the Mines then in Spain, with the Treasures [263r] whereof, the Phœnicians in their Travels thither enriched themselves. Of the Silver, & Brass, & matchless Iron there, we are told by Strabo; of the Gold and Silver, by Stephanus; & by Diodorus; of the Tin there, & the Lead, as well as the former Metals, by Mela, and Pliny. The cunning Phœnicians knew how to enrich 174 Procopius Caesariensis (De bellis 4.10.20–23, Procopius 2:289), Appianus (Iberica 1.2, 11.65, Roman History 1:143, 239), Flavius Arrianus (Alexandri anabasis 2.16.2–7), Diodorus Siculus (5.20.2).

175 Bochart (167). Strabo (3.2.13); Homer (Odyssey 4.562–65) places the immortals on “the Elysian plain” at “the ends of the earth” (i.e., Straits of Gibraltar). According to Bochart, “Kaine polis” (“New-town”), is derived from the Greek “Karxedon” and is by the Phœnicians called “Karthada”; for this information Bochart relies on Ptolemy (Geographia 4.5.72, line 5), with supporting evidence from Julius Solinus (De mirabilibus mundi 28, § 1), from Archbishop Eustathius of Thessalonica (Commentarium in Dionysii periegetae 195.47–50), and from Stephanus Byzantius (363.7–14). Solinus argues in his De mirabilibus mundi (28, § 1) that “he calls it Carthada, which the Phœnicians call New-town.” The etymological derivation of “Spain” (Hispania) from the Hebrew שַׁפָּן (shaphan) [Strong’s # 8227, 8226], signifying “to conceal” and “rock-rabbit” is not supported by Gerard Vossius (De Theologia Gentili, lib. 1, cap. 33, p. 252), who argues that “Hispania” may be derived from “Pana,” the name of an Iberian tribe. The story of the “Cuniculosa Regio,” or “a region rich in rabbits,” for which Spain and the Balearic islands were known, is related by Pliny (8.81.217–18). Pliny reports that the islands of Mallorca and Menorca were so overrun with coney burrowing underground that soldiers had to petition Augustus for help.

themselves in such a Place, and they did it, until, as Aristotle affirms, Their very Anchors were made of Silver.¹⁷⁷

Well, In that Part of Spain, which was most frequented by the Tyrians, we find a Tartessus; which is called by the Name of Tarsis, in that Passage, Ezek. 27.12. Tarshish was thy Merchant; with Silver, Iron, Tin, and Lead, they traded in thy Fairs. A City of this Name, lay not far from Cadiz, if it were not Itt. In Aristotle, in Strabo, in Pausanias, and in Avienus, we find a Place having the Name of Tartessus, between the two Mouths of the River Bætis. And Strabo calls the Countrey thereabouts, Tartessis. The Phœnicians probably altered the Hebrew Name Tarsis, into That; which it was but Natural for them to do. Tho' indeed, Polybius would make one think, that the Phœnicians made no more of it, than Ταρσηῖος, which, you are sensible, how it becomes Ταρσειώτης.¹⁷⁸

The Phœnicians finding the same Commodities, at another Place, in the East-Indies, [2. Chron. 20.36, 37.] near to Taprobana, transferred the Name of Tarsis unto that also.¹⁷⁹

Q. Gomer another?

A. Bochart apprehends the Land of Gomer to be (not in Africa, as the Chaldee will have it, but) Phrygia; where he finds the, Regio κατακεκαυμένη, or, The Burnt Countrey, mention'd by Hesychius, and by Diodorus. It lies about the Cayster and the Meander, and the City Philadelphia, where we find, according to Strabo, the whole Soyl, fragil & friable, & full of Salt, and easily sett on fire. It seems as if burnt into Ashes and Coals, by Lightning from Heaven; and agrees therefore, with the Name of Gomer; for the Hebrew גָּמַר Gamar, is, To consume with Fire. And the Name Phrygia, is of the same Signification; for, φρῦγεν, is, To Burn. Hence, this was the Name of the Place, where Hercules was Burnt, as Eustathius & others intimate. Josephus's making the Gomerites, to be the Galatians, agrees well enough, with this Conjecture.¹⁸⁰

¹⁷⁹ Bochart (169–71) thus identifies 3 cities by the name Tarshish, Tarsus, or Taprobana – the Iberian, Cilician, and the East-Indian (Ceylon and Sumatra). The latter location is here associated with Ophir, the legendary goldmines to which Solomon sent his fleet from Esion-Geber (1 Kings 9:28, 10:11, 22:48, 2 Chron. 8:18). For the Sumatran "Taprobana," see Sebastian Münster's Cosmographia Universalis (1544).

Q. Well, but the Sons of Gomer must be spoke with, before we go any further. The first of these is Ashkenaz?

A. We will not puzzle ourselves, with the Remoter Conjectures of others. It shall be enough to us, that our Bochart, agrees with those many, who place Askenaz, in Bithynia, in which there is a famous Bay, and Lake and River, all bearing the Name of Ascanius; or, in the Lesser Phrygia, in which there is a Countrey, and a City, and an Island, all wearing the Name of Ascania. From the Greater Phrygia, a Colony was issued forth by Askenaz, into the Lesser, even as far as Pontus; where the Greeks turned the Name of Askenaz, into Ἀξένοος [Inhospitable,] which they changed at length, into Ἐυξένοος, of the Just Contrary Signification, to avoid the Scandal. You will find that in Pindar, and Apollonius, & the Scholiasts upon them, which will sufficiently confirm this Account of the Names. Diodorus, and, Apollodorus, and Ovid, and Pliny, & Lucian, all tell us, That the Region was called, Axenus, for the barbarous Inhospitability of the Scythian Inhabitants. And yett, Homer, and Æschylus, and Cherilus, and Ephorus, and Strabo, and others, do so abundantly vindicate the Inhabitants of Pontus, from that Character, that our Original for the Name of Axenus, is much more allowable.¹⁸¹

We read, Jer. 51.27. about, The Kingdomes of Askenaz. It is very sure, There were People of the Lesser Phrygia, accompanying Cyrus, in his Expedition against Babylon. Xenophon expressly mentions, the Sending of Hystaspes, with an Army, to Phrygia upon the Hellespont; and Hystaspes his carrying from thence, many Phrygians ἵππείας καὶ πελταστὰς, Equites et Scutatos, into the Babylonian Expedition.¹⁸²

Strabo (12.8.17–18), Eustathius (Commentarium in Dionysii 809.16–18), and Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 1.6.1).

181 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 9, col. 171–74). Bochart here relies on Strabo (7.3.7). The Black Sea (Euxine Sea) was called “Inhospitable Sea” (Ἀξένοος), but also “Hospitable Sea” (Ἐυξένοος). Pindar (Pythian Odes 4.203–4); Scholia in Apollonium Rhodium (Scholia in Apollonii Rhodii Argonautica 174.6–8); Diodorus Siculus (4.40.4); Apollodorus Atheniensis (Fragmenta 159, lines 20–25) as extant in Strabo (7.3.6); Ovid (Tristia 3.13.27–28, 4.4.56); Pliny (6.1.1); Lucian (Toxaris 3.16; Works 5:106) – Ἀξένοος (“inhospitable”) and Ἐυξένοος (“hospitable”), in Scholia Graeca in Homeri Iliadem (Iliad 9.360, scholion 4); Aeschylus Atheniensis (Prometheus vincitus 710–15; Fragmenta, fragm. 198, line 1). Bochart also enlists a passage (Fragmenta epica, fragm. 5, lines 1–3) from the Greek epic poet Choerilus Samius (late 5th c. BCE), best remembered for his Persica, and from the Greek historian Ephorus Cumaeus (c. 405–330 BCE), whose Historia (30 books) is extant only in fragments. Bochart’s reference to Ephorus is to Fragmenta (Jacoby #F 2a, 70, F, fragm. 42, lines 10–11); Strabo (7.3.6).

182 Bochart (174). Xenophon’s semi-historical Cyropedia (7.4.8–12) relates how Hystaspes, general of Cyrus the Great (fl. 557–539 BCE), led a mixed multitude of troops into Babylonia. According to Cyropedia (7.4.11, line 1), Hystaspes pressed many Phrygian “horsemen and peltasts [light infantry]” into his military expedition.

Q. Another Son of Gomer, was Riphat?

A. Here Bochart chooses to follow Josephus, who takes the Paphlagonians to be the Offspring of Riphat; a People of Asia the Less, bordering on the Phrygians of Pontus.

There is Cause to think, that the Name Riphat, was Diphat; for so tis written by Ezra, and the Two Letters, /ר/ and /ד/ are, we know, easily confounded. Now, agreeable hereto, Ptolomy gives us, Tobata, as a City in Paphlagonia; and Strabo finds the Name of Tibius there; and Stephanus, a Mountain, whose Name was Tibion.¹⁸³

[264v] But if we keep the Name of Riphat, we shall be accommodated not far off, | with Rhebas, a River of Bithynia, running into the Pontus, near Paphlagonia. It is mentioned by Apollonius, and by Orpheus, and by Arrian, and by Pliny, (who saies, That some called it, Rhesus,) and by Dionysius. Yea, Stephanus gives us a Countrey hereabouts, called Rhebas; & the People, Rhebeans, and Rhebantians. These were Bithynians, rather than Paphlagonians.¹⁸⁴

Q. Togarmah is the last?

A. It is clear, from the Prophecies of Ezekiel, [ch. 38.6. and 27.14.] that the Countrey of Togarmah, lay to the Northward of Judea; and that it afforded excellent Horses and Mules, unto the Marketts of Tyre. The Chaldee, and the Talmud, by Togarmah, understand Germany; and many Moderns, Turcomania, Tartaria, and Scythia. Bochart thinks them too Remote for the Marketts of Tyre; besides, that he proves, there are no Mules in the cold Climate of Scythia, as tis observed by Strabo, and Ælian, and Herodotus. He therefore falls in with an Hint, which the Greek Scholiast ha's upon the Thirty Eighth of Ezekiel; That Cappadocia, a Countrey that lies near Phrygia, the land of Gomer, was the Seat of Togarmah; a Countrey indeed famous for Horses and Mules; For Horses, according to Solinus, Terra illa ante alias altrix Equorum; and unto like Purpose, we are informed by Isidore, by Dionysius Periegetes, by Oppian, by Claudian, and by Philostorgius a most ancient Cappadocian Writer. For Mules, you find Homer fetching them, from Heneta, an eminent City of Cappadocia; and Plutarch and

Pliny have Passages of the like Import, and Strabo saies, the Cappadocians annually paid unto the Persians, Two Thousand Mules.¹⁸⁵

Thogarma the Greeks write constantly Θόργαμα or Τόργαμα. Might not the Name of Trogmians, and of Trocmians, thence come to be putt upon those Galatians, who settled in Cappadocia? By that Name Strabo mentions them; and so does Polybius, and so does Tully (in his Book, De Divinatione,) and so does Memnon, an old Writer of the Pontic Affayrs, in Photius. In Stephanus, they have the Name of Τροκμήνοι. And in the Council of Calcedon, their Bishop is called, The Bishop of the Trocmadians.¹⁸⁶

Q. Lett us pass now to Two other sons of Japheth, namely, Tubal and Mesech, which not only Moses and Ezra, but also Ezekiel still joins together; and therefore we may do so too?

A. From these two Bochart supposes to proceed the Moschi, and the Tibareni; whom the Greek Writers also, (as Herodotus,) do still join together. The Greeks, tis well-known, turn Mesech into Mosoch; and their turning Tubal, into Tibar, (and Eusebius and Strabo, we know, mention the Tibari,) need not scandalize us, while we see them write Φιχώρ, for Phicol, and Σαρὰδ for Saled, and Βελιάρ, for Belial.¹⁸⁷

¹⁸⁵ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 11, col. 175–79). Both the Chaldee Targum Jonathan ben Uziel and the Targum Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 10:3) associate Togarmah with Germany, in Walton (4:17), and so does the Talmudic tractate Yoma (10a). Bochart (178), Strabo (7.3.18), and Herodotus (4.28.16–19) claim that Scythia is too cold for either mules or asses even though these beasts of burden can stand the cold in the rest of the world; however, no such references appear in Claudius Aelianus, except for the horned asses of Scythia, whose horns are the only vessels capable of carrying water from the River Styx (De natura animalium 10.40). Bochart's "Greek Scholiast" on Ezek. 38 so far has escaped my searches. According to Caius Julius Solinus (De mirabilibus mundi, cap. 46, § 2), "Mother Earth nurtured horses in former times." For the beauty of the Cappadocian horses, see Isidore Pelusiota (Epistolae), Dionysius Periegetis (Orbis description 973–74), Oppianus Apamensis (Cynegetica 1.197, 201), Claudius Claudianus (In Rufinum 2.30–31), Philostorgius (Historia ecclesiastica, bk. 3, ch. 4, fragm. 4, lines 29–33), Homer (Iliad 2.852), Pliny (8.69.173), and Strabo (11.13.8).

The Moschi, are not the same with the Mossynians, or Mossynæcians, as was imagined by Stuckius. They Inhabited the Moschian Mountains, which divide Iberia from Armenia, and both from Colchis; as you may learn from Strabo, and Mela, and Pliny, and Ptolomy, if you lay them together. The Tibareni lay nearer to Cotyorus, a Place famous on the Coast of Pontus. And between the Moschi, and them, according to the ancient Writers, (especially Xenophon, who travelled those Countreys,) there lay Six or Seven fierce Nations of other People. Nevertheless, in Xerxes's Forces, they had not only the same Arms, but the same Leaders too. Wherefore, tis probable, that the Hebrew Names of Mesech, and of Tubal, took in likewise all the People, that lay between the Moschians, and the Tibarenes. There are several Passages, both in Strabo and in Ptolomy, to countenance this Conjecture.¹⁸⁸

Well; we read about the Market of Tyre, Ezek. 27.13. Tubal & Meshech, they were thy Merchants; they traded the Persons of Men, and Vessels of Brass, in thy Markett. The People in the Regions of Pontus, were – ad Servitutem nati. Both Polybius and Philostratus tell us, That very great Numbers of Slaves, were continually exported from thence. And Cappadocia, whereof Tibarenia was a Part, yeelded the greatest Numbers of them; as many Passages in Cicero, in Horace, and Persius, and Martial, intimate. Lucullus with his Romans, found them, there to be sold for Four Drachms apiece. Yea, Strabo, their Countreymen, saies, They deprecated Liberty, οὐ γὰρ δύνασθαι φέρειν αὐτὴν ἔφασαν, *For they said, they were not able to bear it.*¹⁸⁹ The Mossynæcians were Part of the Tybarenes; and their Brass is renowned in Aristotle. And the Brass of Iberia, which was inhabited by the Moschians, is renowned in Chalcondylas, as the best in the World. But lett it be remembred, That the Hebrew Word, which we render Brass, does also signify Iron. [See Jud. 16.21. and, Lam. 3.7. The Hebrewes thus render the Word, Lev. 26.19. and Job. 6.12. and Isa. 48.4.] Now, who knowes not, that the most celin the LXX (Gen. 21:22), “Sarad” in the LXX (2 Kings 23:33), and “Beliar” in the Greek NT (2 Cor. 6:15).

ebreated Artists in all Iron-Works, were among the Tibarenes. There was a whole People there, known by the Name of Chalybes; (whence the Name | Chalybs, for Steel,) who were the great Inventors of Smithery, as Ammian and Arrian have observ'd unto us, and old Callimachus intimates it. Xenophon represents them therefore, as a very Terrible People; and our Prophet Ezekiel [ch. 32.26.] doth so too: And their Fierceness is Terribly sett out, by Æschylus, and Eusebius; & Strabo saies, They are Ἀγριοὶ τέλεως, Plane feri.¹⁹⁰ [265r]

Indeed the Psalmist seems to speak of Meshech, as being in or near the Arabian Kedar; [Psal. 120.5.] But Bochart shewes, That Meshech there, is not a Name of Place, but of Time; The Text should be rendred; I sojourn along Time; and so Aquila renders it, ἐν μακρισμῷ. The Word /מִשְׁך/ is, To Protract. Compare, Ezek. 12.25. and Prov. 13.12.¹⁹¹

Q. Another Son of Japhet, was Magog?¹⁹²

A. And Bochart agrees with Josephus, and Eustathius, and Jerom, and Theodoret, that he was the Father of the Scythians. Wee read, Ezek. 38.2. Sett thy Face against Gog, the Land of Magog, the chief Prince of Meshech and Tubal. The Chaldee, and Aquila, and Jerom, read it, The Prince of the Head, (or, Beginning) of Meshech and Tubal. This intimates, that Gog, the Inhabitant of Magog, did command in those Places, where the Land of Meshech & of Tubal began. It is well-known, That /מִשְׁך/ not only signifies, the Top of a Thing, but also the Beginning of it. Thus, 1. Chron. 14.15. it should not be, In the Tops of the Mulberry Trees, but, At the Beginnings of them. Gilead is called, Caput Lebani, because Lebanon Begins, where Gilead Ends. Thus here, where the Land of Meshech and Tubal ended, there Magog began; and, vice versâ, the Land of Meshech took it{s} beginning, where Magog ended; They joined.¹⁹³ Thus, Magog, the Land of Gog, was Part of ¹⁹¹ Bochart (184–85). Bochart is mistaken in identifying Aquila, the translator of the LXX, as the source for the Greek “en makrismo” (“for an extended time”). The Greek passage appears in Joannes Chrysostom’s Expositiones in Psalmos [PG 55. 341, line 37]. The Hebrew verb “mashak” [Strong’s # 4900] suggests “to prolong,” or “to protract.”

Scythia, about Caucasus, which the Cholchians and Armenians, whose Dialect was Half-Chaldee, called, /גִּגְ חֶסֶן/ Gog-chasan, the Fence, or Font; or Mound of Gog; whence the Greeks called it Καύκασος. And the same Greeks, kept the Name of Gog, in Γωγαρήνη, Gogarene, a Part of Iberia, beyond the River Cyrus, mention'd by Strabo. But then, the Septuagint, and Symmachus and Theodotian, read it, The Prince of Rhos, Meshech, and Tubal. Why may not Rhos more immediately be, the River Araxis, in Armenia, which the Nubian Geographer expressly calls Rhos? Now Josephus Ben-Gorion tells us, That a People call'd, Rhossi, lived hereabouts. The Paraphrase then on the Text before us, will be; "Sett thyself to prophesy with Courage, against the King of the Scythians, in the Land of Magog, or Scythia near Caucasus; the Prince, of Armenia Araxena, and of Armenia Moschica, and of Armenia Tibarenia, all under the Scythian Dominion." Both Strabo, and Plutarch, will show you, That their Dominion once extended so far. Bochart adds, That it is very like{ly}, the modern Russians and Muscovites are descended from the Rhos and Meshech, that were seated here; famous Nations of the European Scythia. It is very agreeable, That the Prophet here sett's the Scythians on Horse-back, and makes Archers of them. Hippocrates mentions the Scythians, as a Gouty People, etc. from their being alwayes on Horse-back. And their Name, with Herodotus and Lucian, was that of Hippotoxotæ, or, Archers on Horseback; to be which, they were exquisitely instructed from their Infancy. Yea, They were called, in their own Tongue, Arimaspi, or, An One-Eyed People, because of their continual keeping One Eye winking, to take Aim, with their Arrowes. Many other Passages, we find in Authors to this Purpose; too many & needless to be recited.¹⁹⁴

And whereas we find among them, [Ezek. 38.4.] Horsemen, all of them cloathed with all sorts of Armour; we find in Lucian, a mention of Scythians, whom Toxaris calls, ἱππέας αὐτοτελείς, Equites ad plenum Instructos. Tho' Bochart rather takes Them, to be, Voluntiers, who bore their own Charges.¹⁹⁵

Q. We are concerned with but one more, namely, Madaï; and then we have done with the Sons of Japhet?¹⁹⁶

196 Gen. 10:2. The subsequent paragraphs are from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 14, col. 193–98).

A. All the World confesses, the famous Nation of the Medes to be descended from him; Here is no Difficulty. And the Scituation of the ancient Media, is well-known to all the World; tho' its Name is now swallow'd up, in such as it is not easy to come at.

Media, is by Ezra, (1. Chron. 5.26.) called, Hara. And Media was called Aria by the Greeks; the Medes were called, Arians; as you find in Herodotus, & in Pausanias. In Xenophon also we read of the Thamnerians; a Name composed of Aria, and of Theman, which signifies, The South; it meant, The Medes of the South. Bochart thinks, That Hara, more particularly meant that Part of Media, which the Arabians call Al-Gebal; Both Names agree in signifying, A Mountainous Region. The Cadusians, according to Strabo, were lodged here. And Fuller thinks, that these were Israelites, thus called, q. /קדשִׁים/ Kedosim, or, The Holy People.¹⁹⁷

| About the Excellencies of the Countrey of Media, none of the Ancients ha's written more excellently than Polybius. And about Ecbatana, the Capital City of Media, we have many great Things in the Writings of the Ancients. The Kings of Persia, lived there in the Summer, as they did at Shushan in the Winter. It is reported, That the Palace of Ecbatana was built by Daniel, the Prophet; and the Report is a little countenanced, in what Josephus relates, That even to his Time, a Jewish Priest alwayes had the Custody of it committed unto him. It is not unlikely, That the Emperour Darius, might make much Use of Daniel, in so Illustrious a Building; & of Gratitude unto Daniel, for his Performance in it, putt this Respect upon his Nation.¹⁹⁸ [266v]

Q. And now Cham, the Third Son of Noah, remains to be considered?

A. In the Division of the World, unto the Share of Cham there falls, Egypt, and all Africa, and great Part of Syria, and Arabia; to say nothing of Babylon, and Susiana, and Assyria, which Nimrod a Nephew of Cham, took from the Sons of Shem.¹⁹⁹

Egypt is by the Psalmist called, The Land of Cham; and in Plutarch, it is called, Χημία. and in Stephanus Ἐρμολύμιος. The Name of Ammon came from Cham; There was a City called Ammonia, famous for the Temple & Oracle of Jupiter-Ammon; Yea, Al. Polyhistor will satisfy you, that all Africa was called Am-

monia. And the Egyptian Thebes, which was called by the Greeks Διόσπολις, was by the Hebrew Prophets called, Amon-No, and, No-Amon; that is, The Temple of Amon. Yea, The whole Fable of Saturn and Jupiter is but the Story of Noah and Cham.²⁰⁰

In the Hebrew Language, /חם/ Cham, signifies, Hott; and /חום/ Chum, signifies, Black. An ominous Name! considering the Seat, and the Hue, of his Posterity.

It is doubtless a Mistake (first broached by a Pseudo-Clemens,) That Cham was the same with Zoroaster the Magician. Tho' Cassianus, and others, have carried on the Mistake, until they report Cham to have laid a Spell upon his Father, & made him Impotent; and to have written Magical Books, whereof one, (of Necromancy) is yett extant, under the Title of, Scriptura Chami filij Noæ. Bochart retells it, and also obliges us with the true Etymology, of the Name of Zoroaster; that it signifies, A Contemplator of the Stars. He detects also the Vanity of those Philosophers, who make their Chemia, and Chymia, and Alchymia, to come from Cham; to render their Profession venerable, for its Antiquity. For indeed, the first Author that ever mentioned Alchymie, was Julius Firmicus in the Days of Constantine. And the Name in the Arabic Tongue, (whereto it belongs) is not written with the same Letters, that the Name of Cham is; but it signifies no more than, Ars Occulta; than with a fitter Name could not be thought of, as the Titles of the Books written by the Chymists, are enough to testify; and those written by the famous Lully in particular.²⁰¹

²⁰⁰ Ps. 78:51; 105:23, 27; 106:22; Plutarch (De Iside et Osiride 364 C, line 5) calls the land of Cham "Chemia" (Plutarch's Moralia 5:83), but Stephanus Byzantius (44.21–22) calls it "Hermochymios." Cornelius Alexander Polyhistor (Fragmenta 117–118, line 3); the Egyptian Thebes is called "Diospolis" by Stephanus Byzantius (Ethnica, p. 234, line 1); Eusebius Pamphilus (Onomasticon, p. 80, line 11); Ptolemy (Geographia 5.1.7, line 3). Ezekiel calls the Egyptian Thebes "No" ["Amon"] (Ez. 30:14, 16). In an effort to interpret the stories of pagan deities as corrupted versions of the heroic tales in the Hebrew Bible, Mather and his peers identify the Graeco-Roman Saturn as Noah, and Saturn's sons Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto (who divided the world amongst themselves) as Noah's sons Shem, Ham, and Japheth (who inherited the different parts of the terrestrial globe). See also Mather's commentary on Gen. 9:28 (above) and Gerard Vossius (De Theologia Gentili, lib. 2, cap. 11, pp. 360–63).

²⁰¹ Clemens Romanus et Clementina (Homiliae 9.3–5) asserts that Mestren, a descendant of Ham, was the progenitor of Nebrod (Nimrod), who "took up with magical practices." The Greeks called this Nebrod by the name Zoroaster (ANF 8:275–76). Joannes Cassianus (c. 360–c. 435) was a Christian monastic and founder of two monasteries near Marseilles. His Collationes patrum Sceticorum (lib. 8, cap. 21) [PL 49. 758C–759B] repeats the Talmudic tradition that Ham was responsible for Noah's impotence. Bochart lists among his many sources St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 21.14), Sixtus Senensis's Bibliotheca Sancta (lib. 2), and Historia Scholastica (wr. 1169–73), a popular universal history of the OT and NT, by the French theologian and exegete Petrus Comestor, aka. Pierre le Mangeur (d. 1178). Comestor (Historia Scholastica libri Genesis, cap. 39) calls the book of magic "The Scripture of Ham, Son of Noah," a work that through its association of Ham with Zoroaster is attributed to the purported founder of alchemy [PL 198. 1053–1722]. Sir Thomas Browne makes the same argument in his The Garden of Cyrus (1658), ch. 1, in Works (3:149). The astrologer Julius Firmicus Maternus of

Q. The first Son of Cham, in the Catalogue of Moses, is Cush?

A. In Eupolemus we find him called, Χουμ, which Bochart thinks, was by a Mistake putt for Χυν, the Accusative Case of Χοῦς. Eupolemus adds, That the Greeks rendred it, Ἀσβολος, which indeed answers to Chum, and signifies, Soot.²⁰²

But now occurs the Quæstion, what and where is the Land of Cush, which we find so often mentioned in the Sacred Oracles? Almost all the Jewish and Græcian Writers, and others, have taken it for Ethiopia. Only, Jonathan in his Paraphrase, finds it in Arabia; and Bochart agrees with him.²⁰³

The Prophet, [Hab. 3.7.] mentions Chusan (which is the Diminutive of Chus,) and Madian, as being synonymous. Moses's Wife was a Midianitess, but yett called, A Woman of Cush. [Num. 12.1.] Now, tis well known, That Midian, was in Arabia, (as Josephus, and Ptolomy, and Jerom will tell you,) on the Shore of the Red-Sea.²⁰⁴

Again, The Topaz, [Job. 28.19.] is not, The Topaz of Ethiopia; none of the Ancients ever mentioned such a thing; but, The Topaz of Arabia: Pliny tells us, of Chitis, an Island of Arabia, famous for it; and so do Agatharchides, and Strabo, and Diodorus, and Isidorus, and others.²⁰⁵

Moreover, we have the Bounds of Ethiopia, expressly declared, Ezek. 29.10. From the Tower of Syene, to the border of Chush. Now, all know, that Syene bounded Egypt on the Side of Ethiopia; Strabo, and Pliny, and Solinus, are Syracuse (4th c. CE), whose astrological work Mathesis libri VIII (CE 334–37) was written during the reign of Emperor Constantine I (the Great), discusses the art of alchemy in his Mathesis (lib. 3, cap. 15). Finally, Bochart (207) mentions the Catalanian mystic Raimundus Lullus, aka. Ramon Llull (1231–1315), whose alchemical works De secretis naturae seu de quinta essentia libellus, De investigatione secreti occulti, and Secreta secretorum were often reprinted. They can be found in Lully's Opera omnia (1721–42).

202 Gen. 10:6. This and the following paragraphs are extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 2, col. 209–16). In his Greek history On the Kings of Judaea, the Jewish historian of Palestine Eupolemus (fl. c. 150 BCE) renders the Hebrew “Cham” and “Cush” in their various cases “Choum,” “Chun,” and “Chous,” as well as “Asbolos.” The Greek original from Eupolemus survives in an excerpt by Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 9.17.9, lines 1–5).

203 Among the Jewish and Greek authors who identify the Land of Cush with Ethiopia are Philo Judaeus, Josephus Flavius, Eusebius Pamphilus, Eustathius, as well as the anonymous author of the Chronicon Alexandrinum. Bochart (210), however, agrees with the Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (on Gen. 10:6) and locates the Land of Cush in Arabia, in Brian Walton (4:17).

express for This. Chus then must be opposite unto Syene, and can be no other than Arabia.²⁰⁶

When we read, Ezek. 30.9. Messengers shall go forth from me in Ships, to make the careless Æthiopians afraid, it should be read, Arabians; to whom Ships continually came from Egypt, cross the Red-Sea; but by Nilus none could go to Ethiopia, because of the Falls near Syene.

[267r] | Tirhaka, who suddenly diverted Sennacherib, from the Siege of Libna, could not be King of Ethiopia; [2. King. 19.9.] for then he must have conquered Egypt, before he could have come at him. The same is to be said of Zerah. [2. Chron. 14.9.] Nor were there any Arabians near the Ethiopians, [2. Chron. 21.16.] but they were Chuseans, of Arabia. Consider, Isa. 20.4, 5. The Arabian Chuseans, might have helped the Azotians in Palæstine; the Ethiopians could not, because of Egypt lying between them. That Passage, in Isa. 18.1. Bochart thus renders, Wo to the Land of the Kettledrum; [Cymbalum Orarum, which is the Translation of the Hebrew there, notes, a Marginated Cymbal, or a Sistrum.] This intends Egypt; where that Instrument was famously used by the Priests of Isis. Now, it followes, which is beyond the Rivers of Chus. How could this be said, by Isaiah now in Judea, if Chus were Ethiopia? Whereas Arabia Chusæa lay between Judea & Egypt. Here now ran, the River Besor, emptying itself into the Mediterranean; and the River of Rhinocolura, emptying itself into the Sirbonian Lake, and the River Trajanus, emptying itself into the Red-Sea; and the River Corys mentioned by Herodotus.²⁰⁷

It followes, That sends Embassadors by the Sea. Bochart shewes, that what we read, Embassadors, is to be read, Images. How every Year, the Head of Osiris was thrown into the Sea, and what became of it, Read Lucian (an Ey-Witness,) or, if you please, read Cyril, and Procopius on Isaiah, and you'll see the Meaning of the Diabolical Usages, herein referr'd unto.²⁰⁸

²⁰⁶ Strabo (17.1.48); Pliny (5.10.59); Solinus (De mirabilibus mundi, cap. 33).

Upon the whole; The Chuseans dwelt above Egypt, near the innermost Bay of the Red-Sea, in Part of Arabia the Stony, and, Arabia the Happy. They were therefore the same, with the ancient Scenites, and the modern Saracens. Of the former, you may be satisfied in Pliny and Strabo; Of the latter, in Procopius, and Marcianus. They were called Scenites, from their Dwelling in Tents; [compare, Hab. 3.7.] And, Saracens (not from, Sarah, as is by some fancied,) from their Thievish Inclinations; for, Saraka, is, Latrocinari. Their Part of Arabia, is, at this Day called, Hegiaz.²⁰⁹

They were once a very Strong People. [See, Nah. 3.9.] But alwayes, a Vile People. [See Amos. 9.7.]²¹⁰

The Conversion of this People is foretold in the Divine Oracles. [Psal. 68.31. and 87.4.] It was, in Part at least, fulfill'd, when Mauvia, the Queen of the Saracens, with her People, embraced the Christian Faith, in the Dayes of the Emperour Valentinian; and when their King Alamundarus, with his People, made further Progress in the Christian Faith, under the Emperour Anastasius. Tho' not long after, under Heraclius, follow'd the horrible Apostasy to Mahometism.²¹¹

To Bochart, might be opposed that of the Prophet, Jer. 13.23. Can the Cusean (which we render, Ethiopian) change his skin? which seems to agree with the old Proverbs, about washing an Ethiopian. But all that have seen the Face of a Saracen, do know him, to be so Swarthy a thing, that the Expression will 209 Pliny (5.12.65); Strabo (16.4.2) paraphrases Eratosthenes's description of Arabia Felix; Procopius Caesariensis (De bellis 1.17.47, 1.19.9–13; Procopius 1:159, 181); the Greek geographer Marcianus Heracleensis (fl. c. 250–c. 500 CE) is mostly remembered for his Periplus maris exteri, a description of the coasts of the Atlantic and Indian Oceans. Mather refers to Periplus maris exteri (1.17.22–16). For “Saraka,” see Stephanus (556.3–4) and Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.42, line 2), a term that signifies to Mather “Latrocinari” or “robbery” or “buccaneering.” “Hegiaz” (Hejaz) is a province in modern Saudi Arabia along the shore of the Red Sea, which includes the cities Mecca and Medina.

211 According to Rufinus (Historia ecclesiastica 11.6) and Sozomenos (Historia ecclesiastica 6.38), in NPNFii (2:374), Queen Mauvia (also: Mavia, Mania), ruler of the Saracens (c. 365–80), converted with her people to Christianity, when Valens (364–78), Roman emperor of the East, under the auspices of his older brother Valentinian I (364–75), sent to her the Egyptian hermit Moses, who became bishop of the Saracens (i.e. Arabs). King Alamundarus (Mundhir), ruler of the Saracens, supported the spread of Christianity during the reign of Anastasius, Eastern Roman emperor (491–518 CE). Following the reign of Roman emperor of Byzantium Heraclius (610–41), Muhammad's father-in-law, Caliph Abu-Bakr (632–34), and subsequently his deputy, Caliph Umar (634–44), conducted wars of conquest against the Byzantine Empire. Iraq was subjugated in 632–34 CE, Mesopotamia and Syria in 640 CE, Egypt in 642 CE, and much of the Persian Empire by 643 CE. Upon Umar's death, Caliph Uthman (644–56), an Umayyad, continued his predecessors' wars of conquest into Libya (N Africa) and into the eastern parts of the Persian Empire. Thus within a few decades after Muhammad's death (632), the Muslim empire included some of the wealthiest regions of the Middle East and of North Africa. See Georgius Elmacinus's Historia Saracenica (1625). For British views of Islam during the 17th and 18th centuries, see Pailin's Attitudes (81–104).

do for him well enough. Vartomanus, who lived at Mecha, saies, Color est inter fulvum et nigrum; and Giggeius also saies, Mauri Arabes; quidam Arabes nigri. The French Version may do well enough; Le More changera – il sa peau? For the Name of Moors, is putt upon the Saracens, by the Writers of their Affayrs; as, by Lucas Tudensis in particular.²¹²

Q. Well, but the Sons of Cush?

A. We find Six of them. Nevertheless we cannot concur with the Generality of the Ancients, to seat them in Africa. And it will be Loss of Time, to recite the wilde and wide Conjectures of some others about the Seats of those Chushites. Bochart ha's placed them all near the Persian Sea; except Nimrod, who went away for Babylon.²¹³

We will begin with Sabthea, the farthest off, and the least known of them. In Arabia, and the adjacent Countreyes, tis well-known, that B and M, are Letters, frequently changed one for t'other. The Instances of it are Numberless; like Abana, the River of Damascus, called also Amana. Accordingly, we have a City of Sabthea's, [or, Sabithece's] Name, called, Σαμδακῆ, Samydake, a City of Carmania, mentioned by Stephanus. And Marcianus Heracleota mentions a River, called Samydacus, not far from thence. Which Names are a little corrupted in Ptolomy. That Countrey of Carmania, is above all famous for its Vines, described by Strabo, and Arrian, and Pliny, as the Largest in the World; and perhaps it had its Name from thence; for כרמא/ Carma, in Chaldee & Syriac, signifies, A Vine.²¹⁴

We will pass on to Regma, or, Raamah. In Ptolomies Tables, a little above [268v] the Mouth of the Persian Sea, and the | Bay of the Ichthyophagi, you will find ²¹² Bochart (215–16). “Saracens” is a medieval European designation for Muslim Arabs, Moors, and Turks – hence Bochart’s denigratory application of Jer. 13:23 to the Arab peoples. In his Novum Itinerarium (1511), lib. 1, cap. 8, the Italian traveler Ludovicus Vartomannus relates that “The [skin] color [of the Arabs] ranges from brown to dark [or black]” (see Travels 17). Antonius Giggeius argues in his Thesaurus linguae Arabicae (1632) that “the Moorish Arabs, are the black Arabs.” Mather’s French version reads, “Can a Moor [i.e., un Éthiopien] change his skin?” (Jer. 13:23). Finally, Lucas Tudensis (fl. 1227–50), the Spanish bishop of Tuy, wrote a history of the world, Chronicon mundi (c. 1236–39) – excerpts of which survive in Annales Ecclesiastici (1593–1607), a massive church history in 12 vols., by Cardinal Caesar Baronius (1538–1607). Bochart refers to the chronological Annales for the years CE 257 (§ 10), 716 (§ 15), 770 (§ 32), and 807 (§ 4).

²¹³ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 3, col. 216–17).

a City of that very Name. You have it also mentioned in Stephanus. [Compare likewise, Ezek. 27.22.]²¹⁵

This Regmah has two Sons. One is Dedan. On the same shore, a little to the Eastward of Regmah, we find the City Dedan; which to this Day wears the Name of Daden. Ortelius will more exactly lead you, to the Place of it. The Countrey thereabouts also, ha's the same Name with the City, as Barboza assures us. There was indeed another Dedan, a City of Idumæa, [Jer. 25.23. & 49.8. and Isa. 21.13.] the builder whereof, was another Dedan, the Nephew of Abraham. [Gen. 25.3.] But Ezekiel, [ch. 27.15.] evidently refers to this our Dedan of Regmah, when he speaks of his Islands, and his Merchandize of Ivory and Ebony. And unto that other Idumæan Dedan, [v. 20.] when he speaks of no other Merchandise, than Cloathes for Chariots.²¹⁶

Rhegma had another Son, called Sheba, with a Shin. From him we may suppose descended the Sabeans, mentioned by Pomponius, upon Arabia the Happy, near the Mouth of the Persian Sea, and not far from the Carmanians. Arrianus mentions the great Mountains there, called, Sabo, by Ptolomy written Asabo. Probably crossing the Straits there, they went over, and built the City called by Ptolomy, Sabis. No doubt, these are the Sabeans, meant, when we find Sheba joined sometimes with Seba, in the Scriptures; [as, Psal. 72.10.] and when Sheba is joined with Regmah, or Dedan, or any other Sons of Chus; [as, Ezek. 27.22. and Ezek. 38.13. and Ezek. 27.23.]²¹⁷

But then, that Sheba, had an Uncle Seba, (with a Samech,) another Son of Cush. The Jemamites, who according to the Nubian Geographer, border upon the Omanites, that are seated on the River Om, called Lar by Ptolomy, these, as Alcamus tells us, refer their Original, to this our Seba. Pliny will show you a Sabe there.²¹⁸

215 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 5, col. 218–19); Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.14, lines 1–6) locates the city Regma among the “Ichthyophagi” (“fish-eaters”). Stephanus Byzantius (544.15, 16).

216 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 6, col. 219–20). Gen. 10:7. Bochart here relies on Abraham Ortelius’s popular Orbis Terrarum [1606 edition], “China,” p. 106r, and his map “Turici imperii descriptio,” between pp. 110–11. Ortelius (106r) acknowledges as his source the Itinerarium (1588) of Odoardus Barboza (d. 1521), a Portuguese explorer, who perished with Ferdinand Magellan during the first circumnavigation of the globe. Mather (via Bochart, Ortelius, and Barboza) describes the region of Ormuz in the Persia Gulf.

217 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 7, col. 220). Gen. 10:7. Bochart refers to the Cushite Sheba שֶׁבָּא not his uncle Seba שֶׁבַּח [Strong’s # 7614 and # 5434]. Pomponius Mela (De situ orbis 6.8); Arrianus, in his attributed work Periplus maris Erythraei (35.5), calls the mountains Asabo, and so does Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.12, lines 9, 12; 6.7.20, line 13); for “Sabis,” see Ptolemy (Geographia 6.8.14, line 2).

218 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 8, col. 221–22). Gen. 10:7. Bochart here distinguishes between the initial letters ש (shin) of Sheba and ס (samekh) of Seba – both being rendered “S” in their English transliteration. The Arabic geographer Idrisi lists the Jemamites and Omanites in his Geographia Nubiensis (climatis 1, pars 6, p. 26); Ptolemy’s river “Lar” remains unidentified. Bochart cites “Alcamus” at second hand from Antonius Giggeius’s The-

There was indeed another Seba, the Nephew of Abraham, descended from Joktan; whose Posterity dwelt about the Entrance of Arabia the Happy, not far from the Nabataeans; whom accordingly Strabo joins together, as often making Excursions from thence. And these were doubtless the Sabaeans, by whom Job was plundered. Strabo's Account of that People, πολλάκις κατέτρεχον, Sæpe excurrebant, shows them to be of such Inclinations, that there was no need for Satan to be at much Pains, as Tempting them, to such a Robbery.²¹⁹

Sabtha was another Son of Cush; called of old, Sabatha. He was probably seated at first, in Arabia the Happy, where the Leanites bordered upon the Persian Sea. And then he removed a little farther, into Arabia the Desert, where the City Σάφθα, is described by Ptolomy. But it is likely that some Colonies at least, of the Sabateans, crossing the Sea, went over into Persia, where Ptolomy gives us, first the Island Σῶφθα, Sophtha, called Σωφᾶθ by Marcian, which Ortelius takes to be the same that is called Phara, by Ammian. And then, the Massabatheans, from whom was the Massabitica Regio, which Pliny calls Mesobatene. And then the Sabteans about the Confines of Carmania, a little distance from the Sea; called also Stabæans.²²⁰

Chavilah was another of this Cushæan Fraternity. Ptolomy indeed mentions no Name, wherein we find any Footsteps of him. Nevertheless we find the Chavileans mentioned by Eratosthenes, under the Name of Chaulotheans, by Dionysius, under the Name of Chablasians, by Festus Avienus, under the Name of Chaulasians, and by Priscian, as Chalbasians. Pliny wrote their Name the best, Chaveleans, which the Ignorance of the Scribes changed into Chancleans. They were (it may be) seated with the Nebateans and the Agræans (or, Hagarens;) not far from the Persian Sea.²²¹ saurus linguae Arabicae (1632). Alcamus (The Ocean) is the title of an Arabic language dictionary, evidently composed by an anonymous Persian grammarian (c. 14th c.) of Firuzabad. This work is also mentioned in William Jones's translation, The History of the Life of Nader Shah, King of Persia (London, 1773), part 1, ch. 1, pp. iv–v. Pliny (6.32.151, 154). See Appendix A.

219 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 9, col. 222). Gen. 25:3 lists "Sheba" as the son of Joktan. Strabo (Geographica 16.4.2, line 3) relates that the Nabataeans and Sabaens "often overran" their neighbors.

220 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 10, col. 223–25); Ptolemy mentions "Saphtha" in Geographia (6.7.30, line 3); "Sophtha" in Geographia (6.4.8, line 3); Bochart evidently relies on an imperfect edition, for Marcianus Heracleënsis does renders the name of the Gulf Island Σωφθα "Sophtha" (Periplus maris exteri 1.24.4); Ortelius (Theatrum Orbis Terrarum [1606], pp. 109) lists Ammianus Marcellinus (23.6.47) as his source, who (however) calls this Arabian city Taphra; Pliny (6.31.134–35).

221 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 11, col. 225–26); Eratosthenes as quoted in Strabo (16.4.2, line 11). Neither the reference to Dionysius nor to Latin grammarian Priscianus Caesariensis (Institutiones grammaticae) could be verified. Rufius Festus Avienus mentions the Chaulasians in his Periegesis, seu Descriptio orbis terrae (1124), and Pliny (5.12.65) speaks of the "Canchlei."

Q. Well, but one Son of Cush remains, more famous than the rest, who may call for a more particular Consideration; and that is, Nimrod?²²²

A. And with him, came in, as it should seem, the Brasen Age, Savior ingenijs, et ad horrida promptior Arma.

It seems, he shook off the Government of Noah, and arrogated unto himself a Tyrannical Empire over his Neighbours. The very Name of Nimrod carries Rebellion in it. (מֶרֶד is, To Rebel.) 'Tis hee, to whom the Pagan Historians ascribe the Exploits of their Ninus, & Semiramis. And it is remarkable, what we have in Diodorus, That Ninus assisted with an Army of Arabians, conquered the Babylonians. Nimrod was a Cusæan, or Arabian; and upon his Neighbours, that raised him unto his Government, he bestowed the Countrey beyond Tigris, which from them was called, Cush by the Hebrewes, Cuth by the Chaldees, Cissia by the Græcians, & Chuzestan by the Persians.²²³

Moses reports him to be, a Mighty Hunter before the Lord. Which is as much as to say, He was Truly so; (Compare, Jon. 3.3. and Act. 7.20.) because the Lord knowes all things, and cannot be Deceived in His Judgment. | And it is in this Passage intimated, How he arrived unto his Empire. Under the Prætext of Hunting, he gathered an Army of Young Men, whom he accustomed unto such Exercises, as made them Able Warriors; which is the very thing reported by Diodorus, of his Ninus. Hunting hath in all Ages been esteemed, the Militiæ Rudimentum et Præludium. Xenophon saies, ἀληθεστάτη δοκεῖ αὐτῇ ἡ μελέτη τῶν πρὸς τον πόλεμον εἶναι, Videtur hæc esse verissima rerum bellicarum meditatio. And Cicero saies, Exerceamur in venando ad similitudinem bellicæ disciplinæ. And Philo saies, He that would come to Empire, must use himself to Hunting. And Pliny, His Artibus futuri duces imbuebantur, certare cum fugacibus feris cursu, cum audacibus robore, cum callidis astu. The Grammarians derive the Name of, Bellum, à Belluis; quìa prima Bella fuerunt in Belluas; And the Bears, Tigres, and Lions, & the like, which Noblemen wear in their Coats of Arms, were perhaps first in Memory of their Exploits against those fierce Animals. And no doubt, in the Age and Place

²²² The answer to the implied question is extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 7, col. 220).

where Nimrod lived, such a famous Hunter as he, must lay Mankind under more than ordinary Obligations.²²⁴

Q. Who was the true Builder of Babylon?

A. A thousand Authors ascribe the Glory of Building that City, to Semiramis. But Herodotus, who wrote before any of them, allows nothing to her, but the Making of those Banks, which regulated the Restagnations of Euphrates. And Berosus, in Josephus, cries Shame upon the Greek Writers, for their Fiction of Semiramis. But Curtius ingenuously confesses, That many rather owned Belus, for the Builder of Babylon. And Dorotheus Sidonius, a very old Poet, is quoted by Julius Firmicus, as good Authority for this; which Abydenus also is by Eusebius.²²⁵ Such Writers as Ammianus and Orosius, have gone to compound this Matter between Belus and Semiramis. But there is no need of any Pains about it; for the whole Weight of Semiramis's Credit in the thing, lies upon the single Testimony of Ctesias; which is liable to no little Suspicion; at least, it ought to weigh nothing against Berosus, who was a very great Man, & a Priest of Babylon, or against Abydenus, who fetch'd his History from the best Chaldæan Monuments of Antiquity. Now Belus was the very same with our Nimrod; He that was first, a Nimrod, or a Rebel; now became, a Belus, or a Lord; (you know the Etymology:) the Chaldees counting it more honourable to retain the latter Name, with the Obliteration of the Former.²²⁶

²²⁴ Bochart (227); Gen. 10:9; Diodorus Siculus (2.1.4–5). Hunting has been esteemed “rudimentary and [a] prelude to military service.” The adaptation from Xenophon (Cyropedia 1.2.10, lines 4–5) suggests, “This seems to be the truest way to think about matters of warfare.” In his De natura deorum (2.64.161), Marcus Tullius Cicero recommends, “we should exercise ourselves in the hunt as in a kind of warlike discipline.” Philo Judaeus says much the same in Mather’s free translation from De Josepho (1.3); Gaius Plinius Caecilius Secundus, aka. Pliny the Younger (c. 61–c. 112 CE), nephew of his famous namesake, chimes in with, “these were the skills which formed the leaders of the future – to pit speed against an animal’s swift-footedness, and strength and dexterity against its courage and cunning” (Panegyricus 81.2). Finally, the grammarians associate Nimrod, the mythological founder of the Assyrian empire, with “‘Bellum’ [war] from ‘belluae’ [beasts], because the first wars were among the beasts” (Bochart 228).

²²⁵ The entire paragraph is extracted from Bochart’s Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 14, col. 232–34). Among the many authors who credit Queen Semiramis with the building of Babylon, Bochart mentions Ctesias, Theocritus, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, Dionysius Periegetes, Trogus, Mela, Ovid, Hyginus, Cephalaeon, Solinus, Cassiodorus, and Lucius Ampelius. Herodotus (1.184–87) relates that Queen Semiramis built embankments on the plain to regulate the flow of the Euphrates, but her successor, Queen Nitocris, carried out most of Babylon’s improvements. Nitocris dug canals north of the city, slowed down the flow of the water by building artificial lakes, cut stones for the city’s river banks, and built a bridge across the Euphrates to connect the two sections of Babylon. The Chaldean historian Berosus (Babyloniaca, lib. 3) rejects the Assyrian Semiramis as the founder of the city and bestows the honor instead on “Nabollassar” (Nabopolassar) and his son “Nabuchodonosor” (Josephus Flavius, Against Apion 1.19–20). However, Quintus Curtius Rufus (5.1.24) argues that “Semiramis had founded it,” but most historians attribute the city’s founding to the Babylonian god Belus. Ammianus Marcellinus (23.6.23) has Queen Semiramis build the city, Belus the citadel. The Greek poet-astrologer Dorotheus Sidonius (1st–2nd c. CE) also credits the god Belus (Baal) with the founding of Babylon, in a fragment (Fragmenta e Hephaestionis, 2a, sec. 5, line 2) quoted in Mathesis, an astrological treatise by the Greek writer Julius Firmicus Maternus of Syracuse (fl. 330–50 CE). The Chaldean historian Abydenus, whose Assyriaca kai Babyloniaca survives in fragments in Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 9.41), relates the ancient legend that the plain of Babylon was filled with water, but that the god Belus stopped the waters, assigned a region for both water and land, and surrounded Babylon with a wall (9.41.457b–c).

Nebuchadnezzars Building of this Great Babylon, whereof he made his Boast, was but his New-walling, and Enlarging of it, or doing something for it, like what Augustus did for the City of Rome, when, he boasted, Marmoream reliqui.²²⁷

Q. And what is now become of Babylon?

A. Babylon could not imagine, that she should be any other than an Eternal City. [Isa. 49.9, 10.] But God hath wonderfully accomplished the Destruction, which He foretold unto Babylon, by His Holy Prophets. [Isa. 13.19. and Chap. 44. and 47. and Jer. 50. and 51.] And of that vast City, there is now nothing to be seen, but Rubbish and Ruines. Eustathius reports, it, ἐρημωθῆναι, To be Desolate. Benjamin reports, That in that particular Place, where stood the Palace of Nebuchadnezzar, Men are afraid of entring, because of the horrid Serpents and Scorpions that are lodged there. Teixeira reports, That but few footsteps of it appear, nec in totâ regione locus ullus est minus frequens. One thing that mightily contributed unto the Exhausting of Babylon, was the Neighbourhood of Seleucia, within Three hundred furlongs of it, as is noted by Pliny and Strabo.²²⁸

²²⁸ This and the subsequent paragraph are extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 15, col. 234–35). Eustathius Thessalonicensis describes the desolation of Babylon in his Commentarium in Dionysii (988.31–33); Benjamin of Tudela relates his eyewitness account

As the Poet sings of Megalopolis,
 Ἐρημία μεγάλη ἐστὶν ἡ Μεγαλήπολις.
Est magna Solitudo nunc Megalopolis;

The Ancients observe, That the same is to be said of Babylon. And Pausanias among others laments, That the greatest City, that ever the Sun saw, hath now nothing left, but something of its Walls. In Jeroms Time, t'was come to this; (as he affirms,) Venationes Regis esse in Babylone, et omnis generis Bestias murorum ejus tantum ambitu coerceri. And, Exceptis muris coctilibus, qui propter Bestias concludendas post annos plurimos instaurantur, omne in media spatium solitudo est.²²⁹

Q. Another of the Cities, built by Nimrod, was Erech?

A. Erech is not the same with Edessa, as was thought by the Ancients; but it was a City of Susiana, upon Tigris, which is in Ptolomy called, Arecca, and in Ammian called, Arecha; whence, according to Salmasius, the Areccæi Campi, in Tibullus; and perhaps, t'was the same with Arderica, or Anderica, in Herodotus. From hence was brought the Colony of Archevites, unto Samaria. [Ezr. 4.9.]²³⁰

Q. Another of the Cities, was Acchad?

in Itinerarium (134) and Itinerary (65–66); Peter Teixeira gives his report in his Travels (ch. 5, p. 57), but Mather's second-hand quotation is from Bochart's Latin translation (col. 234) of Teixeira's Spanish original Relaciones de Pedro Teixeira (1610), ch. 5. Teixeira relates, "but this place in the whole region is hardly ever visited by anyone." Although there are thirteen cities by the name Seleucia (Syria), Mather probably refers to Seleucia (Veh-Ardrashir), on the left bank of the Tigris (NW of Babylon), founded by Seleucus I, who turned it into his royal capital (c. 305 BCE). (OCD). Pliny (6.30.122); Strabo (16.1.5).

A. The Greeks call it Ἀρχὰδ, in Conformity to the Chaldee; who, when Dagesh requires a Letter to be doubled, | resolve the Dagesh, into an R. As for Dammeseke, [270v] they have Darmeseke. Of the Name Accad, and Arcad, we have some Footstep, in Argad, a River of Sittacene, mentioned by Ctesias; which River doubtless had its Name, from a City of that Name, as it was usual, and as Duris in Stephanus particularly Notes, concerning the Rivers of Sicily. Sitace we find a City very populous, (according to Strabo) as one goes, between Babylon and Susa.²³¹

Q. Another was Calne?

A. Elsewhere tis written, (Isa. 10.9.) Calno; and, (Ezek. 27.23.) Channe. It is represented by the Prophet Amos, (ch. 6.2.) as a Great City. Ezekiel mentions it as a City lying towards Euphrates and Tigris, but using a Trade with Tyrus. Bochart agrees with the Chaldee Interpreters, and Eusebius, and Jerom, that Calne, is the same with Ctesiphon, a famous Town upon Tigris, where (according to Strabo.) the Kings of Parthia, still chose to winter; and (according to Dion, and Pliny.) the Palace of Parthia was there. The People of Chalonitis here, are celebrated in the Writings of Dionysius Periegetes, and others of the Ancients.²³²

Q. But how comes this Passage in; Out of that Land went out Assur?

A. Bochart thinks, that Assur here, is not the Name of a Man, but the Name of a Place; and by Arguments that seem to carry Demonstration with them, he maintains, that it should be read, He went out of that Land, into Assur; or, Assyria.

Of that Land, we have already given some Account. Bochart thinks, That the Happiness of the Land might give Name to it; For /אשור/ signifies, Happy. Compare, 2. King. 18.32.²³³

“Assyria, is a Part of the Upper Armenia. The Persians affirm, that this Place was called Azer-beyàn, that is, The Countrey of Fire; by reason of the famous Temple of Fire, which was there erected, where was kept their Fire, which the Fire-Worshippers held to be a God. The Guebres, who are all that are left of the Fire-Worshippers, shew this Place, about two dayes Journey distant from Shamaki. —

“— Az, is the Article of the Genitive, Er, or Ur, in most of the Oriental Idioms, signifies Fire. I am apt to think, the Name of Assur comes from Az, Ur, that is, Of Fire. Moses speaking of Nimrod, that Idolatrous Prince, who introduced the Worship of Fire, & invaded Chaldaea, the Share & Patrimony of Sem, tells us, that the Sons of that Patriarch, retired thither, & that Assur was one. Now tis very probable, that this Assur was so called from his retiring thither, or from the Worship of Fire, or from, Chaldaea, which was then called, The Countrey of Fire. [Gen. 11.] And Ptolomy mentions a City in that Countrey, which is called, Urcoa, that is to say, The Place of Fire.”²³⁴

Q. What find we of the City Ninive?

A. Altho’ the Græcian and Roman Writers do generally call that City, Ninus; yett the Name of Ninive also was not unknown unto the Ancients; Ptolomy, and Ammianus, particularly mention it. Some think, it ha’s been called so, q. /נין-נאב/ Nin-nave, The Habitation of Ninus. An Illustrious Exemplification of that Vanity; Psal. 49.11. They call their Lands after their Names. Ninus was the Son of Nimrod, as Enoch was of Cain; and so we have a parallel Exemple; Gen. 4.17.²³⁵

Indeed, all Assyria, was called, [Mic. 5.6.] The Land of Nimrod; probably, by Nimrod himself. But the Ancient Inhabitants would rather keep up the Name of their own Father, & so would have it still called, The Land of Assyria.

This Renowned City is now so lost, that Lucian affirms, there is οὐδὲν ἔχον ἐτι λοιπὸν αὐτῆς no Footstep left of it, neither can any Man living tell where it was.

shuwr) [Strong’s # 804] is here linked with אַשּׁוּר (aw-share) [Strong’s # 033] “to prosper, to be happy.

²³⁴ Mather briefly discontinues his excerpt from Bochart and here cites two paragraphs from Sir John Chardin (1643–1713), French Protestant traveler, knighted by Charles II, and representative of the English East India Company. His famous Travels of Sir John Chardin into Persia (1686), from which Mather cites two paragraphs (349–50), was celebrated for its cultural insights and entertaining descriptions. For “Urcoa” or Ορχόη (Orkoe, Orchoe) in Babylonia, see Ptolemy (Geographia 5.20.7, line 8).

²³⁵ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 20, col. 247–55). Ptolemy (Geographia 8.21.3); Ammianus Marcellinus (18.7.1). Ps. 49:11 (silently emended from Mather’s erroneous Ps. 49:12).

The Desultory Levity of the Ancients, in directing us to the Place of it, indeed is to be wondred at. Yea, such Writers as Herodotus and Diodorus, do with a wonderful Inconstancy contradict themselves, as well as one another.²³⁶

An Astonishing Fulfilment of the Prophecy; Nah. 1.8. He will make an utter End of the Place thereof; and, Nah. 3.17. The Place is not known where they are. Even the Incomparable Bochart, whose exquisite Researches must have discovered some Rubbish of this eminent City, if any Mans could have done it, after he ha's consulted a whole University of Authors about it, concludes, Proindè puto doctos se fatigare frustrà in loco Ninives præcisè definiendo.²³⁷

The Bulk of the City, is with a little more Certainty described unto us, than the Place of it. We read, [Jon. 3.3.] Ninive was an exceeding Great City, of Three Dayes Journey. That Word, /לֵאלֹהִים/ or, To God, which we well render, Exceeding Great, I don't know whether it may not be a Phrase of this Importance, It was, God knows, a Great City; q.d. It was most certainly so. The Dimensions of, Three Dayes Journey, assigned unto the City, do not refer unto the Length of it, but, as Aben-Ezra, and Jerom, and Cyrl, have interpreted it, unto the Circuit, & Compass of it: tho' *Theodore*t intimates, as if some understood it, of the Time requisite for the Prophets preaching thro' all the several Streets of the City.²³⁸ Strabo, who makes the Compass of Babylon, to be Three hundred & Eighty five furlongs affirms Niniveh to have been, πολὺν | μείζων τῆς Βαβυλῶνος, Much larger than Babylon. [271r] Diodorus reports, That the Purpose of the Builder was, to make it, not only the Biggest City, which then was in the World, but also the Biggest City, that ever should be in the World. Whereupon, he adds, That accordingly there never had yett been the like; and according to him, it was in length One hundred & fifty furlongs, in breadth Ninety; and the Compass of the Walls, was Four hundred & eighty furlongs, the Heighth whereof was One hundred foot, & the Breadth such as three Chariots might ride abreast; and the Towers upon the Walls, were fifteen Hundred; the Altitude of every one of them, two Hundred foot. Cyrl calls them, ἀρρηκτα τειχη. Inexpugnable Walls. And according to Eustathius, In building the City, there laboured for Eight Years together One hundred & forty Myriads of Men. So then, the City being Sixty Miles in Compass, at the rate of

Twenty Miles a day, it was Three Dayes Journey. Not only the old Lawyers, but both Jewes and Greeks, define a Dayes Journey to be Twenty Miles; which by the Romans was called, Mansio, but even /מַסָּה/ by the Jewes, and σταθμός, by the Greeks; and it was the same with five Parasangæ.²³⁹

It need not then be wondred at, that there should be computed in the City, Six-score thousand Persons that could not discern between the Right Hand and the Left; suppose, Infants under two Years old. These usually make the Fifth Part of a City; And according to this Computation, there were about Six Hundred Thousand Inhabitants. In Plinyes Time, the Inhabitants of Seleucia made that Number. But an old Inscription, remembred by Tacitus in his Annals, asserts, That once at Thebes in Egypt, there were Seven hundred Thousand Inhabitants atate militari, of Age to bear Arms. No doubt Rome had as many, when it numbred, Four hundred & twenty eight thousand, three hundred & forty two Citizens; for doubtless the Servants and Strangers together, made as many as the Citizens. Yea, Sybaris a City of Lucania, (afterwards called Thurium) could bring out Three hundred Thousand armed Men, against the Crotoniates, as tis related by Strabo, and by Diodorus, none of the vainest Writers; who also tell us of Cities in Libya, that had Seven hundred Thousand Men in them! In Jerusalem, according to Josephus, there perished above Eleven hundred thousand People, at the Siege of it; but then we must remember, that a World of Strangers, were then come thither to the Passeover. Austin saies, That Thirty Hundred Thousand were sometimes then assembled at that City. And the Number of the Paschal Lambs, once taken under Cestius, confirms that Account. As to Ninive, probably the fame of it, might bring many Strangers to sojourn in it, and the Policy of Ninus, in granting the Jus Civitatis to them, added yett more unto its Populosity. [Consider, Nah. 3.15.] It was said, Nah. 2.8. Ninive is like a Pool of Water. It was very literally so, when (as we are informed by Cyril.) the Inhabitants dug mighty Ditches about it, & brought Rivers into those Ditches, a little before the Destruction of the City, that they might effectually keep off the Besiegers.²⁴⁰

Eusebius and Herodotus, make Ninive destroy'd by Cyaxares; but Jerom, & all the Hebrew Writers, by Nebuchadnezzar. Drusius proves out of the Apocryphal Tobit, that both of them are in the right; & that both Princes did it, with their united Forces.²⁴¹

Ninive being thus destroy'd by the Medes and Chaldees, long lay desolate. It is very quæstionable, whether the Restored Ninive, in the Dayes of Ammian, stood where the old had stood. And even this also was exhausted and emptied, by the Vicinity of Mosal, (as Benjamin tells us) on the other side of the River.²⁴²

Q. Lett us pass from Ninive, to Rehoboth, and Calach, and Rhesen?

A. They are all buried in the like Ruines with Ninive; we have little besides Conjectures to go upon.

Rehoboth notes (not the Streets of Ninive, as tis by some understood, tho' not without supposing an odd Pleonasm therein,) but a Town of that Name. Accordingly we do find a Town of that Name, upon Euphrates, [Gen. 36.37.] which is by the Arabians at this day called, Rahabath-Melic, that is to say, Rehoboth-Regis. It stands, according to the Nubian Geographer, a little below Cercusium, and the Mouth of the River Chabor. However, this could not well be the Rehoboth of Nimrod. But since the eminent Streets, from whence the Name of Athens (c. 443 BCE) and renamed Thurium. Strabo (6.1.13) and Diodorus Siculus (12.9.5). Moreover, Strabo (17.3.15) mentions such populous cities in Libya during the third Punic War. According to Josephus Flavius (Wars 6.9.3), more than 1,100,000 Jews perished when Jerusalem fell during the Roman siege under Titus (69 CE). St. Augustine (Sermones de tempore CCIV) [PL 38. 1037–1039] mentions 1,300,000 – a figure corroborated in William Whiston's annotation on Josephus (Wars 6.9.3, note). In the same account, Josephus mentions Gaius Cestius Gallus, Roman legate of Syria (c. 63–67 CE), who estimated the number of Jews assembled in Jerusalem at more than two million, based on the number of 256,500 animals sacrificed for a Passover celebration (66 CE). Diodorus Siculus (2.3.1–4), citing Ctesias Cnidus's history Persika, relates that Ninus, the purported founder of Nineveh, granted the "Civil Law" to the city's subjects. Finally, Cyrillus Alexandrinus's commentary on Nahum, ch. 3 (Commentarius in xii prophetas minores 2:61, lines 14–20) describes how the Ninevites built canals to regulate the flow of the rivers.

of Rehoboth came to be putt upon the Town, are in the Chaldee called בְּרִיָּהָ / Bochart suspects, that Rehoboth might be the same with Birtha, a Town which Ptolomy places, west of Tigris, above the Mouth of the River Lycus; and which is called Virta in Ammianus.²⁴³

[272v] Calach was the Head of the Countrey Calachene, diverse times mentioned | by Strabo, near the Fountains of the River Lycus. In Ptolomy tis called Calacine, the People whereof are called Classitæ, by Pliny. When we read, that the King of Assyria, placed the Captive-Israelites, in Calach, [2. King. 17.6. and 18.11.] the Names being written with Cheth, and not with Caph, (which are often putt one for t'other) does not hinder its being this Calachene.²⁴⁴

Rhesen, cannot be either the Ῥίσηνα between Edessa, and Mount Masius, nor the Ῥαισηνα between the Rivers Chabor and Saocora; nor the Resaina, where the Emperour Gordian was buried. The Place of Rhesen we find so determined, that we can find nothing to answer it, but the Ἀράρισσα of Xenophon, a Deserted City, upon the River Pigrete, or Tigris. The Walls of that City, he saies, were twenty five foot broad, and an hundred foot high, and Eight Miles in Compass. But Cyrus, the King of Persia sack'd it. Xenophon might change the Name of Rhesen into Laryssa, to accommodate his own Greek Tongue, from the Occasion of a Likeness between the Names; for the Greeks had several Towns of that Name; And yett it is not likely, that there could be any Town of a Greek Name in Assyria, before the Dayes of Alexander. Nor is it unlikely, that the Greeks asking, Whose Ruines those were, the Assyrians might answer, לֶרֶסֶן / Leresen, and Lamed be no more than a Note of the Genitive Case.²⁴⁵

243 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 21, col. 255–56). In the Targum Onkelos and the Versio Arabica (Gen. 36:37), Rehoboth (whose Hebrew root signifies “wide streets”) is called, respectively, “Rooboth” and “Rahabat,” in Brian Walton (1:161). For “Cercustum” and “Chabor,” see Ammianus Marcellinus (Historia 23.5.1, 4) and Ptolemy (Geographia 5.18.3, line 3; 5.18.6, line 3; 6.1.1, line 10). The OT identifies three several settlements by the name Rehoboth: the place where Isaac dug a well (Gen. 26:22); Rehoboth-on-the-River, the home of Shaul (Gen. 36:37; 1 Chron. 1:48); and Rehoboth-Ir (Gen. 10:11), which is probably no other than Nineveh in N Mesopotamia. Mather here refers to the one of the four cities built in Asshur by Nimrod (Gen. 10:11–12). The “Nubian Geographer” Idrisi lists Rehoboth, in his Geographia Nubiensis (climatis 3, pars 5, p. 119). Bochart (256) points to the city of “Birtha,” in Ptolemy (Geographia 5.18.9, line 8; 5.19.3, line 4), and “Virta,” in Ammianus Marcellinus (Historia 20.7.17).

244 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 22, col. 256–67). Strabo (11.14.7, 12; 16.1.1); Ptolemy (Geographia 6.1.2, line 11); Pliny (6.3.8–10; 6.30.118). Mather here distinguishes between Calah כֶּלַח [kelach] (Gen. 10:11, 12) and Halah חֶלַח [chalach] (2 Kings 17:6; 18:11) – the former starting with the letter caph כ, the latter with a cheth ח.

245 Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 23, col. 257–58). For “Rhisina” and “Rhaisena” Bochart draws on Stephanus Byzantius (544.7–9). Ammianus Marcellinus (Historia 23.5.17) mentions Gordian III, Roman Emperor Marcus Antonius Gordianus, who defeated the Persian King Sapor, near the town Resaena (Rhaesena), in Mesopotamia (c. 243 BCE), but is to have been assassinated shortly thereafter by Praetor Julius Philippus (244 BCE), and entombed in Resaena. Xenophon (Anabasis 3.4.6, line 1–3.4.8, line 3) describes the Assyrian city “Larissa” on the Tigris (associated with Calah, in Gen. 10:11–12), its walls and dimensions, and its sacking by the Persian king.

Q. And what shall we now say to Misrajim, the Second Son of Cham?

A. My Bochart, from the Dual Form of the Name, will scarce allow Misrajim to be the Name of a single Man; but rather to mean; The Father of the People that Inhabit the Land of Misrajim, namely Egypt; the Metropolis of which, namely, Alcairo, the Arabians at this day call Meser; as among the Egyptians themselves also, the old Name of their First Month was Mesori.²⁴⁶

The Name of Misrajim, the Contraction of Mesorajim, is in the Singular Number, Masor. [See 2. King. 19.24. and Isa. 19.6. and Mic. 7.12.]²⁴⁷

Masor is as much as to say, A Fortified Place. Egypt is naturally so. Diodorus describing how well defended it is on every Side, concludes, Ἀγυπτὸς πανταχόθεν φυσικῶς ἀχόρωται. And elsewhere, he shewes, how tis on every Side Inaccessible. And Strabo tells us, of its, Τὸ δυσείσβολον τοῖς ἐξωθεν, Exteris non obviis ingressus. But Egypt might also have its Name of Masor, from its Narrowness, which that Name also signifies. It is a Countrey of Small Breadth, but of a very Great Length. Hence the Egyptians are called, (Isa. 18.2.) An extended Nation.²⁴⁸

Misrajim is of the Dual Number, because there is a Double Ethiopia, an Upper and a Lower. [See Tobit. 8.3.] In the Upper, Nilus runs in one Channel, in the Lower, tis divided into several.

The Upper contained Thebais, and Heptanomus. Thebais is in the Bible called Pathros.²⁴⁹

The Lower was called by the Greeks, Delta, for the Figure of it. But how the Egyptians and Hebrewes called it, no one ha's observ'd, until Bochart ha's helped us. Ptolomyes Tables, will show you, the City Athribis, in the very Middle of the Delta. And the Author of the Magnum Etymologicum will teach us, That Athribis is as much as to say, The Heart of a Pear. Now for a Pear, which was the Figure of this Countrey, Rahab is the Hebrew Name; which is the same with Rib. Accordingly in Leo Africanus, this Part of Egypt is called Errif, which is /אֶרֶץ־רִיב/ And so tis Rahab, in the Scripture. [Psal. 87.4. Psal. 89.11. and Isa. 51.9.] Yea, That Passage, Job. 26.12. He divideth the Sea with His Power, and by His Understand-

²⁴⁶ This and the subsequent paragraphs are extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 24, col. 258–62).

ing He smiteth thro' Rahab; R. Solomon will have it understood, of the Egyptians being smitten by the Hand of God, when the Israelites came out of Egypt.²⁵⁰

Sesoosis or Sesostrys, divided Egypt into Thirty Six Provinces; every one of which had its own peculiar Præfect. They are called, Præfectures, by Pliny; but the Bible calls them, Kingdomes: (Isa. 19.2.) Kingdome against Kingdome, is by the LXX (& Cyril, and Epiphanius countenance it,) rendred, νομὸς ἐπὶ νομὸν, Nomos against Nomos.²⁵¹

Q. Well, but the Seven Sons of Misrajim, are now to be considered. We find Ludim, to be the first?²⁵²

A. And here we find the true Ethiopians. That Part of Africa, where Nilus is most Crooked and Winding, (which is the very Signification of their Name,) was inhabited by them; which Turning of that River to and fro, is described perhaps by none better than by Eratosthenes. The Lydians (or Ludim) are in the Scriptures described still as notable Archers; [Isa. 66.19. and Jer. 46.9.] Nothing does more belong to the Description of the Ethiopians; as you may be satisfied [273r] from Strabo and from Heliodorus; | Yea, an ancient Author in Suidas makes them shoot exquisitely on Horse-back; And their Bowes, according to Agatharchides, were of a vast Magnitude; of so vast, that as Herodotus tells us, a King of the Ethiopians of old sent his Bowe as a Present unto Cambyses the King of Persia, with a Challenge unto the Persians to give him Trouble, when they should be able to manage a Bowe of those Dimensions. Xenophon makes the Persian Bowes, to be but Three Cubits; Diodorus and others make the Ethiopian to be no less 250 Bochart (260). Ptolemy (Geographia 4.5.51, line 6). The Egyptian grammarian Orion of Thebes (5th c. CE) taught in Alexandria and later in Constantinople (KP). Mather refers to Orion's Etymologicum magnum (p. 25, lines 50–53). Leo Africanus (c. 1485–c. 1554) is the famous Spanish Islamic scholar who converted to Christianity while in Rome. Bochart refers to either the Latin (1559) or French (1556) translation of Leo's Cosmographia dell'Africa, first printed in Ramusio's Italian edition Della descrizione dell'Africa et delle cose notabili che ivi sono (1550), a popular Renaissance geography of Africa. In the greatly corrupted English edition by John Pory, Leo Africanus points out that the Muslim rulers divided Egypt into three regions and that "the region from Cairo to Rosetto is called the shore of Errif," whose inhabitants were more civil than others because of their proximity to the Mediterranean and their contact with European merchants (Geographical Historie of Africa [1600], bk. 8, p. 297). R. Solomon Jarchi, now better known by his acronym RASHI (R' Shlomo Yitschaki), argues that the designation "Rahab" (Job. 26:12), which the KJV renders "the proud," is an emblematic name of Egypt, in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Job (138).

251 Bochart (261). According to Herodotus (2.102–110) and Diodorus Siculus (1.53.5–6; 1.55.1–5), the mythical Egyptian King Sesoösis or Sesostris (Twelfth Dynasty), conquered significant parts of Africa and Asia. Pliny (5.9.49); the LXX (Isa. 19.2), Cyril Alexandrinus (Commentarius in Isaiam prophetam) [PG 70. 456, line 23–25], and Epiphanius (Panarion 23, in Epiphanius 1:256, lines 17–19) – all render the Greek passage "law against law" (Isa. 19:2).

252 The answer to this question is extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 25–26, col. 262–74). For the seven sons of Misraim, see Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.6.2).

than Four. Tho' their Arrowes were but Short, and Headed with Stone, as we are told by Herodotus and others; and that Stone poison'd also, whence a Wound from it was alwayes mortal, as Theophrastus & others have related; and as Lucian adds, they carried them, not in Quivers, but stuck upon their Caps. Heliodorus writes, what Clouds the Ethiopians made with their Numerous Arrowes, and how Exactly they shott. Cyril, (on Isaiah,) saies of them, Εὐτεχνήστατα μὲν τὰς βέλων ἀφέσεις ποιεῖσθαι μεμελετήκασι, Sagittis magna arte mittendis exercitati sunt. Solinus ha's taught us, that the Fable of their having Four Eyes, arose from their being such excellent Marksmen. And when Pliny calls them Nisicastes, Bochart shewes, that Pliny was imposed upon; for their true Name was /מִשְׁכָּתִּים/ Mesic-Casta, which signifies, One who drawes a Bowe, and is the very Name used by the Prophet Isaias.²⁵³

Again, In the Text of Isaias, you find Phul and Lud joined, as not being far asunder. Now Phul, is the same with the Phile of the Greeks, a City upon the River Nilus, an hundred furlongs above Syene, in a little Island, whereof tis disputed, whether it belongs to the Egyptians or the Ethiopians. Tis mention'd by Strabo, by Heliodorus, by Diodorus, by Seneca, by Lucan, by Ptolomy, by Antoninus, by Servius, by Procopius, by Isacius, and I know not how many more. And it is called Philia by Aristagoras. It is a Name, that ha's an Elephant in the Signification of it; and Strabo affirms it, κατασκευασμένην ὥαωερ καὶ τὴν Ἐλεφαντίνην, καὶ τὸ μέγεθος ἴσην. The Chaldee ha's the Name in the Plural Number, which agrees well with Phile.²⁵⁴

The Prophet there foretells the Conversion and Vocation of the Gentiles. Bochart thinks the Prophecy fulfill'd, when first the Treasurer of Candace, (the Ethiopian Queen, whom some take to be the very Lady meant by Strabo, when he paints out such a Queen, as ἀνδρική τις γυνή πεπηρωμένη τόν ἕτερον τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν, Virilis mulier quaedam, et altero oculo capta;) was converted by Philip, who thereupon preached the Gospel to the Ethiopians, with so much Success, that they are called Christians unto this very Day.²⁵⁵

When tis said, That Misrajim did begett Ludim, the Meaning seems to be, that the Ethiopians issued forth in Colonies from the Egyptians. And we know, Diodorus and others, have been at the Pains to recount the Resemblances that are between them. There were indeed great Contentions between them, about the Point of Antiquity; but Moses, we see, hath decided it.²⁵⁶

The Jerusalem-Interpreter, thus reads it; Misrajim begat the Mareots; which, according to Bochart, should be read, the Meroites; namely, the Inhabitants of Meroe, the famous Island of Ethiopia, standing in the Midst of Nilus, a thousand furlongs in Breadth, and Thrice as many in Length, and rich in a thousand Commodities.²⁵⁷

Moreover, in Ezek. 30.5. for Lud, some Copies of the Greek Version, expressly have, καὶ Αἰθίοπες. And in the Hebrew Baal Aruch, the Ludæans are a lines 1–9), by Diodorus Siculus (1.22.3, 6), by Seneca (Naturales quaestiones 4.2.3), by Lucanus (10.234, 302–303, 312–313), by Ptolemy (Geographia 4.5.74, line 7), by Antoninus Augustus (Itinerarium [1512]) – a 3rd c. roadmap of the Roman Empire – by Maurus Servius Honoratus (Commentarius in Vergilii Aeneidos librum sextum 6.154), by Procopius Caesariensis (De bellis 1.19.34–36, Procopius 1:187, 189), and by Isaac Tzetzes (Isacius), a scholar of Constantinople (12th c.) and commentator (with his brother Joannes) on the Greek dramas Alexandria and Cassandra, by Pseudo-Lycophron (2nd–3rd c. BCE). The Greek historian Aristagoras, deputy tyrant of Miletus (c. 505–496 BCE), calls the settlement “Phila,” not “Philia” (Fragmenta, fragm. 11–13, line 2). Strabo (17.1.49) celebrates the settlement Philae, “which is built like Elephantinè and is equal to it in size.” The Chaldee Paraphrast or Targum Jonathan (on Isa. 66:19) renders Phul in the plural number, in Walton (3:176). The ruins of the magnificent Isis temple of Philae, an island in Upper Egypt, are now nearly lost in the Nile waters of the Assuam Dam.

255 Bochart (270–71). The prophet foretells the calling of the Gentiles, in Isa. 66:19. The treasurer of Candace, queen of Ethiopia, was converted to Christianity by Philip (Acts 8:26–27). However, since “Candace” was not a name, but the title of the Nubian queens during the Meroitic period (c. 4th c. BCE–c. 3rd c. CE), it is uncertain which specific queen is intended. See Strabo (17.1.54), Dio Cassius (Historiae Romanae 54.5.4, 6; Dio’s Roman History 6:293–95), and Pliny (6.25.186). The Greek citation from Strabo (17.1.54) suggests that Queen Candace was “a masculine sort of woman, and blind in one eye.”

256 Bochart (271). Diodorus Siculus (3.2.1–3.7) argues that the Ethiopians were the first of all mankind (“autochthones”), who had sprung from the soil of their land and colonized Egypt. Mather ends this fray by consulting Moses (Gen. 10:13), who makes Mizraim (Egypt) the father of Ludim (Ethiopia).

257 Bochart (271–72). Both the Targum Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 10:13) and the Targum Jonathan ben Uziel make Mizraim the father of the Mareotae, in Walton (4:18) – Meroe being the capital of Nubia (c. 300 BCE–350 CE) and was located on the upper Nile, at the confluence of the White and Blue Nile and the Atbarah River, in what is now Sudan (KP). See also Herodotus (2.29).

People, qui comedunt filios Hominum, who are Man-eaters. Now Philostratus, and Pliny, and Ptolomy, and Solinus, & Marcian and others, will find these Anthrophagites among the Ethiopians. And several other Probabilities does Bochart bring, from the Hebrew Writers, all which make it evident, That the Ludim can be no other than the Ethiopians.²⁵⁸

Q. Ananim the next?

A. Anam its like, signifies in the old Egyptian Tongue, Sheep, or Cattel; as the like Word also does in the Arabick. The Ananim, therefore Bochart thinks, were the Nomades, who dwelt about Ammon, and Nasamonitis. They lived, & fed & cloath'd themselves, as Herodotus and Diodorus, and Mela tell us, upon their Cattel. The Ammonians (probably a Corruption of Anamians) worshipped their Idol Ammon, under the Figure of a Ram. And Herodotus expressly tells us, That they were a Colony of the Egyptians and the Ethiopians; and used the Language of both. Akin at least unto these, may be the Amantes of Solinus; and the Hammanientes of Pliny; and from them the Garamantes, which is as much as to say, The Stranger, (or, new-come) Amantes.²⁵⁹

Q. Lehabim the Third?

A. We find a particular sort of Libyans, which Mela, Pliny, and Ptolomy call by the Name of Libyans-egyptians, as bordering | on Egypt, unto the Westward [274v] of Thebais, in a Sandy and Sun-burnt Soyl. These Bochart supposes to be the Lehabim; for Lehaba signifies both Flame and Heat.²⁶⁰

²⁶⁰ Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 28, col. 279). Gen. 10:13; 1 Chron. 1:11. Pomponius Mela (De chorographia 1.20); Pliny (5.8.43); Ptolemy (Geographia 4.5.26, line 1).

Q. Naphtuhim the Fourth?

A. Hence the People of Nephthuah. And what Nephthuah was to the Egyptians, we may be informed by Plutarch; who saies, They call Nephthys, the extreme borders of the Land, and the craggy Mountains which touch upon the Sea; or briefly, a mountainous Sea-Coast. Now such a Scituation does Bochart find for our Naphtuchim, in Marmarica, to the Westward of the Egyptian Delta, on the Mediterranean Sea-Coast. Here Herodotus placed his Adyrmachidæ, a People, which he saies, were very like the Egyptians in every thing but their Habit. Not far from hence, was the Ἀπτούχου ἱερόν, Temple of Aptuchus, mention'd by Ptolomy; in which the See retain'd some Footsteps of the Name Naphtuchim. Quære, whether the Name of Neptune were not of this Original?²⁶¹

Q. Pathrusim the Fifth?

A. The Jerusalem-Interpreter will here understand the Pelusiotes. This is doubtless a Mistake. For we often find Pathros and Sin distinguished. Now Sin was Pelusium. Strabo tells us, That Pelusium had its Name, of πηλός, Dirt or Mud. And /שִׁן/ Sin, signifies the very same in the Syrian Language. Ezekiel calls it, [Ezek. 30.15.] The Strength of Egypt; because Egypt was hardest there to be come at. We find in Strabo, in Diodorus, in Suidas, and in Polyænus, that Egypt was there peculiarly fortified. And here dwelt the Sinim: [Isa. 49.12.] Saadiah, in Kimchi, well expounds, The Land of Sinim, to be Pelusium; and it is putt for the South, to make up the Four Points of the Compass there mentioned.²⁶²

We must look for the Pathrusim, in the Land of Pathros; [Jer. 44.1. and Ezek. 29.14.] Not a Town, as Brocardus, & Adrichomius, & other Moderns, would have it. Isaiah, [ch. 11.11.] as well as Jeremiah, distinguishes it from Egypt. Tho' Pathros does in some Sort pertain to Egypt, as tis intimated by Ezekiel. [Ch. 29.14.] It is very likely therefore that Pathros might be Thebais; which Cassian and Pliny mention with some Distinction, when they speak of Egypt. They who make Thebais a Part of Egypt, make Egypt consist of Three Parts; whereas the Dual Form of Misrajim would allow Egypt no more than Two.²⁶³

When the Prophet Ezekiel speaks, of the captive Egyptians returning to Pathros [Ezek. 29.14.] it hitti well with our Interpretation; For the Fury of Nebuchadnezzar, fell chiefly upon Thebais, & carried most of its Inhabitants into Captivity. Compare, Nah. 3.8. No-Amon, [or, Thebes,] went into Captivity, – and all her Great Men were bound in Chains. These Great Men, where those Hundred, whereof Pomponius writes, Thebæ utique (ut Homero dictum est) centum portas, sive (ut alij volunt) centum Aulas habent, totidem olim principum Domos, Solitasque singulas, ubi negotium exegerat, dena Armatorum milia effundere. Mela was indeed mistaken in the Number of the Souldiers thus commanded by the Great Men; which according to his Account, make a Million. Where he saies a Myriad, Homer saies no more than, Two Hundred; It is in his first Iliad.²⁶⁴

The Scituation of Pathros, may be a little gathered from the Words of the Prophet Jeremiah, [ch. 44.1.] All the Jewes, which dwell at Migdol, and at Tahpanhes, and at Noph, and in the Countrey of Pathros. He begins with the Place that lay next unto Judæa and proceeds in Order. Migdol, is the same that Herodotus, and Hecateus, & the Greek Interpreters, call Μάγδαλος, and Antonini calls, Magdulus. It was at the Entrance of Egypt, and according to Antoninus, Twelve Miles off Pelusium. [see Exod. 14.2. and Num. 33.7, 8.] Tahpanhes, is in Herodotus, Δάφνη πέλουσαι, and in Stephanus, Δάφνη, near Pelusium; about Sixteen Miles from it. Noph, is elsewhere called Moph; and it is the same with Memphis; a City in the Upper Egypt, well-known to all the World. Pathros must now ly beyond these, and by Consequence be no other than Thebais. The Greek Interpreters, Isaiah (2:398–99). For much of the same information on Sin and Pelusium, see John Lightfoot, A Chorographical Decad (1661), ch. 1, sec. 2, in A Commentary on the New Testament (1:203–04).

call it, Παθούρης or Φαθώρης, Jerom calls it, Phetros, Patures, and Phatures. And hence Pliny ha's his Phaturites, a Province of Thebais.²⁶⁵

The Destruction of that vast City Thebes, is foretold by diverse of our Prophets; which was exactly fulfill'd. Yett the Prophet Jeremiah saies, [ch. 46.26.] Afterwards it shall be inhabited; which also came to pass. But then again Afterwards a Treble Desolation came upon it. One by the Carthaginians; a Second, by Cambyes the Son of Cyrus; a Third, by Cornelius Gallus, under Augustus. Ammianus Marcellinus briefly mentions them all. Tacitus mentions in his Time, to be seen, Veterum Thebarum magna vestigia. And saies Juvenal, Atque vetus Thebe centum jacet obruta portis.²⁶⁶

Q. But then, Casluchim, (the Sixth,) which Moses makes, the Offspring of the Egyptians, but the Father of the Philistines?

A. Tho' Cholcis be a vast Way, from either Egypt or Palestine, yett my Bochart will have the Casluchim, to be the Cholcians. It was a constant Beleeif among the Ancients, That the People of Cholchis, were a Colony of Egyptians, placed there by the well-known Sesostrys. Among the many Passages of the Poets to that Purpose, which I omitt, that of Priscian is very expressive & positive;

*Intima sed ponti, post fines Tyndaridarum,
Ægypto missi Cholchi tenuere Coloni.*²⁶⁷

²⁶⁵ Bochart (277–78). “Magdolos” is mentioned in Herodotus (2.159.6), in a fragment by the Greek mythographer Hecataeus of Miletus (6th–5th c. BCE), in Stephanus Byzantius (424.9–10), and in such Greek interpreters as Eusebius (Onomasticon, p. 124, line 25; p. 126, line 1), Origen (Selecta in Ezechielem) [PG 13. 825, lines 5 and 10], and Theodoretus (Interpretatio in Ezechielem) [PG 81. 1105, line 49]. According to the Antonius’s Itinerarium (1512), Magdolo (Migdol) is twelve Roman miles south of Pelusium, in NE Egypt (SBD). See also Lightfoot’s Chorographical Decad (cap. 1, sec. 3, p. 204), in Commentary (1:204). Herodotus (2.30.10) calls it “Pelusiace Daphne”; Stephanus Byzantius (222.8–9). Among the Greek interpreters who call the city “Pathoures” are Eusebius (De vitis prophetarum) [PG 22. 1269, line 3], Athanasius Alexandrinus (Synopsis scripturae sacrae) [PG 28. 364, line 54], and Theodoretus (Interpretatio in Ezechielem) [PG 81. 1108, line 28]. For “Phathores,” see Eusebius’s Onomasticon (p. 170, line 15); St. Jerome gives his versions of Pathros, in Liber Jeremiae (cap. 33:1) [PL 28. 913C] and in Liber Isaiah (cap. 11) [PL 28. 786B]. Pliny (5.9.49).

But a whole Army of Historians, do agree with the Poets in this Tradition, and in subscribing to Herodotus, who saies, Tis apparent, That the Cholchians are Egyptians. Only, tis a Mistake, that the Cholchians owe their Original to a Colony of Sesostrys. For Sesostrys being the same with Shishak, [1. King. 14.25.] the Expedition of the Argonauts to Cholchis, was long before his Time. And Sesostrys was, as Pliny assures us, conquered by the Cholchians, & was not in a Condition as a Conqueror, to impose a Colony upon them. The Similitude between the Egyptians and the Cholchians in every thing, (t'were too long to enumerate particulars,) did much confirm their Egyptian Original; tho' the Time of their Transmigration, were as early, as before the Dayes of Abraham. And yett they took up the Rite of Circumcision (one of the Articles in the Similitude,) long after, thro' their Commerce, & Converse, with their old Countreymen, the Egyptians. Diodorus ha's a notable Passage to this Purpose.²⁶⁸

Q. Possibly, Caphtorim (the Seventh,) may confirm the Conjecture?

A. Yes; The Caphthorim, were near Neighbours to the Casluchim, (and indeed became one with them;) And hence the Philistim are said, for to proceed from them also. [Jer. 47.4. and Amos. 9.7. Compare, Deut. 2.23.]

Now all that are skilled in Antiquity, will concur to confirm you, in this Opinion; That Caphthor is Cappadocia. The Three Chaldee Paraphrasts, most expressly call the Caphthorim, no other than Cappadocians. And Strabo is by Josephus Ben-Gorion called, The Caphthorite.

Only you must here understand only that Part of Cappadocia, which lay next unto Cholchis; namely, the Coast near unto Trapezond.²⁶⁹

tion 688–89) and Valerius Flaccus (Argonautica 5.416–24). The expressive lines from Priscianus Caesariensis's Institutiones grammaticae read, "But the inmost parts of the Black Sea, beyond the borders of the Tyndaridae, / are held by Cholchian colonists sent from Egypt."

²⁶⁸ Herodotus (2.104.1). Among the historians that agree with Herodotus (apart from those mentioned above) are Strabo (1.3.21; 11.2.17), Ammianus Marcellinus (Historia 22.8.24), and the Byzantine historian poet Agathias Scholasticus (c. 532–c. 580), in his Historiae (p. 64, line 17). Bochart here adopts the position of Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 8.10.2), who asserts that "Herodotus was mistaken" in attributing the actions of the Egyptian King Shishak, a contemporary of Solomon, to the legendary King Sesostris, who is to have lived centuries before the Trojan War (13th c. BCE). The famous expedition of Jason and the Argonauts for the Golden Fleece of Colchis is celebrated in Pindar's Pythian Odes (4.179–246), in Apollonius Rhodius's Argonautica (4.270–81), and in Apollodorus Atheniensis's Bibliotheca (1.9.16–28). Pliny (33.15.52); Diodorus Siculus (1.55.5) finds proof of the Egyptian origin of the Colchians in their practice of circumcision, "the custom continuing among the colonists sent out from Egypt as it also did in the case of the Jews."

The Fruit, which the Hebrewes call, Caphthor, the Greeks call, Side; from whence the Countrey of Sidene had its Name; a Countrey which Strabo, and Prolomy, and Pliny, will show you in this very Place. Many Reasons there might be for these Peoples Travelling so far from their own Countrey, which at so great a Distance of Time, it is not easy for us to guess at. But that given by Strabo, is as likely as any; The Wealth of those Regions; which, we also know, brought Expeditions of several other Nations, even of Saracens, and Persians, upon them. Albeit, I find that ingenious Gentleman, Sir John Chardin, in the curious Relation of his Travels thro' these woful Regions, (published, 1686.) letting fall this Passage; "I know not what is become of that Gold-Gravel, and Golden-Sand, which the People sponged out of the Water, with their Sheep-skins, according to the ancient Stories, & which gave Occasion to the Fable, of the Golden-Fleece. There is no such thing in Colchis, nor in the Mountains or Rivers adjoining. So that which Way so ever Yee go, there is no Possibility of Reconciling Antiquity with the present Times."²⁷⁰

However, after the People had settled in these Regions, either they found them not so Rich as was Reported, or the Climate was too cold for them, or their neighbours grew too Troublesome to them. Wherefore considerable Numbers thought of Returning to the Southward. A Party of them, in this Return, dispossessed the Avites, [Deut. 2.23.] and settled themselves in that Part of Palestine. There are some things in the old Greek Poets, that seem to relate unto this Expedition.²⁷¹

Q. We have done with Misrajim. Lett us pass to his Brother Phut?

A. These two Brothers, do seem in a Manner to have divided Africa between them. Unto Misrajim, fell Egypt, & that Part of Africa, which extended unto the Marsh Tritonis. Unto Phut fell the rest of Africa, even until you come to the Atlantic Ocean. Thus Africa was divided into two Portions, that were almost (Trebizond, Trapezus), a Pontian harbor on the Black Sea, see Strabo (7.6.2; 11.2.14; 12.3.17), Flavius Arrianus (Periplus ponti Euxini 11.1.11–12), and Xenophon (Anabasis 4.8.23–24).

²⁷⁰ Bochart (290–91). The Caphthor fruit, or "Side," is the "malum punicum" or "pomegranate" (Pliny 6.3.11; 13.34.111), and by Strabo (1.3.7; 12.3.16) associated with Sidene, a region in Cappadocia, or rather Pharnacia, a region between Cerasus and Trapezus (Stephanus Byzantius 659.3–6); Ptolemy (Geographia 5.6.5); Strabo (1.2.39) celebrates "the wealth of the regions about Colchis, which is derived from the mines of gold, silver, iron, and copper." No wonder the legend of the Golden Fleece, which attracted Jason and his Argonauts to seek the treasure safeguarded by a dragon. Mather's embellishment cited from Sir John Chardin's Travels (1686) 91, does not appear in Bochart.

Equal. And Herodotus tells us, That the Manners of the People between whom it was Divided, were very much Alike.²⁷²

Some Footsteps of the Name Phut, we have in a City of Africa, called Putea, near from Adrumetum; and in a River called Fut, which runs thro' Mauritania Tingitana into the Ocean. Ptolomy mentions the City, Pliny the River, and so Josephus and Eusebius, and many of the Ancients.²⁷³

However, there is no necessity for us, to confine all the Phuteans, on that Side of Tritonis. We find some of them in a nearer Neighbourhood unto Egypt. [Jer. 46.9. and Ezek. 30.5. Nah. 3.9.] We find them in Marmarica; where was Phthia Portus, and Pythis Extrema. Yea, in Egypt | itself, where it joins with Libya, we find Phthem Phuti. Jeremiah describes our Phuteans, as notable for their Shields: [Jer. 46.9.] And Xenophon describes one sort of Egyptians accordingly, as carrying Shields, that covered them from Head to Foot. This might be a sort of Shield, which Homer calls, ἀσπίδα ἀμφιβρότην, Clypeum ambivirum; And Maximus Tyrius cries 'em up, as famous for their Shields; and Heliodorus, mentions their συνασπισμῳ, or, making a Tortoise, (as the Souldiers call'd it,) with them.²⁷⁴ [276v]

The Name Phut, according to Bochart, carries Dispersion, in the Signification of it. Accordingly, the Phuteans, for the Sterility of their Soyl, were the Nomades of Africa. According to Mela, In familias passim, et sine Lege Dispersi, nihil in commune consultant. Strabo has the like Passage concerning them; for which Cause Africa was compared unto the Skin of a Panther, for the Families of the Inhabitants, like Scattered Spotts here & there upon it.²⁷⁵

Another Name of Africa, that we find in the Scripture, was /לִיב/Lub, or Libya. Hence we read of the Lubim, [2. Chron. 12.3. and 16.8. and Dan. 11.43.

272 This and the subsequent paragraphs are extracted from Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 33, col. 294–99). “Tritonis” is both a marshy lake and river in Libya (N Africa), associated with Pallas Athena (Minerva), surnamed “Tritonia” (Hesiod, Opera et Dies 76; Herodotus 4.178–79, 188); Herodotus (4.186–88) describes the manners of these N African people.

273 Bochart (295). “Putea” is located near “Adrumetum” (Adrume, Adrumes, Adrumetus, now Mahometta), a town SE of Carthage on the Mediterranean; “Mauritania Tingitana” roughly occupies the present area of Morocco with Tangier, its major city, near the Straits of Gibraltar. Ptolemy (Geographia 4.1.3); Pliny (5.1.13); Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.6.2) and Eusebius Pamphilus's Onomasticon.

274 Bochart (295); “Pythis” is a promontory of Marmarica (Lybia), with “Phthia Portus” its maritime harbor, in Ptolemy (Geographia 5.4.2). Xenophon (Cyropaedia 6.2.10; 7.1.33); Homer's speaks of, “the strap of his sheltering shield” (Iliad 2.389) and Scholia Graeca in Homeri Iliadem (2.389a scholion 1); Maximus Tyrius (Dialexeis 13.1, sec. a, lines 2–5); Heliodorus (Aethiopica 9.19.5, lines 1–3).

275 Bochart (296). Herodotus (4.185–86) describes the region as barren and waterless, without beasts, trees, or moisture, the inhabitants building their houses from salt blocks. According to Pomponius Mela's De chorographia (1.37), the Phutaeans are “scattered into families everywhere, and without law, they have no communications together.” Strabo (17.3.1) asserts that Libya is mostly desert and “dotted with settlements that are small, scattered, and mostly nomadic”; Cnaeus Piso, its one-time prefect, told Strabo that Libya was “like a leopard's skin; for it is dotted with inhabited places that are surrounded by waterless and desert land” (Strabo 2.5.33).

and Nah. 3.9.] The Name according to Bochart, signifies, To languish for Thirst. Whence Lucan very properly — Per calidas Libyæ sitientis Arenas.

And very peculiarly it might belong to Xerolibya; of which Virgil,

*Hinc deserta siti regio.*²⁷⁶

We find the Libyans, represented, [2. Chron. 16.8.] with many Chariots & Horsemen. Accordingly, if you consult Herodotus, and Xenophon, and Pausanias, you will see, that they were a People mightily for Chariots; they chose even to fight their Battels in them; and they did it with much Dexterity. And hence Neptune, who was peculiarly the God, of Libya, was reputed the first, who taught the Art of Riding, and of Joining Horses in Chariots.²⁷⁷

Q. We have but one more Son of Cham to take notice of, and that was Canaan?

A. The Mercury of the Ancients.

The Land of Canaan ha's made him famous. The Phœnicians were his Posterity. The Name of Canaanites and Phœnicians, are used promiscuously; by the Septuagint. There is very little mention of them among the Greek Writers, under the Name of Canaanites. Not but that Eupolemus does expressly say, Chanaan was the Father of the Phœnicians. And Philo Byblius, a very ancient Writer, mentions one CHNA, qui Phœnicis nomine insignis fuerit; which CHNA is doubtless but a Decurtation of Canaan. But it is probable, as Bochart thinks, That the Canaanites were ashamed of their Name, and gott rid of it, because of the Curse that Noah denounced against their Father, especially, when they saw the Curse accomplished, and the Sword of the Israelites horribly destroying of them, on that score, that they were Canaanites. They chose rather therefore to be called, Syrians, Assyrians, Sidonians, Phœnicians, & Syrophœnicians.²⁷⁸

²⁷⁶ Bochart (297). Marcus Annaeus Lucanus (1.368) sings, "through the burning sands of thirsty Libya." And Virgil (Aeneid 4.32) chimes in with, "on that side lies a tract barren with drought."

Q. But the Eleven Sons of Canaan must come under our Consideration; and then we have done.

A. Sidon is the first of them. Trogus is probably in the Right, when he thinks, the Name of Sidon to come, à Piscium ubertate; For, Said is Fishery. And the Sea about the City Sidon, was Mare Piscosissimum; abounding with Fish. So that the Intention of Moses is, That the first-born of Canaan whatever might be his Name, was the Builder of the City Sidon, and the Father of its Inhabitants. Sidon appears by this, to have been a very ancient City; and tho' Tyrus were called Antiqua by the Poets, and Herodotus as well as the Prophet Isaiah (ch. 23.7.) bring it in, boasting of its Antiquity, yett it must give Sidon the Preheminence. Yea, according to Trogus, the Sidonians after many Years, being driven out of their Seat by the Ashcalonites, then sailed over & built the City, Tyrus. This happened, according to Josephus, Two Hundred and Forty Year{s}, before the building of Solomons Temple. Wherefore, tho' we read of Sidon in the Books of Moses, & Joshua, & the Judges, we read nothing of Tyrus, until the Dayes of David. [Except, Josh. 19.29. should be, Paletyrus, or, the Old Tyrus.] Nor does Homer once mention Tyrus, tho' he often mention{s} Sidon; And Strabo notes, The Poets do most celebrate Sidon. In the Book of Joshua, (if it be there,) tis called, A Strong City. It was indeed the greatest that the Phœnicians had; and so Diodorus accordingly describes it, and adds, That it had more than an Hundred Galleyes belonging to it. Tho' Tyrus, according to Curtius, afterwards exceeded it. The Idolatrous Temples built in it, by Hiram, to Jupiter, and Astarte, and Hercules, were peculiarly magnificent, and their other Buildings more stately than those of Rome. There stood between Tyrus and Sidon, which according to Strabo, were two hundred Furlongs asunder, the Town of Sarepta; which had its Name from the Running of Coper and Iron there; Compare Deut. 33.25. And Homer intimates the abounding of these Metals hereabouts;

Ἐκ μὲν Σιδωνος πῶλυ χαλκοῦ εὐχομαι·

In Sidon I boast to be born, where's

*Brass in Abundance.*²⁷⁹

Græco-Jewish historian Eupolemus (fl. 150 BCE) is taken from the Greek polymath Alexander Polyhistor (b. c. 105 BCE). Bochart's citation from Philon of Byblos originates in Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica (1.10.39d, but see also 1.10.34c and 9.17.419d). Philon Byblos mentions CHNA [Cana] "who had his name changed to Phoenix" (Bochart 301); the story of Noah's curse of Canaan appears in Gen. 9:25; the Israelites' conquest of Canaan took more than 200 years to accomplish after their Exodus from Egypt (Exod. 23:23, Numb 21:3).

[277r] | The People of Tyrus and Sidon were a sharp-witted People. Arithmetic and Astronomy went from them unto the Græcians. They had betimes, very acute Philosophers among them. At their Mechanicks they were notable; Purple and Linen, and Glass-work, were their Inventions. Even Solomon himself admired their Carpenters. [1. King. 5.6.] Homer calls them therefore, πολυδαιδάλους. And if he mention any curious Artifice, he makes it of a Sidonian Original.²⁸⁰

The Hittites, the Sons of Heth, dwelt about Hebron and Beersheba, in the Southern Part of the Land of Canaan. They were so Terrible to their Neighbours, that they seem to have had their Name from חֲתָה / Hittha, which signifies Terror and Consternation. [Compare, 2. King. 7.6.] Arba, and Anak, and the Terrible Giants descended from them, were of this Tribe.²⁸¹

The Jebusites, were Warriors, not inferior to them, and held Jerusalem, & the Tower of Zion, unto the very Days of David. And they then imagined themselves to be so strongly fortified, that they said unto David, If thou come hither, the Blind & the Lame shall chase thee away. [2. Sam. 5.8.] David provoked at this Insolence, then said, Whosoever smites the Jebusites, shall be Chief & Captain; and said again, whosoever smites the Jebusites, Lett him cast down into the Channel adjoining to the Wall, the Blind & the Lame, as being under the Special Resentments of David. Bochart makes this to be so plainly the Sense of the Words, that he wonders learned Men have so laboured about it. Near Spain there was a Phœnician Colony, upon an Island called, Ebusum, at this Day, Ibissa; which Bochart thinks might be of a Jebusite-Original.²⁸² arum Philippicarum 18.3.5). Herodotus (2.44) mentions that Tyre had been settled more than 2,300 years before his own lifetime. Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 8.3.1). Josh. 19:29 mentions Tyre (KJV), but the Hebrew original reads “Tzor,” signifying “a rock” [Strong’s # 6865]. Johann Jakob Hofmann (1635–1706), Swiss professor of Greek and history at Basel, identifies “Palætyrus” as one of the designations of old Tyre, in his Lexicon Universale (1677), pars II, p. 85: “Tyrus.” Homer mentions the Sidonians in several places in the Iliad (6.290–91, 23.743) and in the Odyssey (4.84, 618; 13.285). Strabo (16.2.22) notes that “Homer does not even mention Tyre,” but that the poets sing “the praises of Tyre.” Mather questions whether the Hebrew place name צֹר (Josh 19:29), signifying “a rock” or “strong city,” is actually the same as King Hiram’s Tyre. Diodorus Siculus (16.44.6) relates that Tyre “had more than a hundred triremes and quinqueremes.” For much the same see Pomponius Mela (De chorographia 1.57). Quintus Curtius Rufus (4.2.1–4.4.19) describes Alexander’s sacking and spoiling of Tyre. According to Strabo (16.2.24), the city that lies between Tyrus and Sidon is the “City of Ornithes.” The Mediterranean Sarepta, or Zarephath (the modern Surafend), is located S of Sidon (1 Kin. 17:9–10). Deut. 33:25 prophesies, “Thy shoes shall be iron and brass.” Disguised Athena, Homer’s great tactician, tells Odysseus the following fib: “Out of Sidon, rich in bronze, I declare myself to be” (Odyssey 15.425).

²⁸⁰ Bochart (303). Homer calls the Sidonians “well skilled in handiwork” (Iliad 23.743).

²⁸² Bochart (304). For the Jebusite warriors, see Josh. 15:63. The boast of the Jebusites (in

The Amorites dwelt in the mountainous Parts of Judea; but they made a Salley over Jordan, to combat the Moabites & Ammonites, and possessed themselves of all the Land between the Rivers Jabok, and Arnon. In remembrance of that Victory, a certain Canaanitish Poet wrote an Ἐπινίκιον, which Moses condescends to insert in the Book of Numbers. [Ch. 21.27.] The Prophet Amos tells us, They were like Cedars for Heighth, & like Oaks for Strength. [Amos. 2.9.] It seems, there were Giants among them: Og was one of them.²⁸³

The Gergasites, had their dwelling about Gergesa, or Gadara, beyond Jordan; even to our Saviours Time. The Argilla of the Soyl, which is in Hebrew גֶּרְגֶּשׁ/Garges, may seem to have been the Original of the Name.²⁸⁴

The Hivites dwelt about Mount Hermon; which being in the Eastern Part of Canaan, (Psal. 89.13.) they were called Cadmonites, or Orientalis. (Gen. 15.19.) Cadmus, and his Wife Harmonia, seem to have had their Names from hence. The Fable saies, They were turned into Serpents; which is the very English of the Word, Hivites. The Jewes think they were called so, because they were a sort of Troglodytes, and like Serpents, dwelt in Caves and Holes of the Earth. The Gibeonites, and Sichemites, were Colonies of these Hivites.²⁸⁵

The Arkites, held Arca, or Arce, a Town in Libanus, mentioned by Ptolomy, and Josephus (out of Menander.) Here doubtless was the Temple of Venus Architis Mather's italicized passages) is adapted from 2 Sam. 5:6, 8 and 1 Chron. 11:6. Strabo (3.4.7; 3.5.1) mentions the Phoenician colony on Ebusos (Ibiza).

283 Bochart (304). The Canaanite poet wrote an "Epinikion" or "victory song," which the famous Rashi attributes to Balaam, son of Beor – "they who speak in proverbs." The Amorite ode here begins with the words "Come into Heshbon" (Numb. 21:27), which Moses here copies from his vanquished enemies. (Mather erroneously cites in his manuscript verse 17 instead of 27). See also Midrash Rabbah (Num. XIX:30). Numb 13:28, 32–33 mentions the giant sons of Anak; and Deut. 3:11 brags about having vanquished King Og of Bashan, a remnant of those giants, whose iron bedstead was of legendary size. For a further discussion of Moses's borrowing from his enemy's annals and its significance to Mather's views on philological criticism of the Bible, see R. Smolinski, "Authority" (185–86).

284 The Girgas(h)ites (those "dwelling on a clayey soil") are the offspring of Canaan (Gen. 10:16; 1 Chron. 1:14), [Strong's # 1622]. Both Mark 5:1 and Luke 8:26 mention the Gadarenes across from Galilee.

285 Bochart (305). "Kadmonites" suggests "Easterners" [Strong's # 6935], a people of Canaan before Abraham's arrival. Cadmus, the mythical founder of Boiotian Thebes, and his wife Harmonia, daughter of Ares, are by Zeus turned into serpents and conducted to Elysium; see Hesiod (Theogonia 937–80), Apollodorus (Bibliotheca 3.5.4), Ovid (Metamorphoses 4.562–603); (KP 3:39). Mather's farfetched etymology derived from the mythological associations of the Cadmonites (near Mt. Hermon) with the metamorphosis of Cadmus and Harmonia into serpents is not sustained by the Hebrew name "Hivite" (Gen. 10:17), sixth generation of Canaan's descendants living near Mt. Hermon; for the word "Hivite" חִיטִי (chiwiy) is generally rendered "villagers" [Strong's # 2340], whereas נָחָשׁ (nachash) and פֶּתֶן (pethen) respectively signify "serpent, snake" and "asp" (Gen. 3:1, Isa. 11:8) [Strong's # 5175, 6620]. According to Pliny (2.71.178; 2.75.183; 5.5.34), the Troglodytes, named after an Ethiopian people, are cave dwellers along the shores of the Red Sea. For Cadmon's association with the Hivites and serpents, see especially Theophilus Gale's Court of the Gentiles (1672), Part 1, bk. 1, ch. 6, pp. 31–35.

(the same with Apacites,) worshipped with wonderful Devotion by the Phenicians, as we are informed by Macrobius.²⁸⁶

The Sinites, according to Jerom, were not far from the Arkites.

The Arvadites, or Aradites, occupied the Island of the Arades, on the Phœnician Coast, at the Mouth of the River Eleutherus; & Part of the neighbouring Continent, where we find Antaradus, and Marathus, and Laodicea. Strabo and others tell of notable Exploits done by them. Eusebius, reports that they burnt alive, Curtius Thalassus, with Four Cohorts, Quod Tributa gravius exigeret. We find in Dion, they did what they did in that Matter, out of Hatred unto Antony, who by his Præfects, vexed Syria with very cruel Taxes. The Aradites are commended by Strabo, for their Φίλοπονία πρὸς τὴν θαλαττουργίαν, Stodium rei Navalis. [Compare Ezek. 27.8.] The City Tripolis, did partly consist of these Aradites; As we are informed by Scylax, and by Pliny, & by Diodorus.²⁸⁷

The Zemarites (by some with Ignorance enough taken to be the same with the Samaritans,) why might not they be the Builders of Semarajim, a Town in the Tribe of Benjamin, or of Simyra, a Town on the Sea-Coast, near Orthosia? Eusebius, we know, derives the Orthosites from the Zemarites.²⁸⁸

²⁸⁶ Gen. 10:17. "Arca" is by Ptolemy (Geographia 5.15.5, line 6) called "Ptolemais" (near Tyrus and Sidon). Strabo (16.2.25) explains that in former times "Ptolemais" used to be called "Acê." Hence Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.6.2, 9.14.2) mentions "Ace" and cites Menander of Ephesus (c. 3rd c. BCE), author of a Greek history of the Phœnicians, which incorporates a translation of the Tyrian records. Ambrosius Theodosius Macrobius (Saturnalia 1.21.1) has the Phœnicians and Assyrians adore Venus Architidis (Proserpina), queen of the underworld.

²⁸⁷ Bochart (305–06). The Sinites (Gen. 10:17; 1 Chron. 1:15), a Canaanite tribe that is to have lived in N Lebanon, is by St. Jerome on Gen. 10:15 associated with the city Sinus, i.e., the ruins of Sinum (Sini, Sinna), a mountain fortress, which only survives as a place name (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 41). The Arvadites (Gen. 10:18), descendants of Canaan's son Arvad, are associated with the Aradians. Strabo (16.2.12, 13, 14) explains that the Aradians inhabited Aradus, an island off the mainland, between the Aradian "naval station and Marathus." Aligning themselves with the Syrian kings, the Aradians acquired large tracts on the mainland when they sided with Callinicus Seleucus (c. 265–225 BCE) against his younger brother Antiochus Hierax (c. 263–226 BCE) during the "Third Syrian War" (246–242 BCE) (OCD). According to Eusebius's Chronicon, translated into Latin by St. Jerome (Hieronymi Chronicon, p. 240), the Roman Prefect Curtius Publius Filius Salassus (Thalassus), "who had exacted a heavy tribute," was burnt alive along with four cohorts on the island of Aradus, in the 184th Olympiad (c. 44–41 BCE). Cassius Dio (Historiae Romanae 48.24.3; Dio's Roman History 5:269) describes the Aradians' hatred for Marcus Antonius (c. 83–30 BCE), Julius Caesar's military leader in Syria and Egypt, and later Roman triumvir, who committed suicide with Cleopatra. Strabo (16.2.14) praises their "prudence and industry in their maritime affairs." In Periplus Scylax (104.6–11), Scylax Caryandensis (c. 5th–4th c. BCE) explains that the Phœnician city of Tripolis was established partially by Aradites, Sidonians, and Tyrians. Pliny (5.17.78) and Diodorus Siculus (16.41.1) say much the same.

²⁸⁸ Bochart (306–07). Gen. 10:18. The chronographer Georgius Syncellus (not Eusebius) links the "Samareans" (descendants of Ham's son Canaan) with the "Orthosiates" (Eclogia chronographia, p. 52, line 7). See also Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.6.2). The Phœnician city Orthosias (1 Macc. 15:37), located toward the N of Tripolis but S of the Eleutheris River (Pliny, Naturalis historia 5.17.78), is also mentioned by Strabo (16.2.21, 22) and others.

The Hamathites, inhabited the Land of Hamath, which was the Northern Border to the Land of Canaan. [Num. 13.21. and 34.8.] Its Metropolis, was that Antiochia, which was called, Epiphania; who was the Lesser, opposed unto the Greater of the Gracians, which was called, Hamath the Great. [Amos. 6.2.]²⁸⁹

Unto which of these Eleven Tribes, the Perizzites, and those which are more especially called the Canaanites in Moses's Catalogue of the Nations devoted unto Destruction, may belong tis not easy to say. The Scripture is wholly silent. Only we find, That the Perizzites, dwelt mostly on the Hills, & in the Woods. They had none but Country-Villages. And the Name of Perizzite, is much as to say, Villager, or Pagan.

| The Chanaanites dwelt more by the Water Side; and the Name signifying [278v] Merchants, it may be, they were principally such.²⁹⁰

The Kenites and the Kenizzites are Numbred with them. [Gen. 15.19.] All we can find of them, is what Eustathius tells us; That they inhabited, Libanus and Amarus; he means, Amanus. Doubtless, their Names were lost, between the Dayes of Abraham and Moses.²⁹¹

It ha's been enquired, why the Curse upon Cham, fell principally upon Canaan? *Theodore*t saies, That he understood from a Jew, a Tradition, that Canaan was the first who saw his Grandfathers Nakedness, & show'd it unto his Father. And we have such a Passage in Beresith Rabba, a Book written before the *Dayes of Theodore*t.

But among the Eleven Tribes of Canaan, we find only Seven singled out by the Lord, for Extermination. And this wholly turns upon the Justice of a Sovereign God.²⁹²

²⁸⁹ Bochart (307). Gen. 10:18; 1 Chron. 1:16. St. Jerome's commentary on Gen. 10:18 identifies the Hamathites with the fortress Hamath on the Orontes, and with Antiochia and Epiphania (De situ et nominibus locorum Hebraicorum). See also Jerome's addition to "Aimath (Aemoth)," in Eusebius's Concerning the Place Names (on Joshua); Epiphania is here associated with the fortress Hamath, which is called "the Lesser," to distinguish it from the kingdom of Hamath, or "Hamath the Greater" (2 Chron. 8:3), the boundaries of which were nearly identical with those of the later Caele-Syria (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, pp. 41–42).

²⁹⁰ Bochart (307). Gen. 15:20. Moses's catalogue includes the Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites (Exod. 3:8, 17; 33:2; 34:11 etc.).

²⁹¹ Eustathius Antiochenus describes the Kenites and Kenizzites (Gen. 15:19), names of collective tribes in the mountainous regions of S Palestine and of the Sinai Peninsula, in his Commentarius in Hexaemeron [PG 18. 756, lines 53–54]. Bochart asserts their extinction, but John Lightfoot disagrees, in his Chorographical Decad (ch. 10, secs. 3–4) and in Chorographical Inquiry (ch. 3, secs. 2–3) – both in Works (2:329–30, 499–500).

²⁹² Bochart, Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 37, col. 308–09). In his Quaestiones in Octateuchum: Genesis. (Quest. 58), Theodoretus asserts that Ham is punished through his son Canaan, because Ham had sinned as a son against his own father. According to the Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XXXVI: 7), R. Nehemiah argues that Noah cursed Canaan, Ham's son, because Canaan was the first to see his grandfather's nakedness. Bochart lists only six (not seven) Canaanite tribes that are vanquished: the Sidonians, Arkeans, Sineans, Aradians, Samareans, and Hamatheans.

Thus we have Digested, into as little Room as we could, the Phaleg of the Incomparable Bochart, not without some Leave now and then taken, to fetch in from some other Quarter a little Part of our Entertainment. If I am not mistaken, it will be grateful unto an Ingenious Reader, to find so many Pagan Writers, thus conspiring to confirm the Mosaic Account, How the Sons of Noah have been dispersed over the Habitable Earth. And you have now before you, not only an Illustration upon the Tenth and Eleventh Chapters of Genesis, with many intermixed Curiosities, but you have also found many Scores of other Texts in the Sacred Scriptures, by the way Illustrated, with such Hints as you shall not find in the common Annotations.

We have done this, as Bochart expresses it, *Ad Dei Gloriam omnia referentes, et Scriptura Illustrationem; cui non Arabes modò et Ebræos, sed et Romanos et Græcos Scriptores mirum in modum concinere toto opere passim docemus: Non quod talibus suffragijs Dei verbum in se fiat firmitus, sed ut infirmitati Hominum consulatur, et revincantur Athei.*²⁹³

If the Phaleg of Bochart ha's undergone some Contraction in this my poor Endeavour, I will on that Occasion transcribe the Lines, which I find written by the Pen of my learned Friend, Mr. Samuel Lee, in a blank Leaf, at the Beginning of the, Geographia Sacra, of Bochart, which from his Library comes into mine.

*Est Author eruditus sanè, sed non optimi judicij; et verbosus nimis in tricis minimè necessarijs; et lectionem ostentans sèpè, cum parum prodest opus prolixum quidem in decimam partem rejici poterit.*²⁹⁴

²⁹³ In the "Author's Preface" of Geographia Sacra, 4th ed. (1707), "Praefatio," p. 44, Bochart wants to give credit where credit is due: "referring everything to the glory of God, and the illustration of scripture; with which, as we point out, not only the Arabs and Hebrews, but also the Roman and Greek writers agree in an amazing way in every part of the work; not to make the word of God stronger in itself through such judgments, but to look to man's weakness and to defeat the atheists."

²⁹⁴ Mather's copy of Bochart's Geographia Sacra. Cujus Pars Prior: Phaleg De Dispersione gentium (1646, 1674) came from the library of the Rev. Samuel Lee (1625–91), father of Mather's third wife, Lydia Lee George, whom Mather married in 1715. By the time of Samuel Lee's death, two editions of Bochart's Geographia had appeared. It is uncertain which of the two editions Mather obtained. At any rate, Lee's encomium on Bochart is tempered by criticism: He "is certainly a learned author, but not one of the best judgment, and too verbose in the least necessary trifles. Also, he often shows off how much he has read, when it is hardly necessary. He could even have reduced his lengthy work to a tenth of the size." Well, there it is.

Q. It is, in our Translation said, concerning the Builders of Babel, They Journey'd from the East, and found a Plain, in the Land of Shinar. Do you approve the Translation? v. 2.

A. No. The Mountains of Ararat, the Gordyæan Mountains, are not Eastward unto the Plain of Shinar; nor is the Countrey of Armenia. But a learned Man thinks, that Kedem, which wee translate, The East, is the proper Name for the Land of Canaan; or Palestine. To prove this, you need but consider that Place [Gen. 13.11, 12.] where tis said of Lot, Hee Journeyed from the East, when hee went from Bethel, to the Plains of Jordan and Sodom; whereas, Bethel is contrariwise to the Eastward of those Plains; but the Meaning is, Hee travelled from Canaan, or Palestine: And the Context [ver. 12.] will further clear it. You must know, that according to my learned Friend, this Countrey was of old Inhabited, by the most Ancient Patriarchs; & by Noah. It was called, Kedem, for its Antiquity: [from אֲנֶיִת / Ante-ivit.] and that famous Phœnician, who carried so many Hebrew Antiquities, with his Colonies; into Grecia, might bee called Cadmus because of the Countrey from whence hee came.¹

However, I do elsewhere give you further Intimations, about the Land of Kedemah, which may help to shape your Thoughts about this Matter.²

Q. What may be the Etymology of Shinar? v. 2.

A. Bochart thinks, it may be this. נָעַר / Naar, signifies, To Shake out. The Word is used, Job. 38.13. That the Wicked might be Shaken out of the Earth. The Inhabitants of this Land, were, by the Just Judgment of God, Shaken out of it, and scattered into all Parts of the World. It was therefore called, The Land of Shinar.

Pliny, and Eutropius, and Ptolomy, and Ammianus, and Athanasius, and the Nubian Geographer, mention Singara, a City of Mesopotamia. Sextus Rufus and

Pomponius Lætus mention a Countrey of that Name. And there is a Mountain of that Name in Ptolomy. The Name seems the same with our Shinar. And probably that Name, not only took in the Fields about Babylon, but also the whole Region on the Western Banks of Tigris, as far as the Armenian Hills.³

Q. I pray, What is to bee Thought about, The Confusion of Tongues, at Babel? Is the Ancient & Vulgar Opinion that Josephus with the rest of Mankind ha's had of it, still to bee Received? v. 6, 7.⁴

A. There is a very learned Man, Vitringa by Name, who endeavours to prove, That the whole World is mistaken about that Business: tho' after all, I suspect, a great Part of the World will take him to be so. Hee examines, the original Text, which wee Translate, They have all one Language, and hee demonstrates, that it is not to bee understood, concerning an Agreement in Dialects of Speech, but an Agreement in Sentiments of Mind. Before Men attempted the Building of that unhappy Tower, there was a General & a Fraternal Consent among them; they were well united in Temper, in Judgment, in Design, & briefly, t'was a very loving World. But the Almighty God, being offended, at the Design which these People were now upon, (which Design of Nimrod, is, by the way, by Josephus well explained) so contrary to His Purpose of Replenishing the Earth with scattered Inhabitants, & Resolving to overthrow the Foundation, which they now laid for Idolatry, for Insatiable Tyranny, & for Illimitable Monarchy, Hee sent the Fire of Dissension among them. Hee divided their Counsels, & permitted the Dividing Angels, to distract them with very cross Apprehensions, & inflame them with mutual Animosities. And their Minds being now Incureably Alienated, they soon dispersed themselves, into the Separations of Regions and Climates, remote from one another. There are diverse things in the old Jewish Monuments, that countenance this Interpretation; especially That, in Capitulis R. Eliesaris. Cap. 24. Quid fecerunt? Accepit quisque gladium suum, et Depugnarunt inter se ad perditionem, ad eò ut media pars mundi illic gladio ceciderit. And in the old Pagan Monuments also, there are sundry things of this Importance; especially in what Hesiod writes about the Fourth Age, in Op. et Di.: too long to bee Recited.⁵

⁴ Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.4.3) provides the standard interpretation that God punished Nimrod's subjects for building the tower by causing "a tumult among them, by producing diverse languages; and causing that, through the multitude of those languages, they should not be able to understand one another." Significantly, Ibn Ezra (on Gen. 11:7) provides a more modern explication: God scattered the people first, and as a result the different languages slowly arose over a long period of time (Commentary 1:143). For a review of the exegetical debate, see Bochart's Geographia (pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 15, col. 49–61); Johannes Buxtorf (the Younger), Dissertationes philologico-theologicae (1662), Diss. 1–3; Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:143–44); Jean LeClerc's Twelve Dissertations (Diss. VI, pp. 170–81), and Richard Simon's Critical History of the OT (bk. 1, chs. 14–15, pp. 97–107).

