There is no steady unretracing progress in this life; we do not advance through fixed gradations and at the last one pause: – through infancy's unconscious spell, boyhood's thoughtless faith, adolescence's doubt (the common doom), then skepticism, then disbelief, resting at last in manhood's pondering repose of If. But once gone through, we trace the round again; and are infants, boys, and men, and Ifs eternally. Where lies the final harbor, whence we unmoor no more?

Nine years ago, in 2010, the first volume of Cotton Mather's Biblia Americana (Genesis) appeared in print – thanks to the generous support of the distinguished publishing house Mohr Siebeck of Tübingen (Germany). It was a cause for celebration and, let me here confess it once and for all, a tremendous relief and personal vindication in more ways than one. Even the most well-meaning of colleagues generally shook their heads in disbelief (or was it pity?) that anyone would undertake to edit – let alone publish – Mather's elephantine holograph manuscript of, roughly, three million words! Who, in this fast-paced academic world of publish or perish, would spend their academic career on thumbing through dusty old manuscripts and arcane debates in the history of Enlightenment science and biblical hermeneutics? Hardly the kind of theory-driven enterprise that has transformed the studies of the humanities since the 1980s. After spending more than a decade of transcribing the holograph manuscript, collating it against the original document at the Massachusetts Historical Society, proofreading it forward and backward and backward and forward again with the help of numerous graduate research assistants, and hunting down every imaginable primary source in rare-book libraries on both sides of the Atlantic – to repeat, after spending myriads of solitary hours of wading through the Mather bog, I held in my hands, at long last, the first printed copy ever of America's First Bible Commentary. On the shiny dustjacket, Peter Pelham's well-known portrait of Cotton Mather, periwigged in all his glory, seemed to wink and smile back at me – a projection of my own imagination, no doubt.

Since that auspicious moment in late October of 2010, four more volumes of our ten-volume Biblia Americana project have been published: Ken Minkema's BA 3 (Joshua – 2 Chronicles) in 2013, Clark Maddux's BA 4 (Ezra – Psalms) in 2014, Jan Stievermann's BA 5 (Proverbs – Jeremiah) in 2015, and Bob Brown's BA 9 (John – Acts) in 2018. And now, inshallah, the second volume of Mather's two-volume commentary on the Pentateuch, BA 2 (Exodus – Deuteronomy) in 2019. The remaining four volumes, edited by my colleagues Ava Chamberlain (BA 6), Doug Sweeney (BA 7), Rick Kennedy and Clark Maddux (BA 8), and Jan Stievermann (BA 10) – all in due order – are expected to appear by 2022.

If miracles still occur in our time, then, surely, the internet and the world-wide-web must be counted among them. It never ceases to amaze me how incunabula, rare books, manuscripts, images, and digital resources of the remotest kind are accessible nowadays on any number of databases – just a few clicks away. “Eureka!” has since become part of my everyday vocabulary. Progress notwithstanding, I had the privilege of examining first-hand rare documents in libraries at home and abroad. My particular thanks go to the Massachusetts Historical Society, the American Antiquarian Society, Boston Public Library, Andover-Harvard Library, the Congregational Library and Archives, Pitts Theology Library at Emory University, the Huntington Library, the Bridwell Library at Southern Methodist University in Dallas, and (further afield), the Library of the Royal Society of London, the British Museum Library, the Library of the Franckesche Stiftungen Halle, and the Consortium of European Research Libraries (CERL). So, too, digital copies of rare works were made available through the Herzog August Bibliothek Wolfenbüttel, Staatsbibliothek Preussischer Kulturbesitz Berlin, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek München, Universitätsbibliothek Heidelberg and Tübingen. Lest I forget, my colleagues at Georgia State University’s Pullen Library have gone out of their way to help me get access to primary and secondary works through interlibrary loans – if not otherwise available. Finally, many thanks to the now indispensable Google Books Library Project. It truly democratizes access to knowledge.

The publication of this volume was made possible by a generous grant from the Henry Luce Foundation. We want to thank Jonathan VanAntwerpen, the Program Director for Theology at the Foundation, for his support of our project.

For my research on Biblia Americana (BA 2 Exodus – Deuteronomy), I received several fellowships from the Massachusetts Historical Society, the American Antiquarian Society, the Huntington Library (Pasadena), the Andrew Clark Library (UCLA), and the Bridwell Library (SMU). The Department of English at Georgia State University under the leadership of Randy Malamud and Lynee Gaillet, and Sara Thomas Rosen, dean of the College of Arts and Science, generously granted two summer research fellowships and time off for two research intensive semesters (formerly known as sabbaticals). Special acknowledgements deserve my colleagues and collaborators Jan Stievermann under whose auspices our Mather Project received a generous grant from the Luce Foundation, Ken Minkema, Clark Maddux, Rick Kennedy, Ava Chamberlain, Bob Brown, and Doug Sweeney. I am also grateful to Ute Smolinski (Limburg); Käthe Ristow (formerly of Mainz); Mark Langley (Topeka); Cary Hewitt and Margaret Bendroth (Congregational Library & Archives); Peter Drummey and Conrad Wright (MHS) for permission to edit and publish Biblia Americana; Rick Cogley (SMU); Christopher Trigg and Kate Blyn Wakely-Mulroney (NTU, Singapore); Alfred Hornung, Oliver Scheiding, and Damian Schlarb (Uni-Mainz); Baisheng Zhao (Peking University); Jiang “River” Liu (CPU, Nanjing); Henning Ziebritzki and Jana Trispel (Mohr Siebeck); and untold well-wishers who suffered me to discuss my research at public lectures and conferences at home and abroad.

My deep affections go out to my beloved daughters – Hannah Sophie Caldwell-Smolinski and Madeleine Marie Caldwell-Smolinski – who have grown up with Cotton Mather and who indulged their father’s penchant for musty old books.

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION

Preface

Perhaps more than any other unit of books in the Judeo-Christian Scriptures, the Pentateuch, aka, the Five Books of Moses, Chumash, and Torah (Law), occupies a special place in the corpus of the canonical and noncanonical books of the Old and New Testaments. It is in the Pentateuch where it all began – God’s eternal fiat, the creation and fall of man, Noah’s deluge and dispersal of his descendants, the story of the patriarchs, the deliverance from Egyptian slavery, the giving of the Law on Mt. Sinai/Horeb, the trials and tribulations in the Sinai desert, the conquest of the Promised Land, and Moses’ Pisgah sight and farewell. These events are central to the unfolding narratives in the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures, and are continuously referred to, paraphrased, or quoted as the foundation of authority and authenticity in virtually every book of the Bible. Remove the Pentateuch and the entire superstructure of the Judeo-Christian Scriptures crumbles: the Torah is the foundation of the world’s three great monotheistic religions.

If the preceding summation still holds true for most believers today, it certainly held true for the Rev. Cotton Mather, D.D., F.R.S. (1663–1728), and for virtually all of his contemporaries in the early Enlightenment. However, in the second half of the seventeenth century, the unshakable pillars of God’s Word began to sway, the columns of the text developed fissures, the center came apart: The rise of philological criticism of the Bible as text, disputes about the Mosaic authorship and authenticity of the extant copies and their translations, competing biblical chronologies, canon criticism and textual transmission, Newtonian science, Cartesian mechanism, philosophical materialism, and the rise of comparative religions – all these isms and more posed tremendous challenges to the veracity and authenticity of the Pentateuch and the Bible as a whole. Cotton Mather felt called upon to rise up in defense of the Word. His greatest and most voluminous work, Biblia Americana (1693–1728), testifies to, and participates in, the remarkable debates among his fellow physico-theologians as he tried to harmonize the subversive implications and rising skepticism with his conservative exegesis of the Bible. An encyclopedic commentary on the Holy Scriptures, Mather’s Biblia Americana (c. 3,000,000 words) is colonial America’s first comprehensive explication of the Bible. As I have shown in the introductory sections to the first of ten published volumes of Biblia Americana (BA 1:3–174), Mather faced the battle of the books head-on. As he set out to reconcile the old with the new, miracles and the wonders of the invisible world with a mechanistic and atomistic cosmos governed by cause-and-effect, divine revelation and verbal inspiration with philological-textual redactions of the Bible, he compiled an extraordinary digest of the contemporary debate. Biblia Americana is a unique record of how Enlightenment philosophy impacted biblical exegesis in English North America.

What particular noteworthy issues does Mather address in the Pentateuch? The following is an abstract of some of his most intriguing arguments in each of the five books of Moses:

I. Genesis (Bereshit)

In his commentary on Genesis (BA 1:211–1156) – his longest and most detailed annotations on any book in the biblical canon – Mather devotes much attention to the conflicting chronologies of the Hebrew, Samaritan, and Septuagint (Greek) versions of the Pentateuch. By and large, the belief in the hexameron, a time period of roughly six-thousand years from the first day of creation to the Second Coming of Christ at the beginning (or end) of the millennium, was still widely accepted. For instance, James Ussher (1581–1646), the Anglican archbishop of Armagh and primate of Ireland, calculated in his popular Annals of the World (1658) that the creation of Heaven and Earth (Gen. 1:1) “fell upon the entrance of the night preceding the twenty third day of Octob. in the year of the Julian Calendar, 710,” i.e., 4004 BCE¹ (Annals, p. 1); this ancient Roman calendar was still regnant in England and her colonies until 1752—nearly 170 years after the Gregorian Calendar had replaced its predecessor in the rest of Europe. Alas, the Samaritan and Greek (LXX) chronologies of the Pentateuch differed from that of the Hebrew Masora by more than 300 or 600 years, respectively. Yet when compared to the chronologies of the Egyptians and Chinese, the history of the world seemed much longer – by tens of thousands of years (BA 1:277–301).² Today, such “minor” difference may be amusing to those who subscribe to the well-known “Big Bang” that is to have occurred billions and billions of light-years ago (as Carl Sagan famously put it), but modern readers must not fall into the trap of presentism by judging the past by our current standards: We stand on the shoulders of giants whose vistas were slightly less elevated than our own.

Perhaps more significant than these early debates about biblical chronology are Mather’s attempts to reconcile the atomist philosophy of Leucippus, Democritus, and Lucretius with the creation account of Moses. To Cotton Mather and his peers, Moses was the most learned philosopher of all times, and if rightly understood the six days of creation follow clearly discernible patterns of corpuscular accretions and the formation of minute particles (atoms) into universal matter. The Greek philosophers, so Mather and his colleagues opined, had nothing on Moses. In fact, Greek philosophy – natural, moral, and juridical – was “stolen” from Moses via the Egyptians whom the divine lawgiver had taught all there was to know (BA 1:357–419). In plucking the assumed feathers from the Greeks and Egyptians, and in restoring them to their rightful owner, Mather followed well-established precedent as he engaged some of the leading corpuscularians and natural philosophers of his day, including Gassendi, Hobbes, Descartes, Boyle, and Newton.

Closely related to the competing creationist theories of the day are the contemporaneous debates on the mechanistic causes and effects of Noah’s flood and the size and shape of Noah’s ark (BA 1:579–666). In Mather’s time, the two most popular explications of the deluge were published by Thomas Burnet (1635–1715) and William Whiston (1667–1752). An Anglican theologian and natural philosopher, Burnet theorized in his Telluris Theoria Sacra, or The Sacred Theory of the Earth (1681–90) that the surface of the antediluvian earth was completely level – no mountains or valleys – and the flood waters that would subsequently reshape the globe were contained in the interior, below the earth’s surface, whose thin crust floated on top like flotsam and jetsam. Upon the collapse of the surface, mountains, islands, and continents arose from the waters that inundated the earth. Whiston’s New Theory of the Earth from its Original to the Consummation of All Things (1696) was perhaps less sophisticated in its speculative intricacies than Burnet’s Sacred Theory but no less dramatic. With Edmond Halley to back him up, Whiston (Lucasian chair of mathematics at Cambridge) posited that the Noachic cataclysm was caused by an interstellar comet passing near the earth and delivering most of the flood waters. In like manner, another comet would cause the destruction of the entire globe in God’s own time, at the end of the millennium. Mather’s response to both Burnet and Whiston is less than welcoming, but he is no less eager to debate his peers about the masses of water necessary to cover the highest mountains on earth.³

II. Exodus (Shemot)

Cotton Mather’s commentary on Exodus (BA 2) is intriguing as well, for his essays, glosses, and annotations go well beyond the standard fare of his contemporaries – Matthew Poole, Samuel Clark, Simon Patrick, Jean LeClerc, Richard Kidder, Thomas Pyle, and Matthew Henry. What distinguishes Mather's from those of his contemporaries is that he interlaces his pious exhortations and explications with the scientific innovations and discoveries of his day. Though never rescinding his belief that the Almighty can offset the laws of nature at will, Mather does emphasize that God employs secondary causes in nature to bring about what to the ancient observers appeared to be nothing short of a miracle. In the best manner of John Locke, he insists that generally speaking a miracle is an event or phenomenon of which the underlying causes are unknown and inexplicable – implying in the best Cartesian manner of the day that if the causes are understood, the seemingly supernatural incident is no longer miraculous: every cause has an effect, and every effect can be traced to a prior cause. To be sure, providence is never impugned, for God's creation would not be the best of all possible worlds if the Ancient of Days had to offset the fixed laws of nature to suit the insect of an hour. In this way, Mather expends much ink and paper on explaining the ten plagues in Egypt through primary and secondary causes, just as he does on the parting of the Red Sea – not that these miraculous events were not somehow embedded in God's providential plan to begin with.

It does not come as a surprise that Mather delights in drawing parallels between pagan and biblical history. For instance, if Moses and the Israelites passed through the Red Sea unscathed, so did Alexander the Great (356–323 BCE) and his armies through the sea of Pamphylia as the waters receded (so Strabo and Plutarch). Likewise, if God fed the Israelites on manna in the wilderness, so travelers to Syria, Palestine, and Egypt found manna naturally growing on shrubs – even in Mather's own time. Or, if pillars of clouds and fire guided God's Chosen through the desert by day and night, so portable pots of burning bitumen were well known in ancient warfare to guide armies through unknown terrain by day and night. Similar as these occurrences might be, Mather was not always comfortable with historical parallels that appeared to impugn divine providence as the modus operandi in the books of Moses. Yet much more daunting were the astonishing similarities between the cultic rituals of the Israelites and those of their Egyptian and Canaanite neighbors. Sacrificing animals, carrying cultic arks or chests, or employing blood in sacred devotions and priestly lustrations appear to be as common in Egyptian temples and in the fertility rituals of the Zabians as they were in the ceremonies of Moses. And if truth be told, then Moses adapted the feast of neomenia, the expiatory rites of the scapegoat, the use of Urim and Thummim, even the model of the tabernacle and future Temple from his Egyptian overlord – that is, if Mather's much-admired nemesis John Spencer and his magisterial De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685) have their say (see Section 2 below). The beginnings of comparative religion and their sources in classical antiquity furnished historical evidence that elucidated many arcane practices in the Hebrew Scriptures, but they also questioned the primacy of the Pentateuch.

Is it not true that the ancient civilizations of Mesopotamia and Egypt were much older and more advanced than that of the obscure Israelites who were thrice enslaved by their more powerful neighbors?

Perhaps in light of the disputes about the authenticity of the Hebrew Scriptures as the rock upon which the apostles reared Jesus Christ as the Redeemer, Mather fully embraced typology, the hermeneutic method of discovering prophetic types in the Old and linking them with their Christological antitypes in the New Testament. “Scepticism, hath grown up in the Garden of Criticism” (BA 1:703), Mather muttered under his breath. And yet, he was convinced that all efforts to demythologize the Bible and to deprive the Book of Books of its divine origin would come to naught – if he could demonstrate that veiled hints and references to Jesus Christ and his Church are embedded in every book of the Old Testament. Consequently, typological, allegorical, and mystical readings of the ten plagues, the Passover, the parting of the seas, manna from heaven, the tabernacle and its furniture, the high priest’s garments and the accoutrements of religious rituals – all these historical acts and cultic implements, rightly understood, were signs and seals of the promised messiah, the Redeemer of mankind, foreshadowed in the enmity between the arch marplot of Eden and the seed of the woman (Gen. 3:15). The time-honored technique of reading the Bible through the hermeneutical prism of the literal and historical, allegorical and tropological, and the anagogical and mystical sense, then, allowed Mather and his conservative peers to reify the divine origin of the Word. And Mather made full use of this key to unlock God’s mysteries (see Section 1 below) that stitched the vellums of both testaments into one seamless whole.

III. Leviticus (Vayikra)

For obvious reasons, the third book of the Torah (BA 2) governs the ritual, legal, and moral codes of the Levites, the priestly class that is mostly concerned with officiating the ritual sacrifices and rites of purification, expiation, and atonement. These ancient ceremonies are central to the function of the Jewish priesthood and of the High Priest’s mediation between God and man. Mather spares no effort to provide his readers with specific details: the distinction between clean and unclean animals, the ritualistic slaughter of domestic animals, the offering of libations, incense, first-fruits, and the all-important sprinkling of sacrificial blood around the base of the altar, the application of blood to the horns of the altar of incense, and the blood ritual involved in the ordination of the priesthood. In each case, he supplies statistical tables that itemize the types and numbers of animals to be sacrificed for each specific occasion, and the quantity and quality of oil, flour, salt, and aromatic spices to accompany these offerings. Mather’s tables are some of the earliest statistics to be found in the commentaries of his day; they illustrate his delight in numerical evidence to underscore the veracity and reliability of the Pentateuch as a whole.⁴

No matter whether a burnt offering, meat offering, peace offering, sin offering, or trespass offering, Mather always looks out for similar rites among the Israelites' pagan neighbors. These parallel practices, dug up from among the tomes of ancient histories, reinforce his conviction that the heathens enviously copied most of their religious practices from Moses. As Mather and his peers frequently put it, the devil wants religion, too, and therefore apes the rituals and ceremonies that God gave to the Israelites. Defending the Mosaic primacy is Mather's principal concern. Yet more than cultural resemblances, Mather scours Leviticus for prophetic signs and Christological types adumbrated in the New Testament. After all, the Mosaic ceremonies had no other pedagogical purpose, so St. Paul and the Church Fathers argued, than to point toward their abrogation in Christ's sacrifice on the cross. Consequently, it was incumbent upon Mather to find Christological parallels even in the smallest details of every ritual practice.