To confirm this Notion, he saies,⁶ 'Tis easy to prove, That all the Tongues now in the World, have been derived, & altered, from the unchanged Hebrew, by a long Succession of Time; Yea, that the Posterity of Cham, kept the Hebrew much purer & longer, than the Children of Japhet; for this, wee have Strabo's Authority, besides a thousand other Evidences. And it is evident from Job, as well as other Monuments of Antiquity, That the Dispersed Oriental Nations, well understood, one another, with very little Difference of Dialect, many Ages after the Tower of Babel. Yea, you may Ask Bochart, & hee'l satisfy you, That the Canaanites themselves, five hundred Years after the Building of Babel, had the very same Language, wherein the Old Testament is written: it is called in Isa. 19.18. The Language of Canaan. | The Names of Men & Things, mentioned in the Book of Genesis, critically examined, will all evince this Assertion; and the Gradual Degeneration of Languages, among all People, by Traffic & Mixtures; whose primitive Words, especially such as wee can learn were in Use among them some thousands of Years ago, are plainly of an Hebrew Original, do's marvellously conspire to establish this Hypothesis. But the Essay would grow too long, if I should enlarge upon it. And it would, after all, seem liable to great Exception's. I do not acqui[sce] in Vitringa's Notion.⁷

5 Mather here relies on Compegius Vitringa (1659–1722), the famous Dutch Hebraist, professor of Oriental languages and theology at Franeker. The work in question is probably Vitringa's Observationum sacrarum libri septem (1726), lib. 1, dissertatio prima, cap. 1–9, pp. 1–124, an oft-quoted collection examining controversial issues of exegesis (SH 12:229). Vitringa here challenges the orthodox interpretation that all mankind spoke one language (Gen. 11:1), arguing that “one language” is a figure of speech suggesting “unison” or “harmony.” This allegorization of the historical and grammatical sense is already contained in the Targum Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 11:1), in Walton (4:19), which suggests that “all the inhabitants of the earth were of one language, and of one speech, and of one counsel” (Etheridge 1:189). Vitringa thus implicitly rejects the miraculous explanation of the confusion of the languages at Babel and insists that the different tongues emerged through people's isolation and separation from one another. Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.4.3), Philo Judaeus (De confusione linguarum (5.15), and Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis (1:134–137b) – all affirm the miraculous confusion of the tongues. Mather's adaptation from Vorstius's Latin translation of רבי אליעזר פרקי Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. 24, p. 52 describes their confused reaction as follows: “What did they do? Every one took his sword, and they fought one another to destroy (each other), and half the world fell there by the sword” (Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer 177). Hesiod (Opera et Dies 156–75) describes the fertility of the earth and the peace and tranquility of its inhabitants during the Fourth Age, before men of the Iron (or Fifth) Age sowed dissension.

6 Vitringa.

7 Among many others, St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 16.11) argues that Hebrew was the first language of man, which was preserved by the descendents of Shem and Heber for a long time (NPNFi 2:317). For the same conservative assertion (Gen. 11:1), see Henry Ainsworth (Annota-

A Notion of Becman, in his, Analecta Historica de Varijs Rebus, à condito mundo usque ad Tempora Constantini M. deserves a little more Attention. He explains the Confusion of Languages, by supposing, That Men, by a Stroke from Heaven on their Minds, on a sudden forgott the Language which was common to all, & could not express themselves, till they were Divided into several Companies, & by Degrees framed a New Language, which was the Effect of an Invention purely Humane. So that there was nothing supernatural in the forming of New Languages; the Miracle was in their sudden forgetting of the old one. The Hebrew Word, for, confounded here, is to take in the Shame that seized Men, when they found they had forgott their Language.⁸ The Author of the Dissertations Sur La Bible, published lately at Paris, does expose the Opinion of Gregory of Nysa, according to whom, it was not the Confusion of Tongues that made the Nations to disperse, but it was rather their Dispersion that caused them to fall into a Diversity of Languages. Father Simon, and Leclerc, have embraced this Opinion,⁹ but our Author thinks,¹⁰ tis better to own the Miracle. God, who is tiones 1:47), Matthew Poole (Synopsis Criticorum 1:139, 143), and Simon Patrick (1:57, 59–60). Whereas Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1: 143) asserts that God did not confound their language in an instant, but slowly and gradually through the dispersal of the people, R. Eliezer relates that God descended with seventy angels and confounded “their speech into seventy nations and seventy languages” (Pirke, ch. 24, pp. 176, 177). Simon Patrick (on Gen. 11:7) expresses the received interpretation of the day that God did not give the people new languages, but merely confused their memory of the “Original Language which they spake before, as made them speak it very differently: So that by the various Inflections, and Terminations, and Pronunciations of divers Dialects, they could no more understand one another, than they who understand Latin, Italian, or Spanish; tho these Languages arise out of it” (Commentary 1:59). Strabo (16.1.5) describes the ruins of Babylon and its mighty temple, but does not address the confusion of languages – as Mather seems to imply. See also Bochart, Geographia (1707), pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 15, col. 50–61. Vitringa rejects the miraculous confusion of tongues and opts for a linguistic evolution, the result of people’s regional isolation.

8 Johann Christoph Becmann (1641–1717), aka. Hubertus Mosanus, professor of Greek, history, theology, and rector of the Viadrina, at Frankfurt (Oder), published Analecta historica de varijs rebus (1709), pars 4, sec. 6, pp. 25–27, to which Mather here refers. Becmann is less inclined to attribute the profusion of languages to miracles in his Historia Orbis Terrarum (1698), cap. 9, sec. 3, “De Linguis,” pp. 375–94, where he explains the emergence and inter-relationship of some of the principal languages.

9 Louis Ellies Du Pin (1657–1719), the ecclesiastical historian and doctor at the Sorbonne, confounds Gregory of Nyssa’s daring assertion (Answer to Eunomius’ Second Book, in NPNFii 5:275–77), in Du Pin’s Dissertationes Historiques, Chronologiques, Geographiques et Critiques sur la Bible (1711), vol. 1, Diss. III, ch. 2, p. 240. The controversial Oratorian Richard Simon (Critical History of the Old Testament, bk. 1, ch. 15, pp. 101–07) adopts Gregory of Nyssa’s argument as does his Dutch colleague Jean LeClerc (Twelve Dissertations, Diss. VI, 170–81). In this dissertation titled “Concerning the Confusion of Languages,” LeClerc rejects as irrational the idea that the confusion of the (Hebrew) tongue of Nimrod’s Babel “was all transacted on the sudden.” Pointing to Ps. 55:10 as his proof text, LeClerc insists that “Discord and Dissention,” rather than the miraculous creation of new languages, are here meant, their disagreements leading to separation and isolation of the individual peoples and thus the development of their different languages (§ V, pp. 177–79).

10 Du Pin.

the Master of all His Creatures, might at once form New Tongues in the Brains of each Family, by which they applied certain Sounds to certain Objects, and at the same time rase out the ancient Traces, by which other Sounds were applied unto those Objects. If God, when He created Adam and Eve, did form in their Brains all the Traces necessary for so expressing themselves, that they may understand one another, where's the Difficulty to suppose the same thing after the Deluge?¹¹

2421.

But lett us hear Grotius's Opinion, about the First Language, which was in Use, before the Confusion at Babel?

Grotius thinks, That the Primæval Tongue, is now lost; but that Every Tongue hath now some Reliques of it. The Proper Names of Adam and Eve & the rest, that are evidently Hebrew Names, hee thinks translated by Moses, into that Language, for the Sake of them, to whom hee wrote. Thus Curtius tells us, that certain Souldiers, were by the Persians called, Immortales; and that the Passage into Cilicia, was by the Inhabitants called, Pylæ; and that the Commanders of Regiments, were by the Persians called, Chiliarchi; and many such things occur with all sorts of Historians. Eusebius {w}ell enough saies, that the Phœnicians call some, Ἀγαθὸς δαίμονας. Herodian as well saies, that the Africans called Venus, Ὀυρανίαν. Diodorus tells us, that the Names of Pithecusa, and Ampelusius, in Africa, are Greek, translated from the Punic. Athenæus tells us, That the Celtæ, carried about People to Eat and Drink with them, which they called, παρασίτους; that is to say, in a Gallic Word, that signified Parasites. The LXX Interpreters take this Liberty, in Translating of Names from the Hebrew into Greek; Hence wee find in them, Δρὺν ὑψηλὴν, The High Oak, Βάλανον πένθους, Glaudem Luctus; πόλιν γραμμάτων, Urbem Literarum, and the like.¹²

11 Significantly, Mather here implies that Adam and Eve did not acquire their language through a learning process but were endowed with a fully developed language from their inception. Thomas Hobbes was much less convinced than were the authors of Mather's sources. In his chapter "Of Speech," Hobbes does not question the belief in monogenesis, but dismissed the idea that God endowed Adam with a fully developed language with all its nuances of rhetorical refinement. Rather, Adam was only taught the basics of naming, which he could then augment as experience grew and his need to communicate with his many offspring increased over time (Leviathan, Part 1, ch. 4, pp. 24–25).

12 The entire paragraph is a translation of Hugo Grotius's commentary on Gen. 11:1 (Annotationes 1:10). Quintus Curtius Rufus (3.3.13, 3.4.11, 5.2.3) mentions the "Immortals" ("a body of 10,000 infantry"), "Pylæ" ("the Gates"), and the "Chiliarchas" ("a troupe of 1,000 men"). Eusebius (Præparatio evangelica 6.11.295d) dismisses the Phœnicians' belief in divine oracles to which each city laid claim: they are neither "gods" nor "good daemons," but "a class of jugglers, cheats, and deceivers." According to Herodianus (Ab excessu divi Marci 5.6.4, line 3), the Carthaginians called Venus "Ouranias" (Urania), a personification of the divine sky (OCD). Diodorus Siculus (20.58.3–4) mentions Pithecusa ("Ape-City"), but no Ampelusius – a promontory in Mauretania near modern Tangier mentioned by Pliny (5.1.2); see also DGRG (2:298); Athenæus Naucratis (Deipnosophistae 6.49.2–4) cites Posidonius of Apameia (Fragm.

Q. In what Sense is that Passage to be taken; And now, nothing shall be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do? We know, God immediately did restrain them, from all that they imagined to do. v. 6.

A. It is to be taken Interrogatively. The Text is to be translated, as it is, by the Flemish Revisors, and Leusden, thus; *Shall they not be restrained in all that they have imagined to do?*¹³

Q. A more Thorough Determination, upon the Confusion of Languages? v. 9.

A. Accompanying Mr. Chamberlayns Exhibition of, THE LORDS PRAYER, in one hundred & fifty diverse Languages and Dialects, there is a Dissertation of Dr. Wotton, full of Incomparable Erudition, which will supply us with some agreeable Thoughts on this Occasion.¹⁴

There is Reason to take the History which Moses gives us of that great Occurrence, The Confusion of Languages, in the most literal Sense, & to beleeve that the Glorious GOD, who is the Maker & Giver of our Speech, did so strike the Minds of the Builders at Work upon their Babel, as to produce miraculously a Difference of Languages among them, which disabled them for understanding one another.

And the Opinion of Leclerc and others, that there was now produced no more than a bare Difference of Opinions among them, does not come up to the Truth, & the glorious Miracle of the Matter.¹⁵ 172, lines 1–3) and relates that the Celts have these “parasites” serve as impromptu panegyrists for all occasions. The LXX mentions the “high oak” (Gen. 12:6), “The Oak of Mourning” (Gen. 35:8), and Dabir, “the City of Letters” (Josh. 15:15).

13 Long before the “Flemish Revisors” and the Dutch Orientalist Johannes Leusden (1624–99), professor of Hebrew and Greek at Utrecht, and editor (with Rabbi Joseph Athias) of Biblia Sacra Hebraica correcta (1667), interpreted the second part of Gen. 11:6 as an interrogative, the English Separatist theologian Henry Ainsworth (1571–1622) suggested as much in his Annotations (1627) 47.

14 Mather refers to John Chamberlayne’s Oratio Dominica in diversas omnium fere gentium linguas (1715), a collection of the Lord’s Prayer (Math. 6:9) in 150 different languages. Chamberlayne (c. 1666–c. 1723), member of the Royal Society of London and royal historiographer, is listed as the editor of this Amsterdam imprint, an expansion of Daniel Brown’s earlier London edition (1713) of the Lord’s Prayer in 100 different languages. A Discourse Concerning the Confusion of Languages at Babel (1730), by William Wotton, D. D. (c. 1666–1727), English philologist, prebendary of Salisbury, member of the Royal Society of London, and one of Jonathan Swift’s targets in The Battle of the Books (1710) and in A Tale of the Tub (1724), had previously appeared in John Chamberlayne’s Amsterdam (1715) collection of the Lord’s Prayer, but was reprinted in a separate London edition (1730) because of “the frequent Mistakes” (70) of the Chamberlayne imprint. My page references are to Wotton’s 1730 reprint.

15 The two paragraphs are a summary of Wotton’s Discourse (8–12). Wotton (11) singles out for reproach Jean LeClerc’s naturalist explanation “Concerning the Confusion of Languages,” in Twelve Dissertations (1696), Diss. VI, pp. 170–81, because LeClerc argues that the different languages developed from the dispersal and isolation of individual peoples and tribes, not from the supposed miraculous confusion of tongues in Babel. Since “the Occurrence of several

Tis true, A Separation of the Builders from one another, in Conjunction with other Accidents to which the affairs of the World are liable, would by degrees, bring on a mighty Change of Dialects. We see, how much the Dialects of the Latin Tongue, and of the Teutonic, have been changed in One Thousand Years; and how little, the People who have run into the various Dialects do understand one another.¹⁶

But then, it must be considered, That the various Dialects will be found plain Derivations and Deviations from One Common Original. Whereas we shall upon Examination find some Originals, to have certain distinct Forms, which run down into and thorough, all the Subdivisions, which are deduced from those Originals. And these Originals will be found produced at Babel, by that Glorious Hand, which first of all taught Adam and Eve to speak, & which dispensed the Gift of Tongues unto the Apostles on the Day of Pentecost. There is, that which we may call, the Matter of the Languages; This is in the Words, by which Men express the Idea's of their Minds. But then, there is the Form of the Languages; For so we may call, the Way, wherein these Words are declined.¹⁷

The Hebrews use not various Terminations, of their Nouns, in the same Number; They only say /אִישׁ/ A Man, and /אִישִׁים/ Men. The Cases they vary, by Præpositions, which are so præfixed as to be incorporated into the Words themselves; as, /בְּ/ /לְ/ /הָ/. This way for Variation is found in all the Languages which have any Affinity with the Hebrew. But {it} is nowhere observed in any of the Languages derived from the Latin or the Teutonic.¹⁸

In declining of their Verbs, there is the like Difference found between the Oriental and the Occidental Tongues. A Verb in its Nature implies, a Motion, or a Power to move; a being Moved, or a being at Rest; And this is considered, as past, or present, or to come. Now, behold, how the Tongues differ from one another! The Nations of the West, in declining their Verbs Transitive, consider them only as Active and Passive; and the Verbs which are called Substantives, or Deponents, are formed in the like Manner. But now lett us go to the Nations of the East, that is to say, those whose Languages have some affinity with the Hebrew; and we shall find these go quite another Way to work. The Hebrews have Seven Conjugations, whereof Three are Active, Three are Passive, and One is Reciprocal. All these have the Preter Tense, the Future Tense, the Imperative, and the Infinitive Moods, and Participles; all distinguished by the Letters which they call Servile. The Chaldee & Syriac differ from the Hebrew only in this, that Ages are related in a few lines" in the Mosaic account, interpreters mistakenly assume that the original language changed in an instant (Twelve Dissertations 178). See also D.C. Allen's "Some Theories."

¹⁶ Wotton (Discourse 12–13).

¹⁷ Wotton (Discourse 14–15). The gift of tongues was bestowed at Pentecost (Acts 2:3–4, 11).

[282v] they have but Six Conjugations; But the Arabic has no less than Thirteen. | There is another Distinction in which the Nations of the East, all differ from those of the West. They have no Verbs compounded with Prepositions, affixed unto them in all Moods and Tenses, to vary their Signification. All their Verbs are Simple ones. Tis vastly otherwise in the Languages of the Descendents from Japhet.¹⁹

We will observe one Distinction more. The Nations of the East, incorporate their Possessive Pronouns into the Nouns. Those of the West, make separate Words of them.

We will add another. The Nations of the West, have their Degrees of Comparison, Adjectives formed with their proper Terminations; which those of the East are Strangers to.²⁰

In fine, There are some Fundamental Differences from the other Languages, wherein all that are spoken by the Posterity of Japhet, agree one with another. Trace the Languages up as far as we can go, we shall find these Essential Differences between them, still retained under all the Mutations which thro' many Occasions, have in the following Ages come upon them.²¹

Indeed, (which is confessed by Stiernhielm himself, who in his Discourse, De origine et progressu linguarum, would reduce all the Languages of that Hæmisphære to one Original,) The American Languages, can as yett have but little Account given of them.²²

For the rest, it is plain, Their Ways of Declining their Wayes, have remained Invariable in the one Sort, and in the other Sort, for Thousands of Years; and they never have gone over to one another, nor never will.

19 Wotton (Discourse 17–18). Among the several Hebrew grammars in use in the seventeenth century was John Davis's A Short Introduction to the Hebrew Tongue (1656). The descendents of Noah's son Japheth were believed to have settled partly in Asia and in Europe – if Bochart (Geographia, pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 1. col. 147–51) and his peers are to be trusted.

20 Wotton (Discourse 18).

21 Wotton (Discourse 25).

22 Wotton (Discourse 27). The Swedish linguist and poet Georg Stiernhielm (1598–1672) authored De linguarum origine praefatio, which was prefixed to his Evangelia ab Ulfila Gothorum in Moesia Episcopo (1671). Stiernhielm maintained that Gothic (Old Norse), not Hebrew, was the first language of mankind, whose Adamic Eden was not in Assyria or Mesopotamia, but in Scandinavia (Vagina gentium). He was not the first (or last) enthusiast given to such extravagancies. (See Umberto Eco's lecture "The Dream of a Perfect Language"). The origin of the Native American languages gave rise to all sorts of speculations: R. Manasseh ben Israel and Antonio de Montezino for one argued that some of the Lost Tribes of Israel living in hiding in the Peruvian Andes spoke a corrupted form of Hebrew, in Hope of Israel (1650), esp. pp. 4–15; Thomas Thorowgood embellished this belief in Iewes in America (1650), ch. 5, pp. 14–16; John Eliot readily embraced Thorowgood's argument, but Cotton Mather dismissed the Hebrew origin of New England's Algonquin language (Smolinski, "Introduction," Threefold Paradise 24–25; Cogley, "Ancestry" and "Most Vile"); Thomas Jefferson, in Notes on the State of Virginia (ch. 11) proposed an East-Asian origin of the radically different languages and dialects spoken by Native Americans, but insisted that a thorough study be undertaken because his conjecture is based on the physical – not linguistic – similarities between Amerindians and East-Asians (93, 100–02).

But now, if we come to that Quæſtion, How many Languages are to be accounted Originals, or, may be ſuppoſed for to have been produced by the Miraculous Touch of God upon the Minds of Men at the Building of Babel; This is not easy, or perhaps poſſible, to be determined. But this may be ſaid; The Dispersion ſoon following the Confuſion, it is probable, that the Tribes which ſettled neareſt unto one another, did retain moſt of Affinity in their different Languages.²³

The Sons of Japhet moved, we know, to the West and North. Junius ha's proved that the Gothic and Græcian Languages, are Dialects growing upon one Root. And all the Learned confeſs the Latin to be a Daughter of the Græcian. But whether all the diſperſed Colonies of the Japhetic Family, had but One Tongue, is an Uncertainty.²⁴

But the Finnic, the Sclavonic and Hungaric Languages, look like Originals; not having any Affinity with the Gothic or the Græcian.

Whether the Cantabrian Tongue, (whereof the Welch, & the Irish & the Armoric, are Dialects,) be an Original, is not preſently to be decided.²⁵

But the Miracle is the ſame in forming of Two Tongues, as in the forming of Seventy. Dr. Wotton very juſtly complains, of thoſe learned Men, who will not allow Miracles to occur in ſome affairs of the Old Teſtament, where they cannot well be denied without a Præjudice unto Religion. And ſince Prophecies require a Supernatural Knowledge for the Opening of them, as Miracles require a Supernatural Power for the Working of them, the Industry wherewith many ſtudy to apply unto other Matters, the Prophecies relating to the Messiah, is in like Manner to be complained of.²⁶

Tho' Miracles, are as we ſay, Non multiplicanda ſine neceſſitate, yett thoſe Interpreters are to be blamed, who are worſe than the Magicians of Egypt, and will not acknowledge, The Finger of GOD, where it appears with conſpicuous Evidences.²⁷

Dr. Wotton thinks, That Heaven might ſee this Occaſion for the Working of this Miracle. The Fear of another Flood was now over. But Mankind muſt continue till the Conflagration which is now to be looked for. Now Mankind growing very wicked, a Dispersion | of the Nations, with a Confuſion of their [283r]

²⁴ Wotton (Discourse 41–42). Francis Junius, fil. (1589–1677), German-born philologiſt and theologian, ſon of the illuſtrious Franciſcus Junius (François du Jon), ſtudied the ſurviving Saxon dialect in Frieſland and published fragments of the Anglo-Saxon goſpel and a gloſſary in his *Quatuor D. Languages, ha's this Advantage in it. The People cannot so easily & so speedily infect one another with their Evil Principles & Practices. And from hence it was, that some Nations were for so many Ages, præserv'd from the Idolatries, which others were carried away withal.²⁸

As an Appendix to these Entertainments, I will transcribe some Words of Monsr. Saurin, in his Dissertations Upon the Old Testament, and leave them to Consideration.²⁹

"We cannot enter into the Opinion of those who think, that the Hebrew Language is the oldest in the World. It even seems to us, to have been fully proved, that it was not spoken by the First Descendents of Heber. They dwelt in Chaldea, and probably spoke the Chaldean Tongue; in which Abraham, having lived Seventy Years, went out of it by the Command of GOD, and dwelt in Canaan, where, doubtless, he retained, at least for a time, his Mother-Tongue. But the long Stay which he made, his Conversation with the People of the Countrey, the Possession he there acquired, the Alliances he there made, do all prove, that he learned the Canaanitish Language, and transmitted the same to his Posterity. Accordingly we see, that Laban, who had dwelt in Chaldea, spoke a Language different from that used in Jacob's Family, who dwelt in Canaan; From whence it proceeded, that Laban called the Heap of Stones, which was a Witness of the Covenant made with Jacob, Jegar-Sahadutha, which signified the same in the Chaldee, as Galeed, the Name given by Jacob, imported in the Language of Canaan, that is, An Heap of Witnesses.³⁰

"It is demonstrable, that in the following Ages, the Language of the Jews was different from that which their Ancestors spake in Chaldea; and that they did retain the Language of Canaan, which Abraham transmitted unto them.

"[See 1. King. XVIII.28. Dan. II.4.]³¹

"I conclude, That the Chaldean, Syrian, or Aramean Tongue, was that which Heber and his Descendents spoke; That Abraham learned the Language of Canaan, and transmitted the same to his Posterity; That this Language is the True Hebrew, which is called in Scripture, The Language of Canaan.

"But nothing proves, That the Chaldean Language spoken by Hebers Family, was that only Tongue spoken before the Building the Tower of Babel; perhaps that only Tongue was then confounded, and continued not since in any one Nation or Family."³²

And as a Second Appendix, I will transfer a few Passages from Dr. Tho. Burnett [of Westkington] his Demonstration of True Religion.³³

He observes, That Noah & his Family, coming out of the Ark, the Face of Nature being strangely altered, therefore left from That, or from the Dread of such another Vengeance for the Future, they might, as tis Natural to suppose they might, be discouraged from a Necessary Industry, suspecting it might be all in vain, GOD gave them an Assurance of the Contrary.³⁴

And, as the World was now reduced unto but Eight Persons, it might be natural for them to Fear, that the Increase of other Creatures might overrun them & overwhelm them; This Fear was also particularly provided for.

And, because the Fruits of the Earth were now become useless, or were not capable of affording them such a nourishment as they did before; here was now another Sustenance provided, and a Liberty to eat Flesh indulged.³⁵

But that they might not feed upon Raw Flesh, which would not so well nourish them, & which might also have a tendency to infuse a Fierceness into them, who had been used unto a Milder Diet: yea, and the very Killing of the Beasts for Food, might also Tend unto the hardening of their Hearts & breed them up to Cruelty, and even Murder itself; Behold, a Prohibition upon the Eating of Blood, and upon Murder.

And, Lastly, Because Mankind might be affrighted at every Prospect of Rainy Weather, lest it should end in an Universal Devastation; GOD then made the Appearance of the Rainbow in the Clouds, a standing Memorial of His Promise, that another Flood should not come upon the World.³⁶

What is after this imputed unto Ham, upon seeing his Fathers Nakedness, is by the Jews generally understood, of something done, in Derision of the First Promise, arising from a Spirit of Infidelity in a Matter of the last Importance to Mankind.³⁷

The Building of the Tower of Babel that followed, seems to have been a Design of Nimrod, the Grandson of Ham, and the rest of that Branch of Noahs Family; probably in Opposition to the Judgment, which Noah, had prophetically denounced against them, That they should become Subject unto their Bretheren. To provide against this, they not only consult their own Security, but also contrive how to bring their Bretheren into an absolute Subjection to themselves.³⁸

³³ Rector of Westkington (Wiltshire) and prebendary of the cathedral of Sarum, Thomas Burnett, D.D. (d. 1750) delivered the distinguished Boyle Lecture for the years 1724–25 (sixteen sermons). Mather excerpts Burnett's The Demonstration of True Religion (1726), vol. 2, ch. 4, pp. 116–19; ch. 5, pp. 123, 126–30.

³⁵ Burnett, Demonstration 2:117, §§ 4–5.

³⁶ Burnett, Demonstration 2:117–18, 119, §§ 6, 7.

³⁷ Burnett, Demonstration 2:123.

³⁸ Burnett, Demonstration 2:126–27.

For this Reason, tis probable, they began their Tower, not only for their own Defence, in Defiance of what Heaven had foretold & order'd, but also as the Centre of Union to their Family, and the Seat of that Universal Empire, which they might hope to make themselves Masters of.

To defeat their nefarious Enterprize, GOD inflicted a strange Confusion of Tongues upon them; which could not be brought about, but by absolutely forming their Minds anew, erasing all their former Idæas, and imprinting in an Instant others in the room of them, which nothing but a Divine Power could have accomplished.³⁹

By this, there was a Separation made of Hams wicked Family, from the rest of the World, that all Mankind might not be corrupted with their wicked Principles.⁴⁰

Q. Does Pagan Antiquitie mention any thing, of what followed quickly after the Flood; especially, the Tower of Babel? v. 9.⁴¹

A. Yes, Very much.

The Tower of Babel, is mentioned by Berosus, the Chaldæan; who saies, That it was built by Giants, which were Terre Filij, & waged War against the Gods, but were Dispersed, & had their Tower beaten down by a mighty Wind.⁴²

The Building of this Tower, is mentioned by Hestiaeus, and by one of the Sibyls, as Josephus affirms in his Antiquities; and by Abydenus and Eupolemus, as Eusebius asserts in his Evangelical Preparation. Probably, t'was the Tower of Belus, which is mentioned by Herodotus.⁴³

⁴⁰ Burnett, Demonstration 2:129–30.

That this Tower was made of Brick and Slime (according to Gen. 11.3.) is intimated by what Justin, Curtius, Vitruvius, & others, do say, about the Walls of Babylon.⁴⁴

But, The Poets turn the History of the Babel-builders, into the Fable of the Titans, who heaped Mountain upon Mountain, to Scale the Heavens, & Fight the Gods; and these Poets, pick'd up the Name of Japhet, & clap'd it upon one of them.⁴⁵

The Græcian Fable, in Homer, concerning the Theomachy of the Giants, was doubtless derived, from what Moses relates, of Nimrod, attempting to Build a City & a Tower, whose Top should reach up to Heaven.⁴⁶

Indeed, they dream't not, of performing that thing Properly and Really. They knew the Height of the late Flood, fifteen Cubits above the highest Mountains, was yett short of Heaven; and they chose a Plain to bee the Seat of their Project. Nor is it likely, that a Refuge from Another Flood, was their Design; for God had newly promised, that there should never bee Another. Their Intent, briefly was, To keep together in One Body, and serve their Lusts upon one another, as long as they could; and afterwards, leave unto Posterity, a Monument of their Greatness. But the Poets interpreted their Words, in the grossest Manner, imaginable. However, they testify unto the Truth of the Sacred Story. And, as to that Part of their Intention, their, Making them a Name, the Poets transcribe it, into their Fiction, when they tell us, That after the Giants, who were begot of the Earth, had fought the Gods, their Mother Earth, incensed at the Defeat of her Sons, brought forth Fame.

This was the last Sister of the Giants;

Illam Terra Parens, ira irritata Deorum, extremam (ut perhibent) Cao Enceladoque sororem progeniuit.

As to the Division of the Earth, among the Sons of Noah, the Division of the World, among the Three Brethren, the Sons of Saturn, was the poetical Account, from thence doubtless taken.⁴⁷

⁴⁴ See Heidegger (1:420, 421–22, Exerc. XXI, §§ 13, 15–16). Justinus, the epitomizer of Trogus Pompeius (Historiarum Philippicarum 1.2); Quintus Curtius Rufus (5.1.25–26, 29–32); and Vitruvius Pollio (Architectura 8.3.8) – all relate that the walls of Babylon were built with brick and bituminous matter.

Q. What special Reflection do the Jewes make upon the Builders of Babel? v. 9.

A. They tell us, The Sons of Shem, for joining with Rebellious Nimrod of Cham, (as it were, flouting their Fathers Blessing) to furnish up the Number of Seventy, made Brick for the Building of the Tower of Babel. Seventy of Shems Posterity, 600 Years after, were forced to go into the Land of Cham, and there forced to be Brick-makers, under Pharaoh King of Egypt, because they despised the Blessing of Shem, and remembred not the Story of the Seventy Families, that built the Tower of Babel.⁴⁸

Q. A further Touch, upon the Design, which the Builders of Babel, had in their Minds? v. 9.

A. One Part of their Design was, To make them a Name. Or, To leave a Monument of their great Actions behind them. Dr. Tenison also conjectures, That the Tower of Babel might be consecrated by the Builders of it, unto the Sun, as the Cause of drying up the Waters of the Deluge; (or, rather, which Dr. Patrick adds, as the most illustrious Resemblance of the Shechinah;) and that it was intended as an Altar whereon to sacrifice unto it. The Jewes do seem to have had some such Conjecture in their Minds, who by the Word, Shem, or, Name, understand, God; As if their Meaning were, Lett us make us a God, and Raise him a Temple.⁴⁹

1–2, 9). According to Gen. 7:20, the waters of Noah's Flood prevailed "fifteen cubits upward" above the mountains. Nimrod's Babel was built in the Plain of Shinar (Gen. 10:10). God made his rainbow covenant with Noah as a promise that the Ancient of Days would never again destroy the earth by a flood of water (Gen. 9:13–15). To avoid being scattered over the whole earth, the men of Babel built their city to make themselves a name (Gen. 11:4). Virgil recounts how Gaea gave birth to her daughter Fama, and of "Her [Fama], 'tis said, Mother Earth, provoked to anger against the gods, brought her forth last, as sister to Coeus and Enceladus" (Aeneid 4.178–80). In the best euhemerist tradition of Prisca theologia, the Early Church argued that the Hebrew Bible was the source for the classical myths. Thus the three sons of Noah (Shem, Ham, and Japheth), who divided the earth amongst themselves (Gen. 10:32), are linked with the sons of Saturn – Jupiter, Pluto, and Neptune (Hesiod's Theogonia 147–91; Cicero's De natura deorum 2.24.63–26.67).

Another Part of their Design was, Lest they should be scattered abroad, upon the Face of the whole Earth. It seems, that Noah having projected a Division of the Earth among his Posterity, these People had no mind to submit unto it; and therefore as Dr. Usher thinks, built this Fortress, to Defend themselves in their Purpose of not yeelding to it.⁵⁰

But, The Fear of the Wicked shall come upon him. The Dispersion which they feared, is brought upon themselves, by their own vain Attempt to avoid it. And the Names of those who conspired in the Attempt, are utterly buried in eternal Oblivion.⁵¹

Q. How did God Confound their Language? v. 9.

A. Some learned Men, would here have the Word, Confound, particularly marked. For God did not make them every one speak a New Different Language, but they had such a confused Remembrance of the Original Language, which they spake before, as made them speak it very differently. By various Dialects, and Inflections, and Terminations and Pronunciations, they could no more understand one another than they who understand Latin, can understand those who speak French, or Italian, or Spanish, tho' these Languages arise out of it.

Nor must it be imagined, that every Person had his peculiar Dialect; but that the same common Dialect was præserv'd by God, unto such Families, as He would have to make one Colony, in the ensuing Dispersion.⁵²

Q. That grand Affayr, of, The Confusion of Languages; Lett us again take it into Consideration? v. 9.

A. And we will principally employ an Exercitation of our learned Heidegger, on this great Subject; for the Supply of our Illustrations.⁵⁴

Heidegger inclines to the Opinion, That the Sons of Shem, were not concerned in the Attempt of building the Tower of Babel. The Builders of it are here called, בני האדם / The Sons of Men. A Phrase which the Scripture seems to use, for Profane Men, or those that are opposed unto the Sons of God. At least, us a name [shem]" (Gen. 11:4), Patrick relies on Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XXXVIII:8), where Rabbi Ishmael and his school assert that "a name [shem]" here "means nought else but an idol."

⁵⁰ Mather's second-hand reference to James Ussher's Annals (1658) 3–4, appears in Patrick's annotation on Gen. 11:4 (Commentary 1:59).

⁵² Both paragraphs are cribbed from Patrick's annotations on Gen. 11:7 (Commentary 1:59–60).

⁵³ See Appendix B.

⁵⁴ Mather's entire annotation on Gen. 11:9 [MS 287r–290v] is here excerpted and translated from Heidegger's Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (1:417, Exerc. XXI, § 5).

we may go as far as Constantinus Manasses, who in his Annals, thus expresses it; *Solus Heber ab eâ pænâ immunis evasit, quòd vana molientibus non assentiretur.*⁵⁵

There is a Difficulty of Geography, in that Passage; They Journeyed from the East, & found a Plain in the Land of Shinar. We all know, That the Oriental Parts of Armenia, where the Ark rested, were to the Northward of Babylon. Capellus will therefore have the Kedem here, which we render, The East, mean, The Land, which was afterwards called, Kedem. Whereas, Bochart flies to a Custome of the Assyrians, to call that Part of their Empire, which was on the other Side of Tigris, the East; and that which was on this Side, the West. But Heidegger goes another Way to Work. It is probable, That after the Flood, Men forsook as soon as they could, the mountainous Parts of Armenia; they were too cold for them; for, as Haitho the Armenian tells us, The Mountains of Ararat, had alwayes vast Heaps of Snow upon them. And probably they made their Descent into the next Parts of Media. For we find, they planted Vineyards; which we are informed by Strabo, could not be done in cold Armenia. So they crept along to the Fields of Susiana, and Assyria; which is to the Eastward of Babylon. The Difficulty of passing Tigris hereabouts, is of no Importance. For, who can say, that the Art of Sailing still continued a Mystery unto them. Or, if as Dio tells us, there were no Materials for Shipping in all those Parts, a little higher up, near the Fountains of Tigris, the River might be pass'd without Boats; Yea, and about Ninus and Arbela, where the River is the most rapid, we are told by Diodorus, and Curtius, and Ar{r}ianus, that Alexander found a Channel passable by all his Army.⁵⁶

The Land of Shinar, whereto they came, & which the Greek Version renders Babylon, the Arabic, Bagdad, the Chaldee, Babel; had not its Name, until after the Confusion happened there. It is as much as to say, The Land, (que excutit,) that shakes out and scatters its Inhabitants.⁵⁷

But, what would they be at? Lett us Build us a City & a Towre, whose Top may reach unto Heaven, and lett us make us a Name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the Face of the whole Earth. We cannot, with Abydenus, imagine them so ridiculous, as to propose an Ascent into Heaven this Way. Polyenus indeed reports, That the Thracians, fancied Cosinga, the Priest of Juno, would by his Ladders, gett up thither, to accuse them unto his Mistress there. And Martinius tells us, That an Emperour of China, One Hiavo, was for erecting a Towre, as high as the Moon, that he might there meet with his deceased Lady, whom he thought retired thither. But our Gentlemen doubtless understood Astronomy a little better than so. Josephus pretends, that the Reason of their Undertaking, was their Defence & Safety from the Danger of another Flood. But, why would they then pitch upon a Valley, for their Edifice? And this also between Two Rivers, that had frequent Inundations? And why do they use Brick, which were less able to resist a Flood, than Stone? Our Usher thinks, that the Design of their Undertaking was, To prevent the Dispersion, which the Prophecy of their Father Noah had mentioned. But Moses tells us, their Design was, To make them a Name. Hereby our Heidegger will understand, A Senate of a vast Authority and Reputation, to reside in the City of Babylon, and præserved the Traditions, which their Father Noah had given unto them: Imagining, That eternal Concord must be præserved among the Children of Men, if it should become unlawful for any Man any where to speak any thing, but in the Name of, The Senate of Babylon. Hujus enim futurum Sermones Antiquos custodire et tradere, ut sic retineatur Doctrina πατροπαράδοτος.⁵⁸

| Shinaar was a Champaign Countrey, and abounded not with Stones fitt for the Purpose. Wherefore Bricks were employ'd on this Occasion: And had Vitruvius been there, he would have given this Direction unto them. So Pliny tells us of the Græcians; Præterquam ubi è silice fieri potuit structura, parietes latericios protulère. He tells us also, out of Epigenes, That Brick-Walls were in great Esteem among the Babylonians. Benjamin of Tudela, informs us, that this Tower of Babel, was built of Bricks, which are called Lagour; on which Word, Bochart notes, that Lamed is only a Particle, and the Word /אגור/ an Arabic Word, Agour, which signifies, A Brick. The Mortar here used about these Bricks, was Bitumen.

bic) – all in Walton (1:40–41; 3:32–33, 118–19). Whatever the confusion, Mather's translation of "quae excutit" is correct.

58 Heidegger (1:419–20, Exerc. XXI, §§ 9, 10, 11). Gen. 11:4; Abydenus merely reports this lofty tradition but does not subscribe to it himself (Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica 9.14.416b). A native of Macedonia, Polyenus (Polyainos) was a Roman lawyer (fl. 160–180 CE), whose largely derivative Strategemata (7.22), dedicated to Emperor Marcus Aurelius, relates the story of Cosingas, the Thracian priest in Juno's temple. The Italian Jesuit missionary Martinus Martinius (Martini) tells his Chinese version of Babel and of Emperor Hiaouus (c. 140 BCE) in Sinicae Historiae Decas Prima (1659), lib. 8, cap. 6, pp. 356, 365; see also lib. 3, cap. 28, pp. 91–92. Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.4.2–3); James Ussher, Annales (1650), lib. 1, p. 5. Thus Heidegger (§ 11) imagines the Babylonian senate decreed "that it would protect and pass on the ancient languages in future, so that the learning handed down by the fathers might thus be retained."

For Lime-Stones as well as others, were wanting here; But Strabo, and Justin, tell us, That there was a vast Plenty of Bitumen hereabouts. And Vitruvius also celebrates the Liquid Bitumen, which this Countrey afforded, for the building of the Walls of Babylon.⁵⁹

How far they proceeded in building their City and their Tower, we have no certain Account. Probably not very far, in their City; tho' afterwards, that mett with several and successive Enlargements; Even as late as the Days of Nebuchadnezzar. Moses takes more Notice of the Tower, than of the City. But what Jerom relates, of its being Four Miles High, is as little to be regarded, as the Relation of Herodotus, which I do not reckon worthy to be recited; tho' more worthy, than that of the Pirke Avoth, which carries it up to the Heighth of Seventy Miles, to hold a Correspondence with their Figment of the Seventy Angels that surround the Throne of Grace; and the Seventy Nations, and the Seventy Languages, into which, they will tell you, the World is anon to be divided.⁶⁰

While they were thus engaged, the Great GOD saies, Lett us go down, & confound their Language. The Hebrew Doctors, tell us, that the בֵּית דִּין / Domus Judicij, is address'd in these Words. Old Raymund in his Pugio Fidei notes upon it; That it was not called, The House of Judgment, except Three Judges pass'd a Judgment. But the true House of Judgment, is the adorable Trinity, of, The Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit. And thus the Christian Ancients, especially Cyrl, expounded this Passage. Heidegger will by no means consent unto the Concession of Aben-Ezra, and of Austin, That the Angels may be intended. It is without Exemple, That the Great GOD, should Join Himself with the Angels, without any Distinction, in a Work so peculiar unto Himself. To turn One

⁶⁰ Heidegger (1:422, Exerc. XXXI, § 17). Gen. 11:4–5; 35:21. St. Jerome, Commentaria in Isaiam lib. 5 (Isa. 14:22–23) [PL 24. 164A]. Mather dismisses Herodotus's claim (Historia 1.181) that the Tower of Babel consisted of eight stepped towers or ziggurats (one on top of the other), one square stade at the base, with a circular ascent to the top. Mather's reference to "Pirke Avoth" ("Sayings of the Fathers") is erroneous, since Heidegger only mentions "Pirke cap. xxiv." In Pirke de R. Eliezer (ch. 24, p. 176, n2), Gerald Friedlander points out that in the first printed edition of Pirke de R. Eliezer, the height of the Tower of Babel was listed as "seventy," in subsequent editions as "seven miles." The story of the seventy angels surrounding "the throne of His glory" and of the "seventy nations" and "seventy languages" appears in the same chapter 24, p. 176.

Tongue in a Moment into Many, is a Work, to be done by none but Him, to whom, to Will and to Do, is the same. Heidegger thinks it, a solid Argument, which our Divines fetch from hence, for a Plurality of Persons in the Godhead.⁶¹

The Almighty God could have stopt the Work of these People, with Thunderbolts. But He would make a Confusion of Tongues, the Punishment of an unlawful Attempt for Unity. And He would have the Glory of this Miracle to be perpetuated. But after what Manner was it accomplished? Pererius thinks, it begun with an Oblivion of their former Tongue; and then that the Faculty of running upon other Tongues was infused into their Minds. A Jew would have persuaded Scaliger, That they all still kept the Hebrew Tongue, but lost the Signification of the Terms used in it.⁶² But Isaac Casaubon, is of the Opinion, That a Total Change of Tongue, was not on a sudden at once brought upon the World. The Difficulty of their Understanding one another arose, from their being thrown upon many New εγκλισεις και προσεγκλισεις. Formations and Declensions, of the Tongue, which they had in common among them, when they began to build. It was by Degrees, that the Dispersion of these People was carried on; The Assyrians and the Chaldeans, must have been Instances of it, if a Total Change of Tongue had been at once introduced.⁶³ But we see otherwise; and we see, the nearer 61 Heidegger (1:422–23, Exerc. XXI, § 18). Gen. 11:7. Among Heidegger's Hebrew sources for the "bayith din," or "House of Judgment," "Court," or "host above" are Maimonides (Doctor Perplexorum, pars II, cap. VI, p. 201; Guide 2.6.161) and Midrash Rabbah (Gen. LI.2), where R. Leazar glosses, "Wherever 'And the Lord' occurs, it means, He and His heavenly Court." "Old Raymund" or Raimundus Martinus (c. 1220–c. 84), Dominican theologian and significant Medieval Orientalist of Catalonia (Spain), is now mostly remembered for his Pugio Fidei Christianae adversus Mauros et Iudaeos (wr. 1278), a Hebrew and Latin polemic against Judaism and Islam that draws on the Talmud, Midrash, and Cabbala (1651, 1687). Martinus's commentary on "domus Iudicii" appears in Pugio Fidei (1687), pars 3, dist. 1, cap. 3, § 4, pp. 487–88, and Heidegger relies on Joseph de Voisin's Observationes (pars 3, dist. 1, cap. 3), in Martinus's Pugio Fidei (1687) 488–90. Heidegger (1:423) supports the Trinitarian position of Cyril of Alexandria, in Contra Julianum (1.27, 32–33, 47–48) and in Glaphyra in Penta-teuchum [PG 69. 77, lines 53–55], where Cyril insists that Moses (Gen. 11:6–7) refers to the Trinity – not to the angels; however, both Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:141–42) and St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 16.6) disagree and contend that the phrase "Let us" here signifies that God speaks to the angels (NPNFi 2:313–14).

62 This portion is extracted and translated from Heidegger (1:423, Exerc. XXI, § 19). Heidegger enlists in the debate Commentariorum et disputationum in Genesim (tom. 2, lib. 16, disput. 9), by the Spanish Jesuit scholar Benedictus Pererius, a copy of whose work (1596–1602) is in the Mather libraries (AAS). Most likely Rashi's commentary on Gen. 11:7 (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:137b), which the great teacher extracts from Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XXXVIII:10), persuaded the Italian scholar Julius Caesar Scaliger (Exotericarum Exercitationum, Exerc. CCLIX, sec. 1) that the Hebrew language remained in use even after the confusion of the tongues, except that the same words signified different concepts to those affected by it. As Rashi has it, one worker at the Tower asks for a brick, yet his coworker gives him mortar instead. See also Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:59–60).

63 This portion is extracted from Heidegger (1:424, § 20). The Geneva-born Huguenot scholar Meric Casaubon (1599–1671) dismisses the instantaneous change of languages and argues for a gradual transformation over time through dispersion (De quatuor linguis com-

any People have kept unto the First Seats of Mankind after the Flood, the more sensible Footsteps do they keep of the Primitive Hebrew in their Language. Our Heidegger comes with his Epicrisis. He thinks, That the Confusion was at first so great, as to spoil their Understanding of one another; and so to stop the Progress of the Work they were upon. But for | the Manner of introducing the Confusion, it is not easy to give any certain and exact Account. The Confusion of Tongues, will not necessarily imply a total Conversion into New Tongues. And ingenious Men, as Avenarius, and Cruciger, and Hottinger, and many others, have given curious Demonstrations, That very much of the Tongues at this day spoken in the World, among the principal Nations of Mankind, are evidently derived from the ancient Hebrew; the Hebrew, is אֵם כָּל הַלְשֹׁנָה / Matrix omnium linguarum. And we see, a vast Change of Tongue, to grow upon People, by Conversation, and many other Circumstances. It is likely, That with Some Change of Speech, at this Confusion of Babel, the Immediate Hand of God inflicted a strange Perturbation on the Minds of the Builders, which more disposed them to misapprehend one another, and so fill'd them with Mistakes of one another, that they could not proceed in any comfortable Manner, with what they were upon.⁶⁴

The Gentiles look'd on this History of Moses, as a Fable. Philo confutes the Gentiles; but he so turns the History into an Allegory, ut tantum non causam bonam (saies my Heidegger), vel desernisse, vel prostituisse, censeri debeat.⁶⁵ mentationis, pars 1, esp. pp. 1–25). Heidegger's second-hand quotation is from De linguarum confusione, by Isaac Casaubon (1559–1614), whose work is here extracted at some length by his son Meric (De quatuor linguis, pars 1, p. 17).

⁶⁴ Heidegger (1:424–25, § 21). Mather's neologism "Epicrisis" reads "epikrinesthai" in Heidegger (1:424) and suggests "final decision" or "final judgment." Heidegger refers to Liber radicum seu Lexicon Ebraicum (1589), by Johannes Avenarius, aka. Johann Habermann (1516–90), a Lutheran professor of theology at Wittenberg, now best remembered for his still popular prayer book. Georgius Cruciger, D. D. (1575–1637), professor of theology and rector of Marburg University, represented the Duchy of Hessa at the Synod of Dort (1618). His Disputatio metaphysica was published in 1617. Johann Heinrich Hottinger (1620–67), Swiss philologist, professor of theology and Oriental languages at Zurich and Heidelberg, was a philologist of the first order. In classifying ancient Chaldean, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic languages on the basis of their etymological relation to Hebrew, Hottinger laid the foundation for subsequent philological demonstrations that Hebrew was not the origin of all languages as was generally believed. His Etymologicum orientale (1661) and his oft-cited Smegma orientale (1658) are among the works that Mather (via Heidegger) here alludes to. Smegma (lib. 1, cap. 4, pp. 59–67) contains Hottinger's essay "De linguarum confusione" (see also A. D. White, History of Warfare 2:189–90). Mather inverts the sequence of the Hebrew citation from Heidegger, which here signifies "mother of all languages."

In the Apocalypse, we find a Great City, called Babylon, which intoxicates the Nations of the Earth, with the Cup of her Fornications.⁶⁶

This Mystical Babel, is also a Society of People, combining to establish a certain Unity and Obedience, among the Nations of the World. It is easy to tell, where it is to be mett withal.⁶⁷

The Dispersion of the Nations after this Revolution, was gradually carried on.

How the World ha's been divided among the Three Sons of Noah, we have elsewhere considered. But being myself an American, and furnishing out a Work, which we entitle, BIBLIA AMERICANA; I am willing to allow a particular Consideration of what our Heidegger observes about America.⁶⁸

There are very learned Men, who allow America unto the Offspring of Shem; and particularly to the Descendents of Jobab and Ophir, the Sons of Joctan. This is the Sense of Arias Montanus, in his Phaleg; and Vatablus in his Scholia on the first Book of Kings.⁶⁹

Whether this be so, or no; we are well assured, Lett those two Fools Paracelsus and Peyrerius pretend what they will, that the Americans, are of the Noetic Original. There is a great Probability of what is affirmed by Acosta and Brierwood; That Asia and America are contiguous. Besides this, the Phœnicians were great Sailors, and sometimes took long Voyages, by which, and by language at Babylon “only that he [Philo] might not need to be supposed to have abandoned or dishonored a good cause.”

66 Heidegger (1:427, Exerc. XXI, § 26). Rev. 14:8.

67 In Tripuradisis, Mather (Threefold Paradise 179, 233, 319) identifies “Mystical Babel” as the sequence of Four Empires in Nebuchadnezzar’s visionary statue (Dan. 2:31–45).

68 Heidegger (1:435, Exerc. XXII, § 15). Mather discussed the dispersion of Shem, Ham, and Japheth and the peopling of America in his commentary on Gen. 10:1ff (MS 237r, 245r, 257r–260v). Identifying himself as “an American” is not so much an effusion of Mather’s pride of hemispheric, let alone patriotic, origin as his tongue-in-cheek irony, for until at least the middle of the eighteenth century, the designation “American” signified “American Indian” rather than an “American of European descent.” (See also Mather’s “Problema Theologicum” (1703, 1994), MS pp. 68–69). Not even the up-to-date online OED (2nd edition, 1989) seems aware of this early usage, listing Benjamin Gale’s “Historical Memoirs, relating to the Practice of Inoculation for Small-Pox, in the British American Provinces,” PT 55 (1765): 198, as the first occurrence of the term in its Eurocentric designation.

69 The Spanish Orientalist Arias Montanus (1527–98) argues for the Semitic origin of the Native Americans in his Phaleg: sive, De gentium sedibus primis, orbisque terrae situ liber (1572). This work was included in the famous eight-volume polyglot Bible of King Philip II of Spain Biblia Sacra Hebraice, Chaldaice, Graece, et Latine (1572). Franciscus Vatablus (c. 1485–1547), French Orientalist and professor of theology and Hebrew, offers much the same in his Annotationes in Sacra Biblia, et Scholia (1546), scholia (super 3 Regnum, cap. IX:28). Vatablus’s annotations and scholiae on the Bible were compiled by his students, whose lecture notes were published separately and integrated into many biblical commentaries. New England’s own Samuel Sewall (1652–1730) must be included in this list of authors. In his Phaenomena quaedam Apocalyptica (1697) 54–55, Sewall contradicts the exclusion of America from Christ’s millennial kingdom by claiming that America’s indigenous populations were descendants of Japheth and Shem. See R. Smolinski, “Israel Redivivus” (esp. 369–83).

various Accidents, People might be carried over the Atlantic into America. Yea; the Divine Providence ha's ordered, that the Countreyes which have huge Sea's between them, yett generally meet somewhere, with an Isthmus, or some small passable Distance of Water. An Isthmus unites Asia and Africa. The Mexican and Peruvian Divisions of America, are united by an Isthmus. There are but Narrow Streights between Africa and Europe; and Europe is very sufficiently joined unto Asia. If there be any Streights of Anian, between Asia and America, they may be produced in later Ages; possibly they were not from the Beginning. The most famous Islands, in the World, are so scituated, as to be easily accessible from the Continent. This Conjunction of Countreyes, Non Sinè Numine facta est.⁷⁰

Shemites might pass into America out of Asia; and so might Japhetites too, from Tartary. And why not Europeans? Norway is not far from Iseland; Iseland is but a little Way from Groenland; From Groenland we soon pass into the Mexican America.⁷¹

But how could the Animals gett thither? Even the most Noxious and Venemous Animals, are transported a great Way, by Men for Pleasure, or Profit? And why may not such a Divine Instinct, as brought the Creatures unto Noah, 70 Heidegger (1:436–38, Exerc. XXII, §§ 16, 17). The Swiss chemist and occultist Paracelsus, aka. Theophrastus Phillippus Aureolus Bombastus von Hohenheim (1493–1541), did not believe in monogenesis of the human race and argued that the Native Americans were not descended from Adam and Eve, but were the soulless offspring of a separate creation (See D. C. Allen, Legend 132–33; and L. E. Huddleston, Origin 9–12, 138). Although Paracelsus's book in which he discusses Native Americans is supposed to be lost, his Ex libro de nymphis, sylphis, pygmaeis (1566) argues for polygenesis and distinguishes between four kinds of spirit-men: "the water people, the mountain people, the fire people and the wind people" – all without human souls (Four Treatises IV, p. 226). Thus Isaac La Peyrère was not the first to advocate polygenesis, yet he was the most controversial in his Prae-Adamitae (1655). Mather, who owned an English translation of this work (1656), dismisses La Peyrère's theory of polygenesis and the argument that the Native Americans are not descendents of Noah (A Theological Systeme, lib. 3, cap. 13, pp. 276–81). In his Naturall and Moral Historie (1604), the Spanish Friar José Acosta argues that since Noah's Flood was universal, America was repopled either by navigation or by a land bridge. But since wild animals are not likely to have been carried over in ships, Asia and America must be contiguous (bk. 1, chs. 19–21, pp. 61–71; bk. 7, chs. 2–3, pp. 497–503). Mather's "Brierwood," or rather, Edward Brerewood (c. 1565–1613), professor of astronomy at Gresham College (London), makes the same argument in his oft-reprinted Enquiries Touching the Diversity of Languages (1614), ch. 13, p. 97. Brerewood here insists that "the Northeast part of Asia possessed by the Tartars, is if not continent with the West side of America ... it is at least disioyned by sea ... by some narrow channel of Ocean." This conjunction, Heidegger argues, "is made not without God's will."

71 Heidegger (1:437, Exerc. XXII, § 18). Even Hugo Grotius had argued that the Europeans, especially the Norwegians, might have easily passed from Scandinavia via Iceland and Greenland to North and Central America (De origine gentium Americanarum [1642]), but Joannes de Laet did not take long to deride this argument in his Notae ad dissertationem Hugonis Grotii (1643). Others soon followed suit. See also R. Cogley, "Ancestry" (308).

Q. The Tower of Babel, how does it appear at this Day, in the Reliques and Ruines of it? v. 9.

A. An Inquisitive and Ingenious Traveller, whose Name is Mr. John MacGregory, ha's lately obliged us, with, An Account of the Sepulchres of the Ancients.⁷⁴

The Brick of the Ancients being more durable than Stone; and the Bitumen of the Babylonians more strong than any Cement or Mortar in the World; there still remains very much of that famous Tower, whereof this Gentleman ha's been a critical Eye-Witness, & has given us this Description.

He describes it, first, as it was carried on with relation to its first & original Design.

The Tower is exactly Square, that is, having Four Sides, and as many Angles, or Inclinations of the Sides, equal; in form of an Obelisk, or Pyramid; that is, a Figure, the Sides whereof are equal, and oblique, or in ascending from the Base to the Top, incline towards one another, so as to meet and end in a Point; and whose Angles, or Inclinations of the Sides, are Acute, and less than Ninety Degrees, or the Fourth Part of the Circumference of a Circle.⁷⁵

The Length of one of the Sides, is, Two hundred & fourty three foot; that is to say, of the Ancient Babylonian Foot, which is æqual to a London foot, and two Inches. This being multiplied by Four, makes the Circumference, Nine hundred and Seventy two Foot: or, a Thousand and Thirty four London foot; that is, Two 72 Heidegger (1:437–38, Exerc. XXII, §§ 19, 20). Bochart, Geographia (pars 2, vol. 1, cap. 37–38, col. 639–47). That the ancient Phoenicians or Carthaginians might have drifted off course and thus inadvertently peopled the New World was likely enough, but that their ships were laden with predatory animals whose progeny would subsequently inhabit America was not to be expected – at least if Acosta, de Laet, La Peyrère, or Georgius Hornius's point-by-point refutation De originibus Americanis libri quatuor (1652) could be trusted. Thus Mather wondered, why not a repetition of the miracle such as the one that led the animals into Noah's Ark? (Gen. 7:2–3, 8–9).

73 Mather's insert of four leaves (see note 54 above) ends here; however, to preserve the ordinal sequence of biblical verses, his remaining three annotations on Gen. 11:20, 22, 28, and 29 have been moved from [286v] to their new location between [294v] and [295r].

74 The entire section is extracted from An Account of the Sepulchres of the Ancients (1712) 35–43, by John Mack Gregory (fl. 1705–15), self-styled professor of geography and history who made a living through public lectures in Edinburgh and London. Mack Gregory's publication was valuable to those who in the Battle of the Books needed eyewitness accounts and modern standards of scientific inquiry to confirm the reliability of the ancients. With some very minor variations in spelling and punctuation, Mather's extract is from Mack Gregory's Account (35–43). For a brief background on this author, see C. W. J. Withers's "Towards a History of Geography" (8–9).

hundred & twenty six Geometrical Paces, & four foot; which is more than the fifth Part of an English Mile.

The perpendicular Heighth is Two hundred & forty three foot; equal to the Root of the Square. The Heighth Oblique or Inclining, Two hundred & Seventy one foot and an half; The Angle, or Inclination of the Sides, at the Base, Sixty Degrees, or the Sixth Part of the Circumference of a Circle; and the Angle of the Heighth, or at the Top, Thirty Degrees, or the Twelfth Part of a Circle.

The whole is a Mass of Brick and Bitumen-Work, enclosing an Hill and a Rock: It amounts to Seven Million five hundred and ninety five thousand, an hundred and fifty four London Cube foot; upon Eighty Thousand, three hundred & seventy two Square.⁷⁶

Tis divided into Nine Parts, which are as it were so many Towers Square, in form of Parallelopipeds, or Flat Cubes; that is, Figures, whose Sides are equal, perpendicular, or straight, and parallel to, or equidistant from, one another; and whose Angles of the Sides are Right; that is, just Ninety Degrees, or the Fourth Part of the Circumference of a Circle; raised Obelisk-wise, or Pyramidically, one above another; the Root of the Square in the one above diminishing from That in the other below by an equal Number of Foot, which is Twenty Seven; so as to make a Corridor or Gallery, an Estrade, or Walk, betwixt the Two; upon the Top of the one below, and along the Sides of the other above, all around, Thirteen foot & an half broad; the Height of them all being æqual, Twenty Seven foot; the same with the Difference between the Roots of the Squares; and perpendicular, not oblique, and the Angles of the Sides Right, that is, Ninety Degrees, or the Fourth Part of a Circle. So that the first and lowest upon the Plain, is, Two hundred & forty three foot Square, and Twenty Seven high: The Second, Two hundred and sixteen foot Square, and High as before; The Third, a hundred and eighty nine foot Square; The Fourth, a hundred and Sixty two foot; The Fifth, a hundred and thirty five; The Sixth, a hundred & eight; The Seventh, Eighty one; The Eighth, Fifty four; The last & highest, Twenty Seven foot Square; and the Heighth being the same, it is an exact Cube, or figure having Six Sides, & Eight Angles, all equal. The whole, so many Masses of Brick and Bitumen-Work, enclosing an Hill and a Rock in their Solidities, Raised Pyramidically one above another; Beginning, in the Plain, with a Square of Two hundred & forty three foot; Ending in a Flatt, with One of Twenty Seven, the Ninth Part of the other; and the Difference of those between the Two, having Eight Corridors, or Estrades, Ranging, or Continuing all around, (besides the Plain at the Bottom, and | Flatt at the Top) each Thirteen foot & an half broad; Amounting to the Heighth likewise of Two hundred & forty three foot, or Nine times twenty seven, (there being so many of them, and That being the Heighth of each;) equal to the Root of the First Square; Built of Bricks, of Earth hardened with Fire; each of which is Nine Inches Square, and Three thick; [The Babylonian Inch, which is æqual to the London Inch, & Two Lines; a Line being the Twelfth Part of an Inch;] These laid beside and above one another; and Bitumen mixed with Reeds or Straw, to the Thickness of sometimes Nine Lines, or Three Quarters of an Inch; and sometimes of Thirty Six Lines, or Three Inches; and each disposed as followes. First, there's a Bed of Bitumen, mixt with Reeds, to the Thickness of Three Inches; Then, a Row of so many Bricks as make up the Square, pos'd aside one another, likewise three Inches thick; Next, is another Bed of Bitumen, mix'd with Straw, to the Thickness of Three Quarters of an Inch; Then, a Row {of} Bricks, as before; Next, Bitumen again with Straw, as before; Then another Row of Bricks; which Bed of Bitumen with Straw, and Row of Bricks, are Alternately repeated, the one after the other, Six times more, so as to make up in all, from the Base, the Heighth of Three foot; Then, the whole, (that is, A Bed of Bitumen mixed with Reeds, and a Row of Bricks, as before, and Bitumen, with Straw and Bricks, Alternatively, so many times, as above) is repeated Consecutively or Immediately, Eight times more, so as to make up in all, from the Base, Twenty-Seven foot, which is just a Ninth Part of the perpendicular Heighth of the Tower.⁷⁷

This is a Description of its First and Original Design, with an Account of its Execution and Disposition, as t'was built by Nimrod; who dying before it was compleated, the further Proceedings upon it were then given over; when the Work was raised unto the Heighth of an hundred & sixty two Foot, and just Six Ninth Parts, or Two Thirds of the whole, were finished: so that it ended with a Square-Flatt of an hundred & eight Feet.⁷⁸

It continued so, till the latter Dayes of Ninus Belus; who, after having cutt out a Sepulchre, at the Bottom of the Tower, continued the Building of it, upon a Second and Different Design; whereof this is the Description.⁷⁹

Tis a Tower exactly round, in form of a Cone, or a Round Pyramid; The Diameter, or Thickness at the Base, being Eighty one Foot; the Circumference, or Way round, Two hundred and fifty four foot and an half; the Heighth perpendicular likewise Eighty one foot, equal to the Diameter; The Heighth oblique, Ninety foot and an half; and the Angles of the Sides æqual to those of the former Design. The whole, is likewise a Mass of Brick and Bitumen-Work; amounting to an hundred and fourty thousand, five hundred & eighty nine Cube Foot, upon Five thousand two hundred & seven Square.⁸⁰

The Execution of the Design is thus. Tis divided into Three Parts, which are so many Towers Round, or Cylinders, and Flatt, raised Pyramidically, one above another; the Diameter of the one above diminishing from That of the other below, by Twenty Seven foot, so as to make a Corridor, or Estrade, betwixt the Two, all Around, Thirteen foot & an half broad, the Heighth of them all being likewise Twenty Seven foot, the same with the Difference between the Diameters, and Perpendicular, and the Angles of the Sides, as Those of the former. So that the First and Lowest, upon the Square Flatt of an hundred & eight foot, as above, is Eighty One foot Diameter, and Twenty Seven High; The Second, Fifty four foot Diameter, and High as before; The Last and Highest, Twenty Seven foot Diameter; and the Heighth being the same, tis a Cylinder, or a Round Tower, Cube. The whole, so many Masses, built of Brick and Bitumen, and Disposed each as before, with this Difference, That whereas the others, of both Designs, are all Solid, and entirely Massive, (except the First & Lowest Mass of the First Design, or of the whole, that ha's the Sepulchre contrived in its Solidity, after the Execution,) the Second of the Second, or the Eight of the First, or of the whole, ha's practised in its Solidity, along with the Execution, a Temple, which is likewise round, Twenty Seven foot Diameter, and the same in Heighth, having an Entry, or Door, on the Side towards Babylon, Nine foot square, and Thirteen foot, & an half long, and an Overture, or Opening, or, as it were, a Window, in the Top, round, Nine foot Diameter; The Floor both of the Temple and Entry, being | plain; the Sides perpendicular, & the Roof arched; the Arching practised in the uppermost Third Part of the Heighth; the whole of Brick and Bitumen, as before.⁸¹ [▽293r]

This is the Second Design of the Tower, as it was built by Ninus Belus; who likewise Dying before it was compleated, the further Execution of it was then again given over; when Nimrod and he together, had raised it unto the Heighth of Two hundred & sixteen foot; The First, unto that of an Hundred & Sixty Two; The Second, unto that of Fifty four more; And just Eight Ninth Parts of the Work, or the whole except One Ninth Part, the Last and Smallest of them all were finished; the Six Lower by Nimrod, the two Higher by Ninus; And the Compleating of it, tho' it wanted so little, was never afterwards thought on more by any of their Successors; so that being near, but not, compleated, it ended with a Round Flatt of Fifty four foot Diameter; having an Overture, or Hole, of Nine foot, being the Window of the Temple, as above, in the Middle; And so it continues to this Day.⁸²

As the Tower, so the Temple, is most certainly, the First and most Ancient Edifice in the World, of that Kind. The first, was according to Moses, the Design of Nimrod; The Second, was according to Herodotus, the Design of Ninus Belus; in honour of his Father; who having cutt out a Grott, at the Bottom of the Tower, to be his Burial-Place, after the Building of the lower Part of the Edifice, practised a Temple, at the Top of it; that it might serve as a Place of Worship for him, along with the Building of the upper Part; Tho' both against the Nature of the Edifice, which was Designed only a Tower. So the Tower as well as the Temple, ha's ever since it was built, serv'd as a Model, or Pattern, of Edifices of that kind; for all the other People in the World to Imitate; Especially the Temple, which ha's constantly been followed by Those of all Religions, as well as of all Nations. They have all built their Temples the same Way, that is, Round, with an Ouverture at the Top; except the Goths, who loved rather to follow the Model of Noahs Ark; and the Modern Christians, who make a Mixture of both.⁸³

⁸² Mack Gregory (40–41).

However, tis probable, that the Ouverture at the Top of the Temple of Belus, happened by Chance; namely, from the Buildings being left Incomplete. For there are Temples of the same Times, to be seen still near the Ruines of Babylon, which have no such Thing.⁸⁴

What Alterations have befallen it, since its Building, are chiefly owing to the Injuries of Time, Wind, Weather, & other Natural Accidents; which have something defaced it on all the Four Sides; especially on the North and West, where the Force of those Accidents is greatest; and where, for that Reason, the Mass of the Edifice is decay'd at the Corners & Edges of the Parts; & the Body of the Bricks wore away into a Channel, between the Bitumenures, or Beds of Bitumen, which with the Reeds & Straw embodied with them, continue Firm & Entire.⁸⁵

But then, the Turks have also been mischievous; who, wherever they find a Monument of Antiquity in a conquered Countrey, are sure to Ruine it, if they can, or to Deface it as far as they can. These have Broken the Bricks & the Bitumenures, as far as they could well go on all Sides.

Capricious People, have also dug into the Solidity of the Building in several Places, to cutt little Chambers for their own Retirement there.

But the main Damages have been done by a common sort of modern Antiquaries, who live at Bagdad, & other Towns hard by, & wound it for the Satisfaction of Travellers, on all Occasions.⁸⁶

Q. You know, the Periods assign'd unto the Patriarchs, are much larger in the LXX, than they are in our Hebrew. The Calculation of the Greek, exceeds that of the Hebrew, near nine hundred Years. You know, that a certain Gentleman, who privately would intimate, that he beleev'd no Divine Revelation at all, at the same time wrote a Book, to prove that the Version of the Septuagint was of Divine Inspiration. The Men of his Tribe, call in Josephus, to support their Assertion. But they chiefly insist on the Numbers of People, appearing in the World, at the Building of Babel, and anon, at the Battel of Abraham? v. 9.⁸⁷

A. If Josephus, who could not Read the Holy Scriptures in the Hebrew Original, (as there is Cause to think,) so contradict the Hebrew Original, he does also contradict the Septuagint, yea, and contradict himself too. The History of Josephus was not in any Esteem among the Jews; but the Christians valued it at an high rate, & used it at their Pleasure. They inserted what Passages they pleased into it; and they might as well insert the Calculation of the LXX, among the Pious Frauds too frequently then committed among them. Wherefore, dismissing the Authority of Josephus, as of no Validity, we will go on to consider the Cavils made about the Numbers of People, soon after the Flood. The Division of the World into Seventy Two Nations and Languages, at the building of Babel, is a Jewish Fiction. It is also a chimerical Notion, that the Age fitt for Procreation, came very much later on Men in those Elder, than in our Modern times. Tis probable, (as Monsr. Jurieu thinks) that it rather came earlier. Nature was then rather in greater Vigour. The Design of GOD was, to see the World Increase & Multiply.⁸⁸

Lett Shem, and Ham, and Japhet, sett themselves to multiply their Posterity. Lett GOD permitt more Daughters to be born than Sons. Lett few dy in their Infancy. Make them capable of Marriage at fifteen Years of Age; And each Husband allow himself the Liberties of Polygamy; Now at this rate, within an hundred Years, there might be born of these Three, no less than Two Millions of Souls. But, why may we not also take Noah, for a Fourth into the Number? However, there is no need of supposing so many Millions, to begin the Tower of Babel, and to people the several Parts of the Earth in their Dispersion.⁸⁹

What if in Abrahams time, we find Kings in many Parts of the World? Monsr. Jurieu undertakes to make it out, that if the Period betwixt Noah and Abraham, were no more than Three Hundred Years, yett in this Period, the Posterity of Shem and Ham, and Japhet, might be increased unto Four times the Number of People, that are now in the World. He supposes the Inhabitants of the Earth, at this day, to be no more than Four hundred Millions. Now suppose, that at the building of the Towre of Babel, there might be 20000 Persons; Lett these be turned into 10000 married Couples: Lett each of these Women, bring forth one Child every Year: Lett these Children arrive to the Age of Maturity; And so these 10000 Marriages producing 10000 Children every Year for 40 Years; will afford at the Expiration of these 40 Years, 400000 Persons. Of these 400000 lett at least 200000 come to a marriageable Age, and make 100000 Marriages; which in 40 Years more, will produce four Millions of Souls, which might be living 80 Years after the Building of Babel. Now, look back unto the 200000 Persons we left unmarried at the Expiration of the first 40 Years; not being of Age to marry. These brought into 100000 Marriages, for 40 Years, that is from the 50th to the 90th Year after the Towre, here will be four Millions more. Thus 90 Years after the Towre, there would be Eight Millions, besides Fathers and Grandfathers yett living. Observing still, the like Progression for these as for the former, at the End of the next 40 Years, there will be 160 Millions. Go on, and you'l be convinced, that before the Expiration of 200 Years from the Building of the Towre, there might be a vastly greater Number of People, than are now to be found in the World.⁹⁰ chronology of the LXX being 1,440 years longer than that of the Hebrew, Vulgate, and of the later King James Version (1611). Jurieu provides several tables to enumerate these disagreements in the ages of the patriarchs and their offspring. The division into “Seventy Two Nations and Languages” at Babel is an extra-biblical tradition that can be found in Pirke de R. Eliezer (ch. 24, pp. 176–77), in the Talmudic tractates Sanhedrin (17a) and Shabbath (88b), and in Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (Gen. 11:8), in Walton (4:19). The “Chimerical Notion” of the patriarchs’ reproductive age is closely linked with the problem of biblical chronology – since some of the patriarchs were either too young or too old for procreation depending on which of the different chronologies are employed; see Jurieu (1:272, 277–79).

Q. Upon Serug and Nahor, what remarkable Traditions of Antiquity? v. 20, 22.

A. If we may beleve Suidas in the Word, Σερυχ, and Damascen, and a long Roll of other Authors, mentioned by Jacobus Geusius, in his Treatise, De Victimis Humanis; This very Serug was the first who began to celebrate every Year the Memory of famous Men, after they were Dead, & commanded them to be honoured as Benefactors.

The same Authors tell us, That Idolatry increasing much in the Dayes of Nahor, there was a great Earthquake (the first that ever had been observed,) which overturned their Temples, and broke their Images in Arabia.⁹¹

Q. What Remark upon Harans dying before his Father Terah? v. 28.

A. Epiphanius notes, That there was no Exemple of a Son who dyed before his Father, (except Abel.) till Terah the Father of Abram, taught the People a False Religion, to make Images of Clay, and worship them. It was Impiety that hastened the slow Necessities of Death.⁹²

Q. Who was Iscah? v. 29.

A. Sarah. If Iscah be not Sarah, wee have no Account at all of Sarahs Descent; but that is not likely. Its no Wonder she should have Two Names; One perhaps before they came out of Chaldaea, & another after.⁹³

Q. Concerning, Ur of the Chaldees? v. 31.

⁹² Epiphanius (Panarion 3.5–6, in Epiphanius 1:177, line 19 to 1:178, lines 5).

A. To take the Benefit of what has been collected by Dr. Wells on that Subject, I will remark to you; That by the Name of Chaldaea in After-ages, was denoted, the Countrey lying between Mesopotamia to the North, Susiana to the East, the Persian Bay to the South, and Arabia deserta, to the West. Its Capital City was called, Babylonia; Hence called in Isaiah's Prophecies, The Beauty of the Chaldee's Excellency. From this, the whole Countrey came also to be called, Babylonia. The Greeks formed this Name, tis plain, from the Hebrew, Babel; the Tower of that Name, standing hereabouts. The Rise of the Name Chaldaea, is not so clear. But since the Chaldeans, are in the Hebrew called, Chasdim, it is commonly thought, they took their Name, from Chesed, one of the Sons of Nahor, the Brother of Abraham. [Gen. XXII.22.] The Plural Number whereof, will afford, Chasdim. From this, instead of Χασδαῖοι, Chasdai, the Greeks formed the softer Word, Χαλδαῖοι Chaldei. This may do for the bare Etymology of the Word. But how the Son of Nahor, should come to give his Name unto the Nation and Countrey of the Chaldeans, is not so easily accounted for. We don't find, that Chesed, or any of his Descendents, ever came to be Masters of the Countrey, & impose their Name upon it. Some therefore suppose, that Chesed, or his Descendents, might be the Authors of some signal Benefit, unto the Inhabitants of this Countrey; and particularly, that they might first Instruct them in the Art of Astronomy, for which they are so famous in ancient History. Because of the extraordinary Esteem the Ancients had for that Science, the People of this Countrey might affect from Vainglory to go under this Name; or else might be so called by others, from a Distinguishing Respect unto them. It is observable, That when they are mentioned on the account of this Art, they are usually termed Chaldeans, rather than Babylonians. A Chaldean and an Astronomer, seem to have been Terms æquivalent. But then, if the Name were taken from Chesed, or his Descendents, it must in the Text now before us, be used proleptically; as the Lands of Havilah, and Cush, and Assyria, in the Description of Paradise; which Names yett were not given them, till after the Flood.⁹⁴

Chaldaea sometimes in the Sacred Writings, is taken in a larger Sense, & so as to take in the adjacent Parts of Mesopotamia, particularly lying along the Tigris. The Words of the Martyr Stephen, imply, that the Part of Mesopotamia, where Abraham was, before he dwelt in Charran, must be included in, The Land of the Chaldees. And this tends further to confirm the Opinion, that the Name of Chaldaea, was originally derived from Chesed the Son of Nahor. For, when Terah, with his Son Abraham, left Ur of the Chaldees, the other Son of Terah, namely, Nahor, staid behind, in that Countrey. Chesed might instruct his Children in Astronomy; whence the Chasdim, tis probable, might become famous in those Parts. And hence, Ur, as being the dwelling-place of Chesed and his Family, might be called by way of Honour, Ur of the Chaldees; as if it were said, Ur, where the Chasdim live, so famous for Astronomy. And this Art being in great Vogue, & much studied by the Inhabitants of better fashion, in the adjoining Kingdome of Babylonia, hence the Name of Chasdim, the first Instructors in this Art, might spread itself over the Kingdome. What may further confirm this Opinion, is; That Ur signifies Light, and may be taken for the Heavenly Luminaries. It may be so called, because here they studied the Motions of those Luminaries. This Ur lay in the Eastern Part of Mesopotamia; which Scituation, as it agrees to the Words of our Stephen, so it is agreeable unto the Report of Ammianus Marcellinus, who travelled this Countrey, and mentions a City of this Name lying there, between the Tigris, and the City of Nisibis.⁹⁵

⁹⁶ According to Gen. 10:25, Eber named his son Peleg because “in his days was the earth divided.” Peleg was 239 years old when he died (Gen. 11:18–19). Terah, Abraham’s father, was 205 years old when he died in Haran (Gen. 11:32). Abraham’s burial is mentioned in Gen. 49:31.

Q. We are entring into the History of Abraham; and the Exercitations of Heidegger having afforded us very acceptable Illustrations on many Passages in that History, it may not be amiss here to lay them together, as an Introduction to many others that may be hereafter mentioned? v. 1.

A. It shall be done.

We will not concern ourselves with the Hebrew Curiosities, about the Name of ABRAHAM. Jerom indeed reports, That it is an Observation of the Ancient Hebrewes, That the Letter /ה/ He, which is the Letter most employ'd in the Name JEHOVAH, is added unto the Names of Abraham and Sarah; as an Intimation, that the Lord will not communicate, not only of His Blessings, but also of Himself, unto His People. Yea, Some have carried the Note thus far; That from Abraham and Sarah there should at length be born He who is God, as well as Man; and that it would be at the Beginning of that Millenary, whereof the Letter /ה/ He, gives us the Number; namely, the Fifth Millenary. Capnio and Faber, and others, fetch certain further Evangelical Mysteries from the Name of Abraham. The Three first Letters, lead us to consider, /אב/ The Father, /בן/ The Son, and /רוח/ The Spirit. The Fourth Letter, /ה/ may design the Divine Essence, common to all the Three Persons; it being the first and the last Letter of /יהי/ which is the Root of the Four-Lettered Name. And then, the Final /ם/ leads us to think of the Messiah, the Saviour of the World. Nicolaus Abramus, a learned Man, in his, Pharos V.T. ha's more of these Mysteries. But our Heidegger would find Mysteries in the Text, & not fetch them to it: and is content, that Abram signify, either, The Father of Aram, or the Syrians, as the Talmudists understand it; or, πατήρ μετewρος, Pater Excelsus, as Philo and Austin conjecture it. And the, /ה/ He, added unto it, is not from the Tetragrammaton, but from the Word, /הבון/ A Multitude; as the Text itself expoundeth it.⁹⁷

⁹⁷ Mather here returns to his trusty Johann Heinrich Heidegger, whose Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (2:50–51, Exerc. III, § 1) is among the principal sources for Mather's commentary on Genesis. St. Jerome (on Gen. 17:4–5) argues that “the Hebrews say that God added the letter he from His own Name which among themselves is written with four letters, to the names of Abraam and Sarah. For at first he was called Abram, which means ‘high father’; and afterwards he was called Abraam, which is translated as ‘father of many’” (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 49). The letter ה “he” appearing twice in the Tetragrammaton יהוה (HVHY), Jehovah (Yahweh), is here mystically associated with Abraham and Sarah, to whose names ה (he) was added. According to the Soncino Zohar (Bereshith, sec. 1, pp. 91b, 96a), Abraham's name is anagrammatically read as “b'he b'raam (he created them with He).” Abraham and Sarah were not allowed to conceive Isaac (through whom the Messiah is to come) until Abraham “had been circumcised and called perfect and had been completed by the addition to his name of the letter he. To Sarah, too, a he had been given.” The letter ה (he) is the fifth letter in the Hebrew alphabet, which in cabbalistic fashion is here linked with the Fifth Monarchy of Daniel's dream vision (Dan. 2:44–

It is yett undetermined, who Sarah was. The Hebrewes, both ancient and modern, all agree, that she was [Gen. 11.29.] Ischah, the Daughter of Haran, the Brother of Abraham. And so she was the Sister of Abraham, in the same Sense that Lot was his Brother. It would fill a Page, to marshal the Army of Christian Writers also, both Ancient and Modern, from Austin to Schickard, who fall in with this Opinion. Others will have Sarah, to be the Genuine and the Natural Sister of Abraham; only by the Fathers Side, and not by the Mothers. The Words of Abraham himself do evidently imply thus much. [Gen. 20.12.] The Gloss of Jarchi therefore upon them, is this; Filia Patris [Soror, non uterina] Jure conjungebatur Noachidi, quoniam inter gentes ratio consanguinitatis paternæ non habebatur. And here the Authors, which from Clemens to Piscator, fall in with this Opinion, would make another Army. Patricides, the Arabic Writer, proceeds to tell us, that the Name of Abrahams Mother was Jonah, and the Name of Sarah's Mother, was Tehevitha. Take it one way or t'other, the Marriage of Abraham with Sarah, seems to have an Incestuous Blemish upon it. Which drave Luther, to think, that Sarah was the Daughter of Abrahams Father only by Adoption, or at most, by some Affinity. But for this Conjecture, there is little Foundation. Our Heidegger inclines to the Opinion, That Sarah was really the Daughter of Abrahams Father, but not of his Mother. If she had been the Neece of Abraham, he had no need for to have made such a Distinction, that she was a Neece by her Fathers Side, & not by her Mothers. As for the Incest in the Case, it must be Remembred, That Abraham wanted the Written Law; and so the Law of Nature by Degrees was too easily forgotten in some famous Instances. And the Zeal of the Patriarchs to avoid Marriages with Strangers, added unto the Occasions of 45), that kingdom during which the messiah would reign forever. “Capnio” (“little smoke”) is the Latinized pseudonym for the famous Christian Hebraist Johannes Reuchlin (1455–1522), the German humanist, jurist, cabbalist, and professor of Oriental languages at Ingolstadt and Tübingen. Heidegger most likely refers to Reuchlin’s popular De verbo mirifico (1494) or to De arte cabalistica, id est, De divinae revelationis (1517) – Reuchlin’s principal cabbalistic studies. A copy of Reuchlin’s Lexicon Hebraicum, & in Hebraeorum grammaticon commentarij (1537), bearing Increase Mather’s signature, is in the Mather Libraries [AAS # F018]. Heidegger’s “Faber” is most likely Jacobus Faber (1455–1537), aka. Jacques Lefèvre d’Estables (Faber Stapulensis), the French humanist of the Reformation, biblical translator, and exegete, who translated the Vulgate into French (1530). Abraham’s Hebrew name אַבְרָהָם, or more specifically the Hebrew letters אב (ab; father), בן (ben; son), רוּחַ (ruach; spirit), is associated with the Hebrew root of Jehovah יהוה (yhvh); the terminal מ (m) of Abraham is linked with the initial מַשִּׁיחַ (mashiyach) “Messiah” (Dan. 9:25, 26). The French Jesuit theologian Nicolaus Abramus (1589–1655), professor of theology at the University of Pont-à-Mousson, published Pharus Veteris Testamenti (1648), lib. 7, to which book Heidegger here refers. Pierre Bayle reviews Abramus’s Pharus in his famous General Dictionary (1734) 1:34. Heidegger (2:50, § 1) here follows the Talmudic tractate Berachoth (13a), according to which Abraham first “became a father to Aram [Ab-Aram] only, but in the end he became a father to the whole world”; i.e., the father of a multitude of nations (Gen. 17:5). Philo Judaeus calls Abraham “pater meteoros”; i.e., “sublime” or “exalted father” (De gigantibus 16.62.6; De Abrahamo 18.82.2; Legum allegoriarum 3.27.83, line 6). St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 16.28) [PL 41. 507] argues that the Hebrew letter “he” is derived from the first letter of הַמִּזְרַח (hamown); i.e., “many” nations (Gen. 17:4), in NPNFi (2:327).

their being Betray'd into Marriages, that were attended with some exceptionable Circumstances.⁹⁸

It is enquired; For what Reason Abraham was ordered to Remove out of Chaldea, into Canaan? Bolducus thinks, it was that he might by his Ministry recover this Countrey, out of their Idolatries, as he had already recovered his own; and that he might unite with Melchisedek, in the Conservation and the |

⁹⁸ Heidegger (2:51–52, Exerc. III, §§ 3, 4). Heidegger is a bit misleading here. While the Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XXXVIII.14), Targum Jonathan ben Uziel (Walton 4:20), and Baal Ha-Turim (1:91) agree that Sarah and Ischah are one and the same, the most notable commentators disagree because that identity would make Sarah Abraham's literal sister. R. Isaac implies the consanguinity of Sarah and Abraham, but does not further comment on this issue (Sanhedrin 69b). Significantly, Ibn Ezra (Gen. 11:29; 20:12) explicitly denies that Ischah and Sarah are one and the same or that Sarah is Abraham's sister, arguing that commentators who refer to Gen. 20:12 as proof don't realize that Abraham used "a timely excuse" when he introduced Sarah to Abimelech as his sister (Commentary 1:146–47, 212–13). Similarly, Nachmanides denies that Sarah was Abraham's sister, but is puzzled by Ibn Ezra's explanation (Commentary on Genesis 1:263–64). R. Bachya ben Asher argues that Sarah was Abraham's niece (Torah Commentary 1:320); likewise, Rashi (drawing on Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer, ch. 26 and 36) insists that Sarah was Terah's granddaughter, hence Abraham's niece (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:240); however, since grandchildren are accounted children of the grandfather, Abraham could be said to have married his "sister" (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:240). Finally, R. Manasseh ben Israel reconciles the seeming contradiction between Gen. 11:29 and 20:12, insisting that Sarah is Terah's granddaughter, hence Abraham's niece (The Conciliator 1:49–50, Question 39). For a summary of this debate including the names of some of the principal combatants on this issue, see Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:145, 181–82). St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 16.19), too, insists that Sarah was Abraham's sister only "because she was near of blood" (NPNFi 2:322). The Lutheran theologian Wilhelm Schickhard (1592–1635), professor of Oriental languages and astronomy at Tübingen, and inventor of the first mechanical calculator, published his oft-reprinted Hebrew grammar Horologium Hebraicum (1623). A copy of the 1639 London edition of this work is in the Mather Libraries (AAS # 0662). Schickhard's Hebrew grammar was the first to be used at Harvard until Judah Monis published his own in 1734 (see I. S. Meyer, "Hebrew at Harvard"; R. Pfeiffer, "Teaching of Hebrew" 366, 369–70; and T. Olbricht, "American Biblical Scholarship" 83). Most likely, Mather refers to Schickhard's study of rabbinic commentaries on the Torah, Bechinath Happeruschim Hoc est Examinis Commentationum Rabbinicarum in Mosen Prodromus (1624). The second-hand Latin gloss of Jarchi (Rashi) translates, "The daughter of one's father [the sister, not from the same womb] is permitted to a Noachide (for marriage), for a gentile has no father (i.e., his lineage is not traced from his father)," in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis (1:240). Both Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 2.23.138.1, lines 1–4), in ANF (2:377), and the German Reformed theologian Johannes Piscator (1546–1625), professor of Oriental languages at Herborn, argue that both Abraham and Sarah had the same father, but different mothers. Piscator's discussion appears in his Commentarius in Genesin (1601), pp. 342–43 (scholia in cap. XX, Genesis), and in his 4-vol. work Commentarii in omnes libros Veteris Testamenti (1643–46), on Gen. 20:12. Saidus Patricides (Annales [1656], lib. 1, p. 67) argues that the mothers of Abraham and Sarah were called "Yunā" and "Tohwait," respectively. See also Johann Heinrich Hottinger's discussion of "Thaerach" (Thera), in Smegma Orientale (lib. 1, cap. 8, pp. 280–87). In his Lectures on Genesis (Gen. 11:29–30), Martin Luther dismisses incest by insisting that Sarah was Terah's daughter by adoption only (Works 2:240; 3:352). Heidegger (2:52) agrees with the solution offered by Clemens Alexandrinus, Patricides, Piscator, and many others that Abraham und Sarah had different mothers. Mather tries to mitigate the patriarch's culpability because living centuries before Moses, Abraham could not have known of the Hebrew Lawgiver's proscription against incest (Lev. 18:9, 11; 20:17).

Propagation of the true Religion. Indeed, there is no doubt, that Abraham did make it his business, wherever he came, to discourage Idolatry. But the little Success he had this Way in Palastine, makes it evident, that this was not the Principal Errand on which the Lord sent him hither. We may allow, with Chrysostom, That Abraham, was the Light and the Doctor of the Gentiles. But yett his Principal Errand into Palastine, seems to be, to make Præparation for the Possession of that Land by his Posterity; and the Appearance of the Messiah there. And herein was also a Trial of his Obedience; wherein he proposed indeed unto himself, that Heavenly Countrey, whereof this Earthly One was but a Figure: [Heb. 11.8, 9, 10.] according to that of Plotinus, mentioned by Austin [De C. D. IX.17.] Fugendum est ad clarissimam patriam; et ibi pater, et ibi omnia.⁹⁹

There seems to be a Difficulty in one Article, of Abrahams Removal. We read, Gen. 11.31. They went forth from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the Land of Canaan. But we read; Gen. 12.1. The Lord said unto Abram, Gett thee unto a Land, that I will shew thee. And we read; Heb. 11.8. He went out, not knowing whither he went. If he went forth, to go into the Land of Canaan, how could it be represented, as if he went forth, not knowing whither he was to go? Laurentius Codomannus, and, Nicolaus Abramus, will have this Particle, UI, imply, not so much the Intent, as the Event, of Abrams Journey. But this will not hold, for Terah, the Father of Abraham, who died before they reached the Land of Canaan. Torniellus therefore gives an Answer, more satisfactory to our Heidegger; Abram knew, that God would have him go as far as Canaan; but he did not yett know, that God would have him Rest there, and Go no further. He stopt a while at Charan; and when he went on to Canaan, it was with an Expectation, that God would there show him, whether he was to remove any further; But here the Lord said, This is the Land, that I will give thee.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁹ Heidegger (2:55, 56, Exerc. III, §§ 7, 9). Heidegger refers to the discussion on Gen. 22:1 by the Capuchin Frere Jacobus Bolducus, aka. Jacques Boulduc (born in Paris, c. 1580), whose De Ecclesia ante legem (1626), lib. 3, cap. 2, is the work in question. Joannes Chrysostomus, Homiliae in Genesim [PG 53. 364; 54. 475], argues that Abraham and Sarah went to Egypt to teach the Egyptians the “true cultus” (see also Homily in Genesis [31.19], p. 250; 32.10, p. 262). In De Civitate Dei (9.17) [PL 41. 271], St. Augustine paraphrases Enneadis (1.6.8, lines 16–17), by Plotinus (204–70 CE), the last of the great Greek philosophers of antiquity. The paraphrase signifies, “We must fly to our beloved fatherland. There is the Father, there our all” (NPNFi 2:175). In his holograph manuscript, Mather identifies his source as “[De C. D. IX.16],” instead of “IX.17.” The error is Heidegger’s (or the printer’s devil), whom Mather extracts, but here silently corrected.

¹⁰⁰ Heidegger (2:57, Exerc. III, § 10). The contradiction between Gen. 11:31, Gen. 12:1, and Heb. 11:8 was the subject of much debate throughout the ages and was generally resolved by arguing that Abram received two distinct calls – first a general, then a specific one that included his separation from his kinsmen who remained in Haran. The debate is also summarized in Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:145–46). Mather here refers to Quattuor libri chronologiae praemissos (1581), lib. 1, cap. 3, by the Lutheran theologian Laurentius Codomannus, aka. Lorenz Codomann (1529–90), superintendent in Gernersheim and Bayreuth (Germany); and to Pharus Veteris Testamenti (1648), lib. 7, cap. 21, by the previously mentioned French Jesuit

How long did Abram tarry at Charan? It may be, not one Year. He had nothing but the Sickness and the Dying of his Aged Father, to detain him there. What Abenezra, reports, of Terah's being smitten with the Pleasure of the Place, and perhaps returning to his former Idolatries, is but a Fiction. And the Arguments of Petavius, and Bonfrerius, and Harvilleus, for Abrams continuing a good while at Haran, are so answered by our Heidegger, that it seems not worth our while to mention them.¹⁰¹

The Story that Josephus ha's out of Nicolaus Damascenus, That Abram stopt at Damascus, and became a King there; which is also asserted by Justin, the Epitomizer of Trogus Pompeius; tho' Bolducus favour it, yett it is a very unlikely Story; and Pererius will answer him, That it would have been in Abram a Disobedience unto God, and hardly consistent, with his own and his Grandsons Declarations, That they had every where kept the Character of Strangers, after they had left the Countrey of their Fathers.¹⁰²

Abram arriving to Sichem, (which was destroy'd by Abimelek, and rebuilt by Jeroboam, and, as Adrichomius, and Brocardus, and Benjamin tell us, was afterwards called, Neapolis;) the Lord appeared a Second Time, unto him; and promised This Land unto him: which Promise, because it was not suspended on any Condition, our Apostle calls it, A Testament. The Faith of Abraham, and his, το φιλοθεον, as Chrysostom's Phrase for it is, express'd on this Occasion, in building an Altar, to GOD, by way of Thankfulness for His appearing to him, Nicolaus Abramus. The learned Italian theologian and chronologer Augustinus Torniellus (1543–1622) comments on this issue in his oft-reprinted Annales Sacri et Profani (1611), vol. 1, on the date of A. M. 2113 (numero 3).

101 Heidegger (2:58, Exerc. III, §§ 12, 13). Estimates of the duration of Abram's residence in Haran vary greatly. R. Eliezer relates that Abraham built a house "opposite to Haran" and there entertained anyone who entered or left the city and taught them about the true God (Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer, ch. 25, p. 184). Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:148) on Gen. 11:29 only argues that Terah settled in Haran because "the place found favor in his eyes" – not that he returned to his former religious practices. Most likely, Heidegger refers to Denysius Petavius's oft-reprinted study of biblical chronology Rationarium temporum (1633) and to Jacobus Bonfrerius's Pentateuchus Moysis commentario (1625) 181 (on Gen. 11:31); "Harvilleus" is possibly Henricus Harvillaeus (Henri Harville de la Grange), a French historian and author of Isagoge chronologica (1624), a history of the world to 1620. The English translation of Petavius's Rationarium temporum, appearing as The History of the World (1659), relates that Abram spent "about five years" in Haran before moving into Canaan (bk. 1, ch. 2, p. 5).

102 Heidegger (2:58, 60, Exerc. III, §§ 13, 15). Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.7.2), citing Nicolaus Damascenus's Historiai (Fragments 30, lines 1–11), asserts that "Abram reigned at Damascus" and "after a long time" moved with his people to Canaan. Justin's epitome of Trogus Pompeius, Historiarum Philippicarum (36.2) confirms this story, relating that Abraham was one in a sequence of several kings of Damascus before "Israel," his successor, and Israel's populous offspring by his "ten" sons became rulers of the land. Jacobus Bolducus cites the same story favorably in his De Ecclesiastica ante legem (lib. 3, cap. 2), but Benedictus Pererius, in his Commentarium et disputationum in Genesim (1596) 3:40–41 (Gen. 12) rejects it as inconsistent with Abram's obedience to God's command.

It was not long before a Famine drove Abram into Egypt. And here, the Beauty of Sarah, moved Abram to consult his own Safety, by putting her, to dissemble her being any other than a Sister unto him. This Matter ha's produced some Difficult Questions.¹⁰⁴

First; Sarah, was now an old Woman, above Sixty Years of Age; and how can such a Charming Beauty be supposed in her. We will not insist upon the Causes that several Expositors have assigned for this Beauty of Sarah. It is enough, that with Chrysostom, we suppose an Extraordinary & Supernatural Gift of God, unto this Lady; who intended a Trial to the Faith of her Husband in it. But the chief Difficulty is; what is to be thought of this Action in the Patriarch, which seems to expose his Wife unto an Adulterous Prostitution? Faustus the Manichee, opens cruelly upon it. | *Quòd, Matrimonij sui infamissimus nundinator, avaritiæ ac ventris causâ, duobus Regibus, Abimelech et Pharaoni diversis temporibus Saram conjugem, Sororem mentitus, quòd erat pulcherrima, in concubitum venditârat.*¹⁰⁵ Yea, Origen falls very hard upon Abram, Quòd per conniventiam maritalem, Saram contaminationibus exposuerit. And Jerom talks of a, Fæda Necessitas, in the business. On the other Side; many of the Papists, not only Excuse, but even Commend, the Action. N. Abramus, would hence prove, Quòd licitus sit quandoque mendaciorum usus. Lyra pleads, That Abram had no way left but this, to save his Life, without a Tempting of God. Paulus Burgensis, pleads, that a Prophetic Spirit acted {upon} Abram in what he did. The Ancients also make a Trial of Skill, for the Defence of Abram. Chrysostom will have it a sort of Dramatic Business between Abram and Sarah, founded in a most certain Assurance that he had of her Constancy, & yett carried on with a sort of a Show of a Permission of her Adultery. Austin saies, Tacuit aliquid Veri, non dixit aliquid Falsi, ne se exciso

¹⁰³ Heidegger (2:60–61, 62, Exerc. III, §§ 16, 18). Sichem (Shechem) was destroyed by Abimelek (Gen. 12:6; Judg. 9:45–50) and rebuilt by Jeroboam (1 Kings 12:25). Though modern historians and archaeologists disagree on the identity and exact location of Sichem, Josephus Flavius (Wars 4.8.1) identifies Sichem (Shechem) with Neapolis. Christian Adrichomius's Theatrum Terræ Sanctæ (1590) 28 # 71, follows suit. The Dominican Brocardus mentions the place-name in his popular Descriptio Locorum de Terræ Sanctæ exactissima (1554), and so does R. Benjamin of Tudela in his Itinerarium (66). Mather apparently refers to St. Paul's explication of God's promise to Abraham (Gal. 3:15–16). In Homiliae in Genesim (homilia 32) [PG 53. 295, line 64], Joannes Chrysostom praises Abraham's piety and exhorts his parishioners to "See the indication of his god-fearing attitude" (Homilies in Genesis 32.7, p. 259).

¹⁰⁴ Heidegger (2:97, Exerc. IV, § 3). Gen. 12:13, 19.

ab impijs captiva possideretur; certus de Deo suo, quòd nihil turpe ac flagitiosum eam perpeti sineret. He thinks, That Abrams leaving but one thing, (his Wifes Chastity) entirely to the Care of Heaven, carried less Temptation with it than if he had also cast his own Life there, without any Care in himself concerning it. Heidegger after all, seems worthy to be the Foreman of the Jury in this Case, when he brings in this Verdict; *Et temerarios Judices esse putamus, qui nimis inclementer insultant Patriarchæ, et molles nimis ac lenes, qui eum à culpâ penitus absolvunt.*¹⁰⁶ Here was no Prostitution. When Abram asserted himself the Brother of Sarah, he rendred necessary the Application of the Egyptians unto him, if they desired, any of them, to marry her. This would have given him Opportunity to have thought of many Wayes to Divert and Delay their Designs, which he could not have had, if under the apprehension of his being her Husband, which would have rendred them forever desperate, they had murdered him. Nevertheless, his Faith seems to have been in this Matter, not so strong as it was in some other Instances. It seems, as if it would have been better for him, to have dealt plainly, & have resigned the whole Matter unto the Conduct of the Faithful God, and himself unto the Divine Providence and Protection; knowing that the Promise of the Blessed One to descend from him, could not be defeated. There was no Reason, in the Jesuites reproaching of Calvin, (of whom our Heidegger saies, He is, Gravissimus Theologus, et suetus ubique scapham scapham appellare;) for saying upon this Quæstion; *Ergò si probè omnia expendimus, infidelitate peccavit, minus Dei Providentiæ quàm debebat, tribuens.*¹⁰⁷ Well; Sarah is taken into the House of Pharaoh. Pharaoh; a Name common to the Kings of Egypt; like Cæsar, to the

Roman Emperors, Antiochus to the Kings of Syria, Abimelech to the Kings of the Philistines, Arasces to the Kings of Parthia, Ptolomy to the Kings of Egypt after the Dayes of Alexander, and Cleopatra, to the Queens, Candace to the Queens of the Ethiopians, Artaxerxes to the Kings of Persia, Cotys to the Kings of Thracia, Arincathes to those of Cappadocia, *Phylemen*es to those of Paphlagonia, and Patimbotheus to those of India. – But here's enough of 'em! Josephus thinks, the Name Pharaoh, began with Pharaoh Mineus, the builder of Memphis, which was many Years before the Dayes of Abraham. In their Childhood, the Gentlemen had other Names; but when they entred upon their Government, they were called, Pharaoh, which, it seems, must signify, A King; and because they had now no other Names, Herodotus vouchsafes to give us a Catalogue of them. J. Huldricus in his Onomatologia Sacra, saies, that in the Arabic Language, פֶּרַע / Pharon, or, Pharaon, signifies, the Top of any thing, and particularly the Head of a Family.¹⁰⁸ Thus the High Watch-tower in Egypt was called a Pharos. This Egyptian Way of seizing upon Women, was very ancient; and it became a Græcian one. So the Egyptians violently stole away Isis from the Græcians; and the Græcians in like Manner stole away Europa from the Phœnicians. The Story of Helena, is known to our Lads under the Ferula. But Great Plagues came upon Pharaoh and his House, for what was now done this Way. Pestilence and Sedition, saies Josephus. Philo will have them to be such Bodily | Torments, as compelled Pharaoh to mind [300v] something else than his Amours. The Jewes, imagine a more particular Ulcer, that spoil'd the Adulterous Intentions of the Court. But we are left in the Dark, about the Nature of these Plagues. We know, they were such as præserv'd Sarah from Violation. But then, did Pharaoh deserve such Plagues, when he proposed nothing but an Honest Marriage with the Lady now in his Court? Plagues for the meer Prevention of Sin, are not unjustly inflicted by Heaven. [See Psal. 105.14.] But besides this; Pharaoh, with his Courtiers, pursued the Matter now before them, upon too libidinous Principles, & with too criminal a Præcipation, & used not all due Means to inform themselves about the Condition of Sarah, as they should have done.¹⁰⁹ But how did Pharaoh now come to understand, that

Sarah was the Controversy of Heaven with him? Josephus thinks, the Egyptian Priests informed him. Oecolampadius and others, think, That he was informed by Sarah herself. Our Heidegger is of Opinion, That the Information came from Divine Revelation. He ha's Chrysostom of the same Opinion with him; he brings in Pharaoh saying, ο της παρανομιας ταυτης εκδικος εκεινος μοι τουτο γνωριμον εποησε. *Deus Justus hujus peccati vindex, illud mihi notum fecit.*¹¹⁰ Finally; what befel Sarah in this Matter, was a Type, of those things which were afterwards to befall the Israelitish Nation, in their Egyptian Bondage. A Famine carried Israel into Egypt, as it had carried Abraham. Abraham was distressed in Egypt, and so was Israel. Sarah was here despoiled of her Liberty; and so was the Israelitish Nation. The Oppression upon Sarah brought Great Plagues from Heaven, upon the Egyptians; and so did that upon her Israelitish Offspring. Abram and Sarah, were sent out of Egypt, with Riches and Honours; and so at length were the Israelites. Abram was no sooner come out of Egypt, but he is engaged in Wars, with diverse Princes; and the Israelites rescued from their Egyptian slavery, had their Wars to manage with various Enemies. I will only add, That Musculus in his Commentary on this Place, makes Pharaoh's Violence in the siezing of Sarah, a Type of what Antichrist ha's done to the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ: And it may be a Point well worthy of your Consideration.¹¹¹ are legion. Mather's tongue-in-cheek reference to "our Lads under the Ferula" reveals how tutors at Boston's Latin School and at Harvard whipped their dunces when Hebrew roots and Greek grammar proved as formidable as the walls of Troy. According to Gen. 12:17, God plagued Pharaoh for courting Sarah. Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.8.1) and Philo Judaeus (De Abrahamo 19.96–97) embellish Pharaoh's punishment and its effects. The Midrash Rabbah has him struck with "Lupus" (Genesis Rabbah XLI:2), with "Leprosy" (LII:13), with "Plagues" (Midrash Rabbah, Num. III:1), even with "ra'athan," a "skin-disease" most "harmful to sexual intercourse" (Leviticus Rabbah XVI:1), whereas Abimelech's was (euphemistically) punished with "the closing up [of the orifices]" (Genesis Rabbah XLI:2, LII:13).

110 Heidegger (2:102, § 9). Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.8.1) and the Greek historian Eupolemus (c. 150 BCE) relate that Pharaoh was unable to consort with Sarah and thus returned her to her husband, in Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 9.17.419c). The German theologian Johannes Oecolampadius (1482–1531), aka. Heusegen (Husegen), was a friend of Luther, Melancthon, and Zwingli, and one of the principal Reformers in Switzerland. Among his numerous works is his Annotationes in Genesin (1553), a commentary which is likely to contain his thoughts on Pharaoh's dalliance with Sarah (Gen. 12:15–17). When asked who had informed him that Sarai was Abram's wife, Pharaoh confesses, "The avenger of such awful disorder, he [God] it was who brought this to my knowledge" (Joannes Chrysostom's Homilies in Genesis 32.20, p. 270; [PG 53. 302, lines 41–42]).

111 Heidegger (2:102–03, Exerc. IV, § 10). The German Reformed theologian Wolfgang Musculus (1497–1563), aka. Müsli or Mäusli ("little Mouse"), professor of theology at Bern, mediated between the Lutherans and Zwinglians on the doctrine of the Lord's Supper. His voluminous commentaries on the OT and NT include Musculus's typological reading of Sarah's dilemma (Gen. 12), in Genesim Mosis commentarii (1554), which Mather here excerpts. See also Manuductio ad Ministerium (129).

After the Return of Abraham into Canaan, we find the Lord saying to him; Gen. 13.15. All the Land which thou seest, unto thee will I give it. Austin makes a Quæstion upon this; Why did the Promise run only upon, All the Land which thou seest; when God intended him all the Land, and such as his Eye could not then reach unto? And Austin makes the Answer; That it is not said, Tantum Terræ tibi dabo, quantum vides; but, Tibi dabo Terram, quam vides. And Abraham is directed unto a Perambulation thro' the Land, that he may have a Sight of it. Heidegger thinks, that the Lord might now also carry the Patriarch, unto the Top of some High Mountain, as He did Moses unto the Top of Pisgah, that he might have a fuller Sight of the Land. Perhaps also, there might be an Extraordinary Representation made unto his Imagination; whereof there was an Imitation, in what Satan did unto our Saviour.¹¹²

It was not long after this Promise, that the Lord gave unto His Faithful Servant, a notable Specimen of its Accomplishment. Four Kinglings, as I may call them, or to speak in the Language of my own Countrey, Four Sachims, had brought Five, with their People, into a Vassalage unto them. The Five shaking off their Vassa[la]ge, the Four make a War upon them; and in the War become victorious. We will not seek for the Seats of the Four Princes, in remote Regions, nor trouble ourselves with a tedious recitation of Geographical Arguments about them. They seem to have been partly of a Babylonian Original; & originally in Part of Provinces adjoining to Babylon, called Ellasar, and Elymais. But the Gentleman called, King of Nations, seems to have had the Government, as Masius thinks, of the Galilee, which was called, Galilæa Gentium; inasmuch as the Designs of Merchandise drew many People thither.¹¹³ The Five Princes that were Defendants in this Cause, had little more than single Cities under them; whereof we find more than Thirty within the Land of Canaan, in the Dayes of Joshua; and Aristotle and Cicero tell us, that in ancient times, every City had One.¹¹⁴ These Four Princes, did by the way perform a bloody Exploit, upon 112 Heidegger (2:67, Exerc. III, § 26). In his Quaestiones in Heptateuchum, lib. 1: Questiones in Genesin (Quaest. 28) [PL 34. 555], St. Augustine answers that it is not said "I will give you as much of the earth as you can see," but "I will give you the earth, which you see." Moses surveyed the Promised Land from the top of Mt. Pisgah, in Moab, on the NE shore of the Dead Sea (Num. 21:10, 23:14; Deut. 3:27, 4:49, 34:1). During Christ's fast in the wilderness, Satan took him to the top of a high mountain to tempt him with the glory of the world's kingdoms (Matt. 4:8–9; Luke 4:5–6).

113 Heidegger (2:112–13, Exerc. V, § 4). Mather likens the Canaanite tribal rulers (Gen. 14:9) to the "Sachims" (Sachems) or Indian chiefs among New England's Algonquian tribes. Tidal, king of nations (Gen. 14:9), is singled out and by the erudite Flemish Orientalist Andreas Masius (1514–73) located among the "Galilean people," in Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:1038), on Josh. 20:7.

114 Heidegger (2:113, § 5). According to Gen. 14:2, Bera, king of Sodom; Birsha, king of Gomorrah; Shinab, king of Admah; Shemeber, king of Zebolim; and Zoar, king of Bela, were attacked by four kings (Gen. 14:1). Mather may have in mind Aristotle's Politica (3.15.1286b 9–14) and Cicero's De re publica.

[301r] some Nations, before they came upon Pentapolis. The Rephaim in Ashteroth Karnaim, were some of those, whom they fell upon. These Rephaim, | did inhabit the Countrey of Bashan. [Josh. 12.4. and, 13.12.] It is thought, that they dwelt in the Caves of the Mountains, as the Cyclopes did in Homer; and for this Cause, the Prophet uses the Name, [Isa. 26.19.] for such as were lodg'd under the Earth. They had their Name, from Rapha, their Father. [1. Chron. 20.6.] Ashteroth Karnaim, their Place, was called so, because it was consecrated unto Diana Bicornis. Jarchi thinks it called so, because of its being scituated between Two Mountains, the Tops of which resembled Horns. The Zuzim and the Emim, which were the Companions of the Rephaim in this Desolation, and the rest, we know little that is Remarkable.¹¹⁵ But so much we know, that Boldoucus in his Treatise, De Ecclesiâ ante Legem, is excessively Ridiculous; pretending, That these Rephaim, and Emim, and Zuzim, were the first Restorers of the World, & of Piety in the World, after the Flood. The Rephaim, forsooth, [from /רפא/] were Medici Animarum, or, Pastors. The Zuzim, [from /זוהר/ Splendor,] were επιφανιοι, or, Illustrious Ones. The Emim, [or /אמ"ם/] were as much as to say, The Reverend. Upon these Fancies of the Monk, our Heidegger cries out, Apagesis febrilis nugas, et sceleratum in rebus sacris nugandi cacoethes.¹¹⁶

By this time, the Pentapolitans had no Way left them, to escape the Fury of the Tyrants. They were conquered in the Vale of Siddim; whereof Moses takes notice, that it had Pitts of Bitumen in it; because many of the Routed People, flying from the Enemy, desperately chose to throw themselves into the Slime-Pitts.¹¹⁷

One that escaped (probably belonging to the Family of Lot,) brings unto Abram an account, of the share which his Kinsman had in this common Calamity. Abram arms his Family, to pursue the Invaders; & he takes Mamre, and Eshcol, and Aner; for his Companions and Confederates, in the Expedition.

115 Heidegger (2:113–14, § 7). Chedorlaomer and his retainers strafed the Rephaims (in Ashteroth Karnaim) and their allies, the Zuzims and Emims, for rebelling against their overlord (Gen. 14:5). “Pentapolis,” a region in Palestine, includes the five cities of Gaza, Gath, Ashcalon, Azotus, and Ekron. The one-eyed Polyphemos, the most famous of Homer’s Cyclopes, lived in an inhospitable cave (Odyssey 9.105 ff). Diana (Artemis), the ancient moon goddess, best-known as the goddess of hunting, became the protectress of women (Propertius 2.32. 9–10; Cicero, De natura deorum 2.27.68–69). Although she appears under many different names and guises, Diana Bicornis (“the two-horned”) is probably so called from the crescent she wore on her forehead in Phoenician depictions. Jarchi (Rashi) mentions Ashteroth Karnaim (“the hard rocks of Karnaim”) in his commentary on Deut. 1:4 and elsewhere as the place where the giant Rephaim and Og were vanquished by Amraphel.

116 Heidegger (2:114, § 8). Bolducus (De Ecclesia ante Legem, lib. 1, cap. 10). “Rephaim” signifies “giants” and “invigoration” [Strong’s # 07495, 07497]; in this latter sense they were perhaps “healers of the soul,” or pastors. The signification of “Zuzim” and “Emim,” respectively, is doubtful, but can be rendered “roving creatures” and “terrors” [Strong’s # 2104 and 0368]. Mather’s translation of “epiphanioi” seems fitting. Finally, Heidegger cries out, “Away with these feverish trifles, this heinous tumor of nonsense on sacred things.”

117 Heidegger (2:116–17, Exerc. V, § 10). The Vale of Siddim and its (bituminous) slime pits are mentioned in Gen. 14:10.

Rivet thinks, that these Gentlemen were not Infidels, but that they were come to worship the same God with Abram; The mutual Respects which pass'd between them and Abram argued it; and their Willingness, to accompany him, in this Expedition, with so small an Army, and so great an Hazard. For we must not beleieve Josephus, That the Three Hundred & Eighteen Trained Servants of Abram (to whom the 318 Fathers in the Council of Nice, were long after compared,) were so many Officers, or Commanders, that had others under them; albeit we may allow, with Barthius, that there were others not so well Disciplined, who might be taken into the Expedition, tho' they are not mentioned.¹¹⁸ It is an explodible Figment of some Hebrew Writers, That these 318, were no more than the one Eliezer, in the Letters of whose Name /אֱלִיעֶזֶר/ they do by their Gematrie find the Number 318.¹¹⁹ That no Porphyrie or Julian, may reflect on the Mosaic History of Abrams having so many Trained Servants, as Incredible: Our Heidegger brings the Instances of Tiberius Minutius, a Roman knight, who, as Diodorus Siculus tells us, could arm Four hundred Servants; And, Marcus Crassus, who, as Plutarch tells us, kept no less than Five Hundred Domestic Servants; And, Demetrius, made a Freeman by Pompey the Great, who, as we are told by Seneca, had so many Servants, that the List of them, was every day brought unto him, as unto some considerable General. Hermes, the Præfect of the City, where he lived, and yett a Martyr, could number Twelve Hundred & Fifty Servants. Ovinus Gallicanus, who was also a Martyr, did manumitt no less than Five Thousand Servants. Laurentius Pignorius, in his Commentary, De Servis, will afford you more such Instances. And several, English Gentlemen on our American Islands, have such Numbers of Servants on their Plantations, as would give the History of Abram some Illustration.¹²⁰

118 Heidegger (2:117–19, Exerc. V, §§ 12, 14). André Rivet's thoughts on Abram's companions appear in Rivet's Theologicae & Scholasticae (1633), Exerc. LXXV, pp. 359–60. Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.10.1). Hillary of Poitiers sets the traditional number of fathers who attended the Council of Nicea (325 CE) at 318, Eusebius Pamphilus at 250, Eustathius of Antioch at 270, and Athanasius of Alexandria and Gelassius of Cyzicus at around 300. The German philologist and antiquarian Caspar Barthius (1587–1658), aka. Kaspar von Barth, was a student of Joseph Justus Scaliger and edited many Latin classics. Heidegger refers to Barthius's discussion of Abraham's 318 servants, in Adversariorum commentariorum libri LX (1624), lib. 48, cap. 15, pp. 2269–70, a work that went through several editions.

119 Mather is not the only one who takes exception to this numerological argument, which can be found in Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XLIII:2; XLIV:10; Leviticus XXVIII:4), where R. Simeon ben Lakish argues that Abraham was not accompanied by his 318 servants in pursuing Lot's captors (Gen. 14:14), but only by "Eliezer alone" (Eliezer of Damascus), Abraham's chief steward (Gen. 15:2). The numerical value (Gematria) of Eliezer's name amounts to 318 = אֱלִיעֶזֶר = א [1] ל [30] י [10] ע [70] ז [7] ר [200]. See also Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 27, pp. 194–95) and the Talmudic tractate Nedarim (32a). Jacques Saurin (Diss. XII, 1:105), like many of Mather's colleagues, objected to such numerological proof as "fanciful." See also Jacques Basnage's History of the Jews (bk. 3, ch. 11, pp. 189–90).

120 Both Porphyry (234–c. 305 CE), the Neoplatonist philosopher and disciple of Plotinus, and Julian the Apostate (332–63), Roman Emperor Flavius Claudius Julianus, were formidable

Abram did not want Authority for this Expedition; The Hebronites confess'd him, A Prince of God. And while his Kinsman Lot, was in the hands of the Enemy, he had a Just Cause, and a Good Call, for what he did. We need not quote Ambrose for it; Fortitudo quæ defendit infirmos, est plena Justitia.¹²¹

He pursued them, unto Dan. The Place, which in Jeroms time, was called, Paneas; & was the Northern Bound of the Province of Judæa; where also was one of the Fountains of Jordan. It was at first called, Laish. [Josh. 19.47.] By which we may gather, that the Books of Moses, had here and there a Word inserted into them, after the Israelites were possessed of Canaan. Pliny also calls it, Paneas; and, Stephanus, Πανιον. And Philip, the Brother of Herod called it, Cæsarea Philippi. [302v] Josephus makes it a Five-dayes Journey, | from Elon Mamre hither. And here, the Matter was managed by Abram, with an excellent Conduct; tho' his great Prudence was not all the Cause of his great Success; for, as Chrysostom well acknowledges, ἡ ἀνωθεν χεὶρ ἣν συνεφάπτομεν, καὶ συστρατηγούσα τοῖς γινόμενοις. Divina Manus erat Conjuncta, et Concertans ijs quæ facta sunt.¹²² detractors of the early Church – the former publishing Contra Christianos (15 books) surviving only in fragments preserved by those who refute him, and the latter writing Adversus Christianos, its fragmentary remains surviving in Cyril of Alexandria's refutation Contra Julianum. To Mather and his peers, Porphyry and Julian typify the enemies of the Church who focus on contradictory or hyperbolic passages in the Bible to dismiss its credibility. Diodorus Siculus (36.2.2–4; 36.2a) relates how Tiberius Minucius (Titus Vettius), a wealthy Roman “infatuated” with a beautiful slave girl belonging to a neighbor, incited his own slaves (“four hundred in number”) to revolt, crown him king, and thus to acquire his beloved by force. Plutarch (Crassus 2.4–6; Plutarch's Lives 3:316–19) tells the story of Marcus Licinius Crassus Dives (115–53 BCE), Roman Consul and Triumvir, who acquired five hundred skilled masons and architects (slaves) to rebuild crumbling Roman neighborhoods. According to Lucius Annaeus Seneca (the Younger), Demetrius Pompeianus, after he was made a freeman by Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus (106–48 BCE), owned innumerable slaves (Ad serenum de tranquillitate animi 1.8). Heidegger evidently refers to the obscure Roman Martyr Hermes (Hermas), whose feast is celebrated on August 18 (CE). St. Gallicanus, Roman Consul Ovinus Gallicanus (317 CE), bestowed large gifts on the church in the Roman maritime city of Ostia, but was martyred (363 CE) after his banishment to Egypt (CE). Mather's references to these men of fortune is extracted (via Heidegger 2:119, § 14) from De Servis, et eorum apud veteris ministerijs (1651), a history of slavery in antiquity, by Laurentius Pignorius, aka. Lorenzo Pignoria (1571–1631), an Italian philologist of Padua. According to E.K. Brathwaite (Creole Society 121–22), the numerical disparity between slaves and white (English) population on the sugar island of Jamaica was nearly 6 to 1 (40,000 slaves to 7,000 English) in 1700.

121 Heidegger (2:119, Exerc. V, § 15). Gen. 23.6. This condensed exhortation – its longer version appearing in Ambrosius Mediolanensis (De officijs ministrorum 1.28.129) [PL 16. 61B] – postulates that “Courage, which defends the weak, is full of justice” (NPNFii 10:22).

122 Heidegger (1:129, Exerc. V, § 16). St. Jerome on Gen. 14:14 (Quæstiones Hebraicæ in Genesim) [PL 23. 961] identifies Dan (Laish) as a Phoenician town “now called Paneas” (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 47). For Mather's receptivity to textual criticism of the Bible, see R. Smolinski's “Authority and Interpretation” (175–203). “Paneas” (Panias) appears in Pliny (5.16.74); “Panion,” in Stephanus Byzantius (Ethnica, p. 500, line 10). Philip (BCE 4–34 CE), son of Herod the Great (c. 73–4 BCE), established Caesarea Philippi at Paneas “at the fountains of the Jordan” (Josephus Flavius, Antiquities 18.2.1; Wars 2.9.1). Joannes Chrysostom (Homiliae in Genesim 35) [PG 53. 327, lines 26–27] maintains that Abram's revenge on Lot's captors was

Abram is victorious, and in his Return, is mett by the King of Sodom, at the Valley of Saveh, which is the Kings Dale. On this Place, we will not recite the uncertain Conjectures of the Criticks; but conclude, with Heidegger, That it was called, The Kings Dale, from the Kings meeting Abram here, to congratulate his Victory.¹²³

The Action of Abram in presenting the Tithes of the Spoils unto Melchisedek, had a very early Imitation among the Ancients. We read in Xenophon, That the victorious Armies, in the First Place devoted a Portion of their Spoils unto their Gods, before ever they made any Division thereof among themselves. And Romulus himself, with his own hands, presented unto Jupiter Feretrius, the best of the Spoils taken from the Veientes.¹²⁴

The Generosity of Abram, in refusing to take any thing for himself, was founded in a Principle; which made it excell that of Cato, who as Plutarch tells us, professed, εἰς αὐτον των ἀλικομενων ουδεν ελθειν. Ad se nihil pertinere, eorum quæ ceperat. And that of Timoleon, (before Cato,) who, as the same Author tells us, ου το λαβειν εκ τοιoutων αι{σ}χρον, ἀλλὰ το μη λαβειν κρειττον. Non equidem turpe esse aliquid ex præda recepta accipere, sed melius tamen nihil accipere; or, that of Pittacus Mitylenæus, who, cum recuperati Agri dimidia pars ei offerretur, avertit animum ab eo munere, deforme Judicans virtutis gloriam magnitudine prædæ minuere. They tell the like of Paulus Æmylius, and of Mummius.¹²⁵ guided by “a hand from on high that joined in the attack and assisted in directing the battle” (Homilies in Genesis 35.15, p. 314).

124 Heidegger (2:122, Exerc. V, § 21). Gen. 14:20. Xenophon describes this ancient sacrificial practice in Cyropaedia (4.5.51). Romulus, the mythical ancestor of the Romans, devoted a trophy to Jupiter Feretrius (the “Smiter” or “Thunderer”) for helping him vanquish Acron, king of the Cainientes. The Veientes are a people of Tuscany (Plutarch, Romulus 16.6–7; 25.1–2; Plutarch’s Lives 1:136–39, 166–69). Heidegger’s source is Epitome de Tito Livio (1.1.9–12), an extract of Livy’s Ab urbe condita, by the Roman historian Publius (Lucius) Annaeus Florus (c. 70–c. 140 CE).