Viewed from the modern discipline of comparative culture and religion, of religion as religion, Mather's commentary on the Torah, especially on Leviticus, demonstrates that travel accounts and records of discovery of faraway continents, countries, peoples, and civilizations, encouraged discerning minds to compare their own Judeo-Christian beliefs and practices with those of other peoples.⁵ For Mather and his peers, such accounts were extremely valuable. In fact, they could be found even in extant histories of ancient Chaldea, Egypt, Phoenicia, Greece, and Rome. They allowed time travelers of the mind to establish taxonomies of religious practices and trace their spread and development over the centuries. In Mather's time such voluminous works as Gerard Johannes Vossius's De Theologia Gentili (1641), Samuel Bochart's Geographia Sacra (1646) and Hieroicoicon (1663), Athanasius Kircher's Œdipus Ægyptiacus (1652–54) and Sphinx Mystagoga (1676, Lord Herbert of Cherbury's De Religione Gentilium (1663), Theophilus Gale's The Court of the Gentiles (1669–78), Pierre-Daniel Huet's Demonstratio Evangelica (1679), John Spencer's De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus et Earum Rationibus (1685), and Bernard Picart's Cérémonies et coutumes religieuses de tous les peuples du monde (1723–37), were among the most noteworthy studies that facilitated such comparisons. A good case in point is Mather's comparison between Israelite and Zabian (heathen) animal sacrifices and fertility rituals. The mysterious rite of the scapegoat Azazel, blood rituals to summon demons or the souls of the dead, mixing different types of seeds, dedicating one's hair to a particular deity, branding, tattooing, divination, and enchantments – these shadowy practices were widespread in ancient Israelite and pagan cultures. If the medieval philosopher Moses Maimon (Maimonides) has his say, then God allowed some of these pagan ceremonies to continue among the Israelites as long as these rites were turned on their head and performed in honor of the God of Israel. Thus repurposing these cultic rituals and adapting them for use in the Mosaic religion was a divine ruse, Maimonides argued, to wean his people from the Egyptian idolatry they had imbibed for centuries. With Herman Witsius's Ægyptiaca, et ΔΕΚΑΦΥΛΙΟΝ (1683) at his elbow, Mather is less than satisfied with most of these explanations and devotes more than thirty double-columned folios on separating true from false claims. His conservative position on the revealed religion of Moses does not allow him to embrace John Spencer's thesis, no matter how much Mather admires his scholarship. Nonetheless, Mather appears to be startled if not shaken by many of these uncanny similarities.

IV. Numbers (Bamidbar)

The fourth book of the Torah (BA 2) is a record of the Israelites' forty-year meanderings through the wilderness, from Mt. Sinai to the borders of the Promised Land. Mather has much to say on such pericopes as Israel's rebellion, the violation of the Sabbath and its consequences, the scouts' spying on the Canaanites, Balaam's loquacious ass, the apostasy at Baal-Peor, and the numbering of the Israelites. To be sure, Mather does not bother with what is common and traditional in the Bible commentaries of his day. Rather, like Hugo Grotius's Annotationes (1642), he generally focuses on what is new and untested, expounding only those chapters and verses that need updating in light of the ongoing debates among his European peers. Time and again, Mather concentrates on the history behind the described events and imposes what might be called a "reality test." Not that he disdains the uncanny and miraculous, but he wants to know, for instance, how Moses was able to smelt iron, copper, zinc, and tin into brass (brazen serpent) in the desert centuries before the process of making this alloy had been developed (Bronze Age); so, too, he wants to know the location of the copper mines from which the raw materials came, or what species of reptiles the fiery flying serpents were that attacked the renegade Israelites, and what evidence could be found among pagan historians to confirm that such a flying species ever existed. Mather, then, goes out of his way to uncover the real history behind what strikes many as myth or hyperbole.

Given his interest in the holiness codes of the Israelites, Mather explores the efficacy of bitter water (water of jealousy) in cases of suspected adultery, the vows and lifestyle of the Nazirites, priestly lustrations, and the use of blood sacrifices (Taurobolia) in the ordination of priests and ministering Levites. He embeds in his glosses many illustrations from Greek and Roman histories to show how widespread, if not common, such rites were among the ancients – as a way of underscoring the authenticity of the Mosaic account. As in previous cases, Mather tests the veracity of stories that strike him as hyperbolic. When the murmuring Israelites were tired of manna and demanded meat, quails miraculously “came from the sea” and covered the ground two cubits high. Mather offers a more realistic and, perhaps, natural explanation of this seemingly wasteful miracle. If they were quails, he argues, they flew across the Mediterranean in their seasonal migrations; they did not pile up two cubits high on the ground – far too many for the Israelites to consume before the meat would spoil – but only flew two cubits above the ground, because they were exhausted upon their arrival in the desert. More likely, Mather suggested, the Hebrew word rendered “quail” should be translated as “locusts” – much more likely to pile up on the ground when shifting winds drove myriads of locust swarms into the desert. Besides, dried locusts are more nutritious than fowl and can be stored for a long time without spoiling. Again, Mather prefers to keep his feet on the ground.⁶

Similarly intriguing is Mather's detailed discussion of the sacrifice of the red heifer and the priestly use of her ashes for lustrations. In this case study of demystification, Mather embraces the thesis of John Spencer, who argues that the red heifer was nothing else but the embodiment of the Egyptian deity Isis, which the Israelites considered an abomination. As Maimonides put it in his Guide for the Perplexed, God employed a divine ruse by allowing the Israelites to slaughter the deified animals of the Egyptians and use them in his own cultic rituals. For just as with the blood of the ram smeared on the lintels of their houses in Egypt, the Israelites demonstrated their faith in Yahweh by perpetrating a sacrilegious act against the Egyptians: slaughtering the Egyptian idol, the ram-headed Amun, and eating its flesh. So in the case of the red heifer, whose ashes became an instrument of sacred aspersion and purification.⁷ Mather is also drawn to demystifying the strange phenomenon of Balaam's loquacious ass and the festival of neomenia, alike celebrated by the Israelites and their neighbors. As everyone knows, talkative animals are legion in Aesop's fables, but they also populate reputable histories of Greece and Rome. To validate the Mosaic story,

6 Hiob Ludolphus, in his Appendix Secunda ad Historiam Aethiopicam Iobi Ludolfi continens Dissertationem de Locustis (1694), pars 2: De Locustis, cap. 1, §§ 1–5, argues that the Hebrew noun שָׂרָף which he transliterates as “Selav” (Exod. 16:13, Numb. 11:35) should not be rendered “coturnicibus” (quails) but “locustis” (locusts). Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 3.1.5 and 3.13.1), however, holds fast to “quails.”

7 See Numb. 19:2 (BA 2:901-13).

Mather supplies his readers with numerous examples of animals – horses, cows, dogs – who spoke to their masters intelligibly. As to the rites of neomenia, or the Festival of the New Moon, signifying the beginning of a new month in the lunar calendar, Mather acknowledges with much evidence from the classics that these rites, including the use of horned goats, were observed universally – except that the Israelites (unlike the heathens) did not revere the moon as a deity or had crescent moons tattooed on their bodies. No matter the ritual similarities, the heathen idolaters did the right thing for the wrong reason. Lest he devote too much time to the history behind such cultic practices, Mather offers numerous Christological readings if for no other reason than to demonstrate that the Mosaic ceremonies were nothing but didactic devices that terminated in Christ's propitiation.

V. Deuteronomy (Devarim)

Also known as the “second law,” Deuteronomy (BA 2) repeats many parts of the Mosaic law and history of the four preceding books of the Pentateuch – often with substantive changes. As in his previous annotations, Mather feels drawn to the supranatural and mysterious, not as an unsettling or entertaining subject in itself but as a topic requiring rational explication. Thus the story of the giant Og (Ogias), the Amorite king of Bashan, receives much attention, for the size of his enormous iron bedstead struck beholders with awe and wonder. Looking for rational explanations, Mather tests the evidence of the history behind the story by searching for parallels in Egyptian, Greek, and Roman mythology. If pagan historians confirmed the existence of such giants (so Mather argues), the Mosaic account could not be dismissed as mere hyperbole. Mather, however, does not stop there; he links giant Og with the Egyptian giant Typhon – which to Mather evinces that the Israelites' neighbors copied Moses but distorted the real event. Similarly, Mather finds much evidence in the Talmud and medieval rabbinic literature to confirm his suspicion that over time King Og's extraordinary size grew mightily with each retelling of the story.

Cotton Mather is also drawn to the many resemblances between the religious, moral, and punitive laws of the ancient lawgivers. The Ten Commandments of Moses and their wisdom, Mather and virtually all of his contemporaries believed, provided the blueprint for the laws of Pompilius Numa, second king and lawgiver of ancient Rome (8th–7th c. BCE); for Solon, the ancient lawgiver of Greece (7th–6th c. BCE); and for the Athenian Draco (6th c. BCE), legendary for refusing to temper justice with mercy. Herodotus and Plutarch amply testified that these ancient lawgivers and Greek philosophers, their descendants, all journeyed across the Mediterranean to Egypt where they imbibed the laws Moses had taught the Egyptians while a priestly member of pharaonic household. If this argument seemed spurious, then Jewish traders (mistaken for Phoenicians) or, much later, the Greek Septuagint (c. 250 BCE) – widely available in the Hellenist world – supplied Israel's pagan neighbors with the wisdom of Moses.

In like manner, Mather discovers evidence of the embattled doctrine of the Holy Trinity in pagan mythology, in the Zohar, Jetzirah, and the Bahir – the classical texts of Jewish Kabbalah. He feels reassured by his findings, especially at the time when Socinians, Arians, and Deists dismissed the Trinity and Christ's divinity outright or when philological-textual critics of extant biblical manuscripts claimed that St. Athanasius and his Trinitarian party interpolated passages in the New Testament manuscripts to reinforce their own dogma and position of power in the early Church. Such assaults on the Book of Books could not be ignored, and Mather composed his "Goliath Detruncatus" (1713), now lost, in defense of the Trinity. Along the same lines, he pays much attention to Jewish laws on tithing, money lending, usury, and the execution of felons, as well as to the proscriptions against graven images, divination, fortune telling, necromancy, fertility rites, crossdressing, temple prostitution, and many other rituals. Mather admires Maimonides's Mishneh Torah and Guide for the Perplexed, whose rational explanation of the origins of these rites and their prohibition evinces the wisdom of God's law. Not to be left out are Mather's deep thoughts on the persecution of postexilic Jews in Spain, Portugal, France, Germany, and England – from Roman times to the seventeenth century. To Mather and his peers, these heinous pogroms bespoke the ruthlessness and greed of Europe's kings and nobles but also the fulfillment of prophecies and imminence of Christ's Second Coming. Prophecy is history antedated, and history is postdated prophecy; the same is told in both.

Cotton Mather's commentary on the Torah is a timely reminder of how the leading minds of his generation struggled with the scientific and philological discoveries of their day. New explanations of how God created the universe, Cartesian explications of Noah's flood, the cause and effect of miracles, comparisons between the religious and cultural histories of the Israelites and of their pagan neighbors, linking OT types of Christ with their NT antitypes, alike pre-occupied him and his fellow physico-theologians. Mather's Biblia Americana is more than a mere window on the early Enlightenment and biblical criticism in Europe and in English North America. His annotations, glosses, and essays on his favorite topics reveal as much about his mental agility and acumen as they testify to his wide reading and participation in the learned debates of his time. To be sure, Cotton Mather was a preacher and physician of the soul first and foremost; his interest in natural philosophy, medicine, and history – though pronounced and all-pervasive – are ancillary to his calling as a clergyman. He delights in all forms of knowledge, and he shares his wide interests with his parishioners in his sermons and in fireside conversations with his family, friends, and colleagues. Perhaps more than any of his other great works, Biblia Americana demonstrates his ability to transcend partisan politics and narrow denominational squabbles. His attention to lived Christianity and the practice of piety enables him to reach out to other Christian denominations at home and abroad. He calls on them to unite behind three barebone fundamentals, his Maxims of Piety – faith in God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; in Christ as the Redeemer of immortal souls, and in the practice of the “eleventh” commandment: love your neighbor as yourself.

It goes without saying that the sum total of the preceding summaries cannot do justice to the magnitude of what Mather accomplishes in his commentary. At best, explanatory footnotes and introductory essays can only offer a glimpse of his achievement. The following essays in Sections 1 and 2 are explications of what appear to be some of Mather’s great concerns in his commentary on the Pentateuch: discovering signs and predictive types of Jesus Christ in the Books of Moses and linking them with their seals and antitypes in the New Testament. For Mather, typology remained a time-honored hermeneutic to underscore the foundation of the Hebrew Scriptures upon which Christ’s apostles reared their stately edifice. Plying this ancient heuristic device seemed full of promise, it seemed to Mather, especially in times of declining faith in Jesus of Nazareth as the Redeemer and second member of the Trinity. Yet Mather also realized that typology is a double-edged sword that cuts both ways; if distinct lines of demarcation between literal, allegorical, tropological, and anagogical interpretations – like those in the colors of the rainbow – could only be drawn with difficulty, might not typological proof of Christ turn into mere allegory and become all things to all people? As I am demonstrating in Section 1, Mather did not always stick to his self-avowed principles. Yet he believed that typology, when fortified with evidence from natural philosophy, could still serve his purpose: the divine origin of the entire Bible.

In Section 2, I examine Mather’s interest in what might be called the rudiments of comparative culture and religion, a new discipline that did not come into its own until the nineteenth century. As slaves in Egypt for centuries (so the argument goes), Moses and the mixed multitude were marooned in the religious traditions of their Egyptian overlord. When Moses, an Egyptian in name and upbringing, gave his laws to the untutored Israelites in the desert, he could not but accommodate the Egyptian customs to which his people had been accustomed for generations. No surprise, then, that the religion of Moses and many of his cultic rites bore many traces of their Egyptian past. In Mather’s time, the clamor about the heathen origin of the Mosaic religion had turned into a cacophony of voices that challenged the supernatural origin of God’s laws. Mather did not sit idly by as he perused the tomes of the learned critics who seemingly sneered at the exclusivity of the Mosaic religion. They pointed at unmistakable parallels between the priestly rituals of Israel and those of their more advanced neighbors. More often than not, Mather was shaken to the core. Through a process of give and take, conceding and refuting, he set out to beat his learned critics at their own game.

The introductory sections in the present volume cannot do justice to the complex issues Mather addresses in his commentary on the Books of Moses – let alone in Biblia Americana as a whole. I therefore invite readers to peruse my introductory essays in volume 1 (BA 1:3–210), along with those of my colleagues in the edited collection, Cotton Mather and Biblia Americana: America's First Bible Commentary (2010, 2011). Jan Stievermann's magisterial Prophecy, Piety, and the Problem of Historicity: Interpreting the Hebrew Scriptures in Cotton Mather's Biblia Americana (2016) reveals the complexity of Mather's hermeneutics. These essays and the introductions of my fellow editors published in their respective Biblia volumes demonstrate that the hoary effigy of Cotton Mather – like that of the dour and hateful Puritans – is as threadbare as the cliché that upon arriving in the New World, they first fell on their knees and then upon the Indians.

The Figures or Types of the Pentateuch

The Figures or Types of the Old Testament are “like the Waters in Ezeiels Vision, Growing and Rising still, the further we wade into them. ... [In] every paragraph of the Bible is a spot of Ground, where before we dig far, we shall find the Pearl of Great Price” (Work upon the Ark [1689], sign. A2^v).

“The Types and Shadows of the Old Testament, if but a little understood, how full are they of Gospel-Light and Glory! Having gone through diverse of them, I must acknowledge, with Thankfulness to the Praise of the Freeness of the Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, that I have seen more of Him, than I saw before” (Samuel Mather to Increase Mather, MCA IV.ii.152).

“... our Lord JESUS CHRIST, and His Works, are variously exhibited in the Types of the Old Testament. There is a Sort of Prophecies, whereof the Mystical Sense, is the Literal Sense. The Typical Sense, or the Sense as it concerns the Type, is the Remoter Sense. Tis a peece of Canvas, on which the Holy Spirit ha’s drawn the Mystical Sense, as a Gold Embroidery” (BA 4:324).

It was a chilly, crystal-clear mid-November afternoon as throngs of festively clad parishioners shuffled through both side entrances of the North Meeting-House on Clarke’s Square, hoping to warm their frozen limbs at the glowing cast-iron stove before filing, one-by-one, into their family pews. The setting sun had much ado to uphold his rays against the intense reflections of the full moon in Scorpio as it illuminated the stately roofs of many a fine new building between Middle Street and Ship Street. Almost to the day thirteen years earlier the Great Fire of November 27, 1676, had laid all in ashes, “consuming about fifty dwelling-houses and the North Meeting-house” at the head of North Square along with many warehouses near Clarke’s Wharf. Even Increase Mather’s own dwelling, then resting on the foundations of what is now better known as Boston’s Paul Revere House, fell prey to the flames along with many prized manuscripts and dozens of folios and quartos of Increase Mather’s sizable library.¹

In his Sabbath-day lecture on November 17, 1689, Cotton Mather, then twenty-six, held forth on 1 Pet. 3:20–21: “The Ark was Building, wherein few, that is Eight Souls, were saved by Water. The Like Figure whereunto, even Baptism doth now also Save us.”² Mather’s figural link between Noah’s Ark and the baptized members of the Church Visible must have resonated with his maritime parishioners – wealthy Boston merchants, hoary ship captains, and respectable shipwrights like Obadiah Gill, deacon of the North-Meeting, at whose request Mather’s sermon The Work upon the Ark (1689) was published by subvention.³ Dedicated to those “whose Concerns Lye in Ships,” Mather’s homily offered his seafaring congregation an intriguing meditation on Noah’s Ark, exhorting them to “ dwell in the Ark of the Lord,” like the patriarch’s family of old, so that “All of you may be bound up in the Bundle of Life” (Work A5). Lest anyone miss the point of his figural analogy, Mather invited them to look at the old story with a fresh eye. Veiled in prefigurative types or coded language embedded in the text, the Old Testament foreshadowed the signs and seals of Gospel mysteries abrogated in their NT antitypes: Noah and his family safely ensconced in the bowels of the Ark are predictive types of Christ and his elect remnant anchored in the gospel of the NT Church, the antitype, for “as Water buoy’d up those that were in the Ark, so Baptism does those that are in the Church towards Heaven” (Work 3–4). In this manner, Mather posits, the Gospel of Christ was also preached unawares to the Patriarchs in the Old Testament – but as shadows of divine things to come in the New (Gal. 3:8, Heb. 4:2). In fact, “not only the Person of the Messiah but his Conditions, His Endowments, His Benefits, and His Ordinances too, yea, and the Miseries, and the Enemies from which we are by Him delivered; all of these were Preached in and by those Types of old” (Work 2).⁴ Noah, then, was the shipwright, whose Ark was safe by his own presence. Just so, Jesus Christ, the shipwright of our Ark, “built the Church” that cannot founder, for he is “Himself aboard” and pilots his vessel through the maelstrom of time (Work 9).