125 Heidegger (2:124, Exerc. V, § 23). Abram refuses to take his rightful spoils in battle because he thereby wants to honor his God (Gen. 14:22–24). According to Plutarch (Marcus Cato 10.4.5; Plutarch’s Lives 2:331), the Roman statesman Marcus Cato Maior (234–149 BCE) professed “that no part of the booty fell to him.” And of the Corinthian Timoleon (5th–4th c. BCE), who defeated Carthage, Plutarch relates in a wider context that Timeleon “is [not] to be blamed for accepting a fine house and country estate, for acceptance under such circumstances is not disgraceful; but not to accept is better” (Comparatio Aemilii Paulli et Timoleonis 2.9; Plutarch’s Lives 6:463). Of the ancient Greek lawgiver Pittacus Mitylenæus (c. 650–570 BCE), the Roman author Valerius Maximus (1st c. BCE to early 1st c. CE) relates that Pittacus acted exemplarily: “When half of the regained field was offered to him, he turned his mind away from this gift, deciding that his reputation for virtue would be diminished by the disgustingly large spoils” (Valerius Maximus’s Factorum et dictorum memorabilium, lib. 6, cap. 5, ext. 1). Plutarch (Families Paullus 28.11; Plutarch’s Lives 6:431–32) praises the Roman censor Lucius Aemilius Paullus (fl. 192–160 BCE) for keeping nothing for himself of the spoils in the war with Perseus, king of Macedonia (179–168 BCE), but Perseus’s library. Roman praetor, proconsul, and censor Lucius Mummius (fl. 160–140 BCE) gave away to his friends, to the city of Rome, and to other

Upon the Return of Abram to his Habitation, at Elon Mamre, the Lord appears a Fourth Time unto him; Renewing His Covenant in these Terms, I am thy Shield, thy Exceeding Great Reward. The former Clause, defends him from the Dangers, to which he might apprehend himself on every Side exposed, after his late Expedition. The latter Clause, is by Chrysostom thus paraphrased; Ο μισθος σου κλ. “Thy Reward shall be very Great. Thou wouldst not Receive a Reward of thy Labours, which thou didst Sustain, in the Dangers to which thou didst lately Expose thyself. Thou didst both Despise it; and the King that offered it. I will give thee an otherghess Reward, than any that thou hast refused. A very Great Reward.” Junius argues, That if the Terms had run according to the vulgar Interpretation, I am thy Exceeding Great Reward; the pious Patriarch would not presently have added; Lord, what wilt thou give me? Heidegger therefore falls in with Chrysostom, and so do all the Eastern Interpreters.¹²⁶

It follows, Abram Beleeved in the Lord, and it was imputed unto him for Righteousness. The Meaning is not, That the Faith of the Patriarch was look’d on, as a Deserving, or an Excellent Action; which was the Sense of the Arabic Version; Credidit Domino; et scripsit id illi in opus bonum; and unto which Sense also Jarchi carried it. The Papists and Socinians concur with the old Hebrew Self-Justiciaries. But our Heidegger very well observes, the true Sense to be, That the Faith of Abraham, had for its Object, our Glorious CHRIST, the only Saviour; and his Faith, is by a Metalepsis here putt for the Object of his Faith; whose Merit thus beleeved on, was by the Grace of God imputed unto Abraham, and became his Righteousness. [Consider, Rom. 4.4.] Faith considered as our Work, or Act, cannot be the Matter of our Justifying Righteousness; but as it Justifies, it is opposed unto every Work of ours. The Word used by the Apostle on this Occasion, is, λογίζεσθαι. It is a Term taken from Dealers, who have their Accounts of Debt and Credit. The Great God is not without such Accounts. In His Books, He ha’s noted, what He ha’s given to us, and what we owe unto Him. In the Page of Credit, there could not be entred our Obedience; and our own personal Payment of our Debt unto Him. Wherefore He enters there, the Obedience and Righteousness of our Saviour, who became our Surety; and the Faith by which we become entitled unto it.¹²⁷

Italian communities the large cash of art he had taken from Corinth and other Greek cities after defeating the Achaean Confederacy (146/45 BCE) (OCD).

¹²⁷ Heidegger (2:73–74, Exerc. III, §§ 34, 35). Gen. 15:6. The Latin interpretation of the Arabic Version (Gen. 15:6), which is here cited by Heidegger (2:73), appears in Walton (1:57)

For the Confirmation of the Covenant now Renew'd between Heaven, and Abram, a Sacrifice is provided, of those Clean Animals, which were afterwards (with the Addition of only a Sparrow) used for that Purpose, in the Mosaic Pædagogy. And the Sacrifice of the Herd and the Flock, being Divided, Abram kept waiting, & chasing away the | Rapacious Birds, that would have prey'd upon them, till in the Evening a Deep Sleep fell upon him. While Abram was in this Deep Sleep, the Lord assures him, That his Posterity should possess that Land, in the Fourth Generation, when the Iniquity of the Amorite should be full. There can be no doubt, that the Amorites were at this very Time wicked enough, to be worthy of Destruction from God. Iniquity therefore is here to be taken for the Punishment of Iniquity, or the Time decreed, assign'd, appointed, for the Infliction of that Punishment. The Delay turn'd not, upon the Measure of Iniquity among the Amorites, but upon the Sovereign Wisdom of Heaven, determining the Time to punish that Iniquity. A Smoking Furnace, and a Burning Lamp, then passed between the Peeces of the Sacrifice. The Lamp represented the Glorious Lord Himself; it noted, as Chrysostom saith, της του Θεου ενεργειας παρουσιαν. Divine operationis presentiam. The Furnace represented Abram and his Posterity. The Passing of these thro' the Divided Parts of the Sacrifice, was a Fæderal Rite; it confirmed the Covenant. Behold, the Ancient Rite, of making a Covenant! Compare, Jer. 34.18. Hence tis one of the Jewish Prayers, Obsecro, Rex Misericors et Gratiose, Recordare et Respice, Fædus inter Segmenta initum.¹²⁸ We find a Thousand Footsteps, of this Action in Antiquity. In this Covenant, the Land is promised unto the Posterity of Abraham, from the River of Egypt, unto the River Euphrates. By the former, the Hebrewes will have Nilus to be understood; tho' Abenezra & some few more, understand, Sichor, [Josh. 13.2, 3. Jer. 2.18.] near to Rhinocolura. But it is easy to Reconcile them; for Sichor is a and translates, "He trusted in the Lord, and it was written down as a good deed for him." Jarchi (Rashi) agrees with this reading, saying that God "accounted it to Abram as a merit and as righteousness for the faith that he believed in Him (Targum Jonathan)." And Abram "did not ask Him for a sign but he said before Him, 'Let me know with what merit will they [my descendants] remain therein [in the Land]?' " And God responded, "With the merit of the sacrifices" (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:178). The Apostle Paul uses "logizethai" (Rom. 4:4) or "counted." Mather's Calvinist position on the efficacy of faith fully conforms to New England's Congregational Confession of Faith (1658): that God's elect are justified by faith, not works. At the same time, the elect's justification does not occur by faith as a meritorious act in itself, "but by imputing Christ's Active Obedience unto the whole Law, and Passive Obedience in his Sufferings and Death, for their whole and sole Righteousness" (Magnalia Christi Americana [1702], bk. 5, pt. 1, ch. 11 ["Of Justification"], p. 10). See also W. Walker, Creeeds (379).

¹²⁸ Heidegger (2:78–79, Exerc. III, § 40). Gen. 15:16–17. According to Chrysostom (Homiliae in Genesim 37) [PG 53. 347, line 10] the flames passing between the sacrificial portions signified "the presence of God's activity" (Homilies on Genesis 37.12, p. 349). The Jewish prayer, which Heidegger cites from "In libro precum Judaicarum," reads, "I pray you, merciful and gracious king, to remember and consider the agreement which you undertook between the divided parts" – a ritual prayer offered during animal sacrifices. See esp. Rashi's commentary on Gen. 15:9–10, 17, in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis (1:179–181, 184–85).

Branch of Nilus. And indeed, the very Name, Nahal, carries, Nilus in it. Sichor also, which signifies, Blackish, was the Color of Nilus, which as Plutarch and Eustathius tell us, was called, Μελας, by the Græcians, and as Festus and Servius tell us, Melos, by the Latines. Dionysius Afer likewise assures us, That Nilus was called, Siris, by the Ethiopians; and Scaliger does well to derive Siris, from Sichor. And the most famous old Cosmographers, particularly Strabo, make a Branch of Nilus, not far from the great Pelusiæ Mouth of it, the bound of Judea. Pliny makes Rhinocolura the last City of Judea. The Euphratean Bound ha's as yett had no other Accomplishment, than in the Tributary Nations, which felt once the conquering Arms of the Israelites. All the Hebrewes agree, to find the Fate of the Four Monarchies, in the Divided Sacrifice now before us.¹²⁹ But the Matter seems rather to be restrained unto an Hieroglyphic of the Egyptian Servitude. Theodoret most pleases our Heidegger; That the Four Animals in the Sacrifice, intimate the Four Generations, which were to pass, before the Accomplishment of the Covenant and Prophecy: That the Three Terrestrial Animals in the Sacrifice, intimate the Three Generations of Kohath, and Amram, and Moses, which were to be actually in the Egyptian Peregrination: That the Turtle-Dove in the Sacrifice, intimates the Flight, which the Mournful Israelites were then to take into the Wilderness. The Dissection of the Animals, noted the Affliction of the Patriarchs; The whole Condition of the Birds, noted the Period of that Affliction. The Birds of Prey which would have siezed on the Sacrifice, painted out the Temper and Conduct of the Enemies, which would infest that People of God. Wakeful Abraham was a Picture of the watchful Providence of God, over His People. The Horror of Darkness, with a Deep Sleep coming upon Abram, livelily exhibits the State of his Posterity in Egypt. The Smoking Furnace; yett more livelily leads us, to their very Employment in their Slavery. The Burning Lamp showes us, the Presence of God with them, in the midst of all their Difficulties. Finally, The Cutting asunder of the Sacrifice, tells us, the Vengeance to be executed on the 129 Heidegger (2:79–80, Exerc. III, § 41). Such “Footsteps” of ritualistic animal sacrifices and their signification can be found in such authors as Pseudo-Apollodorus (Bibliotheca 1.9.12), in Cyril of Alexandria (Contra Julianum 1.10), Homer (Iliad 1.446–74; Odyssey 11.30–55), and Virgil (Aeneid 8.640–41), Livy (40.6.1–2). See also Grotius (Annotationes 1:13) and John Spencer (De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus). Ibn Ezra (Commentary on Genesis 1:176) argues that “the river of Egypt” (Gen. 15:18) is “the Shibor, and not the Nile,” but Rashi (Gen. 2:11) insists it is the Nile; Josephus and Abarbanel, however, opt for the Indian “Ganges” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:40–41). Mather’s “Rhinocolura” (misspelled “Rhinocorura” in its first occurrence) is a settlement on the borders between Palestine and Egypt, in Livy (45.11). See also Pseudo-Plutarchus (De fluviis 16.1); Eustathius Thessalonicensis (Commentarium in Dionysii periegetae orbis descriptionem 222.42–46); Joseph Justus Scaliger’s 1575 edition of Sextus Pompeius Festus’s De verborum significatione; Maurus Servius Honoratus; Dionysius Periegetes (Orbis descriptio 221–23); Strabo (1.2.25, 28; 16.2.24, 33–34; 17.1.21); Pliny (5.14.68). Heidegger’s source for much of the discussion of the Nile as “Sichor” is Selden’s De Diis Syris (1617), Syntagma 1, cap. 4, pp. 56–58. The typological reading of Abraham’s divided sacrifices, the four kings, and the four monarchies appears in Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XLII:2, 3).

People, when they should break the Covenant of God. Hence, tis remarkable, that our Lord prædicting the Wrath of Heaven upon the famous Breakers of His Covenant, and alluding to what befell the sinful Israelites, ha's an Expression fetch'd from this very Occasion; Matth. 24.51. *He shall cutt him asunder, and appoint him his Portion with the Hypocrites.*¹³⁰

After this, and when Abram was Eighty five Years old, Sarah perswades him, to seek Posterity, by a Conversation with Hagar: A Person whom Abram took into his Family, probably, in his late Egyptian Peregrination. Jonathan the Chaldee Paraphrast, ha's a very unlikely Tradition, of her being Pharaohs Daughter; & given by | Pharaoh to Abram, at the time when God plagued his Court on Abrams account. We will regard neither that, nor the other Story of R. Abraham Zachuth, of Hagars not being a Daughter of one of Pharaohs Concubines, but a Maid of Honour to Churia, the Wife of Pharaoh, & by her bestow'd upon Sarah. We will rather enquire, whether the Counsil of Sarah, to Abram, on this Occasion were Good and Right, or no? Faustus the Manichee, was very sharp upon Abram, as guilty of gross Adultery, and gross Infidelity, in this Matter. But Austin answers Faustus; and he moreover saies, in his, De Civitate Dei, L. 16.25. *Usus est Hagare, ad generandam prolem, non ad explendam libidinem; non insultans, sed potius obediens conjugii; quæ suæ sterilitati credidit esse solatium, si fœcundæ ancillæ uterum, quoniam natura non poterat, voluntate faceret suum. Nulla hic est cupiditas Lasciviæ, nulla Nequitie turpitudine; ab uxore causâ prolis; Ancilla marito traditur; à marito causâ prolis accipitur.*¹³¹ Tho' much may be said, for the Extenuation of Abrams wrong Step in this Matter; yett we may not come to Philo's Flight, who reckons this Counsil of Sarah, to have been, των αλλων σαφεστατην πιστιν. Reliquarum ipsius laudum illustrissimum specimen; and we cannot altogether

130 Heidegger (2:81, Exerc. III, § 44). Theodoret (Quæstiones in Octateuchum, Quest. 67, p. 63, lines 5–18). According to Gen. 15:9–18, God covenanted with Abram, promising the patriarch that his offspring would inherit the Promised Land. In token of its fulfillment, Abram was commanded to sacrifice a heifer, a she-goat, a ram, a turtledove, and a pigeon – all of which prophetically typified the Israelites' migration to Egypt, their Exodus, and conquest of Canaan.

131 Heidegger (2:126, 127, Exer. VI, §§ 2, 4). Gen. 16:3. For Hagar's Egyptian origin as daughter of Pharaoh or as the Queen's handmaid, see Targum Jonathan ben Uziel on Gen. 16:3, 5 (Walton 4:27), R. Abraham ben Samuel Zachuth's Liber Juchasin (1580), Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 26, p. 190), Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XLV:1), and Rashi on Gen. 16:1 (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:186–87). The philosophy of Faustus the Manichean (fl. late 4th c. CE) of Numidia is principally related in St. Augustine's repudiation Contra Faustum. For Faustus's criticism of Abram's polygamous relationship with Hagar and Austin's vindication, see St. Augustine's Contra Faustum Manichæum (22.30–32), in NPNFi (4:284–85). St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei (16.25) [PL 41. 503] defends the patriarch by arguing that Abraham "made use of Hagar for the begetting of progeny, not for the gratification of lust; and not to insult, but rather to obey his wife, who supposed it would be a solace of her barrenness if she could make use of the fruitful womb of her handmaid to supply the defect of her own nature. Here there is no wanton lust, no filthy lewdness. The handmaid is delivered to the husband by the wife for the sake of progeny, and is received by the husband for the sake of progeny, each seeking not guilty excess, but natural fruit" (NPNFi 2:325).

excuse Abram, as Theodoret, and Ambrose, and Austin, and most of the Popish Commentators do. It is not agreeable to the Law of Nature, that the true Wife, should produce Children to herself, by the Conversation of her Husband with her Handmaid. There was too much Unbeleef, too much Impatience, too much Carnality, in the Matter.¹³² And the Tragical Outcries of such Men as Bellarmino, and Fevardentius, against our Calvin, for saying so much, ought to make no Impressions upon us. The Insolency of Hagar after her Conception, caused an heavy Complaint in Sarah; but not, as Jarchi commentates, any Upbraiding of Abram, for being mindful of himself only, & not of hers, in his Prayers to the Lord, about his own Sterility.¹³³ That Passage; Gen. 16.5. My Wrong be upon thee, only means, That it belong'd unto Abram to rectify this Wrong. It is the Manner of the Hebrewes, & of the Arabians, to express the Duty, Office, Obligation of another, by affixing a /על/ unto the Person concerned. Thus, Psal. 16.2. My Good lies not upon thee; that is, It no longer lies upon thee to perform it; It is already perform'd; there lies upon thee, no further Obligation. Sarah indeed express'd some Weakness on this Occasion; And so did Abram, in absolutely Resigning Hagar to the Pleasure of her Mistress; when a more middle, and moderate Way, might have been thought upon. But from Sarah's afflicting of Hagar, it was but a mean Inference of Austin, That Catholicks might do well to persecute Hereticks; and, Vim adhibendam esse homini, ut ab erroris pernicië liberetur. I don't wonder, that Pererius improves the Notion, to Justify all the Tyranny of Antichrist, over the Consciences of Men.¹³⁴

The Angel foretels unto Hagar, the Character of the Son to be born of her; That he would be a Wild Man; or, have much of the Temper and Carriage of the 133 Heidegger (2:129, 130, Exerc. VI, §§ 7, 8). In his Commentary on Genesis (16:1–3), John Calvin took Sarah to task for offering Hagar to Abraham. Sarah thus "perverts the law of marriage, by defiling the conjugal bed, which was appointed only for two persons" (Commentaries 1.1:424). Calvin is criticized for his harsh judgment of Sarah in De Sacramento Matrimonii (lib. 1, cap. 2), in Disputationes de controversiis (1586–93), vol. 3, by Cardinal St. Robert Bellarmino (1542–1621); and in Dialogi septem (1594) and Theomachia Calvinistica (1604), pars 2, lib. XI, "De Purgatorio," p. 20, by the Parisian theologian Franciscus Fevardentius. The exegetical controversy is also explored in Sarah and Hagar (1649), Sermon 4, pp. 43–44, by Josias Shute (1588–1643), Rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street, London.

134 Heidegger (2:130–31, Exerc. VI, §§ 9, 10). Drawing on Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XLV:5), Rashi remarks (Gen. 16:5) that Sarah upbraided Abram for not including her in his prayers for progeny (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:188). In his letter "To Vincentius" (Epistolae XCIII, c. 2, §§ 5, 6) [PL 33. 324], St Augustine refers to Paul's violent conversion to refute Vincentius's belief "that no coercion is to be used with any man in order to his deliverance from the fatal consequences of error" (NPNFi 1:383). Valentinus Benedictus Pererius's comments on this issue (Gen. 16:5) appear in his Commentariorum et disputationum in Genesim (1596) 3:523–24.

Wild Ass, in him. It was Remarkably Fulfilled. Of Ishmael himself, we read, Gen. 21.20. He dwelt in the Wilderness, & became an Archer. And then, of the Saracens descended from him, hear Ammianus Marcellinus, [L.14. c.10.] *Nec eorum quicquam aliquandò stivam apprehendit, vel arborem colit, vel arva subigendo quæritat victum: Sed vagantur semper, errantque per spatia longè latèque distenta, sine lare, sine sedibus fixis, aut legibus, nec idem perferunt diutius Cælum, nec tractus unius soli illis unquam placet; Vita est illis semper in fugâ.*¹³⁵ That Passage; He shall dwell in the Presence of all his Brethren; had a Fulfilment as Remarkble. His Countrey was Paran and Kedar. Contiguous to him, on the North, he had the Idumeans; on the South, he had the Medianites; on the East, he had the Amalekites, the Moabites, and Ammonites; all of them, his Brethren. But the Word, /שָׂכַן/ is used on this Occasion; σκηνοῦν, is the Word that answers it. It most properly means, To dwell in a Tent. In the Scripture we read accordingly, about, The Tents of Kedar. And the Arabians, who are descended from Ishmael, were called, Σκηνίται, Scenitæ; In Pliny, you have a particular mention of them. The Mahometans retain a great Veneration for Ishmael; They call him, A Prophet. The Alcoran commonly joins him with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob. Yea, Mahomet, by an intolerable Mistake styles him, Sacrificandum Deo, confounding him with Isaac.¹³⁶

| In the Ninety-ninth Year of Abrams Age, the Lord appears a Fifth Time [305r] unto him, and Renewes His Covenant with him. In this Admirable Transaction, we take particular Notice, that the Lord begins with a Declaration of His own Alsufficiency; I am the Alsufficient God. This is, not only to intimate, that there is enough in Him to fulfill His Covenant, and bring us unto Blessedness; but also, that whereas among Men, a Covenant is proposed for Mutual Benefits, it is not so here; God ha's no need of us; we cannot be Beneficial unto Him. It may be enquired, How far the Seed of Abraham, (who on this Occasion has his Name changed in{to} Abraham) are concerned in this Covenant. For answer to this, our Heidegger, would have us to distinguish well, between the several Promises, and the several Periods, contained in the Covenant.¹³⁷ In the Covenant, there is a more General Promise, about the Multiplication of Children, to Inherit the Blessing; and to receive the Grace of Regeneration and Adoption: And there is a more Special Promise, about the Possession of the Land of Canaan, and the Birth of the Messiah in that Land.¹³⁸ One Period is to be reckoned, from Abrahams Time, to the Time of Israels Entrance into the Holy Land. In this Period, the General Promise belonged unto, all the Beleeving Posterity of Abraham, not only by Sarah, but by Hagar and Keturah too; who were therefore to be Circumcised. A Second Period is to be reckoned, from the Entrance into the Holy Land, unto the Incarnation of our Saviour. In this Period, the General Promise, and the Special also, pertained peculiarly to the Israelites. There was no other People of God then in the World. A Third Period is to be reckoned, from the Incarnation of our Saviour, unto the Day of Judgment. In this Period, the General Promise belongs to all the Faithful, without any Distinction of Nations; even to all, who follow the Faith of Abraham. The Summ of what is contained in that Grand Article of the Covenant, I will be a God unto thee; amounts to this much: That, Abraham, & the Seed of Abraham, should enjoy the Benefitts of Remission, and Adoption, and Eternal Blessedness, & be the People & Heritage of the Lord. If God be Theirs, They must be the Lords; They cannot be the Lords, nor have Communion with Him, except their Sin be pardoned. They cannot come at a Pardon, but by the Sacrifice of a Glorious CHRIST; Hence a Christ also, as a Surety and a Saviour is comprized in the Covenant. But now, they may Rejoice in God, as their Friend, their Father, their Portion; & the Author of Eternal Life unto them. Certainly, under the Type of the Promised Land, there must be intended a more Heavenly and Eternal Blessedness, in a better World. For the Wicked enjoy'd the Comforts of this Land, as well as the Righteous. Yea, and the best Patriarchs, to whom it was promised, yett never enjoy'd this Land. And the Blessings of the Spirit are to be expected from God, as well as those of the Body; the Promise of God could never terminate in meer Bodily Blessings.¹³⁹

On this Occasion, we find Circumcision appointed. It must be observed on the Eighth Day. Valesius, out of Galen, shoves, that the Safety of the Infant, is by this Day pretty well confirmed; and Maimonides assigns this, as the Cause why this Day is pitch'd upon for Circumcision. Aristotle, in his History of Animals, ha's a Remarkable Note, this way; That of Infants, Τα πλειστα αναιρειται προ της εβδομης. Very many dy before the Seventh Day. And for this Cause, they took the Seventh Day, to impose Names on their Infants; as now having a greater Expectation of their Continuance in the World. Other Causes assigned both by Hebrewes and Christians, and particularly the Astrological ones fetch'd from the Number of the Planets; tis not worth our while to mention them. All the Posterity of Abraham, keeping in his Faith, were obliged to observe this Institution. But unto whom did belong the Commination; The uncircumcised Manchild, that Soul shall be cutt off? It seems hard, That it should belong unto the Infant, who is Innocent in the Matter, tho' Calvin, and Chamier, as well as Chrysostom, carry it so.¹⁴⁰ Wherefore Diodorus Tharsensis thus carries it; Quid, Infans incircumcisis peribit? Est enim parentum, ut octavo Die Circumsecetur. Codex igitur apud Syros habet; Quicumque non circumcidit peribit. Thus also Procopius Gazæus argues. And Pererius, and Lyranus, and Carthusianus, and others, run this Way; and bring the Exemple of Moses for it. But our Heidegger will have the Object | of this Threatning, to be, The Infant, when come to be past his Infancy; and arriving to Years of Discretion, does remain uncircumcised, and approve and confirm, the profane Neglect of his Parents. It is well noted by Junius; That a Breach of the Covenant, cannot be charged on those that are yett in the Ignorance of Infancy. Aben-Ezra saies, The Infant must at least be, Filius præcepti, or Thirteen Years old, before this Threatning could belong unto him.¹⁴¹

¹⁴⁰ Heidegger (2:148–49, Exerc. VII, § 14). Lev. 12:3. Mather refers to the Spaniard Francis Valesius, aka. Vallesio (1524–92), physician of Philip II of Spain, and author of De Sacra Philosophia (1608). Valesius' citation of Galen's recommendation on infants appears in De Sacra Philosophia (1608), cap. 18, pp. 123–24. Maimonides gives at least three reasons why circumcision should be performed on the eighth day (Guide 3.49.379), but lists exceptions in his Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Milah (1.16–18). Mather's abbreviated Greek citation (again without diacritics) appears in Aristotle's De historia animalium (7.12.588a, lines 7–9). See also Hippocrates's De Carnibus (cap. 15) and De natura pueri on the survival of infants at this tender age. The Hebrew judgment on the uncircumcised man child appears in Gen. 17:14. Commentators disagree on how to interpret what seems like a capricious punishment, their interpretations ranging from the death sentence, to infertility, and to utter extinction. In his commentary on Gen. 17:12–14, Calvin (Commentaries 1.1:454–59) argues that if an uncircumcised (or unbaptized) infant dies before the eighth day, God punishes neither infant nor parents for being unable to maintain God's covenant. Only in those cases where circumcision (or baptism) is deliberately neglected is the covenant broken, and the child ceases to be a member of the community. The orthodox French Calvinist divine Daniel Chamier Delphinatis (1565–1621), who tried to unite the Protestant denominations of Europe, opines that uncircumcised (unbaptized) children are damned because they are not exempt from original sin. See his 4-vol. Panstratiæ catholicæ (1627–29), tom. 1, lib. 9, cap. 8, § 7, p. 147 and tom. 4, lib. 5, cap. 10, § 39, p. 128. Like many of his peers, Joannes Chrysostomus (Homilies in Genesis 39.17) allegorizes circumcision, arguing that a child cannot be saved by this rite, because salvation of the soul can only be achieved by conscious choice. Chrysostom says much the same in Homilies on the Gospel of St. John (Homily 49), in NPNFi (14:179). The debate is summarized at length in John Selden's De Jure naturali (lib. 7, cap. 9, 12, pp. 827–31, 838–47) and in his De Synedriis (lib. 1, cap. 6, pp. 82–103).

There ha's arisen a Quæstion, who was to be the Administrator of this Ordinance? When the Offices of the Priest, are enumerated, we do not find that of, A Circumciser, to be one of them. The Hebrewes tell us, and particularly, R. Levi Barcelonita; Non debent mulieres circumcidere suos filios; sed pater, aut Domus Judicij, ubi pater non est. It seems, it belong'd unto the Master of the Family; or unto him that was to supply his Place. Maimonides is blamed, for admitting every one, if he were not a Gentile, unto it. In later Times, the Task was wholly devolved, on a profess'd Artist; whom they called, מוֹדֵל / The Circumciser. And Gomarus thinks, from some Circumstances about the Circumcision of John Baptist, That this Officer was then also employ'd in this Administration.¹⁴²

The Instrument employ'd in it, seems to have been, A Sharp Stone. And the Comparison of our Saviour unto a Stone, makes our Heidegger the more inclined unto that Opinion. Minutius Felix mentions the Practice among the Galls; Testâ sunt obscena demessa. Arnobius has this Passage; Atys testulâ sibi genitalia desecat. And Juvenal this; Mollia qui rapta secuit Genitalia Testa. Laurentius Ranciretus ha's written much about this Matter; and shoves, how the Indians grind Stones unto so fine an Edge at this day, as to manage Circumcision with them. However, the Jewes at this Day, use any Tool for it, that will do the Office of a Rasour.

Bishop Diodorus T(h)arsensis (d. c. 390), reads, "What, shall the uncircumcised infant perish? For it is the parents' [responsibility] that they [children] should be circumcised on the eighth day. Therefore the Codex among the Syrians has, whoever does not circumcise shall perish" [PG 33. 1573C]. Heidegger quotes this passage at second hand from Selden's De Synedriis (86). Selden's own source is the 1572 edition of Diodorus Tarsensis, Cathena seu explicatio locorum, qui in Pentateucho (1572). Procopius Gazaeus on Gen. 17:14 (Commentarii in Octateuchum) [PG 87 Pt. 1. 356–357]; Valentinius Benedictus Pererius, in Commentariorum et disputationum in Genesim (1596), Genesim 17, quaest. 6; Lyranus on Gen. 17.10–14, in Postilla (1492), vol. 1, n.p. The Flemish scholastic and mystic Dionysius Carthusianus (c. 1402–71), aka. Denis (Denys) the Carthusian of the Abbey of Roermond (Belgium), wrote numerous volumes on theological issues. Heidegger probably refers to Dionysius's commentary on the Pentateuch Enarrationes ... in quinque Mosaicae legis libros (1534). Franciscus Junius, "Capitis XVII Analysis" (Gen. 17:14), in Opera Theologica (1613) 1:180–84, esp. p. 183, lines 15–59. Ibn Ezra (Commentary on Genesis 1:186) argues that "a male who reaches the age when he is obligated to observe the commandments of the Torah and does not circumcise himself is subject to the penalty of karet (being cut off)."

¹⁴² Heidegger (2:154, Exerc. VII, § 21). Heidegger probably cites from Sefer ha-Hinnukh (Book of Education), attributed to the Spanish rabbi and Talmudist Aaron ha-Levi of Barcelona (c. 1235–1300), who warns that "it is not women who must circumcise their sons, but the father, or the House of Justice, where there is no father." According to his Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Milah (2:1), Maimonides insists that in the absence of a male Jew, a Jewess is allowed to perform circumcision, but no gentile. If, however, a gentile does perform the circumcision, no repetition is required. The official performing this ritual is called a Mohel (circumciser). The distinguished Dutch Calvinist Franciscus Gomarus (1563–1641), variously professor of theology at Leiden, Saumur, and Groningen, vehemently opposed his colleague Jacobus Arminius at the Synod of Dort (1618). Gomarus's commentary on circumcision (baptism) of John Baptist and of Jesus (Luke 1:59, 2:21) appears in his Operum pars tertia. Disputationes Theologicae: Disputatio 32 ("De baptismo"), cap. 39, p. 130; and in Thesis 39, pp. 104–06, both in Opera theologica omnia (1664), pars tertia.

Thus Maimonides tells us; *Circumcisionem peragunt qualibet Re; etiam silice, vitro acuto, et omni re aliâ quæ scindit: Non tamen circumcidunt fragmento canne, propter periculum.*¹⁴³

The Reasons of this Institution [for the Jewes themselves do call it, במסורין/μυστήριον, A Mystery:] assigned by Philo, and Josephus, and Maimonides, & R. Levi of Barcelona, and others, are none of them worth our mentioning; except this one, That God would have His People distinguished from other People, by a Character on their Bodies: And therefore Chrysostom, and Theodoret and Austin, took up with this. But this comes not up to the main Intention. Circumcision was a Seal of the Covenant; and the Benefits contained in the Covenant, had in it, a very notable adumbration.¹⁴⁴ There is a famous Text, which tells us, That the Thing therein signified was, [Col. 2.11.] The Circumcision made without Hands; which is, In putting off the Body of the Sins of the Flesh, by the Circumcision of Christ; and, In being Risen with Him thro' the Faith of the Operation of God; and, In being Quickened from a Death in Sin, & in the Uncircumcision of the Flesh; and, In the Forgiveness of all Trespasses, and the Blotting out of the Handwriting that was against us. This Pauline Account of the Matter, is asserted by the Distinction, between, The Circumcision of the Flesh, and, The Circumcision of the Heart, which we find in the Writings of the Ancient Prophets. [Deut. 10.16. and, 30.6. and Jer. 4.4.] Now the Heart cannot be circumcised, except by Regeneration and Justification; Benefits, not obtained except thro' the Merits of our Great Redeemer. The 143 Heidegger (2:154–55, Exerc. VII, § 22). Heidegger alludes to Christ as the cornerstone (Ps. 188:22; Isa. 28:16; Matt. 21:42; Mark 12:10, etc.). Marcus Minucius Felix (Octavius 24.4) relates that among the Galls, “the shameful parts are cut off” (ANF 4:187). In this slightly modified citation from Arnobius’s Adversus gentes (5.7.2) handsome “Attis mutilates himself by cutting off his genitalia [with a shard]” and throws them at Accestis, his erstwhile lover (ANF 6:492). Juvenal (Saturn 6.514) reads, “he cut off his soft genitals.” Laurentius Ranciretus is still unidentified. Maimonides (Hilcoth Milah 2.1) tells us that “Any utensil may be used for circumcision, even a flint, glass, or any article that cuts. One should not circumcise with the sharpened side of a reed, because of the danger involved.”

144 Heidegger (2:155, Exerc. VII, § 24). Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 29, pp. 203–22) details the significance of circumcision. Philo Judaeus (De specialibus legibus 1.1.1–1.2.11) provides both medical reasons for circumcision as well as allegorical interpretations of the practice as an excision symbolic of all wanton pleasure; Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.10.5, 5.10.3, 8.10.3, 11.6.13 etc.) mentions a variety of reasons, including that circumcisions was instituted to keep Abraham’s “posterity unmixed”; Maimonides (Guide 3.49.378–79) stresses that circumcision renders the penis less sensitive to stimulation and allows males to control their libido. Rabbi Aaron ha-Levi of Barcelona (Sefer ha-Hinnukh). Chrysostom (Homilies in Genesis 39.19, pp. 387–88) spiritualizes the rite of circumcision by which Abraham’s descendents distinguish themselves from the gentiles, arguing that this ancient rite is now supplanted by baptism, which attains “a more precise distinction and a separation of the believers from those who are not such.” Both Theodoret and St. Augustine interpret circumcision as a sign of faith in anticipation of the Redeemer. See for instance, Theodoretus’s Quaestiones in Octateuchum (Genesis. Quest. 69, p. 65; Exodus. Quest. 3–4, pp. 274–76), Quaestiones et responsiones (105–06), Dialogues 2 (NPNFii 3:198), Demonstrations by Syllogism 2.4 (NPNFii 3:246); and St. Augustine, Opusculum quartum, sive sermo in circumcisione domini [PL 47. 1135C].

Circumcision of the Flesh, lively enough represents the Abolition of that which is called, The Old Man, in us, and the Amputation of carnal Concupiscence; and so, the Renovation and Regeneration of the Sinner. The Death of the Rejected Foreskin, expresses the Mortification of our Lusts. Yea, the Casting of that away, is a Shadow of what we meet withal at our Death. Our Spirits are then to Putt off, and Cast away our Sinful Bodies, and enter into a New State of Glory. The Effusion of Blood in Circumcision, (for which Cause, the Circumcised Child was by Zipporah, called, Sponsus Sanguinis;) might lead the Saints, to think on, that Blood of the Covenant, which was to be shed by the Blessed & Promis'd Seed, for the Sanctification of all the rest. Hence in the Sacraments of the New Testament, there is no Shedding of Blood; because the Blood of our Saviour ha's now been actually shed for us.¹⁴⁵ The Circumcision on the Eighth Day, leads us to the Day after the Seventh, or the Beginning of the New Week. The Lords-Day, may be esteemed such a Day. The Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ this Day, was, [Rom. 4:25] for our Justification.¹⁴⁶

[307r] How the Observation of Circumcision came to be practised and perpetuated in so many Nations, | the short Account is this; (for our Heidegger will give us a better than Herodotus;) Abraham was the First, that observed it: which is confessed by Theodotus, in his Verses, Of the Jewes, recited by Eusebius: From Abraham, thro' Ishmael, it was received by the Arabians and the Æthiopians; thro' the Arabians it was received by the Egyptians; and thro' the Egyptians, by the Cholcians: But thro' Esau, by the Edomites.¹⁴⁷ From the Ishmaelites, it is come to the Saracens; and from the Saracens to the Turks, who use it at this Day; tho' the Mahometan Writers, as Pocock observes, are very sparing, in what they write about it; only Algazel censures the Jewes for using it on Children, before they have Bred their Teeth: And Ebnol Athir tells us, The ancient Custome was, to circumcise between the Tenth and the Fifteenth Year of the Age; or, about the Age

145 Heidegger (2:156–57, Exerc. VII, § 25). Col. 2:11–14. The circumcision of the flesh (Col. 2:11) is here superseded by the circumcision of the heart (Rom. 2:29). Zipporah calls Moses a “bloody husband” because he neglected to circumcise his son (Exod. 4:25).

146 Heidegger (2:157, Exerc. VII, § 26). Lev. 12:3. Mather erroneously lists “[Gal. 5:25],” here silently corrected to “[Rom. 4:25].”

147 Heidegger (2:158, Exerc. VII, § 28). Herodotus (2.104) relates that the Colchians and Egyptians were the first people to practice circumcision. The practice spread from the Egyptians to such nations as the Phoenicians and the “Palestinian Syrians,” who are here not distinguished from the Jews. Mather does not like this argument because it contradicts the tradition that Abraham introduced circumcision (Gen. 17:24). See also Diodorus Siculus (1.28.2–4; 1.55.5; 3.32.4); Strabo (16.2.37; 16.4.5, 17; 17.2.5). Theodotus (silently corrected from Mather’s erroneous Theodorus). In a fragment preserved by Alexander Polyhistor, the 1st c. B. C. E. Hellenic Jewish poet Theodotus (Carmines de Judaëis, Fragmenta 759.1–15) states that Jacob would not give his daughter Dinah in marriage to Sychem (son of Emmor) until he and all the other male inhabitants of Shechem underwent circumcision (Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica 9.22.427d). See Appendix A.

of Ishmael; At which age, they made their Confession of Islamism; Non est Deus nisi unus, et Muhammed ejus propheta.¹⁴⁸

There was an Impiety committed sometimes, as a Token of Apostasy; called, Επισπασμος. They that were guilty of it, were called, בשריכים and επισπαστικοί. We read of some such Apostates, in the Maccabees, [1. Mac. 1.12, 16.] who Restored their Foreskin. And Josephus, tells of such a thing Attempted among some wicked People. Epiphanius likewise tells us, of such a Wickedness among certain Samaritans; managed with an Instrument, which they called, Α Σπαθηρ-Internam membrorum cuticulam attrahentes, suturamque admittentes, et glutinatorijs circumdantes, præputium rursum superinducunt. And Celsus the Physician, testifies, That the Foreskin may be Renewed and Restored. Unto this, the Apostle ha's a Reference; [1. Cor. 7.18.] which is very oddly by Jerom applied unto the Transition from Calibacy, to the Married State.¹⁴⁹

There ha's been some Difficulty about Reconciling the Practice of Paul in Circumcising of Timothy, to his Words, Gal. 5.2. Behold, I Paul say unto you, If Yee be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. And Patricides tells us, That all the Christian Bishops at Jerusalem for an hundred Years together were circumcised; Sulpicius Severus tells us, They were so, to the Dayes of Adrian. The Distinction, about the State of Circumcision, given us by Divines, will a little help in this Matter. Circumcision, was in its Vigour, from Abraham, to our Saviour. A Languor came upon it, from the Birth of our Saviour to His Death. It saw its Death, when our Saviour Dy'd, and Rose from the Dead. It was not Buried, until the Burial of the Jewish Synagogue, at the Destruction of Jerusalem. The Law being extinct, this Obligation to the Law, was extinguish'd with it.¹⁵⁰

148 Mather's source (via Heidegger) is Edward Pococke (1604–91), Canon of Christ Church and Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, who cites the medieval Muslim philosopher Algazel (1058–1111) and Ebnol Athir (1149–1209), a medieval Muslim author, in Pococke's Notae in quibus aliquam-multa quae ad Historiam Orientalium (1648) appended to Specimen historiae Arabum (1650) 319–20. The confession reads, "There is no God but One, and Mohammad is his prophet."

149 Heidegger (2:159–60, Exerc. VII, § 30). The Greek nouns "epispasmos" and "epispastikoi" suggest "uncircumcised" and "the uncircumcised." Those who restored their foreskin were called "apostates," a frequent occurrence among young Hellenic Jews. Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 12.5.1) relates how Onias, one of the sons of High Priest Onias III, changed his name to Menelaus, erected a gymnasium, and abandoned Jewish rites by hiding his circumcision through an operation. St. Epiphanius of Salamis (De mensuris et ponderibus 437 [ed. Moutsoulas]) explains that among the Samaritans some restored their circumcised prepuce with a flat knife euphemistically called "σπαθηρὸς" ("what is called"). Epiphanius describes this surgical procedure as follows: "the inner skin of the organ having been cut loose and sewed together and bound in place by adhesive medicaments, they again complete foreskins for them" (Weights and Measures 16 [55d], p. 32). Aulus Cornelius Celsus (De medicina 7.25.1–2) gives much more authoritative detail about this ancient technique. St. Jerome's comments on 1 Cor. 7:18 appear in Epistola Pauli ad Corinthios I [PL 29. 750].

150 Heidegger (2:160–61, Exerc. VII, § 31). Saidus Patricides (Annales [1656], lib. 1, p. 359) and Sulpicius Severus (Chronicorum 2.31) [PL 20. 147A], in Sacred History (NPNFii 11:112) report that the Christian bishops of Jerusalem practiced circumcision up to the reign of Roman

We will not suppose any thing in the Story of the Rabbins, That it was on the Third Day after his painful Circumcision, & while he was yett very sore and pain'd with it, that Abraham received his wonderful Visit, from the Angels of the Lord. But it is very sure, he was visited by them, with advice concerning an horrible Destruction impending over Sodom, & its Neighbourhood.¹⁵¹

They found him an Exemple of generous Hospitality; waiting for an Opportunity to Releeve and Refresh weary Strangers, (tis Basils Comparison,) as an Hunter or a Fowler for his Game; or (as Ambrose expresses it; Prætebat Excubias) as it were Standing Sentry, & being on the Look-out, for Objects of his Bounty. In Imitation of this, the Inhabitants of Tegesdelti a Town in Africa; {gave} Order to the Porters at their Town-Gates, to enquire of all Strangers arriving there, whether they have any Friend in the Town, with whom they expect Entertainment? And if they have not, they carry him to a Place appointed on Purpose, where such are kindly entertained! You have it in Curio's Description of Morocco. Agreeable to Abrahams Conduct on this Occasion, was the Rule of Homer.

Χρη ξεινον παρεοντα φιλειν, εθελοντα δε πεμπειν.

*Hospitem oportet præsentem diligere, et deducere comiter abeuntem.*¹⁵²

The Reason assigned for the Lords proceeding unto that severe Punishment on Sodom, wherewith He now makes Abraham acquainted, is thus expressed, [Gen. 18.20.] Because the Cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and their Sin is grievous. The Cry of Sodom, is by Austin interpreted, Impudentia et Libertas Iniquitatis tanta, ut nec verecundiâ nec timore abscondatur. And by Gregory; Omnis Iniquitas apud Secreta Dei Judicia habet voces suas. Peccatum namque cum voce, est culpa in Actione; peccatum autem cum clamore est culpa cum libertate. Chrysostom carries it on; That it means, τῶσαυτῇ τῆς κακίας φορᾶν. Ejusmodi malitiæ Impetum, ut

Emperor Publius Aelius Hadrianus (117–38 CE). Mather here does not refer to Jerusalem's destruction by Titus (69–70 CE), but to the Jewish Diaspora in 135 CE after the Bar Kokhba Revolt (132–35).

151 Heidegger (2:164, Exerc. VIII, § 1). Gen. 18:1–2. R. Jose relates that God visited Abraham “on the third day after his circumcision,” in Midrash Rabbah (Num. XI:2); see also the Talmudic tractate Baba Metzia (86b).

152 Heidegger (2:166, Exerc. VIII, § 6). Heidegger may have in mind St. Basil's Homiliae in hexaemeron (8.5), which illustrates the hospitality among birds, especially cranes, which like sentries watch over their sleeping members (The Hexaemeron 8:98). In his De officiis ministrorum (2.21.104), St. Ambrose praised hospitality to strangers in the example of Abraham, who “carefully kept a lookout” for strangers to shelter them in his tent (NPNFii 10:59). Mather refers to Marochensis regni in Mauritania nobilissimi a Sarracenis conditi, descriptio, by the Italian theologian and compiler Coelius Augustinus Curio, aka. Caelius Agostino Curio (1538–67), whose description of the Kingdom of Morocco is bound with the second and third editions of his Sarracenicae historiae libri tres (1568). The African town Tegesdelti is unidentified. Homer (Odyssey 15.74) recommends that “One should make welcome the present guest, and send off him that would go.”

*omnes ejus peste correpti et impleti fuerint, adeò ut correctionem nullam admiserint, eoque excidio plenario indigerint.*¹⁵³

| In the Supplication of Abraham unto the Lord, for Sodom, the Plea, which [308v] he does insist upon, is; Wilt thou destroy the Righteous with the Wicked? But where lies the Force of this Plea? Indeed, it is evidently Forcible, in the Case of Eternal Destruction. But for Temporal, we often find Good and Bad, involved in the same Calamity. It must be therefore observed, That God was præparing an Extraordinary Punishment for the Sodomites, and such an one as would fix a Note of Eternal Ignominy on the punished Wretches, yea, such an one as would be a Type of Eternal Perdition to them. This animated Abraham to plead as he did. And if we should grant, that in his Pleading, Humanitus aliquid passum esse virum sanctum, & there might be too near an approach unto a Limitation of the Divine Sovereignty, we should have the learned Vogelsangius with us in the Concession. In the mean time, from the Matter of Abraham's Plea, we may learn, That tho' God had honoured Abraham with a more peculiar Vocation, yett there were at this Time some Godly Men among the Nations, & some Reliques of true Godliness not yett overwhelmed in the general Depravation of the World.¹⁵⁴

The Angels come to Sodom, and are affronted there. But the Action of Lot, in Offering his Daughters to Prostitution for the Præservation, of these excellent Strangers, what shall be thought of it? Ambrose vindicates it; Offerebat Sanctus Loth Filiarum Pudorem. Nam etsi illa quoque flagitiosa impuritas erat, tamen minus erat secundum Naturam Coirè, quàm adversus Naturam Delinquere. Præferebat Domus suæ verecundiæ Hospitalem Gratiam, etiam apud Barbaras Gentes inviolabilem. Yea, Chrysostom goes higher, and highly applauds it; Ποση του δικαιου η αρετη; Quanta fuit hæc Justi Virtus! But Austin answers them, That we open a very dangerous Door to Sin, if we may come to this, Ut committamus minora, ne alij majora committant. We may rather fall in therefore with Austins Opinion; That Lot sinned in his Offer, but that the Sin was much extenuated

¹⁵⁴ Heidegger (2:169–70, Exerc. VIII, § 11). Gen. 18:23. Mather cites Heidegger's plea (2:169), "that the holy man endured some suffering in a human way." Reinerus Vogelsangius (c. 1610–79), pastor of Hertogenbosch (Netherlands), addresses this issue in his Exercitationes Theologicae (1665) 751–52.

by the Perturbation of Judgment, which his Concern for these eminent Strangers had brought upon him.¹⁵⁵

There ha's been a World of Disputation about that Passage, of, The Lords Raining from the Lord; whether it implies a Plurality of Persons in the Godhead, or no? The Christian Fathers are fervent in maintaining it, and one of their Councils does Anathematize them who deny it. Yea, {the} Jerusalem-Paraphrase favours it. But then, we can't find, that Jerom, Austin, Chrysostom, and Eucherius, were sensible of any thing here, asserting that Mystery; nor Pelican, Mercer, Calvin, Drusius, Piscator, Amama, Paraeus, & many others among the Moderns.¹⁵⁶ The Jewes, and particularly Aben-Ezra, observe That it is an Hebraism, and /לשון צחורה/ Elegantia Linguae, To Repeat the Antecedent instead of the Relative. [See Num. 10.29. Ps. 82.1. 1. King. 8.1.] The Second Jehovah, in this Passage, may be no more than what is express'd in the Arabic Translation; A Se ipso. And yett there may be also some Intension of Signification, in this Repetition; and perhaps, an Intimation of a Supernatural and Miraculous Action. Our Heidegger commends the Modesty of the learned Hacspan in this Matter. When Hunnius had used bitter Invectives against some of ours, & charged them with Judaism, & with Turcism, for not employing this Text more against the Jewes, it was answered by Hacspan. Possumus hîc, imò debemus ferre alios Christianos, modestè

155 Heidegger (2:171, Exerc. VIII, § 15). Gen. 19:8. St. Ambrose (De Abrahamo 1.6.52) [PL 14. 440] vindicates Lot's actions as follows: "Holy Lot offered up his daughters' honor. For although that impurity was also disgraceful, it was however less so to have sexual intercourse according to nature, than to commit an offense against nature. He gave preference to the hospitality of his own respectful house, which was inviolable even among barbaric tribes." St. Chrysostomus (Homilae in Genesim 43) [PG 54. 400, line 60] stands amazed at the extent of Lot's hospitality: "What marvelous virtue in the just man" (Homilies on Genesis 43.18, p. 445). St. Augustine (Contra mendacium ad consentium 1.9.20) [PL 40. 530] answers them that "we should commit lesser [sins], so that others might not commit greater ones."

156 The paragraph is extracted from Heidegger (2:174–75, Exerc. VIII, § 19). Gen. 19:24. The Chaldean Targum Hierosolymitanum (Walton 4:33) implies God's plurality. Heidegger's list of references from Jerome to Paraeus is extracted from Anti-Barbarus Biblicus libro quarto (1656), lib. 2, p. 263, by Sixtinus Amama (1593–1639), Frisian professor of Hebrew literature at Franeker. (A copy of this work, bearing the signatures of Increase Mather and Samuel Mather (1776), is in the Mather Libraries, AAS, # 0386). St. Eucherius Lugdunensis (d. c. 449), the Gallo-Roman bishop of Lyon, comments on Gen. 19:24 in his Commentarii in Genesim et in libros Regum [PL 50. 963A–D, 1008A–B]; Conradus Pellicanus, aka. Konrad Kürsner (c. 1478–1556), renowned German theologian of the Reformation, professor of Greek and Hebrew at Zurich, published many commentaries and editions of note, including his literalist In Pentateuchum, sive quinque libros Mosis (1582) and Commentaria biblicorum et illa brevia quidem ac Catholica (1532–39) in 7 vols. Piscator's discussion of Gen. 19:24 appears in his Commentarius in Genesim (1601) 330. David Paraeus, aka. David Wängler (1548–1622), German Reformed theologian and professor of theology at Heidelberg, was a voluminous author, whose Operum Theologicorum Scripta Exegetica (1628), edited by his son, interprets Gen. 19:24 as proof of the embattled doctrine of the Trinity (Commentario in Genesim, cap. 19:24, in Operum 1:271–72). A copy of this work is in the Mather Libraries (AAS # F060F). See also Paraeus's In Genesim Mosis Commentarius (1609), col. 1301–03. Much of the debate by its various contributors is synopsized in Critici Sacri (1:213–19).

vel ambigentes, vel dissentientes, neque Judaismus aut Turcismus in re adeò perplexâ, alijs objici debet, ceu queritur Paraeus. Abundet potius quilibet suo sensu. Vix in manifestis aliquid obtinemus contrà præfractos Judæos; quid fiet in re tam obscurâ, et ubi non sinè exemplis Hebraismum jactare possunt. But of the Fate of Sodom, we shall here take no further Notice; we shall refer ourselves to the Illustrations, we shall elsewhere bestow upon it.¹⁵⁷

Abraham after this, Removed unto the Southward; probably being discouraged from his present Habitation by the growing and grievous Wickedness of the Inhabitants in the Neighbourhood. Here at Gerar, the Philistæan Sachim Abimelek being smitten with the Beauty of Sarah, our Patriarch again dissembles, and as he had formerly done, pretends her to be but a Sister unto him. Abimelek proceeds in his Addresses to Sarah, but God visits him, & informs him, & threatens him; and saies, I have withheld thee from Sinning against me. But how could Sin have been charged upon Abimelek, while such a Mistake of the Person continued upon him? Tis probable, That in his Conversation with Sarah, he might receive those Admonitions | and Intimations, that might convince him of Sin, if he carried his Addresses any further. When Abimelek returned Sarah unto her Husband, he used these Words, Behold, I have given thy Brother a thousand Peeces of Silver; Behold, he is to thee a Covering of the Eyes, unto all that are with thee, & with all other. These Words have been pestered with an huge Variety of Interpretations. We will wave them all, and keep to our Heidegger's. The Covering of the Eyes, here, doubtless refers to the Veil, which was of old worn by Married Women, to Testify their Subjection to their Husbands, and their Aversion to take Notice of any other Objects. We read of such a Veil, in both Testaments of the Bible. [Gen. 24.65. and, 1. Cor. 11.10.] Hence Hymeneus, the poetical God of Weddings, is represented by Ovid, as, Croceo velatus amictu. This Veil, was by the Ancients called, Flammeum or, Flammeolum; from the Colour of it. Whence Lucan;

157 Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:208) points out that this repetition suggests “a poetic [tzachot, i.e., “elegant”] way of saying from Himself.” The Arabic version of Gen. 19:24 in its Latin translation renders it “à se cælo” or “from himself out of heaven,” in Walton (1:77). Heidegger may have in mind the 3 vol. Notarum philologico-theologicarum (1664) or the earlier polyglot Observationes Arabico-Syriacæ (1639), by Theodoricus Hackspan (1607–59), German Lutheran professor of theology and Oriental languages at the Franconian University of Altdorf. Aegidius Hunnius (1550–1603), German Lutheran controversialist, professor of theology at Wittenberg, was a vociferous critic of Calvinism. Heidegger probably refers to Hunnius’s Calvinus Iudaizans, hoc est: Iudaicæ glossæ et corruptelæ (1593) or to his 2-vol. Antipareus, hoc est invicta refutatio venenati scripti (1598). At any rate, Theodor Hackspan’s rejoinder reads, “Here we can – nay, we must – tolerate other Christians, whether they restrainedly raise questions or dissent, and [accusations of] Judaism or Turcism should not be thrown at others in such a confused matter, in the way that Paraeus protests. Rather, let each man be enriched by his own thoughts. We can put forth hardly any solid assertions against the stubbornness of the Jews: what will happen with regard to a matter that is as obscure as this, and in which they cannot discuss Hebraism without examples?” Mather’s illustrations on Sodom’s fate appear in his commentary on Gen. 19 (below).

– Leviter tectura pudorem

*Lutea demissos velârat flammea vultus.*¹⁵⁸

Plutarch in his Roman Questions, tells us, That it was the Custome for Women, to wear a Veil upon their Heads, when they went abroad. Valerius Maximus tells us, that C. Sulpitius Gallus putt away his Wife, because of her appearing abroad without a Veil; For, said he; Lex tibi tantum meos præfinit oculos, quibus et formam tuam approbes, et placere desideres. Homer brings in Venus, as bestowing a Veil upon Andromache, against her Wedding. Tertullian writing, De Velandis Virginibus, reports of the Arabians; Judicabunt vos Arabiae Feminae Ethnicae, quae non caput, sed Faciem ita quoque totam obtegunt, ut uno oculo liberato contentae sint dimidiâ frui Luce, quàm totam Faciem prostituere. Mahomet also prescribed the Veil, to his Arabian Women. It is probable, that Sarah, in the Court of Abimelek, to represent herself as an Unmarried Woman, threw away her Veil. Abimelek now Rebukes her, for the Deceit that she had putt upon him, in appearing without her Veil; and counsels her to appear now so no more. The Paraphrase upon his Words is this; Ecce mille Siclos dono dedi Abrahamo Fratri tuo. Is Frater tuus esto tibi pro velamine Faciei, ita ut ipsi soli non subsis tantum, sed etiam tum apud tuos, tum apud omnes, profiteri palàm, quòd ipsi soli tanquam, marite subsis, ne Dissimulatione tuâ imposterum etiam alij seducantur. The Plague inflicted on the Court of Abimelek, was of such a Nature, as also to præserve Sarah from all Violations. It was one, quâ et viri et mulieres ad concubitum essent penitus inhabiles. We know, That there is a wonderful Imitation of it, in what the Dæmons can sometimes do upon married People, in the Maleficium Ligaminis; whereof you may in Delrio read notable Instances.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁹ Heidegger (2:106–07, 108–09, Exerc. IV, §§ 17, 19). Plutarch (Aetia Romana et Graecae 267 A–B), Plutarch's Moralia (4:24–27). In this adaptation from Valerius Maximus (Factorum et dictorum 6.3.10), C. Sulpitius Gallus put away his wife because, "the law prescribes only my eyes to be upon you; to them [my eyes] you make your appearance acceptable, and them you should desire to please." Golden Venus (Aphrodite) had bestowed a bright veil (headscarf) upon Andromache on the day she married Hector (Homer, Iliad 22.467–72). In his treatise On the Veiling of Virgins, Tertullian (De virginibus velandis, cap. 17) [PL 2. 912A–B] relates that "Arabia's heathen females will be your judges, who cover not only the head, but the face also, so entirely, that they are content, with one eye free, to enjoy rather half the light than to prostitute the entire face" (ANF 4:37). The Al-Quran – at least three English translations existed in Mather's time – was available in a Latin translation in Machumetis Saracenorum principis (1543). In Sura 24 ("The Light"), the Quran directs "believing women to lower their eyes, guard their private parts, and not display their charms except what is apparent outwardly, and cover their

The Design of Relating these two Dangers of Sarah, first in Egypt, & then at Gerar, seems to be, not only that we may see the Trials and Sorrows of Abraham, which were very great on these Occasions; but also that the Faithfulness of the Glorious God in His Promises might be Illustrated. God had promised once and again, That He would be a God unto the Seed of Abraham. Abraham after this, did in giving away his Wife, after some sort alienate the Promises of Heaven, & by his own Act had missed of the Fulfilment thereof, if God Himself had not in a way of Sovereign Grace delivered him.¹⁶⁰

When Abraham is an hundred Years old, Sarah brings his Isaac unto him. About this Time, he entred into a Covenant with Abimelek, at a Place therefore called Beersheba; or, The Well of an Oath. There appears a Difficulty, in Reconciling this, to a Passage, that seems to make Isaac, the Imposer and Occasion of the Name: Gen. 26.33. And he called it, Shebah; Therefore the Name of the City is Beersheba, unto this Day. Abravanel thinks, the Sense of the Words to be, That Isaac now called the Place, Sheba; which על כן / For a like Cause, was formerly in Abrahams Time, and still continues to be, called, Beersheba. Or, shall we say, That the Name which Abraham gave to this Place was by Degrees worn off, but now by Isaac restored.¹⁶¹

The Grove made by Abraham here, that he might therein with Tranquillity enjoy Communion with God, was not a sinful Matter. There was no Certain Place yett fixed for the publick Worship of God. And Abraham, was not fallen into the Superstition which afterwards possessed the | Gentiles, That such and such Trees were sacred unto such and such Gods, and perhaps a certain Divinity in them.¹⁶² bosoms with their veils and not to show their finery except to their husbands" or close family (24:31; see also Sura 33:59 Ahmed Ali translation). The paraphrase of Sarah's appearing to Abimelek without a veil defends Abimelek's action: "'Behold, I have given a thousand shekels as a gift to your brother Abraham. May this brother of yours be to you as a covering for your face' [Gen. 20:16], such that you are under his yoke and his alone [as the face is beneath the veil], and furthermore such that you openly profess to your own people, indeed to all people, that you are under his yoke alone as his wife; do this lest in the future others also be led astray by your dissembling." The plague inflicted on Abimelek's court was such "as to make both men and women thoroughly unfit for sexual intercourse." In Mather's medieval demonology, demons sometimes bewitch spouses with "maleficium ligaminis" and keep them from consummating their nuptials – just like Abimelek was unable to act on his amorous designs on Sarah (Gen. 20:3–6). Martin Anton Del Rio (1551–1608), Walloon Jesuit scholar of Antwerp, variously professor of philosophy and theology at Douai, Louvain, and Salamanca, published a three-volume treatise on magic to which Mather here refers: Disquisitionum magicarum libri sex (1599–1600), tom 2, lib. 3, pars 1, quest. 4, sec. 8, pp. 64–69 ("De maleficio ligaminis") has much to say on this issue. Mather would have had access to the Venice 1611 edition of this work at Harvard (Catalogus Librorum [1723], p. 44).

160 Heidegger (2:109, Exerc. IV, § 20). Gen. 12:12–20, 20:1–4.

161 Heidegger (2:226–27, Exerc. XI, § 26). Gen. 21:5, 25–31; 26:33. R. Isaac Abravanel, Commentarius in Pentateuchum Mosis (1710), on Gen. 21:31–33, 26:33.

162 Gen. 21:33. The venerable Joseph Mede has much to say about the evolution of these groves as early places of worship, in "Discourse XVIII," on Josh. 24:26, in Works (1664) 85–91.

E're long we find the Lord appearing a Sixth Time unto Abraham, and calling him unto the hardest of all the Trials, he had ever yett mett withal. God made a wonderful Experiment of his Obedience, in commanding him, to travel as far as Moriah, and there with his own Hands make a Sacrifice of his only Son; who was now grown a Lad of such Age and Strength, as to carry the Wood, with which he was to be Incinerated; the Jewes do generally say, Twenty Five Years of Age. The Patriarch obey'd the Great God, as the Absolute Lord of our Lives, and of all His Creatures, and Beleev'd, That if Isaac must be kill'd, he would be also Raised from the Dead, yea, Raised out of his Ashes. There ha's been some Dispute about the Intention of Abraham, in those Words; I and the Lad will go yonder and worship, and come again (in the Plural Number) unto you. R. Jarchi will have it a Prophecy. M. Canus will have it a Dissembling; But the learned Rivet, rather looks on it, as an Instance of a thing Frequent in the Scriptures; Ubi Tributur pluribus, quod in uno impletum, vel ab uno factum ex pluribus. [Thus, Joh. 12.4. with Matth. 26.8. and, Luk. 23.39. with Matth. 27.44. And thus, 1. Cor. 15.5.] When they came to the Place, the Altar was probably soon dispatched, after a rude Manner with Turf and Stones. Isaac was now bound on the Altar; no doubt, after serious and suitable Discourses of his Father unto him, to dispose him unto such a Submission. The Jewes denominate this whole Affayr, from that Action, /עֲקִידַת יִצְחָק/ Ligatio Isaaci. In their Prayers at this Day, they make a mighty mention of the, Constrictio unigeniti.¹⁶³

There is no Part of the Sacred History, to which the Hebrewes have tack'd more of their Fabulous Assumenta, than this, of Abraham sacrificing Isaac. 'Tis not worth our while to Recite them. Far more worthy of a Recitation, are the Flourishes of the Ancients, admiring this Action, with everlasting Celebrations.

These we shall also wave; and only transcribe the emphatical Words, of Zeno the Bishop of Verona, mentioned by Lipomannus in his Catena.¹⁶⁴

*Mira Patriarchæ Tentatio, quæ eum aut Sacrilegum faceret, si contemneret Deum; aut crudelem, si occideret Filium; nisi quâdam singulari et verè divinâ patientiâ inter Religionem pietatemque negotium temperasset, in spe non denegans Deo, quod contrâ spem acceperat à Deo. Ideò Isac sibi dulcissimum Filium, Deo victimam dulciorem, contemnit ut servet: destinat jugulare, ne jugulet: securus illo se non posse displicere facinore, quod Deo gerebatur authore. O Novum Spectaculum, ac verè Deo dignum! In quo definire difficile est, utrum sit patientior sacerdos an victima. Non percussoris, non percutiendi variat color: non membra tremore vibrantur; non demissi, non torvi sunt oculi. Nemo rogat, nemo trepidat, nemo se excusat, nemo turbatur. Ille erexit gladium, iste cervicem obtulit: uno Voto, unâ Devotione, ne quid profanum sit, diligenter ac patienter geritur, quod ab altero celebratur. Ille lignum quo exuratur sibi portat; iste Aram construit; sub tanto non dicam Humanitatis, sed ipsius Naturæ metu læti sunt. Soli cedit Affectus Pietati, Pietas Religioni favet, utrique Religio. Medius stupet gladius, nullo Impedimento suspensus, mactationi terribili gloriam se præstitisse, non crimen. Quid hoc est? Ecce Immunitas in Fidem, et Scelus transit in Sacramentum: Parricida redit Incruentus, et qui immolatus est, vivit. Ambo igitur Gloriæ Charitatis Exemplum: Ambo Dei cultus admirabile Sæculi Testimonium. Fælix orbis foret, si omnes sic parricidæ fèrent. Yett Philo complains, That there were those, who employ'd their venomous Detractions, on this Heroic Action, and compared it with the Humane Sacrifices among the Pagans: To whom he answers, with showing a mighty Difference between them; inasmuch as Abraham had no Considerations of any Custom, or Honour, or Terror, to lead him, as the Pagans had, into such an Action.*¹⁶⁵

¹⁶⁴ Heidegger (2:194–95, Exerc. IX, § 12). Mather's pejorative "Assumenta" suggests "patches [of cloth]." Abraham Ibn Ezra's annotations on Gen. 22:1–4 (Commentary 1: 221–25) are as good as any to summarize the Jewish tradition: some objected that God did not really test Abraham's faith because such a test implied that God did not know Abraham's heart; others like Saadiah Gaon argue that God did test Abraham to demonstrate the patriarch's exemplary obedience. Yet others argue that Abraham misunderstood God's command, for "to bring him [Isaac] up the mountain" (the literal meaning of the Hebrew original "ve-ha'alehu") suggests that God was willing to take Abraham's intent for the act itself. Finally, Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 31, pp. 223–30) argues that Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac was the final (and most difficult) of Abraham's ten tests. Among the ancients, Ovid (Epistulae ex Ponto 3.2.65–80; Metamorphoses 12.24–38) relates the binding of the victim and Agamemnon's sacrifice of Iphigenia (his daughter) to appease Diana, who relents by having a deer function as a surrogate for Iphigenia. Finally, Virgil (Aeneid 2.199–227) reveals in the sacrifice of Laocoön's sons to the serpents the prevalence of such human sacrifices among the ancients. Aloysius Lippomannus, aka. Luigi Lippomani (1500–59), Venetian hagiographer, classicist, bishop, and cardinal, excerpts the words of St. Zeno (d. c. 375), bishop of Verona, in Lippomannus's Catena in Genesim ex authoribus ecclesiasticis (1546).

¹⁶⁵ Lippomannus's lengthy excerpt from St. Zeno's Tractatus (lib. 1, tract. VI: De Patientia, § 5) [PL II. 315C–316B], on Gen. 22, explores Abraham's conflict between obedience to God and love of his son Isaac: "What a wondrous trial for the Patriarch, that would either make him

The Issue is well-known. A Stray-Ram, which had now no earthly Owner, is providentially brought unto the Spott, and made a Substitute for Isaac. A Name was also putt upon the Place. In Abrahams Time, it was called, The Lord will see. In Moses's Time, a little Alteration was grown upon it, and it was called, In the Mount of the Lord, it shall be seen.¹⁶⁶

[311r] [The Traditions of this Matter among the Pagans, are famous; especially that of Saturn sacrificing his only Son Jeond, which he had by the Nymph Anobret. And the Type herein of our Glorious Christ becoming a Sacrifice for us, is well considered by the Christian Ancients. Particularly by Austin; [De C. D. XVI.32.] Proinde addidit; pro hoc etiam eum et in similitudinem adduxit. Cujus similitudinem, nisi illius, de quo dicit idem Apostolus; Qui proprio Filio non pepercit, sed pro nobis omnibus tradidit illum? Propterea et Isac, sicut Dominus crucem suam, ita sibi ligna ad victimae locum, quibus fuerat imponendus, ipse portavit.¹⁶⁷

a sacrilegious man, if he defied God, or a cruel man, if he killed his son; unless by some unique and truly divine patience he had tempered the quarrel between religion and paternal duty, in his hope not refusing to give to God that which he had, against all hope, received from God. Therefore, he refrained from keeping for himself his most delightful son Isaac, who was more delightful as a sacrifice to God. He determined to slay him, that He might not slay him: he was certain that he could not be doing wrong by that crime, because it was carried out on God's authority. What a novel spectacle, and one truly worthy of God! Herein it is difficult to define whether the priest or the victim suffered more. Neither one's color changed: the one striking, nor the one to be struck; their limbs did not quiver; their eyes were neither downcast nor wild. Nobody asked questions, nobody shuddered, nobody made excuses, nobody was agitated. The one raised his sword; the other presented his neck: the rite which Abraham was performing was diligently and patiently borne by Isaac with a single wish, a single prayer, that nothing might be unholy. One carries the wood upon which he himself is to be burned; the other builds the altar. Under such great fear – I should not say fear of human feeling, but of nature itself – they rejoiced. Affection gives way to duty alone, duty favors religion, and religion favors both. His ordinary sword, not held up by any hindrance, was amazed that for it to take part in the terrible slaughter was a glory, not a crime. What is this? Behold, immunity is transformed into faith, and a crime into a sacrament. The kin-murderer returns to being unstained with blood, and the one who has been sacrificed is alive. Therefore, both are an example of the glory of love: both an admirable testimony for the ages of the worship of God. The world would be happy if all kin-murderers came about like this." For Philo Judaeus's complaint, see his De Abrahamo (33.177–37.207).

¹⁶⁷ Heidegger (2:203, Exerc. IX, § 23). Heidegger's principal sources are Gerard Vossius's De Theologia Gentili (lib. 1, cap. 19, 35, pp. 144–49, 259–67) and Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica (1.10.40c–d). Eusebius here preserves an excerpt from Porphyrius (De abstinentia ab animalibus 2.54–56), who tells the story of Saturn's sacrifice of his only-begotten son Iedud (by the nymph Anobret) on an altar. An earlier version of this well-known story appears in Hesiod's Theogonia (453–91), where Kronos swallows each of his children until tricked by Rhea and cast into the abyss by Zeus, his son. See also Cicero (De natura deorum 2.25.64). In these ancient stories early Christian interpreters found affirmed the original in Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac, the OT type of Christ's crucifixion. St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 16.32) [PL 41. 511], quoting Heb. 11:17–19, argues that "therefore he [St. Paul] added, 'from whence also he [God] received him [Isaac] in a similitude.' In whose similitude but His of whom the apostle says, 'He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all?' [Rom. 8:32]. And on this account Isaac

The Death of Sarah follows. The Hebrew and Eastern Traditions, That she dyed of Grief, upon the Tidings brought her by Samael, of her Son Isaac being sacrificed; are confuted, in that, she died not, until after Abrahams Removal from Beersheba unto Hebron. He buried her in the Cave of Macpelah; which Benjamin of Tudela tells us, he found having an Iron Gate; that lett him into several Apartments: In the First and the Second, he found nothing; but in the Third, he found the sepulchral Apartments, of Six Persons; Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; and, Sarah, Rebeckah, Leah; with Letters cutt upon them, to tell whose they were.¹⁶⁸

After this, Abraham employ'd a Servant of his, to fetch Isaac a Wife, out of an agreeable Family. But that Servant of his, must first of all, take an Oathe to him, with the Rite of Putting his Hand under his Thigh. About the Intent of that Rite, there have been many Disquisitions of the Learned. The Hebrew Rabbins do generally suppose in it a Reverence to the Covenant of Circumcision. But our Christian Fathers, are mostly of Austins Opinion; Fuisse magnam Prophetiam, quòd Christus Dominus Caeli ac Terræ in eà Carne venturus esset, quæ de illo Femore Propagata est. In short, That it was as much as, A Swearing by the Messiah.¹⁶⁹

Abraham at length proceeds unto another Marriage; with Keturah; of whom the Genealogies in the Chronicles, may make one conclude, that the *Oriental*s are mistaken; who generally make her the same with Hagar. Austin makes Keturah & her Offspring, a Type of the Carnal Professors under the New Testament, as Hagar & her Offspring, was of those under the Old. It is observable, That Keturah wears both Names; that of a Wife, and that of a Concubine. [Gen. 25.1, 6. and, 1. Chron. 1.32.] The Reason may be; because a Concubine was a sort of a Wife, but one of lesser Dignity, than she that was most properly & legally so. Abraham has Children by Keturah; But how shall we Reconcile this, also himself carried to the place of sacrifice the wood on which he was to be offered up, just as the Lord Himself carried His own cross" (NPNFi 2:329).

168 Heidegger, (2:87, Exerc. III, § 58). Gen. 23:2; 24:67. According to Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 32, p. 234), Sarah died of grief when Sammael (Satan) told her that Abraham had slain Isaac as a burnt sacrifice on the altar. Genesis Rabbah (LVIII.5), as well as Rashi on Gen. 23:2 (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:267), affirms the tradition that Sarah died of anguish upon the news of her son's death. After his return from Mt. Moriah, Abraham went to Beersheba (Gen. 22:19) and later buried Sarah in the cave of the field of Machpelah (Gen. 23:19). R. Benjamin Tudelensis confirms that he saw the graves of the three patriarchs and their wives, in Itinerarium (85–86) and Itinerary (41–42).

169 Heidegger (2:88, Exerc. III, § 60). Gen. 24:2, 9. Rashi, the Targum Hierosolymitanus, and the Talmud (Shebuot 38b) insist that Eliezer's rite of obedience involved touching Abraham's circumcised member (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:276), but Ibn Ezra on Gen. 24:2 objects to this explanation on the grounds that Abraham had Eliezer swear "by the Lord," not "by the covenant of circumcision." Likewise, Ibn Ezra insists that the custom of sitting on a servant's hand as a sign of obedience is still practiced in India (Commentary 1:233). However, St. Augustine (Quaestiones in Heptateuchum, lib. 1, Quaest. in Genesim LXII) [PL 34. 564] asserts (Gen. 24:2) "to be a great prophecy, that Christ, the Lord of heaven and of the earth, was to come in the flesh, which was to be derived from that thigh." Much the same is asserted in De Civitate Dei 16.33 (NPNFi 2:330).

with what we read of him forty Years before; Rom. 4.19. His Body now Dead. Some, with Pererius, fly to the Youth of Keturah, which was not found in Sarah. Austin flies hither; Ad aliquid enim emortuum Corpus intellegere debemus, non ad omnia. Our Heidegger flies from Nature to Grace; and supposes, Per Gratiam et Virtutem Divinam in Extremâ Senectâ Vires ei Aquilæ instar fuerunt restauratæ. [Isa. 40.29, 30, 31.]¹⁷⁰

At last Abraham arrives to an Euthanasie; a quiet and easy Death, and in a Good old Age: An old Age like that celebrated by Cicero, [De Senectute.] Poma ex Arboribus, si cruda sunt, vi evelluntur; si matura et cocta, decidunt: sic vitam adolescentibus vis aufert, senibus maturitas: Quæ mihi tam jucunda est, ut quò propius ad mortem accedam, quasi Terram videre videar, aliquandòque in portum ex longa navigatione esse venturus. But then Drusius interprets this, Good old Age, to be one, Quæ illis incommodis mininè obnoxia, quæ etati ei communiter adjuncta sunt. And so, Vatablus interprets it; *Bona, id est, quæ aliena erat à malis, et incommodis Senectutis.*¹⁷¹

But so much may suffice for the Present, about this Renowned Patriarch.¹⁷²

¹⁷¹ Heidegger (2:92, Exerc. III, § 66). In De senectute (19.71), Marcus Tullius Cicero argues that "apples when they are green are with difficulty plucked from the tree, but when ripe and mellow fall of themselves, so, with the young, death comes as a result of force, while with the old it is the result of ripeness. To me the thought of this 'ripeness' for death is so pleasant, that the nearer I approach death the more I feel like one who is in sight of land at last and is about to anchor in his home port after a long voyage." But in their respective annotations on Gen. 25:8, Johannes Drusius defines a good old age as one "which is the least liable to those disadvantages which are generally characteristic of that age," whereas Franciscus Vatablus believes that senescence is "a good one, that is, one which is unconnected with the misfortunes and disadvantages of old age." Both Drusius and Vatablus's opinions on old age are excerpted in Critici Sacri (1:252, 256).

Q. Some Remarks on the Superstition and Idolatry, from which Abraham was rescued, when he left Ur of the Chaldees?

A. They shall be in the Words of Monsr. Saurin. “The Posterity of this Patriarch preserved, during the Space of many Ages, a criminal Affection for that Superstitious & Idolatrous Worship, from which GOD had delivered their Fore-fathers. We find in the Kingdoms of Judah and Israel, Footsteps of that Religious Worship, which the{y} paid to the Fire and to the Sun, in Chaldea. It is said, [2. King. 23.11.] That Josiah took away the Horses that the King of Judah had given to the Sun, & burnt the Chariots of the Sun with Fire. Prophane History furnishes us with several Monuments, by which we see, that Horses were consecrated to the Sun; whether it was by being employed to draw its Images; or, whether it was that they were kept to be sacrificed to it; or, lastly, whether they served as Types or Hieroglyphicks of that Star. Herodotus relates, that Cyrus, when he went to make War against the Babylonians, was stop’d by the River Guindez; that one of the white Horses, which were consecrated, attempting to pass it, was carried away & swallowed up in a Whirlpool; that Cyrus being provoked by this Accident, threaten’d to render it so small, that Women might walk over it afoot, without wetting so high as their knees; that he putt off his Expedition to Babylon to another Season, in order to perform his Threats; that having divided his Forces into two Bodies, one of which was on this side, and the other beyond the River, he employ’d them in making an hundred & four-score Canals on each side of the River, by which Means he drew off the Waters; that he spent a whole Summer in this Work; and that after having thus chastised the said River, by dividing it into three hundred & sixty Branches, he pursued his first Design.

“The Prophet Ezekiel describes the Worship of the Sun in the Kingdome of Judah. Chap. VIII.15, 16.¹⁷³

“One of the most learned Men of the past Age, – Selden, – has discovered several Footsteps of the Superstitious Worship which the People of GOD, rendred to the Fire and the Sun. The Chamanim, of which mention is made, in several Places of the Old Testament, were the Priests, the Temples, or the Images of that Star, or of this Element. [Lev. XXVI.30. 2. Chron. XXXIV.4. Isa. XVII.8.

173 The two preceding paragraphs are extracted from Jacques Saurin (Diss. XI, 1:96–97). Saurin’s “Prophane History” refers to Gerard Vossius’s De Theologia Gentili (1641), lib. 2, cap. 9, pp. 353–54, who juxtaposes biblical with pagan heroes. Vossius here cites a number of the ancient historians, including Herodotus (1.131–33), who assert that the Persians revered the sun by offering sacrificial animals – including horses. Herodotus (1.189, 202) relates how Cyrus the Great, son of Cambyses I and king of Persia (c. 557–530 BCE) in his expedition against Babylon “punished” the Assyrian River Gyndes for drowning “one of his sacred white horses” by dividing the river into 360 canals, thus making the Gyndes fordable on foot. On the Persian rite of sacrificing horses to the Sun god (Mithras), see especially Theophilus Gale (Court [1672], part 1, bk. 2, ch. 8, pp. 115–16.

and, XXVII.9.] The Rabin Jarchi pretends, that the Chamanim were Idols placed upon Towers, and so called because they were exposed to the Sun. But the Rabin Aben-Ezra affirms, that this Word denotes the Place, where such Idolatry was practised, and not the Images which were the Object of it. They were, saies he, Vaulted Houses made in Honour of the Sun, in form of a Chariot. Upon which Words a modern Author, [the famous Peter Jurieu] gives the following Gloss; *The Jew has guessed right, and it is not to be question'd, if we examine the History of Josiah. In the Second Book of KINGS, it is said, that Josiah burnt the Chariots of the Sun with Fire; there is no mention of the Chamanim. On the Contrary, in the Second Book of CHRONICLES it is said, that Josiah demolished the Chamanim which were upon the Altars of Baal, but no mention is made of the Chariots of the Sun. Now it is not likely, neither that the Second Book of Kings should have forgott to speak of the Chamanim, which was so considerable; nor that the Second Book of Chronicles should have omitted the Chariots, a Circumstance so particular. From whence it plainly follows, that the Chamanim & the Chariots of the Sun, were the same thing.*¹⁷⁴

“Other Interpreters maintain, that they were little Tents, artificially contrived to receive the Rays of the Sun; or certain Burning Glasses, which by concentrating its Rays in their Focus, kindled that Fire worshipped by the Idolaters.¹⁷⁵

“Probably, The Chemans, or Chemarim, of which mention is made in several Parts of the Old Testament, [2. King. XXIII.5. Hos. X.5. Zeph. I.4.] were probably, the same thing as the Chamanim. One may derive it from a Word that signifies, to Burn, or to be Black.

“It is sufficient to support our Conjecture, to relate a Passage of Eupolemus, which Eusebius has preserved for us, in his, Preparation of the Gospel. Camarine, says that Historian, is a City of Babylon, called by some Urie, which signifies, the City of the Chaldeans. The Greeks called those Chaldeans by Excellence, that wore the Priests of the Chaldeans. Tis the Observation of Gerhard Vossius, upon this Passage of Eupolemus, that this City was probably the same from whence Terah went forth by the Commandment of GOD; It had Two different Names, both signifying the same thing, Urie, or Camarine; If the City where the Fire

was adored, was called, Camarine, that is to say, Inflamed or Burnt, it was natural that the Priests, the Images, or the Temples, which were consecrated to the Fire, or the Sun, should be called Chemarim.¹⁷⁶

“Here is however enough to make us understand, that this kind of Idolatry, which had its Rise in Chaldea, and from which GOD delivered the Patriarch Abraham, communicated itself in the Sequel of Ages, to his Posterity.”¹⁷⁷

Q. After what Manner, did the Lord Reveal His Will unto Abram? v. 1.

A. We read, Act. 7.2. The God of Glory appeared to him. The Shechinah, even that Bright Cloud of Heaven, which was called, The Glory of God, attended with Angels, made a Descent unto him, with a visible Apparition. This visible Exhibition of the Glorious God, afterwards visited this Patriarch, and his Offspring. That Quæstion, which many have thought unanswerable, How the Saints of old were satisfied, that they were not by any Diabolical Illusions imposed upon, when Extraordinary Visits from Heaven were made unto them; is now easily answered. The Shechinah was an Object of so mighty and well-known a Glory, that all the Divels in Hell could never counterfeit it.¹⁷⁸

Q. The Command unto Abraham, Gett thee out of thy Countrey, – v. 1.

A. What we render, Gett thee, is, לך לך Vade Tibi, or, Ad Tē. Here is, the Benefit of his Duty intimated; It shall be for thee, or for thy Benefit.

And they who consider a mystical Intention here, do further observe the Nature of it; An Introversion; For a Man to turn into himself.¹⁷⁹

¹⁷⁷ Saurin (1:99).

¹⁷⁸ Among Mather’s likely sources are Franciscus Vatablus’s commentary, on Gen. 12:1, in Critici Sacri (1:177); Maimonides (Guide 1.21.30, 2.41.234–36), and Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:58). On the Mathers’ views on angels, see C. Mather’s Diary (1:155–57, 2:190) and Increase Mather’s Angelographia (1696); R. Lovelace’s American Pietism (188–97), D. Levin’s “When,” K. Silverman’s Life (122–37, 311–12), and E. Reis’s “Trouble.”

¹⁷⁹ Mather probably consulted Matthew Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:145–46) along with the commentaries of Rashi and Ramban on Gen. 12:1, cited in Poole. Rashi argues that the Hebrew expression “לך לך [lech lecha]” literally signifies “go to you,” because it shall be “for your benefit and for your good, and there I will make you into a great nation, but here [in Haran], you will not merit to have children. Moreover, I will make your character known in the World.” Ramban denies that “lech lecha” here suggests “for your benefit,” because the phrase is merely “an idiomatic expression in Hebrew meaning, ‘Go forth’” (Mikraoth Gedoloth 1:148a–b).

Dr. Lightfoot ha's a Remark here, That CHRIST was promised unto Abraham in a Town of the Gentiles; which Promise was in time to concern the Gentiles.¹⁸⁰

Q. How is that Promise fulfilled, I will make thy Name Great? v. 2.

A. It is remarkable, how famous Abraham is, throughout the whole World, even to this Day. All Christians, yea, and all Mahometans too, as well as Jewes, do celebrate the Fame of Abraham. It is observed by Maimonides, That all Mankind admires Abraham, as well as they that are descended from him.¹⁸¹

Q. What is the true import of those Words, in the Blessing of Abraham, I will curse him that curseth thee? v. 3.

A. The Blessing here is to Many, I will Bless THEM; The Curse is principally to One, I will curse HIM. By this One, is meant Satan. There is no just Cause for the Variation of the Number, unless wee look on these Words, as a Pursuit of the First Promise; which was accompanied with a special Malediction upon Satan, who acts his Enmitie in all Obloquie, & Cursing, against the Blessed Seed, and those that are thereby Blessed.¹⁸²

Q. What might be the special Occasion of this Passage & Promise, I will curse him that curses thee?

A. Maimonides will have it, that the Zabians loaded Abram with all Manner of Curses, & Reproaches, & Calumnies, when he went out of their Countrey; which he bearing patiently, God turned it upon themselves.¹⁸³

¹⁸¹ Mather cribs this annotation from Simon Patrick's commentary on Gen. 12:2 (Commentary 1:58). Maimonides (Guide 3.29.315) argues that Abraham's name is so great that "most people ... agree in praising him, and being proud of him; so that even those who are not his descendants call themselves by his name."

¹⁸² Mather comments on the shift in number from "bless them" to "curse him" – a change that has generated various interpretations: the cursed one is identified as "Satan" (Luther, Lectures on Genesis, Works 2:59), as "Balaam" (Targum Jonathan ben Uziel, in Walton 4:21), as "any individual" who cursed Abram in Ur (Nachmanides, Commentary 1:168), "King Nimrod," and those who worshipped "Moloch" (R. Bachya, Commentary 1:220).

¹⁸³ Mather's verbatim excerpt is from Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:58). Maimonides (Guide 3.29.315–16) singles out the Sabaeans for reproach because Abraham's monotheism

Q. There is a great Stir made, about the Chronology of Abraham. Tis here said, Abraham was Seventy five Years old, when hee departed out of Haran. But Stephen sais, in Act. 7.4. It was, when his Father was Dead, that hee removed from thence. Whereas wee find in Gen. 11.32. The Dayes of Terah, were two hundred & five Years. Now, tis affirmed in Gen. 11.26. Terah lived Seventy Years, & begat Abram, Nahor, & Haran. So then, if Abraham were born in the Seventieth Year of Terah, & went not out of Haran till his Father were Dead, hee must bee not Seventy five, but an hundred & thirty five Years old, at that going out. How will you adjust this business? Jerom sais, The Knot is Indissoluble; and Scaliger sais, Wee must stay for the Coming of Elias to dissolve it. v. 4.¹⁸⁴

A. I am not of Jeroms Mind, tho' I am also not Elias: This Matter may bee sett to rights, without any such desperate Reflections upon a Lapse in Stephens Memory, as have been made by some Interpreters. I say then, That Abraham was not born in the Seventieth Year of Terah, but in the Hundred & Thirtieth; and so, hee was not the First-born, but the Third, of the Sons of that Patriarch. Indeed, Abraham, is first mentioned, but that Order is, of their Dignity, not of their Nativity. If it bee objected, That if Abraham had a Father, who begat at an Hundred & Thirty Years of Age, it would not require any great Faith in him, to expect his own Begetting at an Hundred; It may bee Answered, If Abraham had any Hesitation about it, (which indeed is not a Supposition so clear, but that wee may Hesitate about that also; for the Laughter, in Gen. 17.17. may bee, Non Dubitantis, sed Gratulantis) it was not on the Score of his own being an Hundred Years old, but on the Score of Sarahs having been Barren until Ninety.¹⁸⁵

This Observation, of Abrahams being his Fathers youngest Son, invites mee to enter a solemn Consideration for all Elder Brothers; even that which you shall find among Old Theodorets, Quæstions upon Genesis. clashed with their worship of the stars. See also Mather's "V. Antiqua," in An Essay, for a further Commentary, appended to Mather's commentary on Revelation ("BA"). How Maimonides's "invention" of the Zabians (Sabaeans) was received by Mather's contemporaries, see J. Assmann's "Mosaic Distinction," J. Elukin's "Maimonides," and G. Stroumsa, "John Spencer" (esp. 16–23).

Q. What Remark upon the Age of Abraham, when the Promise (given to Adam in Paradise, and Shem after the Flood,) is renewed unto him? v. 4.

A. Being Seventy Five Years old, he was as many Years old, as there be Fathers of our Lord-Messiah, from Adam to Joseph.

Q. The Person of Abraham, are there any Acknowledgments of it, in any other Monuments of Antiquity, besides the Scriptures? v. 4.

A. When Abram is called, The Hebrew, some finding that the Word signifies, One that cometh from beyond the Water, or, A Stranger, think, that Abram is thus called, only because hee came from beyond Euphrates.

[314v] Now, besides the mistaken Opinion of Artapanus, and some other such Heathen Writers, That the Israelites were called Hebrewes, from Abraham, as corrupted of Abrahæans: [and Augustin was once Inclined unto this Opinion, but afterwards Retracted it:] Berosus the Chaldean, had some Knowledge of Abraham, tho' hee named him not; Hecateus, not only mentioned him occasionally, but also | wrote an History of him. Nicolaus Damascenus, in the Fourth Book of his Histories, related, That Abraham, a certain Stranger, did Reign, at Damascus; coming thither, from a Countrey about Babylon, said to bee that of the Chaldeans: That hee departed thence with his People, into the Land of Canaan, afterwards called Judæa, where his Posterity grew very Numerous. In Josephus's Time, the Name of Abraham, was famous in Damascus; where they show'd a certain Village, called, Abrahams Dwelling.¹⁸⁷

¹⁸⁷ Mather's source is Heidegger (2:94–95, Exerc. III, § 72). Gen. 14:13, 15:18. The Hellenized Jewish historian Artapanus (2nd c. BCE) calls the Jews “Ermiuth,” which in Greek signifies “Judeans,” but derives “Hebrews from Abraham” (Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica 9.18.420a). St. Augustine's assertion appears in De Civitate Dei 16.11 (NPNFi 2:316–17) and his reversal in his Retractiones (2.16) [PL 32. 636–637]. According to Josephus Flavius, Berosus (the Babylonian historian and priest of Belus) knew of Abraham without mentioning his name, but Hecataeus of Abdera allegedly knew him so well that he wrote a history of the patriarch. However, Hecataeus' references to Abraham survive only in fragments in his Testimonia and Fragmenta (Jacoby#-T 3a, 264, T fragm. 8b, line 2; Jacoby#-F 3a, 264, F fragm. 24, line 4). Likewise, Josephus mentions Nicolaus of Damascus (friend and teacher of Herod the Great), who tells Abraham's story in History (Fragment 30, lines 1–11) – all in Josephus (Antiquities 1.7.2) and in Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 9.16).

Q. In this Chapter, begin the Travels of Abraham: Will you run them all over? v. 5.

A. I will. But it shall be out of Buntings Itinerary. Abraham travelled, from his own Countrey of Ur in Chaldaea, to the City of Haran in Mesopotamia, which is, Miles. 376.
 From Haran, to Sichem, ... 400.
 From Sichem, to the Plain of Mamre. 28.
 From Mamre, to Egypt. 240.
 From Egypt, again to the Hill between Bethel & Hai. . . . 240.
 From thence, to the Plain near Hebron. 32.
 From that Plain, to Dan, the Place where hee overthrew the Four Kings. 124.
 From thence, pursuing the Enemy, to Hobam, on the left side of Damascus. 80.
 From thence, to Sodom, ... 160.
 From thence, again to the Plain of Mamre. 40.
 From thence, to Gerar, where Isaac {was} born. 6.
 From Gerar to Bersheba, ... 12.
 From Bersheba, to Mount Moriah, for the Offering of Isaac. 40.
 From Mount Moriah, again to Bersheba. 40.
 From Bersheba, to the Plain of Mamre, where hee died, & saw the End of all his Travels. 16.

Q. Whereabouts did Abram enter the Land of Canaan? v. 5.

A. He took his Journey, thro' the dangerous and hideous Desarts of Palmyrena; not having any thing but the Divine Promise, to support him. Relying on that Support, he climbed over an High Mountain, either of Libanus, Hermion, or Gilead, where, as Sir Walter Raleigh observes, he made his Entrance.¹⁸⁹

We read in Pirke Elieser, c. 25. That he took an House, while he was at Charran, which fronted the Town; where, according to the ancient Piety, he

An English translation of this popular work appeared with the Latin title Itinerarium totius sacrae scripturae (1629); the table is on pp. 79–80 of this edition.

¹⁸⁹ This paragraph is a close paraphrase of Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 12:4 (Commentary 1:59); Patrick's own source is Sir Walter Raleigh's History of the World (1614), bk. 2, ch. 1, § 3, p. 220.

Q. Who may be meant, by, All the Souls they had gotten? v. 5.

A. All the Slaves, born in their House, or bought with their Coin.

But the Chaldee Paraphrast interprets this, of the Proselytes they had won to God; for such only would Abram carry with him. Yea, Some of the Hebrew Doctors, are so punctual, as to tell us, That Abram instructed the Men, & Sarai the Women, in the True Religion; concerning which, Maimonides reports, (De Idol. c. 1.) he wrote a Book, & left it unto his Son Isaac.¹⁹¹

Q. What may be the true Etymology of the Name Pharaoh? v. 15.

A. Other Thoughts may be elsewhere offered; But here I incline to the Opinion of Ludolphus, who takes Pharaoh, to be a Compound Word, signifying as much as, Father of the Countrey: for that's the Meaning of, Phar-ot, in the Ethiopic Language; as Phar-mut, is, Mother of the Countrey.¹⁹⁴

¹⁹⁰ The entire paragraph is cribbed from Patrick's annotations on Gen. 12:5 (Commentary 1:59). Patrick's source is Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 25, p. 184) and Midrash Rabbah (Gen. LII.1).

¹⁹¹ Mather cribs his annotation from Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:59) on Gen. 12:5. Patrick draws on the Targum Onkelos (Gen. 12:5), in Walton (1:47). According to R. Hunia, "Abraham converted the men and Sarah the women" (Genesis Rabbah XXXIX:14 and LXXXIV:4). In his De Idololatria Liber (1641), cap. 1, § 9 p. 16, Rabbi Maimonides argues that Abram left a book of instructions to Isaac (Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Avodat Kochavim 1.3).

Q. On the Occasion of Abrahams retiring into Egypt? v. 20.

A. The Trials which a true Faith must undergo, before it be recompensed & accomplished!

The Lord gives a Command unto Abraham, to remove into a Land of Plenty, flowing with Milk & Honey, with a Promise that it should be His. He makes his Remove into that Land; & the First Thing he finds there, is a Famine; He is like to starve there, & is forced into Egypt for Bread.¹⁹⁵

So, anon, Abraham is told of a Seed like the Stars of Heaven. Yett the Isaac who is to bring it on, is not born till a long while after: must after grown to Manhood be a Sacrifice; marries, & for twenty Years together ha's no Issue!¹⁹⁶

the first-ever dictionary and grammar of the Ethiopian language Amharic, Lexicon Æthiopico-Latinum (1661). However, an examination of this work for the Latin equivalent of “pharaoh” proves inconclusive. In Ludolf’s discussion of Egyptian regal titles in Historiam Æthiopicam antehac editam Commentarius (1681, 1691) is more forthcoming, but the English translation of this work – A New History of Ethiopia (1682), bk. 2, ch. 1, p. 104 [irregular pagination] – merely points out that “the kings of Ægypt were call’d Pharo’s.” So Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 8.6.2), but Samuel Bochart, Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 5, cap. 18, col. 795–96), focusing on the OT bestiary, argues that in the Arabic language “Pharao” signifies “crocodilus” (col. 795), a sacred animal (Sobek) in the Egyptian cults. Well, there it is.

Q. Of the Patriarch Abraham, tis said, Hee dwelt in the Plains of Mamre; The Original runs, In Quercubus vel Quercetis Mamre. Can you tell of any notable Business in Antiquitie, which had its Original, in this Habitation of the Patriarch? v. 18.¹⁹⁸

A. Britain knowes nothing more famous, than their Ancient Sect of Druids; the Philosophers, whose Order was Instituted, they say, by one, Samothés, which is in English, as much as to say, An Heavenly Man. These Druids were the Celtic Priests; and the Celtic Name, Deru, for an Oak, was that from whence they received their Denomination; and at this very Day, the Welch call this Tree, Derw, and this Order of Men, Derwyddon. Instead of their having the Denomination of Druids, ἀπὸ τοῦ δρυὸς, the Greeks fetched their Term of δρυς, from the Celtic Deru.¹⁹⁹

Now, if you would know, whence this Oaken Religion was derived; It was from the Oaks of Mamre, where our Patriarch Abraham, had both a Dwelling and an Altar. Here hee lived, Here hee entertained God, and was entertained of Him. [Compare Gen. 18.1.] This Oak-Plain, and that eminent Oak, under which

Abraham lodged, was extant in the Dayes of Constantine, as Isidore, Jerom, and Sozomen, have assured us. And there are shrowd Probabilities, that Noah himself, had lived in this very Oak-Plain before him; for this very Spot, was called, 'Ογύγη, which was the Name of Noah; so called, ab Oggijis Suis, i.e. subcineritij panis (qualem עֵינִי vocant Hebrei) sacrificijs, from the Oggian Sacrifices, which hee did use to offer, in this Renowned Grove. It was from this Exemple, that the Ancients, and particularly, the Druyds of the Nations, chose Oaken Retirements, for their Devotions.²⁰⁰

On this Occasion, it may not bee amiss, to offer this Reflection; That Oaks are upon many Accounts Renowned, in the Scriptures of God. Particularly, Under an Oak it was, that the Lord appeared unto Abraham, & entred into Covenant with him: and there Abraham erected an Altar to the Lord. [Gen. 12.7.] This Place was from hence forward Holy unto God: it is mentioned in Josh. 24.26. where wee read, of, An Oak that was by the Sanctuary of the Lord: but if you'l say, The Tabernacle was here, still you do but render the Oak more Illustrious. Hence rose the Custome, not only of the Jewes, to sacrifice under Oaks, [Ezek. 6.13. and Hos. 4.13.] but also of the Gentiles, who Arbores in Numinum Templa constituebant, as Pliny has expressed it.²⁰¹

²⁰⁰ Gen. 13:8, 18:1 (LXX) renders the Hebrew word “elown” as “oaks” rather than “plain” (KJV). Isidore Pelusiota (Epistolae); St. Jerome, on Gen. 13:13 (Hebrew Questiones on Genesis, pp. 46–47); and Salaminius Hermias Sozomenos (Historia ecclesiastica 2.4.1, lines 1–3) and in NPNFii (2:261). The Greek designation “Ogyge” – ancient King of Thebes – is associated with Noah because a Flood greater than that of Deucalion occurred in Ogyge’s time. Anniius of Viterbo has much to say on this association in Berosus’s spurious history “Berosi Babylonici de Antiquitatibus,” in Antiquitatibus (1498), pp. f–ii(v) – i–ii(r). See Richard Lynche’s translated excerpt from this work, in An Historical Treatise (1601), p. Bii (v), where Noah’s Scythian name is supposed to be “Ogyges Saga” or, “Great Patriarke, soveraigne Priest, and mightie Sacrificer.” At any rate, Ogyges’ (i.e., Noah’s) name was derived “from his Oggian sacrifices, that is, bread baked under ashes (of the kind that the Hebrews call ‘uwg’ [goo])” [Strong’s # 5746]).

²⁰¹ The adaptation from Pliny (12.1.2) reads, “designated trees as the temples of the deities.”

Q. Some Remark on the Battel, whereof we are now entring into the History?
v. 1.

A. It is wonderful to see, how many learned Men, and how great Literators, have pleaded for the Antiquity & Authority of that Peece, which passes for, The Epistle of BARNABAS. The excellent, and critical Pen, of Mr. Jeremiah Jones, has bestow'd a just Castigation upon this Temerity. One Exemple which he produces of the Follies in that Epistle, is notorious. The Author of that Epistle gives a Masterly Stroke of his Allegorizing Talent; boasting, He who has putt the infused Gift of his Doctrine in us, knows that I never taught any one a more genuine Doctrine. And yett there was never any thing more trifling, more silly, more nauseous & ridiculous, than this Genuine Doctrine. He designs to prove, by the Number of Persons whom Abraham circumcised, that Abraham therein had Regard unto CHRIST, and that in the Number of the Persons who were circumcised, were tyfified, CHRIST and his Cross. Now see the Proof. The Scripture (says he) *tells us, That Abraham circumcised Three Hundred & Eighteen Men of his house. But what was the Knowledge [or, Mystery] shewn to him herein? Understand ye, That there are first Eighteen, and then Three Hundred [The Greek Letter, I, notes Ten; and the Greek Letter, H, notes Eight,] Therein Ye have the Name JESUS; [Because, I, and, H, are the Two First Letters of ΙΗΣΟΥΣ,] And because he was to have Grace, by the Cross, the Sign of which is the Letter, T, [which is the Greek Numeral for Three Hundred,] he therefore added Three Hundred.*²⁰²

Our Jones with Indignation makes his Appeal, unto the Assertors of this Epistle; whether an Epistle containing such Trumpery, is to be reckoned among the Sacred Books of the New Testament? Or, whether such Stuff could be written by the extraordinary Assistance of the Holy Spirit;²⁰³

First, whereas we read, that Abraham circumcised every Male of his house, both those who were born there, and those who were bought for Money; And afterwards we read, of his Arming Three hundred & Eighteen that were his Trained Servants: The Blunderer concludes, That Abraham circumcised no more than Three Hundred & Eighteen. But certainly Abraham circumcised more than that Number. Were there no Children, & no Infirm, left at home, when the Three hundred & Eighteen went on this Expedition? Besides, he took now with him, only those that were Born in his own House; but he circumcised also some that were Bought with his Money. Moreover, There were near Twenty Years between Abrahams going forth to Battle, with the Three | hundred & Eighteen, and the Circumcision of his Family. But no doubt his Family was considerably increased in this time.²⁰⁴

And then; can any one be so stupid, as to imagine, that Abraham understood Greek, and the Mystery hidden under the Letters, I, and, H, and, T? The Letters were not invented until many hundreds of Years after him; nor before Cadmus, who lived in the days of the Judges, about A. M. 2660.

Nor was the Punishment of the Cross known, till near Two Thousand Years after the Days of Abraham; It being originally a Roman Punishment.²⁰⁵

In fine; It looks as if this Epistle, were the Forgery of some such Fellow as corrupted the Books of the Sibyls, & written about the Middle of the Second Century.²⁰⁶

Only, because of its being so much akin to this Flight of Barnabas, I will add a Jewish Kabalism upon the Three hundred & Eighteen Servants of Abraham:

The Name of Eliezer the Steward of Abraham, amounts to that Number. א. 1. 7. 30. י. 10. 2. 70. 1. 7. 200.

(1820) that “this Epistle lays a greater claim to canonical authority than most others,” since many of the ancient Fathers – Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Eusebius Pamphilus, St. Jerome – either cited it affirmatively or “esteemed it genuine and canonical” (143).

²⁰⁴ Jones, New and Full Method (1798 ed.), vol. 2, part 3, ch. 41, pp. 448–49. Gen. 17:13 and 14:14.

Now, say the Jews, the Numerals of /אֵלִיעֶזֶר/ Eliezer, making just 318, the Number of Servants, which Abraham armed, we learn hence, that Abraham did the Business, & gott the Victory with Eliezer alone; who was equal to all of them; and that he left the rest at home, their Sins or Fears unfitting them to go with him.²⁰⁷

Q. What Sort of Kings, were the Kings of Shinar, and of Ellasar, and of Elam, and of Nations, with whom Abram encountred? v. 1.

A. Certainly, it can't be meant, that Amraphel King of Shinar, was King of Babylon, as tis commonly understood. So potent a King, would not have needed Associates in a War against such petty Princes, as those of Pentapolis; nor would he have marched away with only Prisoners & Booty, not having taken so much as one of the Cities which he came against. Or, if Chedorlaomer King of Elam, had been King of Persia, whose Quarrel was now managing, he would not have needed these Associates, to help him in the Management of it: nor would he have passed thro' so great a Part of the World, as Assyria, and Mesopotamia, & Part of Arabia, only to conquer Five little Towns; as whose Riches would not have countervailed the Charge, if he had sent only one of his Lieutenants, with a small Force, to have subdued them. In short, we may look on these Kings, to be like those Petty Kings, whereof there were so many in Canaan, when Joshua conquered it. But we may rationally imagine them to have been Commanders of Colonies, which they had led out of Assyria, and Persia, and settling thereabout, endeavoured the Enlargement of their Plantations.²⁰⁸

As for Tidal, King of Nations, we know, That Galilee, inhabited by a mixt People of diverse Countreyes, was called, Galilee of the Nations. Sir Walter Raleigh observes, That there were several petty Countreyes adjoining to Phœnicia, namely, Palmyrene, Batanea, Apamena, Laodicene, which lay towards Mesopotamia on the North, and Arabia on the East, over which we may suppose Tidal to have Reigned. Eupolemus, an ancient Greek Writer, calls them Armenians.²⁰⁹

²⁰⁷ Jones, New and Full Method (vol. 2, part 3, ch. 42, pp. 455–56). The Gematria for Abraham's servant Eliezer amounts to 318. The source for this numerical value is Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XLIII:2).

Q. Tis said, They smote all the Countrey of the Amalekites. You know, there were no Amalekites, then in the World; how then could they have a Countrey to be smitten? v. 7.

A. A Prolepsis is a very usual Figure, in the Scripture. Besides the Instance of it, now before us, I will give you a few more. Tis said, [Gen. 4.16.] Cain went & dwelt in the Land of Nod. It is probable, that this was not the Name of the Place, before his going thither, but that from his being there, it received its Name. [From, Nud, Vagari, Errare.] Thus, [Gen. 29.20.] That Jacob served Seven Years for Rachel, is proleptically spoken; hee married Rachel before the Seven Years were expired. Wee read [Gen. 35.19. and 48.7.] Rachel was buried in Bethlehem; and yett it is well-known, that this was not the Name of the Place, till after Moses. Thus Hebron, and some other Names of Cities, are mentioned in the Pentateuch; altho' the Names were not given, till after Moses's Death. Tis said, [Josh. 4.19.] the Israelites encamped in Gilgal; but it is called so, by Anticipation; it had not that Name, till [Josh. 5.9.] afterwards. There are other Exemples thereof, in the Book of Joshua; yea, there are in that Book the Names of Places, that are of a later Date than Joshua.²¹⁰

The Conjecture of the Jewes is very probable; That Ezra, after the Captivitie, when hee collected and marshalled, the several Parts of the Bible, hee altered the Names of many Places therein recited, and inserted the Modern ones in stead of the Ancient.²¹¹

Thus here, The Countrey of the Amalekites, is as much as to say, The Countrey now known by that Appellation.

²¹⁰ Since Amalek, son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:12, 16; 1 Chron. 1:36), was not yet born until long after Abram's battle with the rulers of the five cities took place (Gen. 14:1–7), the designation "country of the Amalekites" (Gen. 14:7; Num 13:29; 1 Sam. 15:7, 27:8) suggests an interpolation of a place name that could not have existed until the Israelite conquest of Canaan – long after their Exodus from Egypt. First contact between the Israelites and Amalekites occurred at Rephidim (Exod. 17:13). This postfactum interpolation, which Mather and his peers call a "prolepsis" or "anticipation" is frequently rationalized as a prophecy (Midrash Rabbah, Gen. XLII:7, Rashi, Grotius, Poole), but Ramban is disinclined to accept Rashi's explanation by arguing that this region was not named after the descendants of Amalek, Esau's grandson, but after Amalek, the Horite ruler of the place, for whom Esau's grandson had been named (Commentary 1:185–86).

Q. A few Remarks on the Other Cities, that were smitten by Chedorlaomer, in his Expedition? v. 7.

A. Ashteroth-Karnaim was doubtless the Ashteroth in the Countrey of Og. [Josh. XIII.31.] The Word, Karnaim, signifies, Two-horned. And some therefore suppose the City to have been built upon Two Hills; or to resemble Two Horns upon some other Accounts. But it seems more probable, that as Ashteroth was an Idol much worshipped in those Parts, and by the same Name, the Moon was denoted, so the Name of Carnaim comes from their usual way of picturing the Moon, with Two Horns. The Place might have its Name from the Worship there paid unto this Idol. In the Books of the Maccabees, it is called simply, Carnaim, and Carmon. And Jerom tells us, it was in his time called Carnea, and was a considerable Town, lying Six Miles from Adra; and there they shew Jobs dwelling-place.²¹²

Ham, which the LXX & other old Versions render, With them: was probably the Capital City of the Zuzims; and the same, that was called, Rabbah, after it was possessed by the Ammonites; which according to the old Geographer Stephanus, was once called, Ammana, or Amana.²¹³

Shaveh-Kirjathaim, or, The Plain of Kiriathaim, is the same, that we find a City of Reuben. [Josh. XIII.19.]²¹⁴

The Descendents of Lot found it no Difficulty to settle in these Parts, after Chedorlaomer had so depopulated it. Only the Rephaim, notwithstanding that Overthrow by Chedorlaomer, seem to have revived, and stood their Ground, & had a King of their own, till the Israelites, did by the Divine Assistance conquer them, and putt an End unto their Kingdome.²¹⁵

Q. With what particular Thoughts might Melchisedek bring forth his Bread & Wine, unto victorious Abraham? v. 18.

²¹² See Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 14:5 (Commentary 1:63). "Ashteroth Karnaim" suggests Ashteroth "of the two horns" or "hills," a city in Bashan (kingdom of Og), where the Phoenician fertility goddess Ashtoreth (Ishtar, Astarte, Venus) was revered. See John Selden's elucidation of the cult of Ashtoreth in his De Diis Syris (1617), Syntagma 2, cap. 2, pp. 142–71. The apocryphal 2 Macc. 12:21, 26 mentions this place name. See also St. Jerome commentary on Gen. 14:5 (Hieronymi Chronicon), in Eusebius's Concerning the Place Names (sec. A [Genesis]: "Ashteroth Karnein" and "Astaroth"). Here Eusebius argues that "Ashteroth" was located "six miles from Adraa." In sec. K [Genesis], Eusebius points out that "Karnaëim," in his day, "is now a large village of Arabia (in a corner of Batanea) which is called Karnaia beyond the (River) Jordan. There according to tradition the house of Job is pointed out."

²¹⁵ According to SBD, the Rephaim, or giants, were an aboriginal people who were vanquished by Chedorlaomer. They reemerged, however, in W Palestine (2 Sam. 21:18 ff; 1 Chron. 20:4).

A. Noah, in the Blessing of Shem, had made him, in a special Manner, the Lord of the Land of Canaan; Chedorlaomer an Heir of Elam, the Son of Shem, does bring, this Title from far, into Canaan, when the five Cities of the Plain Rebel; and into this War, hee takes Three younger Brothers of the House of Shem, to bee his | {Pri}soners. The Children of Shem, thus bandying together, in Vindication of their Claim to the Land against the Usurpation of the Canaanites, overrun the Countrey. When they were come to Dan, the North out-going of the Land, Abraham conquereth the Conquerors, and so hee hath a Double Title to the Land, both by Promise, & by Conquest. Melchisedek now saw, t'was hee, & his Posterity, for whom the Lord intended the Land, in the Prophetic Spirit of Noah, & therefore brought him out, the best Fruits of the Land, as Livery & Seisin of it. All fear of Claim, from any Sons of Shem, were now over, but only of Aram, the Youngest, who had no Children in the War. Of him descended Eliezer, who was Abraham's chief Servant; and hee was like to bee next Heir, if Abraham had no Child of his own. But when this Jealousy troubled Abram, God removed it.²¹⁶ [320v]

Q. Can we find any Pagan Tradition of Melchizedek? v. {1}8.

A. In the Divinity of the Phœnicians, or Canaanites, whereof we have a Fragment from Sanctioniathon, in the Works of Eusebius, there is frequent mention of one Sidic, or Sedec, which he interprets by the Word, Just. Monsr. Jurieu makes no Quæstion, but that he is the same with our Melchizedek.

But whereas he is made the Father of the Διοσκούροι, and of the Carybes, who were the Sons of Jupiter, and Jupiter was the same with Ham; our Jurieu laies hold hereon, to support a strange Paradox, of his; That Ham the Son of Noah, was the same that is now called, Melchizedek; A Paradox to which, I suppose, he will not gain many Proselytes.²¹⁷

216 In his “Note book of Authors,” Mather lists as one of his sources on Gen. 14:4 “Nowel’s Abraham in Arms,” i.e., to Abraham in Arms; Or The first Religious General with his Army (1678) 1–3, an artillery election sermon, by Samuel Nowell (1634–88). Nowell served as chaplain during New England’s King Philip’s War (1675–76) and was a selectman, treasurer, and supporter of the Old Charter. Heidegger (2:26–46, Exerc. II) details the whole debate about Melchizedek’s identity. According to Rashi, Melchizedek was none other than “Shem, the son of Noah,” and in offering bread and wine, Melchizedek “demonstrated that he bore no grudge against him [Abram] for slaying his sons” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:172). Ramban adds that Melchizedek saw in Abram’s action that “the House of God will be there [Jerusalem], and there his [Abram’s] descendants will bring the tithe and the Heave-offering, and there they will bless the Eternal” (Commentary 1:189).

217 Mather’s primary source is Pierre Jurieu’s Critical History (1705), vol. 1, part I, ch. 12, p. 115. The third-hand information about “Sidi or Sedec” (via Jurieu 115) appears in an extract of Philon of Byblos, who calls him “Suduc, who is named the Just” (Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica 1.10.36a, 37d). Eusebius’s own genealogical derivation is based on Philon of Byblos’s extract from Sanctioniathon, the ancient Phoenician historian, who derives the origin of the “Dioscuri, or Cabeiri, or Corybantes, or Samothraces” from “Suduc” (Mather’s “Sidic or Sedec”), son of

Q. Melchisedech was King of Salem. Was not that Salem, the same with Jerusalem? v. 18.

A. Bochart observes, That Salem was in the Way, which led from the Valley of Damascus unto Sodom. Jerom saies, That he learn'd from the Jewes in his Time, its being seated on that Side of Jordan, which is in the very Text now before us intimated. It retained its Name in the Dayes of our Saviour, as appears by the Story of Johns Baptising near Salim. [Joh. 3.23.] Several of the Fathers, quoted by Selden, are of the same Opinion.

But perhaps, I may endeavour elsewhere, notwithstanding all this, to find Salem, in Jerusalem.²¹⁸

Q. Who was Melchisedec, according to the plainest Intimations of the Scripture? v. 18.

A. The Silence of the Scripture, seems to rebuke that Enquiry. The Scripture ha's given us no Account of his Birth, or his Death, or his Pedigree. Hee might have those things in Reality, tho' Hee had them not in History. Why then should wee ask after them? It is clear, that Melchisedec was not an Angel; as ha's been by some conjectured; For wee are told, Every High-Priest is taken from among MEN. But might not Melchisedec bee the Son of God Himself? Some suppose, that our Lord, as a Blessed Prælibation, of His Future Incarnation, took on Him, the Form of a Man, and was this Melchisedec. I have this to object against it; It is said of Melchisedec, Hee was made LIKE the Son of God: Now, the Like, is not the Same. It is more doubtful, whether Shem, the Son of Noah, might not bee Melchisedec. Wee are certain, that Shem was alive, when Melchisedec & Abraham, had their famous Interview; and that hee was a Person of great Authority & Veneration Amynos and Magus, and grandson of none less than Aletae and the Titans (Praeparatio evangelica 1.10.36a). In this fashion, Jurieu tries to reconcile the mystery of Melchizedek's genealogy with its pagan version in Sanchoniathon's Phoenician history. However, Mather rejects Jurieu's argument that Melchizedek, the typological antecedent of the NT Christ, descended from the cursed Ham; for according to the Midrash Rabbah (Gen. LVI:10) and rabbinic tradition in the Talmud, Noah's righteous son Shem, not Ham, was the father of Melchizedek (Nedarim 32b).

 218 Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 14:18 "King of Salem" (Commentary 1:65) is Mather's trusty source for the two paragraphs. Patrick's own vademecum is Samuel Bochart (Geographia, pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 38, col. 317–18, and esp. pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 4, col. 715–16), who cites St. Jerome's Epistola 126 (Ad Evagrium) in confirmation of the two distinct cities. St. Jerome's geographic information about "Salem" ("Salmuias") is more than indebted to Eusebius's Onomasticon (sec. S, [Genesis]: "Salem"). John Selden (Historie of Tithes, p. 452, "Review") cites the opinion of the Church Fathers (St. Jerome, St. Ambrose, Eucherius, and Primasius), who assert that Melchizedek's Salem and the later capital Jerusalem were not one and the same city. Mather's endeavor to link the two place names is informed by Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.10.2; Wars 6.10.1) and Eusebius's Onomasticon (see "Ierusalem" [Joshua]; and "Salem," [Genesis], sec. S). in the World. Learned Men, are exceeding willing, to imagine that they were that One Person, under this Diverse Name. What hinders from consenting to it is, That wee know the Father of Shem; whereas, wee read of Melchisedec, [in Heb. VII.] that hee was, without Genealogy. In fine; the plainest Account is this. Melchisedec was a Man, an Holy & a Mighty Man, probably descended from Japhet, but certainly no Canaanite; a Man Immediately & Extraordinarily called by God, to bee a glorious Priest unto Him, in the Midst of the Sinful Nations that had Apostatized from His Wayes.²¹⁹

Q. In Melchisedec, what was there of our Lord Jesus Christ repræsented unto the World? v. 18.

A. First, It was the Character of Melchisedec, Hee was Priest of the Most High God. The Rite of Sacrificing was common to all Worshippers of old; But Melchisedec seems to bee the First Priest, whom God Appointed & Approved in the World; the Priest was a Great, a New, an Illustrious Office, conferr'd on this Man, by the Most High that Ruleth over all. Thus, there is a glorious Priesthood, belonging to the Lord Jesus Christ. There are but Three Scriptures, wherein Melchisedec is mentioned; & in one of them, wee find it said of our Lord, Psal. 110.4. Thou art a Priest forever, after the Order of Melchisedec. Poor, Fallen, Sinful Man, stands in Infinite Need of such a Priest; and admirably fitted by His Two Natures, in One Person, our Lord, is to do the Work of a Priest for us; effectually to make a Compensation to God for our Fault: [Isa. 53.11. Heb. 10.10. Act. 20.28.] and an Intercession with God, for our Help. [Heb. 8.1.]²²⁰

Again; Melchisedec was a Priest, who came not so to bee, by Succession, or, Election from other Men; it was a solemn Designation of God, that Invested him in that Sacred Function. Thus, the Lord Jesus Christ became a Priest, at the Call, & by the Act, of the Almighty God. For this Cause is Hee styled, A Priest after [the Order] of Melchisedec. [Heb. 5.4, 5, 6. Consider, Joh. 6.27. and Joh. 8.42.] Hee had the Word of God, yea, the Oath of God, encouraging Him, to undertake a Priesthood on our behalf.

²²⁰ Heidegger (2:33, Exerc. II, § 10). Ps. 103:19. Matthew Poole, Synopsis Criticorum (1:154–55).

Further, It was the Honour of Melchisedec to bee both a Priest and a King: the God of Heaven made him a King, that hee might bee a more Noted, & a more Able Priest. Thus, There is a Blessed Conjunction of these two Glories in our Lord Jesus Christ. [Ps. 2.6.] It was long since observed, That tho' the other Tribes of Israel did not marry with one another, yett the Tribes of Levi & of Judah did; which a little intimated the Meeting of the Priestly and the Kingly Power, in our Lord. But what sort of a King is Hee? Hee is a, Melchisedec; which is, by some, rendred, My Righteous King; but by the Apostle, The King of Righteousness. That Name, was, no doubt, by divine Direction, putt upon Melchisedec; Hence, Adonizedec, a Name of a like Import, was used by the Princes, that came after him. Even such a King, is our Lord; There is a spotless Righteousness, to bee seen in that King. [Psal. 45.6, 7.] And there is a Perfect Righteousness, to bee had from that King. [Jer. 23.6.]²²¹

Furthermore, Tis said of Melchisedec, Hee was King of Salem, which is King of Peace. What Salem was it? I know, that generally, they will not have it be that Salem, a City near to Sychem, where, in the Dayes of Jerom, the pretended Ruines of Melchisedecs Palace were to bee seen. The Most suppose that, Jerusalem is intended by Salem here: Jerusalem, I say, which was once called Salem, and which lay in Abrahams Road, Inviting him there to pay a Visit unto Melchisedec. If it be so, This was not without a Mystery! Where our Melchisedec is, there Salem is; there Jerusalem is; there, a Vision of Peace. That vastly comprehensive Good, Peace, is to bee had with and from our Lord. At His Birth, it was the Song of the Angels, (taken out of the Eighty fifth Psalm) Peace on Earth! [See Mic. 5.5. Joh. 14.27. Isa. 9.6. Eph. 2.18.] But in what Order is this Peace to bee enjoy'd? First wee are to make sure of Righteousness. [See Isa. 32.17.]²²²

Moreover, There was this in the Carriage of Melchisedec to Abraham, Hee Blessed him; a Sacerdotal, & an Authoritative Blessing was herein dispensed. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ; Hee do's Pronounce, and Convey, the Good Things of God, unto all that belong unto Him. [Eph. 1.3.] This was His Errand when Hee came into the World. [Act. 3.26.] And His Design when Hee went out of it: [Luc. 24.51.]²²³

Add here unto, When Abraham had been subduing of the Canaanites, then Melchisedec brought out Bread & Wine, for the Entertainment of his Army. It was the Manner of the Countrey to show that Civility unto the Forces of their Neighbours, with which they were in Amity. It is a Foolish & a Popish Mistake, that there was any Sacrifice in this Bread & Wine. Yett it was an admirable Shadow of the Supports and Comforts, which our Lord hath, for those that are engaged in the Wars of God. [Psal. 65.4.] Indeed, I cannot but suspect, that the Four Monarchs conquered by Abraham, were Types of the Four Monarchies in the World; the Four Monarchies, whereby successively, the Church of God in the World, ha's been Oppressed & Abused. When they shall bee all subdued before the Church of God, then comes the Supper of the Lamb, then the Bread and Wine, in the New Jerusalem. Yea, our Melchisedec often sett's Bread and Wine before us, in the Sacrament of the Eucharist; which the true Children of Abraham will bee lothe to turn their Backs upon. Our Title to that Ordinance, may bee tried by this; *Do wee Fight for God?*²²⁴

Finally; Wee read, Abraham gave to Melchisedec, a Tenth Part of all. This, the one Gave, in a way of Duty, the other Took, in a way of Office. Well; Melchisedec is yett alive; there is a Tribute and an Homage, due to our Priest on High. Our Lord Jesus Christ ha's His Ministers [consider, Gal. 6.6.] and His Poor Members; [consider, Prov. 28.27.] Wee can give no good Account of our Talents, if these are not considered; and a Tenth Part is due to our Lord.²²⁵

It might have been added; Wee find not, that Melchisedec had any Father, or any Mother. Thus our Lord, as Man, had no Father; as God, had no Mother. Besides, Neither Birth, nor Death, is related of Melchisedec. Thus, our Lord, in His Divine Person, Hee never did know any Birth; in His Humane Nature, Hee now never shall know any Death. But, Manum dè Tabulâ.²²⁶

Q. Why do the Patriarchs, Melchisedec and Abraham, still call the Lord, The Most High God, Possessor of Heaven & Earth? v. 19, 22.

A. They call'd Him The Most High God, Creator of Heaven & Earth. And they did it, for the same Reason that they were to keep a Sabbath; even, to keep up the Memory of the Creation. The כִּבְּרָא Cæli ac Terræ, here, signifies not so much the, Possessor, as the, Creator, of Heaven & Earth. By the same Token, that the LXX, render it, ὃς ἐκτίσε, qui creavit, condidit. And Maimonides, proving that Abraham was well acquainted with the Doctrine of, The Worlds Beginning, sais, Hinc est, quòd Invocavit Nomen Domini Dei Mundi: Huc etiam, respicite, dum ²²⁴ Heidegger (2:41–42, Exerc. II, § 22). Mather typologically links the four vanquished kings (Gen. 14:1) with those in Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the Four Monarchies that would be succeeded by the Fifth Monarchy of Christ's millennium (Dan. 2:31–45).

ait, creatorem Cæli et Terræ. Such a Sense of this Phrase, is also more agreeable to the August Style wherein the Lord is elsewhere usually mentioned. Nor is it to be forgotten, that the LXX render the Word /קִנִּי/ [Prov. 8.22.] ἐκτισέ με; and the Chaldee renders it, /כִּבְרֵאֵי/ *Hee created mee.*²²⁷

Q. Of Abraham paying Tithes, to the Priest of the Lord, what Foot-steps in Pagan Antiquitie? v. 20.

A. Censorinus proves, that it was a general Usage among the Pagan Worshipers, to offer their First-fruits, unto some of their Deities. And innumerable Histories make it evident, that their Usage of paying Tithes, was as Antient as General. Plutarch shewes, That a doing of this, not out of Compulsion, but out of Gratitude, was a considerable Part of the old Roman Religion. Hee particularly tells us, That Camillus faithfully rendred unto Apollo, the Tenth of his Booties; and that Lucullus grew Rich, because hee exactly practised the laudable Custome of rendring the Tenth to Hercules. That the Payment of Tithes, was usual among the Greeks, is notorious, from the Dictate of the Oracle.

Δεκατην εκπεμψατε Φοιβω:

and from the Delphic Inscription,

Οφρα θεω δεκατην ακροθινα τε κρεμασαιμεν.

From whence Apollo had the Name of Δεκατηφορος. And what Herodotus relates, of Cyrus, his paying Tithes to Jupiter, after a Victory; intimates what was usual among the Persians too. For other Nations, it was grown into an universal and unchangeable Custome, to offer the Tenth, unto some God, Post ²²⁷ In his "Note Book of Authors" on Gen. 14:18, 19, 20, Mather identifies as one of his sources "J. Prideaux ii Lectiones." This somewhat cryptic notation refers to a 1620 inaugural lecture given at Oxford, by Dr. John Prideaux (1578–1650), Rector of Exeter College, Oxford, Regius professor of divinity, and later bishop of Worcester. More specifically, Mather has in mind "Oratio V: De Decimis" (Gen. 14: 18, 19, 20) appended to Viginti-duae Lectiones (1648), Oratio V, pp. 41–49 (second series of pagination). Here, Prideaux examines the question of whether Melchizedek, prince of Salem, to whom Abraham paid his tithes was really a human being, or rather a manifestation of Jesus Christ long before his incarnation, an interpretation which Mather clearly favors. Evidently guided by Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 14:19 (Commentary 1:65), Mather also draws on Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685), lib. 1, cap. 4, sec. 10, pp. 84–85, by John Spencer (1630–93), Dean of Corpus Christi, Cambridge, Hebraist, and founder of comparative religion. The Hebrew noun קָנָה (qanah) [Strong's # B8889] and the Latin phrase Cæli ac Terræ signify respectively "Creator" and "of Heaven and Earth." The Greek phrase "ὁς ἐκτίσῃ" (LXX, Gen. 14:19) suggests "who created" or "made." Mather's second-hand citation (via Spencer 84–85) from Johannes Buxtorf's Latin translation of Maimonides's Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 2, cap. 13, p. 217, points out that the creation of the world "proclaimed, therefore [even] 'the name of the Lord God of the Universe.' [Gen. 21.33]; and he had [even] previously expressed this theory in the words, 'The Possessor of heaven and earth.' [Gen. 14, 22]" (Guide 2.13.172). The LXX (Prov. 8:22) renders the Hebrew קָנָה [qanahni] "possessed" or "created" and the Greek ἐκτίσεν με [ektisen me] "created me." For the Chaldee Paraphrast on Prov. 8:22, see Walton (3:336).

Rem benè gestam, as it is expressed by Servius; yea, so indispensable a Peece of Religion, it became, that Suidas observes, Δεκατευειν, was as much as καθιερουν, to consecrate.²²⁸

Now, tho' the Law of Nature, might putt Men, upon offering some of their Increase, unto Him, from whom they received the whole, yett this particular Quota there is no Law of Nature for. It is as Reasonable to give a Ninth, or a Seventh, as a Tenth. Wherefore tis plain, that the Pagans received this Rite, from the positive Law, observed among the Jewes. Contrary to the Opinion of the learned Spencer, the learned Selden demonstrates, that the Phœnicians, & Egyptians, and others, who were Neighbours to the Jewes, received this Rite from the Jewish Nation; and from these it was transmitted unto the other Gentiles farther off. And if it can bee proved, That some Heathen, before the Jewish Dispensation, offered their Tithes, wee may justly assert, that some of the Patriarchs before the Law, gave Occasion for their doing so. The most Ancient Instance, is that of Abraham.²²⁹

²²⁸ Among Mather's primary sources for this paragraph are John Selden's Historie of Tithes (1618), ch. 3, esp. pp. 27–33; and Spencer's De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685), lib. 3, Diss. I, cap. 10, sec. 2, pp. 620–21. Censorinus (De die natali 4.5). Plutarch (Camillus 5.4–9; 7.6–8.8), Plutarch's Lives (2:106–09, 112–15), relates how the celebrated Roman general M. Furius Camillus dedicated the tenth part of his spoils of his conquest of Veii (396 BCE) to Apollo's shrine at Delphi. Lucullus Licinius Lucullus (117–56 BCE), Roman consul, was the richest man of Rome after Crassus (KP); Plutarch (Lucullus 39–42; Plutarch's Lives 2:598–605). The dictate of Apollo's Oracle, engraved on a tripod in Zeus's temple precinct, commands to "send a tithe to Phoebus," and variously appears in Dionysius Halicarnassensis (Antiquitates Romanae 1.19.3, line 8), Stephanus Byzantius (8.9), and Anthologiae Graecae Appendix (Oracula, epigr. 177.3). The Delphic inscription ὄφρα θεῶν δεκάτην ἀκροθινιά τε κρεμάσαιμεν / σταθμῶν ἐκ ζαθέων καὶ κίονος ὑψηλοῖο, which Mather extracts at second hand from Selden's Historie of Tithes (ch. 3, sec. 3, pp. 29–30), appears in Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.24.164, subsec. 3, line 3) and admonishes worshippers "That to the god first-fruits and tithes we may / On sacred pillars and on lofty columns hang" (ANF 2:337). According to Pausanias (1.42.5), Apollo Decatephorus was thus nicknamed "Bringer of Tithes." Herodotus (1.131–32; 4.152, 5.77, 9.81) describes the sacrificial ritual and instances several occasions where tithes were offered in thanksgiving to the gods "after a well-conducted business" (Servius's In Vergilii carmina commentaria). The Suda (Lexicon, alphabetic letter delta, entry 181, line 1; and entry 182, lines 1) defines "Dekateuein" as "tithing." "Kathieroun" or rather "kathieroi" suggests "to sacrifice" or "consecrate," in Suda (Lexicon, alphabetic letter kappa, entry 91, line 1). Mather extracts these second-hand Greek citations from Selden's Historie of Tithes (1618), ch. 3, p. 32.

Q. We may bring Abrahams War, & the affayr of Melchizedek, under a further Consideration? v. 24.

A. A late Writer, whose Name is Fleming, ha's employ'd some Thoughts on those notable Subjects. And some of those Thoughts, appear to me, not unworthy to be offered among our Illustrations.²³⁰

We find, Melchizedek, to be not only, a Priest of the Most High God, but also a King, at the Salem of the Jebusities. It is clear, from Psal. 76.2. That Jerusalem was once called Salem. And it is probable, That the Psalmist there alludes to the History of Abraham defeating the Four Kings, & being afterwards Mett and Blest by Melchizedek. He saies, There brake He the Arrowes of the Bowe, the Shield, & the Sword, & the Battle. Thou art more glorious & excellent than Mountains of Prey. There did God break the Power of the Insulting Kings, by the Hand of Abraham, who on that Occasion received the Patriarchal Blessing, from the King of Salem. And there it was, that Abraham gave this Testimony to the Honour of the Service of God, that He reckoned the Lord more glorious and excellent, than Mountains, or mountainous Heaps of Prey, which he took from those Kings; but whereof he would not receive to the Value of a Shoe-latchet, lest it should be said, that he grew rich any other Way than the Blessing of God.²³¹

That we may understand the History of Melchizedek, the War between the Four Kings and the Five, must be considered.

The King of Sodom & the neighbouring Princes, having Rebelled against Chedorlaomer the King of Elam, after they had been for Twelve Years Tributary to him: Chedorlaomer, with the assistance of Three confoederate Princes, endeavours again to subjugate them. They begin their Invasion, at the North End of the Land, without Jordan; and there defeating the King of Sodom, with his Associates, flusht with Success, he proposes an entire Conquest of the Land within Jordan also. He enters into the South Part of Canaan, and passes on victorious as far as Hebron, close by which Abraham then lived, in the Valley of Mamre. This he pass'd by, and penetrated unto the Borders of Dan, which was not far from Salem, or Jerusalem; tho' we hear nothing of his having any Design upon that Place neither. The Countrey being under a great Consternation, Abraham, Lectiones (1648), Concio 1, pp. 1–10 (third series of pagination). For modern discussions, see P. Rossi's Dark Abyss (chs. 22–26), F. Schmidt's "Polytheisms" (9–60), J. Assmann's Moses the Egyptian (chs. 3–4), and F. Parente's "Spencer" (277–304).

²³⁰ Mather's commentary on Gen. 14:24 is extracted from Loganthropos (1707), in Christology: A Discourse Concerning Christ (1705–08), vol. 2, bk. 3, ch. 6, pp. 562–74, by Robert Fleming (1660–1716), Presbyterian divine, and son of the eminent Scottish clergyman by the same name. An ardent millennialist, Fleming studied at Leiden and Utrecht, succeeded his father as minister of a congregation at Rotterdam, but finally returned to London, where he ministered at Lothbury until his death.

who was also more particularly concerned for his Kinsman Lot, now a Captive in the hands of the Enemy, with his Forces parts from Hebron, which was about Eighteen Miles from Jerusalem, to the South. From Hebron he bears away to the N. W. or, N. N. W. after the Enemy; & gives them a Defeat, near the Borders of Dan, & therefore not far from Jerusalem: (which is evident, in that the City of Baalab, or, Kirjath-jearim, was so in the Border of Judah, & of Dan, as be ascribed unto both: [Josh. 15.29. and, Josh. 19.24.] The City belonged unto Judah, & the Fields unto Dan; and that City, was, according to Lightfoot, about Six or Seven Miles from Jerusalem.) Abraham indeed pursued the Enemy some Dayes Journey Northward, after the Defeat; but then he Returned unto Jerusalem with all his Booty. And there it was, that he had his Interview with Melchizedek.²³²

The Place of the Interview, was, The Vale of Shaveh, or, The Kings Dale. This Place may be easily found. It was the very Place, where Absalom erected his Pillar; [2. Sam. 18.18.] the Remains whereof continue to this very Day, as we are informed, both by Jewes and Christians, who have Travelled thither. Now, this Vale, or Dale, which was anciently called The Kings Dale, because the Kings there diverted themselves in their Chariots, & in other Amusements, was but Two Furlongs without the Walls of Jerusalem. It lay just under the Temple, to the East, between that, & the Mount Olivet, the Brook of Cedron running thro' it; And it is supposed the same, that was afterwards called, The Valley of Jehoshaphat; unto the South of which lay the Valley of Gehinnom. From which it appears, that Jerom and his Followers, are mistaken, when they assign another Salem, for the Habitation of Melchizedek. | Hence he thinks it plain, that Melchizedek was a Man living at Jerusalem, so eminent, for his Righteousness, both as a Prince and as a Priest, that he came to be known by that Name alone, The Righteous King, or, Melchizedek. He was, the Priest of the Most High God; in Opposition to those who were Priests of the lesser Deities, which began by this time to be worshipped, as the Tutelary Gods of Tribes and Provinces. There is no Foundation for any Opinion, that he was an Angel; much less, that he was the Logos appearing as a Man.²³³ [324v]

As he goes under the Name of Melchizedek indeed, he ha's no Father nor Mother. And as he was a Priest & a Prince also, he was without Descent; he was not possess'd of those Offices in the ordinary Way of Descent, by the Right of Primogeniture. He had these by an Immediate Grant from God, as Jacob afterwards had the Blessing. In like Manner, he was without Descent and End of Life; because his Priesthood did not descend unto any Man after him, as that of Aaron did. So he abides a Priest continually, in the lasting Register of the Scriptures, which speaks of him, as containing all his Species in himself; none succeeding him in his Patriarchate, until our Saviour came, & in an higher Sense, took it up.²³⁴

Fleming, like many others before him, will by all means have him, to be Shem; the Second Son of Noah; to whom the First Blessing, & the Right of Primogeniture, was transferred by God Inspiring of his Father to declare it.²³⁵

The Land of Canaan, and particularly Jerusalem, was marked out by God, for to be the great Theatre, where the most Remarkable Transactions were to be carried on, in a Gradation of several Scenes, down from Shem to the Messiah. And it is a thing worthy of Remark, That the Peculiarity, both of Shems Blessing, and of Hams Curse, is Relative to the Dominion and Possession of that Countrey. Therefore Ham, is in the Malediction mentioned, but as the Father of Canaan; and he is cursed but by the Name of Canaan, his youngest Son. The other Sons of Ham, namely, Cush and Mizraim, and Phut, are exempted from the Curse. 'Tis a Vulgar Error, that the Curse was upon all Hams Posterity. The Curse on Canaan was, that he should be a Servant, unto his Brethren; first unto Shem; and afterwards unto Japhet. All which, both Literally, and Spiritually, ha's been accomplished.²³⁶

Canaan took Possession of the Land which took its Name from him; & there he had a Numerous Posterity, whereof Moses reckons up Eleven Tribes; [Gen. 10.15, 16, 17, 18.] But then he adds, And afterwards were the Families of the Canaanites spread abroad. It seems, that afterward, some Grandson, or Great Grandson of Canaan, of his own Name, who erected a New Tribe, which made up the Number of Twelve in all. For, besides, that all those Tribes were sometimes called by the general Name of Canaanites, we find, that there was one particular Tribe, unto which that Name was peculiarly appropriated. [See particularly, Josh. 11.3.]²³⁷

This, by the way, affords a clear Comment, unto a dark Place of Scripture; Deut. 32.8, 9. When the Most High divided to the Nations their Inheritance, when He separated the Sons of Adam, He sett the Bounds of the People, according to the Number of the Children of Israel. The Most High Divided unto the Several Nations descending from Noah, their several Allotments of the World, which they were to Inherit and Inhabit. Afterwards He Separated, and Scattered Abroad those Sons of Adam, or Transgression, who, at Babel were confœderated, to oppose the Order of God by Noah, as to the Allotments that had been assign'd unto them. In both of these Times, God evidenced His Respect unto His People

²³⁵ Fleming (2:566).

²³⁷ Fleming (2:567–68). Gen. 10.18.

Israel, tho' they were not then Actually in being; by appointing the Land of Canaan, to be their Inheritance. And that even when the Canaanites usurped the Land, which was by God and Noah appropriated unto the Posterity of Shem, still he did so order Matters, that the Bounds of their Habitation were marked out for Twelve Tribes, according to the Number of the Tribes of Israel, which were to be the True & Lasting Possessors of that Countrey.

| These Children of Canaan, to fulfil the Curse, were either cutt off, or made Slaves, to Israel, the Posterity of Shem; And afterwards, both Israelites, & subjugated Canaanites, were enslaved by the Romans, the Posterity of Japhet.²³⁸ [325r]

Now, tho' Canaan had siezed upon this Countrey, contrary to the Order of Noah, yett Shem fixes his Seat in Salem; taking Possession thus of the Countrey, by Vertue of the Promise, as knowing, that his Posterity would Recover a Right unto it, & the Canaanites become Servants unto them.

Shem was alive, above an hundred & threescore Years, after the Battel of Abraham with the Four Kings. And he was now, De Jure, King and Priest of the whole World; for his Father Noah was Dead above fourscore Years before this famous Battel. Then, why should not he be Melchizedek? To make Melchizedek a Canaanitish King, (which we may well wonder to see, our great Calvin do!) is to make one of the Accursed Seed, not only greater than Abraham, but also to hand over, unto him, the Blessing that Noah gave to Shem. In short, who but the First Patriarch, might act as a Superior to Abraham, who was himself a Patriarch?²³⁹

By considering the Occasion of Chedorlaomers War, we shall gain further Light in the Matter.

Shem had Four Sons; namely, Elam, Ashur, Arphaxad, & Aram. No doubt, Shem acquainted them with Noahs Prophecy, and his own Claim to the First Blessing upon it; By Vertue whereof, he had a Right unto the Land of Canaan, tho' the Posterity of Ham had surprized it into their Possession. Elam therefore, as the eldest Son, did justly lay Claim to the Countrey of Canaan; tho' he found himself not able to conquer it, and so he removed further into the Heart of Asia; occupying the Countrey, which from him was called Elam, and afterwards, Persia. In the mean time, Shems youngest Son Aram, having probably a more Numerous Posterity than his elder Brethren, took an early Possession of Part of the Land of Canaan; from whom the Syrians descended. In Process of Time, the Elamites, did increase in their Number and Power; and in spite of Nimrods Attempts, they remain'd unconquered, & had their own Princes to govern them.²⁴⁰

²³⁸ Fleming (2:568–69). Act. 17:26.

²⁴⁰ Fleming (2:570–71). Gen. 10:22 includes Lud as one of Shem's five sons. Mic. 5:6.

Chedorlaomer, a Descendent from Elam, grew so considerable, that he conquered the Land of Canaan; & possessed it, for Twelve Years, and until the King of Sodom & his Associates, found themselves able to shake him off. Hereupon, Chedorlaomer again asserts his Title to his Countrey; as being the First Male-Branch of Shems Posterity. Tho' in this probably he acted, as an Headstrong Man; & consulted not with Shem, his great Ancestor, from whom his Right was Derivative, concerning it.²⁴¹

Shem, no doubt, was now well acquainted with Abraham, & his Vocation, & the Promise for the Land of Canaan, which God had given him. On which Account, he would hardly have patronized Chedorlaomer, in his present Expedition. It is rather probable, that he encouraged Abraham against him, as against a præsumptuous Invader, acting without his Advice or Consent. And it is not improbable, That Chedorlaomer might be advertized of Abrahams Claim to this Land; For his Removal thither, doubtless made a great Noise in those Dayes; & the Elamites could not but be Jealous of his Intentions.

Abraham, falls upon the Adventurous King & his Associates, as you know, & routs them; recovering all that they had carried away. This Victory was a Pledge of the Certainty of what God had promised; that his Posterity should possess that Countrey; And it confirm'd his Title to it.²⁴²

[326v] On the Fame hereof, good old Shem, whom all Men Reverenced as the Righteous King, and the Priest of the Supreme Lord of the World, comes forth from Salem; where he enjoyed & promoted an Happy Peace among Men; & he meets Abraham, & Blesses him; as now most clearly perceiving, in what Branch of his Posterity, God would accomplish the Prophecy of his Father Noah, That Canaan should be his Servant. He therefore hands over to Abraham, that Part of the Blessing, which Noah had given unto him; in Words, almost of the same Import with those, which | Noah had used, unto himself. Only he acted a prudent Part, in so wording himself, that he might not expose Abraham, unto the united Rage of the Canaanites; especially at this time, now they were his Confederates. He did not expressly say, Canaan shall be his Servant. But Abraham knew what he meant; even, That the Most High God, Possessor of Heaven & Earth, had now discovered, unto whom He was to Dispose that Part of the Habitable Earth.²⁴³

After Shem, there never was any other Universal Patriarch of the whole World. Our glorious Messiah ha's the only Claim unto it. The Dragon at Rome, who would claim it, is a vile Usurper.²⁴⁴

²⁴³ Fleming (2:573–74). Gen. 14:18–24; Gen. 9:25–26.

²⁴⁴ Fleming (2:574–75). Mather's diatribe against the Roman Pontiff is perfectly consistent with the view of Protestant millennialists who identify the pope with Antichrist. See Mather's Threefold Paradise (71–76, 187, 291, 319–43).

One Objection that militates against Shems being Melchizedek, is; That Shems Genealogy is upon Record. But the Answer is; Tis so, as he is a Shem, & as a Man; Tis not so, as he is a Melchizedek, and as King of Salem.²⁴⁵

Q. Our finding of Melchizedek among the Canaanites, invites us to enquire after the Condition of Religion among the People of Canaan? v. 24.

A. Monsr. Jurieu thinks, That GOD had yett preserved a considerable People among them. Tho' from the Time of Abraham, GOD laid the Foundation of the Distinction, which He intended between the Israelites, and the Nations which He afterwards Rejected, yett the Rejection of them went on very gradually. Job and his Friends, were in all Probability Contemporaries with Abraham. The Church was then distinguished, not by Nations, but by Families: One Family in the same Nation worshipped the True GOD, while another adored Idols; For which Cause, the Jews call this Period of the Church, by the Name of Tohu; The Faithful now living in a very confused & chaotic Manner, intermixed with Idolaters; and every one acting as he thought fitt himself in Matters of Religion. Be sure, The Canaanites were not at this time universally corrupted. The Courtesy they expressed unto Abraham a professed Enemy to Idolatry, carries along with it, a great Character of Honesty. Abimelek the King of Gerar, is one whom GOD appears unto; otherwise than to Pharaoh the King of Egypt, which was then doubtless deeper plunged into Idolatry. The Words of Abimelek unto GOD, shew his Knowledge of Him. He also beleev'd the Prophets of the True GOD. And his Covenant with Abraham declares him no Worshipper of Idols. This Abimelek, or a Successor, treats Isaac, as a Man of Conscience, & as one that feared GOD. The Shechemites, act like People, not only of Good Morals, but having the Fear of GOD in them. The Words of Abraham, in his Intercession for Sodom, imply a Possibility of Meeting with Fifty Righteous Men in that vitious Town. Had the Shechemites been Idolaters, the Sons of Jacob, would have proposed that, as well as their being uncircumcised, for an Objection against coming into an Union with them. Rebeckah goes to enquire of the Lord. It seems by this, there was a true Prophet of GOD in the neighbourhood.²⁴⁶

Q. But lett us resume, that most vexed Quæstion; Who and what was Melchizedek? v. 24.

A. We might be satisfied, with some or other of the Accounts, which the Sons of Erudition have given of that wonderful Person.²⁴⁷

And among these, be sure we should much rather take up with Dr. Willets Notion, of his being Shem; which he attempts to demonstrate, as a Man that can render a Reason, yea, No less than Seven very probable Reasons; – much rather, than with Mr. Jurieu's extravagant Fancy, of his being Ham: which one would think were a Fancy no Man could have started, without proposing to shew and strain his Witt, at advancing a Paradox.²⁴⁸

But we have seen a yett more likely Candidate for an ungenealogized Melchizedek, than either of these.

And yett, no System of Thoughts on this Head, ha's hitherto come up to the Idea, which our Apostle Paul gives us of Melchizedek; especially, when he makes the Tithes paid by Abraham to Melchizedek, an Homage which all the Priests of the Old Law, and all the Levitical Ministry, paid unto our SAVIOUR; And he proceeds to argue & extol the Superiority of Melchizedek above the Levitical Priests, inasmuch as they who took Tithes were but Mortal Men, and so did not on the Dignity of their Nature, which was but corruptible & perishable pretend unto them; whereas Melchizedek received them as due from the Eminence of his Perfection, and the Duration of his Existence; and as being one who Liveth forever.²⁴⁹

It is very unlikely, that the Apostle should employ the Silence of the Sacred History, to describe the Real Qualities of a Person: One might by that Rule go on, and exceedingly Lessen rather than Greaten the Character of our SAVIOUR. Particularly, From the Silence of the Scripture, about the Length of the Time wherein Melchizedek exercised His Priesthood, why may we not as well assign but a short Continuance to the Priesthood of our Blessed JESUS?²⁵⁰

There is no Parallel between the Intention & Emphasis of the Expressions used by our Apostle, on Melchizedeks being Without Father & Without Mother, and some Expressions used in profane Authors, like to these, of Persons ²⁴⁷ Jacques Saurin (Diss. XIII, 1:114–29) is Mather's source for the subsequent paragraphs and annotations on Gen. 14:24.

²⁴⁸ Saurin (Diss. XIII, 1:114–16). In support of Shem's candidacy for Melchizedek, Saurin cites seven arguments from Hexapla in Genesin (1608) 160–68 (on Gen. 14:18 ff), by the conservative English divine Dr. Andrew Willet (1562–1621), chaplain to Prince Henry. Mather sides with Saurin's rejection of Ham's candidacy (1:115–17), which the famous Pierre Jurieu sponsors in his Critical History (1:96–105).

²⁵⁰ Saurin (Diss. XIII, 1:119–20).

whose Parents, were unknown. Or, if there were any thing equivocal, tis entirely removed by the Apostle himself; who brings the Testimony of David, that Melchizedek was Alive still, and a Priest, at the Time when he wrote the Psalms. [Compare, Psal. CX.4. with Heb. VII.8.]²⁵¹

Our Apostle also intimates, That the Word Melchizedek was not so much designed for to shew the Name of him that mett Abraham, as his Qualities: And hence, when one translates the Text of Moses, one ought either to keep these Two Hebrew Words, Melchizedek, and, Melchisalem; or expound both of them, and say, The King of Righteousness, the King of Peace, came to meet Abraham.²⁵²

It is also, not easy to conceive, that a Canaanite, a Man belonging unto a cursed People, should be advanced by Heaven to do such Acts of Superiority, as Melchizedek did over Abraham. Nay, as Monsr. Saurin [whose Dissertation I do now very much subsist upon,] observes; There was not in the whole World at the Time of Abraham, any Mortal superiour to that Patriarch. Tho' Noah himself should have come to meet Abraham, he might have received some Homage of him, on the account of Age; but no Dignity could have raised him above That of being, The Father of the Faithful. And the Apostle particularly gives us to understand, that the Tenth paid unto Melchizedek, was an Honour paid not unto the Age, but unto the Dignity & the eminent Perfections of the Person that received it.²⁵³

Besides; Our Apostle establishes it, That all the Descendents of Abraham did pay Tithes in the Person of that Patriarch, to a Greater Person. And what if this Objection should now be made against our Blessed JESUS, and His Priesthood? The Blessed JESUS, as well as Levi, is descended of Abraham, and paid the Tithes in him to Melchizedek; and therefore Melchizedek is greater than He.²⁵⁴

Now, to relieve all Difficulties, there is a System, which has been espoused by many, both Ancient and Modern Authors, and which maintains, That Melchizedek was no other than our SAVIOUR Himself, taking on Him, an Humane Appearance, and performing the Acts, and challenging the Rights, of His glorious Priesthood on this great Occasion.

The Names of, King of Righteousness, and, King of Peace, do belong more Justly to None than to Him: And He was from all Eternity Destined and Appointed for the most Illustrious Office of, High-Priest in the Temple of GOD.²⁵⁵

How agreeably were the Regards of the Tithes paid by our Patriarch, to the SON of GOD, who is the Heir of all Things? And who could so properly or so powerfully Bless the Patriarch, as He who is the Spring of all Blessings?

He may be truly called Fatherless and Motherless, and without Descent, who did not come into the World like the rest of Mankind; which even the Jewish Doctors do confess, that the Messiah must not.

[328v] He was made like unto the Son of GOD; for that he had the same | Features, both in the Literal and Mystical Sense, as were seen in the Son of Mary, when He came into the World.

When we read, He Brought Bread & Wine to Abraham, we may read it; He produced it. Probably He did it after such a Miraculous Manner, as He did such Things in the Days of His Incarnation and Humiliation many Ages afterward among us.

He was Greater than Abraham, inasmuch as tho' He was to proceed from him according to the Flesh, yett (as He told the Jews) He did actually exist before that Patriarch. And thus David who was among the Fore-fathers of the Messiah, called Him yett, His Lord.²⁵⁶

It is true; Moses does not seem to speak of Melchizedek, as being any other than a Man. But that Sacred Writer has diverse other, as Concise Relations: And our Apostle has in this, as in some other Instances, expounded what he has written, with expatiating on it. Here is also no mention of any surprize in Abraham on his Meeting with such an extraordinary Person. But there are many Instances wherein the Penmen of the Scripture suppress many Circumstances of the Events related by them. It may be well enough supposed, that Abraham was very much Affected, when he was Honoured with such an Apparition; yea, This may be the Meaning of what our SAVIOUR says, Abraham rejoiced to see my Day, and he saw it, & was glad.²⁵⁷

And what is there more singular in this Occurrence, than in the Wrestling of Jacob?

If it be enquired, unto what Use our SAVIOUR should putt the Tenth of the Spoils offered by Abraham? Very probable Supposals may be made about it; particularly, He might bestow it upon the Army.

The main Thing to be objected is; we read, He was made like to the Son of GOD. And according to the Maxim of Epiphanius; No Body can be said properly to be made like himself.²⁵⁸

But the Explanation we have already given, may fully satisfy this Objection. A Man may be compared unto himself in more Senses than one. And why may it not be said, A Glorious CHRIST appeared unto Abraham, with the same Aspects of Countenance, and the same Tokens of Deity, as were observed in Him after His Incarnation?

²⁵⁶ The preceding paragraphs are all from Saurin (Diss. XIII, 1:126).

²⁵⁷ Saurin (Diss. XIII, §§ 1, 2, 1:126–27). John 8:56. See Appendix A.

²⁵⁸ Saurin (Diss. XIII, §§ 4, 5, 1:127–28). Heb. 7:3. Mather (via Saurin 1:127) probably has in mind St. Epiphanius's commentary on Heb. 7:3 (Panarion 67.3.2–6, 67.7.3ff, in Epiphanius 3:135, lines 10 to 3:136, line 6; and 3:139, lines 5–14).

If this be now brought as a Difficulty, That according to this, our SAVIOUR descending from Abraham did pay Tithes unto Himself; They who bring it, involve themselves in a greater Difficulty; That Melchizedek a simple Man received the Tithes from Him. Whereas, there is (as Monsr. Saurin remarks) nothing in this Proposition, but what may be easily maintained; *JESUS CHRIST, as GOD, performed an act of Superiority over that Humane Nature, which He was one day to unite unto His Divinity.*²⁵⁹

It is finally demanded; what Sense can be putt upon these Words of the Prophecy, Thou art a Priest forever, according to the Order of Melchizedek? It may be answered; The Hebrew Words of the Text may be translated; Thou art a Priest forever, as tis agreeable to a King of Righteousness. But in the Version which our Apostle retains of it, there is found yett another good Meaning of the Expression; *Thou hast exactly that very Priesthood, whereof thou didst perform some Functions, when thou didst appear to Abraham, as a King of Righteousness.*²⁶⁰

I will add, What Monsr. Saurin, and the rest of the Gentlemen, have not thought upon. The Conquest of the Four Kings by Abraham, was a Type of what shall be done for his Children, even for all the Faithful, after the Extinction of the Four Monarchies, which are so considerable in the Histories & Prophecies of the Bible. And, as our SAVIOUR will Visibly Exhibit Himself unto the World, at & for the Destruction that is to come on the last of those Four Monarchies, it seems a Notable Prælibation & Præludium of it that our SAVIOUR Himself should Visibly Appear unto our Father, upon this Typical Victory.²⁶¹

After all that I have Read, and Wrote, about Melchizedek, I confess I most incline to This Opinion.

And yett I do it with so much Hæsitacion; that I must make Monsr. Saurins Modest Conclusion:

“After all, if there be any Occasion upon which we should desire of our Readers, the Privilege to suspend our Judgment, it is certainly This. Without affecting Humility or Modesty, we embrace that Party of the Hebrews, to whom St. Paul said, speaking of Melchizedek, That when for the time ye ought to be Teachers, you have need that we teach you again, which be the First Principles of the Oracles of GOD. We freely own, that after having used our utmost Endeavours to understand the Text of Moses, and St. Pauls Comment upon it, we have only discovered, how much we still want greater Lights, than those which Interpreters have given us, for Understanding both the one & the other.”²⁶²

I will take Leave to add | these Words also of that learned Refugee.

²⁶² Saurin (Diss. XIII, 1:129).

“We are convinced, That we cannot entirely solve this Quæstion, without clearing up another, which is more general, and more abounding in Difficulties: Namely, What Method the Apostles used, in quoting to the Jews the Prophecies of the Old Testament? And whatever Pains the Learned have taken to unravel so intricate a Subject, it still leaves a vast Subject for their Inquiries.”²⁶³

[330v] [blank]

Q. What may bee the more special Design, of those Two Expressions, used by God unto Abraham; Fear not, I am thy Shield, and thy Exceeding Great Reward? v. 1.

A. Our Father Abraham had newly done two Actions, which were very Acceptable unto God. First, Hee had Rescued his Kinsman, unjustly detained a Prisoner, by the Four Kings, which had Invaded the Countrey, where hee lived. Hee might now bee Afraid, that the Kings whom hee had conquered, would rally their Forces, and return upon him, & bee too Hard for him: No, saies the Lord, Fear not, I am thy Shield. Secondly, Hee had Refused a Gratification for the Service which had been done by him; they whom hee had serv'd & sav'd, offer'd him a Great Reward; but hee refused the Reward, which they offered, lest the Name of God should suffer, as if hee had aimed at his own Profit, rather than the Just Releef of his Kinsman, in his Undertaking: Vitandum erat Avaritiæ scandalum, nè bellan eo sibi prospexisse, non Agnato, videretur. Well, in relation unto This, the Lord saies, I am thy Exceeding Great Reward.¹

Q. A Remark, on the Stars? v. 5.

A. The Tribes are Stars, in Josephs Dream. Gen. XXXVII.²

Q. What Reason (hitherto not ordinarily mentioned) is there to bee given, why the Lord bids Abraham, Tell the Stars, & elsewhere several Times, tells him; Hee would multiply his Posterity, As the Stars? v. 5.

A. The Jewish Antiquary, assures us, that Abraham, was not only well-skilled in Astronomy, but also a public Professor of that Science. Yea, The Kings of the East and West, came to learn this Art of him, if R. Solomon, may bee Beleaved. And the Talmuds assert him, to have had an extraordinary Skill in the Stars. Now, why might not this bee one Occasion, of the Lords choosing so often to mention the Stars unto Abraham? They were the Objects of his frequent Contemplation. However, I mention this, only as a pleasant Conjecture, which will do neither you, nor Abraham, any Damage.

² Mather links God's promise about Abraham's countless posterity with Joseph's dream (Gen. 38:9) in which the sun, moon, and eleven stars (his parents and eleven brothers) bowed down before Joseph. See also Henry Ainsworth's Annotations on the Pentateuch (1627) 59.

One of the Ancients thus paraphrases the Speech to Abraham. “Away with thy Astrology; according to the Principles whereof thou seest in the Stars, thou shalt {not reverence;} Beleeve in Him who made the Stars.”³

Q. The Promise of God unto Abraham, was this; Look toward Heaven; Tell the Stars, if thou canst Number them; SO shall thy Seed be. Is nothing else here promised but the Innumerable Multitude of that Posterity? v. 5.

A. Yes; An Ingenious Jew informs mee, That the Interminable Happiness of this Posterity is here also promised. The Hebrew Word /כֹּה/ is a Note of, Place. As if the Lord had not only said, Number the Stars, if thou canst; SO shall thy Seed be; but also, Look toward Heaven; THERE shall thy Seed be. I since find, Petrus Alfonsi, in his Collatio adversus Judeos, making this Observation. —⁴

3 Heidegger, Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (2:63–64, Exerc. III, § 22). Mather’s “Jewish Antiquary” is Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.8.2). Josephus asserts Abraham’s knowledge of “arithmetic” and “the science of astronomy,” which the patriarch had brought with him from Chaldea and subsequently taught to the Egyptians, who “were unacquainted with those parts of learning.” Joannes Chrysostom (Homilies on Genesis 31.19), too, has Abraham become the teacher “to everyone in Palestine and shortly after to those in Egypt” (250). Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 9.16.418a–b; 9.17.418d, 419c; 9.18.420b–c) furnishes much the same evidence from Josephus Flavius, Alexander Polyhistor, and Artabanus on Abraham’s mastery of the science of stargazing. Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 5.1), in ANF (2:446) adds that Abraham abandons his knowledge of astrology for his faith in God. Not R. Solomon Jarchi (Rashi), but R. Eliezer (the Modiite) asserts that “Abraham possessed a power of reading the stars for which he was much sought after by the potentates of the East and West” (Baba Bathra 16b). The proscription against pagan astrology, as paraphrased by an unidentified commentator, is also given in Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XLIV:2).

4 Gen. 13:16, 28:14; Hos. 1:10. Mather may have in mind R. Manasseh ben Israel (Conciliator, Quest. 41, p. 53), who comments that the hyperbolic comparison of Abraham’s numerous offspring to the stars or to the dust (Gen. 13:16) refers “to their merits or demerits, because being good, the Lord promises that they shall be like the stars – high in excellence, and superior to the nations of the world; and on being wicked, they should be like the dust of the earth – trod upon, and lorded over.” R. Yaakov Baal HaTurim would have disagreed with Mather’s assertion that כֹּה [koh] (Gen. 15:5) refers to a location. The rabbi argues that the phrase “so shall your offspring be” foretells that Abraham would have offspring “in twenty-five years – corresponding to the Gematria of כֹּה” (Baal HaTurim 1:117). However, Mather may have in mind Gen. 22:5 where the same word כֹּה [Strong’s # 3541] is rendered “yonder” – a reference to location – one that Rashi (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:255) and Vayeira (23), in Midrash Tanchuma (1:309–10) seem to support. Mather’s citation from Collatio adversus Judeos is from Petrus Alphonsi ex Judaeo Christiani Dialogi (Titulus XI) [PL 157. 653], a collection of twelve dialogues between a Christian and a Jew (first published in Cologne, 1536), by Petrus Alphonsus (1062–1110), a Jewish converso and physician to King Alfonso I of Aragon.

Q. It is observable, That wee have no mention of Abrahams Faith and Justification, until Now, tho' hee were effectually called, near Twenty Years before? v. 6.

A. True; But God now promises him a Son, & a Christ with that Son. Abraham saw the Day of Christ, in the Promise of Isaac. Here t'was most proper to Record the Faith of Abraham, and his Justification by that Faith.

Q. The Lord reminds Abraham, That Hee brought him out of Ur of the Chaldees. [Compare Gen. 11.28.] But elsewhere, [Gen. 24.10.] wee shall see that Mesopotamia, was Abrahams Native Countrey; and [Josh. 24.2, 3.] that hee dwelt on the other Side of the Flood, namely Euphrates, which parted Canaan from Mesopotamia, in Syria. This is the River, which Abraham did pass over [Gen. 31.21.] when hee came into Canaan, out of his own Countrey; & from which passing over, many of the Learned, think that hee had his Name. Now, How are these two consistent, that Abraham was a Chaldean, and a Mesopotamian, or, Syrian; when Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, or Syria, are {three} Distinct Countreys? v. 7.⁵

A. The Answer, wherewith, both Jewish & Christian Expositors here puzzled, acquiesce, is; That Mesopotamia [called here, and in Judg. 3.8. Aram Naharaim, i.e. Syria Fluviorum, scituated between Two Rivers, Euphrates & Tigris, and called by the Latines Mediamne, which exactly answers the Greek Name] is taken in a Large {Sense, and comprehends Chaldea. So} the Arabian Geographers | refer Chaldea, to Mesopotamia; and they might well do so, for Pliny comprizes all Assyria under it. Thus, in our Dayes, all New England ha's been frequently called Boston; tho' Boston bee but the chief Town of one Colony in that Countrey.⁶ [332v]

But my Edwards ha's thought of a plainer solution, for this Difficultie. Mesopotamia, as distinct from Chaldea, was the Native Soyl of Abraham; and Ur was a City in that Region, (as Ammianus reckons it, & not in Chaldea) and in that City was the Birth-Place of Abraham. Now tis called, Ur of the Chaldeans, because it was possessed by the Chaldeans at this Time; as Hebron is called [Gen. 40.15.] The Land of the Hebrews: because the Hebrewes dwelt there. The Place was also defiled, with the Idolatri of the Chaldeans; & for that Reason likewise might it be called, Ur of the Chaldeans. Thus wee have a right Understanding of those Words, Act. 7.2. The God of Glory appeared unto our Father Abraham, when hee was in Mesopotamia, and said unto him, Gett thee out of thy Countrey: — then came hee out of the Land of the Chaldeans. Mesopotamia was then under the Power of the Chaldean Kings. And so, there was no need of Grotius's miserable Way, to Reconcile the Text, by telling us, that Lukes Memory failed him, in the Designation of the Place.⁷

Q. What Mystery do the Jewish Doctors find, in the Four Sorts of Creatures, directed for the Sacrifices of Abram? v. 9.

A. The Hebrew Doctors find therein, the Mystery of the Four Monarchies. But I leave it unto your further Contemplation at your Liesure, whether any Mystery of that importance, be here discoverable.

However, tis Remarkable, that these were the Creatures, and these alone, which were afterwards appointed by the Law of Moses, to be offered in Sacrifice to God. And this clears it unto us, that before the Law of Moses, the Creatures were considered as clean, or, unclean, with respect unto Sacrifice, tho' not with respect unto Diet.⁸

Q. How was that Prophecy accomplished; In the Fourth Generation they shall come hither again? v. 16.

A. It exactly came to pass, in the Fourth Generation after the Descent into Egypt. Levi went down into Egypt, in a middle Age. His Son Kohath makes a Second Generation: His Son Amram, a Third; His Children, Moses and Aaron, and Miriam a Fourth. Reuben, a Descendent into Egypt, had Pallu for the Second Generation, Eliab for the Third, and Dathan and Abiram, for the Fourth.⁹

Q. What might bee intended by the Burning Lamp, in Abrahams Vision, that passed between the sacrificed Creatures? v. 17.

⁸ Mather's commentary on Gen. 15:9 in the preceding two paragraphs is extracted from his vademecum, Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:67). Patrick's own source is Joseph Mede's Works (1664), bk. 2, ch. 7, p. 472. The midrashic commentary in Genesis Rabbah (XLIV:15) associates the four groups of animal sacrifice (Gen. 15:9) with four monarchies: the "heifer threefold" signifies "Babylon" and its "three kings, Nebuchadnezzar, Evil-Merodach, and Belshazzar"; the "she-goat threefold" refers to "Media" and its "three kings: Cyrus, Darius, Ahasuerus"; the "ram threefold" signifies "Greece," which according to R. Leazar and R. Johanan "conquered all parts [of the world] save the east." But the "turtle-dove" and "young pigeon" both stand for "Edom [Rome]." For much the same reading, see Pirke de R. Eliezer (ch. 28, pp. 198–201) and R. David Kimchi's commentary on Gen. 15:9, in Hachut Hameshulash (1:311–14). This political allegory is here associated with Daniel's vision of the four beasts and the ram and he-goat (Dan. chs. 7–8) and with Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream vision of the statue in the Plain of Dura (Dan. 2: 31–45).

⁹ Mather's probable sources (though most likely at second hand) are R. Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:174–75) and R. David Kimchi (Hachut Hameshulash 1:322).

A. It might intend, Moses, their Deliverer from those Birds of Prey, which in this Vision, are the Just Hieroglyphic of the Egyptian Oppresser. –

Moses, I say, a Fore-runner of our Lord Jesus Christ. A Fore-runner of our Lord, ha's this very Name; Joh. 5.35.

Quere; Whether the Burning Lamp, or, Lamp of Fire, were not the Shechinah? Maimonides expounds it so.¹⁰

Q. Then you think, the Fowles that came down upon the Sacrifices, may represent the Egyptians?

A. Why not? They fell upon the Israelites, as rapacious Birds do upon Carcases; endeavouring to hinder their Sacrificing unto God.¹¹

Q. What was, The River of Egypt? v. 18.

A. The Nile is commonly called so. But it is objected, The Israelites never enjoy'd all the Land of Egypt, on that Side of Nile. We may understand by it then, a little River, which came out of that Branch of Nile, called, Peleusiaceum Brachium; From hence a small River, not navigable, ran towards Judea, falling into the Egyptian or Phœnician Sea. This River was the Bound of Palæstine, mention'd by Strabo, and others. It is called, Amos. 6.14. The River of the Wilderness; because it run thro' the Wilderness which is between Egypt and Palæstine, {into the Sea.}¹²

Q. Falling into the History of Abraham, it invites mee to enquire, Whether, or Wherein you reckon that Patriarch, a Type of our Lord Jesus Christ? v. 21.

A. Indeed, In those Three Persons, Abraham, Isaac, & Jacob, the Glorious Mystery of the Three Persons in the Godhead, is a little adumbrated, as to the Order of their Subsistence, and the Manner of their Influence.¹³

In Abraham wee may see a little Shadow of God the Father. Both Isaac and Jacob came of Abraham; so, both the Son, & the Spirit, come of the Father, in God. In Isaac wee have a little Shadow of God the Son. Isaac was made a Sacri- fice; and so was Jesus too. In Jacob, wee have a little Shadow of God the Spirit. Jacob was mighty in Praying to, & Wrestling with, the Lord; and this is the Work of the Holy Ghost in all true Beleevers. Behold, a Speculation that might suggest Great Thoughts, unto one that would spend some Time upon it!¹⁴

¹² Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:69) supplies Mather with all he excerpts here. Patrick's own source is Vossius's De Theologia Gentili (1641), lib. 2, cap. 74, pp. 690–92. The Latin phrase from Vossius (692) signifies "Pelusian branch" of the Nile. Strabo (16.2.33) speaks of "the pits near Pelusium," which "are formed by side-flows from the Nile, the region being by nature hollow and marshy." The phrase in braces – lost through defacement of the holograph manuscript – is reconstructed from Simon Patrick's annotation (1:69).

But I pass to make some Observations upon the Renowned Abraham.

First; The Lord upon a great Occasion, said unto Abraham, in Gen. 17.5. Neither shall thy Name any more bee called Abram; but thy Name shall bee Abraham. Tis remarkable, that this was the first Change of Name recorded in the Book of God; and it was made by the Lord, at the Institution of Circumcision. From hence arose the Custome of giving Names to Persons, when they were Circumcised, among the Jewes, and when they are Baptised, among ourselves. Well, our Lord Jesus Christ ha's had a Change of Name too: That is, In a Change of State. [Phil. 2.8, 9.] The Divels of Hell, and the Serpents of Earth, Nicknamed Him, in the Time of His Humiliation. But since His Exaltation, Hee is now saluted, by Names of Honour, whereof Hee suffered Himself to bee for a while deprived. [See Prov. 30.4. answered in Isa. 9.6. and 1. Tim. 3.16.]¹⁵

Again. What signifies the Name of Abram? It signifies, An High Father. But that Name was Increased into Abraham; & this is, in English, The Father of a Multitude. [Gen. 17.5.] Not only all the Jewish, but now also, all the Christian World, speak of Abraham, in that Style, Our Father Abraham. Such a Father is our Lord Jesus Christ. [Consider, Isa. 22.21. and Jer. 31.9. and Isa. 53.10.] Yea, Hee is an High Father; High His Dignity, His Power, and His Love. And Hee is the Father of a Multitude. All the Redeemed of the Lord, enjoy Him, as doing the Offices, & Kindnesses of such a Relation for them; and they are, an Exceeding Great Multitude, whom no Man can Number.¹⁶

Add; Abraham, at the Command of God, [Gen. 12.1, 4.] left his Countrey, and went a Journey from Haran, to Sichem, which is about Four Hundred Miles. Yea, and our Lord Jesus Christ, has left His Countrey, yea, and His Palace too; a long Journey came Hee, even from the Bosome of God, to the Belly of Hell; and this was because the Almighty gave Order for His doing so. [Ponder Joh. 16.28.] Lett us mourn for the Ill Usage, Hee has found in our Countrey.

Further; Never did any Man yeeld a more absolute Obedience unto God, than Abraham did. God said unto him, Cutt thy own Flesh; Abraham did it, not consulting with Flesh & Blood. God said unto him, Turn one of thy Sons out of Doors; Abraham do's it, tho' it were Grievous to him. God said unto him, Kill another of thy Sons out of the World; Abraham do's it, tho' all the Hope & Flowre of his Family, were thereby thrown away. Yett Wee know a greater Instance of Obedience unto God, than Abraham; and that is our Lord Jesus Christ. [Weigh well, Joh. 6.38. and Phil. 2.8.]

Furthermore; The Land of Canaan, a Land Flowing with Milk & Honey, was promised unto Abraham for his Posterity. [Gen. 12.7. and 17.8.] Thus, there is the Promise of a Canaan, Yea, of a Kingdome, for all the Chosen of God. But unto whom? It is for us, made unto our Lord Jesus Christ. [Tit. 1.2.] Even, in the Eternal Covenant of Redemption.

Moreover, Wee find, in Gen. 18.17. The Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham, the thing which I do? Much more, ha's our God said so, concerning our Lord Jesus Christ; The Purposes of God, are every one of them, understood by our Lord. [Joh. 1.18.]

Besides; T'was the Character and Encomium of Abraham; Hee will command his Houshold after him, and they shall keep the Way of the Lord. Why, our Lord Jesus Christ ha's an Houshold well-Instructed by Him. When Hee had a Private Family, Hee taught it. [Math. 5.1, 2.] And now Hee ha's a Public Family, His Pains and Means are not wanting, that they mayn't bee destroy'd for Lack of Knowledge. [Eph. 4.11.]

To proceed; When the Sodomites were to undergo the Vengeance of Eternal Fire, wee find, Abraham Interceding that the Righteous might not bee consumed in the Lightnings of the Lord; and thro' the Efficacy of this Interceding, Lot escaped the Flames. Even so, There is a glorious and a powerful Intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ, engaged for our Good. [Heb. 7.25.] And by the Vertue of this Intercession tis, that wee escape the Horrible Tempest, which God Rains upon the Wicked. —

To pass on; When there was a Profane Mocker in the House of Abraham, there was this Order quickly taken about him, Cast him out! Such is the Discipline in the House of our Lord Jesus Christ; No Profane People are to bee allowed there. [Psal. 1.5. and Psal. 101.7.]

Finally; The Differences and the Properties of the Two Covenants, are from Abraham exhibited unto us. [Gal. 4.24.]

In Hagar, wee see the Covenant of Works. Hagar was a Bond-woman; Thus, wee are entangled in Bondage, if wee are united unto the First Covenant. Hagar had a Child, by the Strength of Nature. Thus, wee are under the Old Covenant, if wee go to Repent, and Beleeve, & bring forth Fruits unto the Lord, by any Strength of our own. | Hagar had a Son, that was a Persecutor. Men, that know no other than the Covenant of Works, are of a Persecuting Spirit. Hagar, & her Seed must bee cast out; and the Law, as a Covenant must bee cast off. An Abraham indeed may Turn aside, unto Hagar, for once, or so; and thus a Beleever may have some Actings, as under the Covenant of Works. But hee dwells with Sarah.

The Covenant of Grace, wee see in her. This Covenant ha's the Freedom of Sarah in it: and it ha's in it, the Divine Assistance & Influence, that Sarah had.¹⁷

Q. Doth Pagan Antiquitie, hand us down any Memoirs, concerning the Patriarch Abraham? v. 21.

A. Yes; More than a few.¹⁸

Abraham is mentioned by Berosus, Hecataeus, Nicolaus Damascenus, Eupolemus, Alexander Polyhistor.

The Wise Men of Greece, consulting their Oracles, Whence the Knowledge of Arts came? received this Answer. From the Chaldean;

Μονος ο δ'αρα χαλδαιος σοφος:

Where, by the Chaldean, learned Men think Abraham intended.¹⁹

The Heathen did their Magical Feats, in the Name of this great Man. Origen tells us, The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, were Words usually pronounced in their Charms, & Spells. Hee also saies, That Ο Θεος Αβρααμ, so frequently quoted in the Old Testament, gave Occasion unto them, to think, that Abraham was a God.²⁰

When God made a Covenant with Abraham, [Gen. 15.9.] Hee commanded him, to divide an Heifer, a Goat, & a Ram, into Pieces, & pass between them. This was a Ceremony afterwards used, in a Covenant between Man & Man; declaring a Wish to bee cutt asunder as the Beasts were, if they broke that Agreement. [See 1. Sam. 11.7. Jer. 34.18, 19.] Possibly, to this may belong what wee Read, [Gen. 21.27.] Abraham took Sheep & Oxen, & gave them to Abimelek, & both of them made a Covenant: The Sheep and Oxen, were to bee thus Dissected, and so Sacrificed, in the Making of that Covenant.²¹

This now, gave Rise to a like Practice among the Pagans, when any solemn Covenants were made among them. Dictys Cretensis, reports this Usage to have been between the Græcians & the Trojans, in the Time of the War between them.

¹⁸ Mather's subsequent annotations on Gen. 15:21 are extracted from John Edwards's Discourse (1:129, 130, 131, 132, 133).

¹⁹ Mather's immediate source is Edwards (Discourse 1:129). Edwards relies on Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 1.7.2) and Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 9.16–18) – the latter work contains the excerpts from the ancient historians cited here. Mather's second-hand Greek citation from Edwards (Discourse 1:129) can be rendered, "Only from the wisdom of the Chaldean."

Livy and Curtius relate, that the People of Macedon, and Baotia, did in like Manner cutt a Dog to Pieces. Lucian informs us of the like among the Scythians; and Suidas, among the Molossians.²²

Abraham feasted the Angels. [Gen. 18.8.] From hence the Poets tell of the Gods being feasted by Mortals; and of a Philemon and Baucis particularly (that is, Abraham and Sarah) {Treating their Heavenly Guests} as entertaining of Jupiter and Mercury.²³

Indeed, The visible Appearances of God & Angels, unto other Saints, as well as Abraham, occasioned in the Pagans a Notion, that their Gods did sometimes descend in Humane Shape among them. [The Outcry among the People of Lystra, Act. 14.12. you know.] And with a poetic Libertie, they carried this Notion on to prodigious Metamorphoses.²⁴

The Sacrificing of Men, especially of Sons, mentioned in Pagan Stories, might have its Original from Abraham.

Porphyrius records, as Eusebius tells us, that Saturnus, an Ancient King in Phœnicia, to appease the Gods, did offer his only Son on an Altar. Behold, Abraham and Isaac, in this Tradition!²⁵

22 Edwards (Discourse 1:130). Dictys Cretensis (Journal of the Trojan War 67), the purported eyewitness of the famous Trojan war (13th c. BCE), relates how Agamemnon, eager to assuage the wrath of Achilles, cut the sacrificial animal in half and smeared the victim's blood on his sword as Agamemnon marched through the middle of the carcass. Edwards probably drew on Dictys Cretensis et Dares Phrygius's De Bello Trojano (1702), lib. 2, cap. 5 – one of several Latin editions of this fabulous history. Livy (40.6.1–2) relates how during the ceremonial lustrations of the Macedonian army, the carcass of a female dog was dismembered in the middle, and one half each was placed on opposite sides of the road on which the army, headed by King Philip and his court, passed through. Quintus Curtius Rufus (10.9.12–15) describes much the same sacrificial evisceration. Lucian (Toxaris vel amicitia 46; Works 5:177) details how a Scythian can revenge himself against a superior enemy by ritually sacrificing an ox, not a dog. Finally, Edwards perhaps refers to Sudas (Lexicon alphabetic letter kappa, entry 2078), a description of the Molossians, a people of Epirus on the Greek peninsula.

23 Edwards (Discourse 1:131). The passage in braces – lost through defacement – is restored from Edwards (1:131). Ovid (Metamorphoses 8.624–724) relates the story of Philemon and Baucis, an aged couple of Phrygia, who feasted Jupiter and Mercury as the gods were traveling through Lydia in disguise. In gratitude, the gods turned the couple's hovel into a magnificent temple, in which the two mortals became the officiating priests. At their death, Philemon and Baucis were transformed into trees that stood at the entrance of their temple.

24 Edwards (Discourse 1:131). When St. Paul healed the cripple of Lystra (Asia Minor) the people cried out, "The gods have come down to us in the likeness of men" (Acts 14:11). Mather copies Edwards's erroneous reference to Acts 14:12. Among the Gods' "prodigious Metamorphoses" are those of Apollo turning himself into a hawk, lion, and a shepherd; Neptune into a flying horse, steer, ram, and dolphin; Jupiter into a shower of gold, a bull, swan, an eagle, satyr, and a flame; finally, Saturn turned himself into a prancing steed for his beloved (Edwards 1:131–32).

25 Edwards (Discourse 1:132). Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 1.10.40d) cites Porphyry's story of King Kronos of Phoenicia (deified as Saturn), who sacrificed his son Ieoud (Iedud) to avert a war that threatened to destroy his country. Mather (via Edwards) links this ancient story with that of Abraham's intended sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. 22:6).

Plutarch informs us, that Pelopidas was bidden in a Vision to sacrifice a Virgin; but it so happened that a Mare-colt, came running thro' the Camp, while they were Disputing, whether the Vision should bee obeyed; and by the Advice of the Augur, the Mare-colt was then taken in stead of the Virgin. I beleeve, you now presently think, of what this was an Imitation.²⁶

²⁶ Edwards (Discourse 1:133). Plutarch (Pelopidas 21–22), Plutarch's Lives (5:390–95). The substitution of a mare colt for a virgin with chestnut hair, in the vision of Pelopidas, celebrated general of Thebes (fl. 382–364 BCE), parallels Abraham's substitution of a ram for Isaac (Gen. 22:13).

Q. Flying Hagar is found in a Wilderness. Have you any Remark to make upon it? v. 7.

A. There is this Remark to be made.

The most notable Periods, Affayrs, & Mysteries of the Church, have still had their Commencement in a Wilderness.

The First Time, that wee read of Angels affording their familiar & visible Conversation, to the Children of Men, it was in a Wilderness, and unto a Woman there: T'was Hagar.²⁷

The First Time, that God spake to Moses, it was in a Wilderness; There was the Burning Bush.²⁸

The Law was given in a Wilderness; and in that Wilderness was the Tabernacle Built; and in that Wilderness were some of the most Illustrious Types of the Messiah.²⁹

The Three Miraculous Fasts, of Moses, of Elias, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, were all of them in a Wilderness.³⁰

In a Wilderness began the Preaching of the Gospel.³¹

Baptism, the first Sacrament of the New Testament, began in a Wilderness, and in a Wilderness our Lord Received it.³²

The First and the Last Books of the Bible, Genesis, and the Apocalypse, were penned in a Wilderness.³³

And thither, the Persecuted Church Retires.³⁴

An Intimation, that the Church is different from other Societies; & that the Spirit of the World is not agreeable thereunto.³⁵

Q. You take notice of the Emphasis, in the Speech of the Angel to Hagar; Hagar, Sarai's Maid: He takes notice of her being Sarai's Maid, rather than Abrams Wife, to putt her Mind of her Duty? v. 8.

²⁹ Exod. 24:12, 25:9.

³² Matt. 3:4–7.

³³ Moses is to have written Genesis while sojourning in the Sinai desert; John of Patmos the book of Revelation in a remote island cave.

A. Tis indeed very Notable!³⁶

Q. Ishmael is the First, that had his Name given, before he was born? v. 11.

A. And the Jewes observe the Honour done him herein.

They say, There are but Six who were thus distinguished; the two first whereof, were the Sons of Abram, namely Ishmael and Isaac; and the last was, The Messias.³⁷

517{?}.

Q. What fulfilment had that Prophecy, concerning Ishmael, Hee shall dwell in the Presence of all His Brethren? v. 12.

A. If the Import of that Prophecy were, q.d. “Hee shall not hide his head, as afraid of the Forces of his Neighbours, but hee shall bee able to defend & avouch his Possessions against all Pretenders”; This was many Wayes fulfilled.

But I rather look for the Accomplishment of this Prædiction, in the Bounds of the Lands which the Providence of God allotted unto the Posterity of Ishmael; the Borders of their Countrey abutted upon all the Kindred of Ishmael; Edomites & Israelites; Moabites & Ammonites; Midianites & Egyptians.³⁸

Q. Ishmael being a Wild Man, and Dwelling in the Presence of his Brethren, is it a Remarkable Prophecy? v. 12.

A. The Nation descended from him, dwelt near to all his Brethren, whether descended from Isaac, or from Abrams other Sons by Keturah; who, tho’ annoy’d by him, as Dr. Patrick observes, yett could never dispossess him.³⁹

So exact is the description here given of Ishmaels Posterity throughout all Generations, that as Dr. Jackson observes, none but a most Prophetic Spirit could have given it. As for Wildness, tis incorporated so into their Nature, that no Change of Times has Tamed them.⁴⁰

³⁶ See Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:70) and Heidegger (2:137, Exerc. VI, § 24).

³⁹ Mather’s source is Simon Patrick’s annotations on Gen. 16:12 (Commentary 1:70).

⁴⁰ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:70) cites Thomas Jackson, D. D. (1579–1640), president of Corpus Christ College (Oxford), who identifies the descendants of Ishmael with the Saracens. Their condition could have been foretold by none but the Holy Spirit (Jackson, Collection of the Works [1653], vol. 1, bk. 1, ch. 25, § 7, p. 105).

It is observed by Mr. Pyles, That here is a most exact Prophetic Account of the Arabians, as they continue to this very Day.⁴¹

Monsr. Saurin remarks upon it. What is foretold of Ishmael, That he should be like a Savage Creature, and his hand would be against every Man, was the Character not only of Ishmael himself, but also of, all his Posterity. The Saracens and Arabians, who boast of being descended from him, seem to form themselves exactly upon this Model. There can be nothing liker the Picture, which the Angel gives us of Ishmael, than that which Ammianus Marcellinus has given us, of his Posterity. [L. XIV. c. 4.]⁴²

Q. How may those Words of Hagar be understood; Have I also here looked after Him that seeth me? v. 13.

A. I will at present only give you a Collection of Hebrew Glosses (gathered by Munster,) among which you may make your Choice.⁴³

R. Salomon thus carries it; I wonder that here in the Desert, I see the Angel of the Lord, whom I was used to see in the House of my Master Abraham. Accordingly, Post Videntem me, is to be understood, Postquam ego vidi.⁴⁴

David Kimchi carries it thus; Nunquid hic vidi, postquam fui videns. q.d. “When he spoke with me, I did not know him to be an Angel of God; but as he suddenly vanished out of my Sight, I then knew, that he was an Angel. I saw him, what he was, and another than I before thought he was, after he was vanished.”⁴⁵

Aben Ezra carries it so: “Have not I seen an Angel of the Lord, after that the Lord hath seen my Affliction?”⁴⁶

⁴⁴ Mather translates into English Münster’s Latin rendition of R. Salomon Jarchi (Rashi); see also Mikraoth Gedoloth (Genesis 1:191–92).

⁴⁵ Mather’s translation of David Kimchi’s commentary on Gen. 16:13 (Hachut Hameshulash 1:334) is based on Münster’s Latin version.

⁴⁶ See also Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:181).

Q. The Name of El-Shaddai; What may be the true Import of it? v. 1.

A. I will by no means disturb, the common Interpretation.

I will only observe to you, that the learned Solomon Deyling in his Observationes Sacrae, lately published, at Leipsich, ha's a Dissertation on the Name of, El-Shaddai; and he is for this Translation, Deus Jaculator, or, God the Thunderer.⁴⁷

Q. A Remark upon Abrams having a New Name given him, with the Command of Circumcision? v. 5.

A. Hence arose the Practice of giving Names to Children at their Circumcision. Luk. I.59. and, II.21. which we Christians do now at Baptism.⁴⁸

Q. What remarkable Fulfilment had that Prædiction, Kings shall come out of thee? v. 6.

A. Tis well observed by Grotius, Ab omni avo nullus est, qui cum Abrahamo comparari possit, multiplici Regnum progenie. Never was there such a Father of Kings. From Abraham descended, all the Kings of the Twelve Tribes of Israel; the Kings of the Two Tribes, & the Kings of the Ten. From Abraham descended the many Kings of Idumaea, and those of the Herodian Line. From Abraham descended the Kings in Africa, among the Posterity of Keturah. From Abraham descended the Saracen Kings, in Arabia, in Babylon, in Egypt, in other Parts of Africa, & in Spain itself. But above all, from Abraham descended the Messias, who is the King of Kings.⁴⁹

Q. What is there observable, in the Change of Abrahams Name? v. 5.

⁴⁸ In his "Note Book of Authors" on Gen. 17:2, Mather lists as one of his sources "Strong, of the Covenant. p. 113"; i.e., Discourse of the Two Covenants (1678), bk. 2, ch. 1, p. 113, by William Strong (d. 1654), a notable Independent minister during Cromwell's Interregnum. See also Ainsworth's commentary on Gen. 17:5, in Annotations (1627) 1:66.

A. Hee was the First Man in the World, whose Name was either given or changed by God. And it is noted, There never was any Man received a Name immediately from God, but hee was an eminent Person, & perhaps a Type of some Notable Matter.⁵⁰

Q. What {is} the True Etymology of the Name Abraham?

A. We would have it signify, The Father of a Multitude. But there seems no way of making out that Meaning, so plain as that of Hottinger's, who makes it a Composition, of, Ab, a Father, and the old Word, Raham, which in Arabick still signifies, A Great Number.⁵¹

Q. The Ordinances of the Old Testament, were Typical. Now Circumcision here occurs, among the First of those Ordinances? v. 12.⁵²

A. The Sovereignty of God appeared in Appointing Circumcision. The Part chosen for the Subject of it, might bee chosen, because those Members of the Body, are much abused unto Sin; and usually the greatest Wrath of God (as one saies) to the Sons of Men, is expressed, by giving them up to Abuse those Parts of the Body. God going to sanctify a Nation to Himself, & separate for Himself a Seed, here fixes the Seal of His doing so. And it served as a Partition-Wall between them, and the rest of the World.⁵³

The Kernel of this Institution, lay in the Covenant of Grace. In the Covenant with Abraham, sealed by Circumcision, God promised to bee a God unto Him; and to give him a Seed, as well {as} the Seed of the Woman, or the Messiah, as a Beleeving Seed, of his own Posterity, and an Engrafted Seed, of the poor Gentiles: And, finally, to provide an Inheritance, both for him & them; which Inheritance was not Canaan, so much as Heaven.⁵⁴

| Circumcision was the Initiating Seal of this Covenant. But at the same [338v] Time, it held forth the Sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Principal Seed in the Covenant. It was a Bloody Sacrament; and the First Blood that our Lord shed, was in Circumcision; and the Shedding of that Blood was Part of the Expiation, which Hee made for our Sins. There was also one special Blessing of 50 Ainsworth's Annotationes (1627) 1:66 (on Gen. 17:5).

51 Mather's immediate source is Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 17:5 (Commentary 1:71), but Patrick's own source is Hottinger's Smegma orientale (1658), lib. 1, cap. 8, pp. 287–89, § 19.

52 Mather extracts his typological interpretation from "The Gospel of Circumcision" (Acts 7:8), a series of sermons his uncle Samuel Mather preached in Ireland (Oct. 30, 1666) and subsequently published in Figures or Types (1683) 218–31. See also Edward Taylor's Upon the Types (1689) 2:765–88.

53 The italicized passages appear in Samuel Mather's Figures (220).

54 Mather here summarizes his uncle's Figures (224 § 2; 225 § 1; 226 § 4; 227 § 3).

the Covenant, namely, Mortification, or, the Cutting off our original Corruption and Naughtiness, herein pointed out. (Consider, Deut. 30.6. Act. 7.51. Col. 2.11.) By the way, tis to be observed, That the Member which is the Instrument of Generation, is peculiarly called by the Name of, The Flesh, in sundry Places of Scripture. (Lev. 15.2. Ezek. 16.26.) There is likewise the Circumcision of the New Testament, or, Baptism, which is a Washing away our Filthiness: And this is a sort of Antitype, or, at least, Surrogate, unto the old Circumcision. (Consider, Col. 2.12.)⁵⁵

Finally, Mens being Justified by Faith, in the Righteousness, of the promised Seed of the Woman, is the great Point shadowed out, by Circumcision. (Consider Rom. 4.)⁵⁶

Q. It is made a Quæstion by some Learned (I had almost said, Profane) Men, whether the Hebrewes did not first borrow Circumcision from the Egyptians? v. 12.⁵⁷

A. It is very sure, That not only the Egyptians, but several other Nations, did of old make Use of Circumcision. Whereupon, some say, it is improbable, that the Egyptians, who seem to have had it, the most early of all Nations, who did not spring from Abraham, should borrow this Custome, from the Hebrewes, whom they perfectly hated; & they take the Liberty thereupon to say, That the Lord enjoyned not now upon Abraham a New Thing, but only made an Old Rite, become a New Sign of His Covenant with him, which it was not with other Nations. But it is not the Assertion of a Celsus, or so, which will satisfy us, that Circumcision was in Use, before the Dayes of Abraham. It is much more likely, that the Egyptians borrowed Circumcision if not from the Israelites, yett from the Posterity of Ishmael, or other People descended from Abraham; who being highly beloved of God, as Dr. Patrick argues, it is not credible, that God would sett the Mark of Hams Race upon him, & his Posterity, & much less, make it the Token of the Covenant with them.⁵⁸ The only Authority on which the broachers of this Novelty rely, is Herodotus; who saies, The People of Colchis & the Egyptians, were the only Nations that were circumcised ἀπ' ἀρχῆς from the Beginning; the Syrians & Phœnicians, who dwell in Palestine, acknowledging, they had this Rite from them. L.2. c. 104. This is just such a Tale, as he tells in the Second Chapter of that Book; That the Egyptians were the first Inhabiters of the Earth, unless perhaps the Phrygians. It was a Vanity in them, which made 'em lothe to confess, that they received Circumcision from any other People. The Philistines came originally from the Casluchim (or Colchians;) as these had their Original from the Egyptians. [Gen. 10.14.] The Philistines were existing, (and had Kings too,) before the Dayes of Abraham. Now these Philistines were an Uncircumcised People; and therefore doubtless the Cholcians were so too: and by Consequence, the Egyptians were uncircumcised, when the Casluchim went out of Egypt; and Herodotus had a Cheat putt upon him.⁵⁹

Abraham was then the first Circumcised Person in the World; from him the Ishmaelites received Circumcision; from them the Arabians; as from these it was doubtless carried over to the Egyptians; and the later Cholcians, knowing themselves to be of an Egyptian Breed, chose to take it up, in imitation of their Fathers, the Egyptians.⁶⁰

Q. Being upon the mention of Circumcision, it may not be improper here to introduce One or Two Curiosities concerning it? v. 12.

A. Upon the Abscission, of the Foreskin, they cast it into the Sand, in Memory of that Promise; I will make thy Seed as the Sand of the Sea; And of that Saying, who can number the Dust of Jacob? That is, His Posterity, whose Foreskin is cast into the Dust. By this Means they say that the Curse upon the Serpent is fulfilled; Dust thou shalt eat; That is, The Foreskin in the Dust. And so the Serpent can have no more Power over them.⁶¹

⁵⁸ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:72). Gen. 46:34. Aulus Cornelius Celsus (De medicina 6.18.5; 7.25.1–2) describes the surgical practice of circumcision, how it can cure inflammation of the prepuce, and how the prepuce can be restored to those who wish to hide their ethnic origin. In Origen's Contra Celsum (5.41), Celsus argues that both the Egyptians and Colchians practiced circumcision long before the Jews adopted this rite as a key element of their identity formation (ANF 4:561).

⁶¹ This interpretation can be found in Johannes Buxtorf's oft-reprinted and translated Synagoga Judaica (1604), ch. 2, and in its English translation The Jewish Synagogue (1657), Scotus reckons up the Different Periods of Circumcision in this Manner.

From the Institution of it, unto the Time that our SAVIOUR was Baptized, it was under the Præcept of the Law, and was Profitable & Necessary.

From the Baptism of our SAVIOUR, unto the Promulgation of the Gospel, it was Profitable, but not Necessary.

From the Promulgation of the Gospel to the Destruction of the Temple, it was Lawful, but not Profitable.

From the Destruction of the Temple to this Time, it is absolutely Unlawful. Tis Concision, and not Circumcision.

In the First Period, they only Circumcised.

In the Second Period, they Circumcised & Baptised.

In the Third Period, they Baptised and Circumcised; & regarded the former more than the latter.

In the Last Period, the Christians have only Baptised.⁶²

I will add a Thought from Dr. Tho. Burnett of Westkington his Demonstration of True Religion.

Since God chose the Israelites from out of the World, for a Separate People unto Himself, and brought them into His Covenant, what greater Wisdome could there be, than this; to appoint such a Sign & Seal of His Covenant as must necessarily keep them Separate? And what could be contrived more effectual for this Purpose, than the Ceremony of Circumcision, which was what no other People would voluntarily conform unto?

And if it shall appear, that the Promised Land in this Covenant was to represent a Future State of Happiness, tis to be supposed, That Circumcision was to represent the Holiness, which is required of every Person that would be capable of that Happiness. As no uncircumcised Person was to be a Possessor of Canaan, so no one should be a Partaker of that everlasting Happiness, but such as crucify the Flesh, with the Lusts & Affections of it, & cleanse themselves from all Filthiness of the Flesh & of the Spirit.⁶³

ch. 2, p. 52. The italicized references to the Bible are to Exod. 4:25; Gen. 22:17, 32:12; Num. 23:10; Gen. 3:14. See also Mather's sermon Zalmonah: The Gospel of the Brasen Serpent in the Mosaic History (1725).

⁶³ Mather's citation (with slight variations) is from the two-volume Demonstration of True Religion (1726), vol. 2, ch. 9, pp. 170, 171, by Thomas Burnet(t), D.D. (d. 1750), rector of Westkington, Wiltshire, and prebendary of Sarum, who delivered his Boyle lectures in 1724 and 1725.

Q. The Covenant of God with Abraham; Lett us Resume the Consideration of it, and bestow upon it some Evangelical Illustration? v. 12.

A. A Gentleman sometimes erroneous enough, had in his Treatise on, The Immortality of the Soul, argued so well upon it, (and made such Honourable Amends for some Errors,) that I shall employ his Thoughts for an Illustration of this Illustrious Matter. [Tis Dr. W. Sherlock.]⁶⁴

This Covenant, we see, contains no express Literal Promise of Another Life; and yett if we expound it so as to be worthy of a God, and a Mark of His Peculiar Favour to Abraham, we must understand something more Spiritual in it, than what the meer Letter signifies. That the Patriarchs did so understand it, we have Apostolical Demonstration; Heb. 11.13, 14, 15, 16. They seek a better Countrey, that is, an Heavenly.⁶⁵

First; It seems very unaccountable, That God, out of great Grace and Favour should enter into Covenant with Abraham, and give him nothing but Promises which he should never live to see Accomplished. This indeed is to give him Nothing, when hee to whom the Promises are made, shall never see the Accomplishment. The Land of Canaan was no Inheritance to him; it was a meer Land of Promise; he was a Stranger and a Pilgrim in it. God gave him Nothing, while he Lived; and if there be no Life after this, could give him nothing after Death. It would now puzzle any Man, to say, wherein God was Favourable to him, above the rest of Mankind!⁶⁶

Secondly. It seems as unaccountable, That God should bless the Posterity of Abraham for his Sake, & in Remembrance of His Covenant with him, and yett suffer Abraham himself to perish, without the least Hope of any Reward. Indeed, we do Good unto the Children of those, whose Memory is dear unto us; but certainly we would much more have preserved those Beloved and Deserving Persons themselves from Death, if we could. Now, no Man doubts, but that God can make us Immortal, if He please. And then is it not Reasonable to Beleeve, that when God expresses that Kindness for any One, as to enter into Covenant with him, & with his Posterity for his Sake, He will preserve this Beloved Person

⁶⁵ In Part 1 of his Discourse, Sherlock defends the embattled doctrine of the Soul's immortality, a topic dear to Mather's heart in his Threefold Paradise (121–54). Mather fetches the present paragraph from Discourse, Part 1, ch. 3, sec. 4, pp. 242, 243). Heb. 11:16.

⁶⁶ W. Sherlock (Discourse 243–44).

from falling into nothing. Certainly, He that Remembers His Covenant with Abraham, ha's not Forgott Abraham himself.⁶⁷

Thirdly. It will seem very strange, that God should enter into Covenant with Abraham upon meer Temporal Accounts. For such a short momentary Life, and the vanishing Joyes of it, are not worthy of so great a Concernment. A Covenant has in it something Sacred and Solemn, and it signifies a more Peculiar Favour than Creatures can challenge from a Common Providence: even such Acts of Grace, as no Creatures can have a Right unto, but only by Promise. Can meer Temporal Blessings be the proper Matter for such a Covenant? Or be the Distinguishing Marks of the Divine Favour, and the greatest things that God ha's to bestow on the Men, whom He delights to Bless and Honour? A little Philosophy taught, even the Heathens themselves, to despise this Vanishing Scene, tho' never so gloriously painted & adorned. And, what, the Wiser and Better Men are, the more they Despise, That surely, never can alone be a proper Object of peculiar Covenanting-Grace.⁶⁸

Fourthly. In the meer Letter of the Covenant, there is promised unto Abraham, nothing beyond what other Men enjoy'd, with whom God never entred into Covenant. It is no extraordinary Matter to have a Son, but a Common Blessing of Nature. Had he had a Son in his Youth, the Miracle had not been so great, but the Blessing had been greater. And then, a Numerous Posterity; if we consider this, as a meer Temporal Blessing, it is hard to say, wherein it may consist. It is at most, but an Imaginary Happiness, tho' we should live to See mighty Nations descended from our Loins. And yett Abraham never Saw this: he only saw him from whom this Numerous Issue was to proceed. But, what was this to him, if he must fall into Nothing himself, and lose all Knowledge of this, as well as of other things, as soon as Death had closed his Eyes. And yett, this was not peculiar unto Abraham neither. Adam, and Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japhet, each of them saw a mightier Posterity than Abraham did; and perhaps, little to their Satisfaction. Well; but God promised Canaan for an Inheritance unto his Posterity. And were there not other Countreyes in the World, as Pleasant and as Fruitful as Canaan, where Men liv'd in as much Plenty, and enjoy'd all the Conveniencies of Life, as much as there?⁶⁹

[342v] Fifthly; If we come to the Accomplishment of these Promises, we shall not find the Israelites upon meer Temporal Accounts, the most | Happy People in the World. There were greater and more Flourishing Princes in their Time, than Abraham and Isaac and Jacob. These mett with many and severe Trials. One of them saies, Few and Evil, have been the Dayes of the Years of my Life. Would any one have expected such a Confession from a Man in Covenant with God, if

meer Temporal Prosperity had been the Matter of the Covenant? If God intended nothing more for them, they ought to have been the Happiest Men in the World. And yett they mett with as many Troubles as any other Men; and supported themselves under all, by Faith, which is a very uncomfortable Principle to live by, if there be no Future Life. The Israelites in Egypt, after Joseph was Dead and Gone, were the most oppressed People in the World. And yett they were the Heirs of the Promises, and the Peculiar People of God. Four Hundred Years after the Covenant was made with Abraham, God show'd Peculiar Favour to this Peculiar People, in their Deliverance out of Egypt. And yett in the Wilderness, He visited them with terrible Severities; He terribly Destroy'd them. Come to the Wars of Canaan, and we find them owned with miraculous Victories; but then under their Judges, and their Kings, their Condition oftentimes was very miserable. They were frequently oppress'd by their Heathen Neighbours; engage'd in Doubtful and Bloody Wars; consumed with Famine, and Pestilence, and Sword. There were Ten Tribes quickly carried away into a Final Captivity. Anon the City and Temple of Jerusalem is burnt by the Chaldeans; and the Two Remaining Tribes made captive to Babylon for Seventy Years. Being Returned, they meet with New Troubles; are spoiled by the Egyptians, and Assyrians, and especially by Antiochus. The Romans made them Tributaries; they became a Roman Province; they had Roman Governours over them. By 'nd by their City and Temple is again laid in Ashes; and they are dispersed into all Parts of the World, and made the Refuse of the Nations. As to meer External Prosperity, no Man can pretend, that the Israelites were much Happier, than every other People. And as for Particular Men, there were alwayes Complaints among them, concerning the Prosperity of Bad Men, and the Afflictions and Sufferings of the Righteous.⁷⁰

Sixthly; Lett us look upon the more General Promises made unto Abraham: Certainly, they cannot be confined unto This Life, and unto Meer Temporal Blessings. What shall we say to that? Gen. 15.1. I am thy Shield, & thy Exceeding Great Reward. Would God have made such a Promise as this, to a Man that was near an hundred Years old, and ready to drop into the Grave, should he have perished there, and forever have been as incapable of any Reward, as that which is not? For God to be his Shield, signifies, To be his Protector and Deliverer; which can signify but very little, if it suffer him to fall into nothing. And, to be his Exceeding Great Reward, signifies that God would bestow Exceeding Great Rewards upon him. There are none such in this World. It is very certain, That Abraham received none such, while he lived. They must therefore be Future ones.

Yea, God promises him, that He Himself would be his Exceeding Great Reward; that is, That He would Exceedingly Reward him, in the Enjoyment of Himself. But we know, the Perfect Enjoyment of GOD, is Reserved for another World; & it implies the Immediate Presence and Vision of GOD.⁷¹

Compare the Sixteenth Psalm for this.⁷²

Again; God having encouraged Abrahams Faith by His Almighty Power; [what? meerly for the Performance of some Temporal Promises!] proceeds to say, Gen. 17.7. I will establish my Covenant, between me and thee, and thy Seed after thee, in their Generations, for an Everlasting Covenant, to be a God unto thee, & unto thy Seed after thee. This, To be a God, signifies, To bestow all the Blessings on him, that God can bestow; And an Everlasting Covenant with Abraham, & his Posterity, To be their God, cannot meerly signify, that He will be their God in all successive Generations, as they come into this World, till they go out of it again. But it signifies, that He will Everlastingly | be a God unto all of them; and that they should Everlastingly be Happy in the Enjoyment of Him.⁷³

There is another Promise to Abraham, which putts the Matter out of all Doubt. God Promised unto him; and Renewed it with an Oath: [Gen. 22.18.] In thy Seed, shall all the Nations of the Earth be Blessed. This must necessarily signify, either, an Universal Temporal Monarchy, or the Spiritual Blessings of the Messiah. The first, the Jewes hop'd for, & miss'd of. But the true Promised Seed of Abraham, the Blessed JESUS, their Promised Messiah, hath Blessed all the World; and all the Nations of the Earth may be Blessed in Him. With what Blessings? With Spiritual Ones. This proves, that the Covenant with Abraham, was a Spiritual Covenant; the Promised Seed, & the Promised Land, were Types, of the Messiah, and the Heavenly Blessedness He ha's prepared for us.⁷⁴

Seventhly. God owns Himself to be the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, after their Death. By this Argument, our Lord silenced the Sadducees. [Matth. 22.31, 32.] To be a God unto any Person, is to be his Benefactor, a Shield and an Exceeding Great Reward unto him. When a Man ceases to Be, God ceases to be his God; He is not the God of that which is not. The Relation begins and ends with the Relative. If those Good Men perished in the Grave, there was an End, be sure, of the Covenant. These Patriarchs were still Alive unto God. The Great God ha's their Life so hid, so lodg'd, with Him, that He will bring them actually to Life again, that so what He ha's laid up for them, in His Promises, may be accomplished. They Live to God; their Life is safe in the Hands of God; who will in His own Time certainly Restore their Life unto them. In the mean time, they shall be as Happy, as a State of Separation will allow of.⁷⁵

Eighthly, The Promised Seed also, did peculiarly signify, the Messias, and the Spiritual Blessings of His Kingdome. We are to distinguish, between the Promised Son, from whom the Numerous Posterity, like the Stars and Sands, were to descend; and the Promised Seed, in whom all the Nations of the Earth were to be blessed. We are also to distinguish, between Abrahams Carnal Posterity, and Abrahams Children, who are Heirs of the Promises.⁷⁶

The Apostle Paul is very express in the Observation of this Distinction. [see Gal. 3.16.]⁷⁷

The Seed in which all the Families of the Earth are to be Blessed, could not be Isaac, or Jacob; for the Promise of it is Renewed unto Them; And indeed, it is alwayes the Finishing Clause of the Covenant, with each of the Three Patriarchs. And the external and literal Covenant, was to give place unto that New Covenant, which this Promised Seed should make with Mankind, and thereby bring the Blessings of Abraham upon all the Nations of the Earth.⁷⁸

From this Time, the Prophets in their several Generations, made mention of this Promised Seed under different Characters. Jacob calls Him Shiloh; Moses calls Him, The Prophet. In David's time, He was, The Son that was to sitt upon the Throne of David. All the subsequent Prophets foretel His Glorious Government; and give such Characters of Him, as might serve to distinguish Him, when He should come into the World. Now if the Appearance of our Saviour, for the Redemption of Mankind, be the Final Accomplishment of the Covenant with Abraham, this is enough to prove, that it was a Spiritual Covenant, and principally did relate unto the Spiritual Blessings of the Messiah; which are therefore called; Gal. 3.14. The Blessings of Abraham. And accordingly, Zachariah makes the Birth of our Saviour, an Accomplishment of that Covenant, in his Hymn on that Occasion.⁷⁹

The Jewes themselves were also suspicious, that tho' Canaan were an Inheritance for the Carnal Posterity of Abraham, yett he had a Spiritual Seed, which were the True Heirs of the Promises. Philo wrote a Book wholly upon this Argument; who is the Heir of Divine Blessings; And he resolves it, for an Heavenly Mind, a Soul disentangled from worldly Cares and earthly Passions. John the Baptist began his Ministry, with this Distinction. [Matth. 3.9.] Our Saviour insisted on it. [Joh. 8.37, 39, 40, 44.] The Apostle Paul is very positive in it. [Rom. 2.28, 29.]⁸⁰

The Pauline Account of the Matter deserves to be yett more particularly considered.⁸¹

[344v] When the Jewes were told, that notwithstanding they gloried so much in being Abrahams Posterity, to whom the Promises were made; yett God would Re-ject them from being His People; Destroy their City, their Temple, their Nation; Scatter them over the Face of the whole Earth, | for their Crucifying of their Messias, and Adhæring to the External Dispensation of the Law, in Opposition to the Faith of Him; and that He would now establish His Covenant only with the Beleeving Jewes, and the Beleeving Gentiles: They naturally enough objected, That this could not be; because it would annull that Covenant, that God had made with Abraham, and with his Seed forever. In answer to this, our Apostle tells them, They were mistaken in the True Notion of, The Seed of Abraham. He proves that the Covenant was not made, with all the Carnal Posterity of Abraham. He proves it, by the Exemples of Isaac and Ishmael; and of Jacob and Esau. [Rom. 9.6, 7, 8, 9.] Ishmael was as much the Seed of Abraham, as Isaac was. Who then are the Seed of Abraham unto whom the Promises are made{?} He tells them, The Children of the Promise are counted for the Seed; that is, All those who are born, as Isaac was, by Faith in the Promise of God. Isaac was not so much the Child of Nature, as of Faith. [Compare, Heb. 11.11, 12.] He tells us, This was the Meaning of that Promise; In Isaac shall thy Seed be called. Not that all the Children of Isaac, should be reckoned, The Seed of Abraham, and, the Heirs of the Promises: For the next Exemple, of Jacob and Esau, proves, that they were not so: But such Children as Isaac was, the Children of the Promise, the Children of Faith, they shall be accounted for the Seed. And this appropriates the Covenant unto the Spiritual Seed of Abraham. [Consider, Gal. 3.9, 26, 29.] Now, if the Seed of Abraham, to whom the Promises were made, are a Spiritual Seed, or his Children by Faith, it is plain, it was a Spiritual Covenant, and the Blessings of it are Spiritual and Eternal ones. This proves, That those may be the Children of Abraham, who are not his Children by Natural Descent; if they imitate the Faith of their Father Abraham. And therefore God might Reject the Unbeleeving Jewes, and own the Beleeving Gentiles, as His Children, and the Heirs of His Promises, without annulling His Covenant with Abraham, and with his Seed.⁸²

Again; Isaac, the Son of the Promise, had Esau and Jacob, at one Birth. A Figure of Two Covenants contained in the Promise which God made unto Abraham. Esau, the First-born, præfigured the Law of Moses, and a Covenant of Works, and a Carnal Israel who were under the Discipline of it. Jacob, the younger Brother, who took hold on Esau's Heel, and immediately follow'd him into the World, signified the Gospel-Covenant, that was to be published at the End of the Mosaical Dispensation; a Covenant of Faith, wherein the Spiritual

Seed of Abraham, are declared the true Heirs of the Promises. Thus the Younger becomes the Heir and Lord of the Family. The Apostle proves, that this is the Mystical Sense of the Argument, because the Birthright was given to the Younger, before the Children were Born, or had done either Good or Evil. The Distinction did not so much concern their Persons, but as they were Figures, wherein the Purpose of God according to Election was declared. This Purpose of God, in chusing the Seed of Abraham, and Heirs of the Promise, did not regard their meer Natural Descent from Abraham; For God rejected, both Ishmael and Esau, tho' both descended from Abraham: Nor the Righteousness of Works; For Esau, a Type of that, was Rejected, and Jacob was Preferred.⁸³

Lastly; The Land of Canaan, was a Type of Heaven.⁸⁴

The First Essay of Abrahams Faith, was, To go out of his own Countrey, & his Fathers House, unto the Land which the Lord was to shew him: [Gen. 12.1. Heb. 11.8.] His own Countrey & his Fathers House, does not mean only that Place, where he was born, & where his Relations lived. This indeed is one Sense of it; and in that Sense, he did obey and go into Canaan. But why would the Lord call him to this, & not give him any immediate Possession of Canaan, but only a Promise of it; and this only for his Posterity, some Ages after? If this were to take him from Ill Company, it carried him to Worse. Nor is it any such mighty Trial, to Change the Air, and to Transplant ones self into a Better Countrey. Isaac and Jacob, who were Born here, were no Strangers here. Tho' they had no Cities there, yett they pitch'd their Tents where they pleased, and were owned as Princes, by the other Princes, of the Countrey, who courted their Alliance.⁸⁵

There is in it something more Mysterious; and the Apostle intimates what it is. To Earthly Creatures, this World is their own Countrey, & their Fathers House. Tho' there are many Places, which they know little of, yett in general, they know what the World is, and what its | Enjoyments are. Here they are at Home, & with their Kindred; with People disposed like themselves. Heaven is a Countrey more unknown to them, than Canaan was to Abraham. It is only God that can discover the Countrey to us, & the Way to it, as He led Abraham into Canaan. Abrahams Action, is in the Scripture, made a Figure of a Christians Life, in this World; who is but a Pilgrim and a Stranger here. Thus David expounds it, when he was King of Israel, and Canaan was become the Inheritance of Israel: Psal. 39.12. I am a Stranger with thee, & a Sojourner, as all my Fathers were. [Compare, Psal. 119.19. and, 1. Pet. 2.11.] Tho' the Patriarchs did certainly beleieve, that their Posterity should inherit the Earthly Canaan; yett they understood Better Things contained in this Promise, even an Heavenly Countrey, which they expected, as their Inheritance.⁸⁶

We may therefore observe, That the Titles and Characters, which are given to Canaan, do in a strict Sense properly belong only to Heaven. It is every where called, The Promised Land, and, The Land of Promise. This in the strict Sense, must mean an Inheritance, to which there was no Right, but in Vertue of a Promise; not by Birthright, or by the Merit of Good-Works. Thus the Apostle opposes, The Law, and, The Promise. He saies, If the Inheritance be by the Law, it is no more of Promise; but God gave it unto Abraham by Promise. Nothing but Heaven can fully Answer this Notion, of, The Promised Land. It is above the Original Right of an Earthly Nature; and our Merits never can pretend unto a Reward, which is above our Nature. Eternal Life is the Gift of God; which we can have only by Promise. And indeed, it is the only Inheritance, whereto a Right can be created no other way. Canaan was also called, An Inheritance, and, An Everlasting Inheritance. In this World, so mutable a Scene! there is nothing that can deserve to be called so. Nor is Canaan itself any longer now an Inheritance. But Heaven, That is the Inheritance of the Saints in Light! And, The Inheritance in the Kingdome of Christ and of God. [See also, 1. Pet. 1.3.] And this last Passage, further confirms, what we are upon. For, the Kingdome of Israel, was, The Kingdome of God, & of Christ. God was their King; and He promised, That He would sett up His King, even His Christ, on the Throne of David. And yett, we are sure, That the Kingdome of God, & of Christ, extends to another World. The true Canaan therefore, is there also to be looked for.⁸⁷

Jacobs Vision of the Ladder gives us an express Proof of This. [Gen. 28.12, 13, 14.] It signified, A Communication between Canaan and Heaven; That the Promise of the Land of Canaan reaches from Earth to Heaven; That the Foot of this Ladder stood on the Earth, but the Top of it was in Heaven, where the God of Abraham and Isaac dwells. Lett us hear, how Jacob himself expounds the Vision: He said, Surely, The Lord is in this Place, and I knew it not. Jacob knew, That God is present in all Places. But he finds, That God was present here, in such a Manner, as He is not present in the rest of the World. The Ladder from Earth to Heaven, and the Attendance and Ministry of Angels, plainly shewed a peculiar Favour and Regard of God for this Place. He called the Name of the Place, Bethel, or, The House of God. God ha's but one House, which, like Jacobs Ladder, does reach from Earth to Heaven. Heaven is His Throne, and the Earth is His Footstool. But the Footstool, tho' the meanest Part, yett belongs to the Throne. Therefore, tis not all the Earth in general, which is called, His Footstool, but only Canaan; and in Canaan itself, such Places, where God manifested His more peculiar Presence. Thus, the Ark is called, The Footstool of God. [See, 1. Chron. 28.2. and, Psal. 95.5.] Our Saviour so applies it: Matth. 5.35. Swear not by the Earth, for it is His Footstool. That is, the Land of Canaan; For the Jewes never swore by any other Earth. Thus, the Temple was called, The House of God; and

the Ark was called, His Presence. Jerusalem was called, The Holy Mount, and, The City of the Great King. The Relation between These and Heaven, was that which produced these glorious Characters. Cutt off Canaan from Heaven; Take down the Ladder; Lett Canaan be no more than a Temporal Inheritance; and it is no longer the Footstool of God; the House of God | is no longer there; no more than [346v] Ur of the Chaldees, or Egypt, or any other Part of the Earth.⁸⁸

What Jacob adds, is yett more significant. This is no other, but the Gate of Heaven. Very near is this Relation to Heaven: To be the Gate of it! Such a Gate is of no other Value, but to give us Admission into Heaven. The Promise of that Land, which was the Gate of Heaven, must needs include a Promise of Heaven in it.⁸⁹

The True and Brief Repræsentation of the Case is this. God entred into Covenant with Abraham, to be his God, and the God of his Seed; and promised, That when the Time Appointed was come, He would give them the Possession of the Land of Canaan for an Inheritance; where, they should live separate from the rest of the World, as His Peculiar People, under His Immediate Care and Government; and enjoy the special Marks of His Favour and Presence, while they Lived; And when they Dyed, if their Sins did not stop up the Way, they should be Translated into a better World, and Exchange a Temporal for an Heavenly Canaan. This was a Covenant worthy of a GOD; This made Canaan indeed, The House of God, and the Gate of Heaven.⁹⁰

This gives us, an Account of Esau's Profaneness in Despising his Birthright: [Compare, Heb. 12.16. with Gen. 25.29. &c] It appears, That Esau understood no more, by the Promised Land, than a Temporal Inheritance, which would do him no Good, when he was ready to Dy. This was a Profane Contempt of Gods Covenant and Promise, & of his own Interest in it; and the Foundation of the Profaneness was, a gross Carnal Apprehension he had, of the Covenant itself: it was a great Impiety, to think thus meanly of it; as if God had with so much Solemnity made a Covenant, which was not worth having, even on the highest Terms imaginable.⁹¹

Moreover; It may be thought very unaccountable, why God, who had promised by Covenant, the Land of Canaan, for the Posterity of Abraham, should defer the Accomplishment of the Promise for so many Ages; even for Four Hundred and Seventy Years. Indeed, it may seem Reasonable to defer it, until the Israelites were become Numerous enough to people such a Countrey. But still, why would God in the mean time suffer such a Beloved People, to be Oppress'd in Egypt with such a cruel Bondage, and to be Destroy'd with so many Plagues in the Wilderness? The Typical State of the Church of Israel, is the best Thing, that it can be resolv'd into. They were a Figure of the miserable Servitude of Mankind, under the Dominion of Sin, and the Tyranny of Wicked Spirits; and of the Redemption of Sinners by Jesus Christ; and the various Trials of the Christian Life in this World; & the Supports which Heaven dispenses unto us; & the Dangers of Infidelity & of Disobedience. The Applications of these Things in the New Testament, are every where to be mett withal.⁹²

Many Years after, I live to see a Discourse made by the Son of the Gentleman, whose Meditations have thus obliged us; On the Covenant of Abraham. And the Sentiments of this Gentleman, [tis Dr. Th. Sherlock,] enable me to throw in some further Thoughts of this Importance upon that Noble Subject.⁹⁵

It is evident, that it was not the Intention of Providence in the Calling of Abraham, or in Giving the Law unto Moses, immediately to Restore true Religion among all the Nations of the World. There is propounded unto Abraham, a Destroying, rather than a Reforming, of the Idolatrous Nations in the Land of Canaan. And Circumcision was ordered unto the Offspring of Abraham, to separate them from the rest of Mankind. The Law of Moses was also established on many Rites, to be observed no where but in the Land of Canaan. [See also, Act. XIV.16. and XVII.30.] But yett we must consider these things, as a Method of Providence; working towards the Great End always in View, even the General Restoration of Mankind from the Curse of the Fall; and the Opening of that Scheme, of the Divine Proceedings, which was to bring a Blessing upon All the Nations of the Earth. Accordingly, when Abraham received the Promises, he had

⁹⁵ Mather's four-page insert is extracted from The Use and Intent of Prophecy, in the several Ages of the World (1725), a collection of six discourses, by Thomas Sherlock (1677–1761), William Sherlock's son, master of the Temple (after his father's resignation), dean of St. Paul's, and bishop of London. Assurance given him, not only of Peculiar Blessings to himself & his Offspring; but also of a General Blessing to be convey'd thro' him to All Mankind.⁹⁶

Consider, Gen. XII.2, 3. and, XV.18. and XVII.4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Here are great Promises, but, in the Temporal Sense of them, except the particular Gift of the Land of Canaan, (and there were probably other Parts of the World, as good as that;) there was nothing in them, that was peculiar to Abraham & his Posterity. There have been many great, & flourishing & powerful Nations, of another Kindred. The Sons of Japhet, and Ham, & those descended by other Branches from Shem, have arrived unto great Prosperity, & left a Numerous Offspring, in Vertue of the Common Blessing on their Ancestors after the Flood. Thus far the Promise to Abraham was derived from the Temporal Covenant established with Noah & his Offspring, after the Flood, in which other Nations had a share as well as himself; and some of them in some Respects a much greater; as he must needs judge, who knows any thing of the ancient or present Empires of the Eastern & Western World. But if we look forward, we shall see the Distinction between the several Promises grow plain; when GOD Renews the Covenant, and Limits the Peculiar Blessing of Abraham, to the Son which he should have by Sarah his Wife. In the XVII Chapter of Genesis, we find mention of an Everlasting Covenant, wherein the Glorious GOD assumes the peculiar Character of being, The GOD of Abraham & of his Offspring. This Connexion seems to be the True Foundation of our SAVIOURs Argument, from this Expression, to prove the Resurrection of the Dead; as the Connexion of the Promise of the Land of Canaan, to the Everlasting Covenant seems to be the Reason of treating the Land of Canaan, as a Type or Sign of the Better Countrey, that is, an Heavenly.⁹⁷ Here is a plain Intimation of Two Distinct Covenants. Towards the Close of this Chapter Abraham receives a Promise, that he should have a Son by Sarah his Wife, within the Compass of a Year, and that the Everlasting Covenant should be established with That Son, & his Offspring after him; tho' he had at this time, a Son thirteen Years old, for whom there had been promised a Numerous Posterity flourishing in the Earth. So that this, tho' it be Part of the Promise to Abraham, yett it is no Part of the Everlasting Covenant, which is confirmed unto Isaac, exclusively to all the other Sons of Abraham. The Blessed GOD, in what it pleases Him to call, MY Covenant, when He answers the Petition of Abraham for Ishmael, evidently makes it of a very Different Kind, from the Covenant given to Ishmael: It must be a Covenant founded on Better Hopes than those of a meer Temporal Prosperity. This Distinction of Two Covenants, in the Case of Ishmael, and Isaac, made by GOD Himself, is the Foundation of the Apostle Pauls Argument unto the Galatians. It is written (says he) that Abraham had two Sons; the one by a bond Maid, the other by a free Woman; But he who was of the bond

Woman, was born after the Flesh; but he of the Free Woman was by a Promise: which things are an Allegory: for these are the two Covenants.⁹⁸ And whoever is capable of considering | what is related concerning this Matter in the Book of Genesis, will evidently see that indeed these are Two Covenants, and such Two Covenants as fully justify the Apostles Reasoning thereupon. The Everlasting Covenant so limited unto Isaac, and afterwards unto Jacob, and afterwards unto Judah, and last of all unto David; what should be the Subject of it? If we look back, we shall find, that after enumerating the Temporal Blessings, which were to descend from Abraham to his Posterity, One BLESSING is added, in which ALL THE WORLD has an Interest; which was to be convey'd unto them, thro' Abraham & his Offspring: *In thee shall all the Families of the Earth be blessed.*⁹⁹ Whatever Abraham understood by this, he could never understand it, as at this Day his pretending Children do; who expect, in Virtue hereof, to be Lords of the World, & have Dominion over all People. A strange Blessing This, to all Nations! That they should fall from the Liberty, which they have a Natural Right unto, & become Subject unto the Dominion of One People, that should lord it over them. None but a Jew can see the Happiness of such a State; The Nations of the Earth would certainly refuse the Offer of such a Blessing! The Covenant with Ishmael, says nothing of, the Blessing to all Nations. The Covenant with Isaac expressly renews this Promise. [Gen. XXVI.4.] Afterwards, Esau received a Temporal Blessing from his Father as well as Jacob. The Apostle accounts it Profaneness in Esau, that he sold his Birthright. It must needs be, because he sold the Blessing of Abraham, in the Everlasting Covenant. It is not reckoned Profaneness, to sell mere Temporal Rights: Nor did the scandalous Bargain exclude him from the Benefit of the Temporal Promises. Compare the Blessings of Esau & of Jacob, and say, wherein is Esau's Condition inferiour unto Jacobs? But there is Reason to limit Part of the Blessing on Jacob, to the Peculiar Blessing of Abraham, and of Isaac. The Conveying of the Birthright in the Family of Abraham, was conveying the Special Blessing of Abraham, which always attended upon the Birthright. This Birthright was evidently made over to Jacob, when we find it said, Be Lord over thy Brethren. The Special Blessing was in time to be extended unto All Nations, as well as to the House of Abraham; For in his Offspring All the Families of the Earth were to be Blessed:¹⁰⁰ And therefore, in Consequence of the Birthright, it is now said unto Jacob; Lett the People serve thee, & the Nations bow down unto thee. It is plain, from the whole Story of the Matter, that the Chief Blessing bestowed by Isaac, fell upon Jacob; and it is as plain, there are no Words to limit this Chief Blessing to Jacob, except these that are now before us. Isaac himself understood, that he had pass'd away the Blessing of Abraham to Jacob

in these Words; and therefore he tells Esau, that the Blessing was gone beyond Recovery. Indeed of Corn and Wine, and of Temporal Power, he gives Esau a full & equal Share. The only Limitation on the Blessing, is, Thou shalt serve thy Brother. Whatever was peculiarly given to Jacob, was contained in the Grant of his being Lord over his Bretheren. And what this Peculiar Blessing was, we may learn from Isaac himself; who, in the next Chapter by 'nd by Renews the Blessing on Jacob, and gives expressly to him & his Offspring; The Blessing of Abraham. In the same Chapter, the Blessing is Renewed & Confirmed by the Glorious GOD Himself; In thee, & in thy Seed, shall all the Families of the Earth be blessed. That the Regard of All Nations to the Seed in which they were All to be Blessed, should be expressed by their Bowing down to Him, is no hard Figure of Speech. And that even this Yoke, the Superiority of Abrahams Family, should one day be broken, as the Promise to Esau setteth forth, when Jews and Gentiles come to be on an æqual foot, and æqually the People of GOD, is no more than the Original Covenant contains; For the Day was to come, when all Nations were to be Equally Blessed in the promised Redemption. If we expound the Blessing of Jacob, for a Temporal Dominion, see how it falls! Jacob flies his Countrey for fear of Esau. When he meets Esau, he bows before him seven times, & calls him, His Lord. The Posterity of Esau, have a Dominion established, many Years before Jacobs Family have any certain Dwelling Place. When the Time was come for the House of | Israel to be established, the Family of Esau is by a particular Decree exempted from the Dominion of Israel. In the Time of David the Edomites were subjugated. But in the Time of Jehoram they recovered, and sett up a King of their own. In the Time of Abaz they revenged the Affront, and smiting the Jews, led away many Captives. If This were all that was intended in what was promised unto Jacob, That his Mothers Children should bow down unto him, Isaac needed not have been so scrupulous of præserving to Jacob, a Peculiar Blessing.¹⁰¹ But now, the Blessing of Jacob expressed in Words implying a Rule over his Brethren, was truly a Conveyance of a Birthright unto him in the Family of Abraham. And the Birthright in the Family of Abraham, respected the special Blessing and Covenant given by GOD unto Abraham. Isaac himself calls this Right of Primogeniture in his House, The Blessing of Abraham. GOD Himself, in Confirmation of Jacobs Primogeniture, assures him, That in his Offspring all the Families of the Earth shall be Blessed. This Promise being the only Special Promise made unto Isaac and Jacob, in Preference to their Brethren, it must be taken for the Subject Matter of the Everlasting Covenant. Yea, so peculiarly does this Blessing belong to that Covenant, that it is never mentioned with respect unto any other Person whatsoever, than such only, to whom the Right of this Covenant, and the Promise of the Land of Canaan descended. Some have imagined, that these Words require no higher Sense than this; That all Nations beholding the Prosperity of Abraham and his Offspring, they should Bless themselves and others in some such Form as this; GOD make thee as great as Abraham and his Offspring. But can we imagine, that the Everlasting Covenant of GOD, as He Himself calls it, was given only to produce a proverbial Form of Speech in the World? That the Prerogative of Isaac above Ishmael, and of Jacob above Esau, lay in this only, that the Nations would use the Name of the one, in their mutual Good Wishes, & not of the other? Besides, when did the Nations ever thus Bless themselves; or, when was there Occasion for it? The Posterity of Ishmael, was established in Power much sooner, and were as notable in Successes for many Ages, as the Jews; and much larger Empires have sprung from them.¹⁰²

Abraham doubtless understood This, to be a Promise of Restoring Mankind and rescuing them from what remained of the Curse of the Fall. He knew, Death had entred by Sin, and he knew that GOD had promised Redemption and Victory to the Seed of the Woman. On the Hope of this Promise was founded the Religion of his Ancestors: And when GOD, from whom this Blessing on All Men was expected, expressly promised a Blessing on All Men, and in this Promise founded His Everlasting Covenant, what else could Abraham expect but the Completion in his Offspring, of that ancient Promise concerning the Victory to be obtained by the Seed of the Woman. The Earth was Restored, with a Blessing, after the Flood; which was the Foundation of the Temporal Covenant with Noah; a considerable Share whereof GOD expressly grants to Abraham and his Posterity particularly; Together with a Promise, through Them to bring a Further Blessing on the whole Race of Men. What less could be expected from this New Promise to Abraham, than a Deliverance from that Part of the Curse that still remained, on Man, Dust thou art, & to Dust thou shalt return? In Virtue of this Covenant, Abraham and his Posterity had reason to expect, That the Time would come, when Man should be called from his Dust again. For this Expectation, they had the Assurance of Him who gave the Covenant, That He would be Their GOD forever. Well might our SAVIOUR then tell the Sons of Abraham; That even Moses at the Bush, had the Resurrection of the Dead assured unto him, when the Lord was called, The GOD of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob.¹⁰³

To præserve this Hope in the World, Abraham was called from his own Countrey & Kindred, then tainted with Idolatry. He and his Posterity were made the Depositories of this Hope; and unto them were committed the Oracles of God.¹⁰⁴ The Law of Moses was built indeed on the Temporal Covenant and not on the Promise for All the Nations. The Promulgation of it was, Hear, O Israel. And many Rites of it are confined unto the Land of Canaan. Whereas, when the Christian Law was | to take place, every Countrey was to be a proper Place of Divine Worship. [Joh. IV.21.] The Promise of a Blessing to all Nations, did then subsist in its full Force, during the Continuance of the Law of Moses. For, as that Promise was not completed by the giving of the Law, in which All Nations were not concerned, so neither could so General a Promise be annull'd or sett aside, by a Private Law, given to One People only. And this is the true Sense & Scope of the Apostles Argument; Gal. III.17. This I say; That the Covenant that was confirmed before of GOD in CHRIST, the Law which was four hundred & thirty Years after cannot disannul, that it should make the Promise of none Effect. But then, it is highly probable, that all Parts of the Jewish Dispensation, were adapted, for to prepare the Way unto the Better Promises. On this Reasonable Supposition, we have a Foundation to enquire into the Meaning of the Law, not merely as it is a literal Command unto the Jews, but as containing the Figure and Image of Good Things to come. It can hardly be supposed, That GOD intending finally to Save the World by CHRIST, and the Preaching of the Gospel, should give an Intermediate Law, which had no Relation to the Covenant, which it was His Purpose to establish forever.¹⁰⁵

Q. Circumcision, the Seal of the Covenant with Abraham, was to be on, The Eighth Day. We may take this Place, to enquire after the Mystery of, The Eighth Day, in this Matter? v. 12.

A. We must note, That the running of Six whole Dayes, made up the Space here directed.

It was here signified;

First, That the Circumcision of our Hearts, [Deut. 30.6.] is obtained by the Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ; which was on the Eighth Day, or, the Day after the Seventh.

Secondly, That we ought to be Spiritually Circumcised and Sanctified be-times; even on the First Day of the Week; or, in our most Early Youth.

Thirdly, That after Seven remarkable Periods of the Church, the Hearts of the Children of God, shall be th{o}roughly Circumcised, and universal and admirable Holiness prevail over the World. To this Purpose Reizius.¹⁰⁶

A. It leads us to the Thoughts of that Circumcision of the Heart, which the Spirit of God gives us Experience of. Our Mortification, tis long adoing.

This is an Hint of Dr. Gells upon it.¹⁰⁷

(1595–1665), rector of St. Mary Aldermary (London). The Latin citation is translated by Gell as “in circumcising he shall be circumcised” (Gen. 17:13). In his “Note Book of Authors” on Gen. 17:14, Mather identifies as his source Wolfgang Franzius’s *De Interpretatione S. A. Honest Mr. Terry, in his Travels to the East-Indies, observed, that the People had a Grain, both Toothsome & {W}Holesome, which they made up in Broad Cakes, like our Oaten Cakes, & then baked it on small, round, iron Hearths, which they carry with them in their Journey's, & make Use of them in their Tents. He concludes this to be an ancient Custome in the East, from the Cakes that Sarah here made for the Angels.¹⁰⁸

Q. It seems a Matter of much Difficulty unto many, How the Angels, that appeared unto Abraham, should bee concerned in so needless an Action, as that of Eating? v. 7.

A. I'l Recite you, a Gloss of that great Man, Peter du Moulin upon it; but, because, I doubt, it will not satisfy, it shall not bee Translated.¹⁰⁹

Omnia erunt plana, si dicamus hos Tres Angelos, quorum unus Jehovah appellatur, in veris corporibus Humanis apparuisse, ut et Angelum, quocum Jacob luctatus est; veros Homines fuisse, qui à Spiritu Messiae, et à spiritibus Angelicis agebantur. Ideoque Homines vocantur à Mose. Hi Homines movebantur ab Angelis, et Spiritu Messiae, ad ea agenda, quae ipsi non intelligebant, phantasia eorum obsessà, et à consuetis cogitationibus abductà. ¹⁰⁸ Mather's paraphrase is from A Voyage to East-India (1655), sec. 10, pp. 210, 211–12, by Edward Terry (1589/90–1660), travel writer, sometime chaplain to the East India Company, and rector at Greenford (Middlesex), who recorded his impressions of his trip to India (1616–19) in this popular narrative. Mather takes some liberty with his "evidence" from this source, for although Terry describes the custom of baking the "round broad and thick Cakes" among the poor of India, he nowhere establishes an analogy with Sarah's cakes offered to the angelic visitors (Gen. 18:6). Instead, this analogy appears in Travels into the Eastern Countries, an English translation of a German original (1588), by Dr. Leonhart Rauwolff (c. 1535–96), published in John Ray's Collection Of Curious Travels & Voyages (1693), part 2, ch. 9, pp. 201–02. Mather had evidently consulted Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 18:6 (Commentary 1:75), which mentions the travel narrative of "Leon. Rauwolff" [sic], but then decided to include a reference to Terry's Voyage to East-India instead. Mather finally does cite Rauwolff's Travels (via Patrick) at the end of his commentary on Gen. 18:33 (below).

¹⁰⁹ Mather probably has in mind Pierre Du Moulin, the Elder (1568–1658) – rather than his son by the same name – French Reformed theologian at Sedan and voluminous author. The Mathers owned several of Du Moulin's works (Tuttle, "Libraries"), and Cotton Mather cites Du Moulin's Vates, seu de praecognitione futurorum (1640), in Threefold Paradise (329).

A. This is the First Flesh, that is mentioned, as eaten, in all the Scripture.¹¹¹

Q. What is to be noted about the Butter, in this Entertainment?

A. Tho' we read of Cheese, in Homer, Euripides, Theocritus, & others; yett they never mention Butter. Nor ha's Aristotle, (as Bochart observes) one Word of it, tho' he hath several Observations about Cheese. It seems Butter was not then known among the Greeks, (nor in Plinyes Time among the Romans;) tho' it was, we see, a very ancient Food, among the Eastern People.

Pliny says, It was apud Barbaras gentes lautissimus cibus.¹¹²

¹¹⁰ Whether or not angels, disembodied souls in heaven, and demons are endowed with a digestive system and thus required nourishment is debated in a variety of seventeenth-century works including Thomas Goodwin's World to Come (1655) 33–34; Jacob de Vaux's Thesaurus Disputationum (1661), vol. 1, Disp. XXXVIII "Thesium Theologicarum De Angelis Bonis et Malis, Pars Prima," p. 145; William Sherlock's Practical Discourse (1689) 61–65; Samuel Sewall's Diary (2:747), and Mather's Threefold Paradise (273–75). Increase Mather devotes a lengthy treatise on the subject of angelology, in Angelographia (1696); and, of course, Joseph Glanvill's insights in his popular Saducismus Triumphatus (1681, 3rd ed. 1689) are not to be despised either, especially not those in Part 2 (1688), 267–320. Be that as it may, Pierre Du Moulin's gloss translates, "Everything will be clear if we say that these three angels, one of whom is called Jehovah, appeared in true human bodies, as also did the angel with whom Jacob wrestled; that they were true men, who were driven by the spirit of the Messiah, and the spirits of angels. It is for this reason that Moses calls them men. These men were moved by angels, and by the spirit of the Messiah, in order to do things which they themselves did not understand, their minds having been taken over, and led away from their usual reasoning. When these men had carried out the task for which they had been employed by God, their somnolence was shattered, their trance ceased, and they were returned to their usual duties, unable to remember what they had done at the instigation of a divine and angelic spirit. To these men, washing of the feet and food could have been useful: and it is not to be asked what enjoyment those men might have had from food and foot-washing liquid." Midrash Rabbah (Lev. XXXIV:8; Num. VII:4, X:5; Deut. XI:4) also comments with contradictory results on the problem of angels eating human food. The Zohar (1:102a) argues that the angels only "simulated eating" to honor Abraham's hospitality, while R. Eleazar insists that "They certainly did eat, in the sense of fire consuming fire invisibly" (see Zohar 1:156b). See also P. Almond's Heaven & Hell (105–10).

¹¹¹ See John Edwards's Discourse (3:117–18).

¹¹² Mather's primary source is Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 18:8 (Commentary 1:75). Patrick's own source is Bochart's Hieroicoicon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 45, col. 474), where all the ancient sources here mentioned are given. Homer mentions Polyphemos's crates of cheese in The Odyssey (9.219, 231), Euripides in Cyclops (233), Theocritus Syracusanus in Idylla (11.66 and 25.106), but Aristotle (Historia animalium 3.20.522a, 21–25) speaks of "clotted milk" that "resemble[s] oil." Mather's paraphrase of Pliny (28.35.133) translates that cheese was "among

Q. Is there any thing, in Pagan Antiquitie, about the Destruction of Sodom? v. 16.

A. Yes: In Abydenus, in Nic. Damascenus; & in more Authentic Authors, as in Diodorus Siculus, in Strabo, in Solinus, in Tacitus, and in Pliny. All these Writers do say, That these Places were destroy'd by Fire; but Solinus and Tacitus do say, t'was particularly by Thunder & Lightning. And Strabo intimates, that they were swallow'd up with Subterraneous Fires, in an Earth-quake, then breaking forth. Probably, the Destruction was by both; and wee know, that the Lake Asphaltites was then made, which argues the Opening, and Sinking, of the Earth, in this horrible Desolation.¹¹³

This wee are sure of; Showres of Liquid Sulphur, came down upon these wicked Cities; – From the Lord out of Heaven. [Gen. 19.24.] And, by the way; Sulphur among the Ancients, was called, θεῖον, quod a Deo sit; or, because, it was from the Lord out of Heaven.¹¹⁴

And Lots Wife, being so struck, her Body became hard, as a Statue; as Thunder uses very strangely to stiffen the Bodies, that are struck with it. So, shee stands a Pillar of Salt, even, of Durable Remembrance; Yea, her Body, by the Sulphureous Vapours falling upon her, was calcined into Real Salt; which was the Opinion of Clemens Alexandrinus, of Tertullian, & of the two Christian Poets, Prudentius and Sedulius. But this was a thing so remarkable, that the Poets could not miss of it; and accordingly, they tell us, of Niobe's being turned into a Stone, for her Disobedience to the Command of a Goddess.¹¹⁵ barbarian tribes accounted the choicest food.” Bochart’s elucidation was also put to good use in John Edwards’s Discourse (3:116–17) – all demonstrating the free-flowing distribution of knowledge among the scholars of the period who felt little compunction in appropriating someone else’s scholarship without acknowledgment: not Who, but What was the guiding principle; all was done (it would seem) for the Glory of God.

113 This and the following paragraphs are extracted from John Edwards’s Discourse (1:133–35). Abydenus’s Assyriaka et Babylonika, extant only in fragments in Eusebius Pamphilus, Alexander Polyhistor, and Syncellus, does not really mention Sodom. However, since the settlement’s destruction is frequently associated with the bituminous matter floating on the Dead Sea, which the Greeks call “Asphaltic Lake,” Edwards may indeed read Abydenus’s reference to these burning regions as extra-biblical proof of the OT story. Much the same is the case for the surviving fragments of Nicolaus Damascenus. Diodorus Siculus (2.48.6–8; 19.98.1–99.2) describes the asphaltic matter floating on the Dead Sea; and so do Strabo (16.2.44), Solinus (De mirabilibus mundi, cap. 36), Tacitus (Historiarum 5.6–7), and Pliny (5.15.71–73). Pliny describes the region of the Dead Sea (“Lake Asphaltites”), but does not mention the biblical Sodom. Much the same is offered (though at greater length), in Jean LeClerc’s “Dissertation IX: Concerning the Subversion of Sodom” (Twelve Dissertations 199–238).

114 Edwards (Discourse 1:134). Thunderbolts from heaven, the ancients believed, were sulfurous like brimstone; hence they called it θεῖον (divine), because they came from the gods.

115 Edwards (Discourse 1:134–35). Gen. 29:26. Clemens Alexandrinus affirms that Lot’s wife was turned into a literal pillar of salt (Stromata 2.14.61.4). Tertullian intones the petrification of Lot’s wife in a poem of uncertain origin: Carmen de Sodoma (145–73), in ANF (4:131). The Christian poet of N Spain, M. Aurelius Clemens Prudentius (348–c. 413), in his Carmina

To fetch her Back again to Life, they tell us, hee went unto Hell; & perswaded Pluto there to give him her again, upon this Condition, that hee should not look back to her, all the while shee was coming. But it seems, hee fondly gave her a Look, while shee was following of him; whereupon, unto Hell shee was remanded. You need no Help of mine, to accommodate the Story; or show you the Change of it.¹¹⁶

Q. Upon what you last mention, about Lots Wife, we will take Occasion so far to anticipate our Enquiry, as here to ask, what is really to be understood, by, her being Turned into a Pillar of Salt?

A. Then before we go any further, I'll mention you a few Strokes of Leclerc's, tho' he be a Gentleman, whose Criticisms do sometimes give me very little Satisfaction.¹¹⁷

He observes, That the Word, which we render, Pillar, signifies any thing that agrees with a Pillar or Statue, in being Immoveable. The Meaning of Moses might (according to him) only be, That Lots Wife grew stiff, and remained motionless like a Pillar or Statue. What we render Salt, he saies, is taken sometimes for a Salt Soil; and he proposes whether the Text here might not be read, She remained as a Statue in that Salt Soil. Or if it be taken, as it sometimes is, for a long Space of Time; Salt being a Symbol of Eternity; [Num. 17.19. 2. Chron. 13.5.] It may then import, that she was so benumb'd in the Countrey of Sodom, as never to have gott away, but continue there forever.¹¹⁸

He does not apprehend any thing of an unusual Metamorphosis, in this Case. He saies, The poor Woman was probably either stupefied with Fear, or Hamartigenia (727–28, 740–45) [PL 59. 1062B–1064C]; and the Irish poet Coelius Sedulius (5th c. CE), in his Carmen Paschale (1.121–26) – both describe the salinification of Lot's wife. The story of Niobe's petrification (by Diana) as punishment for her pride is told in Clemens Alexandrinus's Protrepticus (10.103.4) and in Exhortation to the Heathen (10), in ANF (2:201), but with more savory detail in Ovid's Metamorphoses (6.146–312).

suffocated with some Sulphureous or Bituminous Vapour. When she saw her Native Countrey destroyed by Fire from Heaven, & the Earth shaking so horribly under her Feet, it is no Wonder, if she expired thro' the Agony of it, or fainting away, with no one | being by, to assist her under her Deliquium, she died upon the Spott. Plutarch speaks of them, whom the Fright or Breath of Thunder ha's killed; and Seneca speaks of those that were perfectly besotted by the Consternation of an Earth-quake.¹¹⁹ [352v]

Yea, it appears to him, no absurd Conjecture, That Lots Wife, not only cast back her Eyes, towards her Native Countrey, but went back too far, after the Angels were gone, to behold the Burning of it, and was choak'd with a poisonous Vapour, as Pliny the Elder was, when his Curiosity led him too near the Mountain Vesuvius. This may seem implied in the Words of our Saviour; where after He had said, [Luk. 17.32.] Lett no Man return back, i.e. to Jerusalem, after he is once gone out of it; He adds, Remember Lots Wife; who seems to have gone back, with an Intention to see, whether t'was impossible to save any of her Household-stuff.¹²⁰

Thus Cornelius Severus, in his Poem of Ætna, saies,

Ardebant arvis segetes, et mollia cultu

Jugera cum Dominis, Sylva, Collesque virentes, &c

Cunctantes vorat Ignis, et undique torret avaros.

– namely, such as tarried behind to carry off their Wealth.¹²¹

Q. On that, I know him, that he will command his Children? v. 19.

It has been observed, and it is worth observing; That he to whom God first of all did the Honour, of entailing the Seal of the Covenant upon his Offspring, was eminent for this Family-Religion, the Instruction of his Houshold, in the Way of the Lord. 119 LeClerc (Twelve Dissertations 262–63, 263–64). In Plutarch's Quaestiones conviviales (4.2.3, 665C), Plutarch's Moralia 8:324–25), Dorotheus maintains that the bodies of men killed by lightning do not decay. Seneca (Naturalis quaestiones 6.1.1, 3–4; see also 6.17.3) relates that earthquakes in Campania (“on the Nones of February”), in 62 CE, wiped out Pompei and Herculaneum, and struck people with bouts of insanity, making them wander about aimlessly.

120 LeClerc (Twelve Dissertations 265). In a letter to Cornelius Tacitus, Pliny the Younger (c. 61–c. 112 CE) describes the eruption of Vesuvius (79 CE) in which his uncle, Pliny the Elder (c. 23–79), fell prey to the poisonous vapors and the rain of pumice (Epistularum 6.16.4–20).

121 The adaptation from the poem Ætna (612–13, 623), attributed to the Roman epic poet Cornelius Severus (fl. 38 BCE) and others, is extracted at second hand from LeClerc (Twelve Dissertations 266). According to W. Richter (“Einleitung” 1), Ætna belongs to a smaller corpus of Latin poems frequently appended to Virgil's canonical works that were edited and published by Joseph Scaliger (1573) as an independent collection, called Appendix Vergiliana (1573). Whoever the true author of the poem, Mather's variant lines from Ætna (611–12, 622) can be rendered as follows: “The crops on the fields and acres tamed by cultivation burned / along with their owners; blooming forests and hills, etc. / fire devours them, and swallows the avaricious from all sides.” Mather's manuscript and his copy text erroneously read “millia culta” and “terret” – here silently corrected.

Q. How do you take those Words of the Patriarch, in his Plea for Sodom, Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do Right? v. 25.

A. What if you should Read them so, Will not the Judge of all the Earth, execute Judgment? q.d. Lord, Thou dost intend hereafter to appear for the Judgment of the World, with such Fiery Thunders, as thou art now going to destroy this miserable Place withal; bee entreated therefore to spare these Towns, until that Revolution come.¹²⁴

Q. What special Intention may our Father Abraham have, when hee calls himself by the Name of, Ashes? v. 27.

A. Hee acknowledges, his Deserving to bee Turned into Ashes. The Fate now impending over Sodom, was, to bee Turned into Ashes; and Abraham going to Intercede for Sodom, confesses that, alas, if hee should Receive his desert, hee should bee so far from Saving others from that Fate, that it would rather come upon himself.¹²⁵

¹²² Mather leans on Matthew Henry (1662–1714), Presbyterian minister and biblical exegete, whose Exposition of the Old and New Testaments (1708–10) is still popular today. Mather's cites Henry's A Church in the House (1704) 19.

¹²³ Mather's somewhat cryptic remark suggests that God loves Abraham because He fore-knows that the patriarch will teach his children obedience to God. Or, as R. David Kimchi has it, Abraham will teach his children to love God, and "They will then experience the fulfillment of all the promises (conditional) which I, G'd, have made to him concerning his offspring" (Hachut Hamesbulash 2:374).

Q. What particular Thought might bee in the Mind of our Father Abraham, to quicken his charitable Hopes on the Proposal of Ten Righteous Persons, in Sodom? v. 32.