This figurative explication seems simple enough; New England’s congregations were well attuned to the scriptural figures and types opened by their pastors.⁵ To be sure, biblical typology – a hermeneutic tool employed in its various forms at least since the early Church Fathers – was as complex as its allegorical cousin, the Quadrige, or fourfold method of rhetorical analysis. This hermeneutical method was equally plied in the Platonic schools of ancient Alexandria as in the medieval Church. Briefly defined, the fourfold sense of textual interpretation aims to uncover several layers of meaning: (1) “Sensus historicus” or “sensus litteralis,” i.e., the grammatical explication of a coherent set of biblical narratives (pericope) in which persons, actions, events, or things serve as signs that point toward the author’s intent. The semantics of the words in, and the history behind, the pericope constitutes the “literal” and “historical sense.” Example: “Manna came down from Heaven” (Exod. 16:1–36). In its literal and historical sense, the miracle of supplying the Israelites with food in the wilderness is easy enough to comprehend, yet even in their literal meaning, “Manna” and “Heaven” evoke something beyond themselves. It hints at numerous NT parallels such as the miraculous feeding of the five thousand (Matth. 14:13–21), or more significantly, Christ’s association with the manna from heaven (John 6:31–58): “I am the living bread, which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever; and the bread that I will give, is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.” At the same time, something beyond the act of eating (2) literal bread is suggested. Thus the “Sensus allegoricus” employs synecdoche, metonymy, similes, and personification to express a metaphoric or nonliteral sense. Momentarily disconnected, the images can attach themselves to any suggested event, thing, or person – past, present, or future – and generate multiple meanings. Example: “The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us” (John 1:14). Allegorically considered, this passage calls for a meaning other than its literal signification, for both “word” and “flesh” are personifications suggestive of something beyond themselves. (3) Closely related to the allegorical sense is the “sensus tropologicus,” better known as the “moral sense” of a scriptural passage; it enlists the same rhetorical devices but primarily appeals to the moral edification of the faithful. Example: They “have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the lamb” (Rev. 7:14). When applied to individuals, the figure of the “robes washed white” links the white garment with the moral cleansing of their character or soul from which the stain of sin is removed by the blood of Christ’s sacrifice. Again, something other than the literal act of washing is intended, for red blood is unlikely to make a garment white. Thus the shedding of Christ’s blood (red) makes believers morally and spiritually pure (white). (4) The “Sensus anagogicus,” or mystical sense, leads the faithful to contemplate tangible, albeit higher, spiritual, and mystical things – the life to come in Heaven. Frequently, the anagoge suggests an eschatological dimension to inspire the saints to reach out toward eternal and timeless matters. Example: “Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city” (Rev. 22:14).⁶ The

6 See H. Caplan, “The Four Senses of Scriptural Interpretation and the Mediaeval Theory of Preaching” (1929). R. A. Muller, Post-Reformation Reformed Dogmatics (2003) 2:35. To be sure, the Quadriga or fourfold method of interpretation is closely related to midrashic hermeneutics (PaRDeS) in early Judaism. Peshar (literal or surface meaning), Remez (allegorical, symbolic literal level of the passage – though valid – is suggestive of something far different – the tree of life evoking the prelapsarian Eden and the gates of the city the entrance into the celestial Jerusalem: the life to come. Or, to borrow Mather's own parabolic metaphor, digging in the vineyard of the Holy Scriptures unearths layers upon layers of hidden treasures – even the Pearl of Great Price. The fourfold method of interpretation, like its typological cousin, is a vital key to unlocking hidden meanings and mysteries. And to appreciate Mather's frank indulgence in the tumid metaphors of the Bible is to discover the nexus between OT figural language and its application in the NT. Typology is the Christological lifeline between both testaments.

As a heuristic device, the fourfold method of opening the Scriptures enjoyed great popularity throughout the history of the Christian Church from the Ante- and Post-Nicene Fathers, to the Middle Ages and beyond the Reformation to the middle of the eighteenth century. This exegetical method was a standard device of scriptural interpretation, for it allowed exegetes to amplify the meaning of a particular scripture and to extract multiple senses from a single verse – perhaps even to dumbfound the faithful with the profundity of God's Word. Yet if meanings and senses could be multiplied according to the skill and subtlety of the exegete, who was to tell what exactly God had intended when he spoke to Moses and his prophets in arcane metaphors and images of a language no longer accessible to modern translators, let alone to the rank-and-file? Anyone familiar with the challenge of rendering the idiom of one living language into that of another is aware of the subtle shifts in meaning engendered by the accretion of connotations or the attenuation of denotations, let alone the loss of semantic and cultural capital of an Iron-Age civilization like that of the ancient Israelites.⁷

meaning), Derash (comparative meaning), and Sod (secret or esoteric, mystical meaning) – the highlighted letters spelling the acronym Pardes. See Jewish Encyclopedia (9:652–53); R. N. 7 St. Jerome says as much in his Letter to Pammachius: "It is difficult in following lines laid down by others not sometimes to diverge from them, and it is hard to preserve in a translation the charm of expressions which in another language are most felicitous. Each particular word conveys a meaning of its own, and possibly I have no equivalent by which to render it, and if I make a circuit to reach my goal, I have to go many miles to cover a short distance. To these difficulties must be added the windings of hyperbata, differences in the use of cases, divergencies of metaphor; and last of all the peculiar and if I may so call it, inbred character of the language. If I render word for word, the result will sound uncouth, and if compelled by necessity I alter anything in the order or wording, I shall seem to have departed from the function of a translator. ... A literal translation from one language into another obscures the sense; the exuberance of the growth lessens the yield. For while one's diction is enslaved to cases and metaphors, it has to explain by tedious circumlocutions what a few words would otherwise have sufficed to make plain" (Jerome, "Letter LVII To Pammachius on the best method of translating," in NPNFii 6:114). Similar concerns governed the members of the 1611 KJV revision committee

Whether or not the venerable doctors of the Latin Church – Jerome, Augustine, Aquinas – were devoted to limiting the scope of their rhetorical engines to the safe boundaries of reason and doctrine, they all seemed to agree that the “literal sense” in its historical and grammatical context was the “primary sense” God and his amanuenses must have had in mind. To be sure, the primary and literal sense is not the figure of speech, the sign, but the meaning it signifies. The Church Fathers – like the latter-day schoolmen in their medieval academies such as Hugh of St. Victor, Albertus Magnus, Duns Scotus, Nicholas of Lyra, along with their Protestant descendants – Reformers like Luther, Calvin, Beza, and Melanchthon – wrestled with the multiplicity of meanings generated by the quadriga. They all sought to take the literal and primary sense as the point of departure for all other meanings – without diminishing the spiritual implications of the Word.⁸ Easy enough?

Anyone familiar with the figural language of the Hebrew Scriptures might pause here.⁹ For what might have possessed the inspired Psalmist when he sang, “Thou shalt Tread upon the Lion, & the Adder, (or, Asp,) the young Lion, & the Dragon shalt thou Trample under feet”? (BA 4:637; Ps. 91:13). What was courtly Isaiah thinking when he prophesied that “the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice’ den” (Isa. 11:8). Or, what did the evangelist have in mind when he recorded Christ’s dictum, “If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out. . . . And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee” (Matth. 5:29, 30). Finally, what about the proverbial Lex talionis, “eye for eye, tooth for tooth” (Lev. 24:20)?

Assuredly, neither the Psalmist nor Isaiah could have intended the literal sense. And many there are who laugh at this thing. Treading on poisonous serpents or dragons is dangerous enough in the deserts of Palestine, and wrestling with lions is best left to gladiators in ancient Rome; but having toddlers play with noxious creatures? Surely, if to be taken literally, this goes well beyond virulent misopedia by any societal norms! So, too, self-mutilation can hardly be intended, for it does not jibe with the Good News. Indeed, the letter kills. Better heed Mohandas Gandhi to whom is attributed the pacific turn, “An eye-for-eye and tooth-for-tooth would lead to a world of the blind and toothless.” In short, the literal sense could not have been the one intended by the inspired authors of yore. It violated all standards of reason and morals, even as a metonymy’s inward kernel contained in the outward shell of the words carries a historical and spiritual meaning that reveals the intention of the inspired author. The figural language in these illustrations evidently signifies a higher, spiritual or mystical denotation which, by implication, becomes the literal and primary sense of a scriptural passage.¹⁰

Modern scholars take it for granted that understanding the literal, historical, and grammatical sense of such passages requires firm grounding in Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, Aramaic, Greek, and Latin as it does in the study of the Targums, Midrash, Talmud, Mishnah, and rabbinic exegesis – first and foremost, Hillel, Rashi, Maimonides, Nachmanides, Ibn Ezra, David Kimchi, Abarbanel.¹¹ Yet the great doctors of the medieval Church until the Renaissance had little if any knowledge of Hebrew or access to rare manuscripts of these midrashim before Johannes Gutenberg in Germany and Daniel Bomberg in Italy rendered the fruit of their respective printing presses available to all who could afford them.¹²

Not surprising, then, the medieval defenders of the faith and their Protestant descendants during the Reformation kept wrangling over the letter and the spirit of the Bible (note for example the divisive debate on trans- and consubstantiation of the host), for when the literal and primary sense was embroidered with allegories and tropes, who was to umpire the boundaries between predictive typology crucial to establishing the Messiah in the NT and the florid metaphors of the ancient Hebrew prophets? And where should the line be drawn between OT prophetic typology, first cousin to the three allegorical levels of the quadriga, and the type's literal fulfillment in the NT, when the prophetic type in the Old is alleged to have had its first literal and historical accomplishment (antitype) in OT times? Is more than one literal actualization possible and allowed? If so, which one is the primary and which the secondary application? Put in another way, is free-flowing allegory robust enough to serve as the authoritative link between OT adumbration and NT abrogation?¹³ As the German philologist and literary critic Erich Auerbach points out in his chapter on "Fortunata," "The total content of the sacred writings was placed in an exegetical context which

¹⁰ As Samuel Mather, Cotton Mather's uncle, puts it in his Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1683, 1685, 1695, 1705), "We must distinguish between the thing preached, and the manner of preaching, between the Shell, and the Kernel, the Shadow, and the Substance. Now the thing preached was the Gospel; tho' the Shell was the Law. The Spirit and Substance, and Mystery of that Dispensation was Evangelical, tho' it was involved in a legal Shell and outside, and overshadowed with the Shades and Figures of the Law" (1705), p. 8. often removed the thing told very far from its sensory base, in that the reader was forced to turn his attention away from the sensory occurrence and toward its meaning. This implied the danger that the visual element of the occurrence might succumb under the dense texture of meanings.”¹⁴

Knotty questions like these invite dogmatists of all stripes to defend their creeds, for much is at stake. A case in point is the famous, albeit divisive debate, about the prophecy of Isaiah (7:14), which more than seven-hundred years later served the Apostle Matthew to establish Jesus of Nazareth as the promised Messiah (Matth. 1:21–23; Luke 1:35). First Isaiah:

Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.