A. 'Tis affirmed, that Lot had four Daughters, whereof Two perished in the flames of Sodom. Now R. Bechai ha's a Curiositie, which I cannot but offer you, make what you will of it. Hee saies, That Lots four Daughters, were all married; and that when Abraham deprecated the fate of Sodom, for the Sake of Ten Righteous Ones, the Patriarch had his charitable Hopes, that Lot, & his Wife, & his four Daughters, & his four Sons in Law, would have made up that Number.¹²⁶

Q. Lett us, if you please, resume the Consideration, of the Visit from Heaven, made unto the Patriarch Abraham? v. 33.

A. Dr. Patrick, in his Commentary upon Genesis, will give some Assistance to our Thoughts upon this Illustrious Matter.¹²⁷

At the first Verse of the Chapter, The Lord appeared unto Abraham; The Glory of the Lord, or the Divine Majesty in the Shechinah, appear'd unto him, as it had lately done. This was to testify His Approbation, of Abrahams ready Obedience, unto so severe a Command, as that of Circumcision.¹²⁸

He falls down on his Face, to worship the Divine Majesty, as he had formerly done. But Rising again, and Lifting up his Eyes, as we read in the Second Verse; the Shechinah was withdrawn; but, Lo, Three Men stood by him: which Three Men, are by the Apostle [Heb. 13.2.] and Two of them are by Moses himself [Gen. 19.1.] called, Angels. These Angels, were Part of the Heavenly Retinue, waiting on the Divine Majesty, who had newly descended.¹²⁹

There is a Maxim among the Jewes, That no Angel performs two Ministeries, (or, is sent on two Messages.) Accordingly, when one of these Angels had delivered the Message that was to be delivered unto Abraham, there were only Two, ¹²⁶ Mather's source is R. Bachya ben Asher's annotation on Gen. 18:24, 32 (Torah Commentary 1:304) and in Mikraoth Gedoloth (1:224).

that went unto Sodom; And of those Two, Lot speaks unto but One, as having a particular Care of him.¹³⁰

Some Christians of great Authority, have made a Quæstion, whether those were all created Angels; one of them, at least, seeming to be the Lord of all. Nay Cyril, in his first Book against Julian, thinks, that here was a Repræsentation of the Eternal Trinity; for Abraham speaks to them, ὡς εἰς ὄντες οἱ τρεῖς, As if the Three were but One. But Hilaries Opinion, and Eusebius's, is more likely; That the Son of God only appeared, with two Angels attending on Him; which many think, is evident from the Twenty second, and the Twenty fifth Verses of this Chapter.¹³¹

Yett another Account may be given of those Verses; And if we should make that an Argument, that one of them was the Increated Lord, another of them then must be so too; For He is called likewise by the Name of JEHOVAH. [Gen. 19.24.] Austin confutes this Opinion; [L.II. de Trin. cap. 11. and L.III. c. 11.]¹³²

[354v] Pass now to the Seventeenth Verse of the Chapter, where we find, the LORD, again speaking unto Abraham. It seems, | the Three Angels had now left Abraham alone; who returning towards his Tent, again saw the Glory of the Lord. The Divine Majesty in the Shechinah, now began to discourse again with Abraham, & this by Himself, without the Ministry of Angels. Abraham heard Him say, Shall I hide from Abraham? – which encouraged him to approach unto the LORD. As for the common Opinion, That only two of the Angels went away from Abraham, and the Third of them, was He with whom he had this Conversation, there is this to object against it; That in the Sixteenth Verse it seems plain, they all Three went away. Hereupon ensued Abrahams earnest Supplications for Sodom; wherein tis admirable to see, the Tender Mercy of our God. He would have Reprieved a whole Countrey from Ruine, for so small a Number, as Ten Righteous Persons in it, upon the Request of Abraham. Yea, His Mercy went even beyond Abrahams Desire; for He spared One of the Five Cities, for the Sake of Three or Four.¹³³

¹³⁰ Patrick (Commentary 1:74) on Gen. 18:2. The angelic division of labor is described in Maimonides (Guide 2.6.161), but originates in Midrash Rabbah (Gen. L:2) “One angel does not perform two missions, nor do two angels together perform one mission.”

¹³¹ Patrick (Commentary 1:74) on Gen. 18:2. Cyril of Alexandria (Contra Julianum 1.26.24). Both St. Hilary of Poitiers (c. 315–67), bishop of Poitiers (De trinitate 4.27), in NPNFi (9:79); and Eusebius Pamphilus (Demonstratio evangelica 5.9) acknowledge that of the three angels who visited Abraham (Gen. 18:2), the third was the Son of God, the Second Being in the Trinity.

¹³² Patrick (Commentary 1:74) on Gen. 18:2. St. Augustine (De trinitate 2.10–11 and 3.11) [PL 42. 881–883] in NPNFi (3:45–47, 65–68) objects that the Son of God (the Second Person of the Trinity) was not one of the three angels but that they represented the essence of the Trinity.

Q. Give us a Taste, of the Cakes made upon the Hearth, which were provided for the Guests of Abraham?

A. It is commonly interpreted, as if the Cakes were made upon the Coals, or, Hott Embers: [1. King. 19.6.] But Bochart thinks the Word, there and here, signifies, Hott Stones.¹³⁴

Others will have it, that they were laid upon the Hearth, and covered with Hott Embers. And so they præpare them at this Day; as Leon. Rawwolff tells us in his Travels. P.II.c.9. Hee saieth, That as he went thro' a Countrey, that lies between Mesopotamia and Media, a Woman presently made them Cakes, about a Finger Thick, & of the Bigness of a Trencher, which she first laid upon Hott Stones, and turned them often; & then threw Ashes & Embers over them; which, he saies, were very savoury.¹³⁵

¹³⁴ Patrick (Commentary 1:75) on Gen. 18:6. Samuel Bochart (Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 33, col. 327, lines 49ff).

¹³⁵ Patrick (Commentary 1:75) on Gen. 18:6. This culinary dish of the ancients is also offered in Mather's annotations on Gen. 18:6 (above). Dr. Leonhart Rauwolff (c. 1535–96), German physician, herbalist, and traveler, published a description of his journey to the Near East (1573–76), in his Eigentliche Beschreibung der Raiß inn die Morgenländerin (1582), which also appeared in a Dutch translation. Patrick cites from the English translation Travels into the Eastern Countries, published in John Ray's Collection of Curious Travels & Voyages (1693), part 2, ch. 9, pp. 201–02.

Q. A Remark on the Hospitality of the Patriarchs? v. 2.

A. The Patriarchs we find sitting at their Gates, to see those who pass by, & entreat them to come into their Houses. The Nations of the Orient, seem to have had a peculiar Disposition to these Exercises of Humanity; which continues in a great Measure to this day. It is yett a frequent Peece of Charity, to erect Caravanserahs, or Inns for the Reception of Travellers.

In the Sixth Iliad of Homer, the Hospitable Axylus, kept House near a frequented High Way; and releevd all Travellers. There is abundance of that Spirit every where in the Odyssees.¹³⁶

Q. The whole affayr, of Lot and his Wife; how disguised in the Traditions of the Pagans? v. 3.

A. We have it in their Fable of Baucis and Philemon.

They are characterised as Religious and Hospitable, in a Debouched & Barbarous Neighbourhood. They entertained Jupiter and Mercury, and were conducted out of the wicked Place of their Abode, by those Two Gods, who destroyed that profligate People, and overspread that cursed Countrey with a sudden Deluge.¹³⁷ 406.

Q. Is there any way to excuse Lot, from a Crime, in offering of his Daughters unto the Lusts of the filthy Sodomites? v. 8.

A. The Concern of the generous Patriarch for the Præservation of the Strangers now in his house, putt him upon an Action, hard enough to bee excused; tho' wee are willing to consider as much as may bee his present Exigency & Confusion, for his Excuse. But there is one, Don Isaac, who hath litt upon an Ingenious Contrivance, on the behalf of the Patriarch; which is this. Lot beheld, among the Crue that surrounded his House, the Two Sparks, which were Suitors, to his Two Daughters; and when hee proposed the Prostitution of his Daughters unto this abominable Herd, hee hoped that it would have raised the Mettle of his Intended Sons-in-Law to have Interposed for their Præservation: whereupon, hee thought, there would have ensued such a Quarrel among them, that by this Diversion of the Fury of the Dogs, upon one another, the Persons now sojourning with him, would have escaped their Violences.¹³⁸

Q. Had Lot any more Daughters than those two?

A. Some think he had; because of that Expression, Take thy two Daughters, which are here; as if he had more Daughters elsewhere. Hence R. Jehuda (in Pirke Elieser, c. 25.) mentions one of them expressly by Name, as married unto one of the great Men of Sodom, and calls her, Pelothit. But this rather seems to have been the Name of one of them who were saved by the Angels; and from thence called so: for it signifies, Delivered, or, Snatch'd from Destruction.¹³⁹

Q. Lot having proposed Zoar, as a safe Retreat, from the Desolation of Sodom, why did he so soon change his Mind, & go from Zoar to the Mountain?

A. Jerom ha's borrowed some Account of this from the Jewes, in his Hebrew Traditions. "It is frequently asked, [saith he,] why Lot, after he had first præfer'd Segor, to his Flight up the Mountain, that he desired it might escape, because he designed, to live there, should so soon alter his Mind, and depart from Segor, to the Mountain? We answer, That the Conjecture of the Hebrewes, concerning Segor, is agreeable to the Truth; namely, That it was frequently overthrown by Earthquakes, and was first called Bale, and afterward Salissa; and therefore Lot was afraid, and said unto himself, If while other Cities were standing, this was often subverted, how can it expect now to escape, in the Common Ruine?"¹⁴⁰

¹⁴⁰ See Heidegger (2:173–74, Exerc. VIII, § 18). The passage in quotation marks is Mather's translation of St. Jerome's Latin commentary on Gen. 19:30 (Quaestiones Hebraicae in Genesim: in Genes. XIX:30) [PL 23. 966B].

Q. Do wee find in Antiquity, any thing that may Resemble and Illustrate, the Destruction of Sodom?

A. Yes. A. C. 1348. there was, at Constantinople, an Earthquake, that endured for Forty Dayes; & it extended as far as Hungary and Italy. Twenty Six Cities were overthrown by it; Mountains torn up by the Roots; and several Men, Women, & Beasts, by that strange Exhalation, turned into Statues of Salt. Read Aventinus, and see his Account of this Passage.¹⁴¹

But a Karaite Commentator, whose Manuscript Works, are in the French Kings Library, lays down a General Maxim, That in the Translation of many Scriptures, the Word, AS, or, LIKE, is to be supplied. Thus, Ishmael will be [LIKE] a Wild Man. And thus, Lots Wife, – The Body being dried, & parched, & hardened, by the Heat of the Inflamed Air, did remain immoveable on the Place, like a Pillar of Salt.¹⁴²

Q. What is meant by, Fire & Brimstone? v. 24.

A. It signifies, Brimstone inflamed. And in the Hebrew Style, Inflamed Brimstone means Lightening.¹⁴³

145.

Q. How is it said, The Lord Rained from the Lord? Who is that Lord? v. 24.

A. The Destruction of the Sodomites, being an Act of Judgment, & a Type of the Last & Great Judgment, may very properly bee ascribed unto God the SON, by way of Eminency. Hence the Targum Hieros: thus renders this Place, Verbum Domini demisit super illos, Sulphur et Ignem, à facie Jehovæ de Cælis. All Christian Antiquity consents to this Exposition. I find no less than Twice Seven of the Fathers, mentaining it. But, that wee may not consent unto any other ¹⁴¹ Mather's primary source for this and the following paragraphs is Heidegger (2:177–78, Exerc. VIII, § 23). Heidegger cites at second hand Annalium Boiorum (1554), lib. 7, p. 791, by the Bavarian historian Johannes Aventinus (Thurmair), who describes at some length the earthquake of Feb. 8, 1348 and its devastations. Heidegger's second-hand quotation from Aventinus originates in De historia medica mirabilis (1613) 264, by the Italian physician Marcello Donati (1538–1602). The catastrophic earthquake of 1348, which occurred at the same time as the Black Death was spreading from the Mediterranean to N Europe, killed tens of thousands of people, and devastated cities in Cyprus, Turkey, Greece, Italy, and as far north as Austria, where triggering a landslide, the earthquake wiped out the town of Villach and its inhabitants.

¹⁴² Mather's unidentified Karaite commentator (Heidegger 2:178) subscribes to a literalist reading of the Hebrew Scriptures to the exclusion of the oral tradition of the rabbis (Mishnah and Talmud). Significantly, the Karaite commentator insists that the description of Lot's wife, who "became a pillar of salt" (Gen. 19:26), is a figure of speech and must be read as a simile, not a metaphor. In this modernist reading, the unidentified interpreter is joined by other rationalists, most notably Jean LeClerc (Twelve Dissertations [1696], Diss. X, pp. 238–77).

¹⁴³ Mather's figurative reading is up to par.

Interpretation, Wee have the Thunderbolts of a whole Council to keep us where wee are. It is an Article of the Syrmian Council, *Si quis id, quod Scriptum est, Pluit Dominus à Domino, non de Patre ac Filio Acceperit, sed ipsum Deum Patrem à Semet ipso pluuisse dixerit, Anathema sit. Pluit enim DEI Filius à DEO Patre.*¹⁴⁴

Q. Are there any Modern Remains of the Salt-Pillar, whereinto Lots Wife was turned? v. 26.

A. One of the Jewish Rabbins, would perswade us, that wee have not aright understood that History. Hee tells us, the Nominative Case to, Became, is not, Shee, but, It; namely, the Ground, mentioned in the Clause præceding; It became an Heap of Salt. But his Notion is not received; any more than that of some other Jewish Rabbins, who inform us, That shee was turned into Salt, by a Retaliating Punishment, because that under the Pretence of going about the Town to borrow Salt for their Supper, shee discovered unto the Wretches of the Town, that Strangers were come to her House. The Modern Relations, of her Saline Statue, being still to bee seen, you must beleeve with Discretion. And, I beleeve you will find it hard enough to beleeve, Irenæus, in Prose, telling us, Uxor remansit in Sodomis, jam non caro corruptibilis, sed statua salis semper manens, et per Naturalia ea, quæ sunt consuetudinis Hominis ostendens. Or, Tertullian in Verse,

Ipsaque Imago sibi formam sine corpore servans
Durat adhuc. Etenim nudâ statione sub æthrâ,
Nec pluvijs dilapsa situ, nec diruta ventis.
 Quin etiam, si quis mutilaverit advena formam,
 Protinus ex sese suggestu vulnera complet.

¹⁴⁴ Heidegger (2:174–75, Exerc. VIII, § 19). The Latin citation is adapted from the Targum Onkelos – not from the Targum Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 19:24), in Walton (1:77, 4:33), as Heidegger erroneously claims. At any rate, the passage reads, “The Word of the Lord rained upon them [Sedom and Amorah], sulphur and fire from before Jehovah from the heavens” (Etheridge 1:72). Ironically, both the Targums Jonathan ben Uziel and Hierosolymitanum render this destructive rainfall as “showers of favour” (Etheridge 1:217). Among the many early Church Fathers who agree that it was God’s son (“The Word”) who rained judgment upon Sodom and Gomorrah are Tertullian (Against Praxeas, ch. 13), in ANF (3:608); St. Athanasius (Four Discourses 2.15.13), in NPNFii (4:355); Irenæus (Against Heresies 3.6.1), in ANF (1:418); and Constitutions of the Holy Apostles (5.3.20), in ANF (7:448). The Syrmian (Sirmian) Council, or rather the three Councils of Sirmium (347–59 CE), held in Sirmium, Pannonia (modern Sremska Mitrovica, in Serbia), convened to settle the dispute between the Arians and the Homoeousians. The former denied the divinity of Christ; the latter insisted that the Son of God is of the same substance as the Father (co-essentialism). The Confession of the Council of Sirmium – along with its various redefinitions – can be found in St. Athanasius (De Synodis, part II, §§ 27–32), in NPNFii (4:464–68). Mather (via Heidegger) cites from the Confession of Sirmium (De Synodis, part II, § 27, art. 17, p. 465), which anathematizes all dissenters as follows: “Whosoever shall explain, ‘The Lord rained fire from the Lord’ (Gen. xix.24), not of the Father and the Son, and says that He rained from Himself, be he anathema. For the Son, being Lord, rained from the Father Who is Lord.”

*Dicitur et vivens alio iam corpore sexus,
Munificos solito dispungere sanguine menses.*

Mr. Pyles gives us the Matter well, in his Paraphrase. “She was overtaken by the Storm, which wrapt her Body so thick, with Nitro-Sulphureous Matter, as to congeal & candy it, into a Substance as hard as a Stone, & left it like a Pillar of Rock-Salt.”¹⁴⁵

495.

Q. What thought the Daughters of Lot, when they said, There is not a Man in the Earth, to come in unto us? v. 31.

A. Aben-Ezra tells us, The silly Girls imagined, that the Fire had now made or was making as universal a Devastation of Mankind, as the Flood had a few Ages before. If so, their Incest is a Crime, for which there may be found some little Extenuation.¹⁴⁶

Q. We find, that beside Sodom and Gomorrhah, there were two other Cities, namely Adma and Seboim, [Deut. 29.23. and Hos. 11.8.] destroy’d; why is the mention of these two, omitted in the History of Genesis?

¹⁴⁵ Heidegger (2:177, Exerc. VIII, § 23). R. Bachya ben Asher identifies R. Abraham Ibn Ezra, who claims that “the word וְהָיָה [wattehi] in our verse refers to the ‘earth.’ In other words, the earth beneath her turned into a pillar of salt, not she herself.” However, citing Genesis Rabbah (LI:5), R. Bachya ben Asher agrees with R. Isaac, who avers that Lot’s wife was punished by being turned into a pillar of salt because having quarreled with her husband over salt, she went to her neighbors “to alert them to the fact that her husband was entertaining guests, against the law of the town” (Torah Commentary 1:314). Much the same is offered on the punishment of Lot’s wife, by Rashi (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:234). Mather here seconds Jean LeClerc’s caveat that modern eye-witness accounts are as untrustworthy as those of the ancients (Twelve Dissertations, Diss. X, 238–77). LeClerc also agrees with those of his rabbinic colleagues who argue that the soil in the area of Sodom (Deut. 29:23), not Lot’s wife herself, was turned into salt (242–43). For a highly informative discussion of the Pillar of Salt in history, its miraculous longevity, disappearance, and occasional return throughout the ages, see A. D. White (History of Warfare 2:221–56). Mather’s second-hand Latin citation from Irenaeus’s Adversus haereses (4.31.3) translates, “the wife remained in Sodom, no longer corruptible flesh, but a pillar of salt which endures for ever; and by those natural processes which appertain to the human race” (ANF 1:505). The citation from Carmen de Sodoma (3.49–55) [PL 2. 1104B], a work attributed to Tertullian, loosely reads, Lot’s wife “changed into brittle salt, herself her tomb / She stood, herself an image of herself, / Keeping an incorporeal form: and still / In her unsheltered station ‘neath the heaven / [En]dures she, by rains unmelted, by decay / And winds unwasted; nay, if some strange hand / Deface her form, forthwith from her own store / Her wounds she doth repair. Still is she said / To live, and, ‘mid her corporal change, discharge / With wonted blood her sex’s monthly dues” (A Strain of Sodom 165–73), in ANF (4:131). Finally, Mather rounds out his commentary on Gen. 19:26 with a citation from Thomas Pyle’s A Paraphrase with Short and Useful Notes (1717) 1:109, § 26.

¹⁴⁶ Heidegger (2:179–80, Exerc. VIII, § 26). Ibn Ezra’s annotations on Gen. 19:31 (Commentary 1:210).

A. The Reason why those two Cities are omitted, seems to be, because the Kings of these Places, were Tributary to those of Sodom and Gomorrhah.

Strabo indeed, in his Sixteenth Book, mentions, not only Four Cities, as having been here subverted by Subterraneous Fire, but Thirteen. Perhaps he was deceived in this Matter, as well as he was, in beleeving, that the Lacus Serbonis, was the same with the Asphaltites. Or, perhaps Nine other smaller Towns, which depended on these Four, may have been destroy'd with them. 'Tis very certain, That Ezekiel mentions, not only Sodom, but her Daughters. And it is likely, That Strabo a Man of a wonderful Diligence, & infinite Reading, might have an Account of the Number of these Cities, from some Phœnician Writer.¹⁴⁷

Q. What further Curiositie, do you see, in the Time & Cause of Sodom's Destruction?

A. It is observable, How soon after the Institution of Circumcision, the Cities came to Destruction, which had hideously abused that Member, whereon the Institution had Imprinted the Seal, of the Covenant for the Land.¹⁴⁸

Q. What is there to confirm the Opinion, of an Earthquake accompanying the Overthrow of Sodom?

A. The Tradition of it, is very constant among the Heathen; that there was then a dreadful Earthquake, which made an irruption of those Bituminous Waters, whereby this Countrey was turned into the Lake Asphaltites. Consult Strabo. Nor doth it seem improbable, that the Earth quaked, while the Heavens did so terribly frown, & thunder & lighten. The Word καταστροφῇ, used by the Apostle Peter for this Matter, [2. Pet. 2.6.] may well seem to import some such Subversion.¹⁴⁹

Q. What Remark ha's been made, upon the Two Names, which the Two Daughters of Lot, putt upon their Incestuous Offspring?

A. Munster ha's a Note, That the Impudence of the Elder was greater than that of the Younger. For she does in the Name of her Child, [Moab] continue ¹⁴⁷ Heidegger (2:175–76, Exerc. VIII, §§ 20–21). Strabo (16.2.44).

¹⁴⁹ This paragraph is extracted from Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 19:24 (Commentary 1:79). The "Lake Asphaltites" (Asphaltic Lake) is the Dead Sea. Strabo (16.2.42–43). For the celestial fire consuming the region and turning it into a bituminous lake, see Tacitus (Historiarum 5.6–7). The Greek noun used by Peter is "catastrophe" (2 Peter 2:6).

the Name of her Fact. The Modesty of the Younger was greater than that of the Elder: As the Name of the Child, [The Son of my People,] intimates.¹⁵⁰

Q. And what sort of a Sea, is the Dead-Sea, which is now risen where Sodom stood?

A. The Countrey is become a Pan of such a strange Moisture, that it may be called, a Liquid Pitch rather than Water. So stiff it is, that no Wind will move it; nor will a Camel sink, if thrown into it; nor any Fish or Fowl subsist in it. Salmasius thinks, Tis called, The Dead Sea, because no Creature can live there, and because the Noisome Steams that come from it, blast all the Fruits of the Earth about it. Nor do the Rivers that run into it, at all alter it; but it infects all their Waters with the loathsome Qualities of those Dregs of Gods Wrath, which first settled in it, at the Overthrow of the wicked Cities.¹⁵¹

In the next Chapter, we find Abraham Travelling towards the South. Some think, T'was because the Stench of the Lake of Sodom, was offensive to him in Mamre.¹⁵²

Q. One Touch more, if you please, upon the History of Lots Wife being turned into a Pillar of Salt?

A. The Jewes give her the Name of Adith, [in Pirke Elieser. c. 25.] because of her continuing a Testimony of the Displeasure of God. She standing still too long, some of the dreadful Shower before mentioned, overtook her; and falling upon her, it wrapt her Body in a Sheet of Nitro-Sulphureous Matter, which congealed into a Crust as hard as a Stone, and made her appear as a Pillar of Salt; her Body being, as it were candied in it. Thus Dr. Patrick expresses it; and I have not seen this Matter any where better expressed.

It is probable, That the Fable of Niobe was derived from hence; who, as the Poets feign, was turned into a Stone, upon her excessive Passion, for the Death of her Children.¹⁵³

Q. A Word more upon the Fact of Lots Daughters?

A. This Fact was objected by Celsus, against our Holy Religion. But Origen, in answer, urges, (what we have already hinted,) That the Two Maids having learn'd something of the Conflagration of the World, & seeing their own Countrey consumed by such a Conflagration, they concluded, that Σώπυρον τοῦ γένους τῶν ἀνθρώπων, The Seminary of Mankind, remained only in their Father and in them. Irenæus makes the same Excuse for them, and saies, *They did this Innocently, and in their Simplicity, beleeving that all Mankind was destroy'd.*¹⁵⁴

But then, Dr. Patrick, takes their Conjecture, to be highly probable, who conceive, that the eager Desire, which then possessed the Hearts of good People, to fulfil the Promise of the Messiah, was that which putt them upon this otherwise monstrous Crime. For, since they lived so chastly in the Midst of the Impurities of Sodom, one cannot think, that the unchast & unclean Spirit now entred into them. And their Joining together in such a thing, which Persons would have concealed from the nearest Friends in the World, argues that they were acted by Design & Counsel, & not by Brutish Lust. And their perpetuating the Memory of the Fact, in the Names of their Children, is a Demonstration of something extraordinary in it, which they were not much Ashamed of.

They thought, perhaps, that Lot might pretend unto the Fulfilment of the Promise, as well as Abraham; he being the Son of Abraham's elder Brother, & called out of Sodom by the Ministry of good Angels, as Abraham was out of Chaldaea.¹⁵⁵

¹⁵⁵ Simon Patrick (Gen. 19:32) does his best to weave a coverlet for this ignominious detail of OT history (Commentary 1:80).

[See more in the Appendix.]¹⁵⁶

Q. What the Signification of Moab?

A. Most will have it, From my Father. But I rather incline to Drusius, who, (on Deut. 2.8.) will have it, Aqua Patris.¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁷ Mather’s source is Simon Patrick’s annotation on Gen. 19:37 (Commentary 1:81). The Latin citation from the Dutch scholar Joannes Drusius (Driesche) translates euphemistically “the father’s water” and appears in Critici Sacri (1:1150).

Q. The Two Distresses of Abraham & Sarah, the one from Pharaoh, the other from Abimelek, resemble one another, almost as much as Two Drops of Water. Only there is this little Difference between the Two Narratives; Moses expressly saies, That Abimelek did not come near to Sarah; but he gives no such Account, whether Pharaoh did, or no? v. 4.

A. Theodoret beleeves, That the Sacred Historian uses this Præcaution here, with respect unto Abimelek, to stop the Mouth of Slander; Because that Sarah was brought to bed, the same Year, that this Occurrence happened.¹⁵⁸

Q. Why does Abimelek say, Lord, wilt thou slay a Righteous Nation? when only he himself was the Person concerned? v. 4.

A. Perhaps, he had a large Family, which might be called, a Sort of a Nation.

But Luther saies, The true Reason of this Expression is this. Abimelek was a good Man; and he knew, from what he had seen in the World, that Subjects are often punished for the Sins of their Princes. Propter Regem impium. Sæpè totus populus plectitur; sicut etiam propter sanctum principem Deus toti Regno benedicit.

There is a Verse in Hesiod, which intimates, that the Crimes of One Man may bring Plagues on a whole City. Luther quotes Horace for it; Delirant Reges, plectuntur Achivi. He adds another Observation;

¹⁵⁹ Ibn Ezra's commentary on Gen. 20:4 solves the apparent contradiction in this way: “The term nation includes Abimelech, his household and his kingdom” (Commentary 1:211). Mather cites from Martin Luther's Lectures on Genesis chapters 15–20 (Gen. 20:4–5), “that an entire people is often punished because of an ungodly king, just as God also blesses an entire kingdom because of a saintly ruler” (Luther's Works 3:332). To confirm this truism, Luther also cites Hesiod (Opera et Dies 238) and Horace (Epistolae 1.2.14) – the latter translates, “[Whatever] folly the kings commit, the Achaeans pay the penalty” (Luther's Works 3:332). Furthermore, Luther observes that “there is no greater misfortune for kingdoms than the decease of pious and saintly rulers” (Luther's Works 3:332).

Q. How was Abimelek withheld from Sinning? v. 6.

A. Why not, by a Disease in the Secret Parts? Compare, v. 17.¹⁶⁰

Q. He is a Prophet. What Remark upon this Clause? v. 7.

A. This is the First Time, that we meet with the Word, NABI, a Prophet. And Abraham is the first that is honoured with this Name. It signifies, one familiar with God; who may come unto Him, to consult Him upon all Occasions; & have Authority to declare His Mind & Will unto others; Yea, and by his Prayers obtain a Blessing upon them.¹⁶¹

Q. That Passage, I thought, Surely the Fear of God is not in this Place: how may it be taken? v. 11.

A. The Word, Rak, which we translate, Surely, signifies, Only. And it may be thus well translated here; This only I saw wanting in your Countrey, the Fear of God. It seems, the People were not so good as their King.¹⁶² 3427.

Q. What was the real Kindred, between Abraham and Sarah? v. 12.

A. She is the Daughter of my Father; saies Abraham. That is to say, She was his Fathers Grand-Daughter; who are frequently in Scripture called, The Children of their Grandfathers.

She was Daughter to Haran, the elder Brother of Abraham. Terah had Two Wives; By one of them, he had Haran, the Father of Lot and Sarah; By the other he had Abraham. Sarah was Daughter to one who was his Brother by the Fathers Side, but not by the Mothers. With such a Niece they thought it not unlawful to marry. R. Solomon Jarchi thinks, there was no regard had unto Consanguinity by the Fathers Side, before the Law of Moses, but only by the Mothers.

By the way; Said Batricides (Patriarch of Alexandria, above seven Hundred Years ago,) in his Arabic History, tells us, The Name of Terah's first Wife was Jona, and the Name of his Second, Tevitha, by whom he had Sarah. And the general Opinion of the Hebrew Doctors, is, That Sarah was the Daughter of Terah, & the Sister of Abraham, in such a way.¹⁶³

¹⁶⁰ Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen 20:6 (Commentary 1:81).

¹⁶¹ Patrick on Gen. 20:7 (Commentary 1:81).

¹⁶² Patrick on Gen. 20:11 (Commentary 1:82).

Q. What means Abimelech, in his Words unto Sarah, about, The Covering of her Eyes? v. 16.

A. Interpreters have taken almost as great a Liberty, in the Expounding of this Passage, as Abimelek was going to do, in that which was the Occasion of it. The various Opinions of Expositors, are collected by Pfeiffer, who at length gives his own Decision, with which I choose to concur, Donum mille Argenteorum Saræ oblatum, vocatur velamen oculorum, in publicum Testimonium illibatæ utrinque Fidei conjugalæ et pudicitie.

Abimelek is here studying to Reconcile himself unto Abraham & unto Sarah. Unto Abraham hee offered his Land; unto Sarah, hee said, “Here, I have given a Thousand Peeces of Silver, unto thy Husband, who ha’s prov’d himself to bee, what hee call’d himself, Thy Brother, as well as thy Husband: And it is for thy Sake, and thy Use, that I have given it. Behold, IT shall bee to thee a Covering of the Eyes; that is, it shall bee a Public Testimony, that thou hast not been a Prostitute Adulteress, but an Honest & a Worthy Matron, even such an one as uses to keep her Face covered. I do here make this Public Protestation, both before thy own Domesticks, & before all other People, that thou hast kept the Covering of thine Eyes, ever since thy abode in this Place; & the unveiled Face of them that have but a suspected Chastity belongs not unto thee.”

And accordingly, That Expression, Thus shee was Reproved, calls for quite another Translation, than what wee have given it. The Hebrew Word there employ’d נִכְחַת no where else carries that Signification. And Sarah did not so much now want a Reproof, when Abraham had already made her Excuse. Nor would Abimelek now go to Exacerbations, when hee was making Satisfaction on all hands. Yea, hee had already made it. I choose rather to read this Clause, either, So thou shalt bee Innocent; or, Thus shee was found Innocent.¹⁶⁴

Well, but at least One Intimation from another Interpreter, upon this Passage, may not be too much? v. 16.

Gerundensis ha’s this brief and good Gloss upon it. “Behold, The Present which I have made thee, shall be a Covering of the Eyes unto all that come near thee; they shall not after this dare to open their Eyes, that they may look upon two different mothers: Jona (Yunà) and Tevitha (Tohwait, Tehevitha). See Edward Pococke’s translation Contextio Gemmarum ... Annales (1656), lib. 1, pp. 66–67. Heidegger (2:52, Exerc. III, § 3) offers much the same.

thee; they shall say, King Abimelek was forced with a costly Present, to Redeem his own Life, when he went to meddle with such a Wife of a Prophet of God.”¹⁶⁵

Honest Mr. George Swinnock ha’s an agreeable Gloss upon it. “The Eye is the Tenderest Part of the Body. God ha’s provided a special Cover to fence it. When God would speak of His Infinite Respect unto His People, He sais, They are to Him as the Apple of His Eye. The Husbands ought to be as Tender of their Wives, as the Apple of their Eyes.”¹⁶⁶

¹⁶⁵ Mather’s second-hand citation from Moses Gerundensis, now better known as R. Moshe ben Nachmanides (Ramban), essentially corresponds to the modern translation of Ramban’s Commentary (1:265).

Q. Our learned Heidegger supplies us, with many rich Illustrations upon the Matters of the Patriarchs. To Translate or Transcribe the whole of his Exercitationes, would not answer the Design of the Work, we are upon; which is, To make a Collection of the Finer Thoughts, wherewith Men of Erudition, have Illustrated the Sacred Scriptures. And yett, rather than scatter them asunder, to be lodg'd at their several Texts, we would chuse to have the Finer Thoughts of our Heidegger as much together, as a Particular Subject will allow. Wherefore, what you find more observable in him, concerning the affairs of ISAAC, and his Two Sons; Lett us have all here together, if you please, in one Entertainment? v. 1.

A. It shall be so.¹⁶⁷

We won't concern ourselves, with the cabalistical Curiosities of the Jewes on the Name of Isaac; How י' as a Numeral, remembers the Ten Temptations of his Father: י"ט 90, remembers the Age of his Mother at his Nativity: י"ח 8, remembers the Day of his Circumcision; י"ק 100, remembers the Age of his Father.¹⁶⁸

He was miraculously born, of a Mother, become like a Cistern. [See Isa. 51.1, 2.] Her Suckling of him, was not only a lively Proof of her Bearing of him; but it also provokes Ambrose to say; Provocantur eo exemplo Famine, ut meminerint Dignitatis suæ, et lactent ipsæ filios suos. Phavorinus ha's a memorable Dissertation upon this Duty of Giving Suck in A. Gellius; L.XII. And Aristotle [Polit. VII.17.] and Plutarch [De Lib. Educ.] press it mightily.¹⁶⁹

Abraham celebrates a Feast, at the Weaning of Isaac. Why not at his Nativity, or Circumcision? Austin Answers the Quæstion; Quod nisi ad aliquam spiritualem significationem referatur, nulla solutio questionis est. Tum scilicet esse debere magnum gaudium spirituale ætatis, quandò fuerit factus homo novus spiritualis, hoc est, non talis, qualibus dixit Apostolus, Lac vobis potum dedi, non escam; nondum enim poteratis, sed nec adhuc potestis. To the like Purpose Ambrose. Our Heidegger thinks, it might be the Custome of the Countrey. However, from Abraham, the Israelites took it up; as you find in the Story of Samuel. They did it, that they might express their Thanks to Heaven, for bringing on their Infant thus far; and their Hopes of its going & growing on to further Manhood; & that they might engage Friends unto their increasing Families. The Rabbis tell us, That Isaac was now Four and Twenty Months old.¹⁷⁰

The rest of the Life of Isaac, is considered by our Heidegger, with much Demonstration of Reading and Learning. But there do not occur in his Exercitation, any Illustrations of that finer Constitution, which we would chuse to single out, for the Work now upon our Hands.¹⁷¹

Of the Two Sons, Esau and Jacob, which were born unto Isaac, the former seems to have been præferr'd by the Patriarch, in his Fondness, & in his Blessing. It is a Quæstion, How this Conduct of Isaac, was consistent with his Knowledge and Regard of the Oracle, Gen. 25.23. The Elder shall serve the Younger. Some think, That Isaac had forgotten it. But our Heidegger inclines rather to think, That he understood not the Sense of it; he was not sensible, That the Prophecy about the Struggles between the People that should be the Offspring of these Two Sons, did at all concern the Sons themselves. And in the Providence of God, there fell out various Occasions, to engage differently the Affections of the Parents, to the Persons of these their Sons. Esau, was not only the Elder, but also more than ordinarily officious to his Father, and his Officiousness rather than his Venison procured a singular Fondness of his Father for him. But as Chrysostom notes, *Ἡ προρρησις κατὰ μικρὸν εἰς ἔργον ἐξηεῖ. Prædestinatio brevi in opus exibat.*¹⁷²

Jacob had Opportunity, to purchase from Esau his Birthright, by a Pottage of Lentiles, which hungry Esau, upon his Return from Hunting, found that he had præpared. [Gen. 25.29, 30, 34.] Heidegger upon the mention of this, commends the Frugality, in an House of so much Plenty. Ælian reports and applauds, the like Simplicity, with Frugality, in the Diet of the Ancients. The Arcades, he saies, fed much, upon Acorns; the Argives upon Apples; the Athenians upon Figs; the Tyrinthians upon Wild-Pears; the Indians, upon Reeds; the Sauromates, upon Millet; the Carmans upon Dates; and the Persians, upon Cresses.

¹⁷⁰ Heidegger (2:215). St. Augustine offers the following explanation in his Quaestiones in Heptateuchum (lib. 1): Quaestiones in Genesim (cap. 50) [PL 34. 560]: "Unless this can be referred to some spiritual significance, there is no answer to the question. In that case, of course, this is that there must be great rejoicing of the spirit for the age when a spiritually renewed man would arise, not such an one as those to whom the Apostle [St. Paul, 1 Cor. 3:2] said, 'I gave you milk to drink, not solid food; for you were not yet ready, and indeed you are still not ready.'" See St. Ambrosius Mediolanensis (De Abraham libri duo, lib. 1, cap. 7) [PL 14. 444A–B].

¹⁷¹ Heidegger (2:215).

Upon the Lentiles here desired by Esau, you shall have the Observation of Austin; Lenticulam invenimus cibum esse Ægyptiorum; nam ibi abundat in Ægypto; unde magnificatur lenticula Alexandrina, et venit, usque in terras nostras, quasi hic non nascatur lenticula. Ergò desiderando Esau cibum Ægyptiacum | perdidit primatum. [362v] We find, Lentiles [Φάκη] a Diet in request among the Philosophers; especially the Grecian ones. Athenæus tells us, That Zeno made much use of it; Yea, that it was a Dogma of the Stoicks; Sapientem omnia rectè agere, et lentem diligenter condire. It is a Figment of the Jewes, That the Patriarchs used it only when they had much Sorrow of Mind upon them; and that Jacob was now very sorrowful, either because of Esau's retaining still the Birthright, or for the Death of his Grandfather Abraham, which fell out about this Time. Heidegger saies upon it; In quâ culinâ coqui hi id didicerint, viderint ipsi. Esau, in his Hunger pressing for a Mess of this Lentile-Pottage, our Jacob takes the Occasion, to propose unto him, a Bargain about his Birthright. In the Family of Isaac, the Birthright, had his peculiar Prærogative annexed unto it, that the Messiah was to have His Descent from the Person, to whom it belonged. The Profanity of Esau now appears the more sensibly, on this Occasion.¹⁷³ But when Esau said, Behold, I am at the Point to Dy; and what Profit shall this Birthright do to me? it seems not easy to imagine, that in so well-provided a Family as Isaac's, the young Man must have perished, for Famine, if this Lentile-Broth had been denied unto him, or that his Brother would have been such a Brute as to have seen him rather perish, than releve his Necessity. But Esau seems to mean, That he led a Life exposed unto continual Danger of Death, in his Hunting; and that he was likely enough to Dy before his Father; And in that Case, of what Profit would his Birthright be unto him? So Aben-Ezra carries it; Quia quotidie periculis se ipsum exponebat, sicut exivit ad venandum, forte Bestia ipsum occidissent, atque sic fieri poterat, ut moreretur antè patrem suum. He spoke like an Epicurean, or a Sybarite; like one wholly Regardless of a Life to come; In the Language afterwards used by his true Offspring; [Isa.

173 Heidegger (2:232, Exerc. XII, § 6). Claudius Aelianus (De varia historia 3.39, Historical Miscellany 168–71) testifies to the preferences of the Mediterranean and Eastern peoples for figs, cereals, and fruits. In his Enarrationes in Psalmos (XLVII, § 6) [PL 36. 527], St. Augustine glosses on Esau's voracious appetite for Jacob's lentils: “Lentils we find to be the food of the Egyptians, for there it abounds in Egypt. Whence is so magnified the lentil of Alexandria, that it comes even to our country, as if here grew no lentil. Therefore by desiring Egyptian food he [Esau] lost his birthright” (NPNFi 8:162). Athenaeus Naucratis (4.47.1–4.48.25) satirizes the predilection of his Greek conferees for lentils, especially when prepared in the Zenonian style. He pokes fun at Zeno and the Stoic maxim that “the wise man will do all things rightly, even to the wise seasoning of lentil soup” (Deipnosophists 4.158a). Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 35, p. 262) documents that “Lentils are the food of mourning and sorrow.” See also the Talmudic tractate Baba Bathra (16b), but Genesis Rabbah (LXIII:14) relates that “As a lentil symbolises mourning, yet also joy, so here too there was mourning – because of Abraham's death, and joy – because Jacob received the birthright.” Finally, Heidegger (2:232) comments, “They will have seen for themselves in what sort of kitchen these men learned to cook it.” Esau's belly-aching exclamation appears in Gen. 25:32.

22.13.] Lett us Eat & Drink, for to morrow we shall Dy. The Jerusalem-Targum ha's a Just Reflection on this Action of Esau; *Contempsit Esau primogenituram, et floccipendit partem futuri sæculi, negavitque Resurrectionem mortuorum.*¹⁷⁴

There ha's appear'd a little Difficulty, in this; That we find, Gen. 33.16. Esau returned on his Way to Seir; as his home. And yett afterwards we find; Gen. 36.6, 7, 8. Esau took all his Substance, which he had gott in the Land of Canaan, & went into the Countrey, from the face of his Brother Jacob; For their Riches were more than that they might dwell together. Thus dwelt Esau in Mount Seir. Austin solves the Difficulty; He saies, That when Jacob return'd unto his Father at Hebron, Esau did so too; & there dwelt peaceably with his Brother, unto the Death of their Father; and then, to præserve the Peace between them, he went back unto Mount Seir again.¹⁷⁵

We find a considerable Number of Dukes, among the Sons of Esau. Jarchi takes these Dukes to be no more than /ראשׁ משפחות/ The Heads of the Families. But as the Families grew more Numerous, the Dukes anon swell'd into Kings. We have so large a Catalogue of them, that our Heidegger thinks, it must be fill'd up, after the Death of Moses, in after-times, by some Holy Writer. But then the New Sett of Eleven Dukes, which you have after the Kings, do not seem to have succeeded after the Kings, but to have governed under them, in their several Dynasties.¹⁷⁶

The Birth of Jacob had something extraordinary attending of it; Quòd cùm Fœtus quisque suam habeat secundinam, quâ involutus prodeat, hic suam membranam rumpat Jacobus, ut manu exertâ Fratrem alterâ membranâ involutum apprehendat. Aben-Ezra calls this, /פליאה גדולה/ Miraculum Magnum.¹⁷⁷

There ha's been a Quæstion moved by some; How the Character of a Plain, Honest, Upright Man, assigned unto Jacob, in the Scripture, is consistent with his Carriage towards his Brother Esau, in Purchasing his Birthright from him:

¹⁷⁴ Heidegger (2:234, Exerc. XII, § 9). The apology from Abraham Ibn Ezra's annotation on Gen. 25:32 (Commentary 1:253) has been rendered, "He was daily exposed to danger when he went out hunting, as an animal might kill him. Thus there was a possibility that he would predecease his father." Both the Epicureans and the Sybarites – hedonists all – denied the immortality of the soul. 1 Cor. 15:32. The "Just Reflection" of the Targum Hierosolymitanum (on Gen. 25:34), in Walton (4:47), charges that "Esau despised the birthright, and vilified the portion in the world that cometh, and denied the resurrection of the dead" (Etheridge 1:242).

¹⁷⁵ Heidegger (2:235, Exerc. XII, § 12). St. Augustine's solution appears in his Quæstiones in Heptateuchum (lib. 1): Questiones in Genesim (Quest. 119) [PL 34. 579].

¹⁷⁶ Heidegger (2:236, Exerc. XII, § 15). Jarchi (Rashi), on Gen. 36:15, classifies these "Dukes" or "chieftains" as "The heads of the clans" (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:448).

especially, when we consider, how severely the Apostle Peter animadverted on one, for Offering Money towards the Purchasing of Spiritual Blessings. The Papists and the Hebrewes, take much Pains, to clear Jacob, from all Fault in the Matter. Bonfrerius having answered all Objections, concludes with this Επικρισις, Dico tamen Jacobum nullo modo peccasse. Menasseh Ben Israel brings it off with this; Eum impulit spiritualium Bonorum cupido, quibus præ minore primogenitus fruitur: hæc enim alteri quàm merenti obtingere iniquum est. Our Heidegger thinks, That Jacobs Action in this Matter, was not without Infirmary; which may serve to sett off the Free-Grace of God, in ordering the glorious Issue of it. | We read of Jacob; Gen. 33.19. He bought a Field, at the Hand of the Children of Hamor, Shechems Father. But we read; Act. 7.16. Abraham bought it. We have elsewhere brought several Solutions of this Difficulty.¹⁷⁸ Our Heidegger offers another, that seems to him, as acceptable as any of them. 'Tis no rare thing for a Son, to be called by the Name of his Father, or Grandfather. When the Israelites would renounce a Part in Rehoboam, they said; 1. King. 12.16. What Part have we in David? We read of a perpetual War, 1. King. 15.6. between Rehoboam, and Jeroboam all their Dayes; whereas Abijah is also intended. The Messiah is called by the Name of David. If you look into profane Writers, Æneas is by Virgil styled Dardanus. Æn. 4. And Stephen might the more aptly putt upon Jacob the Name of Abraham here, because it was unto Abraham, that God had given the Promise, of bringing his Children, to a Portion in this Land. And why may, it not be said, That Abraham obtained this Field, as well as, that Jacob obtained the Cave of Macpelah? [Compare, Gen. 50.5, 13.]¹⁷⁹

While Jacob sojourns at Bethel, and is upon his Journey out of Mesopotamia into Canaan; we read; Gen. 35.8. Deborah, Rebeckahs Nurse died, and was buried there. How came Deborah into Jacobs Family? When we read, [Gen. 24.59.] That she came with Rebeckah, out of Mesopotamia, into Canaan. The Hebrewes have a Tradition, That Rebeckah sent her to Jacob in Mesopotamia, with her Message unto him, to, Return; for she had said, [Gen. 27.45.] I will send and fetch thee. Others think, Rebeckah might now be Dead; and therefore Deborah betook herself to the Family of Jacob, as the best Retreat she could have. Perhaps, the Love of her Countrey, as well as of Jacobs Family, might have some Influence

¹⁷⁹ Heidegger (2:247, Exerc. XIII, § 8). Virgil (Aeneid 4.163, 224, 365 etc.) calls Aeneas by the name of Dardanus (son of Jupiter and Electra). Heidegger points to “voce Δαιδαλου” (Stephanus Byzantius 216.10), a discussion of Daedalus and Icarus as interchangeable names since one implies the other.

upon her. Doubtless, the Singular Piety of the Matron, might be the Reason, why the Death and Burial of Deborah, is mentioned in the Scriptures, Quæ (as our Heidegger observes) nisi graves ob causas, rationem mulierum non habet.¹⁸⁰

The Place of Rachels Dying in Child-birth, is thus described; Gen. 35.16. There was but a little Way to come to Ephrath. There ha's been a great Geographical Controversy managed about this little Way. The LXX [at Gen. 48.7.] explains it, κατὰ τον Ἰππόδρομον. About an Horse-race. This was a Space of Ground well-known, among the Egyptians, to whom the LXX accommodated themselves. There was a famous one at Alexandria, mention'd by Strabo, by Dion Chrysostom, and by Philostratus: Yea, and in the Third Book of the Maccabees; and by Josephus called, An Amphitheatre. The Magnitude of That Hippodrome at Alexandria, is not remembred. But that at Rome, was according {to} Dionysius Halicarnassæus, of Three Furlongs and an half; tho' Pliny makes it no more than Three Furlongs. A Furlong among the Grecians, was an hundred Paces; among the Romans, an Hundred & twenty five. But there were Six Foot, in a Greek Pace, and Five in a Roman; so their Furlong was the same. We will not suppose the Alexandrian Hippodrome so large; but rather allow it the Dimensions of the Byzantine one, mentioned by Petrus Gillius, in his History of Constantinople. Suppose it, Two Furlongs and an Half; This amounted unto a Thousand Cubits; and this was præcisely, The little Way, in the Text now before us. And R. Benjamin of Tudela, visiting the Sepulchre of Rachel, finds it at just such a Distance from Bethlehem.¹⁸¹

Heidegger interposes, before we go any further, an Exercitation, De Testamento Isaci.¹⁸² Here he observes, the Difference between Isaacs Blessing on Jacob, and his Blessing on Esau. Of Esau, he promised, That his Dwelling should be, where he should enjoy the Fatness of the Earth, and the Dew of Heaven. And that his Posterity, should live in frequent Wars, & fall under the Dominion of the Israelites; but at last shake off their Yoke, & have Dominion over them. The Jerusalem Targum, ha's this Paraphrase upon it; Eritque quando filij Jacob operam

¹⁸¹ Heidegger (2:254–57, Exerc. XIII, § 21). The Greek citation is from the LXX (Gen. 48:7). Strabo (17.1.10), Dion Cocceianus Chrysostom (Orationes 20.10.2; see also 32.76.5; 52.1.5), Flavius Philostratus (Vita Apollonii 5.26.1–4), 3 Macc. 6:16, and Flavius Josephus (Jewish Wars 2.18.7) – all mention the Hippodrome of Alexandria. Dionysius Halicarnassus (Antiquitates Romanae 3.68.1) and Pliny (36.24.102–110) celebrate Tarquinius, whose Circus Maximus in Rome sported such innovations as covered seats. The Byzantine historian Petrus Gillius of Alby (1490–1555), in P. Gyllii De Constantinopoleos topographia, lib. IV (1632), lib. 1, cap. 7, pp. 47–50, describes the hippodrome of Constantinople, built by Emperor Severus, but borrows his data from the Synopsis historica (1.7), by Constantine Manasses (c. 1130–c. 1187), the Byzantine chronicler of Naupactus. Finally, Benjamin of Tudela (Itinerarium 85–86) argues that the distance from Bethlehem to the tomb of Rachel at Hebron is “six parasangs,” or c. 19.5 miles/33.6 km (Itinerary 40).

*dabunt legi, servabuntque præcepta, imponent Jugum servitutis super collum tuum. Cùm verò attriverint se Filij Jacob, ut non studeant legi, neque servaverint præcepta, ecce tunc excuties jugum servitutis à collo tuo.*¹⁸³ But the later Jewes, understand their falling under the Idumean Yoke, to be fulfilled in their present Condition under the Roman Captivity. Idumæa was, a very Fertile Countrey; tho' the Judgments of God, at length brought it into that Condition; Mal. 1.3. I hated Esau, & laid his Mountains | & his Heritage waste, for the Dragons of the Wilderness. [A Fulfilment of what had been threatned; Ezek. 25.12, 13.] It was done by the Kings of Babylon. But yett its Fertility came not near to that of the Land of Israel. Hence there was, A Plenty of Corn & Wine, in the Blessing of Jacob, [Quere, whether the Glorious Mercies, that are seal'd unto us, in the Eucharist, may not be mystically intended?] which was not in the Blessing of Esau. The Edomites were engaged in Perpetual Wars; Josephus will tell you, what a Wary, Boisterous, Troublesome Sort of People, they were. The Edomites became Inferiour to the Israelites; yea, subjugated by them. [See 2. Sam. 8.14. and, 2. King. 11.15. and, 1. Chron. 18.13.] And when they Rebelled, they were with great Slaughters brought under a New Subjugation. [See, 2. King. 14.7. and, 1. Maccab. 5.65.] At last, Hircanus the Son of Simon, totally subdued them, and compelled them to receive the Jewish Religion. Then was fulfilled, that Prophecy; Num. 24.18. Edom shall be a Possession, Seir also shall be a Possession for his Enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly: And that Prophecy; Amos. 9.12. They shall possess the Remnant of Edom. Josephus tells us, That from this Time, Idumæi inter Judæos censeri cæperunt. And yett, there were times, when the Edomites did shake off the Yoke of the Israelites; namely, (as the Hebrew Doctors well observe,) when the Israelites came to shake off the Yoke of God, and of His Law. Thus they did, upon Solomons Apostasy. [1. King. 11.14.] Or if they did not then make thorough Work of it, they did it more thoroughly afterwards, in the Dayes of Joram. [2. King. 8.20. and, 2. Chron. 21.8.] And they continued after this, in their As-serted Liberty, until the Dayes of Hircanus.¹⁸⁴ But when shall we find that Part of Isaac's Prophecy fulfilled; That the Edomites were to have Dominion over the Israelites? The Vulgar, the LXX, the Chaldee, & the Targum of Onkelos, will have

¹⁸⁴ Heidegger (2:275–76, Exerc. XIV, § 22). Flavius Josephus describes the bellicose nature of the Edomites in his Jewish Wars (4.4.1–6.1). According to Josephus (Antiquities 13.9.1), from this time “the Idumæans are beginning to be counted among the Jews.” John Hyrcanus I, son of Simon Maccabæus, became high priest and ethnarch after the death of his father. During his rulership (135/34–104 BCE), Hyrcanus I subjugated the Idumæans and imposed the Mosaic Laws on them (HBD).

no more promised unto the Edomites, than this; That they should shake off the Yoke of the Israelites. The Syriac intimates, as if Dominion were also promised unto the Edomites, on the Condition of Repentance. But why may we not say, That it was fulfilled in Herod the Great; and his Posterity; who were Edomites; & by the help of the Romans, gott and held, a Dominion over the Israelites, for about an hundred Years together, until the final Destruction of Jerusalem. Lett Scaliger and Casaubon say what they will, we may beleeve Josephus, who expressly calls Antipater the Father of Herod; το γένος Ἰδουμαίων. Genere Idumæum. And Eusebius, & Epiphanius, and Austin, and most of the Ancients, will in this Beleef, bear us Company. We refer you to the, Historia Idumæa, of Noldius, if you want any further Satisfaction.¹⁸⁵

We pass to Jacob, in his Mesopotamian Affayrs.

Of the Seven Years, that Jacob served for Rachel there, we read, Gen. 29.20. They seemed unto him, but a few Dayes. Our Heidegger thinks, it alludes to the Direction, which Rebeckah had given unto Jacob; Gen. 27.44. Tarry with him a few Dayes. Moses would intimate, That his Love to Rachel, made him think the whole Term of his Continuance there, to be no more than the Few Dayes which his Mother had allow'd him for it.¹⁸⁶

How the Fraud, of imposing Leah, instead of Rachel, upon Jacob, was managed, Lett us hear our Heidegger.

*Ad Fraudis illius Intelligentiam, ritus prisci Nuptiales Græcorum, quos haud dubiè à Syris acceperunt, observandi sunt. Nam primum intempesta Nocte, in Thalamum deducebantur. Deindè sponsus prior intromittebatur. Post, adducebatur sponsa, cum luce quidem, ad Thalami usque aditum, sed ità velata, ut à nemine in os videri posset. Postremò intrudebatur sine luce in Thalamum, et tradebatur viro, ad pudoris muliebris, et honestatis significationem. Hinc factum est, ut apud Græcos ipsos, alioquin Honestatis et pudicitie malos custodes, posterus a nuptijs Dies Ἀνακαλυπτηριων diceretur; quia nimirum tum Nubes, aut Calyptia, qua obnubebatur sponsa, eximebatur, et revelata prodibat in virorum conspectum. Tales Ritus apud Aramæos in usu fuisse olim probabile est, quia aliàs commodè Jacobum Laban fallere non potuisset.*¹⁸⁷

¹⁸⁵ Heidegger (2:275–76). For the LXX, the Chaldee Paraphrase, Targum Jonathan, and the Syriac Version on 2 Kings 8:20, see Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (2:550, 551). Joseph Justus Scaliger's Animadversiones ad Eusebiam Chronicon (1608) 148, 159, 259; Isaac Casaubon's De rebus sacris et ecclesiasticis exercitationes XVI (1614), Exerc. I, § 3, pp. 23–24, 28, 32–36. The Greek/Latin citation from Flavius Josephus (Jewish Wars 1.6.2) reads, “the Idumæan race.” Eusebius (Church History 1.6), in NPNFii (1:89); Epiphanius (Panarion 20.1.3), in Epiphanius (1:225); St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 18.45.3) [PL 41. 607]. For Heidegger (as for Mather) the Swedish Lutheran theologian Christian Noldius (1626–83) has the last word in his Historia Idumæa (1660) 338. Noldius enlists Eusebius Pamphilus, Epiphanius, St. Augustine, and Photius in support of his argument.

¹⁸⁶ Heidegger (2:285, Exerc. XV, § 6).

¹⁸⁷ Heidegger (2:286–87, Exerc. XV, § 8). Heidegger offers the following explanation for Laban's fraud: “In order to understand this fraud, one must look at the ancient marriage rites

While Jacob sojourned with his Father-in-Law Laban, he had this Confession from him; Gen. 30.27. The Lord hath blessed me for thy Sake. Whereupon Jacob assumes to say, | The Lord ha's blessed thee, since my Coming: or, | לְרַגְלִי / At my Foot. The LXX renders it, ἐπι ποδῶν. Wherever Jacob sett his Foot, he carried a Blessing with him. Such were those, of whom Austin reports, That in the Punic Tongue, they were called, Namphaniones: Epist. 44. Boni pedis Homines, quorum Adventus aliquid affert felicitatis; sicut solemus dicere, secundo pede introisse, cujus Introitum felicitas aliqua consecuta est. He compares a Passage in Virgil; [365r]

*Et nos, et tua dextero adi pede sacra secundo.*¹⁸⁸

But Austins Word Namphanio, seems to be corrupted. Both Petit and Bochart, observe, That it should be written, Namphamo; which in the Punic and Hebrew Language, is as much as to say, | נֶעַם פֶּעַזוֹ / Pulcher est pes ejus. Even such a Namphamo was our Jacob; and under that Blessing, whatsoever he doth, shall prosper.¹⁸⁹

About the Success of Jacobs Action, in setting Objects before the Cattel, which made impression on the Complexion of the Cattel, it ha's been enquired, whether it were a Work of meer Nature, or whether there were not a Supernatural Interposition, of the Divine Power and Providence in it? The Greek Fathers refer it all to Miracle. So Chrysostom, so Cyril, so Theodoret. The Latin Fathers, incline another Way. So Jerom very particularly. So Austin; and so Isidore. Doubtless, there was much of Nature, in the Matter.¹⁹⁰ Empedocles in Galen, mentions of the Greeks, which they doubtless got from the Syrians. For, firstly, they were brought into the marriage bedroom in the dead of night. Then the bridegroom was allowed to go in before her. Afterwards, the bride was brought to him, indeed with the dawn, up to the entrance of the bedroom, but veiled so that no one could see her face. Finally, she was pushed into the bedroom without light, and handed over to the man, as a sign of womanly decency and honor. From this it came about that even among the Greeks, who in other respects were bad guardians of chastity and honor, the day after a wedding was called the Unveiling; evidently because the veil by which the bride had been covered was removed, and she advanced into the sight of men. It is probable that such rites were once customary among the Aramaeans, because by any other rites Laban could not conveniently have fooled Jacob."

188 Heidegger (2:291, Exerc. XV, § 15). Gen. 30:30. The Hebrew phrase "leragli" and the Greek "epi podi mou" suggest "at my foot." St. Augustine (Epistola ad Maximum Madaurensem 17.2) [PL 33. 83–84] translates the Hebrew phrase as "Namphoniones," suggesting, "man of the good foot," i.e. whose coming brings with it some good fortune, as we are wont to say of one whose coming to us has been followed by some prosperous event" (NPNFi 1:234). In the same epistle St. Augustine's cites Virgil's "and graciously with a favoring foot visit us and your rites" (Aeneid 8.302).

189 Heidegger (2:291) argues that St. Augustine's "Namphanio" should really be "Namphamo" (suggesting, "excellent is your foot"), a corrective asserted by the French jurist and philologist Samuel Petitus, aka. Petit (1594–1643), in his Miscellaneorum libri novem (1630), lib. 2, cap. 3; and by Samuel Bochart (Geographia, pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 16. col. 765–66).

190 Heidegger (2:296–97, Exerc. XV, § 20). Joannes Chrysostomus (Homilies in Genesis 57.7), Cyrillus Alexandrinus (Glaphyra in Pentateuchum: Genesin, lib. 5) [PG 69. 229, lines 1–48], Theodoretus (Quaestiones in Octateuchum: Genesis. Quest. 90, p. 79, lines 10–25), St. Jerome on Gen. 30:32–33, 41–42 (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, pp. 66–68), St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 18.5), Isidorus Hispalensis (Etymologiarum sive originum 12.1.58–60) [PL 82. 433A–B].

great Instances of Impression on the Offspring, from the Imaginations and Contemplations of the Mothers. And Galen himself, in his Book, De Theriacà, tells of a Gentlewoman, who brought forth a very beautiful Infant, by having such an one before her. Oppian in his Cynegeticon speaks of the Efficacy, which this Method, ha's had in several sorts of Animals. And Aristotle saies, That the Propagation of Similitude this Way, is easier in Bruites than in Men. Levinus Lemnius will tell you, notable Things this Way. But Petrus Messias in his Lectiones; and Delrio in his Disquisitiones; and Varius, De Fascino; and, Fienus, De Imaginatione; will make the Collection very considerable. But tho' Nature did something in this Case, yett the little Success that other Shepherds find in the Trial, makes it evident, that the special Power and Providence of God, was exercised in it. And we are more particularly advised, [Gen. 31.11, 12, 13.] That as Jacob had an Angelical Direction, for what he did; so there was doubtless an Angelical Agency, contributing to the Success of it. Rivet makes this Conclusion; *Statuendum est, Deum peculiari suo concursu, ut benediceret Jacobo, et eum ditaret, applicasse phantasiam ovium ad hanc versicolorum virgarum Imaginationem, et ità causas secundas movisse, ut in effectu suo producendo nihil impediret, quò minus omnia procederent secundùm intentionem Jacobi.*¹⁹¹

191 Heidegger (2:297, Exerc. XV, § 21). In a fragment by Aëtius (De placitis reliquiae 5.12.2) – rather than by Galen – Empedocles is quoted as saying that the shape and looks of a fetus is often determined by what a woman imagines during conception (Testimonia, Fragm. A81). Thus children often resemble beautiful statues or paintings with which women had fallen in love during conception. Galen describes similar cases of a woman's impressionable imagination shaping the features of her offspring (De theriaca ad Pisonem 14:271, line 8). Oppian (Cynegetica lib. 1, lines 357–67). Aristotle (De anima 3.1.425b, 25; 429a, 5–8). Pliny (7.1.12). The Dutch Paracelsian physician Levinus Lemnius (1505–68) explores the secrets of nature in his De occultis naturae miraculis (1573), lib. 4, cap. 7. The learned Spanish historian, poet, and teacher Pietro Messia, aka. Pedro Mexia (c. 1496–c. 1552), published his Silva de varia lección (1542) and his Los dialogos o Coloquias (1547) – both highly popular moral lections often reprinted and translated into Italian, French, and English. Mather (via Heidegger) refers to the French version Les diverses leçons de Pierre Messie (1552), pars 2, cap. 2, but Latinizes Mexia's name and the title of his work. Two English translations from the French were published as The Foreste or Collection of Histories (1571, 1576). Mather refers to Disquisitionum magicarum libri sex, in tres tomos partiti (1599–1600), tom. 2, lib. 3, pars 1, quest. 4, a book on magic and witchcraft, by the Jesuit Martin Anton Del Rio (Delrio) of Antwerp (1551–1608), successively professor of philosophy and theology at Douai, Louvain, and Salamanca. Leonardo Vairo, aka. Leonhardus Varius (1540–1603), a Spanish Benedictine, bishop of Pozzuli (Italy), warns especially of the impressionable imagination of pregnant women, in his De Fascino libri tres, 2nd ed. (1589), lib. 1, cap. 2, p. 9. Among other topics, this book discusses witchcraft, magic, and amulets – topics of great interest to Increase Mather, who purchased a copy of the second edition of this work in London, on Sept. 11, 1690, for 2s. 6d. [AAS 0606]. While negotiating New England's Second Charter (1691), Increase was evidently kept up to date about the specter of Salem and prepared to face the manifestations of witchcraft and possessions upon his return. Thomas Fienus, aka. Feyens (1567–1631), Flemish physician of Antwerp, professor of medicine in the Academy of Louvain, published De Viribus Imaginationis Tractatus (1657). Mather refers to Quaest. XX–XXI, pp. 292–304 of this work, where Fienus argues that the imagination of beasts is more easily influenced than that of men. The AAS [0738] copy bears the signatures

There ha's been an Enquiry, How Jacob could say of Laban, That he had changed his Wages ten times. Jerom, in his Hebrew Questions, tells us, it was, Quòd per singulos fœtus, semper Laban conditionem mutaverit. He changed the Wages, every time, that he saw what the Cattel brought forth. And that it might not seem incredible, for this to occur Ten Times in Six Years, he quotes Virgil for it, Bis gravidæ pecudes; their Sheep, it seems, brought forth Twice in a Year. And the Mesopotamian Sheep, were in this, like the Italian. Austin observes the like; Bis pariebant in Anno; and if it should be said, why then did not Laban change the Wages twelve times? he answers, In the first Year, the Sheep had brought forth once, before the Bargains of this Nature were entred upon. And the Sixth Year, they had also brought forth but once; for Jacob takes his Flight before the Second Bearing. But our Heidegger thinks, there is no need of this Accuracy; for, Ten times, is but as much as to say, many times. [Compare, Num. 14.22. and Job. 19.3.] Thus Drusius, and Vatablus, and long before them, Eusebius.¹⁹²

The Design of Rachel, in stealing away her Fathers Teraphim, our Heidegger thinks, might be, either to prevent his enquiring from them the State of Jacob's Journey; which is the Opinion of Nachmanides; Ne patri suo proderent, si fortè, ut solebat, ea consuleret, aufugisse Jacobum. Or, to draw Laban from his Idolatry, by taking away the Instruments of it; which is R. Bechai's Opinion; Ad extirpandam Idololatriam è domo patris sui; And Jarchi's; Quò abduceret patrem ab Idolorum cultu, id fecit.¹⁹³ of Cotton Mather and Joseph Pynchon. Much the same terrain on the impressionableness of pregnant women is covered in Gerard Vossius's De Theologia Gentili (lib. 3, cap. 22, esp. pp. 833–34). Finally, Mather's collection of sources is rounded out with a citation from André Rivet's Theologicae & Scholasticae Exercitationes CXC in Genesim (1633), Exerc. CXXXI, p. 645: "It must be decided that God, by his own peculiar coincidence, in order that he might bless and enrich Jacob, applied the superficial image of eggs to this imagined vision of multi-colored rods. Thus he invited the favorable conditions which ensured that as a result nothing prevented events from proceeding according to how Jacob intended them."

192 Heidegger (2:300, Exerc. XV, § 24). Gen. 31:7. In his commentary on Gen. 31:7–8 (Quæstiones Hebraicae in Genesim) [PL 23. 986B], St. Jerome argues that "Laban always changed the agreement in respect of individual offspring" (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 69). Celebrating the fecundity of the land, Jerome cites Virgil (Georgics 2.150) to verify that "twice the cattle breed." St. Augustine (Quæstiones in Heptateuchum, lib. 1. Quæst. XCV) [PL 34. 573] chimes in with, "they give birth twice per year." Both Joannes Drusius (on Gen. 31:7) and Franciscus Vatablus (on Gen. 31:2) confirm this pre-Milonic imprecision, in Critici Sacri (1:294–95, 298); see also Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 9:21.423a–d).

193 Heidegger (2:302–03, Exerc. XV, § 27). Drawing on Rashi, Nachmanides glosses (Gen. 31:19) that Rachel stole her father's teraphim "so that if by chance her father should consult them, as he was wont to do, they might not reveal to him that Jacob had fled" (see Commentary 1:383); R. Bechai (Bachya ben Asher), agreeing with Rashi, argues that Rachel stole the teraphim (Gen. 31:19) "to wean her father from the practice of idolatry" (Commentary 2:477) – or closer to the Latin, "to extirpate Idolatry from her father's house." Finally, Jarchi (Rashi), drawing on Genesis Rabbah (LXXIV:5) argues that by taking the images, Rachel "intended to separate her father from idolatry" (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:389).

It ha's been enquired, why Jacob, calling the Great God, The God of Abraham, calls him, The Fear of Isaac? Junius thinks, That Jacob refers to the astonishing Fear which came from God upon Isaac after the Blessing of Jacob, [366v] [Gen. 27.33.] and which | rendred Isaac afraid of Revoking it. Rivet approves not this Thought so much; because this was a Matter unknown to Laban. Abarbanel thinks, That it refers to the Fear of God which was upon Isaac, when he submitted to be bound by his Father on the Altar. Ille nempe pavor, quo pavit tempore ligationis, cum videret cultrum in manu patris sui ad mactandum ipsum. Hæc ejus Justitia, seu Justitiæ ejus meritum, adstittit mihi. Aben-Ezra writes to the like Purpose. Be sure, This Thought is better than what Grotius brings out of Jarchi; That God is not called, The God, of any one, while he is yett living in this World. For in the Instance of Abraham, that Observation is confuted.¹⁹⁴

When Laban comes to swear, he swears, By the God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, the God of their Father. Unto Heidegger it seems most probable, That he swears by the Strange Gods, [Josh. 24.2.] which Terah, the Father of Abraham and of Nahor, and so Abraham and Nahor themselves, worship, while they were yett unconverted from their Idolatry.¹⁹⁵

It is another considerable Enquiry; with what Intention Esau came forth, to meet his Brother Jacob? The Messengers, who brought Jacob Word of the Matter, seem to apprehend an Hostile Intention. And Jarchi makes this Paraphrase on their Words; Is de quo dixisti, Frater meus est, adhuc tecum agit, ut Esauus, permanens in odio suo. But others, as Pelican, and Junius, and Rivet, suppose Esau to come with a Benign Intention, and with a Mind full of Brotherly Love, to embrace his Brother, going home from so long an Exile. When Esau was in his greatest Rage, he proposed no Mischief to Jacob, till the Death of his Parents. His Rage was now abated, and his Parents were yett living. And when he mett Jacob, we find him accordingly to treat him, with all the Kindness imaginable. However Jacob suspected the worst, and præpared accordingly.¹⁹⁶

194 Heidegger (2:307, Exerc. XV, § 31). Gen. 31:42. The eminent theologian Francis Junius (the elder) records his thoughts in his annotations on Gen. 31, in Opera Theologica (1613) 1:212–16. André Rivet's approval appears in his Theologicae & Scholasticae (1633), Exerc. CXXXIV, pp. 660–61. Abarbanel thinks that the phrase “the fear of Isaac” certainly refers to “that fear which he [Isaac] felt at the time of his binding, when he saw in his father's hand the knife for slaying him. This justice of his [God], or the deserts of his justice, has been a help to me” (Commentarius in Pentateuchum Mosi [1710]). Ibn Ezra has much the same: “Isaac's fear of the Lord aided me, for the merits of a father help his son” (Commentary 1:306). Hugo Grotius, Annotationes in VT, on Gen. 31:42 (Opera Omnia [1679] 1:20). Jarchi (Rashi) contends that “He [Jacob] did not wish to say, ‘the God of Isaac,’ because the Holy One, blessed be He, does not associate His name with the righteous while they are alive” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:395).

195 Heidegger (2:311, Exerc. XV, § 35). Gen. 31:53.

196 Heidegger (2:314–15, Exerc. XV, § 38). Drawing on Genesis Rabbah (LXXV:9), Jarchi (Rashi) paraphrases the issue as follows: “Concerning whom you said, ‘He is my brother,’ but he still behaves toward you like the wicked Esau. He still has hatred” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:408). Conradus Pellicanus, on Gen. 32:7, in Commentaria Bibliorum. In Pentateuchum

What may be meant by those Words of Jacob to Esau, at their Interview. Receive my Present at thy hand, for I have seen thy Face, as tho' I had seen the Face of God. Abarbanel ha's a notable Gloss upon it. Men bring their Offerings to God, when they appear before His Face, not because they imagine, that God wants any of their Offerings, or is capable of any Advantage from them; But that they may express their Homage to Him, and bespeak His Favour to them. Thus Jacob, in his Presents to Esau, had no Imagination that he wanted these things; but as one appearing before the Face of God, he would in this Way entreat a kind Reception with him. *Simile est munus meum, muneri hominis, quod is offert suae potius utilitatis gratiâ, quàm ut inde Dei sublevetur Necessitas. Ità munus illud quod tibi offerre, dispositum est ad meam potius, quam ad tuam utilitatem. Vidi enim faciem tuam, sicut faciem Dei.*¹⁹⁷

There is one Enquiry more, Jacob intimates, That he would come unto Esau, in Seir. [Gen. 33.14.] We never find, that he fulfilled his Promise. What is to be thought of it? Austin putts the Quæstion; Utrum mendaciter promiserit Jacobus Fratri suo, quòd venturus ad eum esset Seir? cum tamen id, Scripturâ quidem indicè, non fecerit? Both Hebrew and Christian Interpreters, give diverse Answers. Rivet thinks, That Jacob did go, and stay a little while at Seir; but so little a while, that the Scripture counts it not worth the while to mention it. Our Heidegger inclines to the Hint, which Austin adds upon it; An fortè veraci animo promiserat, sed aliud postea cogitando delegit? He really purposed such a Journey; but afterwards, upon second Thoughts, he altered his Purpose. Lyra, and Mercer, go this Way. P. Martyr adds, That probably Jacob, was admonished from Heaven, against undertaking that Journey; as the Wise Men of the East were, against Returning to Jerusalem. [Compare, 1. Cor. 4.19. and, 2. Cor. 2.1.]¹⁹⁸

In the Midst of Jacobs Travels, we find that notable Occurrence; His Vision of a Ladder, extending from Earth to Heaven, with Angels descending and ascending upon it. About the Mystical Sense of that Ladder, we shall not

(vol. 1); Francis Junius (Opera Theologica [1613] 1:216–18); and André Rivet (Theologicae & Scholasticae [1633], Exerc. CXXI, pp. 596–99) – all deem Esau's intention benign.

¹⁹⁷ Heidegger (2:317, Exerc. XV, § XL). Gen. 32:10. Abarbanel's gloss (Commentarius [1710], on Gen. 32:7) – here synopsized by Heidegger – reads, “My gift is similar to the gift of man, which he offers more for the sake of its usefulness, than so that an obligation to God should thereby be lifted. So that gift which I offer to you is appointed for its usefulness to me, rather than to you. For I have seen your face, just like the face of God.”

¹⁹⁸ Heidegger (2:318–19, Exerc. XV, § XLI). In Quaestiones in Heptateuchum (lib. I: quaest. in Genesim CVI) [PL 34. 575], St. Augustine asks, “Did Jacob make a deceitful promise to his brother, that he would come to him at Seir? Even though, as the very Scripture shows, he did not do it?” André Rivet (Theologicae & Scholasticae: Exerc. CXXXVI, pp. 672–73). St. Augustine adds, “Or did he [Jacob] perhaps make the promise with a truthful mind, but on thinking about it afterwards chose differently?” Nicholas de Lyra, on Gen. 33:14 (Postilla [1492], vol. 1, n.p.), Joannes Mercerus (Commentarii in Genesim Mosis librum [1598]), and Peter Martyr Vermigli, most likely in his In Primum librum Mosis (1569) – all weigh in on Jacob's change of mind.

insist on the Interpretations of the Ancients. Eustathius would have this Ladder answered, in the Cross of our Lord. And thus Austin saies, Dominus scale inamibens, est Christus in cruce pendens. In the Roman Martyrology, those two Martyrs, S. Perpetua, and, Felicitas, (whose Vertues are celebrated by Austin on the forty-seventh Psalm,) had their Martyrdome foretold unto them, with a Vision of a Ladder. And our Heidegger concedes; Crux est scala et cia per quam Christus, omnesque adeò Christiani, in cælum conscenderunt, et conscendunt indies. Diodorus apprehends, That the Mystery of our Saviours Incarnation was adumbrated in this Ladder. And Vatablus, and Rupertus, do follow him.¹⁹⁹ The Rounds of the latter, were the several Descents, of the Genealogy, from Adam, the Son of God, unto the Blessed Virgin Mary. The Two Sides of the Ladder, are the Mercy and the Faithfulness of God, by which all is carried on. Our Lord in His Two Natures, both touched Earth, and reached Heaven. We will not add, the Notion of Tertullian; | Scala hæc est Via, qua iusti Ascensiones suas in corde suo disponunt in Cælum. Nor that of Gregorius Magnus and of Aquinas; who make the Ascenders on the Ladder, a Type of the Contemplative Life; and the Descenders, a Type of a Life of Business. But we will keep close to our Heideggers Interpretation. There was a Promise given to Jacob; Gen. 28.15. Behold, I am with thee, & will keep thee in all Places whither thou goest, – for I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of. The Ladder exhibited unto Jacob, was a Type of the Divine Providence and Assistance, thus promised unto him. Tho' there be such a Distance between Heaven and Earth, yett the God of Heaven does interest Himself in what is done upon the Earth; and, as even a Pagan acknowledged, Medijs cogitationibus nostris intervenit. But there are Angels on the Ladder; tis very much by the Ministry of Angels, that the Government of the World, is carried on. They Descend that they may do the Will of God; They Ascend, that they may give an Account of what they have done. They do [Matth. 18.10.] Always behold the Face of God; That is, As Officers waiting at hand alwayes, to execute the Pleasure of the Lord. A Vision of such a Matter, must needs be a vast Encouragement unto Jacob, in the Journey now before him.²⁰⁰

We have not yett said all. There was a Glorious CHRIST in the Matter. We are led unto this Consideration, by those Words of our Lord; Joh. 1.51. Hereafter you shall see Heaven open, & the Angels of God Ascending & Descending upon the Son of Man. Calvin very well expresses it: Solus Christus est, qui cælum terræ conjungit; Hic Solus est Mediator, qui pertingit à Cælo, usque ad Terram. Ille idem, per quem omnium bonorum cælestium plenitudo deorsum ad nos fluit, nosque vicissim ad Deum conscendimus. Idem cum sit caput Angelorum, efficit ut membris suis terrenis ministrent. He very appositely observes, That our Lord is the Mediator, by whom (as by a Ladder,) the good Offices of the Angels, and Righteousness and Blessedness, and all the Gifts of Grace come down unto us. And we, (qui non tantum difixi eramus in Terrâ, sed in maledictionis Abyssu, inferisque ipsis demersi,) do gett up unto God. But the Paraphrase of Bullinger on this Text, may be more particularly worthy of our Attention. “You have doubtless heard that Jacobs Ladder had in it some Figure of the Messiah. You shall see all fulfilled in me. You shall by my Instructions come to understand, that Heaven, which had been shutt by the Sin of Man, shall by my Dispensation be opened; and that God Reconciled unto the World by me, shall be united unto Men, in His Covenant. You shall understand, That I am the Way, which brings you to God; and I unite Heaven and Earth, and so the Ministry of the Holy Angels between Heaven & Earth is introduced.” *Hæc rectius intelligetis ex Doctrinâ meâ, ex signis sive miraculis, ex morte, Resurrectione item gloriosa, et magnifica in Cælos ascensione.*²⁰¹ Nor can there be any thing more apposite, than the Words of Rivet. Visionem hanc referimus ad perpetuam Regni Christi administrationem in terris,

²⁰¹ Heidegger, Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (2:329, Exerc. XVI, § 11). Mather approves of John Calvin’s annotations on Gen. 28:12 (Commentaries 1.2:113): “It is Christ alone, who connects heaven and earth: he is the only mediator who reaches from heaven down to earth: he is the medium through which the fullness of all celestial blessings flows down to us, and through which we, in turn, ascend to God. He it is who, being the head over angels, causes them to minister to his earthly members.” And we (“who were not only fixed to the earth, but plunged into the depths of the curse, and into hell itself”) ascend to God. Heinrich Bullinger (1504–75), one of the most important Swiss Calvinist reformers and successor to Huldreich Zwingli in Zurich, glosses this text in his commentary on Gen. 28:12: “You will correctly understand these things from my teaching, or from miraculous signs, or from death; also from the glorious resurrection, and from the magnificent ascension into the Heavens.” Increase and

ut scala Christus sit, qui capite attingit cælum, quia æternus est cum Patre Deus, et in terrâ consistit, quia Humanam Naturam assumpsit. Continuitas scalæ ab Cælo ad Terram, ostendit sublatam esse separationem, et Christum quia Mediator est, conjungere Deum cum hominibus. Idcirco se præbet pater videndum quasi scalæ innixus; quia Deus erat in Christo, mundum Reconcilians, non imputando eis peccata eorum. Hanc ob causam cælum apertum dicitur apud Johannem; quod alioqui peccatoribus clausum est. Angeli ascendentes et descendentes, significant specialem Dei curam erga Ecclesiam, indicantque Angelos nobiscum eandem in societatem sub uno capite Christo convenisse, et accessisse nos ad montem Sion, et civitatem Hierusalem cælestem, et myriadas Angelorum, conventum et concionem primogenitorum. The same famous Rivet, thinks, That this Ladder of Jacob, so far as the Mystery of Providence was represented in it, hath certain Footsteps, in the Eighth Iliad of Homer; where Jupiter ha's a Chain reaching from Heaven to Earth, by which he can manage | all things here below, & fetch them up to himself at his Pleasure. Accordingly, Seneca also saies, Ex eo suspensa sunt omnia, à quo sunt omnes cause causarum. And Statius;

– Grave et immutabile sanctis,

Pondus adest verbis, et vocem fata sequuntur.

We will not recite the odd Fictions of the Hebrew Doctors, about the Stone that Jacob sett up in this Place, and poured Oyl upon it. The Christian Fathers, have given us the best Remarks upon it. Austin shall, as their Foreman, speak for them: *Hoc quod Jacob fecit, ad prophetiam pertinet. Neque enim more Idololatriæ lapidem perfudit oleo, quasi faciens eum Deum. Neque enim adoravit eum lapidem, neque ei sacrificavit. Sed quoniam Christi nomen a Chrismate, id est, ab unctione, profectò figuratum hinc est aliquid, quod ad magnum pertinet Sacramentum.*²⁰²

Cotton Mather owned at least two of Bullinger's works: De origine erroris (1539) and Sermonum Decades Quinque (1587) [Tuttle, "Libraries" 284, 306].

²⁰² Heidegger (2:329–31, 333, §§ 13, 14, 17). André Rivet (Theologicae & Scholasticae, Exerc. CXXIII, p. 608) weighs in with the following exposition: "We relate this vision to the eternal execution of Christ's reign on earth, such that the ladder is Christ, who reaches unto the sky with his head, because he is eternal God with his father, and he stands on the earth, because he has taken on human character. The continuity of the ladder from Heaven to Earth shows that the separation has been removed and that Christ, since he is the mediator, joins God with men. Therefore, the father offers himself to be seen as though he were leaning on a ladder, because God was in Christ, reconciling the world, by not reckoning the sins ascribed to them. For this reason it was said by John that Heaven is open, which otherwise was close to sinners. 'The angels going up and down' signifies God's special care for the Church and indicates that the angels have gathered into the same fellowship as us under one head, Christ, and that we have come near to Mount Sion, and the heavenly city of Jerusalem, and the myriads of angels, the gathering and assembly of the first-born." Rivet (609) envisions a link between Jacob's ladder and Jupiter's "chain of gold" hanging down from heaven, in Homer's Iliad (8.19–27). Seneca's disquisition on fate (Naturales quaestiones 2.45.2) – here adapted to Judeo-Christian uses – affirms that "on him [God] all things depend, from whom are the causes of causes." And Statius (Thebaid 1.212–13) avows that "The holy words are grave and immutable, / And Fate waits upon his words." Mather (via Heidegger 2:333, § 17) refers to Pirke de R. Eliezer (ch. 35,

There ha's been a Variety of Opinions, about the Dudaim, which Reuben brought unto his Mother. Our Heidegger ha's a particular Exercitation upon it. He rejects altogether, the Opinion of those, who translate it, Mandrakes. If there were a Truth, in what is affirmed by Dioscorides, about the Root of the Mandrake, ειναι φίλτρων ποιητικην. In Amatorijs Efficacem esse; yett it is not likely, that these vertuous Women, either knew that pretended Vertue in the Plant, or would have been fond of it, for the Sake thereof; Besides, Filtrès are Enemies to Fertility. And it is argued by Deusingius, That the Narcotic and Stupifying Quality of that Plant, renders it altogether useless on these Occasions. The notion, which the Hebrewes have, of a Man resembled in the Figure of a Mandrake, is altogether a Fancy and a Fiction; and the Christians who have taken up the Notion, find it no other than a Dream of the Ivory Gate. Our Heidegger does also decline the Opinion of Georgius Venetus; That the Dudaim were white Lilies; And the Opinion of that Gentleman, who ha's written a whole Treatise, to prove, That they were Mushromes; And the Opinion of Deusingius, who ha's written a Treatise, to prove, That they were a Sort of Melons. He subscribes to the Opinion of the learned Ravius; That by Dudaim are meant, Little Boughs hung with Early Fruits. We have the same Word, in Jer. 24.1, 2. which we, with the LXX, render, Baskets. But Heidegger, would have it here, to be rather, Branches than Baskets; because Reuben probably did not bring several Baskets unto his Mother. And Ravius is a little more particular, than our Heidegger would have him, in restraining the Fruits of these Boughs, unto Figs. Junius and Tremelius have done well to render it, Amabiles Flores.²⁰³

p. 266), to the Mishnaic commentary (Joma 53b), and to Midrash Rabbah (Leviticus XX:4). St. Augustine (De Civitate Dei 16.38.2) [PL 41. 517] remarks upon it, "That which Jacob did was prophetic. For Jacob did not pour oil on the stone in an idolatrous way, as if making it a god; neither did he adore that stone, or sacrifice to it. But since the name of Christ comes from the chrism or anointing, something pertaining to the great mystery was certainly represented in this" (NPNFi 2:333).

²⁰³ Heidegger (2:378, 380, 382–83, Exerc. XIX, §§ 9, 12, 14, 15). Gen. 30:14–16. According to Dioscorides Pedanius (De material medica 4.75.1, line 3), some esteem the mandrake "to be an effective aphrodisiac." If mandrakes were indeed such a stimulant, then Leah and Rachel's virtue was less than exemplary – or so post-Reformation scholars believed and did their best to develop alternative readings. Whatever their potency, Mather reminds us that love potions (or philters) are detrimental to procreation itself. The learned Flemish physician Anthonius Deusingius (1612–66) dismisses the supposed tonic qualities of mandrakes in his dissertation De mandragora (1661). Sir Thomas Browne, too, rejects the idea that Leah and Rachel were quarrelling over an aphrodisiac, in Pseudodoxia Epidemica (1658), bk. 2, ch. 6; bk. 7, ch. 7; and in Certain Miscellaneous Tract (1683), Tract. 1, art. 16 (Works 1:285–89; 3:19–25, 230). And so does Georgius Venetus, aka. Francesco Giorgio Venetus (1460–1540), the learned Italian friar, who saves the day by insisting that the Dudaim (Gen. 30:14), or mandrakes, are nothing else but sweet-scented lilies (In Scripturam Sacram Problemata [1536], Problema CC). Deusingius draws on Christianus Ravius, aka. Christian Raue (1613–77), German Lutheran, professor of Oriental languages at Uppsala, now best remembered for his A General Grammer [sic] (1650), a prized grammar of Hebrew, Samaritan, Chaldaic, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic languages, also translated into English. Ravius's De Dudaim Rubenis dissertatio philologica (1655) on Cant.

We will now pass over to the Ultima Jacobi. As the Time of Jacobs Death drew near, he demands of Joseph, an Oath, to bury him, not in the Land of Egypt, but in the Land of Canaan; where Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebeckah, with Leah, were sleeping in One Sepulchre. We will not mention, either the Jewish, or the Popish Figments, about the Reason of this Desire in the Patriarch. Theodoret gives a better; He desired it, Ὑπαγωγὼν το γένος καὶ διδασκων. To Comfort and Instruct his Family, in the Faith of it, that God would one day bring them out of Egypt into Canaan, & bestow that Promised Land upon them. And Chrysostom saies, It was, ἀπο τοῦ προοραν τὴν μέλλουσιν αὐτῶν εἶσεσθαι ἐπανοδον. Quia praevidebat futurum eorum Reditum. It was a Profession of his Faith; Yea, of his Dying in the Faith. And thus it came to pass, Ut mortuus etiam quasi Tuba clangore vivos et superstites animaverit; as Calvin expresses it, with his usual Elegancy. And so Rupertus; Jacob Exemplum Vivis dedit mortuus, ut in Spe Patriae Cœlestis, Pignus amarent æternæ hæreditatis. By such a Symbol also, our Heidegger thinks, Jacob would begett in the Minds of his Posterity, a Desire & Value for Communion with the Church of God.²⁰⁴

[369r] There ha's been great Enquiry among the Learned, How Jacob could say, concerning a Portion of Land, which he now gives unto Joseph, (and which afterwards fell to the Tribe of Ephraim;) Gen. 48.22. I took it out of the Hand of the Amorite, with my Sword & with | my Bow. There ha's been many an Exposition offered upon it, whereof we may say, as Aben-Ezra does of one that pleases him not; אֵין לִי טַעַם וְרִיחַ/ Saporem et odorem caret. Masius thinks, That after Jacob had Redeemed this Land of the Sichemites, he by degrees drove off the Amorites, who had ravished it by Arms from the Sichemites, and possessed themselves of

2:13, 7:13 identifies this plant as the branches of figs, whose sweet-smelling flowers are here meant. Finally, Franciscus Junius and Immanuel Tremellius settle for “amabiles flores” or “lovely flowers,” in their Latin translation of “dudaim” (Gen. 30:14), in Testamenti Veteris Biblia Sacra (1593) 33, annot. 14; and in their Opera Theologica (1613) 1:210–12, esp. 1:211, lines 20–30.

204 Heidegger (2:457, Exerc. XXII, § 4). Gen. 47:29–30. Mather’s “Ultima Jacobi” (“the end of Jacob”) is the chapter title of Heidegger’s “Exercitatio XXII: De Ultimis Iacobi,” (2:454–69), which Mather excerpts here. Among the “figments,” which Mather refuses to mention is Rashi’s explanation (extracted from Genesis Rabbah XCVI:5 and Kethuboth 111a) that Jacob did not want to be buried in Egypt “[Because] its soil is destined to become lice (which will crawl under my body), and because those who died outside the [Holy] Land will not be resurrected except with the pain of rolling through underground passages. [Also] so that the Egyptians will not deify me” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 3:604). Additional reasons are given in the Zohar (vol. 1, Bereshith, sec. 1, pp. 222a–223a). Theodoretus (Quaestiones in Octateuchum: Genesis. Quest. 110, p. 90, lines 2–3). Joannes Chrysostom (Homiliae in Genesim, Hom. 66.2 lines 49–50) [PG 54. 566] opines, “because he [Jacob] foresaw their future return.” John Calvin’s annotation on Gen. 47:29 (Commentaries 1.2:416) translates, “that he, being dead, animated those who were alive and remained, as with the sound of a trumpet.” Rupertus Tuitiensis’s exemplary interpretation of Jacob – in In Cantica Cantorum – reads, “In death Jacob gives an example to the living, that in the hope of the heavenly father, they should love the assurance of their eternal heritage” [PL 168. 837–961]. Heidegger’s own source here is Benedictus Pererius’s annotations on Gen., ch. 49, in Commentariorum et disputationum in Genesim (1596–1602), Disputatio secunda (4:869).

it, while the true Owners, were in their Travels on the other side of Jordan. And of this Opinion is Calixtus. But our Heidegger inclines to look upon the Words of Jacob, as having a Prolepsis in them. Jacob speaks of himself as doing that, with his Sword, and with his Bow, which his Posterity were afterwards to do with theirs. Aben-Ezra goes this Way; and adds, Meminit autem Amorrhæorum, quoniam nulla de septem gentibus illis Fortitudine erat æqualis.²⁰⁵

In the Action of Jacob, to his Two Grandsons, Ephraim and Menasseh, occurs the first mention which we have in the Bible of that Rite, The Imposition of Hands. We find it Repeted, in the Action of Moses to Joshua; [Num. 27.18, 19, 23. Deut. 34.9.] This χειροθεσια, was by the Jewes called, /סמיכות ידיים/. From thence it grew customary among that People of God, in almost every Ordination to any Office, whether Sacred, or Civil, or to any Dignity whatsoever. All their Senators, passed under this Rite; and their Doctors even at this Day, are created with it. Every Promotion among them is called, /סמיכות ידיים/.²⁰⁶

And from this Exemple, of Jacob, tis an Observation among the Jewes; That when Persons are beleaved to excell in Holiness, they bring their Children unto them, to be Blessed with Imposition of Hands. Consider, what they did unto our Saviour. [Matth. 19.13.] Grotius thinks, That the Extension of the Hand in this Action, had an Eye to the Efficacy of the Divine Power. Ideò, quia per preces Divina Potentia pro altero invocabatur, usitata erat cum precibus manuum Impositio. Sanctius notes, That the Action is usually of a Superiour, consecrating an Inferiour to some Office, or wishing and praying for a Blessing upon him. As in the Roman Language, Sub manu esse, and, In manum venire, and, manumitti, are Phrases, that carry Power, in the Signification of them. Heidegger takes all these Accounts to be Insufficient; He saies, The Plainest is, That a Blessing was desired to come upon the Head of the Person, treated in this Action; and sometimes,

205 Heidegger (2:459, 461, Exerc. XXII, §§ 10, 12). Ibn Ezra suggests that the exposition is “without taste and scent.” In fact, Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:417) argues that the prolepsis implied in Gen. 48:22 asserts that “Jacob’s statement, Which I took, presents no problems because the patriarchs considered the land as theirs from the moment that God verbally gave it to Abraham.” Heidegger refers to Andreas Masius’s Annotationes, Quibus Editionis Græcae Historiae Joshuæ (Josh. ch. 24), in Walton (6:120). Georgius Calixtus, aka. Georg Calixt (1586–1656), German Lutheran divine, controversialist, and professor of theology at Helmstedt, is now mostly remembered for his involvement in the Syncretic controversy among orthodox Lutherans. The likely work to which Heidegger refers is Calixt’s Historia Iosephi, sive XIV postmorum cap. Geneseos et locorum (1654), a literal exposition of contradictory passages in Genesis. Finally, Ibn Ezra’s annotation on Gen. 48:22 (Commentary 1:417) signifies that “Jacob singled out the Amorites because there were none among the seven Canaanite nations equal in strength to them.”

206 Heidegger (2:462–63, Exerc. XXII, § 16). The Greek “cheirothesia” and Hebrew [camik-taw yad-im] passages translate, “laying on of hands.” Heidegger here consults one of the many editions of Joannes Buxtorf’s Lexicon Chaldaicum, Talmudicum (1639), col. 1496–1501, voce קמך [camak]; i.e., “to lay upon” and קמך ידיה χειροθεσια manum impositio; i.e., “the imposition of hands” or “promotion” (Buxtorf, col. 1498). Every promotion was therefore called סמיכות ידיים [camik-vetaw yad-im].

an Office, with a Burden was conferr'd on him, with Prayers for suitable Graces; and sometimes, a Deliverance from Death was therein also intended. Whosoever thus laid on Hands, *Deum precabatur; Qui Benedicebat, ut in puerum suae Bonitatis munera effunderet; Qui aegrotum curabat, ut fugato morbo vires ac valetudinem immitteret; Qui muneri praeficiebat, ut Dona ad id gerendum necessaria conferret; Qui victimam offerebat, ut mortem, quae in ejus caput statim erat incubitura, acceptam haberet; Qui denique Reum, vel suo Testimonio, vel suo ministerio ad mortem ducebat, ut quam commeritus erat pœnam, suo is capite lueret.*²⁰⁷

Compare Gen. 49.26.

We find our Patriarch at last Embalmed, by the Physicians. Because the Physicians prepared Unguents for Dead Bodies, those Unguents are called, Medicata, by Pomponius Mela; and, θεραπευθεντα, by Diodorus Siculus. The Body of Jacob, was to be carried a great Way, & thro' Hott Countreyes; and some Embalming of it, was therefore necessary. There was nothing more usual among the Egyptians. Pliny tells us, Ægyptijs mos est cadavera asservare medicata. Tully tells us, Mortuos ab Ægyptijs condiri et domi servari. Plato tells us, Corpus arefactum et conditum, quemadmodum in Ægypto condiunt, diu incorruptum permanet. Herodotus and Diodorus, tell us their Way of Embalming. By their Art they rendred the Bodies of the Dead, like Brass; which Austin tells us, in their Language, they called, Gabaras. Joseph had no Egyptian and superstitious Intention in this Matter; but only the more agreeable Transportation of his Fathers Body, into the Land of Canaan.

Q. The Conduct of Abraham, in the Case of Sarah, which unto us in these days appears liable to great Exceptions, may call for some Remarks upon it? v. 1.

A. Hear Monsr. Saurin upon it.²⁰⁹

“All we can gather, is, that the Plurality of Wives, was not forbid in the Age of the Patriarchs. Whatever Attempts have been made by some grave Divines, to prove that Polygamy was criminal before our SAVIOURS time, we cannot enter into that Opinion. It is hard to perswade ones Self, that the Conduct of the most Holy Men, a Conduct which does not only suppose a few fleeting Actions of such Persons, but a settled Way of Life; a Conduct, during which they had the most intimate Conversation & Familiarity with GOD; a Conduct, for which they had never been blamed, whilst GOD armed Heaven & Earth against them, for some particular Sin; a Conduct, whereof we can discover no Footsteps of Repentance; a Conduct, which had not only not been forbidden by GOD, but which in some Measure, was even Allow’d by Him; [Deut. XXI.15, 16.] I say, it is very hard, to perswade ones Self, that such a Conduct could have been hateful in the Sight of GOD.

“But, if it were Innocent Then, some will be apt to say, why not Now? By no means. – It is not more strange, That the Laws which bind Christians, were not imposed on the Jews, than it is, that the Saints in Glory, should be called to render a more pure Worship unto GOD, than what we | pay Him here on Earth; tho’ Both ly under that general Obligation, of, Loving GOD with all their Heart. Now we pretend, That JESUS CHRIST has taught us, what the Jews and Patriarchs knew not; That from the general Principles of Morality given alike to all of us, this particular Consequence is to be drawn, That one Man ought to have but one Wife.²¹⁰

“If Polygamy and Concubinage were allowed in the Times of the Patriarchs, it is nevertheless a Supposition of a lower Degree of Perfection in those that gave themselves up thereto; and GOD, to wean them from those Ways, was pleas’d that there should proceed from the very Nature of such a State, and of all that was like it, such Inconveniences, as might serve for a Rampart against it. The Miseries of Mankind are so great, that their Society with one Person only, when it is to last as long as their Lives, is oftentimes a Source of Divisions: And how great may they be, when a Third Person is joined in the same Union, and for a remarkable length of time.” Herodotus (2.86–88); Diodorus Siculus (1.91.2–7; 19.99.3). According to Heidegger (2:466, § 25), St. Augustine (Sermones de diversis, 120, cap. 22) argues that the Egyptians called the discoloration of the embalmed bodies “Gabaras” – a term and source yet unverified.

Q. Sarahs Repeted Admiration, of her Enjoyment & Fruitfulness in old Age? v. 7.

A. I suspect, a Prophecy lying at the Bottom of it. When the Church of Israel, is grown old, even in the Latter Days, then will she enjoy glorious Things, and her Fruit will be wonderful!²¹² 3428.

Q. That Sarah should give Children Suck. Why is this Action so particularly mentioned? v. 7.

A. This Giving Suck, was a certain Proof, that she brought forth the Child of her own Womb; and that he was not a supposititious Child, as it is well observed by Menochius.²¹³

Q. How old was Isaac, when he was weaned? v. 8.

A. Jerom reports it, as a Tradition of the Hebrewes, That he was Five Years old. The Author of the, Dissertations Sur La Bible, lately published at Paris, observes from this Instance, That Children then sucked very long. The Mother of the Maccabees told one of her Sons, that she had suckled him Three Years. Samuel came to the Temple soon after he was weaned. The Rabbis tell us, The Mothers then suckled their Children Two Years at the least; and the Alcoran præscribes the same Time. We find in Aristophanes, that the Greeks observed the same Custome. Jerom indeed, in his Hebrew Questions takes notice of Two Opinions, concerning the Time for weaning Children in the Dayes of Abraham. Some say, Five Years of Age; but others carry it as far as Twelve.²¹⁴

²¹² Gen. 21:7.

Q. Why did Abraham chuse to make the Day of the Childs Weaning, the Day of his Feasting? v. 8.

A. Austin concludes, as Luther observes, Hujus Questionis nullam esse solutionem, nisi intelligatur spiritualiter illud gaudium, quod habetur ex nativitate Christi.

Luther blames this Allegorizing. And he thinks, That Abraham took this Day, because he would not imitate the Manners of the Gentiles, who made the Birth-Day, a Feast-Day. The Day of Circumcision was a Day of so much Affliction, that he thinks, it was for that Cause not convenient.²¹⁵

1612.

Q. That Passage, In Isaac shall thy Seed bee called, What Seed is thereby intended? v. 12.

A. The Original, will declare the Intention. Tis not only, Thy Seed, but זרע לך / A Seed for Thee. q.d. A Seed for thy Benefit & Salvation. Behold, the Messiah pointed out!²¹⁶

Q. How came Abraham, so rich a Man, to send Hagar, & her Son away, with such a slender Provision? v. 14.

A. I will transcribe the Words of Monsr. Saurin. “To say, That Abraham acted with Præcipation, or, that he was in Haste, & intended to send quickly afterwards into the Desert, whatever should be necessary for these two miserable Creatures, is the same as to say, that the good old Man took his Measures very wrong, & proceeded with little Circumspection. It may therefore be safest, perhaps, to rank this Account among the obscure Circumstances of the Holy Scripture, into which we are not allow’d to fathom.”²¹⁷

| Q. A Remark on that; GOD opened her Eyes? v. 19.

A. It was a Principle, well known and received & beleaved among the Ancients; That GOD only can open the Eyes of Men, & enable them to see what they cannot well discover by their own Capacity. Thus Hagar here, so, Num. XXII.31. The Lord opened the Eyes of Balaam. From a Sense of this Truth, Homer weaned “at the end of twenty-four months” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:246). Radak (Hachut Hamesbulash 2:419) adds that “This was the standard period that babies nursed at the breasts of their mother.” 2 Macc. 7:27. Sam. 1:22. The Alcoran prescribes two years (Sura 2:233). The Greek grammarian and lexicographer Aristophanes Byzantii (c. 257–c. 180 BCE) mentions this custom in his (Fragmenta 1, lines 3–8).

Q. Of Ishmael tis said, His Mother took him a Wife out of the Land of Egypt? v. 21.

A. This was her own Countrey; where she was best Acquainted.²¹⁹

The Jewish Doctors tell us, of his having Two Wives, whose Names were Aischah and Phatimah. The first of these they report, entertained Abraham churlishly, when he honoured his Son with a Visit; And for this Cause, he putt her away, and he took the Second, who proved more civil, when this excellent old Man did them the Honour of a Second Visit.²²⁰

Tho' this Report may be somewhat Fabulous; yett it is not unlikely, that Abraham did go to see how his Son lived, and that Ishmael also did sometimes wait upon his Father. So tis affirmed, by the Author of Schal-schal. Hakab. and Pirke Elieser.

And accordingly we find Ishmael as well as Isaac, to be concerned in Abrahams Funeral.²²¹

After this, tis probable, that Hagar might have another Husband, which is the Account that Aben Ezra gives (upon Psal. 83.6.) of the People, called, The Hagarenes, who are mention'd as distinct from the Ishmaelites.²²²

Q. On the Oath between Abimelek & Abraham? v. 31.

²¹⁸ Perhaps Mather has in mind Odysseus's encounter with Athena in Homer (Odyssey 13.287–89, 311–13, 352–55).

²²¹ Rabbi Gedaliah Ibn Yahya ben Joseph (1515–c. 87) of Imola (Italy) is reputed to have been a voluminous author, who finally settled in Alexandria (Egypt) after various pogroms in Italy and Spain forced Jewish residents to leave. His best-known book is Sefer Shalsheth ha-Kabbalah, aka. Sefer Yahya (1587), a compendious book on such subjects as Jewish genealogy, the stars, creation, the soul, magic, witchcraft, and other subjects (TJE). The putative author of Capitula R. Elieser (1644) aka. Pirke Elieser, or Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (i.e., Chapters of Rabbi Eliezer) is Rabbi Eliezer ben Hyrcanus, the Great (c. late 1st to 2nd c. CE), but this haggadah is now assigned to the 8th c. CE (EJ). Both Isaac and Ishmael buried Abraham in the Cave of Machpelah (Gen. 25:9).

A. Some have remarked, That this is the First Oath among Men, that occurs in any History; And it was introduced by a Pagan.²²³

Q. What was Abrahams End, in planting a Grove, that hee might there call on the Name of the Lord? v. 33.

A. Dr. Lightfoot saies, *Abraham consecrated a Grove, that hee might have hal- lowed Wood for Sacrifices, as well as Holy Fire. Hee had had Fire from Heaven, at some Time, upon his Sacrifice, & hee preserved it.*²²⁴

Q. It is Remarkable, That the Jews themselves confess Isaac to be a Type of the Messiah. They say, (as Patrick has quoted the Words from Abarbanel; tho' I doubt, he mistakes the Name of his Author;) when GOD promised Abraham, That *all the Nations of the Earth should be Blessed in him, he would have him understand, that He would one day vouchsafe to make of His own Son, a Sacrifice like that, which the Patriarch was about to make of his.*²²⁵ Wherefore, Falling into the History of Isaac, I must ask, In what Regards you consider him, as a Type of the Lord Jesus Christ?²²⁶

A. First; The Name of Isaac, is as much as to say, Mirth, or Joy. [Gen. 21.3, 6.] I am sure, the Souls of Men, find Matter of wonderful Gladness, in the Son of God. [Luc. 2.10. Isa. 61.10. Hab. 3.18. Phil. 4.4.]

Again; Isaac is called [Gal. 4.28.] The Child of the Promise. And our Lord is, The Christ of the Promise. [Luc. 1.72.] Hee is the grand Promise of the New Covenant. And I think, that one Evangelist Matthew, particularly reckons up, about Thirty Promises or Prophecies in the Old Testament, relating to our Lord.²²⁷

²²⁷ See Samuel Mather (Figures and Types 106) and Edward Taylor (Upon the Types 1:78–96).

Add; Of an unlikely Womb, did Isaac, & of as unlikely a Womb, did Jesus, come into the World. [Compare, Rom. 4.19. with Isa. 7.14. and, Jer. 31.22.] A Womb, that never could have been Fruitful, without a Miracle.²²⁸

Proceed; An Angel, told the Mother of Isaac, that hee was to bee Born of her; and it is said, [Gen. 18.11.12.] Sarah heard it, & laughed within herself. Thus, an Angel brought unto the Mother of our Lord, the Incredible Newes, of His being to bee Born of her: and it is said [Luc. 1.34.] Shee said, How shall this bee? It was the very same Angel, that had been with Daniel about this thing, more than five hundred Years before!²²⁹

Pass on; It was a Noble Promise made unto Abraham [Gen. 22.18.] In thy Seed, shall all the Nations of the Earth bee Blessed. It was made Thrice over to Abraham; it was Once repeted unto Isaac; Once mention'd by Peter, & Once quoted by Paul. What Seed of Abraham was it, that proved such a Blessing to the World? There was indeed some Concernment of Isaac in it; but in Jesus is the true & main Fulfilment of it. Hence the Apostle saies, [Gal. 3.16.] That Seed is Christ. By Him, All Nations have the Day of Gods Patience lengthened out unto them; and, All Nations have some converted, & pardoned, and glorified among them, now every Day; and, All Nations, will at last bee made Partakers of Blessedness; [according to that, in Ps. 72.17.]²³⁰

Say still; Isaac was no sooner Circumcised, on the Eighth Day of his Age, but there was an Ishmael persecuting of him. [Gen. 21.9.] And our Lord was no sooner Circumcised, on the Eighth Day of His Age, but there was an Herod, that fell on Him with cruel Persecutions. [Math. 2.13.]

Further yett; Amazing the History, which wee have, of Isaacs Obedience! His Father saies, My Son, you must bee a Burnt-Offering to the Lord. Behold, without any Replying, without any Repining, hee submitts unto that strange Demand! This hee did, tho' hee were Twenty-five Years old at least. And yett, this was but a little Shadow of what our Lord Jesus did. His Father saies, My Son, Become thou a Burnt-Offering, that my Justice may bee satisfied, & glorified forever. Well, Hee complies, without any Resistance, without any Reluctance. His Answer was, Lo! I come! [Isa. 53.7. and Joh. 10.18.]²³¹

Go on; Tis noted of Isaac, that it was a famous Hill, namely, Moriah, on which hee was to Breathe his last. But it is also noted, that hee did himself carry the Wood, with which hee was to bee consumed. [Gen. 22.6.] Now Admire the very same Circumstances, in our Lord Jesus Christ! It was a famous Hill, namely, Golgotha, on which Hee was to expire. But wee are likewise informed, Hee Bore His own Cross; [Joh. 19.17.] Hee did Himself carry the Wood, on which, Hee was to bee offered there. The End of Both was, That there might bee no Delay at the Place of Execution. And this was observable, in Both; First, the Wood was laid on them, and then, They were laid on the Wood. Indeed, the Father carried the Sword, & the Fire. It was the Fiery, Sword-like Justice of God, which Devoured our Lord; but Hee it was that brought the Fuel for it.²³²

Once more: It was on the Third Day, that Isaac arrived, unto the Place of his Immolation. [Gen. 22.4.] T'was Forty Miles, from Beersheba to Moriah, & they Travelled on Foot all the Way: for which Cause, Two Dayes were little enough, to dispatch the dismal Journey. See something Analogous to this, in our Lord! Our Lord was Three & Thirty | Years old; His Age had Three Tens, and Three Units in it: There passed also Three Years of His public Preaching, when the Time of His Passion came. But this it not all; Isaac on the Third Day, had a Dismission from his Death. [Gen. 22.12.] All the while before, hee was Dead in the Account of Abraham; Now, hee received him from the Dead. And was not the Resurrection of our Lord, on the Third Day? [Hos. 6.2. and 1. Cor. 15.4.]²³³ [376v]

Finally; The Church of our Lord, is most elegantly adumbrated in the Wife of Isaac. Isaac was married; and so is our Lord. But unto whom? Isaac was married unto a Kinswoman of his own; and our Lord, unto a Spouse, that is of His own Flesh, & His own Bone. Isaac was married unto one, that wanted not Beautiful Complexions, and Proportions; and our Lord, unto a Church, Comely, of whom it is said, The King shall greatly desire thy Beauty. Isaac was married unto one, that left all Relations, all Enjoyments, for the Sake of him: Even so, our Lord, unto a Church that may say, I have Forsaken all, & Followed thee, & that hearkens to that Proposal, O Daughter, Forgett thy own People, & thy Fathers House. Isaac was married unto one, who Deck't and Trim'd herself to meet him, and yett covered her Face with a Veil after all: In like sort, our Lord, unto a Church that is adorn'd with many Graces, but yett after all, is Humble, owning herself, not worthy to bee Seen by Him, & much less, Match't to Him.²³⁴

Indeed, Isaac was guilty of a Mistake, where into Jesus will never fall; that is, The Dispensing of a Blessing, with a Mistake of the Person.²³⁵

But in these things, you see Isaac, a Picture of our Jesus.

Q. What was there, to satisfy Abraham, That the Command given him to sacrifice Isaac, was indeed from God, and not a Satanical Illusion? v. 1.

A. The Appearance of the Shechinah, which we have so often mentioned; & which could not be counterfeited.

So great was the paternal Power among the Ancient Romans, that they might putt their Children to Death, as they did their Slaves, without any Process before a Magistrate. Some have look'd on this as a Natural Right; and if Abraham were indeed aware of this Inherent Power, it might as little facilitate his Entertainment of the Strange Command now given to him.¹

Q. How old was Isaac, at the Time of his being offered? v. 1.

A. Some of the Jewes affirm him to be Thirty Seven; who are follow'd by the Christian Arabic Writers, Patricides and Elmacinus. Aben-Ezra more probably makes him Thirty. But we can have no Certainty; for we find in the Gemara Sanhedrim c.10.n.4. This fell out a little after he was weaned.

Josephus makes him Twenty five Years old; Bochartus makes him Twenty Eight. This is very sure, He was old enough, to carry such a Load of Wood, as would serve to make a Fire, for the Offering of him as a Burnt-Offering.²

Q. What Monuments, or Traditions of Abraham sacrificing his Isaac, have we in Antiquity?

A. We know some of the horrid Practices among the ancient Idolaters, to sacrifice their Children unto Moloch; And some learned Men are of Opinion,

² See Saurin's Dissertations (Diss. XX, 1:170). Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 31, p. 225), based on Genesis Rabbah (LV:4, LVI:8), lists Isaac's age as thirty-seven when Abraham offered his son as a sacrifice. And so does the Arabic Christian writer Saidus Patricides, in Contextio Gemmarum (1656), lib. 1, p. 75; but Georgius Elmacinus, in Hottinger (Smegma Orientale, cap. 8, p. 330), argues that Isaac's age was either ten or twelve. Abraham Ibn Ezra reviews the debate about Isaac's age (Gen. 22:4) and finally settles on the age of thirteen – not thirty (Commentary 1:224–25). R. David Gans (Tsemach David) makes him twenty-six. The Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin (89b) argues that God tested Abraham's faith when Isaac was weaned. Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 1.13.2) makes Isaac twenty-five; Samuel Bochart does not appear to give Isaac's age, but does insist that human sacrifice – like that intended by Abraham's immolation of his son – was a widespread phenomenon in Canaan (Geographia, pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 2, col. 711–12).

That the Opinion of Mens pleasing God, by sacrificing their Children, sprang from Abrahams offering Isaac. R. Solomon countenanced this Conjecture, when he brought in the Great God, speaking about Moloch after this Manner; “I never commanded, that they should offer up their Sons as an Oblation, and I never spake it unto any of my Prophets: And when I spake to Abraham, to sacrifice his Son, it entred not into my Heart, that he should sacrifice him, but to make known my Righteousness.”³

There is also a notable Passage in Porphyrie, who treating of Saturn, (that seems to have been the same with Moloch) saies, That the Phœnicians call’d him Israel; and that he had by Anobreth, one only Son, called Jeud in the Phœnician Language; (no doubt from the Hebrew Jehhid, signifying an Only Begotten, and applied unto Isaac, Gen. 22.2.) which he offered upon an Altar purposely prepared.⁴

[Insert Ar]

Besides this Phœnician Story, Monsr. Saurin, assigns the same Origin to the Sacrifice of Iphigenia, as it is related by Dictis of Crete. All the necessary Præparations are made for the Immolation of the Victim; Chalcas is to be the Minister of the Execution; He lifts up his Arm to give the fatal Stroke; A supernatural Voice issues from the Midst of the Forest, crying out, That Diana, to whom this dreadful Homage was paid, approv’d not of it. Iphigenia is thus delivered. They deliberate upon the Choice of another Victim; And whilst they are seeking for one most acceptable to the Goddess, a Fawn of a wonderful Beauty comes forth of its own Accord unto the Altar, and is offered up in the Stead of the Daughter of Agamemnon.⁵

3 The citation from R. Solomon (most likely R. Solomon Yitzchaki, aka. Rashi) appears to be a paraphrase of Rashi’s commentary on Gen. 22:12: “When I said to you ‘Take,’ I was not altering the utterance of My lips. I did not say to you, ‘Slaughter him,’ but, ‘Bring him up.’ You have brought him up; [now] take him down” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:258).

4 Heidegger (2:203, Exer. IX, §§ 22–23). See also Jacques Saurin (Diss. XX, 1:175). Eusebius (Præparatio evangelica 1.10.40d; 4.16.155b–156d), excerpting Philon of Byblos and Porphyrius, tells the story of Saturn who sacrificed on an altar his “only begotten son” Iedud (Ieoud), or Jeud (by the nymph Anobret). A variant of this well-known story appears in Hesiod’s Theogonia (453–91), where Kronos swallows each of his children until tricked by Rhea and cast into the abyss by Zeus, his son. See also Cicero (De natura deorum 2.25.64). In these ancient stories early Christian interpreters found affirmed the original in Abraham’s sacrifice of Isaac, the OT type of the crucifixion of Christ.

5 Jacques Saurin (Diss. XX, 1:175) appears to have relied on Samuel Bochart (Hierozoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 49, col. 540–41), where several versions of Iphigenia’s story are excerpted, but quotes from Dictys Cretensis et Dares Phrygius, De Bello Troiano (1702), lib. 1, pp. 21–22. Iphigenia, daughter of Clytemnestra and Agamemnon, was to be sacrificed to curry favorable winds for the Argives’ invasion of Troy across the Aegean. When Diana, angered by Agamemnon’s sacrilegious killing of her sacred she-goat, destroyed thousands of warriors through a sudden plague, the seer Chalcas (or a Delphic Pythia) advised to offer Iphigenia in propitiation. The goddess, however, pitied Agamemnon’s daughter, accepted the sacrifice of a beautiful fawn in her stead, and entrusted the girl to the protection of the Scythian king – but her father to the wrath of Clytemnestra (Dictys Cretensis, Trojan War 33–36). In other versions of the story, Plutarch relates a Case very like to This. The Plague raged in Lacedemonia: The Oracle tells them, that it would not cease, till they consented yearly to sacrifice a Maiden of Noble Birth. The Lot fell upon Helena; who was led unto the Temple, dressed for the Sacrifice; and just going to be offered up; when an Eagle suddenly descending upon her, & snatching away the Sword, with which her Bosom was to have been pierced, carried it unto the Place, where the Flocks were feeding, & there dropped it upon an Heifer.

Q. Abraham lift up his Eyes, & saw the Place afar off. How did he know, that this was the Place? v. 4.

A. It is probable, God had given him a Sign, by which he should know the Place; and what can be more probable, than that the appearance of the Shechinah, determined the Place, where he was to make his Oblation.

This Conjecture is confirmed by some of the Jewish Writers; especially by R. Elieser, who saies, That when God bad{e} Abraham go to the Place, that He would Tell him of; he asked, How he should know the Place. The Answer was, wheresoever thou seest my Glory, there I will stay and wait for thee. And accordingly now he beheld a Pillar of Fire which reached from Heaven to Earth; by which he knew, this was the Place.

Moriah and Calvary, being but Parts of one and the same Mountain, tis not amiss to think, That Isaac was offered, in that very Place, where Christ was crucified.⁷

Q. Abrahams Offering of Isaac, is counted his Tenth remarkable Trial. What were the Ten? Enumerate 'em.

A. 1. His going out of his Countrey. 2. The Famine which drove him out of Egypt. 3. His having his Wife taken from him. 4. His Battel with the Four Kings. 5. His Despairing of Offspring, & Applying to Hagar. 6. His Circumcision. 7. His having his Wife again taken from him. 8. The Expulsion of Hagar, Diana whisked Iphigenia away and made her priestess in Diana's temple among the Taurians (Gaius Julius Hyginus, Fabulae 69) and Euripides (Iphigenia at Aulis 1540–1614; Iphigenia among the Taurians).

Q. We read, The Angel of the Lord called unto Abraham. What? Would the Voice of an Angel be enough to Release him, from going on with his Obedience to the Voice of the Lord Himself? v. 11.

A. The Angel of the Lord, is as much as to say, The Lord by His Angel.

It is Dr. Patrick's Observation; That whether it be said in these Holy Books, The Lord said any thing, or, An Angel spoke so & so, we are alwayes to understand both to have been present. For the Angels ever attend upon the Divine Majesty; & being Ministers of His, they do nothing but by His Order. When tis said, He speaks, tis by them; when tis said, They speak, tis from Him. Austin gives a Demonstration of this, from this very Place. [L.III. de Trinit. c.XI.] In the Beginning of this Chapter, we read, that God tempted Abraham, and bad{e} him go, & offer to Him his Son: But here | “the Angel of the Lord called unto him, & bad{e} him not to do it. What is the Meaning of This? Will they say, That God commanded Isaac to be slain, & His Angel forbad{e} it; and that Abraham obeyed the Angel, who bade him spare his Son, against the Command of God, who had bidden him to slay him. This Sence is ridiculous, & not to be endured. The plain Meaning is, That God spake both times; in the one Case, & in the other: But by an Angel, who was His Minister. That's the Reason, that Angels do speak sometimes, as if they were the Lord; because they speak in His Name. As when a publick Crier pronounces the Sentence of the Judge; Non scribitur in gestis, Ille præco dixit, sed, Ille Judex.” [378v]

We will here add an Observation of the Jewes, (whether worth observing or no,) That God is not in all this Story called by the Name of Jehovah, till now; which being, they say, Nomen misericordiæ, is most agreeable to this Part of the Story, as Elohim was to the former Part.⁹

Q. What singular Mystery was there in the Ram, caught & kill'd by Abraham, for a Sacrifice? v. 13.

A. In the Sacrifice offered by Abraham, wee must consider Isaac, and, The Ram, together. Isaac was only Bound; it was the Ram that felt the Knife. This admirably answers to the Two Natures of our Lord Jesus Christ; Both of which together contribute unto the Sacrifice of the New Covenant. The Divine Nature of our Lord, suspending the Expressions of His Power & His Glory, was the Mystery of Isaac Ty'd. The Humane Nature of our Lord, crucify'd, was the Mystery of the Ram slain. So Remarkable a Concurrence of Things, that it is ascribed entirely unto the Contrivance of Almighty God; *The Lord will provide!*¹⁰

I may here insert a Curiosity, from the Travels of Dr. Friar; who in his New Account of East-India & Persia, relates, That the New Moon before the New Year, which there commences at the Vernal Equinox, is an Holiday to the Moors; when the Governours go in Pomp to sacrifice a Ram or He-goat, in remembrance of that offered for Isaac, whom they call Ishauh; the like does every one in his own House – that is able to purchase one; & sprinkle the Blood on the Sides of the Doors.¹¹

Q. What further Sense may we putt upon, Jehovah Jireh, than, In the Mount of the Lord it shall be seen? v. 14.

A. It may bear another Sense; In the Mount shall the Lord be seen. Isaac, tis very sure, was offered near Mount Calvary, if not on it; That was one of the Mountains in the Land of Moriah. It is true, The Temple was built on Part of Moriah, where our Lord, the true Jehovah, often appeared. But Mount Calvary may be more particularly intended; and it was promised, That our Saviour should be seen one day in that very Place.

Some think, It was thus called, from the Myrrh /מִרְרָה/ growing there. And they think tis alluded unto; Cant. 4.6. I will gett me to the Mountain of Myrrh.

Be sure, Moriah was not a particular Mountain, but a Tract of Land, in which there were several Hills; whereof some were within that Space, upon which Jerusalem was built in the following Ages; and the rest, out of that Circle; as the Mount of Olives, that of Golgotha, and some others.¹²

Q. The First Promise to Abraham, was in Gen. 12.3. In Thee shall all the Families of the Earth, bee Blessed. – But now this Promise is Renewed, it is thus expressed, in Gen. 22.18. In thy Seed, shall all the Nations of the Earth bee Blessed. What might bee the Reason of this Variety? v. 18.

¹⁰ See Patrick on Gen. 22:13 (Commentary 1:88).

¹² Mather's annotation is extracted from Jacques Saurin (Diss. XX, 1:168–69).

A. The Reason of that Variety seems to bee This; When Abraham had the first Promise of the Messias made unto him, Isaac was not then Born. Whereas, now the Promise comes to bee Renewed, Isaac is not only Born, but also as it were New-Born, after the Remarkable Obedience of his Father, in Offering of him, wherein hee was a notable Type of the expected Messias. Note, Thy Seed, in v. 17. refers to all the Posterity of Abraham; whereas in v. 18. it refers in a more Special & Restrained Sense, to Isaac.

Nor is this all the Variety neither, in these Promises of the Messias; for in Gen. 12.3. tis said, They shall bee Blessed; but in Gen. 22.18. here, tis said, They shall Bless themselves. [Thus again, Gen. 26.4.] That is, They shall count themselves Blessed.