Now Matthew’s application:

And she [Mary] shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

It is worth repeating that Matthew fashions the identity of Jesus Christ as the Immanuel intended by Isaiah even as the apostle pays no heed to the literal, historical, and political context that led to the prophet’s ancient proclamation. Let us set aside the disagreement between Jews and Christians about whom Isaiah, the most Christian of OT prophets, intended seven-hundred years before the birth of the Nazarene.¹⁵ The historical context establishes that Ahaz, king of Judah (c. 735–719 BCE), refused a sign from God that the enemies then at the gates of Jerusalem would be vanquished before the boy Immanuel – born of a virgin or young woman (almah) – would be old enough to distinguish right from wrong. Surely, the prophet could not have intended the child of the Virgin Mary, as Matthew claims! What use would such a promise have been to Ahaz nervously surveying his enemies’ armies from the battlements of the City of David? Isaiah’s prophecy would have sounded to desperate Ahaz like mockery or banter to foretell the birth of the Savior hundreds of years later. Surely, the divine prophet must have spoken of someone else, someone much closer to Ahaz's own time, perhaps even the prophet's own son, Shear-jashub ("a remnant shall return"), who accompanied his father during the inauspicious meeting with Ahaz (Isa. 7:3), or perhaps even Hezekiah (c. 729–c. 686 BCE), righteous king of Judah and son of Ahaz?¹⁶ In short, if Isaiah's prediction was literally and necessarily abrogated in his own time, then the apostle's NT appropriation of this key messianic prophecy could only intent a double literal fulfillment, or a secondary literal fulfillment, a mystical accomplishment perhaps, worse, a mere allegorical application to Jesus Christ (Matth. 1:22–23).¹⁷

When Platonism and its allegorical prayer-wheels were all the rage among the learned in the Greco-Roman world, when the Philosopher Philo Judaeus (c. 20 BCE–40 CE) was harmonizing Judaism with Greek philosophy two centuries before the Christian theologian Origen of Alexandria (c. 184–c. 253 CE) was decried for his outlandish allegorical, mystical exegesis of the Hebrew Scriptures, when even Josephus Flavius (37–c. 100 CE), the Jewish priest and historian, was steering clear of OT hyperboles in his Antiquities of the Jews and Jewish Wars to render his history more trustworthy to the learned Hellenists – did the apostles and St. Paul, first and foremost, make disciples for Christ by dressing up OT prophecies and types as allegories of the Messiah or impose secondary applications?¹⁸ Did predictive typology blend with allegory into more loosely employed exegetical modes? If so, was allegory authoritative enough to establish Christianity? Or was a single and literal fulfillment vested in Christ the only viable option? Either way, we need not doubt that it was, for the community of believers in the early Church certainly thought so. The Christian Church has maintained this position for nearly two millennia. As the German theologian and biblical scholar Hans W. Frei reminds us, "Allegory, the attachment of a temporally free-floating meaning pattern to any temporal occasion whatever, without any intrinsic connection between sensuous time-bound picture and the meaning represented by it, was in any case a common interpretive device in early

16 In fact, Rashi claims that Isa. 7:14 refers to Isaiah's own wife: "My wife will conceive this year. This was the fourth year of Ahaz. ... Divine inspiration will rest upon her. This is what is stated below: '(8:3) And I was intimate with the prophetess, etc.' and we do not find a prophet's wife called a prophetess unless she prophesied. Some interpret this as being said about Hezekiah, but it is impossible, because, when you count his years, you find that Hezekiah was born nine years before his father's reign. And some interpret that this is the sign, that she was a young girl and incapable of giving birth" [italics reversed], in Sefer Isaiah Halakhah: Mikraoth Gedoloth: Isaiah (1992) 1:67. Christianity, including the New Testament. The line between allegory and typological or figural interpretation was often very fine, when the temporal reality of an earlier instance was dissolved in favor of its meaning, but the application of that meaning remained riveted to a temporal occurrence.”¹⁹

Symptomatic of the ancient debate is the interlocutor’s query in Summa Theologica, a magisterial codex of medieval exegesis, by St. Thomas Aquinas (c. 1225–1274), an immensely influential Dominican philosopher and doctor of the Church. In the traditional form of Platonic Q&A, St. Thomas has his interlocutor raise the issue:

Objection 1: “It seems that in Holy Writ a word cannot have several senses, historical or literal, allegorical, tropological or moral, and anagogical. For many different senses in one text produce confusion and deception and destroy all force of argument.”

Reply to Objection 1: “The multiplicity of these senses does not produce equivocation or any other kind of multiplicity, seeing that these senses are not multiplied because one word signifies several things; but because the things signified by the words can be themselves types of other things. Thus in Holy Writ no confusion results, for all these senses are founded on one – the literal – from which alone can any argument be drawn, and not from those intended in allegory, as Augustine says (Epist. xlviii). Nevertheless, nothing of Holy Scripture perishes on account of this, since nothing necessary to faith is contained under the spiritual sense which is not elsewhere put forward by the Scripture in its literal literal sense.” (Pt. 1, Q. 1, Art. 10)²⁰

In short, the multiplicity of senses generated by the quadriga does not confuse the intended meaning of a text, so the learned doctor argues, for the four-fold method evolves from the literal and historical sense and employs predictive types – personal, real, occasional – to signify and adumbrate events and their fulfillment in the NT. Had St. Thomas’s learned response satisfied his interlocutor’s objection – and all those who were stymied by the same issues thereafter – the question of a single or multiple sense might have been put to rest. As Brevard S. Childs aptly sums up the issue, “There are few more perplexing and yet important problems in the history of biblical interpretation than the issue of defining what is meant by the sensus literalis of a text.”²¹

Lowance, Jr., focuses on Mather’s typology in his historical works, and so does S. Bercovitch in his highly influential (but often misleading) Puritan Origin of the American Self (1975, 2011). J. Stievernann provides a trenchant analysis of Mather’s prefigurative, typological, and allegorical readings of the Bible,

That these perplexing problems were far from settled and flared up again and again until modern times is evident in a major Deist controversy in the second decade of the eighteenth century. Cotton Mather did not sit idly by in his Boston study, as he eyed the hermeneutical debate from afar. The Dutch Arminian philosopher of natural law, political theory, and theology Hugo Grotius (1583–1645), now best remembered for his acclaimed works on jurisprudence, challenged one of the most valued proofs of the Christian religion when he championed a preterit-contextual interpretation of biblical prophecies. A new departure in the hermeneutical science, Grotius's Annotationes in Vetus et Novum Testamentum (Amsterdam, 1642–1650) insisted that many of the OT predictive types and prophecies applied by the apostles in the NT as literal fulfillments in Jesus Christ actually violated the OT prophets' intended primary sense.²² The primary and literal sense, Grotius claimed, had to be found in the historical and contextual events of the prophet's own time and could not be appropriated in any literalist sense to NT times. Only if a double fulfillment were allowed – a literal and primary abrogation in the Old adumbrating an allegorical or secondary fulfillment in the NT – could the apostle's adaptation of the OT predictive typology be admitted as proof the Christian religion.

One of Grotius's most prominent apologists, the Anglican scholar and member of the Westminster Assembly Henry Hammond (1605–1660), came to his defense in the subsequent turmoil engulfing this volatile thesis (1655–57). In his Second Defence Of the Learned Hugo Grotius (London, 1655), Hammond insisted that the learned Dutch philosopher did not exclude the literal fulfillment in Christ of certain OT prophecies but that in his famous Annotationes he was primarily concerned with “the first and literal interpretation” of the OT prophets, “where there is one immediate completion of each Prophecy among the Jewes of or neer that time, wherein it was written, another more remote and ultimate concerning Christ, or the times of the Gospel.” In his Annotationes, Hammond contended, Grotius therefore established “most distinctly the first, or literal sense, as that is terminated in the immediate completion ... because it was most neglected by other interpreters, who were more copious in rendring the mystical notation” as it applied to the NT (Second Defence, p. 12, § 17). But Hammond could not stem the avalanche of criticism coming down on Grotius. In thus questioning the exegetical method of none less than Christ's own inspired apostles, his opponents charged, Grotius's contextual historicization of the prophecies watered down the grounds and reasons of Christianity to mere allegories and inadvertently shattered the very bedrock of the Christian religion, with its bulwark of typology literally abrogated in Christ. The ever-widening debate, which involved the best of contemporary exegetes in Cotton Mather's time, cannot here be discussed in detail.²³ Suffice it to sketch some of the main responses to Grotius's historical method, which determined much of the hermeneutical debate on this issue in the early eighteenth century.

Cotton Mather, for one, in his late manuscript "Triparadisus" (1712, 1726–27), voiced his discontent with the method of his Dutch colleague, whose missionary handbook De Veritate Religionis Christianae (Paris, 1627) Mather still praised as a major contribution to Christian apologetics.²⁴ But Grotius's biblical commentary Annotationes carried the author's historicism too far. Mather was exasperated "that so Great a Man among us Christians, as Grotius ... should make such Mad Work in his Judaizing Figments on this wonderful Chapter [Isa. 53, the suffering servant]. How poorly would the Ethiopian Lord-Treasurer, have been accommodated with a Commentary on this Chapter, if instead of a Philip, he had mett with a Grotius, for a Commentator? ... The Bright Coruscations of a CHRIST, in every Line of the Chapter, are enough, even to convert a Rochester!" (Threefold Paradise 164–65).²⁵ Subsequent attempts to rescue the OT prophecies and their literal abrogation in Christ from the clutches of Arians, Socinians, and the "new" historicists, included such scholars as John Greene, Samuel White, John Lightfoot, William Lowth, Arthur Ashley Sykes, Edward Chandler – all of whom tried to harmonize Grotius's preterit contextualization with its tendency to disallow a single and literal fulfillment in the NT by expanding the "Prophetic Intent" to include a double fulfillment: a smaller one in

OT times and a larger one in NT times.²⁶ Did the Holy Spirit, then, inspire the apostles and evangelists to quote the ancient prophecies in a double or mystical sense? Mather certainly believed the Third Person of the Trinity did. As he put it in his commentary of Gen. 10:21, the Old Testament “is not merely a Fellow, but a Father to the New. Our Lord, and His Apostles, brought all their Arguments for the Christian Faith out of it” (BA 1:702).