Q. Upon this last Clause, a little further?

A. It is said, In thy Seed shall all the Nations of the Earth Bless themselves. That is to say, They shall expect their Blessedness in and from Him, and no where else. As Munster paraphrases it; In solo illo Semine Beatificandos se verissimè dicent. [Act. 4.12.]¹³

A Man of Languages observes, that he never saw this Passage truly translated in any of them; except only by Vatablus, who renders it; Benedictas dicent se in Semine tuo, omnes Gentes Orbis. q.d. All Nations shall think themselves Blessed & Happy for thy Seed. Castellio reads to the like Purpose.¹⁴

¹⁴ Mather's "Man of Language" is one of the editors of Critici Sacri, which is compiled by John Pearson et al. (1660). This nine-volume commentary also excerpts Franciscus Vatablus Adnotationes in Sacra Biblia (1546); the applicable citation from Vatablus on Gen. 12:3 (Critici Sacri 1:177) translates, "All the nations of the world will call themselves blessed in your seed." The English Orientalist Edmund Castellio, aka. Castell, D.D. (1606–85), prebendary of Canterbury and professor of Arabic at Cambridge, is now best remembered for his massive Lexicon Heptaglotton (1669). He helped Brian Walton compile the invaluable London Polyglot, Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (1653–57) in 6 vols. See also B. Hall, "Biblical Scholarship" (3:71–72).

Q. What Remarkable is there, in the Age of Sarah, mentioned by Moses? v. 1.

A. This; That shee is the only Woman, whose Age is recorded in the Scripture.

You may add, if you please; That shee was the First Person, whose Death wee find expressly Regretted, & Bewayled, in these Oracles: And the First Person, whose Burial is mentioned.¹⁵

Q. Is there any special Remark, to bee made upon Abrahams Purchase of the Cave of Macpelah?

A. Yes; This. The first Purchase of Land, that wee read of in the Scripture, was of a burying-place.¹⁶

1756.

Q. Dead Sarah is Eight Times in one Chapter here, called, Abrahams Dead. Why?

A. Some think, That the Hope of the Resurrection is therein acknowledged. And indeed, Resurrectio mortuorum, Fiducia Christianorum.

However, methinks this Lesson lies plain before us; That tho' Death ha's Dissolved our old Relation to our Dead Friends, yett it ha's not Released us, from all our Duty to them; They are still so farr ours, that wee owe something unto their Memory.¹⁷

Q. On that Expression, Bury my Dead? v. 4.

A. My Dead, is in the Masculine Gender, & not in the Fæminine. Upon this, tis pretty to see how Interpreters divide into Different Opinions. There are some, who maintain, that My Dead, means, my Dead Wife; and they quote the Authority of an Austin for it. Others pretend, that, my Dead, means, my Dead Corps; and they quote the Authority of a Vatablus for it. Saurin makes this Reflection upon it; "Such is the Spirit of Mankind, that they often consider so slightly those Great Truths of the Scriptures, upon which our whole Religion is founded;

¹⁶ Gen. 23:9, 17; 49:30; 50:13.

expatiating into Discussions upon Matters of no Relation, either to our Duty, or our Happiness.”¹⁸

Q. Upon Abrahams insisting to pay for the Field? v. 13.

A. It is well observed by the Author of a Treatise entituled, (as was one of Tertullian, that is now lost, Spes Fidelium,) Abraham was unwilling to receive That, as a Gift from the Hands of Men, which GOD promised for to give him. If GOD promised the Inheritance of the Earth unto him, and he actually did not receive it, while he was in his Pilgrimage here on Earth, it necessarily follows, that he with his Offspring, that is to say, with all those who Fear God and Beleeve in His CHRIST, should receive it at the Resurrection of the Just. His Offspring is, the Church, which receives the Adoption of Children, by our Lord; according to that of GOD from the Stones raising up Children to Abraham. Our Apostle says, [Gal. IV.28.] Now we, Brethren, as Isaac was, are the Children of the Promise. Compare what He says, in the Third Chapter of his Epistle to the Galatians; According to which, all the Faithful, are the Children of Abraham, and shall be Blessed with Faithful Abraham. Now, GOD promised the Inheritance of the Earth unto Abraham, & unto his Offspring. But neither Abraham, nor his Offspring, or those who are Justified by Faith, do now, in this Present World, receive an Inheritance in it. But they actually shall, at the Resurrection of the Just.

This is the Spirit of what good old Irenæus offers & argues upon it.¹⁹

Q. The Price? v. 15.

A. About Forty Six Pound Sterling.²⁰

¹⁹ This paragraph is a close paraphrase of Spes Fidelium: Or, the Believer’s Hope (1714), § 50, pp. 74–75, an eschatological tract by an anonymous “Presbyter of the Church of England” [title page]. A copy of this work is in the Mather Libraries (AAS # 0488). The title of the work refers to Tertullian’s Spes Fidelium, which is partially extant in Irenaeus’s Against Heresies (5.32–36), in ANF (1:561–67). Significantly, Mather also cites from this anonymous work (1714) in “Trip paradisus,” his definitive discussion of millennialism, composed during the years 1720–26. By that time his pre-millennialist eschatology had undergone major revision. During the last decade of his life, Mather distinguishes between the “Raised Saints” (Christ’s co-rulers in Heaven) and the “Changed Saints” (Christ’s co-rulers on Earth who would repopulate it during the millennium), in Threefold Paradise (272–76). This distinction, which Mather adopted in 1720, is not yet reflected in his excerpt from Spes Fidelium (1714) here copied into “BA.” See also R. Smolinski, “Introduction,” Threefold Paradise (33–34, 48–51).

Q. How does the Account here agree, with what Stephen says, Abraham bought it for a Sum of Money of the Sons of Emmor [the Father] of Sychem? v. 24.

A. Turretine, [Loc. Com. Tom. I. Loc. II. Quæst. V. Art. XXXII.] has carefully collected all that can be fairly answered upon this Difficulty. Thither I refer you.²¹

Be sure, we must not confound the Sepulchre that is here mentioned, with what Stephen speaks of. The first was bought by Abraham; the last by Jacob; The first sold by Ephron the Hittite; the last by the Sons of Hamor; The first at Hebron; the last at Sychem. In the first were buried, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Rebeckah, and Leah. In the last, Joseph, and the other Patriarchs, who doubtless, as well as Joseph, desired the Translation of their Bones thither, in the Faith of what GOD would there do for His People.²²

Now, what if we should suppose, that Jacob also bare the Name of Abraham? The learned Bochart [Hieroz. T. I. pars. 2. cap. 43.] has collected Instances of Children bearing the Names of their Fathers. T'was no uncommon Thing. In this Case, as Monsr. Saurin observes, the Words of Luke have no Difficulty in them.²³ eighteenth-century New England. Although Mather does furnish a monetary conversion table ("TABLE. IV: Weights and Coins") in an Appendix following his commentary on Revelation, such calculations are often misleading.

²³ Saurin (1:183) references Samuel Bochart's 1663 London edition (Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, col. 435–36).

Q. What was the Meaning of that Rite, Putting the Hand under the Thigh, in Swearing? v. 2.

A. Grotius takes the Meaning and the Language thereof to be, q.d. If I fail in my Truth, Lett me fall by thy Sword. For the Thigh was the Seat of the Sword. [Judg. 3.16, 21. Psal. 44.4.]²⁴

Others tell us; That laying the Hand on or near the Circumcised Part, was a Protestation by that solemn Covenant of GOD, whereof Circumcision was the Badge & Sign, in the Abrahamic Family.²⁵

Q. How is it said, All the Goods of his Master were in his hand? v. 10.

Q. What is the true Signification of the Name, Rebeckah? v. 15.

A. Vitringa conceives רבכה to bee, for the Sake of the ἐνφωλια, a Transposition of ברכה, which is in English, as much as to say, A Blessing, or, A Blessed, One; Many such Metatheses there are in the Hebrew Language; as when they putt כרוב instead of רכוב. I know that the common Signification of the Name Rebeckah, ha's been otherwise Received. But he præfers This; Remembring from Luc. 1.42. as well as other Places, that the Terms of Benediction were often used upon the Newborn Infants of Israel. And then, methinks, in the Discourses that passed upon the Arrival of the Servant of Abraham, at Rebeckahs Habitation, wee may find, I know not how many Designed Allusions, unto the Name of the young Gentlewoman for whom hee was there concerned. In v. 27. the Man said, BLESSED bee the Lord God of my Master. In v. 31. Laban said unto the Man, ²⁴ Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXII, 1:191), Heidegger (2:89, Exerc. III, § 60), and Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:91) – all cite Hugo Grotius's Annotationes ad Vetus Testamentum, on Gen. 24:2, in Opera Omnia (1679) 1:17.

²⁶ See Simon Patrick on Gen. 24:10 (Commentary 1:92). Rashi (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:279), out of Genesis Rabbah (LIX:11), cites Rabbi Helbo, who argues that Abraham “wrote a gift deed to Isaac for everything he owned, so that they would hasten to send him their daughter.”

Come in, thou BLESSED of the Lord. In v. 60. They, BLESSED, Rebeckah. And indeed Isaac, had a true Rebeckah; that is to say, a Blessing in her.

Only then here must be allow'd another Figure, besides a Metathesis; and a Change between Caph and Kuph.²⁷

Q. Isaac seems to send his Mistress, but an Half-present, in sending her but one Golden Ear-ring? v. 22.

A. It was no Ear-ring at all. The Women had, of old, their Frontal Jewels, which were fastned on their Forheads, & hung down unto their Noses. Hence, in Isa. 3.21. called, Nose-Jewels. Jerom tells us, that the Women, had Jewels hanging from their Forheads dangling over their Noses. This Forehead-pendant was Isaacs Present, unto Rebeckah. And therefore, tis expressly said, in v. 47. It was putt upon her Nose. In Ezek. 16.12. the Nezem gual Aph, or, Frontal Jewel, (the same Word that is here) is distinguished from Ear-ring in the Ears. It is very properly, by Symmachus rendred, ἐπιρρίνιον.²⁸

Q. Mention is made of Bethuel, the Father of Rebeckah, but once in the whole Relation; Laban, her Brother seems to order every thing about her Marriage? v. 29.

A. I will transcribe the Words of Saurin on this Occasion.

"It is probable, their Father was at this time, of a very great Age. Indeed Josephus pretends, that he was already Dead; which is a flatt Contradiction to what follows in the History, where it is expressly said, That Laban & Bethuel answered, – But Josephus is one of the least Faithful Guides, that can be followed in the Study of the Holy Scriptures; He has altered a great Number of Circumstances in Eleazars Journey, for which we can guess at no Reason, unless it be,

²⁸ Mather's unacknowledged primary source is John Edwards's Discourse (3:241–43). R. Abraham Ibn Ezra (Commentary 1:238), whose interpretation is adopted by many of Mather's contemporaries, argues that the golden ring "can refer either to a nose ring or to an earring. The one worn on the nose is attached by a string which is tied around the forehead." See also St. Jerome on Gen. 24:22 (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 57); Symmachus on Ezek. 16:12, in Origen's Hexaplorum Quae supersunt in Ezechielem Monitus [PG 16. Pt. 3. 2485] renders it "epirrinion," a "nose ornament" or "decoration."

that this Author is as subject to err, in certain Places, thro' Ignorance, as by a Spirit of Partiality in others."²⁹

Q. Why does the Agent use that Expression, Before I had done Speaking in my Heart? v. 45.

A. To take away all Suspicion of Collusion, and render it evident, that Rebeckah's answering all the Circumstances that he had wished for, did not proceed from her Over-hearing of his Wishes, and then treating them with so punctual a Complaisance; But that the pure Direction of Providence was to be ey'd & own'd in the Matter.

Q. Rebeckah going away, her Nurse is also sent with her? v. 59.

A. Almeloveen, in his, Antiquitatum è Sacris Profanarum Specimen, has Remarks upon this affair; shewing, That the Gentiles as well as the Hebrews, had a Custome, of having their Daughters kept under the Custody of a Nurse, till they were married; especially for a Guard upon their Virtue.³⁰

Q. Why does Rebeckah putt on her Veil? v. 65.

A. A Token of Regard unto Isaac as her espoused Husband.³¹

²⁹ Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXIII, 1:194). Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 1.16.2).

³⁰ Mather refers to Opuscula; sive, Antiquitatum e sacris profanarum specimen (1686) 65–68, by Theodoor Jansson van Almeloveen (1657–1712), a Dutch professor of medicine at Harderwijk University. Mather had access to a copy of this work at Harvard library and had evidently read a review of Almeloveen's Inventa Nov-Antiqua (1684) in Mather's own copy of Acta Eruditorum Anno MDCLXXXIV (1684). The review bears Mather's pencil markings throughout Acta (556–58) [AAS # 0939]. In his "Note Book of Authors" on Gen. 24:57, 58, Mather lists as one of his sources "Franzius Interp. p. 664"; i.e., De Interpretatione S. Scripturarum maxima legitima (1619) 664, by Wolfgang Franzius (1564–1628), a Lutheran professor of theology at Wittenberg (BBK). However, during a revision process, Mather appears to have excised his commentary on these two verses from "BA."

Q. What might be the Circumstances of Abraham, disposing him to marry another Wife, after the Death of Sarah? v. 1.

A. Sarah being dead, and Hagar being sent away, and Isaac lately married, he wanted a Companion for his Old Age. As he had given up Sarah's Tent unto Rebeckah, so tis probable, he gave up his own to Isaac; and now dwelling in a Tent by himself, he found it necessary, to have a Wife, to look after his Family.³²

Q. Abraham's Death is called, A Giving up the Ghost? v. 8.

A. The Rabbi's tell us, That the Phrase used here, signifies, A sudden and easy Death; Mortem, quæ homini accidit, absque ullo prævio Morbo et Dolo. They say, Tis Exitus spiritus de corpore momento uno absque Dolo. It is called, A Sleep, in the Elect of God. Munster adds a good Hint, Quanto Fides est major, tantò mors est Imbecillior Tolerabiliorque.³³

2487.

Q. Tis a Quæstion putt by Philo, the learned Jew, since there were many before Abraham, who lived more than Treble the Age of Abraham, and none of them have their old Age celebrated in the Oracles of God, how comes Abraham's to bee so particularly Remark'd; Abraham died in a good old Age, an old Man, and full of Years? v. 8.

A. I have it not just now at hand; but, as I remember, Philo's Answer is to this Purpose, That the eminent Services and Actions of Abraham rendred him an older Man, than any of them.³⁴

³² The passage is extracted from Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 25:1 (Commentary 1:94).

³⁴ Mather's aside, "I have it not just now at hand" is intriguing, for it suggests that he was citing Philo Judæus from memory. Be that as it may, Mather appears to paraphrase a passage from Philo's De Abrahamo (46.271), which argues, "The man who has been a lover of prudence, and wisdom, and faith in God, one may justly denominate an elder" (Works 434). Significantly, the LXX (Gen. 24:1) calls Abraham "πρεσβύτερος" (presbyteros) or "elder."

Q. Of Abrahams Posterity by Keturah, what Foot-steps in Antiquity? v. 10.

A. Very many.³⁵

From Zimran doubtless came the Zamareni, a People mention'd by Pliny, with their Towns in Arabia Felix.³⁶

Of Jokshan, we find This. Theophanes a Chronographer, in the Beginning of the Ninth Century, having treated of the Ishmaelites and Madainites (the latter whereof came from one of Keturahs Children) and the Parts of Arabia, where Mahomet was born; he immediately adds, That there were other People, ἐνδότεροι, more in the Bowels of Arabia, descended from Jectan, called, Amanitæ, that is, Homeritæ. Dr. Patrick thinks, it should be written Jockshan, and not Jectan; For Philostorgius expressly saies of the Homerites, Ἔστι δὲ τὸ ἔθνος τῶν ἐκ Χεττούρας. That they are one of the Nations descended from Keturah; and he relates, a famous Embassy of Constantius to win them unto Christianity, with the good Success of it. And it is a strong Proof of their Descent from some of Abrahams Family, that they retained the Rite of Circumcision, even when they were Idolaters: For the same Philostorgius affirms, That they were a Circumcised Nation, and κατὰ την ὀγδόην περιτεμνομένων ἡμέραν, Circumcised also on the Eighth Day. Tho' the other Arabians, as we are told by Josephus & Eustathius, do stay till they are Thirteen Years old, before they are circumcised.³⁷

Of Medan, the Countrey called Madiana, in the Southern Part of Arabia Felix doubtless had its Name.

And of Midian, the Countrey of Midanitis in Arabia Petræa.

Of Ishbak, the main Remembrances in Antiquity, are the Bacascami, which Pliny saies, was one of the Towns of the Zamareni. He tells us also, That there were a People hard by, called Bachilitæ.³⁸

³⁵ These "Foot-steps in Antiquity" can all be found in Mather's source, Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 25:2 (Commentary 1:94–95).

³⁶ Patrick (Commentary 1:94); Pliny (6.32.158) mentions "the Zamareni with the towns of Sagiatta and Canthace."

³⁷ Patrick (Commentary 1:94–95). Theophanes Confessor of Constantinople (Chronographia, p. 333, lines 19–21) mentions "Iektan" and his descendents, the "Amanitai" and the "Omeritai." Mather's third-hand Greek citation from Theophanes's Chronographia (p. 333, line 20) suggests "inmost." In an extant fragment from Photius, Philostorgius of Cappadocia (Historia ecclesiastica, lib. 3, cap. 4, fragm. 4, lines 2–3) asserts that the Homerites are "a tribe which is descended from [Abraham by] Keturah." In the same fragment from Photius, Philostorgius (7–8) relates that the Homerites "practice circumcision on the eighth day." Mather alludes to Roman Emperor Constantius (337–361), son of Constantine the Great, who sent Theophilus (a native of the island of Indos) to build a church in the Homerite capital of Taphron; moreover, Constantius instructed Aezianes, king of Axum (Abyssinia, including the Homerites of Yemen) to send an emissary to Alexandria with orders to receive the Arian doctrine [PG 25. 635] after the ouster of St. Athanasius (CE). Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 1.12.2) and Eustathius Antiochenus (Commentarius in hexaemeron) [PG 18. 764, lines 1–6] relate that the descendents of Ishmael in Arabia still circumcise their male children at age thirteen.

³⁸ Patrick (Commentary 1:95). Pliny (6.32.158).

Shuah perhaps had no Children, or so few, that they were mixed with some of their other Brethren, and left no Name unto Posterity. Yett Pliny mentions a Town called Suasa, in that Part of Arabia, that joins unto Egypt.³⁹

Sheba, the Son of Jockshan, was probably the Father of the Sabæans, that Strabo tells us, dwelt at the Entrance of Arabia Felix, and made frequent Excursions upon their Neighbours; whereof Job had some Experience.⁴⁰

Dedan, the Son of Jockshan hath left us a City of his Name, in the Countrey of Idumæa: [Jer. 25.23. and 49.8.] the Inhabitants whereof had the Denomination of Dedanim. [Isa. 21.13.]⁴¹

Ephah, the Son of Midian, had his Name continuing a long Time. [Isa. 60.6.] Not only Josephus, and Eusebius, and Jerom, but also the Nubian Geographer tells of a City called Madian, in the Shoar of the Red-Sea; near to which was Ephah in the Province of Madian. Ephah, or Hipha is the same with that Place, which the Greeks call Ἱππος, and Ptolomy mentions both a Mountain and a Village of this Name, on the same Shore, a little below Madiane, which is the Madian here mentioned.⁴²

[384v] Epher, the Son of Midian, probably left his Family among the Homerites, | whose Metropolis Ταφάρων, mention'd by several Authors, but by Arrianus called, Ἀφάρ, is a Memorial of him.⁴³

Hanoch seems to have left us the Trading Town called Cane, mention'd by Ptolomy, in Arabia Felix. Pliny mentions also a Countrey there, called, Regio Canauna, which may be of the same Original.⁴⁴

Abidah's Offspring may be the Διβηνοί who lived in the Island of Διδως, between Arabia and India. Pliny places the Island over against Canauna.⁴⁵

³⁹ Pliny (6.26.99; 6.31.133–34), “Susa” rather than “Suasa”; Patrick’s misspelling is here copied by Mather.

⁴⁰ Patrick (Commentary 1:95). Strabo (16.4.2, 19).

⁴¹ Patrick (Commentary 1:95). Samuel Bochart’s Geographia (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 6, col. 219–20).

⁴⁴ Patrick (Commentary 1:95). Ptolemy (Geographia 6.7.10, line 7). For the district of Canauna, see Pliny (6.32.150).

Eldaah ha's left no Remains of his Name, that we know of, except it should be the City Elana, seated in the Sinus Arabicus; called by others Ἀιλάνης;⁴⁶

[Q. Where do we find the Offspring of Ishmael seated? v. 12.⁴⁷

A. Nebajoth was the first-born of Ishmael. And his Posterity gave the Denomination, to the whole Countrey of Arabia Petraea; which Pliny, and Strabo, and Ptolomy call Nabataea, as other Authors call it Nabathis; and the Inhabitants Nabataei are mentioned, not only by Dionysius Periegetes, in his Description of the World, but also by Plutarch in his Life of Demetrius. These are commonly called Ishmaelites, in the Scripture, as if they had been the sole Heirs of Ishmael. They dwelt near the Midianites, their Half-brethren. We sometimes find them Fellow-Travellers, and Parteners in Traffick. [Gen. 37.27, 28, 36.] The Countrey of Moab was near these Nabataeans; Epiphanius therefore mentions them together.⁴⁸

Kedar had for his Offspring the Kedarenes, who were also seated in Arabia Petraea. These likewise became so famous, that some Authors call the whole Countrey, Kedar. Holy David is one of those Authors. Not all the Scenite, or Arabs who dwelt in Tents, but those only who dwelt in Arabia Petraea, (for as we are taught by Salmasius upon Pliny, there were diverse Kinds of them,) were the People of Kedar. Some take them to be the same, that Ptolomy calls Pharanite; For what the Psalmist calls, Dwelling in the Tents of Kedar, is called, 1. Sam. 26.1. Dwelling in the Wilderness of Paran.⁴⁹

Dumah seems (by Isa. 21.11.) to have been seated near Idumaea.

Hadar some think the Father of the Athrite in Arabia Felix. In which likewise there was a City called Tema, from the next Son of Ishmael.

And Jetur the next unto him, was doubtless the Father of the Iturei in Cælo-Syria.

⁴⁶ Patrick (Commentary 1:95). Claudius Salmasius (Plinianae exercitationes [1629 ed.] 1:482; [1689 ed.], cap. 33, 1:342, b, E-F and 1:344, a, G) asserts that the name Elana (Ælana), hence the Elanites, is derived from “Eldaah.” The Greek place name “Ailana” is prominently mentioned by Stephanus Byzantius (25.9) and by Strabo (16.2.30; 16.4.4), both placing it on the “Sinus Arabicus” or Erythraean Sea (Red Sea).

⁴⁷ The opening bracket is Mather’s.

⁴⁹ Simon Patrick on Gen. 25:13 (Commentary 1:96). King David speaks of having dwelt “in the tents of Kedar” (Ps. 120:5). Claudius Salmasius (Plinianae exercitationes [1629] 1:484) on Pliny (5.12.65; 5.21.87). Ptolemy (Geographia 5.17.3, line 7).

Kedemah, the last of the Sons, dwelt near to Kedar. Hence we read, Jer. 49.28. *Go up to Kedar, and spoil the Men of Kedem.*⁵⁰

Q. What sort of things were the Twelve Princes of Ishmael? v. 16.

A. Twelve Heads of so many Houses, Tribes, or Clans, (as Dr. Jackson on the Creed, supposes;) which kind of Government continued among them, until Four hundred Years after our Saviour; & is better expressed by the Heathen Writers, than by the Christian Interpreters; when they call them (with Strabo) Φύλαρχοι Ἀράβων. Rulers of their Tribes. The Governours of the Saracens (who are the same) were called, Phylarchi Saracenorum, as may be seen in Sextus Rufus, and Jornandes.^{51]}

Q. How did Rebeckah enquire of the Lord? v. 22.

A. She had said, If it be so, why am I thus? i.e. If I cannot be delivered, why did I conceive? Now tis probable, there was a Place where the Shechinah of the Divine Majesty did use to appear; which was the settled Place of Worship. And probably, some divinely inspired Person attended the Shechinah, like Melchisedek; to whom, Patricides thinks, Rebeckah now repairs, that she might be Resolved in the Case now distressing of her.⁵² 3022.

Q. What Remarkable Character, is there to be considered upon Esau and Jacob? v. 24.

A. Athanasius ha's this among his Questiones ad Antiochim; τις πρῶτος προετυπώσεν κλ.

Who in the Old Testament, were the First Types of those Two People, the Gentiles and the Jewes?

⁵⁰ Simon Patrick on Gen. 25:14, 15 (Commentary 1:97). Patrick's source appears to be Jacobus Cappellus's Commentarii et notae criticae in Vetus Testamentum (1689).

⁵¹ Simon Patrick on Gen. 25:16 (Commentary 1:97). His source is Dr. Thomas Jackson's Collection of the Works (1653), vol. 1, bk. 1, ch. 25, pp. 104–05, § 4. Strabo (16.2.11) calls them "Phylarchon Arabon" or "Arabian chieftains." Sextus Rufus (Breviarium de Victoriis, cap. 14); Jornandes (De summa temporum, sec. 230) calls them "Saracinorum filarchi." The closing bracket is Mather's.

And he answers, Jacob and Esau, the Two Sons of Rebeckah, των δυο λαων υπηρχον συμβολον. Pursue this Matter in your Meditations. T'wil afford you some Entertainment.⁵³

It is remarkable, They Quarrel before they are born. [Frankford.]⁵⁴

151.

Q. What think you, about the Hairiness of Esau; was it Ordinary or Extraordinary? v. 25.

A. T'was Extraordinary. T'was more than a Common & Humane Pilosity; t'was little short of the Villosity, that Satyres have sometimes ascribed unto them. Rebeckah his Mother, must use Goat Skins for the Imitation of it; and the Name of Seir was for this Cause putt upon him. Instances of such an Hairiness occur in many Approved Histories. Scaliger sais, hee saw a Spanish Boy, all overgrown with White Hairs; insomuch that the French call'd him, A Barbet, which is the Name of a Spaniel, or Shaggy Dog, among them. Columbus affirms, That hee saw a Man all Thick sett with Hairs, all over, except in Part of his Face & Hands. Boscius reports, That the French King bestow'd Education at Paris, upon a Man that was as Hairry as an Hound. Peucerus relates, that hee hath seen Children, Toto Dorso, Ursinis obsitos Villis. [Consult Schenkius's Observations.] And hence tis, that Sperlingius attributes a Sort of Monstrosity, to the Hairiness of Esau.

Esau signifies a Thing made, or compleat.⁵⁵

⁵⁵ Gen. 25:25; 27:16; 32:3. Mather mentions a number of scientific and medical works, which he would have known intimately because of his lifelong interest in medicine. His cancelled marginal annotations in "BA" refer to "Exercit. 114," in Exotericarum Exercitationum liber quintus decimus, de liber subtilitate, ad Hieronymum Cardanum (1557), Exercitatio 114, by the Italian polymath Julius Caesar Scaliger (1484–1558), a critique of Girolamo Cardan's De subtilitate rerum (1550), an early scientific discussion of natural phenomena; to "De Re Anat. L.13. c. 2," in De re anatomica libri XV (1559), lib. 13, cap. 2, by Renaldus Columbus, aka. Matteo Renaldo Colombo (c. 1516–59), professor of anatomy at Padua, whose anatomical handbook went through many editions; to "De Concord. Med. et Phys. Th. 41," in Concordia medicorum et physicorum de humano conceptu (1582), Thesis 41, by Ioannes Lonaeus Boscius, aka. Johann Lonaeus van den Bosch (c. 1514–85) of Brabant, professor of medicine and mathematics at Ingolstadt (Germany); to "L.1. c. de Prodig.," in Commentarius de praecipuis divinationum generibus (1553), lib. 1, cap. "De Prodigia," observations about prodigies, superstitions, and monstrous births (such as children whose "whole body [was] covered with bear-like hair"), by Gaspar Peucerus, aka. Caspar Peucer (1525–1602), German professor of mathematics and medicine at Wittenberg, son-in-law of Melanchthon; to Johannes Georgius Schenckius, aka. Johann-Georg Schenck von Grafenberg (1530–98), a German physician now best remembered for his book on monstrous births Monstrorum historia memorabilis (1609); to "Synopsis: Phys. L. 1. c. 9.," in Synopsis physica. Editio sexta (1658), lib. 1, cap. 9, by Johannes Sperlingius, aka. Sperling (1603–58), professor of physics and medicine at Wittenberg. For his own medical handbook, see Mather's Angel of Bethesda (1972).

Q. The Time of Isaac's receiving the Blessing? v. 2.

A. Dr. Lightfoot has this Remark.

At Abrahams Death, when Isaac is now just Seventy five Years old (as Jacob was fifteen,) that Blessing is given to him, which was given to Abraham, when he was just Seventy five.

He adds, At the same Age probably Jacob gets the Blessing from his Father.⁵⁶

Q. Where might lye the special Emphasis of the Blessing on Isaac, That the Land sow'd by him that Year, yielded him an Hundred fold? v. 12.

A. The Specialty of it lay in this, That it was after there had newly been a terrible Dearth; & perhaps, the Soyl too, that afforded him so large a Crop, was none of the richest. Otherwise Varro saies (L.I. de re Rustica, c. 44.) that in Syria, about Gadera, they reaped an Hundred Bushels for one; (Ex modio nasci centum.) Pliny and Solinus do say the same of the Countrey Byzacium; in so much, that Bochart fancies the Metropolis | of that rich Countrey, namely, Adrumetum, had its Name from hence; for in the Phœnician Language, tis as much as to say, The Region of an hundred fold. Nay, there were Places in Africa so rich, that they yeelded no less than Two Hundred, and some, Three Hundred fold. Whence he thinks, Africa had its Name; signifying as much as Ἐυσταχὺς γῆ, A Land of Ears of Corn.⁵⁷

⁵⁶ Mather paraphrases John Lightfoot's commentary on Gen. 25:7–10 (Harmony [1647] 27). In his "Note Book of Authors" (on Gen. 26:8), Mather identifies as his source Wolfgang Franzius's De Interpretatione S. Scripturarum (1619) 916. However, he evidently excised his citation from Franzius in a later revision when he dropped his commentary on 26:8.

⁵⁷ This extract is from Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 26:12 (Commentary 1:100). Varro (Rerum rusticarum 1.44.2) relates that the region near Sybaris (Italy) just as that near Gadara (Syria) is so fertile that "the normal yield is said to be even 'a hundred [measures] to one' [measure]" of planted seeds. Pliny (5.3.24) and Solinus (De mirabilibus mundi 28); Samuel Bochart mentions Adrumetum (an ancient seaport in Mysia, Asia Minor) and the Greek "Eustachus Ge," in his Geographia (pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 24, col. 469 and cap. 25, col. 488, 492). See Appendix A.

Q. Wee find Old Isaac, now disposing of himself to Dy, by proceeding to settle the Blessing upon one of his Sons. How Old was hee? & what was it that caused him just Now so to Dispose himself? v. 1.

A. Isaac, was now come to that Age, at which his Brother Ishmael died, fourteen Years ago; namely, An Hundred & thirty Seven. This was it, which probably now above any other Time, awakened him to think of his own Death, at hand.⁵⁸

Q. Why does Isaac send Esau, on Hunting for Venison, in order to his Receiving the Blessing? v. 3.

A. It was not because Meat or Drink would conduce to this Purpose; but Isaac putts Esau, upon the doing of This, that hee might know, Whether hee should Bless him, or no: For, his missing of Hunted Venison heretofore, had occasioned the Loss of his Birthright; and if Esau missed of it now, it would bee a Sign to Isaac, that God would have him to lose the Blessing also. Rebeckah easily understood this to bee his Mind; and accordingly made use of it, for the advantage of Jacob. And afterwards, Isaac did somewhat Bless Esau, when hee saw him to have sped of a Prey, according to the Sign that hee had proposed.

Q. Might there be any special Mystery, in the History of Esau and Jacob, contending for the Blessing?

A. You'l find, good old Prosper, with an agreeable Ingenuity and Amplification, discovering in Esau and Jacob, a Prædiction, of what afterwards befel the Jewes, and the Gentiles, in the Matter of obtaining a Blessing from God, thro' the Lord-Messiah, at His Coming.

Tis possible, if you pursue this Contemplation, you may find in it something very curious.⁵⁹

Q. Savoury Meat. How præpared? v. 4.

A. I will transcribe a Passage from honest Mr. Terry's, Voyage to East-India. He saies of the People, in Indoustan; "They stew all their Flesh, (as their Kid, and other Venison,) cutt into Sippets, or Slices, or little Parts, to which they putt

Onions, and Herbs and Roots and Ginger, which they take there green out of the Earth, and other Spices, with some Butter; which Ingredients, when they are well-proportioned, make a Food that is exceedingly pleasing to all Palates, at their first tasting thereof; Most Savoury Meat; happily that very Dish, that Jacob made for his Father Isaac, when he gott the Blessing.”⁶⁰

Q. What evil Design might Esau have in his Marriages? v. 8.

A. As it was a profane thing in Esau to marry the Daughters of Heth, (Josephus reports that Beer and Elon, whose Daughters Esau married, were Dynastæ, or powerful Men among the Hittites,) a People under the Curse of God; and probably he went against the Charge of his Father in it. So he seems to have had but an evil Design in marrying with a Daughter of Ishmael, for it looks as if he intended to sett up the Pretensions of that Family against Isaac’s.⁶¹

Q. In his Intending the Blessing for Esau, how could Isaac so much forgett what the Lord had promised unto Rebeckah, That the Elder should serve the Younger?

A. Munster gives us a Conjecture, That Rebeckah never acquainted her Husband with it.⁶²

Q. Why must it come to pass, in the Providence of God, that the Blessing must bee obtained by Jacob, with such various and grievous Lying about it? v. 19.

A. This Good Account ha’s been sometimes given of this Ill Matter. Mendacij peccato Jacobum voluit implicari Deus, operibus ne tribueretur aut Electio, aut Benedictio.

And the Surprize of Isaac in this affayr, served not only to show him the Irresistible Hand of God in it, but also to take away the Rage of Esau against his Father.⁶³

⁶³ The “Good Account” translates, “God wanted Jacob to be implicated in the sin of lying, so that neither his selection nor his blessing might be attributed to deeds.” R. Bachya ben Asher (Torah Commentary 2:418–19) makes a somewhat different point: Since Jacob had purchased Esau’s birthright, Jacob “was therefore entitled to receive the blessing his father wanted to bestow at this time. He considered himself Esau’s representative in the matter, and we know

Q. But are we sure that Jacob is to be charged with such various & grievous Lying?

A. He that writes, The General View of the Holy Scriptures; writes to this charitable Purpose. “This Answer of Jacobs, if we expound it in the best Sense, is no Lye; it is no more, than a kind of Speech, called, | Ironia; a witty Speech, not meant as the Words do sound, but intimating a Truth, and having a Good and a Right Sense. The Speech of Jacob importeth, That he is the Party, to whom there now belonged, the Blessing which Isaac intended now to pronounce. Esau had putt it over to him; Jacob rightly appeared in Esau’s Place; He might very well now be called, The First-born Son. He had bought the Birthright; and God had also chosen him. Surely, we cannot condemn this Answer of Jacob, since God hath approved it, by giving him the Blessing, and continuing the same to his Posterity; and Isaac was resolute in the Confirmation of it.”⁶⁴ [388v]

It may be, these charitable Spectacles, may help you, to look upon Jacobs Action, with Kinder Constructions than formerly.

Yea, It may be, the Vindication of Jacob, can be carried on yett a little further? Saies Jacob, I am Esau thy First-born. The Word, Esau, signifies, Made. And now I’ll recite unto you, the Words of one Mr. Lawson upon it.⁶⁵

“It may be understood, as if he had said, I am Made thy First-born. The which Sense acquitteth Jacob, from Untruth. For as much as tho’ he were not the First-born of Isaac by Priority of Birth; yett he was now Made the First-born by a lawful Contract; for he bought the Birthright of Esau, whose it was. And that a Birthright may be made his, whose Descentively it was not, witness is Joseph, who obtained the Birthright from Reuben, his Elder-Brother. 1. Chron. 5.1.

“As for the Afflictions, wherewith Jacobs Life was much loaden, it seems not safe to impute them, (as some do,) unto this Speech of his, as the Cause. We find Jacob blessed, but no where taxed of God in Scripture; for a Lye in these Words, nor for his Manner of coming by the Blessing.”

Mr. Lawson thinks, It is lawful for one to take ambiguous or æquivocal Words; provided the Party to whom they be uttered, be not wronged, nor any that legally speaking anyone who is the representative of the principal may act on behalf of that principal.” Matthew Poole synthesizes some of the principal interpreters who are dissatisfied with those who try to justify Jacob’s behavior (Synopsis Criticorum 1:209).

⁶⁵ Mather extracts the following paragraphs from Gleanings and Expositions (1646) 2–3, by the obscure John Lawson (fl. 1640s).

other; & provided there be a Truth in the Words, tho' there be not the Truth in that Sense, wherein the Hearer conceiveth them. This may be done, he thinks, when the Hearer goes about, to bring some undeserved Mischief upon us; which is the Case here before us.

Q. How was it possible for Isaac, to be so easily deceived with Kids Flesh, for Venison? v. 25.

A. The same old Age, that had enfeebled the Sight of Isaac, had enfeebled his Tast also. Moreover, Kids Flesh differs very little from Venison, especially as the Dressing of them, with agreeable Sauces, may manage them. And Bochart for the Confirmation of this, tells us; Memini me vidisse Viros, rei venatoriæ non imperitos, qui Bubulam in Artocrea pro cervinâ comederint; Gentlemen used unto Hunting, yett were not able to Distinguish a Beef-py, from a Venison-pasty.⁶⁶

Q. On the Blessing of Jacob; The Dew of Heaven, & the Fatness of the Earth? v. 28.

A. Allow me to translate the Words of Irenæus, Adv. Hær. L. V. c. 33. Predicta Benedictio ad Tempora Regni sine contradictione pertinet, – “The forementioned Blessing undoubtedly relates to the Times of that Kingdom, in which the Righteous shall reign after their Resurrection from the Dead; when the Creature being made New, & delivered from Bondage, shall produce prodigious Quantities of all sorts of Food, thro’ the Dews of Heaven, & the Fruitfulness of the Earth. Agreeable to which, the Elders, who saw John the Disciple of our Lord, have related, that they heard Him declare, what the Lord said concerning those Times.” –⁶⁷

[Then follows a Parabolical & Hyperbolical Representation of the Matter; which concludes with saying,]

“And also all Animals feeding upon these Foods, shall be peaceable, agreeing with one another, & in a most perfect Subjection to Men.”⁶⁸

⁶⁶ Mather cites Samuel Bochart’s Hierozaicon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 52, col. 634) as follows: “I remember having seen men, not inexperienced at hunting, who ate beef in their pies instead of venison.”

⁶⁸ Mather’s bracketed reference to the parabolic representation is to Irenæus’s prophetic hyperbole (Against Heresies 5.33.3) about the times of Christ’s kingdom: “The days will come, in which vines shall grow, each having ten thousand branches, and in each branch ten thousand twigs, and in each true twig ten thousand shoots, and in each one of the shoots ten thousand clusters, and on every one of the clusters ten thousand grapes, and every grape when pressed will give five and twenty metretres of wine” (ANF 1:563). Mather’s subsequent translation

Q. On that, Even me also, O my Father? v. 34.

A. It is not the Accusative, but the Nominative. אֲנִי אֲנִי / It is I, It is I, O my Father. So, v. 38. should be read, Hast thou but That one Blessing? The Relative, That, should not be left out.⁶⁹

Q. Where lay the Difference between the Blessing of Jacob and of Esau? v. 39.

A. It is here said unto Esau, Behold, thy Dwelling shall be the Fatness of the Earth. – Some have translated it, Thy Dwelling shall be without the Fatness of the Earth, & the Dew from above; but by thy Sword shalt thou live. A Prophecy, that he should inhabit a poor Countrey, but maintain himself plentifully by his Sword. Otherwise, they think, his Blessing would be the same with Jacobs. And yett there would be some Difference. For in Esau's Blessing there is no mention of Plenty of Corn and Wine; and there is no such Dominion given unto him, as there is unto Jacob. And whatsoever Fatness there was in the Soil of his Countrey, it is plain that it lasted not; for we find, Mal. 1.3. The Heritage of Esau laid waste, for the Dragons of the Wilderness.⁷⁰

Monsr. Saurin has a good Remark. “If we should stop at the literal Sense of the last Words of Dying Jacob, we should hardly be able to understand, wherein consisted that Præ-eminence and Superiority, which was promised unto Jacob over Esau; it is only by giving them a Spiritual & Mystical Signification, that we can discover in them a Meaning worthy of that Infallible Spirit, from which they are derived, and who vouchsafed himself to dictate them unto the Patriarch.”⁷¹

Q. Esau expects the Speedy Death of his Father. Did it happen according to his Expectation? v. 41.

A. No. His Father lived Three and Forty Years after this.

It seems, tho' Esau fear'd the Grieving of his Father, he had no Fear of Grieving his Mother; who had help'd Jacob to supplant him.⁷² in quotation marks is from the same text, the last paragraph in the chapter (1:563). He also employs the same hyperbole in his Threefold Paradise (284).

⁷⁰ This paragraph is cribbed from Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 27:39 (Commentary 1:103).

⁷¹ Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXVII, 1:214).

⁷² Mather closely paraphrases Simon Patrick's annotation on Gen. 27:41 (Commentary 1:103).

Q. Jacob was Rebeckahs Favourite, Heir of a powerful Family, whereof he was as it were the Head: Is it not strange for him to depart alone, with a Staff only, & not one Servant attending on him, to pass many Rivers, & pass thro' the Dangers of a Journey (according to Ptolomies Computation) of more than one hundred & fifty Leagues? v. 2.

A. We find here, that Jealous Esau was informed of all that related unto Isaacs Command, and Jacobs Design. Doubtless, the Fear that Jacob had of Esau's prosecuting his bloody Purpose, to kill him, caused him to depart secretly & suddenly.

Austin was here so full of Allegories, that he makes Jacobs taking a Staff, when he goes to seek a Wife, a Type of our Saviours Redeeming His Church with His Cross.⁷³

Q. That Blessing upon Jacob, God Almighty, make thee fruitful, that thou mayst be a Multitude of People: (which had been promised, unto his Father, and his Grandfather before him:) what Remarkable Demonstration have we, of its Accomplishment? v. 3.

A. Lett us first, a little consider the Number of the Towns, possessed by the Offspring of Jacob.⁷⁴

In England (and Wales,) are contained about 39000 Square Miles. In Judea, (which was 200 Miles long, & 70 broad,) there are but 14000: not much more than a Third of the former Number. Yett upon this little Spott of Ground, there stood about as many Towns, as are in England; reckoned about 8800. To the Tribes of Judah and Simeon, we find there belong'd at least 115 Cities, or walled Towns; (Josh. 15.) to each of which, if you allow Ten Villages, there were 1265, Towns belonging to those two Tribes. If we allow to each Pair, one Pair with another, the like Number, as to the Tribes of Judah and Simeon, they make together, 7590; very near the Number of Towns in England, a Territory almost Thrice as big. Xiphilinus also reports, from Dion Cassius, That when Adrian sent his Army, under Julius Severus, into Judæa; no fewer than 985 very noted Towns, κῶμαι ὀνομαστόταται, were by them destroyed; unto each of which, if we allow but Eight Villages, they make 8865, which exceeds the Number of Towns in England.⁷⁵

⁷⁴ The comparison between England and ancient Judea in the following two paragraphs is extracted from Nehemiah Grew's Cosmologia Sacra (1701).

Lett us pass on to consider the Number of their Militia. The Militia consisted of those, who were able to go forth to War, from Twenty Years of Age, to Fifty; Lett us take the Muster, which was made by Joab, at the Appointment of David; which included all the military Tribes, but that of Benjamin; and consisted of 1300000. To these, we may add, 100000, for the Tribe of Benjamin; and 50000, for the Tribe of Levi. These make, 1450000, the number of Males for the | Militia. To these we may add a Fourth Part, which is the usual Proportion of Males not within the Militia-Age; and thus, Dr. Grew brings us to 3262500 Males. But then, the Proportion of Males to Females, is, (as Sir William Petty observes from the Bills of Mortality) as 13 to 12. The Females of Israel will now amount unto 3022500; which being added unto the Number of Males, makes in all, 6275000. – And according to the best Computation, the Number of Souls, in England (and Wales) is about 6440000. This Account of Israel, is the more credible, if we consider, what Josephus reports; That at the Return of the Captivity, there went out of Babylon, of the Tribes of Judah, and Benjamin, more than 4500000, that were above 12 Years old. Calvisius observes, from the same Historian, That some time before our Saviours Birth, the Paschal Lambs, being Numbred, were found 256500. Unto each of which, if only 12 Persons be allowed, they make 3000000, of those only which were able, and allow'd, to be at the Passeover. Herewith, we may compare the Sacrifice offered by Solomon, at the Dedication of the Temple; 22000 Oxen, and 120000 Sheep.⁷⁶

Q. Jacob ha's an Exhibition of Angels, Ascending & Descending. What comfortable Thing might bee therein signified unto him? v. 12.

[Gen. 32.1, 2.] It seems, there was one Host of Angels, that went with him, from Mesopotamia, to the Land of Canaan; & when hee came into his own Countrey, another Host mett him, to take him under their special Guardian-ship.⁷⁷

Q. Is there any Notable Instruction, of a Moral Importance, to bee Raised, from the Ascending of the Angels, in the Vision of Jacob?

A. I think, there is in Dr. Featly somewhere a Note of this Importance.

What? Angels go by Steps into Heaven? One would think, that being Spirits, they might easily mount thither in an Instant. Surely, Tis not without a Mystery; shewing that Magistrates, and Ministers, who are in the Scripture styled Angels, are not Suddenly to leap, or Hastily to climbe, up to Places of Preferment, but Ascend by Degrees, when God sett's a Ladder for them.⁷⁹

Q. Was there nothing of a Type in Jacobs Ladder?

⁷⁹ Mather's excerpt from Daniel Featley, D.D. (1582–1645), controversial Anglican clergyman, royal chaplain, member of the Westminster Assembly, and voluminous author, is probably deeply buried in one of Featley's seventy sermons (in nine hundred pages) gathered in Clavis Mystica (1636). A copy of Featley's House of Mourning (1640), a collection of 47 sermons, was owned by Increase Mather ("Tuttle, "Libraries" 327).

A. Wee may call Jacobs Ladder, a Typical Vision, rather than a Type. And even of this also some have thought on a Typical Accommodation. For, as Jacob saw the Ladder but in a Vision, so wee see Christ, but in a Glass darkly. [1. Cor. 13.12.]⁸⁰

The Person, & the Office of the Lord Jesus Christ, is in Jacobs Ladder exhibited unto us. The Foot of the Ladder was on Earth, & the Top, in Heaven; Heaven and Earth here mett. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ, in regard of his Humankind touched the Earth, & in regard of His Divinity is the God of Heaven.

But as the Top and the Foot of Jacobs Ladder, made but One Ladder. Thus the Two Natures in our Lord Jesus Christ, make but One Person; and by the Union of these two Natures, Hee brings Heaven & Earth together.

Nor is there any Ascending to Heaven but by this Ladder; No Salvation from God, & no Communion with God, but only by the Lord Jesus Christ. Tho' Men should Heap Mountain upon Mountain, of their own Duties, they would yett fall short. [Act. 4.12.]

Upon this Ladder, the Angels Ascend and Descend. The Ministration of Angels, is a great Privilege, procured by the Lord Jesus Christ, for the Children of God. [Zech. 1.9, 10, 11.]

At the Top of this Ladder, the Patriarch sees God, Renewing His Covenant with him. It is thro' the Lord Jesus Christ, that God enters into Covenant with us. Hee would never have spoken Words of Peace to Sinners, but thro' His Mediation. [2. Cor. 1.20.]

Where was this Ladder to bee seen?

At Bethel, or, the House of God. It is in the Church, that the Lord Jesus Christ, is to bee seen. [Eph. 3.10.]

Q. What meant Jacob, when he said, This is the Gate of Heaven? v. 17.

A. Here God, in the Shechinah, keeps His Court, attended by His Holy Angels. The Presence of God in one Place more than another, consists (as Dr. Patrick observes) in his Train or Retinue. A King is there, where his Court is. And God is especially present, where the Angels keep their Station. The Gate of Heaven here, is as much as the Court of Heaven; For the Gate was wont to be the Judgment Hall, and the Place where Kings and Senators did use to sitt, attended by their Guards & Ministers. I infer, That when we pray for the Presence of God, we pray that His good Angels may attend us, & befriend us, with their kindest Offices.⁸¹

Q. Why was Bethel of old, called Luz? v. 19.

This Luz in the Tribe of Benjamin; and another among the Hittites, in the Tribe of Ephraim, (Judg. 1.26.) Bochart makes no doubt, had their Name from this Original.⁸³

Q. Does not Jacob seem to make his Choice of God, a little too Conditional, when he saies, If the Lord will do so and so for him, Then the Lord shall be his God? v. 20.

A. Expositors have laboured about this Point. Certain it is, Jacob never made so profane a Bargain as this, that if the Lord would so & so Bless him, he would then own him for his God, otherwise have nothing to do with him. I conclude rather, with Mr. Gataker, That there is a Mistake of our Translators in settling the Connexion. It should be read thus, If God will be with me, & will keep me, & will give me Food & Raiment, & I return in Safety to my Fathers House. And the Lord will be my God; Then this Stone, etc. so that this, [The Lord shall be my God] is a Condition, that Jacob makes with the Lord; a Condition of his Vow; and not vow'd on any other Condition.⁸⁴

Q. Will you not consider Jacob, as a Type of our Lord Jesus Christ? v. 22.

⁸⁵ Mather's typological interpretations of persons, occasions, and rituals – often inspired by his uncle's The Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1683) – are a subordinate heuristic device

First; The English of Jacob is, A Supplanter. [Gen. 27.36.] But a more Honest, & a more Happy Supplanter is our Lord Jesus Christ. Hee supplants the Divel, in all His Designs; [1. Joh. 3.8.] Yea, and this even in and by his own Methods too. – One of the Antients, reckons our Lord the Antitype of Jacob, inasmuch as tis said, in Rev. 6.2. Hee went out conquering & to conquer.

Again; It was the Case of our Patriarch, to bee Jacob and Israel too; hee had more Names than one belonging to him. This is the Honour, this the Glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. Hee is Jesus. [Math. 1.21.] But Jacob knew him, by the Name of Shiloh; David, by the Name of Messiah; Isaiah, by the Name of Immanuel; Jeremiah, by the Name of, The Branch of Righteousness. More you may see, in the Epistles to the Seven Churches.

Further; How did Jacob come to have the Birthright? It was with a thing styled [Gen. 26.30.] Red Pottage; a Broth, which I suppose, had Lentiles, or Saffron, infused into it. Why, There was a Red Liquor, by which our Lord Jesus Christ, ha's also purchased for us a Birthright; Hee ha's obtained an Heavenly and an Eternal Inheritance. His own Blood, was that Red Liquor. [Eph. 1.14.]

Moreover, when Jacob gott a Blessing of his Father, hee brought Savoury Venison with him, and hee had the Clothes of his Elder Brother on. [Gen. 27.14, 15.] In like Sort; The Lord Jesus Christ, Hee presented unto His Father, the Flesh of His own Obedience, in the Garment of our Nature. Hee borrow'd our Clothes, and therein Hee offered Savoury Venison unto the Lord. The Hind of the Morning was made a Dish, for the Entertainment of God: So the Blessing is gained for the House of Israel.⁸⁶

Once more; The Father of Jacob gave him that Charge, [Gen. 28.2.] Arise, Go to Padan-aram. And thither hee went, and became a Servant, and a Shepherd there. Such ha's been the Condescension, such the Humiliation, of our Lord Jesus Christ! Hee left His Fathers House. [Joh. 10.36.] And Hee became a Servant here. [Phil. 25.] His Condition here, was Low and Hard; & it is reported, that Hee wrought with His Mothers Husband, at the Calling of a Carpenter.

Furthermore; It is said [Hos. 12.12.]⁸⁷ Israel served for a Wife, & for a Wife hee kept Sheep. [At Gen. 29.15. you have the well-known Story.] Well; wee see what it was, that our Lord Jesus Christ, became a Servant for. Truly, It was for in his "BA." His preoccupation with historical, scientific, and philological approaches reveals the shifting currents in biblical criticism in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries that crowded out the antiquated "proofs" of a bygone age. However, typology was alive and well in the sermons of Edward Taylor's Upon the Types of the OT (1989) 1:97–112.

⁸⁶ "The Hind of the Morning" (or more literally, "according to the doe of the dawn") is listed as an alternate title of Ps. 22 (KJV, 1611 ed., margin) and may either be the tune of a then well-known song to which Ps. 22 was to be sung, or a figure of speech that – like Homer's "rosy fingertips of Dawn" (Odyssey 4.305–06) – suggests the first rays of the rising sun. Alternatively, the phrase "hind of the morning" has also been read as a metaphor for the "suffering Messiah," for "a name of the Shechina and as a symbol of the dawning redemption" (KD 5:107, 193).

a Wife, it was for a Church, which is the Lambs Wife. [Tit. 2.14.] But Jacob ha's Two Wives. Even so, There are Two Sisters, which our Lord Jesus Christ ha's married unto Himself: the Church of the Jewes, and the Church of the Gentiles. [Consider the Contract between God the Father, and God the Son, hereabouts, in Isa. 49.3, 4, 5.] Oh! Lett us not Refuse an Union with this precious Lord, who ha's undergone more for us, far away, than ever Jacob did for those, whom hee espoused.

Besides; It is recorded of Jacob [Gen. 29.30.] Hee loved Rachel more than Leah. Thus, The Gentile Church, the Younger Sister, ha's most enjoy'd the Love of the Lord. Hee ha's now been Dwelling with her, for above Sixteen Hundred Years. But the Jewish Church, the Elder Sister, ha's been, after a Sort Neglected all this while. Shee was Blear-Eyed, shee could not See the Prophecies of the Messiah fulfilled in our Lord; shee could not See the Things of her Peace, in the Day of her Peace; Her Husband ha's now Forsaken her. But lett us, without an Envious Jealousy long for the Time, when the Mercies of the Gentiles, will bee granted unto the Jewes also. [See Rom. 11.25, 26. and Amos. 9.14, 15.]

Add hereunto; Wee find this a great Stroke, in the Character of Jacob; The Word of his Father, or his Mother, was a Law unto him. Thus our Lord His Mother, how careful was hee to provide for her, & comply with her, in all proper Things! And tho' her Husband, was but His Father-in-Law, yett Hee might say, Many Years have I served thee, neither Transgressed I, at any Time, thy Commandment. [Wee have an express Remark upon it, in Luc. 2.51.]

To proceed; Where did Jacob first find Rachel? Wee are told, [Gen. 29.2.] Behold, there was a Well in the Field, and Lo, there it was. But what of this? I Remember Austin made this Animadversion hereupon; Jacob first saw Rachel at the Well; and at the Water of Baptism, Christ is to find the Church. It was at a Well, that our Lord converted the Woman of Samaria. At a Well, by the Water of Baptism, it is, that our Lord, takes Possession of us, for Himself. Baptism is the Initiating Ordinance, with which, our Lord first of all takes hold of us. From the Well wee go to the House; and in the Lords-Supper, wee come to a Fuller Acquaintance with Him.

To pass on; When Jacob was Apprehensive, of being murdered, tis said, [Gen. 32.7.]⁸⁸ Hee was greatly Afraid & Distressed. And [v. 9.] Hee said, Oh! Lord God, of my Father. Accordingly, our Lord once had a Terrible Death, staring Him full in the face. This fill'd him {with} Horror, & threw Him into a Bloody Agony. There was an Army of Edomites now falling on Him. And wee find [Luc. 22.41.] Hee withdrew, & kneeled down, & prayed.

To conclude; Wee read concerning Jacob, [Gen. 46.3.] That by the Direction of God, hee was carried into Egypt, and that a Joseph, the Son of Jacob, supply'd him there. This was the very Condition of our Lord Jesus Christ.

⁸⁸ Mather's manuscript erroneously reads "[Gen. 37.7.]," here silently corrected.

[Math. 2.13.] By the Order of God, Hee was carried into Egypt; and a Joseph too, yea, & Hee the Son of another Jacob also, there look'd after Him.

Wee might likewise, in the Bethel of Jacob, see the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ; and wee might in the Twelve Sons of Jacob, see the Twelve Apostles of our Lord. But these things may suffice.

Q. The Substitution of Leah, in the Place of Rachel? v. 21.

A. Saurin observes, If the Marriage-ceremonies were performed among the Syrians after such a Manner as among the Græcians, and other Nations, the Cheat was easy enough. The Bridegroom went to Bed first; The Nuptial Chamber had Light in it little enough. The Bride was covered with a Veil, when she was brought unto the Bed-side: The true Construction of the Latin Word, Nubers, (which now signifies, To Marry,) was anciently, To Cover one self with a Veil. We have several Monuments of that Custome; upon which Mr. Spon, in his Curious Enquires, may be consulted.⁹⁰

Q. The Meaning of That, My Days are fulfilled? v. 21.

A. Dr. Patrick, understands it, not of, the Seven Years Service, but of the Months Trial, mentioned in the Fourteenth Verse.

Or else, it may signify no more, than, Tis now high time for me to marry, Being between Seventy and Eighty Years of Age.

But more of This, in the next Illustration.⁹¹

Q. What was the true Time of Jacobs Marriage? Whether at the End of his first Seven Years Service? or, whether in the first Year of that Service? v. 21.

A. I Incline to the latter Opinion. But the Text must bee first a little paraphrased.⁹²

Jacob, having at his first Coming treated with Laban, about Rachel, his Uncle first made a Months Trial of his Ability, Diligence, & Faithfulness. If hee had not now enjoy'd her, the seven following Years had seem'd a most wretched long while; for, Amantibus omnis mora est longa et gravis. But Jacob having well gone thorough his Month of Probation, saits to Laban here, Give mee, I pray thee, my Designed Wife, for my Dayes of Probation are fulfilled. So Lydiat understands, The fulfilling of Dayes, here mentioned. Compare v. 14: And thus, when Jacob saits ⁹¹ Mather summarizes Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 29:18–21 (Commentary 1:107).

in v. 25. Did not I serve with thee, for Rachel? the Meaning is, Did not I Agree & Begin to serve thee? For, Verba completiva sunt Inchoative Intelligenda.⁹³

If wee take the former Opinion, then Jacob had Twelve Children, in the last Seven Years Service. Now; Leah, after shee had born her Fourth Son, Judah, left off Childing for some time. Then giving her maid Zilpah to Jacob, shee successively bare him two Sons, Gad and Asher. Well, allow Two Years, or thereabouts, for Leahs resting from Child-bearing, how could shee at several Births have Three Children more, before Seven Years were out? Besides, before shee was with Child; Issachar, her Fifth Son, her eldest Son, Reuben, was old enough to fetch Mandrakes out of the field for her. And last of all, Rachel bore Joseph; all which according to this Opinion, must bee within the Space of one Seven Years. For my Part, I cannot comprehend it! Well, but allow Jacob to bee married, at the Beginning of the first Seven Years, & the Current of the History will run clear enough. Another Argument against that Opinion, may bee taken from Judahs Age, & the Birth of Hezron & Hamul, his Grandchildren, when Jacob, went down into Egypt. Jacob was at least Seventy Six Years old, when hee first went unto Laban; which appears thus. Hee was 130 Years old, when hee stood before Pharaoh; and then Joseph was 40 Years old. [When hee was advanced, hee was 30; after which passed 7 Years of Plenty, and 3 of Famine, e're Jacob came anear him.] Now, Joseph was born in the Fourteenth Year after Jacobs coming to Laban. Gen. 30.25. Take then the 14 Years before Joseph was Born, and the 40 Years of his Age, when his Father stood before Pharaoh, I say, take this out of his Fathers Age, 130; and it will bee clear, that Jacob, was at least 76 Years old, when hee came to Laban. This being so; then according to that Opinion which wee are now confuting, Judah, the fourth Son of Leah, | must needs bee but three or four Years older than Joseph; and so Judah must bee but 43 or 44 Years old at most, when Hee, & His Grandchildren, came with Jacob into Egypt. To compass this, they must now Reckon, that Judah married, when hee was 12 Years old, and had Er at 13; that Er, & after him, Onan, married at the same Age: Tamar then must remain a Widow, until Shelah growes; in the mean time Judahs Wife died, & so Tamar bears to Judah, Pharez, and all within the Compass of 3 Years; Pharez must also marry when 12 Years old, & begett Hezron & Hamul, (suppose 'em Twins) which at a Year old were carried into Egypt. Are not these Reckonings cruel Harsh? Whereas, the Addition of the former Seven Years, gives fair Way to the Birth of all the 12 Children; & allowes Hezron & Hamul, to be born in the 50th Year of Judah's Age. It also permits Judah, to be Ten Years older than Joseph; and leaves Room for such Accounts as these; Judah at 16 Years old comes into Canaan; & speedily marries the Daughter of Shuah. In the next Year hath Er. Er marries Tamar at 14. After which, may 4 Years be spent in the Matters relating to Onan, Er, & Shelah; & until the Birth of Pharez. Pharez may marry at 13 Years old, and in two Years have Hezron and Hamul; & then all go down into Egypt, by that time Judah was fifty Years of age.

See Mr. Cradocks History of the O. T. Methodized.⁹⁴

Those who maintain the common Opinion, and are shock'd, at the præ-mature Marriages, which are supposed in it, relieve themselves with saying, 'Tis not proved, That the Years of Plenty in Egypt, began immediately upon Joseph's Advancement.

Q. Lett us consider the Case of Conscience; relating to the Polygamy in which the Patriarchs allow'd themselves? v. 28.

A. Monsr. Jurieu, would have it considered, with relation to Four Sorts of Persons.⁹⁵

First; There were wicked Men, descended from the Race of Cain, who from the Beginning trespassed against the Law of Marriage. These had an enormous Crime to be charged upon them.⁹⁶

Secondly; GOD seems to have dispensed with this Law, to the Kings of Israel, when we read, Deut. XVII.17. He shall not multiply Wives; It restrains him not unto one, any more than what it is enjoined, He shall not multiply Horses; But it rather allows him a Plurality, while it forbids a Multiplicity, & the fatal Error that Solomon fell into. Doubtless Holy David understood it so. It looks as if Heaven connived at Polygamy in the Kings of Israel, that they might not be in their Splendor, altogether inferiour to the other Kings in their Neighbourhood; a great Part of whose Magnificence lay in their Seraglio's.⁹⁷

But, thirdly; There were some {who} lived in a State of Polygamy, who were the Chiefs and Heads of Families, that were celebrated for their frequent conversing with GOD. Such were Abraham, and Jacob. And for them, there seems to have been a Dispensation of GOD, with regard unto a Mystery, that was to be represented in their Marriages. There needed not a Permission in express Terms; it being sufficient, that GOD, who kept a watchful Eye over the Transactions of these Patriarchs, did not check them, in any of these Ways of Revelation, or Inspiration, wherein He entertained so frequent a Correspondence with them.⁹⁸

⁹⁶ Jurieu (Critical History 1:223).

⁹⁸ Jurieu (Critical History 1:224–25).

Lastly; There was a Vulgar Sort of Private Persons, who thought they might follow the Example of the Princes, & the Prophets, whom GOD had so dispensed withal. A GOD bore with these; who thought Him not such a Respecter of Persons; as to allow that in some which He would not allow in others.⁹⁹

The Use of Concubines was, as Monsr. Jurieu observes, a sort of Super-additional Polygamy, among the Ancients. They were look'd upon as, Demi-Wives. The Hebrew Word, Pillegesch, signifies as much as, Dimidiata Uxor; whence doubtless, the Greek, παλλακη, and the Latin, Pellex. Austin ha's Remarked, That Keturah is called, The Wife of Abraham; tho' she was also called, his Concubine, as well as Hagar. Jurieu & others think he cohabited with her in Sarah's Lifetime; They argue from the Numbers & Ages of the Issue, when he sent Isaac from him. The Talmuds assign this Difference between Wives and Concubines. Wives are taken under a previous Contract of a Dowry, and attended with the usual Nuptial Ceremonies: But Concubines without either of them. However this Difference was not observed before the Mosaic Law. And yett, even then, Wives were married with more Solemnity than Concubines. Concubines also usually remained Servants, if they were so before.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁹ Jurieu (Critical History 1:225).

Q. Being fallen into the Chapter, which gives us the Birth of the Patriarchs; We may take Occasion to make some Remarks, upon Occurrence in the History of those Twelve Patriarchs; and offer some Illustrations thereupon which occur in the Exercitations of the learned Heidegger? v. 1.

A. Lett us do so.

There appear particularly some Difficulties, relating to the Marriage of Judah, and the Adult age of his Sons; How to make things fall in, without any Disturbance to Chronology. We will not recite, all that ha's been written of that Matter. We will only give you the Conjecture of our Heidegger. He saies, The Marriage of Judah, was the Year of the Selling of Joseph. Eson and Hamul, he thinks, were not born in the Land of Canaan, but in Egypt, after the Descent of Jacob thither. Which is also to be thought, concerning the Ten Sons of Benjamin; who was not much more than Twenty Three Years of Age, at the Descent into Egypt. With Austin, and others, we are to take the Time of Jacobs going down into Egypt, as including all the Time of Jacob's living in Egypt; which was about Seventeen Years. Judah's marrying the Daughter of a Canaanite, (tho' Onkelos will have him no more than a Merchant,) seems to derogate from the Dignity of the Messiah. But Heidegger notes, that the Impure Occurrences, among the ancestors of the Messiah, (et in quibus respectu hominum admixtæ facies fuerunt) lead us to acknowledge, the Evangelical Mysteries, of the Messiahs being a Saviour for all Nations, & for the Chief of Sinners. The Name of Suah, the Father-in-Law to Judah, may signify, A Man of a Liberal Heart. So Abarbanel observes; and adds, *Et fortasse, quia talis is erat Judas; eum elegit, quocum affinitatem contraheret, quia ei amplas facultates donaret.*¹⁰¹

When Judah pronounced upon his Daughter-in-Law, Bring her forth & Lett her be Burnt; it is enquired, whether he spoke as an Accuser, or as a Judge. The Opinion of Junius is, That both Qualities could not well meet in him; and the nearness of the Relation seems to render the Judgment of the Case not so proper for him. And yett the easy Change of the Judgment, upon the discovery of the Truth of the Case, looks as if he had some Authority residing with him. Another

Judge would hardly have so suddenly altered the Sentence, but rather have pronounced a severe Sentence upon Judah too. Our Heidegger therefore takes Judah to be a Judge. But the Difficulty is; How he came to be so? The Hebrew Doctors do generally assert him, to have been a Ruler in that Part of the Countrey, where he lived. But it is not probable that the Canaanites would permitt such a thing. And yett it is possible, That the Chief Magistrate of the Place, might delegate a Magistratical Power unto Judah. Or perhaps, it might be devolved unto him from his Father, the Patriarch Jacob. In some Nations, the Husbands have Power of Life & Death, over their Adulterous Wives. Thamar was Accused unto Judah by others and Convicted by the plain Signs of her present Condition. And the Law of Israel afterwards, allow'd a Kinsman to do the Part of a Revenger.¹⁰²

Lett her be Burnt! Certainly, the Sentence implied more than a meer Branding on the Forehead, as the Hebrewes, would some of them, (and particularly R. Jehudah, would) understand it. But was not the Sentence abundantly too Severe? Thamars Crime was worthy of Death. Adultery was made capital; not only by the Law of God: [Lev. 20.10.] but also by the Law of Nations. The Lex Julia made it so among the Romans. Plato in his Lib.IX. De Legibus, proposes it. The Barbarous Nations in America execute it. Opilius Macrinus the Lawgiver, assigned Burning, as the particular Punishment for Adultery. Abarbanel thinks, That the Punishment of that Crime, was entirely left unto the arbitrary Determination of the Injured Husband; And in that Right here, Judah pronounced the Sentence of Burning arbitrarily. Jude licuit eam punire pro lubitu suo; potuit hoc ex Jure Leviratus. But Judah was too hasty in the Sentence. He had not heard the Plea which Thamar might make to her Indictment. And he had not a due Regard unto the unborn Infant. Quintilian in his Declamation, entituled, Prægnans Adultera, shoves how all civilized Nations, have deferr'd the Capital Punishment of a Woman | in the State of Pregnancy. Dio Cassius reproaches Claudius for his Barbarity, in his not considering of such Circumstances.¹⁰³ [396v]

¹⁰² Heidegger (2:361, 366, Exerc. XVIII, §§ 18, 24). Gen. 38:24. Franciscus Junius (Opera Theologica Francisci Iunii Biturigis [1613], 1:225–28, esp. 1:227, lines 64–93 “Capitis XXXVIII Analysis”). R. Nachmanides (Commentary 1:476) argues that “Judah was a chief, an officer, and a ruler of the land.”

¹⁰³ Heidegger (2:366–67, Exerc. XVIII, § 25). Gen. 38:24. According to R. Yaakov Baal HaTurim, R. Yehudah HaChassid argues that Judah did not mean to burn her, but intended that “a mark be branded on her face, declaring her to be a harlot” (Baal HaTurim 1:359). In 17 BCE, Caesar Augustus expanded the Lex Julia – Roman laws established by the ancient patrician family of the Julians – to include the Lex Julia de Adulteriis Coercendis. This Julian Law decreed that adulterers and their partners in crime be banished, that fathers be allowed to execute daughters and their adulterous partners, and that husbands divorce their adulterous wives and be allowed to kill the partner in crime. Capital punishment for adultery was also decreed in Emperor Justinian’s Institutes (4.18.2–3) as late as the sixth century CE. Plato (De legibus 8.841d–842a), though insisting on marital fidelity, recommends that an adulterous man who fails to maintain secrecy should be excluded “by law from the award of state honors, on the grounds that he’s no better than an alien.” In his Naturall and Morall Historie (1604), bk. 6, ch 18, pp. 469–70; cf. bk. 5, ch. 27, pp. 408–09, José Acosta relates that adultery is

But how could Judah pronounce Thamar anon, to be more Righteous than himself. Abarbanel mentions two Accounts; The one, because Thamar proposed Obedience to the Divine Law, and the Præservaion of the Jus Leviratus; whereas Judah, was carried on by nothing but his libidinous Inclinations. The other, because, Judah had formerly charged upon Thamar, the præmature Death of his Two Sons, before she had conceived by them; whereas her having now conceived by another made it evident that not she, but the Sons themselves were in the fault. But our Heidegger observes, That neither of these Wayes will solve the Difficulty. And so the old pretty Distinction of, Simpliciter, and, Secundum Quid, must come in to help us with a Solution. Judah had this to blame in himself, That if Thamar did amiss, it was he that gave the Occasion. *Utrumque verum est, et Injustiorem fuisse Thamarem, si nimirum Genus Facti respexeris; et Injustiorem Judam, si causam et principium Facti.*¹⁰⁴

The Words of Rachel, Give me Children or else I dy, are capable of being understood; either, as if the Want of Children would be an Affliction as grievous as Death; or, as if the Want of Children brought her after some Sort into the Condition of the Dead; according to the Proverb of the Hebrewes; Cui non sunt liberi, perinde est, ac si esset mortuus. But how did she come to think of substituting her Maid Bilhah, in her Place? Heidegger thinks, That Jacob had informed her, what his Grandmother Sarah did, in substituting Hagar. She imitated the Exemple of Sarah in what she did.¹⁰⁵

It is intimated, Gen. 35.26. as if all the Twelve Patriarchs were born unto Jacob, in Padan-aram; whereas we know Benjamin was born pretty near to Bethlehem. Aben Ezra speaks well to this ἐναντιοφάνες. That, Scriptura sæpè minoris numeri rationem non habet; the Scripture often ha's no Regard unto a lesser Number. He instances in the Number of Seventy, said to descend into deemed a capital crime among the Yucas Indians of S America, but is only grounds for divorce among Mexican Indians. According to Julius Capitolanus, Roman Emperor Marcus Opellius Macrinus (164–218 CE), Praetorian prefect under his predecessor Caracalla, punished adultery by burning the culprits “alive, fastening their bodies together” (Scriptores Historiae Augustae: Opellius Macrinus 12.10). R. Abarbanel insists that “Judah was allowed to punish her as he wished: he was able to do this by the law of Levirate marriage.” The Roman rhetorician Marcus Fabius Quintilianus (c. 35–95 CE) advises that the punishment for adultery of a pregnant woman should be deferred until she has given birth to her child (Declamationes minores 277, in Lesser Declamations 1:268–76). Finally, Cassius Dio’s summary of Roman Emperor Claudius’s excesses is given in Historia Romanae 61.29–34 (Dio’s Roman History 8:2–35).

Egypt; and yett Joseph and his Children are comprehended in the Number. [Such another Instance we have; 1. Cor. 15.5. He was seen of the Twelve.] This is a better Solution, that that which Menasseh ben Israel ascribes to R. Hisquiach, (or Hiskuni), That Benjamin is mentioned, as born in Mesopotamia, because Rachel by the Prayers made by her, while she was yett in that Countrey, obtained him of the Lord.¹⁰⁶

Aben-Ezra, & others, will have Benjamin to be called so, as being בן ימין / Filius Dierum; or, as Drusius expounds it, Born in the old Age of his Father. Grotius approves this Etymology. Heidegger keeping to the common Etymology, of, A Son of the Right Hand, thinks it may mean as much as, A Beloved Son; for, *Honoratior juxtà atque dilectior est manus Dextera quàm Sinistra.*¹⁰⁷

But unto the History of Joseph, the rest of our Illustrations will be now confined.

In Joseph's Dream, a Moon makes Obeisance to him. His Mother was Dead. Our Heidegger will have Bilhah to be understood. Or, such a Dignity was promised unto Joseph, as that the whole Family of Jacob, if they had all been living, would have paid Homage unto him.¹⁰⁸

His Brethren called him, חלמונת בעל / Dominum Somniorum. Some think, Because, Per Somnia Dominium sibi promiserat. But Abarbanel so carries it; *Qui facit somnia ex seipso, secundum voluntatem suam.*¹⁰⁹

106 Heidegger (2:372–73, Exerc. XVIII, § 36). Ibn Ezra solves this “contradiction,” arguing, “Scripture often has no regard for a smaller number.” However, in his commentary on Gen. 35:36, Ibn Ezra puts it more positively: “Scripture speaks of the majority of his sons” (Commentary 1:334). R. Manasseh ben Israel (Conciliator, Quest. 58, pp. 84–85) reconciles this numerical disagreement by noting that according to Ibn Ezra’s annotation of Exod. 28:4 and 34:6 (Commentary 2:589–90, 710) “the Holy Scriptures often make no note of the lesser numbers.” And according to “R. Hezekiah, the author of Hiskuni,” Benjamin was included among the number of the twelve even before his birth, because Rachel’s prayer for another son was answered even before they left Mesopotamia.

107 Heidegger (2:373, Exerc. XVIII, § 36). R. Abraham Ibn Ezra on Gen. 35:18 calls Benjamin “Ben-oni” from “Onim” suggesting “mourners” (Commentary 1:334). For much the same, see Rashi’s borrowings from Genesis Rabbah (LXXXII:9), in Mikraoth Gedoloth (1:442). Evidently following Rashi’s explication (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:443), Heidegger translates the Hebrew signification of “ben-iamim” as “the son of days” (of his old age) because Benjamin was born when Jacob was old. Joannes Drusius suggests as much in his annotation on Gen. 35:18, in Critici Sacri (1:322); Grotius approves of this etymology in his Annotationes ad Genesis, on Gen. 35:19 (Opera Omnia 1:21). Finally, Heidegger thinks that the expression “A Son of the Right Hand” may mean “A Beloved Son,” because “the right hand is more honored, and in equal fashion more beloved, than the left.”

108 Heidegger (2:388, Exerc. XX, sec. 1, § 5). Gen. 37:5–10.

109 Heidegger (2:389, Exerc. XX, sec. 1, § 6). Gen. 37:8. His brethren called Joseph “Lord of dreams” inasmuch as “by a dream dominion was promised him.” But Abarbanel (not “Aben Ezra” as Mather erroneously states in the holograph manuscript) contends that his brothers called him “Lord of Dreams, because he made the dreams out of his own self, according to his will.”

Unto the Distress of Joseph in the Pitt, there is an Allusion, in those Words; Zech. 9.11. *I have sent forth thy Prisoners out of the Pitt, wherein is no Water.*¹¹⁰

The Discourses of the Ancients, on the Chastity of Joseph, solicited by his Mistress, are very elegant and expressive. Chrysostom cries out, That the Miracle of the Three Children remaining untouch'd by the Fire in the Midst of their Furnace, was not so admirable. He adds, That this Wonderful Young Man escaped Naked, but most beautifully Defended and Adorned with the precious Garments of Continency; he escaped out of the Burning, & instead of being Scorched, ου μονον ου κατακαυθεντα, αλλα και λαμπροτερον και φαιδροτερον γεγενημενον· he look'd but the Fairer and Brighter for it. Ambrosius follows him with his Acclamations; and, Magnus Vir, is the least of the Titles, which he justly bestowes upon him. In Ælian, and in Valerius Maximus, we have many exotic Exemples of Chastity. But if they be True, yett our Heidegger well remarks, Ea tamen omnia Josephi castitas multis post se parasangis relinquit; Josephs exceeded | them all; especially in regard of the Principles upon which it was exercised. The Difference is well-celebrated by David Chytraeus, in his Comment on the Chapter, that relates the Story:¹¹¹

Chrysostom wonders at the Providence of God, which præserved Joseph, that his Master and Mistress did not murder him. However, it came to what the Psalmist Relates, (and our Heidegger translates;) Psal. 105.18. *Debilitarunt compede pedem ejus, in Ferrum venit Anima ejus.*¹¹²

In Pharaohs Dream, which was the Occasion of Josephs Præferment; The Beeves ascend out of Nilus. Very agreeably! It Rains but little in Egypt; the ¹¹⁰ Heidegger (2:391, Exerc. XX, sec. 1, § 10).

¹¹¹ Heidegger (2:403, Exerc. XX, sec. 2, § 5). Gen. 38:7–9. Joannes Chrysostom (In Genesim homiliae 1–67) [PG 54. 538, lines 49–50] admires Joseph's steadfastness in escaping from the furnace of venial desire: He emerged "not only not scorched by the flames but even more conspicuous and resplendent" (Homilies in Genesis 62.19, p. 208). As usual, Mather omits the diacritical marks. St. Ambrose praises Joseph's fortitude, in De Joseph Patriarcha liber unus (cap. 5, § 25) [PL 14. 652], and bestows the same title "Great Man" on his father Jacob, in De Jacob, et vita beata libri duo (lib. 2, cap. 5, § 21) [PL 14. 622]. Claudius Aelianus (De varia historia 10.2, Historical Miscellany 314–17) relates how Eubatas of Cyrene was forced to marry Lais, but refused to have intercourse with her to remain faithful to his legitimate wife to whom he was married as well. Valerius Maximus (Factorum et dictorum memorabilium 6.1.4–5) celebrates Publius Maenius and Fabius Maximus Servilianus for their exemplary constancy. Heidegger well remarks, "yet the chastity of Joseph leaves all these [pagan examples] many leagues behind it." In his In Genesin enarratio (1561), on Gen., ch. 39 and in Opera Omnia (1599), David Chytraeus, aka. Kochhaffe, (1531–1600), German Lutheran theologian (student of Melancthon at Wittenberg), professor of philosophy, history, and theology at Rostock University, distinguishes between Joseph's constancy and that celebrated among pagan writers (BBK). Mather recommended Chytraeus's works to his young candidates for the ministry (Manuductio ad Ministerium 28).

Fertility of their Soyl, turns upon their Nilus. If Nilus rise no more than Twelve Cubits, a Famine followes, because the Fields are not watered. But the Rising of Nilus a few Cubits more, produces a wondrous Plenty. Pliny saies, Quatuordecim Cubita hilaritatem afferunt, quindecim securitatem, sexdecim Delicias. He saies, the Highest Rise known in that Age, was Eighteen Cubits, in the Dayes of Claudius. And the lowest was Five, in the Time of the Pharsalian War, velut necem (as he wittily saies) magno prodigio quodam flumine aversante. It is probable, that now the Seven Years of Plenty in Egypt, were Years in which Nilus made more than ordinary Inundations; and in the Years of Scarcity, those Inundations failed. But yett we must look for something Supernatural in the Case. Joseph saies, Tis what God will do. And Pharaohs Vision would lead one to such a Thought; For it is not according to Nature, that one Beef devour another.¹¹³

Justin, a Pagan Historian, asserts the Substance of the Mosaic History of Joseph; and concludes, Perijssetque omnis Ægyptus fame, nisi monitu ejus Rex Edicto servari per multos Annos Fruges jussisset; tantaque Experimenta ejus fuerunt, ut non ab Homine, Sed à Deo dari Responsa viderentur.

Some refer to this Egyptian Famine, that Passage of Ovid, in his Book, De Arte.

*Dicitur Ægyptus caruisse Juvantibus arva
Imbribus, atque Annis sicca fuisse novem.*¹¹⁴

Joseph arriving to his Advancement, one of the Ornaments of State, where-with he was invested, was this; Gen. 41.42. Pharaoh took off his Ring from his hand, & putt it on Josephs hand. The first and most ancient Use of a Ring, was to do the Part of a Seal. Before the Use of the Ring for that Purpose, the Custome was to Seal with Impressions from little Bitts of Wood, which had undergone some Corrosion; or, θριποβρωτω, that is to say, ξυλω υπο θριπων βεβρωμενω. Ligno à vermibus corroso, as you'l read in Theophrastus, and in Isaac Tzetzes. The Annulus Signatorius then came in Use; and it was chiefly employ'd for the Safe 113 Heidegger (2:412, Exerc. XX, sec. 2, § 25). Gen. 41:1–8, 15. Referring to the Nilometer on the island of Elephantine in Aswan, Pliny (5.10.58) knows that when the Nile rises “fourteen cubits [21 feet] it brings cheerfulness, fifteen [22 ½ feet] complete confidence, sixteen [24 feet] delight.” The higher the flood, the more bountiful was the harvest after the waters replenished the fields with fertile silt. In the days of Emperor Claudius (41–54 CE), the highest flood rose 18 cubits (27 feet), and the smallest five cubits (7 ½ feet) in the year of the Pharsalian war (48 BCE), “as if the river were attempting to avert [the murder of Pompey] by a great portent.” For much the same see Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXXVI, 1:272).

114 Heidegger (2:412–13, Exerc. XX, sec. 2, § 26). Marcus Junianus Justinus (Historiarum Philippicarum in Epitomen 36.2.9–10) concludes, “and all Egypt would have perished by famine, had not the king, by his [Joseph’s] advice, ordered the corn to be laid up for several years; such being the proofs of his knowledge, that his admonitions seemed to proceed, not from a mortal, but a god” (Epitome of the Philippic History [1853], p. 245). For the same material, see also Saurin (Diss. XXXVI, 1:273). Ovid (Ars Amatoria 1:647–48) relates that “Egypt is said to have lacked the rains that bless its fields and to have been parched for nine years.”

Custody of such Domestic Matters, as the Servants & others might not præsume to meddle withal. Diogenes Laertius, in his Lacydes, will inform you further about it. Afterwards, the Ring became, Dignitatis eximie, et Jugennitatis Signum. Whence that Passage of Cicero, Sit Annulus tuus non minister alienæ Voluntatis, sed Testis tuæ. And Annibal after the Battel of Cannæ, sent Three Bushels of Rings to Carthage, taken from the Hands of the slain Romans, as a Sign of a very signal Victory. Josephs Ring, was that of a Lord-Chancellour; and it was to Seal not only the Letters, but also the Treasures of the King. Jarchi tells us, Datio Annuli Regij Signum erat, eum, cui is dabatur, secundum esse à Majestate Regis.¹¹⁵

But what was the Signification of the Word, ABRECH, which was to be cried before Joseph? We will not here make a Collection of the several Senses, wherein the Criticks ancient and modern, have exhibited that Word unto us. For Calvin ha's undone them all; Quia suspicor, Ægyptias potius Voces referri à Mose, tam hoc loco quàm paulò post, consulo lectoribus; nè frustrà torqueant. And our Heidegger concurs, That it is an Egyptian Word, Cujus genuinam significationem eruendi hodiè nulla suppetat copia. Whence the LXX leave it, untranslated.¹¹⁶

The LXX also retain the New Name of Joseph, in the Egyptian Terms of it, Υοντομφανήχ. This, in the Egyptian Language signifies, A Revealer of Secret and Future Things. And the Alexandrian Chronicle tells us, That Moses also had the same Name Imposed on him. Philo tells us the like, and that it signifies, Ονειροκριτην και κρυπτων ευρετην. The Targums confirm this Exposition, as well

115 Heidegger (2:417, Exerc. XX, sec. 3, § 2). Mather (via Heidegger) refers to Historia plantarum (5.4.4) by Theophrastus of Eressos (c. 372–287 BCE), whose contributions to botany are well known. The Byzantian grammarians Isaac Tzetzes (d. 1138) and his brother Joannes Tzetzes (c. 1120–83) edited and annotated the poetic works of the Greek poet and grammarian Lycophron of Chalcis (285–247 BCE). The citation is from Scholia in Lycophronem (Alexandra 508.1 and 8; scholion 508.1 and 7) and signifies “worm-eaten wood.” The Annulus Signatorius is a signet ring. Diogenes Laertius (Vitae philosophorum 4.59) relates how Lacydes of Cyrene (fl. 241 BCE), leader of the Athenian Academy, sealed his larder with a signet ring and threw the ring through a hole inside to prevent his servants from stealing his supplies. When his servants discovered the trick, they broke the seal, took what they wanted, and replaced seal and signet ring just as they had seen their master do. The Latin passage from Cicero (Epistolarum ad Quintum fratrem 1.4.13) admonishes, “Let not your signet-ring be the servant of another’s will, but the witness of your own.” Mather refers to St. Augustine’s De Civitate Dei 3.19 (NPNFi 2:56), which relates the story of Hannibal’s bloody rings – “three bushels of gold rings” taken from Roman corpses in the Battle of Cannae (216 BCE), Second Punic War, and shipped to Carthage. Finally, in his commentary on Gen. 41:42, Jarchi (Rashi) tells us that “[The] giving [of] the king’s ring is a sign to the one to whom it is given [that he is] to be second to him in greatness [rank]” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 3:522).

116 Heidegger (2:418–20, Exerc. XX, sec. 3, § 6). Gen. 41:40, 45; John Calvin (Commentaries 1.2:329) warns that “because I suppose that Egyptian terms are referred to by Moses, both in this place and shortly afterwards, I advise the readers not to distort them in vain.” And Heidegger concurs, arguing that “Abrech” is an Egyptian word, “whose true meaning no resources today are sufficient to explicate.” That’s why the LXX (Gen. 41:45) leaves the Greek Υοντομφανήχ (Psonthomphanech) untranslated. For much the same, see Saurin’s Dissertations (Diss. XXXVII, 1:275–76).

as Josephus; & the Syriac & Arabic Versions. And both Kircher and Viccars have made it evident, That the Hebrewes finding a Difficulty in the Pronunciation of the Egyptian Language, | have changed the Name from the true Egyptian Pronunciation, into Zaphnâth Paaneah. R. Moses Aegyptius (the Gentleman, whom we call, Rambam,) affirms, That he learnt this from the Egyptians. It is a Mistake of Eugubinus, That Zaphnath Paaneah, was the true Egyptian Pronunciation; It is most probable, That the LXX learnt from the Priests of Egypt, the true Egyptian Pronunciation, to be the Psontomphanech, which they have given us.¹¹⁷ [398v]

The Lady married by Joseph, is called, A Daughter to the Priest of Heliopolis. But הַנָּזִיר signifies, A Prince, as well as, A Priest. And Onkelos here does render it so. Yea, The Sons of David are expressly called so; [2. Sam. 8.18.] who yett were uncappable of the Priesthood.¹¹⁸

Joseph having bought of the Egyptians, their very Lands for Corn, we read; Gen. 47.21. As for the People, he removed them to Cities, from one End of the Borders of Egypt, even to the other End thereof. This was a politic Way, to produce a most effectual Sense of it, that Pharaoh was their Landlord. But from some other Passages in the History, especially that of the Peoples obtaining from Joseph the Seed for the Sowing of their Land, our Heidegger inclines to think,

¹¹⁸ Heidegger (2:421, Exerc. XX, sec. 3, § 9). The Targum Onkelos (Gen. 41:45) calls Joseph’s Egyptian wife “Asenath, the daughter of Poti Phera, prince of On” (Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 1:185) and Etheridge (1:131). Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 38, p. 288) renders her name “Asenath, daughter of Potiphera, priest of On” [italics added].

That the People were not Removed from their several Farms and Fields; but the Meaning is, That Joseph obliged the Husbandmen to repair unto the Cities, that they might there, both to be supplied with Grain, from the Granaries which were kept in such Fenced Places; and also Sign there the Instruments, by which they acknowledged their Obligations unto Pharaoh, for supplying of them.¹¹⁹

Well; But why would one of Josephs Religion, be so solicitous to have the Idolatrous Priests of Egypt supported? Besides, what I have produced elsewhere, of a Probability, that these Priests, were not Idolaters in Josephs Time; or, at least, an Uncertainty, that they were; we must Remember, That these Priests were no other than the public Professors of the Liberal Arts and Sciences of the Age. A Liesure to prosecute their Studies, was necessary for them; as Jerom takes notice of the Matter. Diodorus Siculus tells us, They were freed from all public Burdens. And Aristotle tells us, They were great Students in the Mathematicks. And, Herodotus tells us, They had their Maintainance from the publick Treasury. Whatever Idolatry might be among them, Joseph was but the Executor of the Kings Lawes, about their Maintainance; He could not by his own Authority abrogate them. Calvin speaks fully to it; *Quoniam nullâ illi lege injunctum erat, ut Fame conficeret Sacerdotes; Regij autem frumenti non prorsus ad suum arbitrium Dispensator foret; Si Rex gratis cibaria Sacerdotibus dari volebat, nihilo magis Liberum fuit illis, quàm Aulicis proceribus negare. Itaque tales Alumnos non libenter suscepit, sed cum Rex invito obtruderet, repellere non potuit, etsi indignos sciebat, qui vel fimo Boum vescerentur.*¹²⁰

But this is all that I see cause to Delibate, from Heideggers Exercitations on the Twelve Patriarchs, & on Joseph. He speaks to many other things; but we also have elsewhere spoken to them.¹²¹

¹²¹ Here then we conclude (for now) Mather’s long excerpt from Johann Heinrich Heidegger’s Historia Sacra Patriarcharum.

A. We read of them, who Isa. 65.11. Præpare a Table for Gad. The same Deity that other Pagans called, Fortune, the Syrians call'd, Gad. Jeroms Version of that Place therefore is, Qui ponitis Fortunæ Mensam. It was, he tells us, the ancient Custome of the Idolaters, that on the Last Day of the Year, they spread a Table with all sorts of Dainties; and at no Altar but That, they poured out a Cup of Wine, To the Good Fortune of the Year ensuing. By Degrees, that Fortunate Star, Jupiter, which was also call'd כֹּכַב צֶדֶק The Star of Righteousness, gained the Name of Gad, as Idolatry grew more Astrological; or perhaps, as our Selden thinks, The whole Host of Heaven, which was look'd upon, as the Dispenser of Good Fortune, was thereby intended. Now, the Hebrewes do many of them, think, That, when Leah said, לֵבָא נָבָא / which they Resolve by לֵבָא טוֹב / Ba mazal tob, or; Good Fortune comes. And the Chaldee Paraphrast is of the same Opinion, and both Ben-Uzziels and the Jerusalem Targum, go this Way. The LXX, looking on לֵבָא / to be only a Servile Letter, do read it, ἐν τύχῃ, In Good Luck! And some old Latin Versions carry it, Beata facta, or, Fœlix sum. It is therefore much to be suspected, That Leah, being a Syrian Lady, retained a little of the old Superstition of her Countrey, & used this Expression (as Hottinger ha's it) Si non crasso Syrorum Sensu, pravâ tamen consuetudine. The learned Selden saies, That if this Conjecture take, we may take the Speech of Leah, in that Sense; Quod fœlix faustumque sit genito. For tho' the Words of Jacob, [Gen. 49.19.] have led most Interpreters, to look for a Troop in the Words of Leah, we know, such Elegancies and Allusions, are frequent in the Sacred Scriptures, when there are no real Etymologies pretended unto. I will only add a {Passage} in Philastrius; Est Hæresis in Judeis, quæ Reginam, quin et Fortunam Coeli invocant; {quam} et Cœles{tem vocant} in Africa, eique Sacrificia offerre non dubitabant.¹²²

122 Mather's primary source is John Selden's De Diis Syris Syntagmata II (1617), Synt. 1, cap. 1, pp. 2, 3–4, 14–15. St. Jerome's version in his Commentaria in Isaiam [C], on Gen. 65:11–12 [PL 24. 638C] reads, "whereby you set a table for Fortune." The Hebrew phrase for "Fortunate Star" reads "zedeq kowkeb." According to Selden (2), Leah's "bagad" ("Venit Gad" or "Gad comes") suggests "ba gad" ("venit Fortuna Bona" or "Good Fortune comes"). The Chaldee Paraphrast, aka. Targum Onkelos (Gen. 30:11) reads "Atha Gad"; i.e., "venit felicitas" or "There cometh prosperity [good fortune]," in Walton (1:129) and Etheridge (1:100). Much the same appears in the Targums Jonathan Ben Uziel and Hierosolymitanum (Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 4:56). The LXX renders the Hebrew auxiliary "beth" as a preposition, as in "en tuche" or in "good luck." The Latin "Beata facta" and "Fœlix Sum" suggest "made blissful" and "I am happy." In his Historia orientalis (1660), lib. 1, cap. 3, p. 152, the Swiss Calvinist Johann Heinrich Hottinger (1620–67), professor of Oriental languages and Church history at Heidelberg and Zurich, insists that Leah's benediction, "Gad cometh" is uttered, "if not in the crass sense of the Syrians, then nevertheless out of bad habit." Selden (De Diis Syris 14–15) maintains that Leah bestows her superstitious benediction on Zilpah's son "so as to be lucky and auspicious for the child." Finally, Mather adapts a passage from De Haeresibus: Catalogus eorum qui ante Adventum Christi Haereseos Arguuntur, cap. 15 [PL 12. 1127A], by St. Philastrius Brixienensis, aka. Filastrius of Brescia (c. 330–c. 397), sixth bishop of Brescia (N Italy). Philastrius warns that "there is a heresy among the Jews, which in fact calls even Fortune the Queen of Heaven; in Africa, they also call her Heavenly, and do not hesitate to offer sacrifices to her."

Q. What were the Mandrakes, which were the Subject of Chaffering between the Two Wives of Jacob? v. 14.

A. At present I'll only offer you, the Words of Job Ludolphus, in his History of Ethiopia. "The Indian Fig (saith hee) which the Arabians call, Muz, or Mauz, growes plentifully here; a most excellent Fruit it is; and you shall have Fifty Figs, about the Bigness and Shape of a Cucumber, hanging upon one Stalk, of a most delicious Odour and Taste. They are Ripe in June, as I learnt from the Itinerary of Prince Radzevile, who had seen some of them near Damascus; where they are rare; for they require an hotter Climate. Which Circumstances make mee beleieve, that this same Fruit, may bee the דודאים / Dudaim, mentioned in Genesis, which occasioned so much Discontent between the Two Wives of Jacob. Soon after, I observed that many others, learned Men, lighted upon the same Conjecture, tho' they do not give their Reasons. For in my Opinion, it should bee some rare and pleasant Fruit, that should move the Boy to gather it; yett not so much a Boy neither, as to think it worth his while, to carry home a stinking Mandrake, which could bee a Fruit little worth contending for. Besides, Rachel might have sent her Servant, as well to have gathered Amiable Flowers (as some render the Word,) that is to say, Lillies, Violets, or the like. And besides, The Hebrew Word seems to confirm this Opinion; as being in the Dual Number, and seeming to infer a Relation of more than one Fruit, unto one & the same Stalk." Thus that learned Historian.¹²³

I think, That in my Illustrations, upon our Lords Genealogy, recited by the Evangelist Matthew, I may give you one Reason, why a Story so seemingly mean, as this, doth find a Room in the Sacred Pages.¹²⁴

¹²⁴ Mather refers to his annotations on Matt. 1:1 ("BA"), where he comments on how God's plan was carried out in spite of the patriarchs' inability to foresee the line of descent:

Q. I pray, go on with Your Curious Reflections, on this Genealogy?

A. It is very Remarkable to see, how the Line of the Messiah, was carried by the God of Heaven, quite beside the Intention of the Patriarchs concerned in that Line. Isaac did not imagine that Jacob, & not Esau, must bee a Father to the Messiah. Jacob did not imagine that Leah, and not Rachel, must bee a Mother to the Messiah. When Judah would have Thamar to bee burnt, hee did not imagine that a yett Unborn Ancestor of the Messiah, was therein condemned unto Death & Fire. And perhaps this may bee one Reason, why the Scripture does Recite so minute a Passage, as that of Leahs hiring of Rachel, her Husbands Company. Leah had already brought forth Judah, from whom the Messiah was to descend: Had shee known any Thing of This, doubtless it would have been such a Satisfaction unto her, that she had made no such

All that I will here further say, is, That Leah having brought forth, Judah, the Ancestor of the Messiah, then delicate Fruits, even, like those on the Tree of Life, are brought unto her. And if shee Impart of these Fruits unto Rachel, I, that look upon Leah and Rachel, as Types of the Two Churches, the Jewish & the Gentile, which our Lord ha's espoused unto Himself, am ready to conclude, that some great Thing, relating to the future Communion between those Two Churches, is herein Typically represented unto us.

Q. Mr. Maundril, in his Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem, when he came to Naplosa, (which is the ancient Sychem) he visited the Chief Priest of the Samaritans. Among other things that he enquired of him, one was, what were the Dudaim, (which we translate | Mandrakes;) by Leah given to Rachel? v. 14. [400v]

A. The Answer he obtained from him, was, That they were Plants of a large Leaf, bearing a certain sort of Fruit, in Shape resembling an Apple, growing Ripe in Harvest, but of an Ill Savour, & not wholesome. But the Vertue of them was, to help Conception, being laid under the genial Bed. And the Women so apply it, at this Day, out of an Opinion of its prolific Vertue. Mr. Maundril adds, he saw several of these Plants, afterwards in the Way to Jerusalem; and if they were so common in Mesopotamia, as they saw them thereabouts, one must either conclude, they were not the true Dudaim, or else it would puzzle a good Critick to give a Reason, why Rachel should purchase such Vulgar things, at so Beloved & Contested a Price.¹²⁵

Q. Were they indeed Rods of Hasel, that Jacob employ'd? v. 37.

A. Bochart, proves at large, that the Hebrew Word, Luz, signifies, An Almond. Jerom therefore translates it, Virgas Amygdalinas. And the Hebrew Interpreters, who will have it signify, An Hasel, confess that herein they depart from the Opinion of those that went before them. So Aben-Ezra, and Kimchi, who both acknowledge, that the Ancient Doctors expound it, Almond-Rods.¹²⁶

Proposals unto Rachel. The Scripture would in this thing Remark unto us, how the Ignorance of the Patriarchs about the Good Purposes of God concerning them, in the Messiah, putt them upon Actions that would never have been done, but in & from such Ignorance.

Q. Why is Laban in the History now before us, called so often, Laban the Syrian? when there seems no further need of mentioning his Country, which was known sufficiently from the præceding Story? v. 1.

A. Some think, 'Tis to insinuate an observable Matter, That Laban, as cunning as he was, yett Jacob was too cunning for him. For the Syrians are observed in Ancient Authors, to have been a very cunning & subtil sort of a People.¹²⁷

Q. Jacob saies, God hath taken away the Cattel of your Father. He saies not a Word of his own Artifice about it? v. 9.

A. Without the Blessing of God, his Artifice would not have prospered. And it was a Part of Prudence in him, to conceal his own Artifice; He did it, perhaps, for fear lest they should any way divulge it, & bring him into Danger with Laban. Every body can't keep a Secret; and his whole Estate at present depending on it, he had no reason to expose it.

The Jewes make many Severe, & some Foolish Reflections upon Women, on this Occasion.¹²⁸

Q. What sort of Things might be Labans Teraphim? v. 19.

A. There have been many Derivations for the Name excogitated. But after all; why may not the Name come from the Hebrew Rapha, to Cure or Heal? As if they were the Saviours and Præservers of the People that had them.¹²⁹

It is generally agreed, They were a Sort of Penates. [Compare v. 30.] But it is a great Quæstion among the Hebrew Doctors, whether in these ancient on Gen. 30:37 (Commentary 1:293–94) agree, but Ibn Ezra adds that according to R. Saadiah Gaon “luz means almond since that is its meaning in Arabic.”

¹²⁷ Simon Patrick on Gen. 31:20 (Commentary 1:112).

¹²⁹ This and the following paragraphs are extracted from Simon Patrick’s annotation on Gen. 31:19 (Commentary 1:112).

Times, they worshipped them as Gods, or only used them as Instruments of Divination.¹³⁰

Several of them, take them to have been Figures of an Humane Shape, [1. Sam. 19.13.] made by Astrologers, to be capable of the Heavenly Influences. Hottinger hath many ingenious Arguments to prove, That they were the same with the Arabian Talismans | in after-times; which were Images made under such or such Constellations, to receive the Heavenly Influences, & serve either for Phylacteries, or Oracles.¹³¹ [402v]

But the Conjecture of L. de Dieu is most probable; That they were the Representations of some Angelical Powers (Teraphim and Seraphim very near akin!) who declared by them, what they took to be the Mind of God. In those Countreys, where the Shechinah, or Presence of the Divine Majesty did not appear, as it did in Abrahams Family, they had at least some Tradition of it, & of the Angels that were its Attendants. The Resemblance whereof they made, in hope they might by means thereof, have Communication with them, and gain Intelligence from Heaven. Evil Spirits made their Advantage of this; and abused Mankind by the lying Answers, which they gave to their Enquiries.¹³²

But now, what was Rachels Intention in stealing them? Dr. Patrick thinks, That Jacob, who loved her extreamly, had brought her off from the False Notions, and Bad Customes of her Countrey. And that she would now convince her Father of his blind Superstition, by letting him see, That his Gods (as he called them) could not præserve themselves, much less do any Service to him. Or, it may be, she Resolved for to sieze a Portion of his Goods, that she thought justly belonged unto her; and accordingly took these Images, which being made of Silver, were of some considerable Value.¹³³

¹³⁰ R. Shlomo ben Meir (Rashbam), Nachmanides (Ramban), and Da'ath Zekenim's collection of the Tosafists – all argue that Laban's Teraphim were instruments of divination (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:389). Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 36, pp. 273–74) relates the gruesome story of how the preserved head of a first-born boy is used for divination by placing a golden tablet (bearing the name of an unclean spirit) under his tongue. See also John Selden's De Diis Syris (1617), Syntagma 1, cap. 2, pp. 17–19.

¹³¹ For Talisman, see “Origine Tilsemarum,” in Heinrich Hottinger's Historia orientalis (1660), lib. 1, cap. 8, pp. 285–99, esp. p. 296.

Q. Being fallen on the mention of the Teraphim, a good Illustration of those Images, may prove a grateful & useful Entertainment, and sett in a True Light, many Passages of the Sacred Scriptures? v. 19.

A. Monsr. Jurieu in his, Critical History of the Doctrines & Worships of the Church, ha's cultivated this obscure Subject unto good Advantage. We will now mostly enrich ourselves with his Communications.¹³⁵

We may, with Aben-Ezra, well suppose, from the Story of Michal, her laying one of them in David's Bed, That the Teraphim were of an Humane Shape.¹³⁶

It is also evident, that the Teraphim were magical Instruments, whereby Men came to know Future and Hidden Matters. For the Prophet Ezekiel brings in the King of Babylon, as consulting of them. And the Prophet Zechariah saith of them, They have spoken lies, & have delivered false Oracles. This is also intimated in the famous Text of Hosæa, [ch.III.4.] on which we cannot ask a more clear Commentary, than that which David Kimchi ha's given us. The Prophet, saith he, gives us a true Pourtraiture of the Time of the Captivity wherein we live. We are without a King; being subject unto the Government of the Kings & Princes of the Nations. We have no Sacrifices to offer unto the True GOD; neither any Statue, nor Idol, sett up in Honour of the suppositious Gods. We are without the Holy Ephod, to foretell us future Accidents by Urim & Thummim; as also without Teraphim, consecrated unto the Idols, who instruct those that confide in them, in what is likely to befall them. This is the State of our Captivity. The History of Micah and his Teraphim, does also make it apparent, that the Teraphim were used in Divinations. In the Rebuke that Samuel came to Saul, Divinations are joined with Teraphim. And in Josiah's Reformation, the Teraphim are not mentioned so much among the Idols, as the Magical Instruments. He putt away the Wizards, & the Teraphim.¹³⁷

However, there is Reason to think, that the Teraphim were not originally such Magical Instruments. In their first Origin probably they were only such simple Images, which were treated like the other Images of the Pagans, as Emblems, and some Resemblances & Representations of the Invisible GOD. Laban calls them simply, His Gods; and no doubt, the Word, θεραπευειν, To Worship, was derived from the Teraphim.¹³⁸

¹³⁵ The following paragraphs on Gen. 31:19 are extracted from Pierre Jurieu's two-volume Critical History (vol. 2, part III, treatise II, chs. 3–4, pp. 89–109).

Indeed, it is not so likely, that the Teraphim were the Images of the greater Gods; their Baal, their Moloch, their Astarte, and the like. These greater Gods, and the Dij Naturales, were not of a meer Humane Shape; Their Images had mystical Figures in them, and mixed ones, whereas the Teraphim were altogether of an Humane Shape. They were doubtless the Images of Men, who were adored as Gods. They were the Lares, the Domestic & the Tutelar Gods of the People that worshipped them. It is plain from the Story of Laban, that they were Private Gods. And their Name seems derived from the Second Person in the future Tense of the Conjugation Pihel, for the Word, רפא/ To Heal. The Word, רפאה/ Terappeh, is, Thou wilt Heal. A Kind of a Prayer offered unto these little Gods! Teraphim signifies, Gods that can cure and keep. The Greek Word, θεραπευειν, signifying the same thing, is a fresh Proof, that the Teraphim, were the Dij Servatores et Sospitatores, the Præservers of Prosperity in the Families that had them.¹³⁹

| As the Lares of the Romans, were for the Præservation of their Houses; and for that Cause they were, as Alexander ab Alexandro observes, placed at the Doors; Thus Micah (as well as Laban,) expects a Blessing on his House from the Presence of the Teraphim. The Lares were also considered as the Patrons of the High Ways; for which Cause, we are told by Servius, they were called, Viales, and Compitales. And Ovid saies of them, Compita servant. Which agrees very well, with what Ezekiel saies concerning the Teraphim, That the King of Babylon stood at the Parting of the Way, to consult them. They were placed in the Niches there. And perhaps, this Consideration might have some Influence on their being found among Rachels Furniture.¹⁴⁰

138 Jurieu (Critical History 2:91). According to Jurieu, the Greek word “therapeuein” suggests “to serve and worship.” Jurieu’s etymological derivation of “therapeuein” from the Hebrew word “Teraphim” is based on the supposition of his contemporaries that all languages (including Greek) derive from a Hebrew original spoken before the confusion of tongues at Babel.

139 Jurieu (Critical History 2:91, 92, 93). The “Dii Naturales” are personal or family gods. The Hebrew words read “rapha” and “therappe.” Jurieu has רפא, which Mather miscopies.

140 Jurieu (Critical History 2:93); Jurieu puts it as follows: “In foribus vero & Atriis domorum, Ara, focus & Lar familiaris errant,” or, “In the doorways, truly, and in the entrance halls of their houses were the altar, the hearth, and the family household god.” Jurieu here quotes from Genialium dierum libri sex (1626), lib. 5, cap. 24, pp. 302–06, by the Neapolitan jurist Alexander ab Alexandro (1461–1523). The first edition of this work appeared in Paris (1532) and was reprinted many times; Mather owned a copy of the Frankfurt (1626) edition (AAS # 0236). Mather writes “Michal” (Saul’s daughter espoused to David) instead of “Micah” (Jurieu 2:93), the Ephraimite, whose mother consecrated a hoard of silver from which molten images were made (Judg. 17:3–5). Like many of the saints’ images and shrines on the roadsides of Roman Catholic Europe, the “Dii Viales” and “Dii Compitales” were highway or crossroad deities whom travelers implored for protection on their journeys. Maurus Servius Honoratus mentions these “Viales” in his commentary In Vergilii carmina commentarii 3.168, 302); Pliny (36.70.204) speaks of the “Compitalia ludos Laribus” or “the Festival of the Crossroads in honor of the gods who protect the community.” Ovid (Fasti 2.615) says that these Lares “guard the

Tis very sure, These Teraphim were Deified Men. The Lares were the Images of the most Illustrious among the Ancestors of a Family, which after a Consecration with a peculiar Service, were worshipped as Gods. And Monsr. Jurieu, conjectures, that the Teraphim of Laban, might be the Images of Noah, & of Shem; of Noah, as being the common Father of the World; & of Shem, as being the Patriarch of his Family. Laban, tis plain, had more than one of them; & Rachel, could not well conceal many more than Two. Ovid speaks of the Lares, as Two; tho' possibly they might in after-ages multiply the Number of the Lares, and in the Lararium worship all their more Illustrious Ancestors. But which Two could stand fairer for a Distinction with Laban, than those whom we have mentioned:¹⁴¹

It is now easy to conceive, how Michal the Wife of David, should have what she had for to lay on the Bed instead of him. The Israelites, tho' they had cast off the Worship of the Teraphim, wherein they had imitated their Idolatrous Neighbours, might yett retain some Images of their Ancestors in their Houses.

Or, the Teraphim in David's House, might be a Relique of the Time, when the Israelites defiled themselves with Idolatrous Worship; which had not been long before, as the Story of Micah intimates. It may be, Saul had not been over-exact in purging the Countrey from the Remnants of Idolatry, or supposing he had, an Idol might happen to be thrown by into a Corner of an House, where Michal might stumble upon it.¹⁴²

The Idolaters had not long worshipped the Manes of their Ancestors, before they proceeded unto the Consulting of them upon Future Events. The Chaldeans; among whom the Teraphim had their first Use, were the first who took up this Necromancy; an Art called in the Scripture /הַרְשָׁה הַמֵּתִים/ An Enquiry of the Dead.

When the Scripture speaks of Teraphim, it never mentions, the Enquiring of the Dead; and when it speaks about Enquiring of the Dead, it never mentions the Teraphim; which seems to be, for the avoiding of Tautologies; because they were one and the same Thing.¹⁴³

The Form of the Teraphim seems to be this.

The Orientals in a private Apartment of their Houses, præserv'd the Remnants of their Ancestors. But the Posterity becoming so Numerous, that every cross-roads." Ezek. 21:21 relates that the king of Babylon at a crossroad consulted his images to discover which Rubicon he should cross. Rachel's "furniture" (Gen. 31:34) was her camel's saddle or seat on which she rode.

¹⁴¹ Jurieu (Critical History 2:94–95, 100). Ovid (Fasti 2.616) speaks of the Lares Compitales (guardians of the city, or house gods) in the plural number. They generally appeared in pairs and were revered during the annual Compitalia festival (Ovid, Fasti 2.616, note d). Hence the "Lararium" is a sacred place or shrine in which the guardian gods of a family, tribe, or city are kept.

one could not have a Part of the Body, they erected (κενοταφια) Empty Tombs, of Stone, or Wood, or Earth, & the like. Upon these they sett the Teraphim, or the Images of their Ancestors, at the Two Extremities of the Tombs. And indeed, there was a little Resemblance to the Cherubim on the Ark of the Israelites.¹⁴⁴

This gives us the Reason, why the LXX translate the Teraphim | in the History of Michal, by the Term of κενοταφια. It also gives the Reason, why in the History of Josiah, unto θεραφιμ, they add, θελητας [where some Editions read στήλας, or, Statues, or Monuments belonging to Sepulchres;] which Term signifies, Those that make Evocations of Spirits by magical Ceremonies.¹⁴⁵ [▽405r]

And here likewise, we see why the Ephod and the Teraphim, are in the Prophecies of Hosea so putt on the Level. From the Urim and Thummim in the Ephod, were Oracles delivered, whereof there was an Imitation in the Teraphim.¹⁴⁶

The Opinion of Moncaeus, and Gaffarel, and Spencer, is by no means to be allow'd; That the Cherubim and the Teraphim, were the same. The Cherubim were a Mixed Figure, of no less than Four Animals; as they are described by Ezekiel: whereas the Teraphim were purely of an Humane Shape. And yett we may say, That the Teraphim were among the Idolaters, what the Cherubim were unto the Israelites. The Number Two, is one Instance of the Resemblance; Two Images for a Tomb were indeed enough.¹⁴⁷

¹⁴⁴ Jurieu (Critical History 2:98). For these “kenotaphia” (empty monuments, tombs, or images), see also Diodorus Siculus (3.40.8) and 1 Kings 19:13 (LXX). For a description and function of the Ark, see ABD (1:386–93).

¹⁴⁶ Jurieu (Critical History 2:99). Hos. 3:4.

¹⁴⁷ Jurieu (Critical History 2:99; see also 1:327–33, 339–40). Franciscus Moncaeus, aka. François de Monceaux (fl. late 16th c.), was an erudite French author of Arras. In his Aaron purgatus sive De vitulo aureo (1606), lib. 1, cap. 16, pp. 199–209, and in Disquisitio de magia divinatrice & operatrice (1683), Moncaeus posits that the golden calves in Jeroboam’s temples at Bethel and Dan (1 Kings 12:26–30) are really replicas of Aaron’s golden calf (Exod. 32:1–4) and of the golden Cherubim on the curtains of the Mosaic tabernacle and Mercy Seat of the Ark of the Covenant (Exod. 36:8, 37:6–7). In Ezekiel’s vision (Ezek. 1:6–10; 10:1, 14–22), these Cherubim are mixed creatures with four faces – man, lion, ox, and eagle – and thus explain the polymorphous Cherubim in Solomon’s temple (1 Kings 6:21–35, 7:25) and the presence of the twelve brazen oxen supporting the huge laver (“moulten Sea”). If Jeroboam’s golden calves had not been exact copies of those in Jerusalem’s Temple he tried to supplant, Moncaeus argued, the Israelites would not have accepted them and continued their thrice-annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem. The French mystic Jacques Gaffarel (1601–81), librarian to Cardinal Richelieu, and renowned astrologer, published Curiositez inouyes sur la sculpture talismanique des Persans (1629), for which he was censured by the theologians of the Sorbonne and forced to retract. This work was translated into English by Edmund Chilmead and appeared as Unheard-of Curiosities: Concerning the Talismanical Sculpture of the Persians (1650). Gaffarel takes Moncaeus’s argument one step further and equates the Cherubim with the teraphim (Unheard-of Curiosities, part I, ch. 1, §§ 6–9, pp. 17–31, and part II, ch. 3, §§ 4–, pp. 68–75). Images such as the Cherubim and teraphim, Gaffarel avers, were clearly employed in divinatory rites, even in Solomon’s Temple (!). The examination of OT iconography climaxes in John Spencer’s Dissertatio de

But, which was the most ancient? We have done with your Marshams and Company, who profanely bring in the Glorious GOD, as Imitating of the Divel. Tho' the Teraphim were more ancient than the Cherubim, yett they were not applied unto magical Operations from the Beginning. But it is very probable, that after the Blessed GOD had sett up the Oracle of the Ark, & of the Cherubim, the Divel took this Occasion soon after, to introduce the Oracle of the Teraphim, in Imitation of it, & made them serve as Instruments of Magick, & of Necromancy; making the Tombs to be the Seats of them, upon that Vile Intention. If there were any other more Ancient Resemblance, it happened by Choice; and not any Aim of the Lawgiver.¹⁴⁸

In the Story of Micah, we need suppose no more than Two Teraphim, which were not only Molten, but also Graven Images, placed at the Two Extremities of a Sepulchre. Composing such an Oracle, he made an Ephod, for the Son whom he made his Priest; an Holy Vestment, without which they never asked Counsel of GOD. But Micah consecrated his Teraphim to GOD; with a Purpose to consult the True GOD by these. A Thing too often done by the Israelites. They retained a Respect unto the True GOD; but intermixed cursed Superstitions with it. Micah would make his Oracle, as conformable as may be, to that of Moses.¹⁴⁹

The Ceremonies of consulting the Teraphim, & the Rites practiced in the Evocation of the Spirits, tis not now easily to be determined, what they were. And it is disputed, In what Manners the Teraphim delivered their Answers? Bel-

Urim & Thummim (1669) and in his more radical De legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685). A renowned English Hebraist, Spencer contends in his Dissertatio (cap. 4, sec. 9–10, pp. 147–86) that the images of the man-shaped teraphim were widely used in Egypt and Chaldea, and are the same as the Mosaic Urim and Thummim used in divinatory rituals and kept in a pocket of Aaron's breastplate (Exod. 28:30). As if this bold claim were not enough, Spencer asserts in his De legibus (lib. 3, Diss. 5, cap. 4, sec. 1–4, pp. 771–85) that the polymorphous Cherubim (human, leonine, bovine, and aquiline) were derived from the figures of Egyptian deities and by Moses adapted for pious use to accommodate the Israelites. For centuries, the Israelites had been accustomed to the visible idols of Egypt and were therefore completely unprepared to abandon their visible gods all of a sudden and to embrace Moses's new, invisible Deity and his proscription against idols and images (Exod. 20:3–5). Modern interpretations of the polymorphous Cherubim essentially agree with those of Jurieu and his predecessors (ABD 1:899–90).
 148 Jurieu (Critical History 2:100–01). Mather (via Jurieu) dismisses wholesale Sir John Marsham's comparative study of religion Chronicus Canon Aegyptiacus Ebraicus Graecus (1672), lib. 2, seculum IX, esp. pp. 149–50 ff, as too subversive. Like Moncaeus and Gaffarel before and Spencer after him, Marsham conjectured that Moses, a member of the pharaonic and priestly classes of Egypt, "was learned in the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts 7:22), borrowed many of his subsequent laws, sacrificial rites (and demonology), and calendars from the idolatrous Egyptians. In translating and adapting many aspects of Egypt's laws, philosophy, and customs (Marsham and Spencer argued), Moses established a counter-religion by turning their pagan originals on their head. See esp. Maimonides (Guide 3.29–31, 49, pp. 315–22, 372–80), Aquinas (Summa Theologica, vol. 2, Pt. 1–2, Quest. 101–102, pp. 1051–81), S. D. Benin's "Cunning of God," J. Assmann's "Mosaic Distinction," G. G. Stroumsa's "John Spencer," J. Elukin's "Maimonides," F. Parente's "Spencer," and F. Schmidt's "Polytheisms."

149 Jurieu (Critical History 2:101, 103, 104).

larmine affirms, That the Answers were delivered by an Articulate Voice coming from the Statues. And he gives Instances of Statues that have spoken; whereto many more might be added.¹⁵⁰

Tho' Monsr. Jurieu won't consent unto this; yett he concludes thus: "As thro' them they did call upon the Manes of the Deceased, tis probable the Divel spoke from the vast Abyss of the Earth, the Place commonly assigned for the Dead. Or perhaps the Imagination of the Person who consulted {the Manes}, might be moved in such a Manner, by the Evil Spirit, as to make him pronounce the Oracles dictated to him by the Divel."¹⁵¹

Q. Why, Laban the Syrian? v. 20.

A. A modern Commentator makes this Remark on this Title given to Laban. The Syrians were more cunning than other Nations. The Design of Moses is to intimate, That how crafty soever the Father-in-Law was, the Son-in-Law was able by his Wisdome to over-reach him.¹⁵²

Q. Those Words of the Lord unto Laban, Speak not to Jacob either Good or Bad: How are they to be taken? {v. 24.}

A. The Hebrew runs, From Good to Bad. An Hebraism; q.d. Speak nothing but Good.

Aben Ezra so carries it; Non loquarie ad eum Bonum, ut Reducas eum, neque malum, ut Noceas ei.¹⁵³

Q. A Remark on Jacobs Apology? v. 32.

A. Saurin Remarks upon it, that when we are to answer the unjust Reproaches of an Enemy stronger than ourselves, tis no good Maxim, to do it by making him sensible, that those Reproaches proceed from a Cause which has its Foundation in Unrighteousness. Jacob endeavours to excuse himself, without laying any Blame upon Laban: He had even the Skill to make his Court unto him, while

¹⁵¹ Jurieu (Critical History 2:109). The passage in braces is restored from Jurieu's text.

he made his Apology; He defended himself by the just Apprehension he had, that the Tenderness of a good Father might hinder Laban from consenting that his Daughters should live in a Countrey so far from him.

Those Words of his upon the Stolen Idols, With whom soever thou findest thy Gods, Lett him not live; – The Jews, (particularly Abarbanel & Jarchi) say, That this Imprecation had its Effect, & was the Cause why Rachel died so soon after it.¹⁵⁴

Q. Why does Jacob say, The God of Abraham, & the Fear of Isaac? Why not, The God of Isaac? v. 42.

A. Grotius gives the Reason, Because Isaac was yett living; And adds a Notion, which if you can Maintain & Apply, t'wil be a glorious Key, to Multitudes of Passages all the Bible over; Non cognominatur Deus à quoquam mortalem adhuc agente vitam.

But Grotius, I doubt, forgott, Gen. 24.12. and Gen. 32.9.¹⁵⁵

Q. Jacob swears only, By the Fear of Isaac? v. 53.

A. He mentions this, rather than, The God of Abraham, to declare more plainly, & fully, & undoubtedly, by what God he sware. For Abraham had been an Idolater; which Isaac never was.¹⁵⁶

There have been diverse Glosses on, The Fear of Isaac; But the Chaldee Paraphrast well explains the Original, The God who is the Object of the Fear of Isaac. The Prophet Isaiah alludes to this Passage, & explains it. *Sanctify the Lord of Hosts Himself, & Lett him be your Fear, & Lett him be your Dread.*¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁴ Mather's source is Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXX, 1:237). Saurin refers to Johannes Buxtorf's Latin translation of the commentaries on Gen. 31:32, by Abarbanel (Abravanel) and Jarchi (Rashi), in Buxtorf's Biblia Hebraica cum Paraphrasi Chaldaica et commentarijs rabbinorum (Basileae, 1618–19), vol. 1. Grounding their interpretations on Genesis Rabbah (LXXIV:4), Abraham Ibn Ezra and Rashi say much the same in their commentaries reprinted in Mikraoth Gedoloth (Genesis 2:392).

¹⁵⁵ Hugo Grotius on Gen. 31:42 (Annotationes 1:20) comments, "He is not called God by any mortal while he is still living."

Q. The Message that Jacob sends to his Brother is, I have Oxen? etc. v. 5.

A. The Hebrewes understand it, That Jacob would give Esau, an Account of his being thus well provided for, lest Esau should think, he came a Begging, & might prove a Burden to him.

It is also observed by Maimonides, That he mentions only Oxen and Asses and Flocks; (i.e. of Sheep and Goats,) because these were the common Possessions of all Men, and in all Countreyes that had any thing. But Horses and Camels were not common Possessions; they were the Possessions of none but a few great Men; and in some Countreyes only. Jacob indeed had Camels; but it is likely he had no great Breed of them.

There was no where more Plenty of Men-Servants and Maid-Servants, than in Syria, (whence Jacob came,) if it were then such a Countrey, as it was in after-times; when the Roman Writers tell us, they were Servituti nati, born to Slavery.¹⁵⁸

Q. When the Patriarch saies, I am less than all the Mercies, which thou hast shewed unto thy Servant, is there any further Lesson to bee learnt from that Passage, than what wee see in the first plain Translation of it? v. 10.

A. There is one Good Lesson of practical Christianitie, which may seem to ly, in the first Word of it.

קטנתי / q.d. I am lessened, in my own Eyes, before every Mercy. Every Mercy should make us more Humble; the least Mercy of God, should make us less in our Opinion of ourselves, than wee were before.¹⁵⁹

3452.

Q. A Remark or two, upon the Present made by Jacob to Esau.

¹⁵⁸ Simon Patrick on Gen. 32:5 (Commentary 1:115); Maimonides (Guide 3.39.340). One such Roman writer is Cicero (De provinciis consularibus 5.10), who points out that both Jews and Syrians are “nationes natae servituti” or “people born to be slaves.”

¹⁵⁹ Mather’s rendition “I am less than all the Mercies ...” appears to be based on the Targum Onkelos on Gen. 32:10 (Walton 1:143); Nachmanides (Gen. 32:11) takes exception to this rendition as well as to that of Rashi and argues that the Hebrew word קטנתי [qatonti] suggests “that he [Jacob] is too small to have been worthy of all the mercies which He had done for him” (Commentary 1:399). The KJV’s marginalia offers “less than all” (1611-KJVn) as an alternative reading.

A. We read, He took of that which came to his Hand; as if he took what he first litt upon, being still in a Fright. But in the Original, it is, He took that which was in his Hand; namely, what was in his Power to make a Present of; to witt such Cattel as are mention'd, for he had not Jewels nor Garments, to offer.

It appears, that having thus commended himself unto God, his Fear vanished; and he chose his Present, very considerably and proportionately.

Two Hundred She-Goats, & Twenty He-Goats, – etc. The Males bear the Proportion of One to Ten Females. Varro saies, This was the Proportion observed in his Countrey, at the Time of his writing. They that understand Husbandry, assure us, That Jacob observed the due Proportion of Males & Females.

Milch-Camels, which had lately foaled, were Part of the Present; for as Bochart observes out of Aristotle and Pliny, and many other Authors, there was nothing esteemed more Delicious in those Parts of the World, than Camels Milk.¹⁶⁰

Q. Give us Dr. Patrick's Apprehensions of, Jacobs wrestling? v. 24.

A. Jacob was Retired, that he might commend himself, and his Family to God, by earnest Prayer. [See Hos. 12.4.] He was then encountred by one, whom, tis probable, he took for one of Esau's Attendants, come to surprize him; for it was now so dark, he could not well see his Countenance. Many of the Ancients, take this Man to have been, the Eternal ΛΟΓΟΣ: But Austin opposes their Opinion; and it seems more probable, that this Angel was one of Gods Host, (mentioned in the Second Verse of the Chapter,) sent from the Shechinah or the Divine Majesty, by whose Order he made this Assault upon Jacob; Even one of those whom the Jewes call, Angels of the Presence, & that make alwayes a Part of the Retinue to the Shechinah. This Angel was ordered, for to lett Jacob have the better in the Struggle; until by a Touch, he made the Thigh-bone of Jacob slip out of the Socket, and cause the Tendon which fastened it there (together with the Flesh of the Muscle connected thereunto) to fail. Jacob then began to suspect him an Angel, and held him fast, with a Desire of a Blessing from him. The Angel then foretelling the Change of his Name, from Jacob to Israel, (which was eminently accomplished, in calling his Posterity, not Jacobites, but Israelites,) he intimates, the End of this Combate; which was to show him, That he having such Power with God, as to prevail over one of His Ministers, needed not fear his Brother Esau. Jacob insisted on it, that he might know the Name of the Angel, & so be more confirmed whether he were an Angel. The Angel does not gratify him; and Rasi thinks, that Angels changed their Names according to the Offices and

Functions, unto which they were assigned. However, the Angel, so pronounced a Blessing upon | Jacob, in the Name of the God from whom He came, & Renewed the Blessing promised unto Abraham, that Jacob was now fully satisfied, who he was. He considered this Angel, as Part of the Shechinah, and probably the Shechinah itself now also appeared, & approached near unto him. Whence he cried out, I have seen God Face to Face. [408v]

Q. That wonderful Matter, Jacobs Colluctation with the Angel, Give us another Conjecture of what Nature it might be? v. 24.

A. In the German Ephemerides, for the Year 1682. the Seventy Sixth Observation, communicated by D. Hanneman, gives an Account of a Remarkable Ecstasy, of one in Buxtehude. Upon this, hee proceeds to discourse on the Nature of an Ecstasy, and the Communion, which the Souls of Men therein have, with the Spirits of the Invisible World, even such Spirits as their former Lives have rendred them agreeable unto. I'll now transcribe for you, some Notable Words, which that learned Man uses on this Occasion.

Sic Jacob Ecstasin passus, in visione, quâ scalas in Cælum erectas vidit, in quibus Angeli ascendebant et descendebant. Lucta, quâ obtinuit, ut Jacob Israel vocaretur, à Jehovâ, fuit in ecstasi, et ut tale quid contigisse, etiam Recordaretur, memoriale fuit illa luxatio, quâ postea laboravit. Quid autem illâ luxatione Deus significare voluerit, hic addere, non est hujus Fori; scilicet, posterorum Israel, in ultimis generationibus perpetuam Apostasiam.¹⁶²

¹⁶¹ Mather extracts both paragraphs from Simon Patrick on Gen. 32:24, 29, 30 (Commentary 1:116, 117). However, Mather erroneously renders ΛΟΓΟΣ (LOGOS) as ΛΟΓΟΣ – here silently corrected. St. Augustine addresses this issue in De Trinitate (2.10–11, 3.11), in NPNFi (3:45–47, 64–68); but see his Ennarationes in Psalmos CXLVII.28, where Augustine argues that “God Himself wrestled with” Jacob “under the guise of” and angel (NPNFi 8:672). See also Mather’s annotations on Gen. 18:33 (above). Rasi (or rather Rashi, on Gen. 32:30), from Genesis Rabbah (LXXVIII:4), argues that angels “have no permanent name. Our names change (all) according to the service we are commanded [to do] in the mission upon which we are sent” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 2:419). Finally, Mather’s citation from Giovanni Steffano Menochius’s Commentarij totius Sacrae Scripturae (1755 ed.) 125, on Gen. 32:30, is derived from Patrick (Commentary 1:117), but Patrick’s own source for Menochius appears to be Matthew Poole’s trusty Synopsis Criticorum (1:231). Poole relates that Menochius offers two alternatives on the meaning of “Peniel” (Gen. 32:30): Either “I am not dead” or “I am freed from the fear of my brother, whence Hosea 12:4 has, I was comforted” (Poole, Works 3:209).

¹⁶² The German physician Daniel Johannes Ludovicus Hannemann (1640–1724) describes the ecstasies of the young German girl from Buxtehude (N Germany), in “Observatio LXXXVI: D. Joh. Ludovici Hanneman Puella Ecstatica” (pp. 180–83), which was published in vol. 11 (1682) of the “German Ephemerides,” aka. Miscellanea Curiosa, Sive ephemeridum medico-physicarum Germanicarum academia (1670–1706). Hannemann’s “Notable Words” appear in Miscellanea Curiosa (1683) 11:181 (scholium) and translate as follows: “Thus Jacob suffered a

Some Commentators have thought this Narration of Moses, has given an Occasion to the Fable related by Lycophron, That Jupiter took on him the Form of an Athlete, or a Wrestler, & so contended a whole Night with Hercules, who overcame the Father of the Gods.¹⁶³

Q. The Name of Israel? v. 28.

A. It was, as Nazianzen well saies, Μέγα κ{α}τὰ τίμιον ὄνομα, ἄθλον τῆς εὐσεβείας. A Great and Honourable Name, given him for a Reward of his Piety. With Philo, it signified, Homo videns Deum; with Jerom, Rectus Dei. But the True Interpretation is, given here, princeps cum Deo.¹⁶⁴

No Name in Scripture is more famous, than that of Israel: the Story of whose Life, is more fully related than any of the Patriarchs, because, as Pererius expresses it, hee was, Totius et Solius populi Dei parens.¹⁶⁵

It is observed, when the Infirmities of the Church are mentioned, shee is called, Jacob; but when her Glory and Courage is referr'd unto, shee is called, Israel.

One ha's this Note upon it; "When the Thigh-bone of Jacob, was putt out of Joint, then he was called, Israel. So that it is no Contradiction; 2. Cor. XII.10. When I am weak, then I am strong."¹⁶⁶

Q. On Peniel? v. 30.

trance, in the vision where he saw ladders raised up to heaven, on which angels were going up and down. The wrestling match, which took place so that Jacob might be called Israel by Jehovah, was in the trance, and so that he might also remember that something of this sort had happened, the dislocation of his joint from which he suffered afterwards was a reminder. However, it is not the place of this forum to add here what God wished to signify by that dislocation: namely, the continual apostasy of the children of Israel in the last generations."

¹⁶³ The story of Herakles's wrestling with the athletic Zeus at Olympia appears in Scholia in Lycophronem (scholia 41).

¹⁶⁴ See Heidegger (2:253–54, Exerc. XIII, § 19). The Greek passage, adapted from Gregory Nazianzen (De theologia: oratione secunda 18.17–19), translates, "A great and honourable name, which he received for a reward of his reverence," in Second Theological Oration (Oration 28.18), in NPNFi (7:295). With Philo Judaeus (De mutatione nominum 12.81) it signifies, "the man who sees God" (Works 348); with St. Jerome (Traditionibus Hebraicis, in Genesim super) on Gen. 32:28, it suggests, "right side of God." But the "True Interpretation," according to Mather, is a "prince with God" (St. Jerome, Hebrew Questions on Genesis, pp. 70–71). Yet in his commentary Liber Bresith Qui Dicitur Genesis [PL 28. 207B], Jerome's interpretation is consistent with that in the KJV: "for as prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed."

¹⁶⁵ According to Valentinius Benedictus Pererius's annotations on Gen. 32:28 ("Disputatio Quinta"), in Commentariam et disputationum in Genesim (1596–1602) 4:344–48, Jacob-Israel was "the sole parent of all the people of God."

¹⁶⁶ See Poole's commentary on Gen. 32:32 (Works 3:209).

A. Strabo [L. XVI.] has preserved the Memory of this Matter. He says, In his Time there was a Promontory of Lebanon, called, The Face of GOD.¹⁶⁷

Q. What appears Remarkable, in the Remembrance, that the Israelites kept of their Fathers Lameness? v. 32.

A. You see, Distinction of Meats, was the first Thing, which differenced the Israelites, from all other People. They would not eat the Sinew, which had Shrank in their Father; and hereby they præsaved an Honourable Memory of his Lameness. They did not Refrain to eat of the Joint, where that Sinew was; as a Leg of Mutton, or Beef; the Legs of the Passeover were to bee eaten. [Exod. 12.10.] But they spared the Sinew; and this, not in Abomination of it, but in Honour & Respect unto it, because it bare the Memorial of their first Naming Israel. The Portion of Meat, that Elkanah gave to his Beloved Hannah; the, Portion of Representation, may not unfitly bee understood of this Joint: And this Peece of Meat, Samuel did reserve out of special Civilitie for Saul: [1. Sam. 9.24.] The Cook took up the Leg.¹⁶⁸

Q. Might there be any special Mystery in Jacobs Lameness?

A. I remember, That old Prosper, makes it ominous and prædictive of the Fate of Jacobs Posterity, and especially in the Matter of Religion. He finds them afterwards Halting, and Rebuked for their Halting.

You may do well, at Liesure, to consider what may be in it.

The rather, because the Children of Jacob, are called, Exod. I.3. Such as came out of his Thigh.¹⁶⁹

Q. That Phrase, The Children of Israel, which first occurs here? v. 32.

A. Dr. Gell spends five Pages in Folio, to perswade us, that we would rather translate it, Sons of Israel.

Without this, how will the Translators make a Difference between Children and Children? See Exod. XII.37.

Q. What was the proper Seat, of Jacobs Lameness? called, The Hollow of his Thigh, in v. 32.

A. Josephus calls it, not so exactly, τὸ νεῦρο{ν} τὸ πλατὺ, sive, Latum Nervum. More properly, As Sulpicius Severus has it, Latitudo Femoris Jacob obtorpuit. Now, the Latitudo Femoris, is the, Caput ossis Femoris, quod suo sinu, seu Vasto coxendicis Acetabulo excidit, sais Bartholinus; who gives an Exemple of a Person of Quality, which having suffered a Luxation there, limped all his Dayes, tho' the Bone had been with sufficient Skill Replaced. I wonder, Tostatus and Junius could imagine, that Jacob was within a Day or two, cured of his Lameness. Hornius in his Notes upon Sulpicius, (as well as Mercer) more probably conclude him lame all his Life after. A Luxatio Coxendicum, is pronounced Incurable, by Galen, L. 17. de usu part. c. 2. and hee sais, A Claudication must follow necessarily upon such a Disaster. Celsus L.8.c. 20. thinks it very hard, it should bee otherwise, because the strong Nerves & Muscles there, very hardly admitt a Reposition of the Thigh, if they keep their Strength; & if they have lost their Strength, they as hardly Retain the Thigh so Reposed. Such a Disaster frequently happens in Colluctations, like that wherein Jacob was engaged. Hence in the Roman Playes, there were Medici, sive chirurgi, pro gladiatoribus lasis luxatisve. Lipsius, L.1.1. Saturnal. c. 14. Finally, If Israel halt, Lett it bee remembred, what Philo sais, Non est Rectipies Virtus, in corpore mortali.¹⁷¹

¹⁷¹ Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 1.20.2) calls it "near the broad sinew" such as "the sciatic nerve." Sulpicius Severus (Chronicorum ... Historia Sacra 1.9) [PL 20. 100C] opines that "the breadth of Jacob's thigh shrank" (Sacred History 1.9), in NPNFii (11:74). The renowned Swedish physician Thomas Bartholinus (Acta Medica & Philosophica Hafniensia Anni 1673 (1675), vol. 2, cap. 37: Luxatio femoris," pp. 102–04, adapts his Latin citation from the royal physician Henricus à Moinichen (fl. 16th c.). The "Latitudo Femoris," Bartholinus explains, is "the top of the femur, which fell out of its curve, or ruined hip-joint." Mather owned two volumes of Bartholin's Acta Medica [AAS-Library # 817]. Most likely, Mather refers to Commentaria in Genesim (Gen. 32:32), by Alonso Tostatus Abulensis, aka. Alonso Tostado (c. 1400–55), learned bishop of Avila, in his twenty-eight-volume Opera Omnia quotquot in Scripturae Sacrae expositionem (1596), vol. 1: Commentaria in Genesim. The annotations on Jacob's lameness appear in Biblia Sacra, 2nd ed. (1593) by Franciscus Junius and Immanuel Tremellius (1:37, notes 25–26), on Gen. 32:25; and in Opera Theologica (1613), "Libri Geneseos Analysis" (1:216–18), esp. 1:217, lines 60–80. Mather refers to the notes on Sulpicius Severus by the Dutch professor of theology at Leiden, Georgius Hornius (1620–70), who edited Sulpicii Severi presbyteri Opera Omnia (1665), the third edition of which was accessible to Mather at Harvard. Joannes Mercerus (Jean Mercier) published an oft-reprinted Commentarii in Genesin Mosis librum (1598). Claudius Galenus (De usu partium corporis humanis 17.2), referring to Hippocrates (De articulis 60), insists that a "luxatio coxendicum," or "dislocation of the hip," is incurable, even when not ulcerated. (In the holograph MS, Mather erroneously lists book 18, instead of 17, of Galen's work. Here silently corrected). The Roman physician Aulus Cornelius Celsus (De medicina

Q. Until I come unto my Lord, into Seir. We do not find any where that Jacob ever went into Idumæa. v. 14.

A. The Commentators, as Monsr. Saurin observes, have taken a great deal of Pains to excuse him from Dissimulation. Some say, He had, and might have a secret Reservation; In Case he could not meet with a better Way.¹⁷²

Abarbanel would have the Words of the Text run so; Lett my Lord, I pray thee, pass over before his Servant; and I will lead on softly, according as the Cattel, that goeth before me, and Children be able to endure, until I come unto my Lord; unto Seir. This Jewish Doctor joins the last Words, Unto Seir, with those which precede, Lett my Lord, i.e. Esau, pass before his Servant. And by the Words, until I come unto my Lord, he understands that Jacobs Meaning was, to go unto his Father Isaac, whilst Esau should return to Idumæa.¹⁷³

Austin has handled the Quæstion, and thinks, that Jacob did at first speak as he meant; but Prudence obliged him afterwards to change his Design.¹⁷⁴

Others with Calvin, are of Opinion that Jacob did conceal his real Intentions.

But perhaps Moses may have omitted the Story of this Journey, as he did the Journey he made unto Kirjath-arbah to visit his Father. Compare Gen. XXXV.27.¹⁷⁵

8.20.2–8) describes the problems of a dislocated hipbone, its treatment, and effects on the patient, but also points to such weighty authorities as Hippocrates, Diocles, Phylotimus, Nileus, and Heraclides of Tarentum, who cured such cases successfully. Justus Lipsius, aka. Joost Lips (1547–1606), a Christian Stoic humanist and philologist of Brabant, relates in his Saturnaliū sermonum libri duo (1598), lib. 1, pars 1, cap. 14. p. 45, that in the Roman gladiatorial games, “doctors or surgeons” were available “for gladiators suffering from injuries or dislocations.” Mather’s Latin citation from this oft-reprinted work on ancient warfare is adapted from the summary in the margin (Saturnaliū 45).

172 Mather’s answer in this and the following paragraphs is extracted from Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXXII, 1:248). The strained efforts to account for Jacob’s purported journey to Seir is sufficiently covered in Jacques Bonfrere’s Pentateuchus Moysis, commentario illustratus (1625) 268 (on Gen. 33:14), but Matthew Poole again provides the best summary of the various interpreters and their positions (Works 3:218).

173 Mather copies the English translation of Abarbanel’s commentary from Saurin (Diss. XXXII, 1:248).

Q. It is here said, Jacob came to Shalem, a City in Shechem. Where was the exact Scituation of that Salem? v. 18.

A. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, it was no where at all. The Scripture, in all the Chorography of Ephraim, does never mention any Salem at all; wherefore, Lett us read the Text, as the Generality of the Jewes do read it. Jacob came safe to the City of Shechem; for till then, hee had no Miscarriage in his Family, as hee had afterwards.¹⁷⁶

Q. The Epocha of this affair? v. 1.

A. I will transcribe the Words of Monsr. Saurin.

“Moses relates it immediately after having mention’d Jacobs Departure for Canaan. It is demonstrable, That Dinah was but Eight Years old, when that Patriarch left Mesopotamia. It is not less certain, that Simeon and Levi were but twelve or thirteen. Moses’s Account has mightily embarassed the greatest Part of the Commentators. Some of them think, Dinah suffered in a very Tender Age that Violence, which implies a greater Number of Years; and that Simeon and Levi committed in their Childhood, an Action which does likewise suppose Age & Strength. Others pretend, that Jacob dwelt in Canaan at Salem Eight or Ten Years. Neither of these Opinions are maintainable. It is much better to suppose, that Moses relates immediately after the Departure of Jacob for Canaan, an Event which did not happen, till a great while after he had arrived there. It is said in the Account of the Selling of Joseph, That his Brethren went to feed their Fathers Flocks in Shechem, when Jacob was in Canaan. Dinah was with them perhaps at the same time. Joseph was then Seventeen Years old. His Sister was born before him. It is probable therefore, that this may be accounted the Epocha to the Slaughter committed by Simeon and Levi upon the Shechemites.”¹⁷⁷

Q. We have here the First Mention of Idolatri; except what we have a little before, of one in this Family Stealing her Fathers Images. And on this Occasion, some Discourse about the Date of Idolatri, may be not unseasonable? v. 2.

A. Dr. Edwards ha's given us a learned Entertainment, upon, The Idolatri & Polytheism of the Gentile World.¹⁷⁸

The Learned have differed in their Opinions, about the Date of Idolatri. Josephus introduces it long before the Flood. Some Rabbins will have Cain to be the first Idolater; and a Worshipper of the Host of Heaven; But most of the Rabbinical, begin Idolatri in the Dayes of Enos. Our Selden follows Maimonides, in making it an Antediluvian Crime.¹⁷⁹

All with Ground little enough; and very much upon a singular and uncertain Translation of Gen. IV.26. – taking the Word, Beginning, to mean, Profaning.¹⁸⁰

We do not find Idolatri charged by Moses on the Antediluvian World, as any Part of the Wickedness that brought the Flood upon them. The Apparitions of GOD seem also to have been more frequent in those Dayes. The Memory of the Creation was likewise fresh; And the long Lives of the Patriarchs, were accommodated for the Propagation & Security of Religion. For such Reasons, Lactantius tells us, Errant qui deorum cultus ab exordio rerum fuisse contendunt. [Instit. L.2. c. 14.] And Ireneus, Justin Martyr, Epiphanius, Austin, Cyril of Alexandria, and others, were of the same Opinion.¹⁸¹

Dr. Edwards thinks it probable, That Idolatri began first, with the Worshipping of Bel, or Belus, whom the Scripture calls Nimrod, the first King of Assyria after the Flood.

¹⁷⁹ Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 1.3.1) argues that idolatry began seven generations after Adam. Perhaps Mather alludes to R. David Kimchi's commentary on Gen. 4:26, which suggests "that idolatry was widespread in the days of Enosh" (Hachut Hameshulash 1:166); for much the same see Rashi's commentary on Gen. 4:26 (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 1:75). Maimonides (Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Avodat Kochavim 1.1) identifies Enosh and his contemporaries as practicing idolatry before the Flood. Maimonides and the Mishnah (Avodah Zarah) appear to inform John Selden's De Diis Syris (1617) and De Jure Naturali (lib. 2, cap. 1–2, pp. 130–37ff).

¹⁸⁰ Mather here relies on Dionysius Vossius's Latin translation of and commentary on R. Mosi Maimonidae De Idololatria (1641), lib. 1, cap. 1, pp. 1–2. (Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Avodah Kochavim 1.1). See also Targum Jonathan ben Uziel on Gen. 4:26 (Walton 4:9).

¹⁸¹ Lactantius (Divinarum Institutionum 2.14) [PL 328. 329A–B] points to Noah's descendants who began to adore the stars after settling Egypt: "They err who contend that the worship of the gods was from the beginning [of the world]" (ANF 7:63).

There are some Lines of Hesiod,

ΑΥΤΑΡ ΕΠΕΙ ΜΕΝ ΤΟΥΤΟ ΓΕΝΟΣ ΚΛ.

Which affirm, That when the Worthies of the First and Golden Age left this World, Jupiter made them Dæmons, & appointed them to be the Guardians of Mankind, & to do good Offices for Men upon Earth. These were called, Animales Dij; and Servius assigns the Reason of the Name, out of Labeo; That by certain Rites the Animæ of Men were turned into Gods. Thus Lactantius [De Ira Dei. c. 11.] tells us, It omnes qui coluntur ut Dij, homines fuerunt, et ijdem primi ac maximi Reges.¹⁸²

That a great Part of Idolatry, rose from the Divine Honour paid unto dead Monarchs and Princes may be gathered from the Primitive Names of Heathen Gods, and their Idols; particularly Baal & Moloch. Baal or Bagual, which is, Dominus, was the General Name of the Gentile Gods. The Phœnicians pronounced it Bal; and it was Bel among the Assyrians and Chaldeans. When great Lords died, they were deified by their People. And who was the first Lord, or King, so deified? Nimrod, the Son of Cush, and the Grandson of Cham, who flourished about A. M. 1716. is he who in profane Authors is called, Belus, or, Jupiter Belus. He was the first, Bel, or King, and by his People made a God when he died, and by the Heathen called, Belus. Jerom, in his Comment on Ezekiel, tells us, that Ninus, the Son of Nimrod, or Belus, erected Altars & a Temple, with Images to his Father, after he was Dead; and this was the Beginning of Idolatry. This Example was greedily followed; many Subjects flattered their Dead Kings with the Title of Gods, and honoured them with the Names of Baal, of Bel, & of Baalim; which were the general Term for the Pagan Gods. [Hos. II.8. Jer. L.2. 1. Sam. VII.4. Jer. II.23.]¹⁸³

Here it may be observed, That out of a special Veneration to the Baal, or Bel, who was the first King which was made a God among the Heathen, some great Men tack'd this Name to theirs. As, Eth-bal King of the Sidonians;

¹⁸² Mather's citation, adapted from Hesiod (Opera et dies 121–22, 140–41), merely alludes to the opening lines, “But after the earth had covered this generation,” which are followed by “they [the dead] are called pure spirits dwelling on earth,” and “they are called blessed spirit of the underworld.” The “Animales Dii” or “aerial gods” are related to the “animæ” or “souls” of men, according to the Roman grammarian Maurus Servius Honoratus (4th c. CE), who evidently cites the lost history of Roman and Etruscan mythology by Cornelius Labeo (c. 250–300 CE). Lactantius (De Ira Dei 11) [PL 7. 111A] affirms in Euhemerist fashion that “all those who are worshipped as gods were men, and were also the earliest and greatest kings” (ANF 7:268).

¹⁸³ Lev. 18:21 mentions the infamous Babylonian Moloch (or Molech) to whom children were sacrificed in ancient Babylonia and Palestine (2 King 23:10; Jer. 32:35). The date of Anno Mundi 1716 for Nimrod, son of Cush (Gen. 10:8), is within the parameters of James Ussher's chronology, in Annals (1658) 3–4. Herodotus (Historia 1.181–83) describes the temple precinct of the Chaldean Zeus (Jupiter) Belus (Marduk). St. Jerome relates the story of Ninus in his Interpretatio Chronicae Eusebii Pamphili XIII [PL 27. 76A], not in his Commentaria in Ezechielem. According to a fragment of Ctesias Cnidius's History of the Persians (5th–4th c. BCE), surviving in Diodorus Siculus (2.7.1–2), Ninus (son of Belus), founder of the Assyrian empire, was deified and worshiped in the temple that his wife Semiramis built over his tomb.

and Jezebel, who was that Kings Daughter. So, Some of King Sauls Courtiers, as Esh-baal, and Merib-baal. The last King of the Chaldaean Race was called, Bel-shazzar. And Nebuchadnezzar gave to Daniel this Name, a little altered, Bel-teshazzar; which was, According to the Name of his God. [Dan. IV.8.] Thus, Asdrubal, and Hannibal, and Heliogabalus, were Names that contain Baal in them. No doubt, from this Bel was Bellinus, the Name of a God among the old Galls, and Germans, and Britons; and thence the Names of the British Kings, Cassibelin, and Cunobelin.¹⁸⁴

Mithridates had his Name from the Persian God, Mithras, which is the same with, Dominus; And so the Hebrew, Baal, is answered in it.¹⁸⁵

[414v] The first Baal, or Bel, hath different Epithets annexed unto him, according to the different Places where he was worshipped; For he had Adoration paid him, not only in Assyria (his Native Countrey,) but also in some other Parts of the World. He had the Name of Baal-Peor, or Bel-Phegor; from a Mountain called Peor, in the Land of Moab; on the Top of which Mountain Balak desired Balaam to curse Israel; the Temple of his God being scituated there, & his Worship there paid unto him; and so it was hoped, that on his own Ground, he might signify something. | Suidas agrees to this; and so does our Selden, who thinks, he was called thus, as Jupiter was called Olympus, on the Score of his being worshipped on Mount Olympus. Tho' some say, Baal-Peor was a lewd King of that Countrey; famous for his Obscenities, & canonized after his Death by his Friends that were of the same Temper with himself.¹⁸⁶

It is likely that Baal-Zephon was Baal revered as a God at Zephon, a Place at which the Israelites lodged in their Journey from Egypt.

Unto this first Bel, namely Nimrod or Ninus, may be referred other Names of this God, which are mentioned in the Scriptures; as Rimmon, and Nisroch.¹⁸⁷

Of the former we read, 2. King. V.18. It may be as much as Baal-Rimmon; that is, Baal who was worshipped in a peculiar Manner at Rimmon, a Place often mentioned in the Bible. [Josh. XV.32. 1. Chron. IV.32. and VI.77. Zech. XIV.16.] The latter, was the God of the Assyrians, and his Temple was at Ninive. 2. King. XIX.32. Now, tis well-known, that Baal, or Bel, was the God of the Assyrians. Jurieu owns, that Nisroch was Baal, and embellishes it with a Notion; That Nisroch signifies an Eagle; which is a Bird of Prey and Chace; and so it agrees well with Nimrod's being a Mighty Hunter; And that Belus was worshipped by the Assyrians, in the form of an Eagle.¹⁸⁸

Selden and other great Criticks have observed, That a πολυωνομια, or, Multitude of Names, was thought Acceptable to the Gods; wherefore we need not wonder if Baal had Many Names allow'd unto him.¹⁸⁹

That Kings and great Potentates, we{re} the first Gods on Earth, is to be gathered, from another Name well known in the World; even, that of Molech, or Molock, or Malchum, or Milcom; All which are no other than Melech, a King; and accordingly rendered, Αρχων and Βασιλευς, by the LXX. And no other are Adrammelech, and Anamelech, the Gods of Sepharvaim. [2. King. XVII.31.] There are eager Contentions among the Learned, what particular God may be meant by Moloch. Selden, and Grotius, and Jurieu, will have him to be Moloch. Kircher will have him to be Mars. Arias Montanus will have him to be Mercury. And with Cyril it shall be Venus. Our Edwards looks on all this as precarious; and will have him to be a Dead King, who was worshipped. And why not the same with Baal? He that in certain Places was called Baal, was called Moloch in others; especially among the Ammonites. Moloch was the God of the Children of Ammon. [1. King. XI.33.] The High Places of Tophet, where they burnt their Children, have certainly a Relation to Moloch. And yett they are called, Jer. XIX.5. The High-places of Baal. For this Cause, two Noted Criticks; Petit, and Spencer, come into the Acknowledgment, That Baal and Moloch were Names of the same God. The Pagan Gods, were first of all made of Kings; whose Mortality promoted them to Deities.¹⁹⁰

For Malchum or Malcham, see Zeph. 1:5; the Greek "Archon" and "Basileus" suggest "ruler" and "king"; Selden, De Diis Syris (Synt. 1, cap. 6, pp. 80–83); Hugo Grotius on Lev. 18:21, Deut. 18:10, in Annotationes (1679) 1:67, 92; Jurieu, Critical

The first particular Notice of Idolatry in the Scriptures, is among the Kindred of Abraham; from whom we find Rachel stealing Images; [Gen. XXXI.19.] And hereto refers what we read; Josh. XXIV.2. Your Fathers dwelt on the other Side of the Flood, in old time; and they served other Gods. Idolatry, by this Account, ha's its first Original in Chaldea, & the Neighbour-Country's. And unto this, Maimonides and the other Jewish Doctors give their Suffrage, when they make the Zabians, the first Idolaters.¹⁹¹

The next Idolatry we read of, was in Canaan, whither Abraham was to remove, that he might come out from among the Idolaters of the East; For at Bethel there, [Gen. XXXV.2.] Jacob commanded his Household, to putt away their Strange Gods.¹⁹²

Next we find it in Egypt; where we read of, [Exod. XII.12.] The Gods of Egypt; And the Israelites themselves becoming Idolaters. Yea, They brought Idolatry with them from thence, into the Desarts of Arabia; where, by the way, the Sacrifices of their Idolatry, are called, [Psal. CVI.28.] The Sacrifices of the Dead; which lets us know, that the Gods, whom they worshipped, were Dead Men, whom the Nations deified. The Israelites, carried their Idolatrous Disposition unto Canaan with them. And nothing would cure them of it, but their Captivity in Babylon, the first Seat and Source of Idolatry; Returning from which, tis very strange, they were no more addicted unto it.

The Græcians borrowed their Gods from the Egyptians; and added many more unto them. The Romans improved these Deities; and raised up the Number of them to many Thousands. But still our Edwards will have the Adoring of Dead Men, especially of Dead Kings, to be the Beginning of all. And he doubts not, but the Teraphim of Rachel, (the first Idols mentioned in the Bible,) [415r] were in Imitation of the | Images, which represented some great Assyrian Kings, who were the first Gods, in the Idolatry of the Nations.¹⁹³

Both Samuel Petit (Variae Lectiones, cap. 1) and John Spencer, De legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 10, sec. 1, pp. 315–16, associate Baal with Moloch. Much of the debate is synopsized in Matthew Poole's invaluable Synopsis Criticorum (3:1848–50).

193 Gen. 31:34.

Tho' the oldest Jupiter might be Cain; the eldest Son of Adam; yett there was a later, who was the King of Crete, (yea, Varro saies, There were Three hundred of the Name,) and so loved or feared by the Inhabitants, that they honoured him as a God, when he was dead. Pausanias in his Atticks, reports, that Cecrops the first King of the Athenians, was the first who decreed this Jupiter to be called, A God.¹⁹⁴

The most ancient Janus might be Noah. But there was another Janus, among the Italians, made a Deity, by the People over whom he ruled; their First King, as is testified by Festus, by Pliny, by Macrobius, and Arnobius. Dr. Edwards inclines to derive his Name from the Eastern Word, Jan, or, Chan, which signifies, a Prince. A Wise King, who (having Two Faces) knew Things past, and Foreknew Things to come.¹⁹⁵

The God Remphan, [Act. VII.43.] was, according to Dr. Edwards, a King of Egypt. Mr. Selden utterly renounces all hope to find, who he was. But why may he not be, the same with the Egyptian King Remphis, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus? of whom Capellus treats in his Annotations on the Text that ha's been cited. The Prophet Amos calls him Chiun. But the Martyr Stephen, with the LXX uses the Word Remphan. For those Interpreters turned a Persian or Arabic Name, into an Egyptian one, for the same God. These Interpreters, were at Alexandria, & employ'd by an Egyptian King: And they might be willing to have seen, that an Egyptian King, one of his Predecessors, was here intended; who was made a God by the People & placed among the Stars. This also gives an Account of the Star of the God Remphan; They translated Kings into Stars, and then worshipped 194 Of the large number of works by Roman author Marcus Terrentius Varro only two are extant. Of the two, his De lingua Latina (5.19, 65–67; 7.6–20; 9.77) provides much relevant information on ancient religions and the history of the sky-god Jupiter (“Diespiter”), or “Father Day,” and on his wife Juno, representing “Earth.” Pausanias (8.2.2) mentions Cecrops, first king of Attica, whose half-human and half-serpentine shape emerged from the fertile earth. As the father of Greek civilization and founder of Athens, Cecrops was revered (with Poseidon) in the Erechtheion of the Acropolis, also known as the Cecropia (KP). In the version of Arnobius (Adversus gentes 6.6), Cecrops was buried in the temple of Minerva (ANF 6:508).

195 Mather's Janus-Noah refers to the apocryphal story dished up in Anniius of Viterbo's forgery, according to which Noah settled in Italy in the 860th year of his life and established Janiculum, in An Historical Treatise of the Travels of Noah into Europe (1601), pp. Bii(v), C(v)-Cii(v). In another – no doubt equally credible version – Janus was the most ancient king of Italy, who established a settlement on the Tiber, the Janiculum. In Roman mythology, this latter Janus is revered as the god of gates and doorways (Ianua), and his two faces (bifrons) suggest that he is connected to both the past and the future. Ovid (Fasti 1.65, 246) mentions “Iane biceps” (“two-headed Janus”) and the “Janiculum” (Janus temple); see also Sextus Pompeius Festus (De verborum significatione 104), Pliny (3.5.68, 36.4.28), Macrobius (Saturnalia 1.7.19, 23), and Arnobius (Adversus gentes 1.36.2, 3.6.2, 3.29.3–4), in ANF (6:422, 465, 471); John Edwards, Discourse (1:210–11).

them. Salmasius observes, That Remphan, or Rephan, is the Egyptian Word for the Planet Saturn.¹⁹⁶

Apis, or Serapis, or Osiris, (Three Names of one Person,) was an Egyptian King, dignified with a Deity. Dr. Edwards will have him to be no other than Joseph, the famous Vice-roy of Egypt. And he thinks, Tammuz to have been the same. The Practice mentioned by Ezekiel, There satt Women weeping for Tammuz, might be a Piece of Idolatry, borrowed by the Jews, from the Egyptians; who used yearly to lament the Death of Apis their King, who was called Ammuz by the Egyptians, as we are informed by Herodotus and Plutarch; and corruptly, Tammuz. A famous Prince, worshipped by the People after his Death; and an annual Mourning appointed for him in the Fourth Month, which among the Jews wore the Name of Tammuz.¹⁹⁷

But Princes were not the only Things, that had their Apotheosis. Others were taken into the Number of the Pagan Gods, δι' αρετης υπερβολην. as Aristotle saies; For the Eminency of their Vertue. Deities, whereof the Roman Orator saies, Quos in Cælum merita vocarunt.¹⁹⁸

Thus, the most celebrated Authors of Remarkable & Beneficial Inventions, were putt into the List of their Gods. Who but Adam, the First Man, could be their Saturn, the Son of Cælus and Tellus, under whom was the Golden Age, & the Introduction of Husbandry? Who but Eve could be the Minerva, that found out Spinning and Weaving, and was the Mistress of the Saduces? Who but she,

the Ceres, the Δημητηρ, and Magna Mater; the first finder out of Bread; the Goddess of the Fruits of the Earth? Was not Noah, the Neptune of the Ancients, who found out Navigation? And Jubal, their Apollo, the Inventor of Music? Their Mercury seems to be Moses; the First Man, as Maimonides notes, that had the Honour to be, Sent of God. GOD said of him, I have made thee a GOD unto Pharaoh; that is, I make thee my Ambassador, to deliver my Message in my Name unto him. Justin Martyr saies, The Name of, Hermes, and, The Interpreter of the Gods, was given to Moses by the Egyptians. Is it not Reasonable to think, That the Caduceus of Mercury, had reference to the Rod of Moses? And, that the Serpents about the one, refer to the others being turned into a Serpent? And may not Mercuries Care of Shepherds allude unto the pastoral Life led by Moses for forty Years together? And Mercuries Care to direct Passengers, be fetch'd from the Guidance that Moses gave to Israel travelling thro' the Wilderness?¹⁹⁹

199 See Edwards, Discourse (1:205). Saturn (Kronos), offspring of Heaven and Earth, presides over the pleasures of the Golden Age (Hesiod, Opera et Dies 109–20). The post-lapsarian Adam tills the soil to earn his bread and thus becomes the de-facto inventor of husbandry. Likewise Eve, who in questing for the wisdom of God, becomes the de-facto weaver of fig-leaves and other articles into clothing. She is the Roman Minerva (Athena of the Greeks), goddess of wisdom and of all the liberal arts. Minerva is especially revered by workers in wool and embroidery (Gen. 1:28, 3:18–21); Arnobius's Adversus gentes (5.45), in ANF (6:506). The motherless origin of goddess Minerva, the brainchild of her father Jupiter, has much in common with that of alma mater Eve, who sprang from Adam's rib (Gen. 2:21–22); Arnobius's Adversus gentes (2.70), in ANF (6:461). Loosing her immortal life, Eve becomes the "Mistress of the Sad[d]uc[e]es," the priestly party that in denying the resurrection forfeited their reward in the hereafter (Matt. 22:23, Act. 23:8). Ceres, the Greek "Demeter," giver of corn (Hesiod, Opera et dies 30–32), can thus be called the "Great Mother" who – like Eve – nourished mankind with cereals and bread (Arnobius's Adversus gentes 1.38, 5.45, but see also 3.32), in ANF (6:423, 506, 472). As the inventor of harps and pipes (Gen. 4:21), Lamech's son Jubal becomes the muse to Vulcan's son Horus (Jupiter's Apollo), whose invention of music and musical instruments earned him the eternal devotion of poets and musicians. Maimonides (see De Idololatria, cap. 1, § 11. p. 19) appears to associate Moses, God's envoy to Pharaoh (Exod. 7:1) with Mercury (Hermes), messenger of the gods and patron of travelers and shepherds. Mather's second-hand argument is informed by the Renaissance debate reopened in Marsilio Ficino's translation of the Hermetic works Pimander (1464) and in Ficino's Theologia Platonica (8.1) in Opera omnia (1:400), where the Italian humanist conjectured that Moses was none else but Hermes Trismegistus; however, Ficino was less certain of their identity in his Argumentum (Opera omnia 2:1836). In either case, Ficino's claims were not entirely fresh either. Long before him, the early Christian apologist Justin Martyr (c. 100–c. 165) similarly equated Mneves (Menas) with Moses and hence with Hermes, the revealer of divine knowledge, in Hortatory Address to the Greeks (ch. 9, note 4; chs. 10–12, 38), in ANF (1:277–78, 289). And so did Diodorus Siculus (1.94.1) as well as Artapanus, in Eusebius Pamphilus's Praeparatio evangelica (9.27), and later St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei (8.23–26). Inventing the seven-stringed lyre, Mercury gave his musical instrument to Apollo from whom he received the caduceus, the staff entwined by two serpents, each forming a semicircle. Mather thus connects Mercury's serpent staff (emblem of power and healing) with that of Moses, whose brazen caduceus devours Pharaoh's serpent (Exod. 7:9–15). Perhaps more to the point, the serpentine staff of Mercury – much like that of Aesculapius – evokes the Mosaic serpent of brass upon a pole that saved all penitent murmurers from the serpent's fiery venom in the Israelite camp (Num. 21:5–9). See also Virgil (Aeneid 4:242–46), Pliny (29.12.54), and Macrobius (Saturnalia 1.19.7–18). According to Macrobius (Saturnalia

Those also that were notable for their Adventures came into the Roll of the Deified. Among these, the Hercules of the Pagans, may be our Joshua, or Sampson. In short, Prudentius observes it,

Et tot Templâ Deûm Romæ quot in urbe Sepulchra
*Heroum numerare licet.*²⁰⁰

And thus, when Men died, they were made Immortal Gods. For which Reason, the Gods of the Pagans may be called, Methim; Psal. CVI.28. The Dead.

[416v] But anon they came to adore the Living too. The Chaldean and Persian Kings, would be adored as Gods, while | they were Alive. The Roman Emperors were infamous above all others for this Affectation. The first of them, had Altars by some of his Admirers consecrated unto him. The next, tho' he would not be called, Lord, was willing to be treated as a God; And the Title of Σεβαστος was given him. The vilest Monsters of them, went the furthest this Way; your Caligula's and your Domitians. Tertullian charges it on the People in general; Majore formidine, et callidiore timiditate Cæsarem observatis, quam ipsum de Olympo Jovem. Yea, Justinian himself, uses, Numen nostrum, and such like Titles, in his Constitutions. Others of an Inferiour Quality had this Honour before they died: Paul and Barnabas, were esteemed Gods, by the Men of Lystra. And, Dr. Edwards, notwithstanding the Use which the Criticks make, of the, Semoni Deo Sango, found on a Statue brought to Light in the last Age; yett gives many Reasons, to confirm the Truth of the Story, which the Fathers have given us, of the Statue erected for Simon the Sorcerer.²⁰¹

1.9.11–12), Janus, who is associated with Mercury, is by the Phoenicians portrayed as a coiled serpent swallowing its own tail. This iconic depiction represents the universe feeding upon itself, but always returning to itself again. This famous motif can be found on the Susanna Jayne headstone of 1776, in Marblehead, Massachusetts (see A. I. Ludwig, Graven Images 78). See also Mather's Zalmonah: The Gospel of the Brasen Serpent (1725). For the Renaissance debate about Moses as Hermes Trismegistus, see F. Yates's Giordano Bruno (1–46, 433–70) and F. Purnell's "Francesco Patrizi" and "Hermes."

But this Idolatry, the Worshipping of Men, my learned Friend supposes, to have been infused into our First Parents, when the Tempter said unto them, Ye shall be as Gods. This ha's inclined their Posterity, to worship some of their own kind; This ha's produced this vile Ambition in the Children of Men.²⁰²

Unto what a Variety of senseless Impiety, the Idolatry of the Nations, did proceed, is a melancholy Story. But a large Exhibition of it, not having any direct Subserviency to the Illustration of the Sacred Oracles, it shall be superseded.²⁰³

Q. Strange Gods. Tis very Strange that there should be any such found in Jacobs Family? v. 2.

A. Tis possible that Jacob now may have discovered, that Rachel had gott & kept her Father Labans Idols.

Or, there might be Idols which the Sons of Jacob had gott among the Spoils of the Shechemites.²⁰⁴

Q. Of Jacobs Family, tis said, They gave unto Jacob, all the Strange Gods which were in their hand, and all their Ear-rings which were in their Ears; and Jacob hid them – What were those Ear-rings? v. 4.

A. There were Two Sorts of Ear-rings. One sort were chiefly worn by the Women, for Ornaments; which are not meant in this Place. Another sort were esteemed sacred, & Men wore them as an Amulet for to præserve them from do homage with greater dread and intenser reverence to Caesar, than Olympian Jove himself" (ANF 3:41). Byzantine Emperor Justinian I (483–565 CE) collected and codified the Civil Laws of Rome in his Institutiones Divi Caesaris Iustiniani Quibus Iuris Civilis (c. 528–34 CE). Mather takes exception to such honorific titles as "Our Gods" because they are akin to blasphemy; but then he demurely refers to the citizens of Lystra (Lyconia), who deemed Paul and Barnabas gods and called them "Jupiter" and "Mercurius" (Acts 14:8–12) for making a cripple walk again (Acts 14:8–12). John Edwards (and Mather with him) prefers to interpret the Latin inscription "Semoni Sanco Deo" (found in 1574 on a marble fragment in the island of the River Tiber) as a confirmation of Justin Martyr's story about Simon Magus, the Samaritan magician (Acts 8:9–18), whom the Romans supposedly honored with just such a statue and inscription reading "Simoni Deo Sancto"; i.e., "To Simon the holy God." In Mather's time, the debate about the inscription's true identity centered on whether the marble fragment really referred to Simon Magus or only to the Sabine god Semo Sancus. All of this detail and more can be found in Justin Martyr's First Apology of Justin (ch. 26, note 4; ch. 56) and Dialogue with Trypho (ch. 120) – both in ANF (1:171, 182, 260).

Harm. It may be, some Figures were engraved upon them, under a certain Constellation, after the Manner of Talismans, which the Idolatrous People imagined, to have great Efficacy in them. Among the Carthaginians, not only the Freeman, but their very Slaves, had their Ears loaded with Rings. Plautus in Penulo, speaking of the Punic Slaves, introduces Milphio thus discoursing with Agorastocles. I suppose, these Fellowes are troubled with no such things as Fingers? AG. Why so? M. Because they carry their Rings in their Ears. These Rings hung down from the Top of the Ear, as appears from Austin, in whose time that Superstition still continued among some African Christians. His Words are these, Epist. 73. Execranda autem superstitio ligaturarum, in quibus etiam in aures virorum in summis ex unâ parte auriculis Suspensæ deputantur, sed ad serviendum Dæmonibus adhibetur. These Rings, in his Questions upon this Place, he calls, The Phylacteries of Idols. The Servants of Jacob seem here, to have carried such a Sort of Rings in their Ears, which he commanded them to lay aside, as consecrated unto Strange Gods.²⁰⁵

Q. Deborah went for to attend Rebeckah, when she was married unto Isaac. How did she come into Jacobs Family? v. 8.

A. It puzzles the Jewes, this Quæstion does. R. Solomon so solves it; That Rebeckah having promised Jacob, when he went away, to send for him, (Gen. 27.45.) she performed this Promise by Deborah, whom she sent unto Padan-aram, to invite him home; and in the Return, she died here.

But we may rather suppose, That Jacob had been at his Fathers House, before this Time; and Rebeckah being Dead (whether before or after, tis uncertain,) Deborah was desirous to live with his Wives, who were her Countrey Women; And that her Death is here mentioned, (tho' we read nothing of Rebeckahs), to give an Account, how the Oak here, in after times, came to be called, Allon-Bacuth.²⁰⁶

Q. How comes Jacob now to be called Israel? was he not so before? v. 10.

A. It was only an Angel, who had formerly foretold, that he should be called Israel. [Gen. 32.28.] But God reserved the Declaration of it, from His own Mouth, until this Time, when the Shechinah now appearing, ratified, & fulfilled what had been spoken, by the Angel.

Thus Jerom understood it. Dudum nequaquam ei Nomen ab Angelo imponitur. Sais he, This Name was not imposed on him heretofore by the Angel; He only foretold that God would impose it on him. That therefore, which was there promised, that it should be, we are here taught, was fulfilled.

The Shechinah now appeared, as it seems, with great Lustre, over his Head, while he lay prostrate on the Ground.²⁰⁷

Q. The Pillar of Stone, called Bethel, by Jacob, when hee poured a Drink-offering, with Oyl, upon it; have you any Remembrances of it, in Pagan Antiquitie? v. 14.

A. 'Tis thought by some, That the Custome of erecting Stones and Pillars, among the Pagans, came from Jacobs doing that Action. [Gen. 28.18. and 35.14.] Yea, that the Βαetylοι and Βαetylια, Lapides Bætulici, in Use among them, had their Name, from the Bethel of Jacob. Scaliger shewes, how near the Resemblance was between them. Yea, Arnobius, and Clemens Alexandrinus, take a most particular Notice, how they did use to Anoint the Stones thus employ'd. It may bee Quæried, whether the Custome of Anointing Stones, for Land-marks, mentioned by Herodotus and others, were not of this Original?²⁰⁸

²⁰⁷ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:121–22). The second-hand citation from St. Jerome is extracted from Patrick's annotation on Gen. 35:10 (Commentary 1:22).

²⁰⁸ Mather consulted (either directly or indirectly) Samuel Bochart's Geographia (pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 2, col. 707–08). Philo of Byblos relates out of Sanchoniathon's Phoenician history that Uranus married his sister Gé, who gave birth to four sons, including "Baituloi" (Baetylus); "the god Uranus devised the Baetylia [Baitulia], having contrived to put life into stones" (Eusebius's Præparatio evangelica 1.10.16, line 3 and 1.10.23, line 3; 1.10.36c, 37d). "Lapides Bætulici" suggests "anointed" or "unctuous stones" which, Sanchoniathon argues, were dedicated to Uranus and Kronos. In his Animadversiones ad Eusebiam Chronicon (Thesaurus Temporum [1606], p. 198), the great philologist Joseph Justus Scaliger points at the similarity between the unctuous stones of Uranus and Kronos and those that Jacob anointed as a holy place, or house of God (Bethel), upon which the lowest rung of Jacob's ladder (Gen. 28:18–19) seemed to rest. Arnobius (Adversus gentes 1.39), in ANF (6:423), tells us that he himself worshiped anointed stones before his conversion; and Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.24.164–65) points out similarities between Apollo's statue at Delphi as an anointed pillar or column on which the first fruits and tithes were hung, and the pillar of light in the camp of the Israelites. Finally, Herodotus (3.8) mentions that among the Arabians, men who enter into a compact with each other draw blood from their hands and with a piece of wool anoint seven stones as a witness of their pledge. Much helpful information on Jacob's anointing of stones and parallel rites among pagans is also furnished by John Marsham (Chronicon Canon, Seculum IV, pp. 55–56).

[418v] | I might, on this Occasion, mention several other Usages, that seem derived from the Patriarchs, to the Pagans.

The Vailing of the Bride. [Gen. 24.65.] This was imitated both by Græcians, & by Romans.

The Closing of a Dying Persons Eyes, by one that was most Beloved of him. [Gen. 46.4.] Homer, and other ancient Writers, mention this, as the last Office of the dearest Friendship.²⁰⁹

Yea, Whereas tis said, the Sons of Jacob, came out of his Thigh, [Gen. 46.26.] tis judged, by some learned Men, that this Oriental Manner of Speaking, not being understood by the Greeks, they therefore thence made the Fable of Bacchus being born of Jupiters Thigh.²¹⁰

Q. When the Midwife said unto Rachel, Fear not, thou shalt have this Son also; Unto what might she refer? v. 17.

A. She seems to comfort Rachel, with her own Prædiction. [Gen. 30.24.]²¹¹

Q. The Pillar on Jacobs Grave? v. 20.

A. This is the First Monument and Epitaph, in Memory of the Dead, that we read of, in the World.²¹² 3457.

Q. What Remark to be made, on the first Time of Moses's calling Jacob here, by the Name of Israel? v. 21.

A. Some of the Jewes will have it, That Moses here calls him Israel, because he bore the Death of his Beloved Wife, with admirable Patience and Submission.²¹³

But presently followes, The Sons of Jacob were Twelve. Their Number being now compleated, by the Birth of Benjamin, after which he had no more Children, Moses thought good here to enumerate them. And they being all,

²¹¹ Mather cribs the whole paragraph from Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:122).

²¹² The rhetorical question (v. 20) is misleading, because it was Jacob who placed a pillar on Rachel's grave – not on his own. According to Benjamin of Tudela (Itinerary, sec. 25, p. 40), Rachel's pillar consists of "eleven [sic] stones, corresponding to the number of the sons of Jacob. Upon it is a cupola resting on four columns, and all the Jews that pass by carve their names upon the stones of the pillar."

²¹³ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:122–23). The issue of the Pentateuch's interchangeable use of Jacob's two names is covered at some length in R. Manasseh ben Israel's Conciliator, Part 1, Question 57, pp. 82–84.

save Benjamin, born before he had the Name of Israel, tis well enough to call him Jacob.²¹⁴

Q. Why are the Generations of Esau, so particularly noted? v. 1.

A. It might be, to show how effectual his Fathers Blessing was.

But Maimonides thinks, It was also to prevent the Destruction of any of the Family of Esau, but only those of Amalek, who descended from the First-born of Esau, by a Concubine, the Sister of Lotan, an Horite, one of the ancient Inhabitants of Seir. His Descendents were to be destroy'd, by an express Præcept, for a special Offence; [Exod. XVII.] But Heaven here takes Care of the rest, by distinguishing them thus exactly from him; that they might not perish under the Name of Amalekites.²¹⁵

Q. How comes Bashemath, the Wife of Esau, the Daughter of Ishmael, to have her Name changed? v. 3.

A. She had been called, Mahalah, [Gen. 28.9.] which signifies, Infirm, and, Sickly. But she is now called, Bashemath, which signifies, Fragrant. This Name was more pleasing to Esau, and it may be, he thought, it would be more pleasing to his Father. Or, she might grow more Healthy after Marriage; or, perhaps have Two Names given her at the First.²¹⁶

Q. What were the Mules, which Anah found in the Wilderness, as hee fed the Asses of Zibeon, his Father? v. 24.

A. As very Men, as You and I, if I been't mistaken. I know very well, What Interpreters, Jewish as well as Christian, tell us, concerning this Anahs being the first, who either by Accident, or by Contrivance, litt upon that Mungril Creature, A Mule; I shall, but Abuse your Patience by repeating their Conjectures on this business, as much as I should your Charity, by Relating, what they Report, from Anah the Brother of Zibeon in one Verse, & Anah the Son of Zibeon in another, that Zibeon like a Wretch lay with his own Mother, & had Anah by that Incestuous & Unnatural Conjunction.²¹⁷

²¹⁵ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:123). Maimonides (Guide 3.50.380–82). Exod. 17:13–14.

²¹⁶ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:123).

But such Incomparable Writers as Bochart, will convince you, that the mountainous Parts of Seir, where our Anah dwelt, was a Countrey no wayes famous for Mules. Wherefore, I rather incline to the Opinion of Bochartus, and of Saubertus; who mentains, That the עֲמִי here, are the same that elsewhere are called /עֲמִי/ of which Variety in writing the same Name, the Scriptures have many Instances. Now these Emim, were the well-known Giants, which inhabiting the Horrean Regions in the Neighbourhood, struck Terror, as their Name signifies, into all the Neighbours, till the Posterity of Esau vanquish'd them. Many Passages in the Bible intimate this Matter. Well, our Anah, is here distinguished from another so called, by a notable Exploit which hee performed, for the Service of his Countrey. Hee Found, that is, Hee Surprised & Assaulted, the Emims, those Terrible Giants, with which the Neighbourhood were infested; By this Heroic Act, hee signalized himself, while the Prince, his Father, employ'd him, in managing and ordering his Estate in the Wilderness, which according to the Use of those Times, lay more in Cattel, than in any other Substance.²¹⁸

Q. Must we then acquiesce in this Account?

A. Dr. Wagenseil, a late learned Writer, (who yett would have inclined unto this Opinion, if one thing had not hindred him,) inclines now to another Opinion; which is, That the Jemim here may mean some Herb, or Plant, called, Ἰαμειν, which Word, the LXX retain, as not knowing how to translate it. And Aben-Ezra affirms, That many Interpreters have understood it so. Dr. Patrick looks on this to be the most probable Conjecture.²¹⁹

3461.

Q. That Passage, about, Kings Reigning in the Land of Edom, before there Reigned any King over the Children of Israel; is improved by some, to argue, that Midrash passage argues that it was Anah who discovered how mules are the offspring of a horse and an ass. The same is affirmed in the Targum Jonathan ben Uzziel (Walton 4:70) and by Ibn Ezra out of Saadiah Gaon (Commentary 1:339–40).

Moses did not write this History; the Passage being too late for Moses's Time? v. 31.

A. Not at all. Moses had a little before this, [Gen. 35.11.] mentioned, the Promise of God unto Jacob, That Kings should come out of his Loins. He now observes it, as a remarkable Exercise for the Faith of the Israelites, That Esau's Posterity should have so many Kings, whereas, there had not been any King in Israel, when this Book was written, or indeed, of a long Time after.²²⁰

The Dukes of Edom, according to their Families, here enumerated, were the Heads of Different Families, & Lived in several Places, & it is probable, Reigned at the same time in several Parts of the Countrey; so that we need not here imagine, a long Succession, extending beyond the Days of Moses.

Dr. Lightfoot ha's a Remark; Eight Kings of Edom there were, before Israel had any; Answerably Eight Kings of Israel, kept the Kingdom of Edom.²²¹

²²¹ This annotation appears neither in John Lightfoot's A Few, and New Observations (1642) 17–18, nor in its later incarnation The Harmony, Chronicle, and Order of the Old Testament (1647), but is probably buried somewhere in Lightfoot's voluminous The Whole Works (1822–25), in 13 volumes.

The Scripture having dispatch'd the Story of Esau, the Hater of his Brother, who lost his Birthright by his own Fault, now comes to Joseph, the Hated of his Brethren, who got his Birthright by the Fault of another.²²²

Q. What was the Evil Report, that Joseph carried unto his Father against his Brethren? v. 2.

A. Joseph, joins in Company, with the Sons of the Handmaids; for Leah's Children cared little for him or them. Among them, instead of Respect, hee found Hardship; for they made him, as their Servant. So may wee read the Text, And hee was a Servant with the Sons of Bilhah & Zilpah. This Evil Report of the Usage hee found from his Brethren, hee carried unto his Father. And the Badge of Respect wherewith his Father hereupon Invested him, did but procure him the greater Hatred of his Brethren. Only Reuben sought his Welfare, tho' hee had gott his Birthright. A Sign that Reuben was become a Penitent.²²³

Q. Why must Joseph be quartered with the Sons of Bilhah? v. 2.

A. Bilhah might be look'd upon as his Mother, now Rachel, upon whom she waited, was Dead. The Sons of Zilpah, were thought also to have less æmulation for him, than the Sons of Leah: And therefore, they are next mention'd.

But we may see, how Humane Prudence fails. Reuben and Judah, had more Kindness for Joseph, than any of the rest.²²⁴

Q. For what, was Joseph's Party-coloured Coat? v. 3.

A. Some think, t'was given him by his Father, as a Badge of Reuben's Birthright now devolved on him.²²⁵

²²² Mather cribs his paragraph from John Lightfoot's commentary on Gen. 37, in A Few, and New Observations (1642) 18.

²²³ This paragraph is extracted from Lightfoot's A Few, and New Observations (1642) 18. Mather's reinterpretation of the specific nature of Joseph's "evil report" casts a much more benign light on what caused the tension between Joseph and his brothers. If Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:246–47) does justice to the speculations of Mather's peers, then Joseph's report included such charges as bestiality, sodomy, fornication, and violating the Noachide proscription against eating the flesh of live animals. See Genesis Rabbah (LXXXIV:7); Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 38, p. 291); Rashi, in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis (3:462).

²²⁴ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:125).

²²⁵ John Lightfoot (on Gen. 37), in A Few, and New Observation (1642) 18.

And, if you please you may remark the Difference between Reuben & Joseph in Point of Chastitie. Reuben, the first-born, sollicit his Fathers Wife, and Joseph, become the First-born, refuses his Masters.²²⁶ 3463.

Q. But what Sort of Coat was it?

A. Braunius, (De Vestib. Sacerd. Hebr. L.1. c. 17.) hath proved, That the Hebrew Word, Passim, signifies, A long Garment down to the Heels or Ancles, & with long Sleeves down to the Wrists; which had a Border at the Bottom, and a Facing at the Hands, of another Colour, different from the Garment.²²⁷ 3286.

Q. The Reason, why Jacob loved Joseph more than his Brethren, is it sufficiently express'd in our Version, when it is said, Because he was the Son of his old Age? v. 3.

A. If his Love had been only founded on this Reason, he must have loved Zebulon as well as Joseph, since he was of the same Age; and he must have loved Benjamin more, since he was born sixteen Years after him.

The late Essay for a New Translation of the Bible, observes; That the Hebrew Text only saies, Because he was Son of the Elders or Senators; that is, He was their Disciple, according to the Style of the Hebrewes. Wherefore the Samaritan, the Persian, the Arabic Versions, and the Chaldee Paraphrase, render it, Because he was a wise & prudent Son. And it seems, it might be yett better translated, Because he was wise as a Senator. Wisdom is a Quality, which makes Parents love their Children, & præfer them to their Brethren.²²⁸

²²⁸ Charles Le Cène (c. 1647–1703), Huguenot refugee in England and Holland after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1685), published Projet d'une nouvelle version française de la Bible (1696). Part 1 of this work appeared in an imperfect English translation with the title An Essay for a New Translation of the Bible (1701) and went through at least three English editions (1702, 1707, 1727). An Arminian, Le Cène devoted himself to devising an accurate and reliable translation of the Bible into French and to redress the problems of the Geneva version (1560). He also published his father's complete notations in Projet along with his own French translation of the Bible, La sainte Bible, nouvelle version française (1741). However, the Walloon church synod censured the work a year later (DNB). Mather's commentary on this issue (Gen. 37:3) is extracted from Hugh Ross's defective translation of Le Cène's Essay (1701), part 2, ch. 10, pp. 200–01. For the Samaritan, Arabic, Chaldee (Onkelos), and Persian Versions, see Walton (1:163; 4:71).

Q. The Sun and the Moon, making Obeisance to Joseph, in his Dream: was there any Fulfilment of it, besides that in Gen. 46.29? v. 9.

A. If you'll turn to Josh. 10.13. you'll see the Sun and the Moon, do Obeisance to a Son of Joseph.²²⁹

3464.

Q. But How could Joseph's Mother make Obeisance to him, when she was dead? v. 9.

A. Bilhah was his Mother.

Chrysostom carries it thus; Tho' his Mother were dead, yett Jacob, whom she had been One withal, did make Obeisance to him. She did it in what he did. They fetch hence an Admonition; That married People should be so united in Love and in Will, that what one does may be said to be done by the other.²³⁰ 3465.

Q. What might be a special Design of, Reuben, in seeking to deliver Joseph? v. 22.

A. Perhaps, by this Peece of good Service, to Reconcile himself unto his Father, whom he had grievously offended by defiling his Bed.²³¹

Q. Is the Merchandise of the Ishmaelites rightly translated? v. 25.

A. The Word, Necoth, which we render, Spicery, signifies a particular sort of a Drug; Bochart proves, that Aquila had Reason to render it Storax. And Seri, he proves, cannot signify, Balm, as we render it; but Rosin, or Turpentine. And J. H. Ursin ha's proved, That the Hebrew Word, Loth, signifies, Laudanum.

And accordingly, Gen. 43.11. should be also corrected. And for Honey, read, Dates. [The Reason see, on 2. Chron. 31.5.]²³²

²²⁹ Mather sees in Joseph's dream an allegorical foreshadowing of the miraculous arrest of the sun and moon in Joshua's battle against the Amorites (Josh 10:12–14).

²³¹ The paragraph is extracted from Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:127).

²³² Mather's primary source is Samuel Bochart's Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 12, col. 532–33); Aquila's paraphrase appears in Origen's Hexaplorum quae supersunt in Genesim monitum [PG 15. 284]. See also Bochart (Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 51, col. 628–29). Mather also refers to Johannes Henricus Ursinus (1608–67), a learned German humanist, Orientalist, encyclopedist, and superintendent at Ratisbon (Regensburg). Mather owned a copy of Ursin's Analectorum Sacrorum libri sex, editio secunda (1668–69) [AAS # 0557].

Q. What Remarkable was there, in Jacobs having brought unto him, the Party-coloured Coat of Joseph, dipp'd in the Blood of a Kid? v. 32.

A. A Remarkable Retaliation of Providence. Jacob had once Deceived his Father, with the Flesh & Skin of a Kid; & the Garments of his Brother. And now, his Children Deceive him, with the Blood of a Kid, having dipp'd the Garments of their Brother in it.

It is also Remarkable, That as the Shewing of Josephs Coat, here caused his Fathers Sorrow, so the Showing of his Coat afterwards unto his Master caused his own.²³³

Q. Who are the Midianites, that sell Joseph, into Egypt? v. 36.

A. In the Hebrew, the Name is, Medanim, a Distinct Name, from those in the Twenty Eighth Verse. They were a People derived of Medan, one of the Sons of Keturah, and Brother of Midian, [Gen. 25.2.] They, and the Midianites, lived near together in Arabia; not far from the Ishmaelites: who all joined together in this Caravan, and made one Society of Merchants, consisting of Medanites, and Midianites, and Ishmaelites.²³⁴

635.

Q. Wee find Joseph sold, in one Place unto Ishmaelites, in another Place unto Midianites. How, to Both?

A. Very well. Both were of the same Company. Yea, one People might bee call'd by Both Names.

Near Neighbourhood, might make Ishmaelites and Midianites, to share in the same Appellation. [See, Judg. 8.24, 26.]

Thus in the Gospel, the Gergesans, and Gadarens, are counted one People, because of such a Neighbourhood.

The Inhabitants of Arabia, had several Names, according to the Regions, wherein they were seated.

And on this Occasion, t'wil not bee amiss to observe, That as the Inhabitants of One Place have Several Names, in Scripture, so Several Places have One Name.

Some Assert, a double Ethiopia, one in Africa, one in Asia: and the latter Sort of Ethiopes was Moses's Wife, who is also called, a Midianites.

Thus, there is a Casarea, in Palestine, and another in the Lesser Asia.

There is an Antioch in Syria, in Pisidia, and in Caria.

There is a Babylon, in Chaldaea, and in Egypt.

²³³ See Gen. 27:15–19; 37:31–32; 39:12–16.

²³⁴ Mather extracts Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:128).

(There is, a Thebes, in Bæotia, in Egypt, and in Cilicia; an Heliopolis, in Egypt, in Cælosyria, and in Cilicia.) Add hereto, that One Place, may have Several Names. And so, a Woman of Canaan, may well enough bee called, a Syrophænician, without our being driven to read the Text, A Woman of (the greater) Cana, which was a Town in Phænicia.

Thus one eminent Mountain, is called, Zion, and Moriah, and Hermon, and Sirion, (which last Name, was given it by Sidonians.) It was indeed, a long Ledge of Hills, going thro' Palæstine, & a good Part of Arabia. Where to Gilead, Seir, & Lebanon (the famous Alps of the Holy Land) may bee annumerated.

Mount Sinai, was also Mount Horeb. And Mount Nebo (the Arabian Par-nassus) had its two Tops, Pisgah, and Hor; and it was also Named Mount Abarim.

Thus, The Salt-Sea, the Sea of the Desart, & the Sea of the Plain; are all so many Names, for the one Dead Sea, of Sodom. The Sea (or Lake) of Cinnereth, of Genesareth, of Tiberias, & of Galilee, are but one Lake.

Thus, Galilee, and Decapolis; Sichem, & Sychar, Egypt and Sihor; differ no more, than Sparta and Lacedæmon, Troy and Ilium, Thracia and Romania.²³⁵

²³⁵ Whatever his ultimate source for his annotations here, Mather would have found much information on these issues in Samuel Bochart's oft-reprinted Geographia Sacra (1646, 1674, 1707) and in Edward Wells's three-volume An Historical Geography of the Old Testament (1711–12).

727.

Q. What Remarkable Providence of Heaven, do you see, in the Disasters befalling of Judah's family?

A. Judah had been unnatural to his Brother, and behold, Hee is now punished for it, in his own Children.

And Josephs not sinning with his Mistress, when Judah sinn'd with his Daughter-in-Law, do further sett off this Matter.²³⁶

Q. What may be the Reason, why Moses mentions; the Absence of Judah from home, when his Child was born? v. 5.

A. It is not easy to guess the Reason of it. Perhaps tis (as Dr. Patrick thinks) to show, why she gave the Name to this, and to her former Son (whereas he himself named the first;) Because he was not at home, when they were born.²³⁷

Q. What special Aggravation was there in the Sin of Onan? v. 10.

A. This made the Sin, the more heinous; He acted against the Divine Promise made unto Abraham, concerning the Multipling of his Seed; And especially against the Belee of the Promise of the Messiah, that Seed, for which all Good Men longed.²³⁸

Q. What was the Bracelet, which was demanded as a Pledge from Judah? v. 18.

A. The Signet & the Staff appertained unto the Hand. So probably, as Dr. Gell argues, the Bracelet. Pagnin renders the Word, Frustum panni parvum. Why may it not be rendred, An Handkercher? Meursius, in his Glossarum Græco-barbarum, interprets the Word, ὠραριον εκμαγειον του προστωπου and, χειρομακτρον· which Isidore turns Manuale, and that is, in English, An Handkercher.

Indeed, Papias understands it for to be a, Stola Sacerdotalis, or long Garment which sacred Persons wore as an Ensign of Dignity. And so, as in the Next Chapter, Joseph is famous, for leaving his Garment, that he might keep his

Q. A Remark on the Punishment of Adultery here called for? v. 25.

A. I am willing to transcribe the Words of Monsr. Saurin. “Our Age, of all others, has been most indulgent to the Crime of Adultery, as it has been most Fertile in the Exemples thereof. It looks, as if Humane Laws would make amends to Christians, for the Severity of the Gospel, upon that Article; and that, in Proportion, as the Divine Legislator condemned for Adulterers, even such as were guilty only in Thought, Humane Lawgivers affected to pardon, even those that really committed the said Crime. In old times, they had a different Notion of this Sin, & punished it with greater Rigour. The Egyptians cutt off the Noses of such as were guilty of it, after having given them a thousand Bastinado’s. The Legislator Tenedius commanded that their Bodies should be cutt in sunder. Plato and Solon condemn them to Death. Augustus, Domitian, Severus, Aurelian, & several Roman Emperors, were no less rigorous. The Anglo-Saxons while they were yett Heathen, were more severe upon this Head, than since their Conversion to Christianity; And those that follow the Laws of Mahomet, than they that profess to be the Disciples of Jesus Christ.”²⁴⁰

²³⁹ Both paragraphs are excerpted from An Essay toward an Amendment of the Last English-Translation of the Bible (1659) 176–77, by Robert Gell, D. D. (1595–1665), Anglican divine and minister of the parish of St. Mary Aldermary (London). Gell’s Latin citation signifies “a little piece of cloth” (or “cloak”) and originates in Biblia Hebraica; eorumdem Latina interpretatio (1584), on Gen. 38:18, by Sanctes Pagninus (c. 1466–1541), an Italian Dominican, renowned Hebraist, and professor of Oriental literature at the Pontifical College in Rome. Gell cites Ioannis Meursi glossarium Graecobarbarum (1610) 795, by Johannes Meursius, aka. Jan van Meurs (1579–1639), Dutch classical scholar and professor of Greek and history at Leiden. The Greek citation is from Meursius’s Glossarium (795). Mather’s second-hand reference to “Isidore” is either to St. Isidore of Seville (c. 560–636), archbishop of Seville, or to St. Isidore of Pelusium (d. c. 450). However, neither of these two authors use the term “keiromaktron” or “manuale” (handkerchief). According to the Chaldean translation of Genesis in the Complutensian Polyglot, Judah’s pledge to Tamar was indeed a “handkerchief” (Poole, Works 3:309). The Apostolic Father Papias (c. 60–130), bishop of Hierapolis (Asia Minor), calls Judah’s פְּתִיל [pathiyl], which the KJV renders “bracelets,” a “priestly gown.” But this supposed rendering is nowhere to be found in the surviving fragments of Papias. Whatever Gell’s source, Rashi’s interpretation comes close to that offered by Papias and renders the Hebrew original as “cloak, with which you cover yourself” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 3:484); Ramban, however, objects that Judah would not have relinquished his outer garment, nor his fringed Tzitzith; pathiyl should therefore signify “a string” or “a small scarf . . . wound around part of the head” (Commentary 1:474).

²⁴⁰ The passage in quotation marks is – with minor variations in spelling and punctuation – from Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXXV, 1:265–66). Diodorus Siculus (1.60.2–5, 1.78.4–5) reports that the Ethiopian King Actisanes, who overthrew the Egyptian ruler Amasis (c. 526 BCE), punished a variety of crimes by cutting off the culprits’ nose and by banishing them to Rhinocolura (“Nose-clipped”), a settlement on the edge of the desert. Furthermore, men who raped a “free married woman” were emasculated; those who committed adultery with a female’s consent received “a thousand blows with the rod,” whereas his partner in crime had

Q. What might be the Burning, proposed by Judah, for Thamar? v. 25.

A. If it were, Burning at a Stake, it was a Punishment that was not then commonly used; but inflicted, as our Selden speaks, more seu lege aliquâ singulari.

But there are those, who think, That by Burning here, is meant no more, but Branding her in the Forehead, and so marking her for a Whore.²⁴¹

Q. Judah; Did he espouse Thamar? v. 26.

A. Several Christian Authors are of the Opinion, that he did. Selden cites a Passage from one Father Paul, who says, “It was necessary in this mystical Action, that Judah should of his own Accord Correct and Banish that Irregular Instinct of Concupiscence, by another more honourable Motion, even that of Marriage; her nose cut off to deprive her of her “comeliness.” Saurin refers to Ludovici Caelii Rhodigini lectionum Antiquarum (1516, 1620), lib. 10, cap. 2, an often reprinted history of Egyptian and Chaldaic mysteries, by the Italian philosopher Ludovicus Coelius Rhodiginus, aka. Ludovico Recherius, Ricchieri de Rovigo (1450–1520). In this work (500), Rhodiginus reproduces the image of a medal that commemorates the beheading of Tenedius’s own son for adultery; the identity of Tenedius, however, remains unclear. Plato (De legibus 8.841d–e) is much more benign than Mather makes him out to be; the philosopher merely proposes that an adulterer should be excluded from public honors. Saurin (1:266, note 2) argues that in the margin of his annotated copy of Plato, there is a reference to “the law which condemns them to die.” According to Plutarch (Solon 23.1), Plutarch’s Lives (1:467), Solon “permitted an adulterer caught in the act to be killed; but if a man committed rape upon a free woman, he was merely to be fined a hundred drachmas” – twenty for enticement. In 17 BCE, Caesar Augustus decreed (Lex Julia de Adulteriis Coercendis) that adultery be punished with banishment and confiscation of property. Fathers were allowed to kill their daughters along with their partners; and husbands were required to divorce their adulterous wives and could kill their spouses’ partners in crime (See also Tacitus, Annales 3.24 and Lex Iulia de adulteriis 2.50). Saurin’s source for Roman Emperor Domitianus’s procedure in the cases of adultery is the Byzantine historian and grammarian of Constantinople, Joannes Zonaras (11th–12th c.), in Epitome historiarum, lib. 11 (3:58, lines 10–13). One of the six “Scriptores Historiae Augustae,” the Roman historian Spartianus compiled the life of Roman Emperor Marcus Julius Gessius Alexianus, aka. Alexander Severus (208–35 CE), in the problematic Scriptores Historiae Augustae. At any rate, Saurin here draws on John Selden’s Uxor Ebraica (1646), lib. 3, cap. 12, pp. 382 (esp. notes a and c). For Roman Emperor Lucius Dominius Aurelianus (214–75 CE), Saurin references Rhodiginus’s Lectionum Antiquarum (1620), lib. 10, cap. 5, p. 509. For information on the Anglo-Saxon administration of justice in cases of adultery, Saurin again lists as his source Selden’s Uxor Ebraica (1646), lib. 3, cap. 11, pp. 374–75. Selden relied on Bede’s Historiae ecclesiasticae gentis Anglorum (1643), lib. 5, cap. 20, pp. 438–50; on Sixtus Senensis (Bibliotheca sancta [1566], lib. 1, cap. 22); and on several other works. Finally, Saurin’s source for the Islamic Sharia is Alcorani textus universus (1698), part 4, p. 148, a Latin translation with annotations and refutations by the Italian priest and Oriental scholar Ludovicus Maraccius, aka. Marracci (1612–1700), professor of Arabic at the Collegia della Sapienza, Rome (CBTEL). The Al-Qur’ân (sura 24:2) stipulates that “The adulteress and adulterer should be flogged a hundred lashes each” in the presence of “a body of believers.”

²⁴¹ Mather’s source is Simon Patrick’s annotations on Gen. 38:24 (Commentary 1:131). The Latin passage from John Selden’s Uxor Ebraica (1646), lib. 3, cap. 12, p. 379, is translated by Patrick and reads, “By some singular Custom or Law” (1:131). See also John Selden’s De Jure Naturali (1640), lib. 7, cap. 5.

That Thamar the Daughter-in-Law of Judah, might be honoured with the legal Title of Mother, to comfort her in her Affliction.” And anon he adds; “I am fully of the Opinion, that Judah married Thamar at the time she appeared before the Tribunal; and that GOD inspired him with these thoughts, by a Forcible Check of Conscience, to make Reparation for the Fault he had committed.”

Interpreters are generally of another Opinion; because it is here said, He knew her again no more. But, some of the Jews take those Words in a quite opposite Sense, He did not cease to know her. The Word, Jasaph, may signify, To cease. Thus we render that of the Prophets; Num. XI.25. They did not cease. They among the Jews, who interpret it, He knew her again no more, say, he did marry her, but yett he thought fitt no more to ly with her. R. Bechai ha’s what looks this way, Monsr. Jurieu seems to think, That GOD would not suffer Thamar, from whose Race the Messiah was to come forth, to continue in a State of Infamy, and therefore would have legitimated by a State of Matrimony. Judah might learn by way of Revelation, that GOD had a singular hand in the Matter; and that there was a Mystery in the Will of Heaven, to have the Messiah proceed from a Race, that had so strange a Copulation in it. He married her, to make the Mother of the Messiah, a lawful Wife; But he knew her again no more, because of the Respect he bore unto the Impenetrable Conduct of Heaven. Judging it improper, that what had been brought about once, by the mysterious Providence of GOD, should be continued out of a Motive of Incontinency. Tis in reference to this, that the Jewish Tradition tells us, That both Judah and Thamar heard this Voice from Heaven, You are both pure in the Judgment of GOD; This is the Work of the Lord.²⁴²

Q. What may be the Meaning of the Midwives Words, upon the Birth of Pharez? v. 29.

²⁴² Mather extracts both paragraphs from Pierre Jurieu’s Critical History (1:202–03). The second-hand citation from, and translation of, “Father Paul, General of the Order of Camaldules” (via Jurieu 1:202) appears in its Latin original in John Selden’s De Jure Naturali (lib. 5, cap. 9, p. 585). Selden cites Paulus de Abbatia Pollicinii Calmaldulensis, a leading member of the monastic Order of Calmadules, N Italy. R. Bachya ben Asher (R. Bechai), in Torah Commentary (1:575), argues that “Having fulfilled the commandment of ensuring that the souls of Er and Onan would be reincarnated in Tamar’s children, Yehudah [Judah] refrained from treating her as his wife, even though technically, i.e. from a halachic point of view he could have had marital relations with her.” That the rabbinic commentators are greatly divided on this issue can be seen in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis (2:489–489a). Be that as it may, Mather refers to the Jewish tradition, according to which R. Samuel (Talmudic tractate Sotah 10b) – here cited by R. Bachya (Torah Commentary 1:575) – argues that Judah continued to have sexual relations with Tamar, because their union “had been approved by heaven” and thus “there was no point in discontinuing his marital relations with her.” This fortuitous interpretation is supported by the affirmation of a celestial voice (bath-coll) as recorded in the Targums ben Uziel and Hierosolymitanum (Gen. 38:25–26, in Walton (4:75).

A. How hast thou broke forth? She speaks as one astonished at this Eruption. It was without Exemple: The Novelty of it, made her break forth into this Exclamation.

Tho' a learned Anatomist affirms, That where Twins are of the same Sex, they are enwrapped in the very same Secundines; whereas those that are of a Different Sex, are separated by distinct Inclosures, [Fernelius to this Purpose. Physiol. L.VII. c. 12.]

Here accordingly, the stronger Son of the Two, more easily forces his Way thorough, before the other.²⁴³

That Expression, This Breach be upon thee, is q.d. Take thy Name from this Breach; be thou ever called Eruption, or, Breach.²⁴⁴

²⁴⁴ Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:131). Patrick's own source is Samuel Bochart's Hierozaicon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 30, col. 295).

Q. We read, Joseph found Grace in the Sight of his Master, and he served him. We find before this, Potiphar bought him; yea, Twice before this Potiphar is called, His Master. Why is it now said, He served him? v. 4.

A. One observes, that our Translators have not nicely distinguished between /שרה/ and /עבד/ By the latter Word, Joseph served his Master abroad in the Field, or in some Inferiour Employments. But his Master took him nearer to him, & would have him to serve him in a more Liberal & Generous Way. It may be rendred, He waited on him, or, He ministred unto him. Thus, the Souldiers who served the King in his Wars, have the Word, Guabad, for that. [1. Chron. XIX.19.] But their Life-guards, and Captains, have the Word, Sharath, for their Service. [1. Chron. XXVII.1.]

The Levites, from twenty five to fifty, being in a Warfare, have the former Word, used for their Service. And when their Jubilee discharged them from their Warfare, then they had a Ministry still continued, which the latter Word is used for.²⁴⁵

Q. May there be any special Mystery & Prophecy, in the Sollicitations of Josephs Mistress, for him to be unchast with her, & in what followed thereupon? v. 12.

A. I find One of the Ancients, (Prosper by Name,) descanting upon Joseph, as a notable Type of our Lord Jesus Christ, in many Instances. The very first Words, of the twenty sixth Chapter, in his Book, De Promissionibus & Predicationibus Dei, methinks have something of a Charm in them. Saies he, Mittitur Joseph à patre ad visitandos Fratres suos et Oves; Dicit et noster Joseph, Christus Dominus, Non sum missus, nisi ad Oves, quæ periere, domus Israel. But this Business of Josephs Mistress, our Prosper manages, with a little further Curiosity. He makes Idolatry, to be the Antitype of this Egyptian Lady; and behold, how he prosecutes it. Immisit et hæc oculos in Joseph nostrum; vidit speciosum formâ præ filijs hominum; eumque ad illicitum consensum, à vestimentis suis attraxit. Quæ sunt vestimenta nostri Joseph Christi, nisi Sancti Martyres? And he mentions the Martyrs of our Lord, as the Garments of our Joseph, under the Countenance of several Scriptures: particularly that, Gen. 49.11. He washed his Clothes in the Blood of Grapes. Accordingly, he saies, That when the Christians were dragg'd away to the Sacrifices of Idolatry, then our Lord is by the Egyptian Lady drag'd by the Garments unto the Abhorr'd Unchastity. Prisons, Tortures, all Sorts of Punishments follow on the Refusal. But our Lord left His Garments (quoth Prosper) when He said unto His Disciples, Fear not them that kill the Body; and they say, For thy Sake we are killed all the Day long.²⁴⁶

²⁴⁶ In his De promissionibus et praedictionibus Dei (cap. 26, § 36; cap. 27, §§ 38–39) [PL 51. 753B, 0755A], St. Prosper Tiro of Aquitaine argues that “Joseph was sent to his brothers and his sheep; and our Joseph, Christ the Lord, said, ‘I am sent to none other than my sheep, the House of Israel, who are lost.’” St. Prosper makes Potiphar’s wife the prototype of idolatry, arguing, “she too has set her eyes on our Joseph; she has seen that he is handsome in appearance above the sons of men, and she has attracted him to a forbidden union with her garments. What are the garments of our Joseph, the Christ, but the holy martyrs?” Matt. 10:28, Luke 12:4; Ps. 44:22, Rom. 8:36.

Q. The Captain of the Guard? v. 4.

A. Mr. Pyles observes, That the Lieutenant of this Royal Prison, being Potiphar, the very Master who had made Joseph a Prisoner, was by this time so well informed of Josephs Case, as to be convinced of his Innocency, as to the Crime he laid him in for; Tho' to conceal the Dishonour of his Wife, he thought it proper still to confine him there. Q. It was said unto the Butler, Pharaoh shall lift up thy Head, and Restore thee, to thy Place. What is the Meaning of that Expression, To lift up the Head? v. 13.

A. To Lift up the Head, was as much as, To Account, or, To Reckon. Their Manner was, to cast up Accounts with Pins, or Nails, that were stuck in a Table with Holes; and these Pins were called, Heads; by the Lifting up whereof, & removing them from one Hole to another, they performed their Arithmetic. Thus, Pharaoh lifted up the Head of the Butler, & of the Baker, that is, Hee Reckoned with them, & then differently dealt with them, according to their Deserts. The same Phrase, occurs in Exod. 30.12. and Num. 1.2. To which answers, the Greek, Ανακεφαλαιουν, and the Latin, Recapitulare.²⁴⁹

²⁴⁷ This paragraph is excerpted from Thomas Pyle's A Paraphrase with Short and Useful Notes (1717), part 1, vol. 1, ch. 40, p. 231. After the dash, Mather skips the following passage from Pyle: "[Potiphar] having now the same or still greater Opinion of his Virtue and Prudence, committed the Management of the whole Prison-Office to him [Joseph]; and deliver'd the two foremention'd Prisoners to his Custody and Inspection."

²⁴⁸ Cribbed from Simon Patrick (Commentary 1:133).

²⁴⁹ Mather's source appears to be Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:259) and Works (3:330). "Anakephalaioyn" and "Recapitulare" respectively signify "to sum up" and "to punish, demote." In his "Note Book of Authors" (on Gen. 40:15), Mather identifies as his source Thomas Fuller's Pisgah-Sight of Palestine (1650), bk. 2, ch. 9, p. 200. Whatever passage Mather had excerpted from Fuller's geographical history, he evidently excised it during a later revision process.

Q. Pharaohs Baker, is the First, that ever wee read was executed; and what kind of Death did hee suffer at his Execution? v. 19.

A. Fernandius, I remember, finds him to bee crucified. I'l give you his own Words.

*Specialiter assignatur mortis genus, scilicet crucis, quod hinc colligitur quàm sit Antiquum, imò omnium primum videtur in sontes propositum tormenti genus, et hic primus legitur morte damnatus reus. Aves quoque (carnivoras utique; nam ideò Septuaginta et Chaldæus, comedent carnes tuas, quasi dicat, Dilaniando impactis unguibus,) convolantes in canistrum, crucis supplicium indicant: etsi enim apud Hebræos eo ipso Die deponerentur suspensi, tamen apud alias gentes expressè Iubeantur relinqui, usque ad putrefactionem, et lacerationem avium, ad majorem supplicij Horrorem.*²⁵⁰

²⁵⁰ Mather cites Commentarii in visiones veteris Testamenti (1617), visio quarta, sec. 3, col. 123–24, by Antonius Fernandius, aka. Antonio Fernández (c. 1558–1628), Portuguese Jesuit, professor of theology at Coimbra and Evora. Mather had access to this edition at Harvard (Catalogus [1723], p. 13) and also cites Fernandius's Commentary in Magnalia Christi Americana (1702), bk. 1, cap. 6, § 1, p. 24; see also K. B. Murdock's annotation in his edition of Magnalia (1977) 166 n5 and 417–18. At any rate, Fernandius comments on the execution of Pharaoh's baker: "He was specifically allotted a sort of death, namely that of the cross, and from this source one can deduce how ancient this kind of torment proposed for the guilty is – nay, how it seems to be the very first sort – and it is here that we read of the first defendant condemned to death. The birds, too (carnivores certainly, for this is why the Chaldean and the Septuagint, too, may almost say, 'they will eat your flesh,' by tearing it apart with thrusting talons), flocking to his wicker basket, indicate the punishment of the cross. For although among the Hebrews those who were hung up were taken down on the same day, among other tribes they were expressly ordered to be left until they rotted, and were torn apart by birds, that the horror of the punishment should be greater."

Q. A Remark on the Advancement of Joseph? v. 14.

A. Here is a Remarkable Passage, extracted from Justin the Epitomizer of Trogus Pompeius. “Joseph the youngest of his Brethren, had a Superiority of Genius, which made them to fear him, & which induced them to sell him unto foreign Merchants: who carried him into Egypt, where he practised the Magic Art, which rendred him very dear to the King. He had a great Sagacity in the Explanation of Prodigies and Dreams; There was nothing so Abstruse, either in Divine or Humane Things, to which he did not attain; so far, that he foretold a great Barrenness several Years before it happened. Egypt had perished by Famine, if Joseph had not advised the King to publish a Decree, whereby the People were ordered to make Provision for diverse Years. His Knowledge was so great, that the Egyptians hearkened to the Prophecies coming from his Mouth, as if they did not proceed from Man, but from God Himself.”

I agree with Monsr. Saurin, That tho’ an Historian inspired from GOD, needs not the Testimony of Authors guided by nothing but Humane Prudence, yett it is not altogether unprofitable to see those Places of Profane History, which agree with the Sacred Writings.¹

Q. What Remark may one make upon that Passage of the Lean Kine in Pharaohs Dream; when they had eaten them up, it could not be known, that they had eaten them? v. 21.

A. It was a curious Emblem, of a Grievous Famine; wherein the Barren Years consume the Growth of the Fertile: but this is not all; For herein is further also repræsented what happens in a Famine; That men Eat Greedily, but are not Satisfied; Because God breaks the Staff of Bread: [Lev. 26.26.] that is, (as Bochart expounds it,) He takes away its Nourishing Vertue.²

Q. To what Cause did Joseph direct Pharaoh, as the Cause of the Plenty and the Famine, in Egypt? v. 28.

¹ Both paragraphs are from Jacques Saurin’s Dissertations (Diss. XXXVI, 1:273). The passage in citation marks is Saurin’s translation from Marcus Iunianus Iustinus’s Historiarum Philippicarum in Epitomen (36.2.6–9), by Trogus Pompeius. For much the same see Heidegger’s Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (2:412, Exerc. XX, sec. 2, § 26).

² Simon Patrick’s annotations on Gen. 41:21 (Commentary 1:136). Patrick’s own source is Samuel Bochart’s Hieroicoicon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 41, col. 403–06).

A. If you mind his Discourse, you'l see, how frequently he leads his Royal Hearer unto God, as the First Cause of all.

It is observed by Pliny, [L. V. c. 9.] That when the Nile rose only Twelve Cubits, a Famine followed; when Thirteen, a great Scarcity; when Fourteen, they had a Good Year; when Fifteen a very Good; And if it rose to Sixteen, it made Delicias, a luxuriant Plenty; and the greatest Increase they ever knew, was to Eighteen Cubits. Now that this River should overflow so largely for Seven Years together, as to make a vast Plenty; and then, for the next Seven Years, not to overflow its Banks at all, or very little & so make a sore & long Famine, this (as Dr. Patrick notes) could be ascribed unto nothing but an extraordinary Hand of God; It was out of the Course of Nature; as much as it is unnatural for Oxen to devour one another.³

Q. Pharaohs giving a New Name to Joseph? v. 45.

A. It is a Passage which honest Mr. Terry ha's in his, Voyage to East-India.

"The Mogol never advanceth any, but he gives him a New Name, and this of some pretty Signification; as Pharaoh did unto Joseph, when he made him great in his Court. One he called, Asaph Chan, the Gathering Lord, (or the Rich one.) Another was called Mahobet Chan, The Beloved Lord. Another, Chan-Jahan, The Lord of my Heart. He called his Chief Physician, Mocrob-Chan, The Lord of my Health."⁴

On this Occasion I will mention an Observation of Thévenot's; which is, That all the fine Pieces of Antiquity remaining in Egypt at this Day, are attributed unto Joseph; And all that is Odious or Infamous, is attributed unto Pharaoh. But by this Pharaoh, you must understand him that oppressed the Israelites, & was drowned in the Red-Sea.⁵

Q. What was the Name of the Egyptian King, that Advanced Joseph? v. 45.

⁴ The citation is from A Voyage to East-India (1655), ch. 26, pp. 415, 416, by Edward Terry. His Voyage was expanded and reprinted several times and translated into French and Dutch (ODNB).

⁵ Mather here summarizes passages from Travels of Monsieur de Thévenot in the Levant (1687), part 1, ch. 5, p. 133, and ch. 9, p. 141, by Jean de Thévenot (1633–67), a French traveler and aristocrat, whose three journeys to Palestine, Egypt, Persia, and India took up several years. Translated into English by A. Lovell from the French original in three parts (1655, 1674, 1684), this popular account was reprinted several times. For a helpful assessment of Thévenot's importance, see also G. Sundeen, "Thévenot" (1–19).

A. Thro' the Unfaithfulness of the Priests, who had it committed unto their Charge, to Record the Memorables of their Countrey, the ancient History of Egypt, is confounded with abundance of Uncertainties.

According to Cappellus, the Eighteenth Dynastie of the Egyptian Kings, begins Nine Years, before Eusebius's Date for it; namely in the 107th Year of the Patriarch Jacob. The first in Order of it, was Amos, or Amosis; To his Reign are given 25 Years; according to this account, it was hee, by whom Joseph was advanced. Hee Dyed in the second Year of the Famine: To him succeeded Chebros, who Reigned 13 Years: To him, Amenophis, who Reigned 21; and under him, Jacob died. Unto him succeeded Mephres, according to Eusebius; But Manethon places after him, his Sister Amesses, or Amerses; to which hee gives 21 Years, & 9 Months. After this Reigned Methres, 12 Years. Mephramuthosis, 26; Thuthmosis, (or Thomsis) 9; Then followed, Amenophis, (otherwise called, Palmanothis, and Phamenophis) who Reigned 31 Years, & by some is accounted that Memnon, whose Image of Stone, at Thebes in Egypt; sounded like an Harp, when the Sun-beams, first in a Morning beat upon it, which is witnessed by many Authors of good Credit. After him came Orus, or, Horus, who Reigned 38 Years; and then Acenchres, who Reigned 12. Manetho maketh Acenchres, the Daughter of Orus, & giveth her 12 Years, and a Month. After her, hee brings in Rathotis, her Brother; to whom hee giveth 9 Years. But after Acenchres, Eusebius placeth Achoris, & gives to him 7 Years. To him succeeded Cenchris, the Twelfth King; who, oppressed the Israelites grievously, and continued 18 Years in his Tyranny, till an End was putt unto it, in the Red-Sea.⁶

Q. When Joseph gathered up all the Food, how did he proceed in it? v. 48.

A. He Bought the Fifth Part of all; which he might then do at a small Price, when there was an unusual Plenty.

It is also very probable, That he laid it up, as it was gathered, unthrash'd; That so there might be Food for the Cattel also. Thus the Vulgar, In manipulos reductæ segetes congregatæ sunt in horrea.

⁶ Most likely, Mather here draws on Commentarii et notae criticae in Vetus Testamentum (1689) by Ludovicus and Jacobus Cappellus, the famous French Hebraists, who extract their chronology of the Egyptian pharaohs from a fragment of Manetho's Aegyptiaca (Fragmenta, fragm. 50a, lines 1–25) surviving in Flavius Josephus's Against Apion (1.15). "Eusebius's Date" is that in Jerome's Hieronymi Chronicon, a Latin translation of Eusebius's Chronicon, which lists the names and reigns of the Egyptian rulers cited here: Pharaoh Amosis (c. 1724–c. 1699 BCE), the first ruler of the Diospolites of "the 18th dynasty" is followed by Chebros or "Chebron" (c. 1699–c. 1686 BCE). Next in succession is Amenophis (c. 1686–c. 1665 BCE), then Mephres (c. 1665–c. 1653 BCE) and so forth until the reign of "Chenchres" (c. 1527–c. 1512 BCE), during whose rule the Israelites' Exodus from Egypt is to have occurred (Chronicon 42–63). The dates and page references here given are those in the R. Pearce edition.

And what was laid up in the First Year of the Plenty, tis reasonable to think, was dispensed in the First Year of the Famine; and so on.⁷

3425.

Q. What might be the Conduct of Joseph, relating to the Selling of Corn in Egypt, which necessitated the Appearance of his Brethren before him? v. 6.

A. Joseph appointed, at what rates Corn should be sold, in every Part of the Countrey, and his Deputies observed his Orders.

He particularly ordered, That all Foreigners, should come to him, in the Royal City, where he resided; or, at least, he would have their Names all returned unto him, that he might speak with such as he thought fitt of them. He thought thereby, to gett the better Intelligence of their several Countreys; & be sure, to gett the Sight of his Brethren, who, he knew, must be constrained, for to come unto him.⁸

Q. The pretended Suspicion of Joseph, Yee are Spies; to see the Nakedness of the Land you are come: what might there be to render it plausible? v. 9.

A. T'was very plausible in that the Brethren of Joseph came from those Parts, by which alone Egypt is accessible on the Side of Asia. Saies Herodotus, L.3. c. 5. This is the only Place, where Egypt can be openly entred; where he relates at large, how Cambyzes invaded it, and marched with his Army this Way. It was on every Side secured from the Hostile Incursions of the Africans, if we may beleeve Diodorus Siculus, by large unpassable Desarts. The Sea, which lies open to the Northwards of it, is very shallow, & without Harbours; wherefore Egypt feared not an Invasion from that Quarter. Only on the Eastern Frontier, it lay open, and unguarded. For this reason, Sesostrys, to secure this Pass against the Irruptions of the Syrians and Arabians, fortified it with a Wall, fifteen Hundred furlongs in Length, reaching from Pelusium to Heliopolis. And upon the same Account perhaps, Neco the Son of Psammetichus, King of Egypt, drew a Trench from the Pelusiatic Arm of the Nile, to the Gulf of Arabia, endeavouring to Join the Mediterranean unto the Southern Sea.⁹

⁸ This paragraph is cribbed from Simon Patrick on Gen. 42:6 (Commentary 1:139).

⁹ Mather copies this paragraph from Jean LeClerc's Twelve Dissertations (1696), Diss. XII, pp. 309–10. Herodotus (3.5). Herodotus (3.1) relates how Cyrus's son Cambyzes II, ruler of Persia (530–c. 522 BCE), invaded Egypt to punish Amosis, king of Egypt, for the insult of sending him Nitetis, daughter of King Apries, as a bride instead of Amosis's own daughter. Diodorus Siculus (Bibliotheca historica 1.30–31) describes the lay of the land and how Egypt's natural defenses protect her from foreign invasion. According to Herodotus (2.102–110), legendary Sesostris (possibly Rameses II of the Nineteenth Dynasty, 14th c. BCE) secured Egypt's military superiority through a number of strategic construction projects that included navigable canals, earthen mounds, and fortifications, including a wall that – according to Diodorus Sicu-

Q. Many a Reflection ha's been made upon Joseph, as if hee had learn'd to Swear after the ungodly Mode of Egypt by being in Pharaohs Court. What think you; Did hee swear profanely, when hee spoke those Words, which wee translate, By the Life of Pharaoh, surely yee are Spies? v. 16.

A. If Joseph had sworn by the Life of Pharaoh, it had indeed been profanely enough. The express Commands and Cautions of our Blessed Jesus, are enough to stop the Mouths of all vain Swearers, tho' they might have had the Exemple of Joseph to have countenanced them. Whereas indeed the Exemple of Joseph will also fail them. I concur with the Decision of the learned Pfeiffer, *Verba Josephi; Vivit Pharaoh: non continent Juramentum Religiosum, sed Obtestationem, sive Asseverationem Politicam, eamque Licitam.*¹⁰

[432v] The Words of Joseph are but comparative; with an Expression of his good Affection unto Pharaoh; who was nearly, & mainly concern'd in the Business. The Sense of them was, q.d. "As sure | as I am, that Pharaoh lives, and that I desire his Life, so sure you must allow mee to bee, that you are but a Crue of Spies; or at least, that you will hereafter approve yourselves no better."

Accordingly, even some of the Primitive Christians, who would not swear, Per genium Caesaris, yett would not scruple any Asseveration, of that Importance, *Ità nobis salvus sit Caesar.*¹¹

But What thought the Ancients of it?

Hear what Basil Thought. He will not have Josephs Phrase to be an Oath, but a solemn Asseveration to perswade Beleef. For, saies he, [Hom. in Psal. XV.] "Εἰσι τινες λόγοι {σ}χήματα μὲν ὀρκῶν ἔχοντες οὐχ ὀρκοὶ δὲ ὄντες. There are certain lus (1.57.3–5) – "extended through the desert from Pelusium to Heliopolis," or "some fifteen hundred stades." Likewise, Herodotus (2.158–59) and Diodorus Siculus (1.33.9–10) relate that the Egyptian King Necos (609–593 BCE), son of Psammetichus (664–610 BCE), dug a massive canal to connect the Nile with the Red Sea and the Mediterranean.

¹⁰ Most likely, Mather refers to the German Lutheran Hebraist at Wittenberg August Pfeiffer (1640–98), whose Hermeneutica Sacra (1684) was well received. Pfeiffer argues that "Joseph's words, 'by the life of Pharaoh,' do not contain a religious oath, but an entreaty or a political assertion, and a permitted one." Mather appears to prefer Pfeiffer's interpretation of Gen. 42:15, because this Lutheran colleague insists that Joseph did not utter an impious oath, but merely expressed a benediction on pharaoh's life ("may pharaoh live") or, at the most, an asseveration that as surely as pharaoh's life is dear to Joseph, so Joseph's brothers would not be allowed to return to their father unless they brought Benjamin, their youngest sibling, to Egypt. Mather would also have found much support for this interpretation in Henry Ainsworth's Annotations (1627) 147, in John Lightfoot's A Few, and New Observations (1642) 19, as well as in the annotations to the second edition of Junius and Tremellius's Biblia Sacra (1593) 47, note 12. For the main positions on this issue, see Poole (Works 3:370).

¹¹ The Primitive Christians would not swear "by the House of Caesar," but had no scruples to asseverate, "So may Caesar be unharmed by us." For a similar argument, see Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:279). See Appendix A.

Speeches which have the fashion of Oathes, & yett are not Oathes; but θεραπεία πρὸς τοὺς ἀκούοντας, They serve only to perswade the Auditors. He takes This to be such; and such he takes to be, that of Paul, Νῆ τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχησιν, By our Rejoicing. [1. Cor. 15.31.] where, saies he, the Apostle was not unmindful of the Evangelical Commandment, Not to Swear; But by a Speech in form of an Oath, he would have them to Beleeve, That his glorying in them (or rather, in Christ,) was dearer to him, than any thing else.

The Truth is, (as Dr. Patrick hath it), Judah seems to have taken these Words, only for a solemn Protestation [Gen. 43.3.] wherein he exposed the Life of Pharaoh, (which was most dear unto him) unto Execration, if he was not as good as his Word. So G. Calixtus understands it.¹²

Q. When Josephs Brethren were brought into Distress, they thought of the Distress, which they had caused unto Joseph their Brother, many Years before. Does the Scripture mention any more such Retaliations of Providence, in the Judgment of God? v. 21.

A. The Scripture does abound with Exemples of a Tautopatheia, or, the Paying of Sinners, in their own Coin, by the Judgments of God. It will bee a Sacred Curiositie, to observe those Exemples. Besides those, which may occur elsewhere, in our Illustrations, Lett us here mention a few. The Egyptians destroy'd the Infants of Israel; and their own First-born are destroy'd. They drowned the Infants of Israel, in the River; and they are themselves drowned in the Sea. Adonibezek barbarously cutt off the Thumbs, of his Captives; with his own cutt off, at last, hee cried out, God ha's Requited mee! The Tyrians & Sidonians did sell the Jewes unto the Græcians, that they might Remove them, far from their Borders: Now see, Joel. 3.8. I will sell your Sons & your Daughters into the Hand of Judah, & they shall sell them unto the Sabæans, to a People far off; for the Lord hath spoken it. Wee read of Jehoram, That hee murdered all the Sons of his Father, save one; and the Philistines murdered all the Sons of Jehoram, save one. Joash conspired, with his Servants, to kill a Prophet; at last, the Servants of Joash conspire to kill himself. Jehojakim, did not only murder Urijah, but would not suffer him to have an Honorable Burial: Anon, Jehojakim is buried with the Burial of an Ass.¹³

¹³ In his "Note Book of Authors" (on Gen. 42:21, 22), Mather identifies as one of his sources Morning Exercise Methodized (1660), a collection of twenty-eight sermons edited by Thomas Case, which Mather had previously put to good use in his commentary on Gen. 2:17 (above). Mather frequently takes delight in the symmetry of divine justice, especially for crimes of mur-

Q. Who was Josephs Interpreters? v. 23.

A. Who is the Interpreter that can tell? But the Hebrewes have a Tradition, That it was, Josephs own Son Menasseh.¹⁵

Q. The Binding of Simeon? v. 24.

A. Theodoret thinks, That Joseph made Choice of him above them all, to use with more Severity, because he was a violent Man, and had more of what was to be mortified in his Temper, than the rest. The affair of the Shechemites, for That!¹⁶ der: The cruelty of the Egyptians, described in Exod. 2:16, 22, is avenged in the Exod. 11:4–6, 29; 14:27–28. According to Judg. 1:4–7, the Canaanite King Adonibezek (Adonisedek) had his thumbs and big toes cut off when his campaign against Judah and Simeon failed. Thus his captors bestowed the same punishment on him that he had imposed on 70 kings he had previously subdued. According to 2 Chron. 21, Jehoram (son of Jehoshaphat), King of Judah (c. 849–842 BCE) – not to be mistaken for his namesake and brother-in-law of Jehoram, King of Israel (c. 849–842 BCE) – killed his six brothers when he acceded to his father's throne. Under his reign, the Philistines invaded Judah and took Libnah (2 Chron. 21:16–17; 2 Kings 8:22). Jehoram's son Ahaziah (c. 842 BCE) was assassinated by Jehu, king of Israel (2 Kings 9:27–28) (HBD). King Joash of Judah (835–c. 796 BCE), the youngest offspring of Ahaziah of Judah, was the only progeny to escape his own mother's murder of her children by Ahaziah (2 Kings 11:2–3; 2 Chron. 22:11–12, 23:1–15). When the Prophet Zechariah (son Jehoiaada) denounced King Joash for lapsing into paganism, Joash had him killed, but was himself slain by two of his servants (2 Chron. 24:15–27) (HBD). Finally, King Jehojakim of Judah (c. 609–598 BCE) – incensed by Urijah's prophecy of doom – had the prophet killed and buried in a commoner's grave (Jer. 26:20–23), but suffered the same dishonorable burial at his own death (Jer. 22: 17–19) – unless we take 2 Kings 24:6 to mean that Jehojakim was buried in a royal tomb (HBD).

14 The fiery punishment designed for Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego in the Plain of Dura ultimately fell upon those men that were to cast them into the furnace (Dan. 3:20–24). Though Daniel was thrown into the lions' den, his accusers were punished with the same death they had designed for Daniel (Dan. 6:23–24). Evil Haman who had plotted against the Jews of Medo-Persia is hanged on his own gallows when King Ahasuerus learns the truth from Esther and Mordecai (Esth. chs. 6–7).

15 Rashi, drawing on Genesis Rabbah (XCI: 8), argues that Joseph's son Manasseh served as interpreter (Mikraoth Gedoloth, Genesis 3:537a); the same assertion is offered in the Targums Jonathan ben Uziel and Hierosolymitanum on Gen. 42:23 (Walton 4:84).

16 Mather's source – like that of his contemporaries – appears to be Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:268). Mather may have in mind Theodoret's Quaestiones in Octateuchum (Genesis. Quest. 105, p. 87, lines 12–18), where the bishop of Cyrus argues that Simeon refused to support Reuben in his effort to save Joseph when his brothers tried to kill him. Simeon was deemed particularly culpable in selling Joseph into slavery and in taking revenge on the Shechemites, who after submitting to circumcision, were slain by Simeon and Levi for the rape of their sister

Q. Why does Jacob direct the taking of Double Money? v. 12.

A. Not for the Repayment of the Money brought back in their Sacks; That is mentioned in the Next Words. But as tis observed in the Notes collected by Howel; This Double Money is ordered by Jacob, in Consideration, that as the Famine increased, the Price of Provisions would likewise be advanced; and it was necessary to take more Money, that they might not be disappointed.¹⁷

Q. What might be the Original, of the Abhorrence in the Egyptians, to eat Bread with the Hebrewes? v. 32.

A. They were in general, Peoples of different Manners; very particularly, at their Meals, in the Way of Dressing their Meat, or of Eating it. We know, some of the Jewes afterwards, would not eat with such as had unwashed Hands; and several Nations avoided Familiarity with others, meerly on the Account of their different Customes. The Egyptians were exceedingly tenacious of theirs, as Herodotus informs us; especially in their Eating. He concludes his Discourse about their Feasts, with this Observation, πατριοισι δὲ χρεώμενοι νόμοισι, ἄλλον οὐδένα ἐπικτέεινται. Using their own Countrey Customes, they receive no other. Nay, one Part of Egypt, extremely differed from another. For, in the Theban Province, they abstained from Sheep, and sacrificed Goats; but in the Mendesian quite contrary, they abstained from Goats, and sacrificed Sheep. And the Wisest of them were so nicely superstitious, That some of them thought it unlawful to eat the Head of any living Creature. Others the Shoulder-blade, others the Feet, and others, I know not what. Sextus Empiricus will tell you more of it. Wherefore, Dr. Patrick intimates, t'was not much if such whimsical People, would refuse to eat with one another.¹⁸

Dinah. See Gen. 34:24–27; 37:18–27; 49:5; Rashi, Mikraoth Gedoloth (3:537b, 621); Ramban, on Gen. 42:21, 49:5 (Commentary 1:516, 583); and Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:279).

¹⁸ Mather's primary source is Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:143). Herodotus (2.79.1) comments on their eating habits: "They follow their fathers' customs and take no others to themselves at all." Mather miscopies ἐπικτέεινται from Patrick, which should read ἐπικτώνται. The ancient prejudices among the Thebans and Mendesians against another people's eating habits or prohibitions against certain holy animals are further described in Herodotus (2.41–42). Sextus Empiricus (Pyrrhonia hypotyposes 3.223.5ff) relates how the Egyptians customarily abstain from eating the head and feet of any animal. See also Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:281).

[434v] | There is a Passage in Herodotus, that should be quoted on this Occasion. He says, “The Egyptians paid a Religious Honour to Kine; This was the Reason, why the Egyptians, neither Men nor Women, would kiss the Mouth of a Græcian; nor would Use their Knives, Dishes, or Spitts.”¹⁹

Q. Joseph sending of Messes unto his Brethren; according to what Custome was it? v. 34.

A. It was the ancient Custome, for great Men, to honour such as were in their Favour, by sending Dishes to them, which were first served up unto themselves; From whence they were called, MISSA, or, Things that were sent. The ancient Way of Eating also is to be observed; which was not like ours. Plutarch disputes therefore, which was the better Custome. To eat out of one common Dish or, every one to have a Dish unto himself, as the Manner was in old Time. Here, Benjamin had, it seems Five Dishes, for One sent unto any of his Brethren.²⁰

Q. Why Benjamins Mess, five times as much as the rest? v. 34.

A. With an Intent probably to try the Temper of the other Ten; and see whether they would look upon Benjamin, with the same envious Eye, as they had formerly done upon himself. But it past off without any such Effect upon them, For –

Q. What might be the special Intention of Joseph, in ordering his Cup, to be putt into the Sack of Benjamin? v. 2.

A. This Gabiah, or embossed Cup, (as the Hebrew Word signifies,) or Goblet, Joseph orders to be putt into the Sack of Benjamin, that so he might make a Trial of his Brethrens Concern for him, & their Kindness both to him, and to their Father; and whether they would express any Envy to Benjamin, because of his extraordinary Kindness to him.²¹

Q. What was the Divination by a Cup, used by Joseph, with regard whereto, the Steward said about the Cup found with Benjamin, Is not this it, in which my Lord drinketh? and whereby indeed hee Divineth? v. 5.

A. None at all. Many Conjectures have been made about the Culicomancy whereto Joseph, they think, after the Egyptian Manner now pretended. They had Cups, whereinto the Sortes Consultoriae being thrown, their Quæstions were thereby determined. They had Cups also, whereupon Mystical Characters that were engraved, were serviceable to direct them in their Difficulties. But some that will excuse Joseph here, from the having of such a Cup, yett suppose that Joseph by the Free Use of his Cup, sometimes discovered the secret Counsels of such as came to the Court of Egypt: which, you know, is Court-Fashion. Whereas indeed, all these, and many more such Interpretations, must evaporate at once, into this Decision; The Steward of Joseph never meant or said, That his Master did use to Divine BY this Cup of his; hee only declar'd, that his Master would soon Divine OF the Cup; or Guess and Know, which Way t'was gone. The Particle כּ here in the Word יִכּ should not bee taken Ὀργανικῶς but Objective: thus read the whole, Is not this the Cup, in which my Lord uses to Drink? And would not hee soon conjecture (think you) concerning it; which Way tis gone; that it is not his own Servants, but you Strangers, have taken it away?²²

²¹ Simon Patrick on Gen. 44:2 (Commentary 1:144).

²² “Culicomancy” is a form of divination by examining “the movement of water” that is “poured into a cup” (SH 3:450). Moreover, the Egyptians used Sortes Consultoriae, cups into which “oracular lots” were cast. Mather argues that the Hebrew particles “b” in “bo,” here suggesting “by” or “through,” should not be taken as an instrumental, but as an objective; hence “in which.” At any rate, much ink has been spilled by the ancients and moderns alike to clear Joseph from any suspicion of practicing the Egyptian art of divining by cups (Gen. 44:5). The arguments of the principal contestants are summarized in Franciscus Vatablus’s Adnotationes in Sacra Biblia (1546), in Hugo Grotius’s Annotationes ad Genesisin (Opera Omnia 1:24), in 4259:

It may not be amiss, however, to annex Dr. Tenisons Conjecture of, The Cup?

He thinks, It was probably an Instrument used in some Sacrifice, some Drink-offering; and in the Use of which, God vouchsafed Joseph a Spirit of Prophecy, with relation to the affayrs of Egypt. Now, if the Egyptians (adds he) afterwards made Use of this Cup, or any other in form of it, without any Præcept or Promise from Almighty God, and trusted in it as the Cause of Divination, they then were Idolaters, tho' Joseph were not so, in the Original, from whence they took the Occasion. This one would think, was the Egyptian Practice, who reads Lucian, in his Book of Sacrifices, and observes him there deriding the Egyptians, because they made, ποτηριον, a Drinking Pott, their God. And such a Cup, that may be thought, which is described in the Hand of Isis, in her mystical Table; as likewise that mentioned by Arnobius in the Right Hand of Bacchus.

*In Liberi dext{e}ra pendens potorius cantharus.*²³

Thus I find some others render that Passage; The Cup with which he receiveth Præsages. It was the Cup wherein Joseph still drank, at the Sacrifices, by which he prepared himself to receive Præsages from God. A little Book entituled, Three Ministers communicating their notions, does give us this Illustration.²⁴

The Targum of Onkelos translates it, Is not this the Cup out of which my Lord drinketh, & which he seeketh with great Care? The Arabic version offers, what Mr. Saurin thinks a Meaning yett more Natural; Is not this the Cup out of which my Lord drinketh, & by which he has tried you?²⁵

They who desire to see the old Magical Ways of Divining of the Cup, will find enough to intoxicate them, in the Dæmonomania of Bodinus, and in Weierus de Magis Infamibus, and in Godelmannus de Magicis; and in Cornelius Agrippa.²⁶

Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:272–73 and Works 3:394–96), and in Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:283–86).

23 The entire paragraph – including the references to the Greek and Latin authors – is copied from Dr. Thomas Tenison's Of Idolatry (1678), ch. 2, pp. 17–18. Tenison's acknowledged source is an unspecified edition of Laurentius Pignori's Mensa Isiaca (1669), but points out (p. 18, note a) that the Greek poterion ("an earthen cup or dish") does not appear in Lucian's De sacrificiis (1; Works 3:154), but in his Juppiter tragoedus (42.18; Works 2:155). The second-hand Latin citation from Arnobius's Adversus gentes (16. 25.1) translates, "the drinking cup swinging in Liber's right hand" (Against the Heathens 6.25), in ANF (6:517).

24 The paragraph is extracted from Three Ministers Communicating (1675), "The sixth Meeting" (26), by Clement Barksdale (1609–87), an Anglican clergyman, sometime schoolmaster at Hawling (Cotswolds), rector of Naunton and Stow (Gloucestershire), and translator of some of the most significant works of Hugo Grotius (ODNB).

25 Jacques Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:283); Saurin refers to the Targum Onkelos and the Arabic Version (Gen. 44:5), both in Walton (1:197).

26 The paragraph is extracted from Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:284). Saurin's sources include De la Démonomanie des Sorciers (1580), lib. 2, cap. 1, p. 56, by Joannes Bodinus, aka. Jean Bodin (1529–96), a French Catholic jurist and historian of Angier. His popular work on witchcraft was translated into Latin and several other languages and went through many editions. The

Q. The Famine continues; How did they præserve their Corn so long in Egypt?

A. It seems hard unto us in the Northern and Moister Climates, except we consider the many Ways of Præservaⁿtion practiced by Antiquity; and also take in that Handsome Account of Pliny, What Corn soever is laid up in the Ear, it takes no Harm, keep it as long as you will: Tho' the most assured Way to keep Corn, is in Caves and Vaults under Ground, according to the Practise of Capadocia and Thracia.²⁸

Sir Tho: Brown tells us, That in Egypt and Mauritania; they do above all things look to this; That their Granaries do stand on High Ground; and how Dry soever their Floor be, they lay a Course of Chaff, betwixt it and the Ground. Besides, they putt up their Corn in Granaries and Binns, together with the Ear. And Varro assures us, That Wheat laid up in that Manner, will last Fifty Years; Millet, an Hundred; And Beans thus conserved in a Cave of Ambracia were known to last an Hundred and Twenty Years; that is, from the Time of King Pyrrhus, unto the Pyratⁱc War, under the Conduct of Pompey.²⁹

More strange it may seem, how after Seven Years, the Grains preserved should be Fruitful for a New Production; For it is said, Joseph delivered Seed unto Dutch physician and demonologist Joannes Weierus, aka. Johann Weyer, also Wier, Wierus (1515–88) – like many of his peers – was a disciple of the famous Renaissance occultist Heinrich Cornelius Agrippa von Nettesheim, but spoke out against the delusions of witchcraft and magic in his own De magis infamibus (cap. 12, art. 8), which appears in his oft-reprinted De præstigiis daemonum (1563). The German jurist and professor at Rostock, Johann Georg Godelmannus (1559–1611) published Tractatus de magis, veneficis et lamiis (1591), a 3-volume tome on how to detect and punish witchcraft and magic. Saurin refers to lib. 1, cap. 5 of this work. The last work in the list is De occulta philosophia, libri tres (1533), by Heinrich Cornelius Agrippa von Nettesheim (1486–1535), German Counselor to Emperor Charles V, and most important Renaissance scholar on esoterica. Saurin refers to lib. 1, cap. 57, of this Latin edition. An English translation of this work appeared as Three Books of Occult Philosophy (1650).

²⁷ Saurin (Diss. XXXVIII, 1:286).

²⁹ Browne (Works 3:248). Varro (Rerum rusticarum 1.57.2–3). King Pyrrhus of Epirus (312–272 BCE) is known for his devastating wars against the Romans. The Roman military leader Cnaeus Pompeius Magnus (106–48 BCE) waged a crushing three-month campaign against the pirates who controlled the Mediterranean (67–66 BCE) – Mather's "Pyratⁱc War."

the Egyptians, to sow their Land for the Eighth Year. According to Theophrastus, Ad Sementem, Semen anniculum optimum putatur, Binum deterius, et Trinum ultra sterile fermé est, quanquam ad usum cibarium idoneum. And yett, according to the Places and Methods of Conservation, why may not the Fructifying Power of the Corn, last in a Proportion to the Corn itself? The same Theophrastus ha's left us a notable Exemple, from Cappadocia; where Corn might be kept Sixty Years, and remain Fertile at Forty; according to his Expression, thus translated; In Cappadocia loco quodam, Petra dicto, Triticum ad Quadraginta Annos fecundum est, et ad sementem percommodum durare proditum est, sexagenos aut septuagenos ad usum cibarium servari posse idoneum. The Scituation of that Conservatory, was, as he tells us; υψηλον, ευπνοον, εναυρον. High, Airy, Exposed unto several favourable Winds. And upon such Consideration of Winds and Ventilation, some conceive the Egyptian Granaries were made open, the Countrey being Free from Rain. But this Contrivance could not be without Hazard; for by the great Mists and Dewes of the Countrey, the Corn might so be exposed unto Corruption.³⁰

More plain is their Mistake, who from some Analogy of the Name, (as Pyramid were derived of πυρον, Triticum,) conceive the Egyptian Pyramids to have been built for Granaries; or look for any settled Monuments about the Desarts erected for that Intention: Since their Store-houses were made in the great Towns; we read, He laid up the Food in the Cities; the Food of the Field, which was round about every City, laid he up in the same.³¹

Q. Judah's Oration? v. 34.

A. You may read a Notable Paraphrase upon it, in Philo's Book, whereof, Joseph, is the Title. Tis the finest Peece in all the Book.³²

³¹ Browne (Works 3:249). The Greek “Puron” and Latin “Triticum” suggest “wheat.” Gen. 41:48.

³² See Simon Patrick on Gen. 44:34 (Commentary 1:145). Philo Judaeus, in De Josepho (4.17–21) relates how Judah bewails the death of Joseph, but when he learns that Joseph was sold into slavery instead, Judah laments his brothers' heinous act. He closes his expression of grief with “to do wrong is a more terrible evil than to suffer wrong, for the one has for an alleviation two consolations of the greatest influence, hope and pity; but the other is destitute of both these mitigations” (Works 436–37).

Q. The Land of Goshen, where? v. 10.

A. The Name, Ægypt, is no where found in the Old Testament. Passing by the Invention of Stephanus and Eustathius, about a King of that Name, it seems to be of a Greek Original. Perizonius in his Origines Ægypticæ, fetches it from the Blackness of the Soyl. The Hebrew Name for this Countrey, is, Mizrajim. And, Goshen, which both the LXX, and, Jerom, write, Gesem, and which signifies, Plenty of Water, or a well-watered Land, was a notable Part of it. But, where it lay, tis a very Difficult Quæstion; because no other Authors have mentioned it. I will employ a Gentleman Blind from his Nativity, to be my Guide unto it. The admirable Mr. Jameson, observes, That (they who go under the Name of) the Seventy old Gentlemen, who in Egypt made a Version of the Pentateuch, and knew how the Land lay, translate the Name Γεσεμ 'Αραβίας. By which, tis plain that the Countrey bordered on Arabia, and on Palæstine. They also, Gen. XLVI.28. mention the, Ἡρώων πόλιν there. Now Strabo places that Urbs Heroum, near a Bay of the Red-Sea. Josephus places the Israelites in Heliopolis, and Sais. Now Pliny places these near together; and both of them in the Parts of Egypt, that lay nearest unto Arabia.³³

33 Among Mather's principal sources for this paragraph are Spicilegia antiquitatum Ægypti (1720), cap. 1, pp. 1–17, §§ 1–7, by William Jameson (fl. 1689–1720), a Presbyterian controversialist and Latin teacher at Glasgow, blind from birth (see also Mather's Manuductio ad Ministerium 102); and Ægyptiarum originum et temporum antiquissimorum investigatio (1711, 1736), vol. 1, cap. 1, pp. 12–16, by Jacobus Perizonius (1651–1715), Dutch professor of classical history at Franeker and Leiden. Mather greatly admired “our Eagle-Eyed Jameson, (a miraculous Literator, Stark Blind from his Nativity!)” for his erudition and piety (Threefold Paradise 177). On May 5, 1713, Mather recorded in his diary (D 2:205) that he asked Jameson to compose a refutation of William Whiston's Primitive Christianity Reviv'd (1711) – a massive 4-volume defense of the Apostolical Constitutions that confirmed Whiston's Arian and anti-Trinitarian convictions (Force, Whiston 19–20). The Mather libraries included Jameson's Cyprianus Isotimus (1705), Roma Racoviana (1702), and Nazianzeni Querela (1697) – three Presbyterian polemics against Congregationalism and the Roman Catholic Church (Tuttle, “Libraries” 303, 307, 333; Silverman, Selected Letters 179). Jameson (cap. 1, p. 1–2, § 1) refers to Stephanus Byzantius's Ethnica (44.12–23) and Eustathius Thessalonicensis's Commentarium in Dionysii periegetæ (222.44, 239.1–14), who argue that the name Egypt may be derived from the name of the ancient King Ægyptus, the son of the African King Belus (LCD), or that the name Egypt (suggesting “dark earth”) may even be derived from the name for the River Nile (signifying “fluvium nigros”). However, Perizonius (Ægyptiarum, vol. 1, cap. 1, p. 16) specifically rejects this conjectured derivation along with those offered by Jameson. Both the LXX (Gen. 45:10) and St. Jerome (Quæstiones Hebraicæ in Genesim) [PL 23. 1000] call the region in which Joseph's brothers settled “Gesem of Arabia” and “Gesen,” respectively. Jerome objects that the addition “of Arabia” in the LXX does not appear in the Hebrew original and has led many interpreters to look for Gesen in Arabia. “Besides, if as it stands in our codices [LXX] it is written as gesem with a final M (which does not seem at all good to me), it means a land which has been rained on. For

We find here Two Cities that were Seats of the Egyptian Cruelties; Pithom, and Raamses; which are called by a Term, which we render, Treasure-Cities. Pithom is in Herodotus called, Patumon: and such a Boundary between Egypt & Arabia, that by a Mistake it is ascribed unto Arabia. Ptolomy gives that Name also to a Mouth of Nilus. Raamses is mention'd by no profane Writers.³⁴

Q. Why did Joseph so long defer to make himself known unto his Brethren and Family? Is it not strange, that he had no Correspondence with the Land of Canaan, during the Years of his Captivity? Wee'l allow, Posts were not then settled: And all that he could have made known, would only have raised unhappy Divisions in the Family. But now, He had been at least Nine Years in his High Station, why did he delay communicating to Jacob, the Tidings of his Exaltation? How could he præpare New Afflictions for him, instead of giving him so great a Pleasure? How did it come to pass, that when he foresaw the Famine coming on the Land of Canaan, hee did not provide for the Subsistence of his Family? He that præsidèd over all Egypt, and could even dispose of a whole Province, without Pharaohs knowledge, could he apprehend any Ill Consequences of his Discovering his Family? And if he had feared any, should he not bravely have discharged his Duty, and left the Event unto Providence? v. 15.