Sir Isaac Newton's disciple William Whiston (1667–1752), the Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge and respected author of A New Theory of the Earth (London, 1696), had been wrestling with Hugo Grotius's historical method for some time and vehemently objected to the double and secondary application of the OT prophecies to Christ in his much acclaimed Boyle lecture, The Accomplishment of Scripture Prophecies (Cambridge, 1708) consisting of eight sermons preached in 1707 at St. Paul's cathedral, London. Whiston's dogmatic response to the hermeneutical quandary is well worth quoting at length:

I Observe that the Stile and Language of the Prophets, as it is often peculiar and enigmatical, so is it always single and determinate, and not capable of those double Intentions, and typical Interpretations, which most of our late Christian Expositors are so full of upon all Occasions. . . . A single and determinate sense of Prophecy, is the only natural and obvious one; and no more can be admitted without putting a force upon plain words, and no more assented to by the Minds of inquisitive Men, without a mighty byass [sic] upon their rational faculties. . . . If Prophecies are allow'd to have more than one event in view at the same time, we can never be satisfy'd but they may have as many as any Visionary pleases; and so instead of being capable of a direct and plain Exposition to the satisfaction of the judicious, will be still liable to foolish applications of fanciful and enthusiastick Men. . . . If this double intention in Prophecies be allow'd by us Christians, as to those Predictions which were to be fulfilled in our Savior Christ; and if we own that we can no otherwise shew their completion, than by applying them secondarily and typically to our Lord, after they had in their first and primary intention been already plainly fulfill'd in the times of the Old-Testament: We lose all the real advantage of these ancient Prophecies, as to the proof of our common Christianity; and besides expose our selves to the insults of Jews and Infidels in our Discourses with them. (Accomplishment, Sermon I, sec. x, pp. 13–14, 15, 16)²⁷

²⁷ For a trenchant response to Whiston's rejection of allegorical and mystical readings, especially as it concerns the controversial Book of Canticles, or Song of Songs, see “Occasional

It was absolutely necessary for Whiston that the messianic prophecies in the OT “have been properly and literally, without any recourse to Typical, Foreign, and Mystical Expositions fulfill’d in Jesus of Nazareth, our Blessed Lord and Savior,” else the cause of Christianity would relinquish the bedrock of prophetic proof (Accomplishment, p. 13). In spurning Grotius’s double sense and in categorically ruling out the apostles’ supposed allegorical proof of Christ, Whiston had aptly gauged the exegetical dilemma surrounding the prophecies. For if Grotius’s double sense were allowed to facilitate the NT abrogation, Whiston insisted, then all was lost and the Grub Street enthusiasts and lunatic fringe would rule the day.²⁸

Unfortunately for Whiston, his vehement insistence on a single application created a problem of his own making, for he painted himself into a literalist corner from which he could extricate himself only by performing a hermeneutic somersault. In his controversial treatise An Essay Towards Restoring the True Text of the Old Testament (London, 1722), Whiston examined the textual difficulties surrounding the apostles’ use of OT citations to establish Christ as the promised messiah, and hypothesized that when compared to the Samaritan Pentateuch, the Hebrew and Septuagint versions of the OT are corrupted precisely in those points where they concern the prophecies of the Messiah’s First and Second Coming (Propositions VI, VII, XII–XIII).²⁹ In his desperation to uphold the primary and literal abrogation of the OT prophecies in Christ in the face of the apostles’ alleged allegorization, Whiston was forced to argue that textual corruptions were introduced in the OT copies either accidentally by scribal error or, more likely, deliberately to thwart the proof of Christianity.³⁰ The first-century Jews of the Christian era, Whiston claimed, were put under tremendous pressure to stop the spread of the Gospel by “altering and corrupting their own Copies” of the Hebrew original and of the widely available Septuagint translation, "in such Citations, and in such other Places as might suit their own Designs":

²⁸ See especially J. E. Force, William Whiston (1985), chs. 3–4. D. Lucci’s Scripture and Deism (2008). It is one of those ironies in the history of interpretation that Whiston’s vehement defense of the Christian faith was severely compromised when in his Historical Preface to Primitive Christianity Reviv’d (1711) and in his Collection of Ancient Monuments Relating to the Trinity and Incarnation (1713) he openly declared his Arian rejection of the Johannine Comma as a forgery interpolated by St. Athanasius. Whiston’s Arianism cost him his academic appointment in Cambridge; meanwhile his mentor, Sir Isaac Newton, wisely kept mum about his own Arianism. ³⁰ The results of more than 30,000 textual variants between the Septuagint, the manuscript of the Codex Alexandrinus, and numerous other OT and NT manuscripts were published by the classical philologists Johann Ernst Grabe and John Mill, in 1705, and in Mill’s elephantine Novum Testamentum Graecum, cum Lectionibus Variantibus MSS. Exemplarium, Versioneum, Editionum, SS. Patrum et Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum (1746). For a useful study of these textual critics, see A. Fox, John Mill and Richard Bentley (1954), and J. Sheehan, The Enlightenment Bible (2005).

Now tho' these Jews, like all the rest of even the wicked Part of Mankind, must have had some natural Aversion and Reluctance to Fraud and Forgery; yet since they found themselves under an absolute Necessity, and had no other Means of opposing the spread of Christianity among them; they might persuade themselves, as no small Part of Mankind do in such Cases, that Lying for God, or for what they had long esteem'd his true Religion, was either no Crime at all; or, however, a very pardonable one; if not perhaps meritorious." (An Essay, Prop. XII, p. 224)

It is for these reasons, Whiston claimed, that many of the apostles' quotations of the OT messianic prophecies deviate in context, wording, and intent from the true and original texts preserved in the NT, and that, if restored to their proper place and wording, this faithful restoration of "the true Text of the Old Testament, to its original Purity" (333) would nullify the need for Grotius's double sense: The OT prophecies would then be singly and literally abrogated in the NT.

Alas, William Whiston's faithful restoration unleashed a firestorm of criticism among his contemporaries. His deus-ex-machina device to make the prophecies safe for Christianity especially aroused the ire of Anthony Collins (1676–1729), a voluble Deist, freethinker, and philosopher, who charged in his famous Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion (London, 1724) and in his follow-up The Scheme of Literal Prophecy Considered (London, 1727) that Whiston's "restoration" of the true text amounted to little more than "a mere WHISTONIAN BIBLE; a BIBLE confounding, and not containing the true Text of the Old Testament" (Discourse, p. 225). Without doubt, Collins's refutation of Whiston's literalism poured out the baby with the bathwater by repudiating Christianity as little more than Judaism allegorized. As a Socinian who rejected the divinity of Christ, Collins could well afford to look unflinchingly at the "fables" of a Jesus yet still praise the Creator for his "Divine Machine" and the harmony of the laws of Nature.³¹

Collins's basic argument was that the NT writers fashioned Christianity out of the Old by quoting the ancient prophecies out of context, by adding or deleting words, by adapting the OT wording to suit their own purposes, and by claiming that the new dispensation rescued the Word from all manner of corruptions and innovations that had crept into the sacred texts. Yet in presenting the new revelation as fulfilling the old, Collins countered Whiston's assertion, the NT writers seemed to forget that "the old revelations, far from intending any change, engraftment, or new dispensation, did for the most part declare they were to last for ever, and did forbid all alterations and innovations, they being the last dispensations intended” (Grounds and Reasons, p. 21). Determined to legitimize their new religion, Collins continued, the apostles were forced to demonstrate that the OT messianic types were singly and literally accomplished in Jesus of Nazareth. In their zeal to hail the promised Messiah, however, Christ’s disciples took considerable exegetical liberties by citing messianic predictions that are nowhere to be found in the Hebrew Scriptures and by adding and changing words without consideration of their context. This allegorical misappropriation and indiscriminate rephrasing of OT prophecies, Collins charged, is evident in a number of hotly debated messianic prophecies which the Apostle Matthew had applied to Jesus of Nazareth: Isa. 7:14–16 in Matth. 1:22–23; Hos. 11:1 in Matth. 2:14–15; Jer. 31:15–16 in Matth. 2:16–17; Zech. 6:12 in Matth. 2:23; Isa. 9:1–2, 42:7 in Matth. 14–16; Isa. 53:3–4 in Matth. 8:16–17; Isa. 42:1, 49:5–6 in Matth. 12:17–20.³²

But these proofs taken out of the Old, and urg’d in the New Testament, being, sometimes, either not to be found in the Old, or not urg’d in the New, according to the literal and obvious sense, which they seem to bear in their suppos’d places in the Old, and therefore not proofs according to scholastick rules; almost all Christian commentators on the bible, and advocates for the christian religion, both antient and modern, have judg’d them to be apply’d in a secondary, or typical, or mystical, or allegorical, or enigmatical sense, that is, in a sense different from the obvious and literal sense, which they bear in the Old Testament. (Discourse, pp. 39–40)³³

Indeed, with the preterit and contextual readings of Hugo Grotius, Henry Hammond, Richard Simon, Gulielmus Surenhusius, Samuel White, and others at his elbow, Collins argued that the apostles took prodigious liberties in quoting the Scriptures: “For they not only put a sense upon the prophet’s words, which is remote from the literal sense (wherein they so far concur with the allegorists); but proceeding by rules contrary to all use of language and to common sense, they put a sense upon the words subversive of the true literal sense; whereby properly speaking they are no interpreters at all, or rather worse than none, being mere indulgers of fancy” (Discourse, p. 245). It does not come as 32 Anthony Collins, Discourse (pp. 40–78ff). In his introductory comments on the Book of Matthew, Mather paraphrases a passage from Annotations upon the Old and New Testament (1662), by the Anglican clergyman John Trapp (1601–1669), pastor of Weston upon Avon (Gloucestershire) to underscore the correspondences between OT and NT:

Q. How often is the Old Testament cited in the New?

A. I have somewhere mett with this Computation; But I have not strictly examined it. There are above two hundred Places of the Old Testament cited in the New; So that in almost every needful Point (saies my Author Trap.) the Harmony is express’d. The Psalms are cited Fifty Three Times. Genesis, Forty two times. Isay, Forty Six times. This shewes the wonderful Agreement between the Books of Both Testaments. A more delightful Harmony, than what Pythagoras dreamt of the Spheres” (BA 7, preliminary comments).

a surprise that Anthony Collins unleashed an avalanche of refutations and ad hominem polemics for years to come.³⁴ Yet this controversy also forced the defenders of the faith to revisit their Christological readings and to adjust their typological arguments.