A. Take Monsr. Saurins Answer. "It is doubtless very difficult to solve these Objections, and not to think hard of Joseph, or to suspect that he was a little infected with the Disease too common among Men, that have been raised unto high Stations; which is, that they do not care to look down upon their former Condition, or to make it known unto others. All that we can say most advantageous to the Memory of the Patriarch, is, partly to suspend our Judgment upon all those Articles; to suppose that he could satisfy his Conduct by some good Reasons not known to us; And to give all the Weight we can to such as may in some Measure, if not entirely, excuse him.

– "After all, we must acknowledge ingenuously that the Regards we had for a Man so greatly favoured by Heaven, has rendred us a little partial to those gesem is to be translated as shower of rain" (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 79). Significantly, the LXX (Gen. 46.28) renders the Land of Goshen as "Heroon polin" or "City of Heroes" (Heroönpolis, aka. Heliopolis), which many identify either with the City of Rameses (LXX: Exod. 1:11, 12:37; Num. 33:3, 5) or with the Land of Goshen as a whole (Gen. 47:11). Strabo (16.1.30, 16.4.2, 4, 5; 17.1.18, 23) locates "the City of Heroes," aka. Heröonpolis (Heliopolis) and Sais in the Nile Delta (Lower Egypt), as does Flavius Josephus (Antiquities 2.7.6), who places the two settlements in the Nile Delta. Pliny (5.12.65) locates it on the Red Sea at the modern Gulf of Suez. See "Pithom" and "Rameses" (CBTEL).

³⁴ Herodotus (2.158) identifies the city as Patoumus; Ptolemy (Geographia 4.5.10–11, 39; 8.15.11) calls it Pelusium (Lower Egypt), at the Mouth of the NE Nile Delta. Given these oscillations of the compass, both the ancients and moderns disagree on the location and identity of Pithom and Raamses, aka. Rameses (Exod. 1:11).

Arguments, which do not appear to us altogether conclusive in his Favour. If it had been the Case of a Common Man, we should without any Scruple have condemned his Cowardise and Policy, that seem'd to prevail over the Sentiments of Nature and Religion."³⁵

Q. We read of Joseph, To all his Brethren, he gave each Man Changes of Raiment; But to Benjamin he gave Five Changes of Raiment? v. 22.

A. I will on this Occasion transcribe the Words of Mr. Aaron Hill, in his Account of, The Present State of the Ottoman Empire.

"The Giving Vests, ha's been a very ancient Eastern Ceremony, as was practised formerly, as now it is among the Turks, to give a Proof of the Respect they bore the Person they so honoured. All Ambassadors, residing in the Turkish Court, may judge of the Esteem the Sultan bears the Prince they repræsent, by the receiving more or fewer than is usual, of these Formal Garments. Giving Vests among the Ancients, may be proved in many Places, by the Indisputable Authority of the Holy Writ."³⁶

I will add the Words of Monsr. Saurin in his Dissertation, on Josephs Presents. "T'was therein that one Part of the Riches of the Ancients consisted. We see it, Jud. XIV.13. and, 2. King. V.5.

"In the time of the First Roman Emperours this kind of Vanity was so greatly increased, that the Prætor Lucullus had two hundred Changes of Raiment, as Plutarch relates it. And if we may beleeve Horace, [L.1. Epist. VI. v. 44.] they carried the Number as far as to five thousand. Without doubt to this Custom alludes, Jam. V.1, 2."³⁷

³⁵ Both paragraphs are extracted from Jacques Saurin's Dissertations (Diss. XL, 1:291).

³⁷ The citation appears in Saurin (Diss. XL, 1:290). Plutarch (Lucullus 39.4–5), Plutarch's Lives (2:599). Horace (Epistola 1.6.43–44).

Q. Israel having recommended himself, and his Family to the Protection of God, God saies to him, Jacob, Jacob, Fear not to go down into Egypt. What Remark upon it? v. 1, 2, 3.

A. The Lord calls him Jacob, rather than Israel, to remember him, what he was originally; & that by His Favour he was made Israel.

Now, Jacob seems to have been afraid, that when Joseph should be dead, his Family should be made Slaves. And he had reason for his Fear, from what had been said unto Abraham in such a Vision as this. [Gen. 15.13.] God renews to him now therefore, the Promise then made unto Abraham; I will make of thee a great Nation; thou shalt have a Numerous Posterity.³⁸

Q. On that, Joseph shall putt his hand upon thine Eyes? v. 4.

A. This was an Action used among the Ancients, as a Token of Love, to Dying Persons. Penelope in Homer, speaking, of Telemachus to Ulysses, prays, that this their Son may close both their Eyes. [Heroides 1.102] Ovid, in his Infamous Book, unworthy to be quoted, paraphrases the Greek Poet, Ille meos Oculos comprimat, ille Tuos.³⁹

3029.

Q. But a very little while ago, Benjamin is called, A Little One: [Gen. 44.20.] And yett here we find him a Father of Ten Sons? v. 21.

A. You know something of Jacobs Fondness for his Beloved Rachel, and her Offspring. He was therefore more than ordinarily solicitous, that Benjamin, whom he look'd on, as the only surviving Son of Rachel, might have an Offspring. He married him therefore as early as was possible. And a singular Blessing of God upon his Marriage multiplied Sons apace unto him; wherein ³⁸ Adapted from Simon Patrick on Gen. 46:2, 3 (Commentary 1:147).

appeared the Mercy of God also, to comfort Jacob, under the Loss of his darling Joseph. These are the Remarks of Luther upon the Matter!⁴⁰

But we may think, of some further Solution for the Difficulty.

I will grant, That Benjamin, (and Pharez too, who hath two sons assigned unto him, at the Descent into Egypt;) might beget Children very early. Jul. Scaliger, a Man of unquæstionable Credit, affirms, That in his Memory, there was a Boy short of Twelve Years old, who had a Daughter by a Cousin of his, that was yett short of Ten. Rem notam narro (saies he) et cujus memoria adhuc recens est in Aquitaniâ.

But yett, in my Opinion, the great Austin, ha's given us the best Key, to come at a right Notion of this whole Matter; Namely; That Jacobs Descent into Egypt, comprehends all the Seventeen Years, which he afterwards lived in Egypt. And so, both the Sons of Pharez, and of Benjamin, tis enough, that they were born in Egypt, before the Death of Benjamin.⁴¹

Q. It is said, Every Shepherd was an Abomination unto the Egyptians; What was the Original of that Abomination? v. 34.

A. Tis true, That the Egyptian Manners, were very contrary to Pastoral Humours & Customes: but here was not all the Malice. Egypt was a Receptacle & Colluvies of many Nations; but among others that contributed unto the Peopling of that Countrey, the Phœnician Shepherds made a considerable Figure. Those unlucky Shepherds, at last grew into such a Powerful Multitude, that they made themselves the Masters of Memphis, & became the Rulers of Egypt. This most ancient Revolution is reported by Manethon, in these Terms Ἦσαν δὲ Φοίνικες ἕξνοι, βασιλεῖς ἕξ, οἱ Μέμφιν εἶλον. i. e. There were Six Kings, Phœnician Strangers, who took Memphis; which that Author makes the fifteenth Dynasty of the Kings of Egypt; & affirms them all to bee Shepherds. You may find the whole Story in Africanus; recited by the Incomparable Bochart, in his Treatise of the Phœnician Colonies; who also fetches the Hatred of Egypt unto Shepherds, from the things that passed in this old Revolution.⁴²

⁴⁰ Martin Luther's remarks appear in his Lectures upon Genesis 44:20 (Works 7:372).

⁴¹ The preceding two paragraphs are close adaptations of Simon Patrick's annotations on Gen. 46:12 (Commentary 1:147–48). Julius Scaliger reminisces, "I narrate a well-known thing, and one of which there is still a recent memory in Aquitania." St. Augustine's key can be found in his Quæstiones in Heptateuchum (lib. 1, quæst. clii in Genesim) [PL 34. 589].

⁴² Mather extracts the entire paragraph from Samuel Bochart's Geographia (pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 4, col. 357–58). The citation from Manetho (Fragmenta 43, lines 3–4) is extant in a frag-

To prosecute this Matter a little further. It is very sure, That Every Shepherds being an Abomination to the Egyptians, must not be understood universally and without Limitation; but of every Foreign Shepherd. For it is evident from Diodorus Siculus that a considerable Part of the Egyptians were Shepherds, and of great Service and Esteem among their Countreymen. Yea, tis evident from this very Book of Genesis, That the Egyptians had Sheep and Oxen, as well as Horses and Asses, which they sold unto Joseph, in the Famine; and Pharaoh spoke unto Joseph, to make his Brethren Rulers over his Flocks. Or, if this Passage must be understood of All Shepherds, then by Egyptians, we must not understand all Egyptians, but only the Courtiers and the Grandees of Egypt, who, tis likely, (as Rupertus Tutiensis long ago expounded this Passage,) despised People of so inferiour a Quality.⁴³

But, for the Original of this Aversion for Shepherds, Dr. Patrick thinks, That the most probable Conjecture is that of Gaulmin, (in his Notes upon, The Life of Moses): That it arose from their being generally addicted, in those Parts, unto Robbery; which Way of Living made them Abominable. This Conjecture he justifies out of Heliodorus and Achilles Tatius, who describe the Seat of these Βούκοι and Ποιμένες, (which the Egyptians called, Hysch) and the Manner of their Life. Bochart himself inclined unto this Opinion before he died; & confirms it in his Hieroicoicon, with many Proofs, That Shepherds were anciently Furax hominum genus, a Thievish sort of People; which made them so odious. Particularly, those in Palestine, from whence our Jacob came, one would guess [from 1. Chron. 7.21, 22.] were then much given to Robbery. The Men of Gath slew several of the Sons of Ephraim, (while he was yett living,) for they came down to take their Cattel, saies the Holy Writer; that is, to gett what Plunder they could in Goshen; where the Ephraimites defending their Cattel, were some of them kill'd by the Philistines, to the great Grief of their Father. It is also by Strabo, noted of the Ethiopians, that they lived for the most Part, Νομαδικῶς και ἀπόρως, after a poor, sharking, roving Manner, by feeding of Cattel, where they could find Food for them; and he adds immediately, τοῖς δ' Αἰγυπτίοις ἅπαντα τὰναντία συμβέβηκε. That all things were quite contrary among the Egyptians, who were a more civil Sort ment of Sextus Julius Africanus's Chronographiae (fragm. 11, dyn. 15, line 1), which survives in Georgius Syncellus's Ecloga chronographica (p. 67, line 26). For a similar analysis see Benedictus Pererius, Commentariorum et Disputationum in Genesim (1596–1602) 4:724–26, “Secunda Disputationum” (on Gen. 46:34).

⁴³ Mather's extracts are from Samuel Bochart's Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 16, col. 560) and from Simon Patrick's Commentary (1:148–49), on Gen. 46:34. Diodorus Siculus (1.74.1–4; 1.87.2) speaks of several classes of free citizens – one of which being herdsmen, who are highly respected. They hold sheep and cows sacred because of their utility to man. The learned medieval abbot Rupertus Tutiensis relates in his In Cantica Canticorum de incarnatione domini commentariorum [PL 168. 837–961] how much the nobility and priestly classes despised the shepherds and those below them. For much the same, see Pererius (Commentariorum et disputationum 4:726).

of People, dwelling in certain, & well-known Places. This Difference of Manners, bred an Hatred; and Plutarch therefore saies, The Egyptians avoided the Conversation of the Ethiopians; and For some such reason, he saies, They avoided all Mariners of other Nations; as Moses here saies, they did the Shepherds.⁴⁴

However, Joseph hoped, his Brethren would soon distinguish themselves, from the Shepherds, of so Ill a Character. Or, if they did not gett the Love of the Egyptians, they would be the more secured in the Love of God, & against learning their Evil Manners.

I do not think the Words of Cunæus, [De Rep. Heb. L.1.c.4.] improper to be transcribed. “A Third Part of the People lived at a Distance, in the Plains of Egypt, & the Marishes. These were the Shepherds, Active and Able Men; but execrable to all the Egyptians; because they would not suffer them to be secure in their Idle Course of Life. These often made great Commotions, and sometimes created Kings for themselves. Wherefore the Romans, in after-times, when they easily held the rest of Egypt in Obedience, placed a strong Garrison in all these Parts. When you have taken the most exact View in all things, you will find, This was the Reason that made the Egyptians from the very first, so ill affected unto Shepherds; because those sedentary Men, and Opificers, could not endure their fierce & active Spirits. – [Ponder, Exod. I.10.] – Nor can I assent to them, that impute the Cause of this public Hatred, to their Superstition, as if the Hebrew Keepers of Flocks and Herds, could not be suffered by that Nation, – being perswaded there was in them something of Divinity; – For, what will they answer, when they shall either learn out of the Pentateuch, that Pharaoh had innumerable Flocks of Sheep; or, when they shall see so many Monuments of Histories to be produced, making it evident, that a considerable Part of the Egyptians, lived in Pastures, & among Cattle?”⁴⁵

⁴⁴ Again, Simon Patrick’s annotations on Gen. 46:34 (Commentary 1:149–50) furnish Mather with his principal material. Here, he refers (via Patrick) to the notes of Gilbert Gaulmin (1585–1665), French philologist, poet, and statesman, who edited a Latin and Hebrew edition of De vita et morte Mosis (1629) 267, by Michael Psellus (1018–c. 1078), a Byzantian scholar and statesman, best remembered for his Chronographia (976–1077). Gaulmin justifies his argument with references to Heliodorus’s Aethiopica (lib. 1, cap. 5–6), a third or forth-century (cē) Greek novelist, and to Achilles Tatius’s Leucippe et Clitophon (lib. 2, cap. 2; lib. 3, cap. 9), a Greek novelist of Alexandria (2nd c. cē). The Greek nouns Boukoloi and Poimenes signify cattle-herdsmen and shepherds. The Egyptian “hysch” suggests “hyksos” or “shepherd kings” (CBTEL). The Latin citation from Samuel Bochart (Hierozaicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 44, col. 448) signifies “a thievish kind of people.” Strabo (17.1.3) points out that the Ethiopians lead “a nomadic and resourceless life” and adds “with the Aegyptians the contrary is the case.” Plutarch’s discussion of the Egyptians’ dislike of the dark-complexioned Ethiopians remains unidentified.

Q. We read, Joseph took some of his Brethren, & presented them unto Pharaoh. Whom? v. 2.

A. The Hebrew runs, De Extremitate Fratrum Suorum; That is, He took such as were the Least in Person and Stature, and of the most diminutive Aspect; lest if he had sett the stouter Men before Pharaoh he might have been under a Temptation to make Souldiers of them.⁴⁶

Q. What was the advantage of Goshen above Canaan, to afford Pasture unto Flocks, the Famine being sore in the Land? v. 4.

A. Canaan was an higher Countrey than Egypt; and the Grass there sooner burnt up.

Austin ha's a further Observation, from those who knew the Countrey; That there was more Grass in the Marishes and Fenny Parts of Egypt, when the Nile did not overflow enough, to make Plenty of Corn.⁴⁷

Q. Jacob was already, an Hundred & Thirty Years old, & was not yett come to the End of his Dayes; Hee lived Seventeen Years after this, which made an Hundred & Forty Seven. The Difference now between his Dayes, & the Dayes of his Fathers, was not so enormously Great! Isaac dy'd at an Hundred & Four-score: Abraham dy'd at an Hundred & Sixty Five: And after Jacob, they lived not so long as hee. Whence then this Complaint of the Patriarch, Few & Evil have been the Dayes of the Years of my Life; and I have not attained unto the Dayes of the Years of the Life of my Fathers? v. 9.

A. The, Few, is explained by the, Evil. His Dayes were Winter-Dayes: and spent in Darkness of sore Affliction. Winter Dayes, you know, are Twenty four Hours long, as well as other Dayes; [Yea, Longer, as if you mathematically consider the Equation of Time, you'll see:] Yett we count them, the Shorter Dayes. Jacob, had enjoy'd less of the Joy of his Life, in the Time of his Life. ⁴⁶ Mather here follows Bochart's translation of מִקְצֵה [mikzeh] (Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 34, col. 356–57), but Bochart's source appears to be Rashi's commentary on Gen. 47:2, which is based on Genesis Rabbah XCV:4 (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 3:587). See also Patrick (Commentary 1:150).

Q. Joseph's not buying the Lands of the Priests, Whence was it? v. 22.

A. The Priests were not under any Necessity to sell their Lands, because they had their Diet continually from the King. The Priests had anciently publick Lands allow'd unto them, for the Support of their Dignity. Both Herodotus and Diodorus tell us, They had a publick Maintenance. The Priesthood was confined unto certain Families, (as it was in Israel, to that of Aaron;) and held in such Veneration, that they were not only ἀτελείς, Tax-free, and δευτερεύοντες μετὰ τὸν βασιλέα, Next unto the King in Honour and Power: but they also received a Third out of the Royal Revenues; out of which they maintained the publick Sacrifices, and their Servants, and, τὰς ἰδίας χρείας ἐχορήγου. Provided for their own Necessities. Thus Diodorus Siculus.⁴⁹

Constantine M. in Part, imitated this Constitution, in that Law of his, which made, even all the Professors of Learning free from all publick Charges of any sort, besides the Salary he allow'd them; that they might the more cheerfully follow their several Studies. Thus Dr. Patrick.⁵⁰

Q. What is to be thought of Joseph's Conduct, in enslaving the Egyptians? v. 23.⁵¹

⁴⁸ Echoes of Jacques Saurin (Diss. XLII, 1:347–48) abound. In his “Note Book of Authors” (Gen. 47), Mather lists as his source Wolfgang Franzius’s De Interpretatione S. Scripturarum (1619) 910.

⁴⁹ This and the following two paragraphs are extracted from Simon Patrick on Gen. 47:22 (Commentary 1:151). Patrick’s own source is Gerard Vossius’s De Theologia Gentili (1641), lib. 1, cap. 29, pp. 216–17; and Jacques Cappellus’s Historia Sacra et Exotica (1613) ad A. M. 2294. Herodotus (2.37) relates how the Egyptian priests were cared for at public expense. The Greek citations from Diodorus Siculus (1.73.5) read “pay no taxes” and “second after the king”; and, respectively, “minister to their own needs” (1.73.3).

⁵¹ The following commentary is on verse 23 rather than 26 – here silently corrected.

A. Some Eleutherians are afraid, it will be found an evil Conduct, & impossible to be vindicated. When the singular & surprizing Providence of God, had advanced this Hero, unto an uncommon Dignity, & given him astonishing Opportunities to Do Good unto Mankind, (say they) how Generous, how Ingenuous a Part, would it have been in him, to have heaped all sorts of Benefits on a miserable Nation; & have won them unto the Exercise of his own Religion, the Worship of the God of Israel, and the Faith of the Messiah? Had he hearkened unto the Spirit of that Glorious Messiah, or governed himself by such Maxims as that Spirit would have dictated, he would certainly have done so. But instead of this, he seems to have destroy'd the Freedom of the Nation, & to have committed an horrid Rape on their Liberties and Properties; and this, upon a sinful Intention & Policy, to ingratiate himself with his Monarch, and secure his own Grandeur and Interest, by putting it out of the Power both of the Nobility & Commonalty of Egypt, ever to recover their Ancient Priviledges. That action of removing the People from their Lands & Livings, from one End of the Borders of Egypt, even to the other End thereof, was the Finishing Stroke in enslaving a Free People. And his gratifying the Priests with peculiar Immunities, looks as if it were to fasten their everlasting Chains upon them. He that considers, the Way of Governing in the præceding Histories of the Bible, and how much of a Republican Strain there appears in it, would suspect, that Joseph's Attempt upon Egypt, was one of the First Specimens of Tyranny and Slavery given to the World; and that other Princes in other Nations learnt the Way of it, from this very scandalous Exemple.⁵²

When I observe the Faults which the great Hero's, in the Bible all along, have been left unto, & black'ned withal, methinks, I feel the Force of the Exhortation, To look off all these unto JESUS; and to admire, and adore the altogether Lovely One, who is the Only One that ha's done Good & never Sinned.

It was a sad Instance of Humane Frailty, which we have in David's Miscarriage, after that the Glorious God had done so great Things for him. To some there is a sadder, in the ungrateful, & oppressive Carriage of Joseph, after that God had raised him unto such advantages of being a Benefactor to the World.

⁵² Mather's source is probably Wolfgang Franzius's De Interpretatione S. Scripturarum (1619) 734 (see "Note Book of Authors" on Gen. 47:28). The strong Eleutherian sentiments of freedom are more indicative of Mather's own time than of that of the ancient patriarchs. For when the First Charter of Massachusetts (1630) was revoked in 1684, and Royal Governor Sir Edmund Andros stripped rebellious New Englanders of their land titles granted them by their former Massachusetts government, young Cotton Mather, with The Declaration, Of Gentlemen, Merchants, and Inhabitants of Boston (1689) in hand, led his Bostonians in revolt against the Andros government (Silverman, Life and Times 62–72). Be that as it may, in its Mosaic context, Mather reads Joseph's policy to trade food for land, livestock, and liberty as the first introduction of slavery. By and large, Mather's condemnation of Joseph's action is not seconded by Jewish or Christian commentators, who generally argue that Joseph did not enslave the people, but merely made them subject to paying taxes or tithes to pharaoh, amounting to one-fifths of their revenue (Gen. 47:13–26).

Some think, The Holy God seems to have punished this evil Conduct. For, first, Joseph | was the last of the Patriarchs who enjoy'd all the Rights of the First-born, united. Our Great Saviour, the Son of God, is that grand First-born, who is the Heir of all things, & the Lord of all. It is by the strange Providence of God ordered, that the Rights of the First-born, were still in the Families of the Bible, transferred over to such Persons, as were to be the Direct Ancestors of our Saviour, in the Holy Line. And for that Cause, the Younger Brothers, very frequently had them, & this often by a Concurrence of strange Circumstances, to bring it about. It is very probable, that most, if not all, the Patriarchs mentioned in the Fifth Chapter of Genesis, were Younger Brothers. These Rights, had a Complication of Blessings in them; Estate, Power, Honour, and Priesthood. And they were usually transferred with much Ceremony & Solemnity, and all that belonged unto a Patriarchal Benediction. It was done to Joseph, by his dying Father; and it was long before designed, whereof the Peculiar Garment putt upon him, was a Token. But God stript Joseph of his Garment. For, tho' in his Two Tribes, he had a Double Portion of the Promised Land, yett the Regal Authority was given away to Judah.⁵³ [▽446r]

But then, there was another thing very observable. The Israelites doubtless approved the evil Conduct of Joseph. And God quickly Revenged it, with bringing them under an absolute Slavery to the Egyptians!

To this Purpose have some Friends of Liberty, reflected on the Conduct of Joseph. Indeed I cannot approve the Acrimony wherewith I have seen the Memory of so great and so good a Man, and one who concluded his Life with such glorious Piety, insulted in some Reflections. And the Silence of the Sacred Oracles, as to any Insinuations of Dislike upon his Conduct, would make one very modest in Reflections upon it; and somewhat suspicious, whether Joseph did not find the Egyptians in as bad Circumstances of Slavery, as he left them. Nevertheless, I cannot altogether avoid coming into the opinion, that his Conduct was not managed by the Rules of Goodness; and that Joseph did really strip the Egyptians of those Rights, which all the Innocent Part of Mankind have a Natural Claim to; and of which if he did not find them invested, at his coming to the Government, yett he ought to have improved his Interest with Pharaoh, the best that he could, for the Restoration thereof unto them. However, I desire that nothing here may be considered, as my own particular sense upon the Matter.

I will only annex the Words of Monsr. Saurin in his Dissertations.

"Joseph, tho' a good Man, enslaved a Free-born People, and introduced Arbitrary Power into Egypt, with all its terrible Consequences; whereby after his Death, the Israelites came under cruel Bondage."

Q. Israels bowing himself upon his Beds Head, what might be the Import of it? v. 31.

A. The Chaldee Paraphrast thinks, The Divine Glory now appeared, which thereupon Jacob devoutly worshipped. It seems to have been however, in Way of Thankfulness to God, for the Assurance he had received of his being buried with his pious Fathers.

If the Apostle Paul had not understood this Bowing, to be an Act of Worship, we might have listen'd unto those Modern Writers, who thus translate the Words, He laid himself down upon his Pillow; as weak Men use to do, after they have satt up a while. The Hebrew Word, will well enough allow of such a Translation.

And yett, it seems not evident unto Dr. Patrick, That the Apostle [Heb. XI.21.] does translate this Passage: For the Apostle is there speaking of another thing, and not of what Jacob did now: Not of what Jacob did when Joseph swore to him, but what he did, After these things, when he blessed his Sons. The Apostle saies, He worshipped upon the Top of his Staff; which are not a Translation of Moses's Words in this Place, but are Words of his own, to explain the following Story, & express how strong his Faith was, when his Body was so weak, that he could not worship without the Help of a Staff.

This clearly removes all the Difficulty, (and a Deal there hath been) about Reconciling the Words of Moses, to the Words of the Apostle.⁵⁵

Q. Is there any thing observable, in the Time, that Joseph nourished his Father, & his Fathers Family, in Egypt?

A. Seventeen Years was the Time; which was just as long, as his Father had nourished him, before his being sold into Egypt.⁵⁶

Q. The Patriarchs mentioning the Death of Rachel? v. 7.

A. Saurin observes; The Sacred Historian putts here into the Mouth of Jacob some Expressions, of which we do not easily discover the Connexion. As for me – Rachel died by me in the Land of Canaan. But they express the Motives which induced this Patriarch to exalt the Sons of Joseph unto so eminent a Dignity; namely, because they were the Grandchildren of that Rachel, whose Memory was yett so dear to him, and whose Death had been so bitter & grievous.⁵⁷

Q. When Jacob speaks of, The Angel which Redeemed him from all Evil, whom does he intend? v. 16.

A. Many of the Fathers, as Athanasius, and Procopius, understand hereby the Son of God Himself.

But hear the Words of that famous Divine Georg. Calixtus:

“The Discourse is not concerning the Sending the Son of God, in our Flesh, to Redeem Mankind, but only concerning the Præservation and Prosperity of One Man; and therefore I do not know, whether it be safe to call him an Angel, i.e. Minister or Messenger, but a principal Cause, together with the Father.”

Calixtus herein follows Chrysostom, who takes this Angel, to be one properly so called; and thence proves the Angelical Care over the People of God. And Basil does the like, in Three Several Places of his Works. But yett it entred not into their Thoughts, that Jacob here pray'd unto an Angel; He only wish'd, that the Children might have the Angelical Protection by the special Favour of God Blessing of them. When David saies, (Psal. 35.6.) Lett the Angel of the Lord persecute them; No body will say, He prayes to an Angel; tho' his Words are exactly like these of Jacob.⁵⁸

Q. Give mee a just & full Paraphrase upon that Clause in Jacobs Will, Moreover, I have given to thee [Joseph] one Portion above thy Brethren, which I took out of the Hand of the Amorite, with my Sword and with my Bow? v. 22.

A. Jacob, after his Blessing upon Ephraim & Menasseh, speaks after this Manner unto Joseph; "Behold, I Dy, and am ready to bee gone; but God will assuredly bee with You, and bring your Posterity into the Land promised unto their Fathers. Now, as a Token that I do firmly Beleeve This, I do Give and Bequeath unto thee, (and therein, I prefer thee above thy Brethren) that Peece of Land, nigh unto Shechem, which I bought of the Children of Hamor, the Father of Shechem; [See Gen. 33.19.] Which tho' Little in itself, yett was All I had by Purchase, in the Land of Canaan; and therefore I Give and Bequeath it unto thee as my Heir. This Peece of Land was indeed siezed, among the rest, by the Neighbouring Amorites, after the Slaughter of the Shechemites, and they would not by fair Means Restore it unto mee; so that I was forced to Recover it, by the Assistance of my Sons and Servants, out of their Hands, by Force of Arms; therefore I do still count it my own, and I certainly know, that hereafter it shall become the Inheritance of the Ephraimites."⁶⁰

Memorandum. This very Portion of Land afterwards did become the Portion of the Ephraimites. [Consult Josh. 16.1. & 20.7.] And the Bones of Joseph also were buried afterwards, in this very Portion of Land. [Consult Josh. 24.1. & 25.32.]

It is also to bee noted, That the Hivites, (concerned in this business) and the Amorites, were so mingled, as to make but one Nation.

Gazeaus (Commentarii in Octateuchum) [PG 87. Pt. 1. 485–86]. George Calixtus, Historia Josephi (1641, 1654) is here quoted at second hand. Calixtus apparently agrees with St. Chrysostom's comments on Gen. 48:16 (Homilies in Genesis 66.10, p. 261) and, perhaps, with St. Basil's in Homiliae super Psalmos (PG 29. 244, lines 47–48 ff), arguing that Jacob did not pray to an angel inasmuch as his words expressed gratitude and devotion to God.

⁵⁹ Simon Patrick on Gen. 48:20 (Commentary 1:154).

Yea, Amorites may seem to have been the general Name of all the Seven Nations; They being the Chief: Just as the People of the Seven United Provinces, are now called, Hollanders, who are the most potent of them all.⁶¹

Q. But then, how do some of the Ancients here understand, Sword and Bow?

A. Jerom, and some others by, Sword and Bow, understand no other than his Money. He may call, they say, his Money, by those warlike Names, to signify, that this was the only Instrument used by him, to acquire any thing. Just as the Romans, when they would signify, they had gott any thing, without any other Help, save their own Industry, say they obtained it, Proprio Marte, a military Similitude.⁶²

The Chaldee Paraphrase carries it, By Prayer & Supplication.⁶³

⁶¹ The final two paragraphs in this annotation are from Simon Patrick on Gen. 48:22 (Commentary 1:155).

⁶² Simon Patrick on Gen. 48:22 (Commentary 1:155). St. Jerome's interpretation appears in his Quaestiones Hebraicae in Genesim [PL 23. 1007] and literally signifies "acquired by war," or more euphemistically, "purchased by bravery" (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 82).

⁶³ Targum Onkelos (48:22), in Walton (1:219).

Q. On that, my First-born, my Might, and the Beginning of my Strength the Excellency of Dignity, & the Excellency of Power? v. 3.

A. Mr. Pyles observes, That from these eminent Characters & Priviledges of Eldership, we may learn the Import of that Phrase, First-born, [πρωτοτοκος,] as used in the N. T. & applied unto our SAVIOUR.

The LXX render these Words, The Beginning of my Strength, by, Αρχη τεκνων μου. The Head, or Lord, of my Family. Accordingly, CHRIST who upon the Account of His Creating and Governing all things, is called, πρωτοτοκος πασης κτισεως. The First-born of every Creature, [Col. I.15, 16, 17.] is there also called, κεφαλη and Αρχη, The Head, & the Lord; which latter Words our Translators wrongly render, The Beginning. And so, that | Expression, The First-begotten, or First-born, of, or from the Dead; are explained, Rom. XIV.9. by His being Lord both of the Dead & of the Living.⁶⁴

Q. Dying Jacob expresses his Displeasure against Reuben: Dying Moses leaves a Blessing on Reuben? v. 4.

A. An Ancient Father, one Diodorus, gives this Reason of the Difference; Non poterat Jacob non maledicere Intemperanti Filio ad posterios-deterrendos. Debut autem Moyse illum criminis culpâ liberate; quia Fratri Joseph semper nepercerat.⁶⁵

Q. That Stroke upon Reuben, Thou shalt not excell: How was it accomplished? v. 4.

A. We do never find any great Thing done by this Tribe, in all the Scripture. And they were not so numerous (to which the Vulgar Latin refers this) by more than a Third Part, as the Tribe of Judah (to whom God gave Part of Reubens Prærogative,) when Moses took the Summ of the Congregation.⁶⁶

⁶⁴ Extracted from a footnote of Thomas Pyle's Paraphrase with Short and Useful Notes (1717), vol. 1, part 1, ch. 49, p. 289. Christ is identified as the firstborn in Matt. 1:25, Luke 2:7, and elsewhere. The reference to the LXX is to Gen. 49:3. As usual, Mather omits the diacritical marks supplied in his source.

Q. What means Jacob, in that Passage about Simeon and Levi, They dug down a wall? v. 6.

A. There was nothing at all of a Wall in the business. Wee have reason to think, that the Town assaulted by these mettlesome Sparks, was not walled at all; much less, that they would give themselves the Labour, the Liesure, & so the Hazard of demolishing a Wall. Besides, a Wall is not שׂוֹר but שׂוֹר in the Hebrew Language. I say then, That what wee translate, A Wall, is to bee translated, An Ox. And now there are especially two Opinions, above the rest, that stand fair for the Sense of the Place, as accommodated unto this Translation. One is that of the French Version, who so read this Clause, Ont enlevé les Bœufs pour leur plaisir; or, They carried away the Oxen. And this agrees with the Report, in Gen. 34.28. They took their Sheep, and their Oxen, & their Asses, & all their Wealth. Another is that of the ingenious Pfeiffer, who saies, That by the Oxe here mentioned as Ham-stringed, is meant Shechem, the Son of Hemor, the Raptor of Dinah. As the former Clause refers to the Death of the Father – They slew a Man; so the latter Clause may well refer to the Death of the Son. And Rulers are in the Scripture sometimes called by the Name of Oxen. Whence the LXX sometimes translate ⁶⁷ Mather's primary source is Simon Patrick on Gen. 49:5 (Commentary 1:156), whose own sources include Ludovicus De Dieu's Animadversiones in Veteris Testamenti (1648) 52–53 (on Gen. 49:5), and Job Ludolphus's Historia Æthiopica (1681), Iobi Ludolfi alias Leutholf dicti Ad suam Historiam Æthiopiam antehac editam Commentarius (1691), lib. 1, cap. 15 (note 106). Ludolph approves of De Dieu's translation, adding, "Their Counsels are nothing, but Force and Arms" (Patrick, Commentary 1:156). Ibn Ezra on Gen. 49:5 reviews the debate in his Commentary (1:422–23), but offers much the same interpretation.

Q. But a further Touch upon that Prophecy, about the Tribe of Simeon, I will divide them, & scatter them? v. 7.

⁶⁹ According to his “Note Book of Authors” (on Gen. 49:5, 6, 7), Mather’s sources include “Taylors Brethren in Evil” and “T. Fullers Snare broken”: the former remains as yet unidentified; the latter refers to The Snare Broken (1656), bound with The Best Name on Earth (1657), a collection of sermons by Thomas Fuller (c. 1607–61), Anglican clergyman and author of the still prized Fuller’s Worthies (1662). Much of what Mather covers here can also be found in Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:292); Bochart’s Hierozaicon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 11, col. 179–80); Henry Ainsworth’s Annotations (1627) 165 (n), and before them in Piscator’s Commentarius in Genesin (1601), on Gen. 49:6; in Junius and Tremellius’s annotations to Biblia Sacra (1593) 53 (note 13 b), and, of course, in Rashi (Mikraoth Gedoloth 3:623). The ambiguity arises when the words שָׂרִי [showr], ox, bull (Gen. 49:6) and שְׁרָיִם [shuwr], wall (Gen. 49:22) [Strong’s # 7794, 7791] are read with or without the vowel points of the Tiberian Masorah. It is unclear which French translation Mather has in mind. Perhaps he refers to the previously mentioned translation by the Huguenot Charles Le Cène (see note 228 on Gen. 37:3 above). The French theologian Jacques Lefèvre d’Étaples (c. 1450–1536) published his translation of the OT (Vulgate) and NT (Greek) in Antwerp, in 1530. However, Mather may more likely refer to René Benoist’s 1566 dual Latin and French translation (at the time controversial for its Calvinist flavor) or even to the highly esteemed dual language edition (Latin and French) La Sainte Bible en Français (Paris and Reims, 1709–17), by the French Oratorian Louis de Carrières (1662–1717). August Pfeiffer’s Hermeneutica Sacra (1684) elucidates this issue for Mather. The LXX (Hos. 12:12) renders the Hebrew noun שְׁרָיִם [shewarim], bullock, ox as ἀρχοντες [arkontes], ruler, authority, etc. Hence the paranomasia, or play on words, involves the similarity in sound between שְׁרָיִם [shewarim], oxen, and שָׂרִים [sharim], singers – perhaps punning on the idea of the hamstrung oxen and the freshly circumcised Shechemites, whose suffering enervated them in their self-defense against Simeon and Levi’s revenge for violating their sister. Mather appears to refer to R. Jacob ben Eleazer, in Ben Melech (on Josh. 11:6, 2 Sam 8:4), who argues that the noun שָׂרִי is an “epithet of a prince” and metaphorically refers to the princes or rulers (Hamor and Shechem) who were felled by Simeon and Levi (see John Gill’s Exposition [2006], 1:302).

⁷¹ Adapted from Patrick on Gen. 49:7 (Commentary 1:156–57), but also see Thomas Fuller’s Pisgah-Sight of Palestine (1650), bk. 2, ch. 2, p. 227 (“Note Book of Authors,” on Gen. 49:7).

A. The Inheritance, which by Lott fell unto the Tribe of Simeon, did remarkably fulfil this Prophecy. Simeons Posterity had a Portion only in the Midst of the Tribe of Judah; (Josh. 19.1, 9.) And we find them Assisting one another, to enlarge their Border. (Jud. 1.3, 17.) In after-times, when their Portion became too strait for them, they acquired Possessions, where they could, far from the rest of their Brethren. Five Hundred of them, went & settled, on Mount Seir. [1. Chron. 4.39, 42.] But there was a further Fulfilment, as it should seem, in one Effect of the Divine Providence. For, as the Instructors of Men, among the Israelites, were of the Tribe of Levi, scattered all over the Land; so the Instructors of Children, were of the Tribe of Simeon. There were a Sort of Scribes, that were the Schole-masters of the Nation, generally Scattered all over the Nation; and these, they tell us, were mostly of the Tribe of Simeon.⁷²

Q. And what Remarkable Reflection may one make on the Scattering of Simeon and Levi? v. 7.

A. There is a surprising thing, which the Providence of God, often brings to pass in the Government of the World; That they who Associate in Wickedness, are punished with Separations, and Alienations from one another, brought about most unaccountably.

Q. A Remarkable Fulfilment of that Passage, in the Blessing of Judah. Thou art he, whom thy Brethren shall praise? v. 8.

A. R. Simeon ben Jochai, ha's this Gloss upon it; Non dicit homo, ego sum Reubenita, vel ego sum Simeonita; sed ego sum Judeus. All the Brethren of Judah, own'd him, when all the Tribes took their Names from him; They were & are, all called Jewes.⁷³

Q. Wee are now approaching to the most famous Prophecy of Shiloh. Begin with giving us a New Account of that Name? v. 10.

A. Leclerc will needs have the Name signify, The End. He will have Jacob only say, That the Empire should remain in the Tribe of Judah, until the Commonwealth of Israel should come to its End. There is one M. Gousset, who in his,

⁷³ Mather quotes at second hand R. Simeon ben Jochai (Yohai), purported author of the Zohar, whose gloss appears in Midrash Rabbah (Gen. XCVIII:6) and translates, "A man does not say, I am a Reubenite, or a Simeonite, but I am a Jehudi [Jew]."

Commentarij Linguae Hebraicae, refutes Leclerc, and also shows the Unsatisfactoriness of some other Expositions. He advances one of his own; He saies, The Word is composed of the Letter, /w/ which in Composition is as much as the Pronoun Relative, He that: And of the future of the Verb, Lahah, which signifies, To be Fatigued, or, Wearied. So that the Word, Shiloh, signifies, He that ought to be exposed unto many Fatigues; which every one knowes, to agree admirably well with our Saviour.⁷⁴

Q. What may be meant, by the Scepter, and the Lawgiver, promised unto Judah? v. 10.

A. Selden, observes, That the Word Scepter was of old, more used than Crown, or Diadem, (which are more used of later Times) to signify, Kingly Power. Accordingly, Amos. 1.5. He that holds the Scepter, is no other than a King. And the Kingly Power began in the Tribe of Judah, when David was King over all Israel: and his Posterity held it, until the Captivity of Babylon.⁷⁵

But then the Law-giver follows. This intimates a Diminution of the Dignity, before the Finishing of the Prophecy. For the Mechokekim, were not of æqual Power with the Kings; we translate the Word, Governours; [Jud. 5.9, 14.] who were not endued with the highest Power, but had their Dependence on the Power of another. R. Solomon Jarchi, expressly saies, That Schebet signifies the Highest Authority, and Mechokek, signifies a lesser Magistrate; such an one as the Kings of Persia sett over the Jewes, after their Coming out of Babylon. Zorobabel was then made their Mechokek; and when they were afterwards invaded by the Seleucidae, they recovered this Authority, & maintained it, and præserted it, by the Maccabees; until they were deprived of it by the Romans, about the time of our Saviours Coming. Chr. Wagenseil, who hath weigh'd this famous Text with much Exactness, thus carries it, There shall be either Kings or Governours among the Jewes, till Christ come. And it was most literally accomplished.⁷⁶

⁷⁴ Mather's primary sources are Saurin (Diss. XLI, 1:313–14); Jean LeClerc's Twelve Dissertations (1696), ch. 11, pp. 282–83; Jacques Gousset's Commentarii Linguae Ebraicae (1702) 424 (Laaah); Joseph Mede's Works (1664), bk. 1, Discourse 8, pp. 45–48; and Thomas Fuller's Pisgah Sight of Palestine (1650), bk. 2, ch. 13, p. 268 (for the latter, see "Note Book of Authors" on Gen. 49:10). For a helpful discussion of Shiloh, see Pierre-Daniel Huet's Demonstratio evangelica (1690), Prop. 9, cap. 4, §§ 21–23, pp. 422–23; the most detailed summary of the various positions on Shiloh up to the middle of the 17th century can be found in Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:294–304) and Works (3:490–514).

⁷⁶ See R. Solomon Jarchi (Rashi) on the Talmudic tractate Sanhedrin 5a (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 3:626). Mather (via Patrick 1:158) refers to Tela Ignea Satanae (1681), a collection of Jewish polemical writings against Christianity and a Christian apologia and refutation through

Yea, tis Remarkable, That the whole Time, from the Beginning to the Period of Judahs Authority, was well nigh æqually divided between Kings and Governours. According to Josephus, they lived under Kings, from Dauids Time to the Captivity, Five hundred Thirty two Years. And under the Governours, after the Captivity, they lived much about the same Number of Years. For, there being 588 Years from the Captivity, to the Birth of our Saviour, if 70 Years be deducted (which was the Time of the Captivity) and so be added (in which, after the Birth of our Saviour, Herod and his Son Archelaus reigned in Judæa, and it was not yett reduced into a meer Province,) there were just 528 Years. This renders the Prophecy of Jacob, to be yett the more astonishing!⁷⁷

The Letter Vau, before the Word which we translate Lawgiver, is here a Disjunctive, & not a Copulative.⁷⁸

If it be objected, That the Maccabees were of the Tribe of Levi, the Prophecy does not say, The Rulers were to be of the Tribe of Judah, but the Tribe should have a Government of their own. And by Judah are meant, all that should be called Jewes; which comprehends the Tribes of Benjamin and Levi, that were incorporated with that of Judah; & were called Judah, in Opposition to Israel. Mordecai, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, is expressly called, (Est. 2.5.) A Jew. And so the Maccabees were Jewes.⁷⁹

From between his Feet,] is by Wagenseil translated, Even to the last End of that State. For, the People at the Feet, signifies, [Exod. 11.8. 2. King. 3.9.] those that bring up the Rear. Some of the ancient Interpreters in the Talmud, accordingly expound it, of the Last Posterity of Judah, & the Times when their Commonwealth should be coming to a Conclusion.⁸⁰

Q. The famous Prophecy of Dying Jacob, about Shiloh; I pray, give us a few further Strictures upon it; and vindicate from the present Cavils, of the Tribe to whom it was made? v. 10.

A. 'Tis evident, all along, that the Patriarch here foretels unto his Children, what should befall them in their Posteritie.

Now, wee must, first, affirm, That the Shiloh here promised, is none other than the Messiah.

Lett the Name signify, His Son, or, The Person that was to bee sent, or, The Person for whom it was Reserved, or, The Peace-giving One, still the Messiah layes claim unto it.

They tell us, 'T'was Moses. But how was hee the Son of Judah? or how had the Tribe of Judah, the Power of the Scepter & Law-giver, until hee came?

They tell us, It might be Saul, who was anointed King, at Shiloh. But his Coronation was at Mispeh; And how was the Gathering of the People unto Him? Nor did Judah come to its Empire, till some time after his Decease.

Much less will Jeroboam, fitt this Prophecy; for hee took not away the Scepter from Judah.

David was indeed, a Son of Judah; but at his coming sure, the Scepter departed not.

But what ridiculous Banter is it then, to apply this Oracle unto Nebuchadnezzar? Sure, hee was not a Son of Judah! And how could such a Vengeance as hee, bee promised as a Blessing, to the People of God? Besides; During the Babylonish Captivitie, the Jewes were governed by their own proper Judges, who had Power of Life and Death. And when they came out of that Captivitie, they were under Zerubbabel, who was not only one of their own, but also one of the Blood Royal. Briefly, The Tribe was kept still entire, under a Government, by Lawes of its own.⁸¹

The Jewish Rabbins, to bee further obstreperous, besides abundance of grammatical Criticisms, do try to make this Evasion from the Force of this Prophecy; That the Sense is, The Scepter & Law-giver shall not Depart from Judah, AFTER the Coming of Shiloh. But how forced, how strained, a Version is this? Their Fore-fathers never gave it. Nor can it bee Received as True; for Daniel assures us, That after the Coming of the Messiah, the Jewish City & the Sanctuary should bee destroy'd; and I pray, what then becomes of the Scepter?⁸²

⁸¹ The preceding paragraphs are extracted from Jacques Saurin's Dissertations (Diss. XLI, secs. 3–4, 1:341–42).

⁸² Saurin (Diss. XLI, sec. 7, 1:343–44).

They go on, that, Shebet, which wee translate, The Scepter, is, The Rod; namely, The Rod of Affliction, & Punishment, which was to bee continually inflicted, it seems, till Shiloh come. Well, But how will that agree with the Following Words; Nor the Law-giver from between his Feet? These Words are evidently an Allusion unto the Custome; That the Supreme Magistrate had his Place, upon a Kind of Seat or Throne, erected higher than the rest of the Assembly; and hee had a Secretary sitting at his Feet, There to write down the Dictates of his Will, or the Lawes, & so to deliver them unto the People; for which reason, hee is here termed, A Law-giver. Besides, What Rod of Affliction, or Punishment, lay upon the Tribe of Judah, in the Dayes of Solomon?⁸³

1713.

Q. The most effectual Way to Illustrate and Vindicate, the Illustrious Prophecy of Shiloh, will bee, to make the Jewish Rabbis themselves to do it? v. 10.

A. It shall bee done.

Only I will first observe unto you, a Curiositie. R. Kimchi, for one, tells us, That Shiloh, which, hee saies, here intends, the Messiah, is derived from that Word, which denotes, the Secundine Attending the Birth of an Infant. Now, Macer, the Poet, who wrote before the Coming of our Saviour, observes, that this is, entirely,

— Matris de semine facta, and his Observation is True. Some learned Men, have therefore thought, that the Name of Shiloh, intimates our Lords being Born of a Mother, without a Father.⁸⁴

Wee will now take notice;

That the Targum of Onkelos, expressly expounds, the Scepter, to bee the Exercise of Dominion, or Government; and Shiloh, to bee the Messiah.⁸⁵

That in Bereschith Rabba, the Scepter & the Lawgiver, here mentioned, is expounded of, the Consistory, and Sanhedrin, meeting in the Polish'd Chamber, which was in the Tribe of Judah: And so tis likewise expounded in Bereschith Keizara.⁸⁶

⁸³ See Saurin (1:337), and sec. 2 (1:340–41); Patrick (1:158); and Manasseh ben Israel (Conciliator, Quest. 68, sec. 8, p. 97), who points to R. Joel ben Soeb, who reads Shebet as “the rod of chastisement”; and to R. Isaac Abarbanel’s commentary on Samuel, who agrees with R. Joel, yet with the modification that God’s people “will not forget the Law” in spite of their continued punishment.

⁸⁴ R. David Kimchi (on Gen. 49:10), in Hachut Hameshulash (3:867). See also Mikraoth Gedoloth (3:627). Most likely, Mather refers to Aemilius Macer (d. 16 BCE), the Roman didactic poet of Verona, author of Ornithogonia and Theriaca (two poems on birds and serpents), and friend of Tibullus and Ovid. Macer observes that the placenta (“secundine”) is entirely “made from the seed of the mother.”

⁸⁵ Targum Onkelos (Gen. 49:10–12) in Walton (1:221) and Etheridge (1:151).

⁸⁶ Genesis Rabbah (XCVIII:8).

That in the Book, Aboda Zara, and in the Book, Sanhedrin, tis acknowledged, that the Power of Judging, in that Consistory, was utterly taken away from them, Forty Years, before the Destruction of the Temple. Ecce, per | [454v]
Quadraginta Annos ante Destructionem Domus cassata sunt, Judicia Animarum. And it is there also acknowledged, That a little after this, the Wicked Kingdome (namely, that of the Romans,) utterly destroy'd the Consistory itself, and made it Capital, for any to bee ordained into it: One of the great Ordainers particularly, the Romans kill'd, by shooting Three Hundred Arrowes into him, et fecerunt eum ut Cribrum.⁸⁷

Now lett us Address our Jew; Ex ore Tuo, serve nequàm. Wee will proceed upon your own Confessions, and prove the Messiah to bee come.⁸⁸

Q. If the Prophecy of Shiloh, bee such a Prophecy of our Lord Jesus Christ, why did our Lord Himself never mention it, nor any of His Apostles? v. 10.

A. Pererius gives this Reason; Because this Prophecy only proved the Time, when the Messias should come, and not that our Lord was the Messias. But, if the Evangelists had quoted every Text belonging to the Messias, they must have transcribed almost all the Law & the Prophets.

Yea, more than so; If our Saviour had alledged this Text, in Proof of His being the Messias, and said, The Scepter was now departing from Judah, this would have Raised Jealousies in the Heads of the Jewish Government, and been many Wayes Inconvenient. Nor could the Apostles have insisted on it, as a convincing Argument for the Proof of Christianity, until Jerusalem was destroyed, & the People dispersed; which was after the Writing of the Gospels.⁸⁹

But this Matter must not go over so.

It is promised, That the Scepter should not depart from Judah, until the Obedience of the People were to the Messiah; or until the Spreading of His Kingdome

into the Gentile World. Now, tis observed,⁹⁰ there is one Remarkable Expression of our Saviours concerning this Matter, so direct unto this Purpose, that one can hardly think any other, but that He had this very Prophecy in His Eye, when He uttered it. We chuse to offer the Observation in the Words of Mr. Mede; in his Discourse on this Prophecy.⁹¹

“Our Saviours Prophecy of the Destruction of the Jewish State, in the Gospel of St. Matthew. There, after He had named some other Signs to precede it, he adds this for the Last Sign; And this Gospel of the Kingdome shall be preached in all the World, for a Witness unto all Nations, & then shall the End come. That is, The End of the Jewish State. When the Gentiles by the Preaching of the Apostles, should be gathered unto Christ, then should the Jewish Church & Commonwealth be utterly dissolved; which, till then had continued united under some Polity & Form of Government, from its first Beginning. For so it pleased the Wisdome of Almighty God, when He [Bv] would reject the Jewes, not to dissolve their State, till He had erected Him a New One among the Gentiles.”⁹²

Q. What means, The Gathering of the People, that must be, to Shiloh?

A. Abarbinel himself shall expound the Words; The People of the Nations shall be gathered to worship the Messiah. See L'Empereur in Jacchiad. And, Codex Middoth. Or, if we render it, The Obedience of the People; as Wagenseil would have it, according {to} Onkelos, & the Jerusalem, and Kimchi; [and in Prov. 30.17. the only Place besides this, where this Word Jikkah is found, it seems to signify, Obedience] it comes to the same issue.⁹³

Q. Some will object, that there yett remain Difficulties, in the Promise of the Scepter to the Tribe of Judah, until Shilo comes; Inasmuch as, not only Nebuchadnezzar possess'd himself of the whole Kingdome of Judæa, but also Antiochus the King of Syria, subdued the Jewes; and they submitted unto Alexander the Great; Ptolemy likewise conquer'd them; and the Romans at length sett Herod, an Idumæan, over them?

A. One John Pontas hath lately [In 1698] published at Paris, a Book, entituled, Sacra Scriptura ubique sibi constans. In that Book, he attempts the Solving of all these Difficulties; and his Way to do it, is This.⁹⁴

He saies, That Judah, is a term used by the Spirit of Prophecy, in the last Words of Jacob, for Judæa, or the Jewish Nation. And accordingly, Jacob saies no more, but that the Jewes, should alwayes have a Prince of their Nation, till the Coming of the Messiah. The Posterity of Israel, had lost the Name of Israelites, and were called only from the Name Judah, at the Time, when this Prophecy was accomplished. Now, there will be found, an uninterrupted Succession of Princes, of the Posterity of Jacob, from David, to Herod, in whose Reign the Messias was born. Jechonias, who was carried captive into Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, was re-established by the Son of that Nebuchadnezzar. And after him, Zorobabel governed the Jewes, and those People, had alwayes Governours of their own Nation, till the Time of the Maccabees, who were also Jewes, and whose Posterity governed in Judæa, until the Time of Herod the Great. The Maccabees, tis true, were of the Tribe of Levi; and this mightily encumbers those, who maintain, that the Scepter continued actually in the Family of Judah. But Pontas's Exposition of Judah, to mean Judæa, abundantly helps the Matter.

will take the Liberty to add, that it may be inserted in this Name not without a Mystery; as being the first Letter of Jah, or Jehovah.⁹⁶

Now none of those Writers, who have proposed this Root for the Name Shiloh, (as Vatablus, and Fagius, and Castalio, and Schindler, and Avenarius, and Hottinger,) have observed the wonderful Contrivance of this Word, and its Agreeableness to express unto us the Glories of our Lord-Redeemer. It remains then to be demonstrated, That there is no Name Imaginable, so Agreeably applied unto the Redeemer of the World.⁹⁷

There are three Significations of Shalah;

One is, Salvavit, or Salvus fuit. Either to Save, or to be Safe. [Job. 3.26.] Hence the Etymologists, derive the Latin Word, Salvare, from this Hebrew, Shalah.

Another is, Quiavit, or Quietus fuit. Either to Give Peace, or to Have Peace. Εἰρηγενειν, in the LXX. [Psal. 122.6.] Shiloh is the same with Peaceable.

The Third is, Felix fuit. With the LXX. ευθηνειν. To be Prosperous. [Psal. 30.6.] Shiloh is as much as to say, The Prosperer.⁹⁸

Lett us now ponder the Weight & Worth of this Marvellous Name.

First; Shiloh, contains in it, that Ravishing Name of JESUS, which was by an Angel from Heaven directed for our Lord. He is called therefore, [Act. 13.23.] A Saviour, Jesus. The Word Σωτηρ used there, is of so vast an Importance, that we are told by Tully; Hoc quantum est? Ità magnum ut Latino uno verbo exprimi non possit. It is very sure, Servator (a Word then in Use,) came short of it; and therefore, Salvator was used by the Latin Fathers, as a Fuller Word. And by Tertullian, the Word, Salutificator, is used as yett more significant. But Grotius comes after all, & corrects Tully, & out-does the Orator in his own Tongue, and avers that the single Word, Sospitator, is of the same Sense with Σωτηρ, and altogether as Full. It signifies, not only a Præserving from Destruction, but also a Restoring to lost Happiness, and a Conferring of a positive Benefit. Our ⁹⁶ Edwards (Farther Enquiry 14).

⁹⁸ Mather closely paraphrases Edwards (Farther Enquiry 15–16). As usual, Mather omits the diacritical marks that are supplied in his source.

Shiloh merits this Name, all the Wayes that can be imagined. Indeed the Jewes, instead of ישיעו do style Him only ישי and by that Curtailing of the Name, they lett us understand, That they do not own Him, for a Saviour. But we have all the Reason that is possible, to adore Him, as a compleat and perfect Saviour. Joseph had this Title once by Pharaoh given unto him, Zaphnath Paaneah. Jerom who had been in Egypt, and probably had learn't there the Interpretation of that Egyptian Title, interprets it, A Saviour of the World. He Saved not only Egypt, | [456v] but other Countreyes, from Ruine by Famine. But it is our Shiloh alone, who is, [Joh. 4.42.] The Saviour of the World. The Samaritans, who used that Expression, probably learnt it, from this very Expression in the Pentateuch.⁹⁹

But we have Peace also in & from our Shiloh. It is He that makes Reconciliation for Iniquity. The Counsil of that Peace, and Reconciliation, was from all Eternity, between the Lord, and the Branch. And in the fulness of Time, He made Peace thro' the Blood of His Cross. [See Rom. 5.8 – and Eph. 2.14 –] The Shiloh is as much as to say, the Mediator, and Reconciler. The Principles of Christianitie, do also most effectually conduce to the Promoting of Peace among Men. Yea, our Peaceable Messias will One Day as a greater than Solomon, fill the World with Peace. [See Isa. 2.4. and Isa. 9.6.] And it was indeed a Time of Universal Peace, when the Messias came first into the World. After Five Civil Wars, and infinite Slaughter and Bloodshed, the Gates of Janus's Temple were shutt, that Peace might be as it were shutt up therein; A thing, whereof, as Plutarch notes, until this Time, there had very rarely been any Exemple.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁹ Edwards (Farther Enquiry 17, 18, 19, 20, 21). The Greek noun Σωτήρ (Soter) suggests “a savior, deliverer, preserver.” Edwards affirmatively cites Marcus Tullius Cicero’s Actionis in C. Verrem secundae (2.63.154): “What a great expression is this! So great that it cannot be expressed by any single Latin word.” Tertullian (De Resurrectione carnis, cap. 47) [PL 2. 863A] uses his neologism Salutificator to signify healer, deliverer, savior. See his On the Flesh of Christ (ch. 14) and On the Resurrection of the Flesh (ch. 47) – both in ANF (3:533–34, 580). Hugo Grotius (on Matt. 1:21) employs the term in his Annotationes (2:10–11). Edwards’s Hebrew references ישיעו and ישי appear to be based on the etymological dictionary Sefer Tishbi (1541), with Yiddish and German translations of each Hebrew radical, by Elias Levita (1468–1548), the famous Jewish grammarian and Masorite, who collaborated with Paulus Fagius in establishing a Hebrew printing press in Isny (Germany). Fagius’s explication appears in his Exegetica sive expositio dictionum hebraicarum (1642). In his Quaestiones Hebraicae in Genesim on Gen. 41:45) [PL 23. 1007], St. Jerome argues that “by the Egyptian word Saphaneth Phanee or, as the LXX wished to transcribe it Psonthom-Phanech, is meant the saviour of the world, because he [Joseph] had rescued the world from impending destruction by famine” (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, p. 78). The Samaritan woman called Jesus “Saviour of the world” (John 4:42, see also 1 John 4:14), but Edwards here has in mind the Seleucid ruler Antiochus Epiphanes IV (c. 214–164 BCE), whom the Samaritans called “Soter” (Savior), according to Josephus (Antiquities 12.4.10). For the rabbinic view of Shiloh as the Messiah, see Mikraoth Gedoloth (Genesis 3:626–28).

¹⁰⁰ Edwards (Farther Enquiry 22, 24, 25, 26). Dan. 9:24; Col. 1:20. Plutarch (Numae 20.1–3; Comparatio Lycurgi et Numae 4.6), Plutarch's Lives 1:373, 399) relates that the double doors (“Gates of War”) of the Janus Temple on the Janiculum (Rome) flew wide open when Numa’s

Finally; Prosperity belongs to our Shiloh. [Jer. 23.5. Luk. 1.32, 33.] It follows here, To Him shall the Gathering of the People be. Onkelos's Targum renders it, The People shall be obedient unto Him. And the Jerusalem-Paraphrase hath it, All the Kings of the Earth shall be subject unto Him. When the People mett Him with Palm-branches, it was to call Him, The Shiloh, the Prosperous, the Triumphant.¹⁰¹

Q. Tho' we have had so many Entertainments, upon the Blessing of Judah, and particularly upon SHILOH, the Subject is not yett exhausted, but there is Room for more? v. 10.

A. And we shall be assisted and supplied from Dr. Tho. Sherlock for them.¹⁰³

There is a notable Hint in the Apocryphal Ecclesiasticus; That the several Blessings given to the several Tribes, are but Parts or Portions of the Blessing, which Jacob received from Isaac; Isaac from Abraham; and Abraham immediately from GOD. When Jacob comes to Bless his Children, he transmitts to his Posterity, the Blessing which he had himself received. And when he entitles the Two Sons of Joseph, to a Share with their Uncles in the Land of Canaan, he founds his Right of Granting it unto them, upon GODs Grant of that Land unto himself. Now the Blessing of Abraham, derived unto his Chosen Offspring, consisted of Two Parts: The Promise of the Land of Canaan, and the Promise of the Son in whom all the Nations of the Earth were to be blessed. These two Promises from the Beginning went Inseparably together, and they continued in some Degree to do so unto the End. There never was any Doubt among the Jews, Ancient or Modern, but that the Promise of the Messiah, was limited unto the Tribe of Judah, in the Blessing here pronounced upon him. Nor is it Reasonable to imagine, that Jacob in dividing his Blessing among his Posterity, should forgett the chief and principal Part, which had been with so much Solemnity conveyed from Abraham, thro' Isaac, to himself. And indeed, the Expression here used, Thou art he whom thy Brethren shall praise, is æquivalent unto that, unto Abraham, Thou shalt be a Blessing; and that, Blessed be he that blesses thee.¹⁰⁴

The Promise of the Blessed Seed could not be divided; a Son can be born but of one Father; So this Blessing went entire to the Tribe of Judah. All the other Tribes had their Blessing assigned them from the Promised Land; and Interpreters need not be concerned, as they sometimes are, to find wherein the Peculiar Blessing on some of the Sons, to or of whom there is little said, may consist: For the Making of them to be Heads of Tribes, conveyed unto them a Right unto a Share in the Land of Canaan; and their Blessing did consist in That; By That they received a Portion of the Blessing of their Father.¹⁰⁵

All the Promises of Power and Plenty, in the Blessing of Judah, are Part of the Promise which GOD gave unto Abraham & his Posterity, of a Land flowing with milk & honey.

But now comes the Promise; of, The Sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the Lawgiver from between his Feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall be the gathering of the People.¹⁰⁶

The Promise to Abraham was, That he should be the Father of many Nations; and of Sarah, That she should be a Mother of Nations. To Jacob it had been said; GOD will multiply thee, that thou mayst be a Multitude of People. The Succession in the House of Abraham was præserv'd in single Persons, until the Time of Jacob. He is the First, who had a Numerous Issue, and all of them entitled unto the Promises made unto their Fore-fathers. The Sons of Jacob lived with him, as Children of his Family only, till his going down into Egypt. And in all the Seventeen Years of his Life there, there is no Appearance of any Authority in any Heads of Tribes. When Jacob drew near his End, he summoned all his Family, in order to appoint the Form of Government, which he would have to take place after his Death, and continue as long as his Posterity should hold the Land of Canaan in their Possession. The XLVIII and XLIX Chapters of Genesis, may truly be called, The Settlement of Israels Government, by their Father Jacob. Accordingly, in the first place, Jacob gives to Joseph the Birthright as to the Temporal Inheritance; by giving him a Double Portion, and raising Two Heads of Tribes in his Family. Here, the Promise to Abraham, That he should be a Father of many Nations, and of Sarah, That Kings of People should be of her, began to take Effect. For, from this Time forward, the People of Israel are still reckoned by their TRIBES; which were so many Distinct People, or (in the Language of the Book of Genesis) we may say, so many Nations; Independent of each other, and subsisting under Judges and Rulers of their own; but | confœderated for mutual Defence, and the Maintenance of one Law given æqually to all. What kind of Power Jacob settled on these Heads of Tribes, may appear from what he himself says concerning one of them, He shall Judge his People, as one of the Tribes of Israel. Every Prince, or

Head of a Tribe, did Judge his own People. And so, every Tribe had a Sceptre, and a Lawgiver, as well as Judah.¹⁰⁷

After the Death of Jacob, accordingly we soon find, Applications made, not unto the People, but unto the Elders of Israel. [See Exod. III.16. XII.1. XIX.3, 7. XXXIV.31, 32.] Their Government was not Monarchical, but Aristocratical; and no one Tribe had a Superiority over another. [See Exod. VI.14. Num. XXXIV.18. Josh. XXII.14. Judg. I.1. V.9, 10.]¹⁰⁸

Jacob having settled the Twelve Princes, or the Rulers of People, in his House, then summons them together, to hear in that Quality, what was to befall their People in future times. And now, what can we understand, by the Sceptre, in what relates to Judah, but that very Power, and Right of Government, which he now settled in the House of Judah, & in all the other Tribes, but whereof he saw the Departure from the other Tribes long before the Coming of Shiloh, whereas it should remain with Judah, till Shiloh come. The Sceptre is not peculiar to Judah: Tis not promised unto him, that he should Have a Sceptre, which none of his Brethren were to have; but that the Sceptre, which he had, would continue longer with him, than Theirs would with Them. The Sceptre here, is an Emblem of Authority in and over no more than one Tribe: and can by no means denote an Authority over all the Tribes of Israel. Indeed the same Word in the Original [Schebet] signifies a Tribe & a Sceptre; perhaps because a Tribe is a Collection of People under the Government of one Sceptre, or Authority.¹⁰⁹

The Import of the Word, Lawgiver, here, cannot be determined, but by reference to the Constitution intended in it. And here, it must be governed by the Sense of the Word Sceptre. If the Word, Sceptre, signify the Authority over a Tribe only, the Word, Lawgiver, joined with it, must be so confined, as to mean only such Lawgivers as the single Tribes had within themselves. If now we read it, A Lawgiver from between his Feet, shall not depart from Judah, the Meaning is, That the Lawgivers of Judah should be of his own Descendents. And so we know they were. If we read it, A Lawgiver shall not depart from between the Feet of Judah, the Meaning is, That the Tribe of Judah should have Lawgivers of their own, to the very Last Times. Thus Onkelos carries it; and thus Wagenseil. The Tribe of Judah never had a Legislative Authority over all the Tribes; No, not even in the Days of David and Solomon. Moses, who was the only Lawgiver to all Israel, excluded all Kings from this Power. They were to have a Copy of the Law, and never to turn aside from the Commandment. The Ordinances made by David, relating to the Service of the Temple, were established by the Authority of the Princes and Rulers of the Tribes consenting to them. [Ezr. VIII.20.] The single Tribes did make such Rules as we call By-Laws; But the Law of Moses was the unalterable Rule, both for Civil & for Ecclesiastical affairs. The Word here we would rather therefore take for, Judge, than, Lawgiver.¹¹⁰

As to the Term Shiloh, abundance has been written on it, which needs not now be repeted. In all Views, it still terminates in CHRIST. And a Continuance of the Power now settled in the House of Judah, is promised, until the Messiah come.¹¹¹

Lett us consider the Context. Judah is the only one, who receives Two Blessings from his Father; The Promise of the Blessed Seed; And, a Portion in the Land of Canaan, for the Maintenance of which, a Government was established in his Family. This Prophecy promises a longer Continuance of the Government in the House of Judah, than other Tribes were to expect, and fixes a Term for the Duration of the Sceptre with him. Taking both his Blessings together, is it not Natural to think, that the Continuance of his Temporal Dominion and Inheritance is assured unto him, to last until the Com-| mencement of his Better Promise. This is according to the Analogy of all the Promises from Abrahams Time; in all which, the Land of Canaan is inseparably annexed unto the Promise of the Blessed Seed. Ishmael, and Esau, are therefore sent out from thence, to plant other Countreys. Upon the Settlement made by Jacob, in his Family, the Land of Canaan is divided; But that Part of it, which attended upon the Promise of the Blessed Seed, was (as formerly) so united & annexed unto that Promise, that it could not be entirely lost, until the Blessed Seed should come. And this is the Reason, why the Land of Judah, in distinction from the Land possessed by the other Tribes, is called, The Land of Immanuel. [Isa. VIII.8.]¹¹² [459r]

It follows here, Unto him shalt be the Gathering of the People. They who understand this Passage, as relating to the Messiah, have great Reason on their Side, and the Authority of the most ancient Interpreters. Yett some learned Men think, that these Words are by a Natural Construction to be referr'd unto Judah. The Difference is nothing, Lett us take which way we will. But in the latter of these Two Interpretations, the Prophecy most exactly describes, the State of Judah, during the Continuance of the Sceptre with him, after the Departure of the Sceptres from the other Tribes of Israel. Tis admirable to see the Accomplishment! The Remnant of all the Tribes, after the Assyrian Captivity, were indeed Gathered unto Judah, and fell under the Obedience of that one Tribe; and the whole Nation from their being styled, The People of Israel, were hence forward styled, The People of Judah, or Jews. Toward such a Sense, the Prophecy began to operate immediately upon the Division of the Two Kingdomes; GOD then promising to Solomon, One Tribe for the Sake of David. There were in truth Two Tribes, Benjamin as well as Judah; together with Part of the Tribe of Simeon, and many Families of the Levites, & of the other Tribes, who dwelt within the Borders of Judah, remained under the Obedience of Judah. The only Reason why this Body of People can be called, one Tribe, is, That the Tribe of Judah alone maintaining its Authority and Constitution, the rest were all Gathered unto this Tribe, and sunk in it. [See 1. King. XII.17, 20, 21, 23.] The Term of Jews was introduced now, to signify the Tribe {of} Judah, and all the rest of the People united with it. All that came from the other Tribes were considered but as an Additional Strength to Judah. [See, 2. Chron. XI.13, 16, 17. XV.9.] From the Time of the Assyrian Captivity, the Case was yett more plain. They who escaped, as, no doubt, many did, the general Confusion, fell under the Dominion of Judah. And accordingly, Josiah's Reformation extended unto them. [See 2. Chron. XXXIV. 6, 33.] After the Return from the Babylonish Captivity, we hear of little else but Jews; tho' Benjamites were joined with them. And albeit many Families of the other Tribes returned, upon the Decree of Cyrus, yett these were but gathered unto Judah, and became One People with him.¹¹³

The Seventy Years of the Babylonish Captivity are a Period of Time, which carries the most face of Difficulty on the Scheme we have before us. But lett it be considered, The Jews were not carried into Babylon to be Slaves, but were transplanted as a Colony, to people the mighty City of Babylon.¹¹⁴ They are commanded by the Prophet therefore, to Build Houses, and Plant Gardens, and Seek the Peace of the City. Yea, many of them were so well settled, that upon the Expiration of the Seventy Years, they would not return to their own Countrey any more. They also lived in Babylon, as a Distinct People, and were governed in their own Affairs, by their own Rulers & Elders, appointed Fasts and Feasts, and ordered their other Matters within themselves. Thus it appears, that the Power & Sceptre of Judah, relative to the Subsistence of the Tribe, was not removed in this Captivity. The Tribe had its Constitution, while it was in Bondage under the Kings of Egypt. It began in Egypt. And it was not lost in Babylon. They returned into Judea, as a People & a Nation governed by their own Laws; as is evident

[460v] from | the Complaint sent against them, unto the Persian Emperour. Tis true, they were never more so Free a People as they had been before: But still, they lived as a Distinct People, governed by a Law of their own. And the Authority of others over them, destroyed not the Authority of Judah, but subsisted with it: And the Romans made, A Covenant with the People of the Jews. In our SAVIOURS Time, tho' they had not forgotten their Captivity in Babylon, and were sensible enough of the Roman Yoke now upon them, yett they say, We never were in Bondage to any Man. They counted themselves Free; And they were so: For they lived by their own Law, & executed Judgment among themselves. [See, Joh. VIII.5. Matth. X.17. Joh. XIX.6. XVIII.31.]¹¹⁵

It is now most evident, That the Sceptre placed in the hand of Judah, by his Father Jacob, continued in his Posterity, till the Death of our SAVIOUR. From That Time, all things began to work towards the Destruction of the Jewish Polity; and within a few Years, their Temple, City, Government, were utterly ruined. The Jews were not carried into a soft & short Captivity, to enjoy their Law, and live as a Distinct People, in a foreign Countrey, but they were sold like Beasts in a Market, and from that Day have nothing like a Prince or Lawgiver among them.¹¹⁶

The Blessing of Moses on the Tribe of Judah, well considered, will very much confirm, what has been offered.

Our Scheme is not very different from what has been offered by Junius and Tremelius, and by our Aynsworth; And Monsr. Joncourt has lately revived it & improved it.¹¹⁷

Q. Why is it said of Judah, His Eyes shall be Red with Wine, and his Teeth White with Milk? v. 12.

A. Dr. Castel finds fault with the Translation; because it should be said of none but a Drunkard, His Eyes are Red with Wine. He would have it so translated; His Eyes (or, His Countenance) shall be brighter than Wine. But there is no Need of being so critical. For, as Dr. Patrick notes, there is no Reason to think, he means, they should make their Eyes Red with Drinking Wine, any more than that they should wash their Cloathes in it. It may only express, the great Abundance of Wine, that they should have among them.

What followes is, Teeth white with Milk. Milk doth not make the Teeth white, but it gives an excellent nourishment; they who feed on it are healthy and hearty; and their Teeth do not Rott so soon as theirs, who feed upon other Dainties. It means, That they should have Rich Pastures in their Countrey, that should yeeld abundance of Milk.¹¹⁹

Q. How could it be said of Zebulon, His Border shall be unto Zidon? v. 13.

A. He don't mean the City of, Zidon; for the Tribe of Zebulon did not extend themselves beyond Mount Carmel, which is Forty Miles at least from thence. But he means the Countrey of Zidon, or Phœnicia, which the Zebulonites touched upon. For the Phœnicians were called Zidonians; as Hesychius ha's informed us. Whence the LXX read Phœnicians for Sidonians.

It is, by the way, an astonishing thing, that Jacob should foretel so many Years aforehand, the Scituation of his Posterity in the Land of Canaan; when their several Portions afterwards fell by Lott, & not by Choice, unto them.

It is remarkable, also, that Zebulon is mention'd before Issachar, who was his elder Brother; for no Reason, that we can think of, but because the Lott of Zebulon was to come up before Issachar's, in the Division of the Land. [See Josh. 19.10, 15.]¹²⁰

Savior King “riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass” (Zech. 9:9; Matth. 21:5) is here seen as subverting the NT Christ.

¹¹⁹ Both paragraphs are extracted from Simon Patrick on Gen. 49:12 (Commentary 1:160). Patrick's source is Oratio in Scholis Theologicis (1667) 32–33, and Lexicon Heptaglotton (1669), by Dr. Edmund Castell, aka. Castello (1606–85), prebendary of Canterbury and professor of Oriental languages at Cambridge, who collaborated with Brian Walton in establishing the famous London Polyglot, Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (1653–57).

Q. What is meant, by Dans Judging of his People? v. 16.¹²¹

A. Jacobs Meaning is, That tho' he were the Son of a Concubine, yett his Posterity should be governed by an Head of their own Tribe, as the other Tribes of Israel were. So he took away all Distinction between the Sons of the Concubines (of whom Dan was the first,) and those which he had by Leah and Rachel.¹²²

Q. How do you understand that Passage of Jacob, in the Blessing of Dan, I have waited for thy Salvation, Ô Lord? v. 18.

A. What can bee better, than the Paraphrase of Jerom, upon this Passage? – Nunc videns in Spiritu – “i.e. I foreseeing in the Spirit, Sampson the Nazarite, nourishing his Hair, & Triumphing over his slaughtered Enemies; that like a Serpent & Adder in the Way, hee suffered none to pass thro' the Land of Israel; and if any were so hardy, confiding in the Swiftnes of an Horse, as to adventure like a Robber to spoil it, hee should not bee able to escape, – I foreseeing this Nazarite so valiant, & that hee Dyed for the Sake of an Harlot, & dying destroy'd our Enemies; I almost thought, Ô God, that hee was the Christ, thy Son. But because hee Dy'd, & Rose not again, and Israel was afterwards carried away captive, I must expect another Saviour of the World, & of my Posterity; That Shilo should come, to whom shall bee the Gathering of the People.”¹²³

But I pray, Lett us consider that Passage over again, and the Notable Occasion of Introducing it?

That the Messiah is here intended, wee have some of the Jewish Rabbins themselves confessing. How runs the Targum of Ben Uzziel? *When Jacob foresaw Gideon and Sampson, to bee the Deliverers of his Posterity, hee saith, I do not so much expect the Salvation by Gideon, or the Deliverance by Sampson, which are Temporal and Created Salvations, but I expect that Redemption which thou hast promised in thy Word to come unto Israel, that Salvation that shall bee forever.*¹²⁴

But the Occasion of Jacobs breaking forth into such a sudden and sacred Ejaculation is Remarkable. Hee had just been speaking of a Serpent, and the Subtilty of that Serpent. This presently Reminded him of what had been done to our First Parents, by the Serpent, that was the Subtilest of all the Beasts of the Field: and so hee breaks forth into an high Expression of his Faith, for the Salvation which God had promised against that Serpent. Hee had kept the Promise of the

Q. How did a Troop overcome Gad? v. 19.

A. Gad lived in a Frontier Countrey; very much exposed unto the Incursions of the Ammonites, and Moabites, and the envious Neighbours, which dwelt near Arabia. [See Jer. 49.1. and Amos. 1.13.]

But how Gad overcame, consult, Judg. 11.33. and, 1. Chron. 5.22.¹²⁶

Q. What singular Instance can you give, of Ashers yeelding Royal Dainties? v. 20. –

A. The Scripture speaks of a Town call'd Cana, and indeed, of a Double Cana: one in the Tribe of Asher, (Josh. 19.28.) the other in the Tribe of Ephraim. (Josh. 16.8.) The Cana in the Tribe of Asher indeed is mentioned, with great Sidon; and this, not because of Cana's nearness to Sidon, (which ha's made a Cana Sidoniorum, distinct from Cana of Galilee, by a Mistake of Interpreters, generally following, Jerom, in Locis Hebraicis;) but because Ashers Coast, went up toward Sidon, for of that, and not Cana's being near Sidon, is the Text in Joshua, to bee understood. Now this Cana must needs bee in Galilee, for Asher was in Galilee; nor is any other Cana in Galilee, I suppose, to bee mett withal. And this Cana, you find Yeelding Royal Dainties indeed, when our Lord Jesus Christ, there Turned Water into Wine. That Miracle of our Lord, was a Yeelding Royal Dainties in Asher.¹²⁷

Q. Naphthali's giving Goodly Words, How & When was it? v. 21.

A. I confess myself to find a particular Satisfaction, in seeing the Scriptures, as much Illustrated, with Discoveries of the Messiah in them, as may bee. Thus, Naphthali, (the Galilean) giving of Goodly Words; and what Moses foretels, of Zabulon, and Issachar, (Galileans) calling the People unto the Mountain of the

Q. The Prophecy of Josephs being, A Fruitful Bough, by a Well; How was it accomplished? v. 22.

A. There was a famous Well, wee know, which was called, Jacobs Well. [See Joh. 4.6.] It is remarkable, That Josephs Offspring, increased unto a Kingdome, in Jeroboam, & that in Sichem, hard-by Jacobs Well.

It followes, His Daughters went over the Wall. Wee may do well, rather to render, the Hebrew Word, שׂוֹרֵר / The Enemy; (as it is in Psal. 92.11. and perhaps, Psal. 18.29.) for it is from the Chaldee only, that it signifies, A Wall. The Words may then bee Interpreted, as a Notable Prophecy, concerning those Daughters of Joseph at Shiloh; who passing over to the Enemy, restored the Hostile Tribe of Benjamin, that otherwise were like to have been extinct for the Want of Issue. [Judg. 21.9.] Wee will then render the Words, The Daughters go over to the Enemy. Thus are foretold here, two very signal Events, that rendred the Offspring of Joseph Illustrious. One, That hard by that Well, it should increase into a Kingdome. Another, That the Daughters of this Tribe, should Restore & Rebuild a Tribe, that had almost perish'd in its Hostility against them.¹²⁹

Q. How do you take that Passage; From thence is the Shepherd and the Stone of Israel? v. 24.

A. Supply, Factus est, so Munster. From thence (that is, from his Afflictions, and his Patience & Constancy under them,) he became the Shepherd & the Stone of Israel; and arrived unto that Advancement, which enabled him to Nourish and Support that chosen Family.¹³⁰

Q. On that, The Blessings of thy Father have prevailed above the Blessings of thy Progenitors? v. 26.

¹²⁸ Jacques Saurin (Diss. XLI, 1:309 n.).

¹³⁰ The Latin citation from Sebastian Münster's Hebraica Biblia (1546) 1:109, annot. (m) signifies, "from this."

A. Saurins Paraphrase, is “My Ancestors never made so fervent, or so magnificent Vows in my Favour.”¹³¹

Q. What are, The Blessings unto the utmost Bounds, of the Everlasting Hills? v. 26.

A. Blessings to last as long as the World shall last. Perpetuity is thus expressed. [Isa. 54.10.] So Kimchi, So R. Solomon.¹³²

Here seems an Allusion to the Noble Mountains, which fell to be the Portion of Josephs Children; Bashan, and Mount Ephraim.

Others think, Here is not Respect had unto the Duration of the Mountains, but the Fruitfulness of them. They translate the Hebrew, Tavath, not, Bounds, but, Desires, as the Vulgar Latin doth. And then the Sense is, Unto all that is most desirable in those Everlasting Hills. Compare, Deut. 33.15.¹³³

Mr. Pyles observes, This Clause may not only mean, Blessings high & lasting as the Rocks & Hills; But also here may be some Respect unto the Mountains of Ephraim, and Samaria and Bashan: where the Lott of Ephraim and Menasseh lay; called Ancient and Original Hills, remaining ever since the Deluge, & not cast up newly by Art.¹³⁴

Q. What means Benjamins Ravining as a Wolf? v. 27.

A. The Warlike Temper of the Tribe. A Wolf is both an Undaunted and a Rapacious Creature. It was dedicated unto Mars. Wolves are called Martij, and Martiales, in Virgil and Horace. Warlike Men, are called by the Greeks λυκόφρονες, Wolf-like Men. History Justifies this Character of the Benjamites. They fought and beat the other Tribes, when they had Sixteen to One against them.¹³⁵

¹³⁵ Mather’s primary source is Simon Patrick on Gen. 49:27 (Commentary 1:163), but Patrick’s own source for the classical references is Samuel Bochart’s Hieroicoicon (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 10, col. 827–28). In his “Note Book of Authors” (Gen. 49:27), Mather also lists as his source Thomas Fuller’s Pisgah-Sight of Palestine (1650) 262. “Martij” and “Martiales” suggest “belonging to Mars” (god of war), hence “warlike.” The designations appear in Virgil’s Aeneid (9.566) and in Horace’s Carmina (Ode 1.17.9). The Greek poet-grammarian Johannes Tzetzes, among others, speaks of the “lukophrones” or “wolf-like” (rapacious) men in his Chiliades 8, history 204 (471, 473).

we may pay that Regard unto our learned Heidegger, as to fetch a few Gleanings out of his Exercitations upon it? v. 28.

A. It shall be done.¹³⁶

And, first; Ambrose and Ruffinus, and Theodoret, seem to quarrel at our Calling of these Prophecies, by the Name of Benedictions; whereas, as in the Instance of Reuben particularly; they seem sometimes Reprehensions rather than Benedictions. But Moses expressly calls them [Gen. 49.28.] Benedictions. And, besides the Rule of taking a Denomination from the Principal, our Heidegger observes, That Reprehensions, and Admonitions, and Castigations, which have a Tendency to bring Sinners unto Repentance, have Real Blessings in them.¹³⁷

The Prophecy of Reuben, which we render, Thou shalt not excell, is by the Targum of Onkelos, well rendred, Portionem superexcrecentem non accipies. The Prophecy here all along, foretels the fate of the Posterity, more than of the Persons of the Patriarchs. The Double Portion of Land, was lost by Reuben, & fell to Joseph; the Double Portion of Power, fell to Judah; And the Prærogative of the Priesthood fell to Levi.¹³⁸

The Action of Simeon and Levi, which we render, They digg'd down a Wall, is by the LXX well rendred, ἐνευροκοπησαν ταυρον. They hamstring'd a Beef. Some take it metaphorically, for, a Prince. The Jerusalem-Interpreter understands it of Joseph; and so does Jarchi, and Grotius. [Compare, Deut. 33.17.] Artemidorus tells us, ταυρος τον τυχοντα σημαινει. And Macarius tells us the Reason; Because a Beef is the King of all the Tame Animals. Clarius takes it for a Prophecy of what the Levites, and the Scribes, did unto our Saviour. But our Heidegger chuses to take it of the proper Beeves belonging to the Sichemites; for we expressly read; Gen. 34.28. They took their Sheep and their Oxen. It was the ancient Custome to Hamstring such Creatures, that they might for the present be incapable of Running away; but afterwards be cur'd, and made capable of being serviceable. [See Josh. 11.6, 9. and, 2. Sam. 8.4. and 1. Chron. 18.4.] This /העקירות/ or Subnervation, is thus described by Kimchi; Incisio pedum lument à Genu ad infrà, quo facto non moritur, sed incedere non valet, et in illà parte vulnus non est insanabile.¹³⁹

¹³⁶ The following paragraphs of Mather's annotation on Gen. 49:28 are all extracted from Johann Heinrich Heidegger (2:469–529, Exerc. XXIII, secs. 1–11).

On the Prophecy of Shiloh, we shall fetch nothing from our Heidegger, because we have elsewhere more fully considered it. And on the Blessing of Judah, we shall only take notice of that Passage in our Author; He is not willing to have this Translation stand; His Eyes shall be Red with Wine: [Because of Prov. 23.29.] But, His Eyes shall be Brighter than Wine, and his Teeth Whiter than Milk. And that Passage on what goes before it. The Patriarch foretells the Conversion of the Gentiles unto the Messiah; To Him shall be the Obedience of the People. Proceeding with that Argument, he compares them unto a foolish and stupid Colt of an Ass, bound unto a Vine. Shiloh is the Vine. [Compare, Joh. 15.1.] The Ass may be the Church of Israel, which had born the Burdens of the Mosaic Pædagoggy. This is to be done, when Shiloh shall wash His Garments in Wine, and His Clothes in the Blood of Grapes. That is to say, In His own Blood; whereof He Himself Instituted Wine to be a Type. [Compare, Isa. 63.1, 2.] His People also are His Garments. The Redness then ascribed unto Shiloh, may note, His Power and Anger against His Enemies; The Whiteness, His Purity in all His Dispensations. Tis what is intimated in the Vision; Rev. 1.14. His Head white like Wool, white as Snow; And His Eyes as a Flame of Fire.¹⁴⁰

To the Tribe of Zebulon, tis promised; His Border shall be unto Zidon. And yett they reached not beyond Carmel, which was Forty Miles distant from Zidon. Masius therefore will have the Meaning to be, that the Zabulonites living by the Sea-side, very much Traded with Zidon, a City famous for its Merchandise. Our Heidegger chuses rather by Zidon to understand, not the City, but the whole Sea-coast, on the Phœnician Shore; for the Sake whereof all the Phœnicians were called Sidonians, as well as Tyrians. The LXX, (as well as Hesychius,) will satisfy you of this. [Deut. 3.9.] And the Zebulonites reached hither.¹⁴¹

[464v] | But seemeth it not a Light Matter, to have no more of a Blessing mention'd, than just the Border of a Peoples Territory? Verily, It was a Great Matter! In this Prophecy we see God reaching forth His Hand, from Heaven, to Distribute Habitations unto His People. Two hundred Years before any Lott was proposed for it, the Inheritance which then fell by Lott unto the People of God, is here

Heidegger's reference to Clarius is perhaps to Clarius of Sens (fl. 12th c. CE), a monk of the Abbey St. Pierre le Vif, at Sens (France). Clarius is now best remembered for his Chronicon Sancti Petri Vivi Senonensis. (c. 1120). Finally, R. David Kimchi relates how a beast of burden can be hamstrung to keep it from running away: "An incision of the feet [is made] below the knee, as a result of which it does not die, but it is not strong enough to walk, and a wound in that area is not incurable." declared. All the Tribes of Israel, have a wonderful Earnest of their Inheritance given them, in assigning this one particular Instance of it.¹⁴²

Why must Issachar be compared unto an Ass? The ancient Hebrewes, and especially the Cabalists, tells, That an Ass was an Hieroglyphic of Wisdom; and therefore content with a Spare Diet, as the Students of Wisdom ought to be. Be sure, an Ass deserves to be an Hieroglyphic of Labour and of Patience. Our Heidegger inclines, to think, that Jacob refers to these Good Qualities of the Ass, rather than to the Stupidity of the Animal; The Tribe was noted for an affectation of Queer Industry, in the affairs of Husbandry. A Stupid Sloth we no where find exemplified in the Tribe; No; but what is highly contrary to it. [See Judg. 5.16. and, 1. Chron. 12.32.]¹⁴³

The Words of the Patriarch upon Dan, That he shall Judge his People, only intimate, That altho' he were born of a Servant, yett his Tribe should be of æqual Authority and Significancy, with the rest; as capable of yeelding an Head of a Tribe, as any of the rest.¹⁴⁴

The Serpent whereto the Tribe is compared, is doubtless the Cerastes. In the Situation of the Tribe there was the Accomplishment of it. They dwelt in the Borders of the Land, & were under a Necessity to use many Serpentine Methods, as well to Defend themselves, as to Offend the Enemies whereto they were very obnoxious. [See Jud. 18.27.] There is no need of going with the Jerusalem Paraphrase, to make the Actions of that one Man, Samson, a Fulfilment of this Prophecy. And yett in the Serpentine Methods of that one Man, the Genius of the whole Tribe was a little exemplified.¹⁴⁵

The Thing foretold of Gad, is, That the Tribe dwelling in the Extremity of the Land, should be vexed with many Infestations from their Adversaries; but being used unto those Vexations, they should at length grow so Expert and Active, as to be Victorious over them.¹⁴⁶

among Men, they were as an Hinde lett loose. Our Saviour preaching the Gospel, was He who gave goodly Words. [Compare, Psal. 45.3.] This Tribe did remarkably follow the Ministry of our Saviour. An Hinde lett loose, has no Keeper. Our Saviour looking on this Tribe, which thirsted after His Goodly Words, expressly compared them, unto Sheep Scattered without a Shepherd. [Matth. 9.36.] Jerom was the first who started this Exposition. A modern Divine has notably improved it. And our Heidegger is mightily taken with it; saies he, Dum hæc scribo, non sine Numine ad manus pervenit.¹⁴⁸

Why is Joseph called, One Separated from his Brethren? Indeed, he was on all accounts all along so, in the Course of his Life. But it may be rendred, The Principal of his Brethren. [Compare, Psal. 80.2. and, 81.5.]¹⁴⁹

On the Prophecy of Benjamin, the excellent Cocceius thinks, That the Time of the Israelitish Nation under its Lawgivers, is here distinguished into Two Periods; the Morning and the Evening of it. In both of these Periods, the Tribe of Benjamin was considerable, for a notable Benjamite appearing in the World. In the Morning appeared Saul the King; In the Evening appeared Saul, the Apostle. The Courage of the Tribe, is the thing intended, when a Wolf is used for the Comparison. The Wolves are by the Poets called, Martij, and, Martiales; And, λυκοθαρσης, is, Audax, et magnanimus. And, a, Lupinus Ululates (in Suidas called, λυκηθμος,) was used by some Nations, as an Animating sort of Cry, to begin their Battels withal. The most Valiant Men in the World, have derived their Names from this Animal; and Hercules is by Lycophron celebrated as a Cruel Wolf.¹⁵⁰

But I will take Leave here to insert a good Passage, which I find, in one John Smith, writing a Book entituled, Christian Religions Appeal.¹⁵¹

¹⁴⁸ Heidegger (2:521–22, sec. 10, § 8). St. Jerome, Traditionibus Hebraicis in Genesim [PL 28]. In his Quaestiones Hebraicae in Genesim (Gen. 30:8), Jerome defers to Aquila's translation and renders "Nephthalim" (Naphtali) as "a turning around" or "a bringing together" (Gen. 49:21). According to the LXX, "Naphtali" signifies "a watered field, yielding eloquence of beauty," but according to the Hebrew text "a hart sent forth" (Hebrew Questions on Genesis, pp. 65, 86). Heidegger is so taken with his colleague's improvement of Jerome's exposition that Heidegger believes providence has led him to this exposition: "While I write these things, it [his colleague's improvement] comes to my hand not without divine power."

¹⁴⁹ Heidegger (2:526, sec. 11, § 8). Deut. 33:16.

¹⁵⁰ Heidegger (2:528, sec. 12, §§ 3, 4). Johannes Cocceius's Lexicon et commentarius sermonis Hebraici et Chaldaici Veteris Testamenti (1669). Horace's Carmina (Ode 1.17.9), Virgil (Aeneid 9.566). Wolves are by poets frequently dubbed "belonging to Mars" and "sacred to Mars." The Greek word "lukotharses" (here translated as "Audax, et magnanimus") appears in Anthologia Graeca (bk. 7, epigram 703, line 5) and signifies "courageous and magnanimous." The Latin "wolf's howl" is in Sudas (Lexicon, alphab. letter lambda, entry 804) called "lukethmos." Finally, the Greek poet Lycophron (Alexandra 871) calls Hercules "a ravenous wolf."

¹⁵¹ The following paragraphs are extracted from Christian Religion's Appeal (1675), bk. 2, ch. 9, § 4, pp. 109–10, by John Smith (fl. 1675–1711), rector of St. Maries in Colchester.

He observes, That the Departure of the Scepter from Judah, which was to be the Signal of Shilohs Coming, imports, not only the Removal of the Thearchy from the Jewes, but such a Removal as was accompanied with a Translation of it unto the Gentiles.

The Prophecy implies a gradual Withdraw of their external Polities, Liberties, and Priviledges thereon depending; as the Sun setting, the Light thereof departs by Degrees, till it wholly disappear. Tho' we can make no Demonstration of it, while it is in Motion, the Steps thereof are so insensible; much less convince a captious Adversary, that the Sun is really sett, (if it be not seen at its going down,) till the Light be gone to a Degree, beyond that of any Cloud or Eclipse; yett then we arrive anon to a palpable Evidence, that the Sun is departed our Horizon. Whatever Loss of Light the Scepter sustained, before the Gentiles flock'd in to the Standard of our Saviour, yett until then, it was not σωματικως departed. There had been from David unto our Saviour, no greater Diminutions of its Light, than had been from Jacob to David. If those Down-castings of the Crown, to the Ground, which it suffered, by the Apostasy of the Ten Tribes, by the Babylonish Captivity, by the Persecution of Antiochus, by the Dictatorship of the Maccabees, or what else occurs in the History of that Interval, speaks the Departure of the Scepter, much more must it be departed in the Interval before David, in the Egyptian Bondage, or under the Judges, of which time the Scriptures affirm, There was no King in Israel.

But the Herculean Argument, is, That until our Saviours Time, there was no Concourse of any New People unto Israels God; nothing that would justify Him from the Imputation of making a losing Bargain, should He have cast off His old more numerous People.

Indeed, the great Access of Proselytes in Solomons Reign, said to be an hundred & fifty three thousand, [See Lightfoot] might occasion the Jewes to think it was the Gentiles Gathering to Shiloh, and boded the Departure of the Scepter in the falling away of the Ten Tribes. But yett it is evident, that the Scepter departed not, in the Sense of the Prophecy, till the Coming of our Saviour.¹⁵²

Q. What might be the Intention of Kissing the Dead? v. 1.

A. You have Instances of it in Ovid; and Corippus represents Justin the Younger, falling upon Justinian, and Kissing him with Tears, just like our Joseph here.

*Ut prius ingrediens corpus venerabile vidit;
Incubuit lacrymans, atque oscula frigida carpsit
Divini patris.*

Dionysius Areop. (c. 7. Eccl. Hier.) describing the Funerals of the Christians, he saies, The Bishop did pray over the Corpse, when it was brought into the Church, and after Prayer, Ἀυτος ἀσπάζεται τον κεκοιμημέ{ν}ον. Both he himself kissed the Dead Person, and after him, all that were present did the same. It seems to have been their solemn taking Leave of the Dead, until they mett in another World.¹⁵³ 2791.

Q. The Egyptian Physicians embalmed Israel. What was the Egyptian Way of Embalming? v. 2.

A. Will you accept the old Pagan Herodotus, as an Expositor upon Genesis? He, in his Euterpe, thus describes it.

“They took out the Bowels of the Dead; they cleansed them, & washed them with the Wine of Dates; and after that again with Odors: Then filled they the Bowels with Pure Myrrhe beaten, and Cassia, and other Odors, (except Frankincense) and sewed them up. After this, they seasoned the Corps, hidden in Nitre, Seventy Dayes: Not longer: After Seventy Dayes, they washed the Corps, and wrapped it in fine Linnen Cloth gummed, which Gum the Egyptians often used instead of Glew.”¹⁵⁴

¹⁵⁴ See Patrick on Gen. 50:2 (Commentary 1:164). Mather translates several lines from Herodotus (2.86).

Q. Forty Dayes were fulfilled for him.] On what Account? v. 3.

A. For the Embalming. Diodorus tells us of several Officers, who were employ'd about it, one after another; and he saies expressly, They spent more than Thirty Dayes in it. It may be, in Diodorus's Age, they attained unto a greater Perfection in the Art of Embalming, and made their Spices penetrate in somewhat less than Forty Dayes. Nor does Herodotus contradict this, when he saies, that the Body being stuffed with Spices, was pickled in Nitre, where it lay Seventy Dayes; For it means, only Thirty Dayes more, or till the Forty were made up Seventy.

Lett none upbraid Joseph, as too ceremonious, on this Occasion. For besides the Respect we owe to the Decent Customes of the Places where we live, the Dead Bodies of the Faithful, are to be treated (Austin tells us) as the Organs of the Holy Ghost; which the Ancients (he thinks) did well, to carry unto their Funerals, Officiosâ pietate.¹⁵⁵

Q. The Mourning Seventy Dayes, might it not be too long? v. 3.

A. Both Herodotus and Diodorus tell us of precisely the same Term, observed in the Mourning among 'em. However of the Rites mentioned by those Authors, we will suppose, only, Abstinence from Wine, and Bathing, and all Delicate Food, and Fine Clothes, to be used in Joseph's Time, or Court; and nothing of besmearing themselves with Mud. But for the Term of Seventy Dayes, it is proposed by Jacobus Capellus, that Joseph being the next unto the King, the Egyptians would Honour his Father, with something of a Royal Funeral, and a Mourning for Seventy Dayes, which he thinks, is a round Summ for Seventy two; for Diodorus makes that the Term of Mourning for their King. It seem'd Reasonable unto them, that as they gave the Fifth Part of the increase of their Land, unto their King, while he was alive, they should bestow the Fifth Part of the Year upon him, in Mourning for him, when he was Dead: which was just Seventy two; not reckoning the Five odd Dayes, which came not into their Account.¹⁵⁶

Q. The Seventy Dayes being over, why did Joseph ask the Grandees of the Court, for to speak unto Pharaoh for him, and not speak himself? v. 4.

¹⁵⁶ Extracted from Simon Patrick on Gen. 50:3 (Commentary 1:165). Herodotus (2.85–87), Diodorus Siculus (1.72.2); Mather here refers to Historia Sacra et Exotica (1613), ad A. M. 2310, by Jacobus Cappellus (1570–1624), French Orientalist and professor of theology at Sedan.

A. Strict Mourners did not, and might not, appear in Publick. At least, one might not appear at Court, in the Habit of a Mourner. Compare, Est. 4.1, 2.¹⁵⁷

Q. Do you observe any special Emphasis, in the Words used by Josephs Brethren, when they ask his Pardon & Favour? v. 17.

A. They say, Wee pray thee, forgive the Trespass of the Servants of the God of thy Father. Upon which I have seen this Remark made; That there is no greater Argument for Mens mutual Compliance with one another in their Desires, than Unity of Religion.¹⁵⁸

3504.

Q. Am I in the Place of God? What is the special Emphasis of those Words? v. 19.

A. They were the very Words, that his Father had once used unto his Mother; (Gen. 30.2.) to perswade her Submission unto the Divine Providence.

It is, q.d. “Shall I præsume, to oppose myself unto what is come to pass? or punish you for that which God hath turned so much to all our Advantage?”

Tho’ the Words may be simply rendred, I am in the Place of God. q.d. “I have nourished you, & sustained you all this while, and can you think, I will now do you Hurt?”¹⁵⁹

1877.

Q. What was the Reason, of the Patriarchs being so solicitous, to have their Bones Carried & Buried in the Land of Canaan? v. 25.

A. Lyra thinks it was, because the Spirit of Prophecy in them foresaw, that in that Countrey, there would bee a Resurrection of many Saints, with the Messiah, when Hee should Rise from the Dead, & they hoping to bee of that Number, would therefore be there interr’d.

But see Heb. 11.22. – it seems rather to bee, the Faith of their Offsprings going into Canaan.¹⁶⁰

Q. Joseph lived Eighty Years after his Advancement. Moses mentions not what Kings might this while succeed in Egypt?

A. According to Eusebius, the King whose Dream Joseph interpreted, was Amos. After he had Reigned XXV Years, he left the Kingdome to *Chebro*s, who reigned XIII Years. Next him was Amenophis (as much as to say, A Servant of

Then succeeded Mephramuthosis, who reigned XXVI Years. In the Beginning of his Time Joseph died.¹⁶¹

Q. In the Book of Genesis, wee have the mention of diverse Oracles given from Heaven; How many, and unto whom? v. 25.

A. It ha's been observed, That Forty Five oraculous Revelations, are mentioned in this Book; or Forty Five Communications from the Spirits of the Invisible World.

One indeed was from Satan. Gen. 3.1. The Rest were, from God, and His good Angels.

Of these there were Thirty Seven, to Pious Persons.

Q. Lett us now look back on the History of our Joseph, and see wherein he was a Type of our Blessed JESUS?

¹⁶¹ From Simon Patrick on Gen. 50:26 (Commentary 1:168). Mather's reference to Eusebius (via Patrick) is at third hand from Jacques Cappellus's Historia Sacra et Exotica (1613), who insists that the name of the pharaoh who elevated Joseph was Amos(is), "first king of the 18th Dynasty." However, the names of the Egyptian pharaohs and the years of their reign are from Manetho, the Egyptian historian, whose history survives in extracts in Flavius Josephus's Contra Apion (1.15). Significantly, Josephus does not mention the Egyptian ruler who appointed Joseph second in command, but Tethmosis, the pharaoh "who drove them [Israelites] out." Eusebius (Praeparatio evangelica 10.11.493d, 10.12.497a–b), out of Tatian's Address to the Greeks (ch. 36) and out of Clement Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.21; ANF 2:324), calls this Egyptian pharaoh Amosis, the one against whom Moses rebelled.

A. And an Admirable one he was! Calvin had just Cause to say, Josephus multis modis Figuram Christi gestavit, vel potius viva fuit ejus Imago. I think, I could reckon more than Fifty notable Parallels. I will touch upon the Chief of them, in the ensuing Reflections.¹⁶²

I. On Afflicted Joseph.¹⁶³

It is noted of Joseph; [Gen. 37.3.] Israel loved Joseph, more than all his Children. Thus, the God of Israel; the God of Heaven. Angels are by Creation, Sons unto Him; Christians are by Adoption Sons unto Him; And He Loves them all. Yea, but He ha's One Son, by Eternal Generation; the Son of His Age, of His Eternity. A Son Loved above all the rest. Of Him the Great GOD saies [Matth. 3.17.] This is my Beloved Son. The Eldest Son of the Beloved Rachel; the Eldest Son of the Beloved Mary; were both Beloved of their Father.

Joseph was a great Sufferer. But Jesus was a greater; And both the Hand from which, and the Ground on which, they suffered, had some Resemblance. From whom did Joseph suffer? We read; [Gen. 37.4.] His Brethren hated him. From such did our Lord suffer too. We read; [Joh. 1.11.] His own received Him not. As the Brethren of Joseph delivered him up to the Ishmaelites; thus the Brethren of Jesus, delivered Him up to the Romans. It was one of the Twelve, in our Lords own Family, that Betray'd Him: [You mind, by the way, the Number of the Family!] They were the People of our Lords own Blood, by whom His Blood was thirsted after. For what did Joseph suffer? We read, [Act. 7.9.] The Patriarchs moved with Envy, sold Joseph. For this did our Lord suffer too. We read, [Matth. 27.18.] For Envy they delivered Him. They could not bear to Think of Him, that the Son of the Carpenter should be the Son of God. They could not bear to See in Him; That all Creatures were at His Command. They could not bear to Hear from Him, That their Deeds were Evil. They said; If we lett Him alone, all Men will go after Him; therefore they did what they could, that they might gett Him out of the Way.

Joseph is employ'd on an Errand; [Gen. 37.14.] Go, I pray thee; See, whether it be well with thy Brethren. All we, were like Josephs Brethren. They were in Dothan. Dothan signifies Defection. We were in our Dothan, our Defection, our Apostasy. Our Father said unto our JESUS, Go look after them; Carry meat & drink unto them; See what their Calamities, and what their Temptations are. And He gave { Mankind else * torn} He went cheerfully, He went presently, at the Bidding of His Father.

When Joseph was looking and seeking after his Brethren, and upon a Travel for their Advantage; Then it was, that [Gen. 37.18.] when they saw him afar off, they conspired against him, to slay him. Thus, the Murderers of our Lord contrived Mischief to Him, when He was contriving Mercy to them. They said, [Matth. 21.38.] Come, Lett us Kill the Heir. But when was it, that They said it? They said it, when our Lord had left the Glory of His Father for their Sakes, as [He] was bringing the most precious Meat and Drink in the World unto them.

It is reported of Joseph; [Gen. 37.28.] They Sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites, for Twenty Peeces of Silver. Suppose it of the Common Sicle; and so, the Price was about Five and Twenty Shillings of English Money. By this means was Joseph, (like Jesus too) carried into Egypt, in his Childhood. Thus was our Saviour also Sold. And it is remarkable; There was a Judas, the very Name-sake of him that propounded the Selling of Joseph: of this Judas we read; [Matth. 26.15.] He betray'd our Lord, for Thirty Peeces of Silver; perhaps of the Sacred Sicle: and so, the Price was about Three Pounds fifteen Shillings Sterling.

'Tis recorded of Joseph; [Gen. 37.31.] They took Josephs Coat, and dipped the Coat in Blood. Thus abusively was our Lord stript of His Garments, by His Enemies. There was fulfilled that Prophecy; [Psal. 22.18.] They part my Garments among them. They would not lett Him leave His own Wearing Cloathes to any of His Kindred; tho' they were all the Estate He had in the World. He was crucified Naked, that He might purchase for us, the Robes of Everlasting Righteousness.

The Haters of Joseph, having Disposed of him, triumphed at that rate; [Gen. 37.20.] Now shall we see, what will become of his Dreams. But this was the very Way, that brought his Dreams to become Realities. The Jewes thought, that all the Pretensions and Prædictions of our Lord, were no more than so many Dreams; and when they brought Him to His Cross and His Grave, they thought, that they had Frustrated, all that He had Prophesied. But, Poor Fools! They were mistaken. This was the very Way, which did Effect all that He did Foretel. And so tis, in the Slaughter of His Witnesses!

A False Accusation, and a False Condemnation. And a False Imprisonment | [470v] were the Calamities of Joseph. And so they were, every one of them, the Calamities of our Blessed JESUS.

When Joseph was in Prison, we find, there were Two more with him there. [Gen. 40.3.] As Joseph was Imprisoned, so Jesus was Crucified. But [Joh. 19.18.] there were Two joined with Him in it; and those, most notorious Malefactors. Our Lord by those With whom He died, show'd For whom He died.

One of Josephs Two Fellow Prisoners was Restored, and Præferred; but there was a Sadder Doom for the other of them. One of those that were crucified with our Lord, was Pardoned and Præferred; but the other Perished in his Impænitent Infidelity.

Very Different were the Ends, of God, and of Man, in the Sufferings of Joseph. [Gen. 50.20.] As Different, in the Sufferings of Jesus. [Act. 4.28.] The End of Man, was to Murder, and Malice, and Cruelty; But the End of God was, To Save much People alive; And that very People too, who were the murderous and malicious Authors of this Cruelty.

Joseph was Tempted unto Carnal Adultery; But how Holily did that chaste young Man refuse it! [Gen. 39.9.] Our Jesus was Tempted unto Spiritual Adultery; that is, unto Idolatry: But He was more than a Conqueror.

We shall pass on, to Reflect,

II. On Advanced Joseph.

Here you shall see; Joseph is first a Malefactor, then a Magistrate; First a Prisoner, then a Prince; First a Bond-slave, then a Lord. Thus, our JESUS, must be, First Humbled, then Exalted. [Phil. 2.8, 9.] The Blind Jewes themselves, are so sensible, that this is to be the Condition of the Messiah, that being at their Witts-End about it, they say, there shall be Two Messiahs; a Suffering Messiah, the Son of Joseph, and a Glorified Messiah, the Son of David. So lively the Shadowes of the Messiah in Joseph!

When Joseph was a Prisoner, yett even Then, he was a Governour; namely, of the Prison. [Gen. 39.22.] Thus our Lord; at the Lowest of His Low Estate had still a Glorious Command over Death and Hell. They that were in the Prison of the Grave, came forth at His Call: And they that were in the Prison of the Air, confessed themselves to be at His Disposal.¹⁶⁴

There was given unto Joseph, that Honourable Title of, Zaphnath Paaneah, or, A Reveler of Secrets. But the Secret Things of God, are most wonderfully understood and expounded by our Lord Jesus Christ. There is none so discreet and wise, as thou art, O Lord. [Isa. 9.6. Dan. 8.13. Col. 2.3.]

This was the Præferment that Joseph arose unto; [Gen. 41.40.] Pharaoh said unto him, Thou shalt be over my House, and according to thy Word shall all my People be Ruled; only in the Throne I will be greater than thou. Thus ha's the God of Heaven said unto our Lord; Thou shalt be the Ruler over the World; and according to thy Word, shall every Creature move. Indeed, the whole World was Made for Him; to be Rul'd by Him. [Ezek. 1.26.] But still, the Father saies to the Mediator, I will be Greater than thou! Our Lord subordinates all His Dispensations, to the Glory of God. [Isa. 42.1.]

Tis related of Joseph; [Gen. 41.42.] They cried before him, Bow the Knee; or, as tis by some rendred, A Tender Father. Our Jesus has His Heralds too; which are to proclame all of this, concerning Him: His Ministers, who are to Lift up their Voice like a Trumpet; and Publish His Goodness, and Invite our Homage.

How old was Joseph, when he entred upon his public Service? We read; [Gen. 41.46.] Joseph was Thirty Years old, when he stood before Pharaoh. It is very surprizing to consider, That just at the very Same Age, our Lord came into public Action. [Luk. 2.23.]

We read; [Gen. 41.55.] When the People cried unto Pharaoh for Bread, Pharaoh said, Go to Joseph. Thus, when we cry for Mercy and Comfort, the Great God sends us unto our Lord Jesus Christ, for the Supply of all our Wants. [Col. 1.19.]

Tis in the Narrative of Joseph: [Gen. 41.56, 57.] Joseph opened the Storehouses, and all the Countreyes came unto Joseph, to buy Corn. Thus our Jesus; has blessed Storehouses for the Releef of Needy Souls. All Countreyes may come unto Him; and find that He can Fill the Hungry with good Things. [1. Cor. 1.30.] His Blood, His Grace, His Word.

Those very Men, that once could not bear to think, of Bowing before Joseph, but would rather Murder him than Honour him; yett at last, [Gen. 42.6.] They came and bowed down themselves before Joseph, with their Faces to the Earth. Even so; All the Enemies of our Lord, and they who now Despise Him, and Oppose Him, yett must one Day Stoup unto Him. [Isa. 45.23.]

We find; [Gen. 42.7.] Joseph at first, made himself strange unto | his Brethren, [471r] & spake roughly to them; he threw them into a dismal Distress. But afterwards he comfortably express'd Himself unto them, saying, I am Joseph your Brother. Thus, when the Elect are first brought Home unto our Lord Jesus Christ, first He Terrifies them, He Amazes them, He Setts their Sins in Order before them. Then tis, that He clears up His Love unto them, and saies unto them, I am Jesus, your Saviour. [Rom. 8.15. Isa. 61.3.]

Joseph discovered himself unto his Brethren first, and then to the Egyptians. Thus, the Jewes had the first Offer of our Saviour; and after that, Lo, He turned unto the Gentiles.

But Joseph discovered not himself unto his Brethren, till the Second Time of his Meeting with them. Thus, the Jewes did not know the Messiah, when they First Mett with Him here. When they See Him Again, and have an Interview with Him the Second Time, Then they shall Know Him, Love Him, Serve Him forever.

When Joseph had furnished his Brethren, with all Necessary and Convenient things, then, [Gen. 45.24.] he said unto them, See that yee fall not out by the Way. Our Lord ha's fill'd our Sacks; our Souls: And we pay not for it; it is, Without Money & Without Price. He causes us, to be Wash'd by His Baptism and Spirit; and causes us to be Fed at His Table with Royal Dainties. He affords us His Ordinances, as the Chariots of Salvation, to bring us unto Himself. But upon all, it is His Charge unto us; Fall not out among yourselves. [John. 13.35.]

Marvellous Tidings did Joseph send unto his Friends, in Canaan: [Gen. 45.26.] Joseph is yett Alive, and he is Governour over all the Land of Egypt. Such wonderful Tidings ha's our Lord Jesus Christ refreshed His People withal. [See Rev. 1.18.] Shall we, like Jacob, long to go unto Him?

When it was rumoured in the Royal Palace of Egypt, that Josephs Brethren were come; we read, [Gen. 45.16.] Pharaoh & his Servants were well-pleased at it. Thus, when Sinners are brought home unto the Lord Jesus Christ, there is Inexpressible Rejoicing in Heaven thereupon. [Luk. 15.7.]

Joseph made an Address [Gen. 46.31–34.] unto the King, on the behalf of his Brethren; and he likewise instructed them, how to Express and Behave themselves before His Majesty. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ Intercedes with God for us. [Heb. 7.25.] And, He shoves us also, how to spread our own Cause before the Lord.

In Joseph, we may see an Image of Jesus, Forgiving the vilest and the greatest Injuries.

In Joseph, we may see Jesus, carrying His Children to His Father, for a Blessing.

Finally; Joseph had said unto his Brethren, who had greatly wronged him, I am at Peace with you. And yett, after this, how Suspicious were they? [Gen. 50.15.] Thus, many a Justified Beleever, is under Doubts and Fears; I am still unpardoned.

But we will now gather no more from this Fruitful Bough.¹⁶⁵

[472v] [blank]

¹⁶⁵ The “Fruitful Bough” is most likely Heidegger’s 2 vol. De Historia Sacra Patriarcharum (1667–71).

Appendix A

As discussed in my Editorial Principles (# 4), the holograph MS reveals literally thousands of cancellations and emendations of one sort or another. Appendix A only records those cancellations and excisions that substantively impact Mather's commentary. The vast majority of Mather's textual emendations in the holograph MS consists of false starts or light stylistic revisions of phrases of one sort or another. For a complete record, readers should consult the readily accessible microfilm copies or the holograph MS at the Massachusetts Historical Society.

Gen. 1 39r–92v

279 27. Mather cancels: “But there need no more Peculiarities. Mos”

307 108. Mather cancels “The Books of Moses.” and reinscribes the page as “Genesis, Chap. 1.”

325 142. Mather cancels: “Q. Why is the Moon called one of the Two Great Lights.”

Gen. 2.105r–130v

444 53. Mather cancels the following passage at the beginning of [117r]:

“Q. The Situation, and some other Circumstances, & Remarkables, Of PARADISE, if you’l Attempt some Account thereof, You’l have an Opportunitie to not only Gratifie a learned Curiositie, but also to Illustrate a Thousand similar Passages of Sacred Scripture at once. Please then, to tell us, what you find concerned here abouts, in Monuments of Antiquitie? v. 5. A.”

464 114. Mather cancels the following paragraph: “Thus; [furnished from ye Lucubrations of ye my Learned Friend, Mr Samuel Lee] I have given you ye true Scituation Geography of Paradise, and have at the same Time Illustrated more than a little of ye Scripture Geography. Vole, et Fuere.”

Gen. 3.131r–158v

502 64. Mather cancels the following manuscript annotation on Gen. 3:15: “1927.

Q. That Argument of the Apostle, If thro’ the Offence of one, many bee dead, much more the Grace of God, and the Gifts by Grace, which is by one Man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many. Can it bee Exemplified, and Illustrated, from any of the Jewish Writings? v. 15.

A. There is a Remarkable Passage, in Libro Siphre, to this Purpose. Rabbi Jose of Galilee, said; Go forth, and learn ye Merit of ye Messias, and ye Reward of ye Righteous. The old Adam, who had but one Prohibition given him, & who Transgressed it, see, how many Deaths are Decreed, for him, and for his Generations, and for Generations of Generations, to the End of all Generations. Now, what Measure is multiplied; the Measure of Mercy, or the Measure of Vengeance? Answer thou, The Measure of Mercy is multiplied, the Measure of Vengeance is diminished. [Which is as much as to say, wee are punished below our Deserts, and Rewarded, above them.] The King Messias, is Afflicted, and Abased, with Fasting, and broken with Punishments, as it is written, Isa. 53.5. Hee was wounded for our Faults, Hee was bruised for our Sins. How much more shall Hee Justify all Generations; all and every one? For this is what is said. v. 6. The Lord hath laid on Him, the Iniquity of us all.” Wonderful Words to fall from ye Pen of a Jew, and here advantageously Introduced!”

512 90. Mather cancels: “Q. What might be ye special Guilt of Cain?”

Gen. 5.159r–198v

533 3. Following “Profane Ones;” Mather cancels a line from Juvenal: Terra malos Homines, nunc educat atque pusillos” (Satura 15.70), which translates, “Nowadays the earth produces humans who are nasty and puny.”

547 36. Following “If,” Mather cancels the following: “we select a few such Passages out of his Exercitations”

53 128. The adverb “certainly” replaced the canceled “unquaestionably,” suggesting Mather’s growing sense of uncertainty.

583 129. Again, Mather tones down his authoritative stance by replacing “unquaestionable” in front of “Bones” with “probably.”

587 136. Between the words “in” and “Comparison,” Mather cancels the following: “The Sons of Anak, and Og, and Goliah and ye rest of them, were Pygmies.”

592 150. The original paragraph reads as follows: “That I might be able, with a better Face of Authority, to assert unto the World, a Curiosity of so much Consequence; I addressed the ~~present~~ GOVERNOUR of New England, [~~Colonel Dudley~~] with my Request, That he (~~what a Person of as Great Learning as Honour~~) would give me under his Honourable Hand, what he had Seen, and Thought, of this Matter. He ~~most~~ Readily ~~and Courteously~~ obliged me, with the ensuing Letter.”

592 151. Mather cancels the place name “Roxbury,” preceding the date.

592 157. Mather cancels his transcription of the governor’s signature “Joseph Dudley.”

595 162. Mather cancels the following paragraph, which contains much of the same information as his commentary on Exodus 16:33 does: “It is probable, That all the Seeds of the Vegetable World, may have been created, at the Beginning of the World, and scattered here and there, in their Numberless Millions, about the Surface of the Earth, to be brought forth in After-Ages, by the usual Ways of Accident, and of Husbandry.”

610 192. After “asserverant,” Mather cancels “quis non videat.” Between “The” and “Ark, in” Mather cancels “others going more modestly to work,”

642 38. After “the Christian” Mather cancels the following: “of Man some Temper towards Heathens.”

668 94. Mather cancels the beginning of a new paragraph after “mandavit”:
 “Q. What say Some others upon it?
 A.”

Gen. 10.237r–278v

695 5. After “Diabolical Oracles” Mather cancels, “whereof (as I may call them).”

697 8. After “Juchasin; but” Mather cancels, “I beleeeve it is a Story y w.”

Following the last paragraph on this MS page, Mather cancels “I have now Opportunity.”

711 71. Between “Purpose,” and “Edwards,” Mather cancels “Mr. Jonathan” and replaces the phrase with “our [Edwards].” At first glance, Mather may have had his fellow New Englander “Mr. Jonathan Edwards” (1703–58) in mind, but the reference to “Excellency & Perfection of the Scriptures” clearly identifies a work by the English divine John Edwards (1637–1716), whose previously cited Discourse Concerning the Authority, Stile, and Perfection of the Books of the Old and New Testament (1695), vol. 3, bears the subtitle, “Treating of the Excellency and Perfection of the Holy Scriptures.”

775 218. In his manuscript, Mather cancels the following extract from Bochart: “These are y^e Sabæans, of whom Agatharchides relates, They have τὰ σώματά αἰσιολογώτερά Corpora Spectabiliara. Agreeably, the Prophet Isaiah, calls them, [Isa. 45.14.] Men of Stature.”

Gen. 11.279r–330v

829 76. Mather cancels the last line of the paragraph: “Upon some more than an Acre as.”

858 138. After “Multiplication of Children,” Mather cancels, “both Natural and Mystical.”

After “the Philosphers,” Mather cancels, “and Religionists.”

884 257. After “ē was glad” Mather cancels, the beginning of a new paragraph: “Some enquire, To what Use”

Gen. 15.331r–376v

927 64. Preceding “A Gentleman,” Mather cancels, “Dr. Sherlock,” ostensibly to hide his identity. At the end of the paragraph, however, Mather adds Sherlock’s name in brackets. Both ink and handwriting indicate that Mather changed his mind and made the correction during a separate sitting.

988 220. After “Son with a Visit;” Mather cancels, “which is very likely that he did:”

Gen. 22.377r–428v

1010 57. Mather cancels the following entry:

“Q. The Oath between Abimelek & Isaac? v. 28.

A. Some have Remark’d, That this is the first Oath among Men, we read of in the World; and it was introduced by an Heathen.”

1017 76. After “Militia-Age;” Mather cancels, “Accordingly, 360 500, added, makes 1 812 500.”

1024 89. Mather cancels the earlier chapter number “~~30.30.~~” twice and replaces it with “29.”

Gen. 41.429r–482v

1094 11. In the left-hand margin of this paragraph in the MS, Mather cancels, “Daughter Anal. p. 72.”

1137 115. Preceding “Roman Yoke,” Mather cancels, “Golden Yo[lk].”

1142 134. Following “by Art.” Mather cancels, “See, Deut.XXXII.15.”

1143 139. Mather replaces his source reference, “Clarius thinks,” with the more general reference, “Some take it.”

Appendix B: Silent MS Deletions

Gen. 3.131r–158v

483 17. Beginning a new paragraph on the next line, Mather inserts the following note in his manuscript, “Here bring in from the Next Leaf but one, ~~in v. 14~~, three Illustrations, on v. 14.”

483 19. Mather inserts the following directions: “Here bring in from ye Next Leaf but ~~one II. v. 14~~, three Illustrations on v. 14.”

527 131. I have abided by Mather’s direction to “Insert, after v. 16” and moved his commentary on Gen. 4:20, 21 to its intended location.

Gen. 5.159r–198v

545 29. Mather’s running title at the top of [165r] reads “Genesis. Chap. 4. and, 5.” Here silently deleted.

547 35. Running title “Genesis. Chap. 5.” at the top of [167r] silently deleted.

579 120. Mather records the following direction at the beginning of chapter 6: “[Here insert ye Two First Illustrations in the Next Leaf.] [a a a].” Here silently deleted.

582 126. Mather’s directions “[o o o] See ye next Page.—” and “[And here insert ye Illustration of ye Giants.]” are silently deleted.

599 171. Mather inserts the following direction: “To be inserted in ye foregoing Page [ooo].” He draws a long vertical squiggly line in the right-hand margin of [182v] to indicate that his three entries on verses 6 and 7 are to be inserted in the foregoing page.

Gen. 11.279r–330v

819 53. Mather leaves the following instructions in his manuscript: “Here insert the Four next Leaves. [o o o].” The applicable manuscript pages are inserted as directed.

Gen. 22.377r–428v

1042 134. Here Mather marks the placement for his insert of two leaves with [ooo].

Gen. 41.429r–482v

1139 121. Mather places a wavy line before and after v. 16. His direction “(a a) Here Insert the Illustration on v. 16.” which he positions after his commentary on v. 13, is here carried out.