Anthony Collins's declaration of war on the Holy Scriptures was too much to bear for Cotton Mather, who entered the hermeneutical controversy then raging in the market place of ideas by composing his manuscript essay "Tripa-radus: A Discourse Concerning the Threefold Paradise" and by revising and adding new material to his "Biblia Americana" manuscript then still languishing in his library. In the former, he devised a "Golden Key" to harmonize his prophetic literalism with the preterit-allegorical hermeneutics of Hugo Grotius as a means to safeguard revealed religion from the onslaught of Deists like Blount, Collins, Toland, Tindal. In denying the apostles' supernatural ability "to know the Intention of the Prophecies in the Old Testament" and in questioning their capacity to link predictive types with their fulfillment in the life of Jesus Christ, Collins and his ilk "won't own the Interpretation which the New Testament putts upon the Old." Such "Blind Infidels" rob all true expositors of "this Comfort of the Scriptures," Mather retorted; "And except in a very few Places, we must suppose no more, than here or there something, that what we have in the History of our SAVIOUR there may be some Allusion to" (Threefold Paradise 162, 172). At first glance, Mather's defense of the apostles' literalist application seems to beg the question; for in resorting to miraculous causes, Mather knew only too well that he would not dismantle his opponents' exegetical stance. Less than a decade before his death, he devised a key to unlocking the hermeneutical mystery of the divine prophecies "to satisfy any Christian [that is to say, any Reasonable Man] in the Truth of the Matter:"

In the Divine Prophecies there were THREE Grand Events, One or other of which the Prophetic Spirit usually had in His View; And tho' His Design were sometimes to foretel some Lesser Events, which were more Quickly to be accomplished, yet His Main Design was to lead the Minds of His People unto those THREE Greater Events. For this Purpose, He often tack'd unto those Prophecies of those Lesser Events divers Expressions which must not be fully answered in them; Nor were these Lesser Events to be any other than Little Figures and Praeludes of those Greater Events, which GOD would have the Minds of the Faithful to be chiefly fixed upon; wherein those Things have been and will be accomplished. ... (Threefold Paradise, pp. 162–63).

Indeed, Mather acknowledged in the best Grotian manner the need to contextualize prophetic proclamation and abrogation in their respective historical setting. At the same time, he relegated literal fulfillment in OT times to a minor event, to a partial accomplishment, or to a mere prelude of its larger application in NT or post-NT times. But in elevating the NT accomplishment to the primary event intended by the prophetic spirit governing divine revelation, Mather in essence imposed a double signification and thus expanded prophetic literalism to encompass the realm of typological allegory. In an irony perhaps best understood by Mather himself, he broadened typological interpretations to become almost indistinguishable from the much-maligned allegory of the quadriga. We have come full circle.

The Figures or Types of the Old-Testament

We began by examining the figural application of Noah's Ark buoyed up by the flood waters as a type of the NT Church and Christian baptism in Cotton Mather's early sermon Works upon the Ark (1689). It is now my purpose to turn to the typological handbook which served him as his primary source for this early work and for numerous typological illustrations on the Pentateuch, in Biblia Americana (vols. 1–2). Of the many handbooks on typology available in Mather's time, The Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1683), composed by his uncle Samuel Mather (1626–1671), was his single most important resource.³⁵ Cotton Mather mined this work for all it is worth. Its author, eldest son of Richard Mather of Dorchester, Samuel Mather graduated from Harvard in 1643, became chaplain at Magdalen College (Oxford) and, subsequently, preacher at St. Nicholas, in Dublin, Ireland (1654). Suspended at the Restoration (1660), he briefly served as curate at Burtonwood (Lancashire), before his ejection under the Act of Uniformity (1662). Returning to Dublin, Samuel was briefly imprisoned in 1664 for maintaining a conventicle of Independents. He died in Dublin in 1671. Subsequently, his younger brother, Nathaniel Mather (1631–1697), gathered Samuel's manuscript sermons on typology and published them twelve years later. Samuel Mather is mostly remembered for his collection of sermons on OT typology, preached privately to a small group of Independents over a two-year period (Mar 23, 1666–Feb, 28, 1668), and posthumously published as Figures or Types of the Old Testament (Dublin, 1683).³⁶ In its time, it was a popular work in Old and New England: the first edition of Figures was twice reprinted (Dublin, 1685, and London, 1695), and a second edition with a useful index appeared in London (1705).³⁷

Samuel Mather's Figures or Types of the Old-Testament is a testament to Puritan hermeneutics in seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century New England. It is particularly noteworthy, because its author invests great effort in defining and illustrating his key terms. Before classifying biblical typology into "Personal Types" (luminaries such as Adam, Noah, David, Jonah, Moses), "Real Types" (such holy things as Noah's Ark, Manna, the Temple), "Occasional" (temporary types such as Jacob's Ladder, the Burning Bush, the Pillar of Cloud and Fire, the Brazen Serpent) and Perpetual" (everlasting types such as ceremonial laws and the Decalogue instituted under the old dispensation) – Samuel Mather sets forth his terminology in the time-honored manner of the schoolmen, employing Aristotelean categories, definitions, divisions, and subdivisions, all set forth in logical order and in clearly defined rules (Figures, pp. 63, 64, 72, 108, 127–28, 130, 165–66).

"A Type is a Shadow of good things to come" (Heb. 10:1), Samuel Mather begins his explication; it signifies an external and tangible reality, which adumbrates a "higher spiritual thing" or "Antitype" and its larger fulfillment (abrogation) in the near or distant future. As a visible and earthly "sign," the type resembles a "Pattern or Figure" of an invisible and heavenly reality which it shadows forth as in a glass, but darkly (1 Cor. 13:12). A type is therefore "some outward or sensible thing ordained by God under the Old Testament, to represent and hold forth something of Christ in the New." To be sure, there were no Gospel antitypes before the Good News was preached, for it was the Holy Spirit who taught the apostles and evangelists to discern their antecedents in the OT. "They were made Types afterwards; but they had not that Schesis, that habitude and relation to Christ and the Gospel, till there was a Gospel, or a Promise of Life by Christ, that blessed Seed” (Figures, pp. 51, 52, 56). Here abstracted in a few lines, Mather’s definition in the original amounts to a lengthy, step-by-step delineation garnished with biblical references and illustrations that his flock could easily transcribe in shorthand onto notepads and rehearse at leisure among friends and family as the custom was.

Yet Samuel Mather was not satisfied with mere definitions; he also devised four or five ground rules by which his parishioners could discern if a thing was a true type instituted by God:

1. Types are not mere “arbitrary similitudes” but must have “something of Christ stamped” upon them – like the rock struck by Moses gushes forth water in the wilderness or the sacrificial lamb offered on the altar. By analogy, they all shadow forth good things to come in the NT. Thus terrestrial buildings, like the Temple or Tabernacle, prefigure the true one in Heaven (Heb. 9:24), or the Land of Canaan, a type of the heavenly one (Heb. 11:16). Permutations of names and things – Adam, Melchizedek, Isaac, Moses, Joseph, David, Israel, the paschal lamb, manna – reveal God’s mind and are all interchangeable types of Christ in the new dispensation. Although inferior and falling short in some aspects, the OT types must closely resemble the larger and complete NT antitype. There is a manifest analogy between the dispensation under the Law and the Gospel mysteries of which they are an image. “The Protasis or Proposition of these sacred similitudes is in the Books of Moses, and in the Old Testament; but the Apodosis the Reddition or Application is to be found chiefly in the New” (53, 54, 55).
2. Types are both “Signs” of Gospel mysteries and “Seals” or “Pledges and Assurances” of God’s infallible will to be fulfilled in its appointed time. As signs and seals, these types not only prefigure what “the Messiah might happen to be” but what Christ “should certainly be.” And “to suppose that the Messiah might have been quite another manner of Person, than the Types hold forth, is to take away the Analogy between the Type and the Antitype; and so by consequence to deny that they were Types; or else to make them all Lyes and false Images” (55, 56).
3. Types therefore relate not only to Christ as a “Person” but also to “his spiritual and saving Benefits” (antitype) arising from his propitiation. For example, as types, the cherubim on the Ark of the Covenant do not directly signify Christ, but his “Angels” who minister to the Lord and his people in the NT Church. Likewise, the Passover in the Old Testament types out the benefits of the Lord’s Supper in the New, just like the passage through the Red Sea does, the sacrament of our baptism. Yet besides Christ’s blessings, the OT types also foreshadow “our Miseries without him”: thus leprosy as a type of our ceremonial uncleanness or “natural Pollution” types out lack of grace; Hagar and Ishmael, the Covenant of Works; Babylon, the “Type of the Church of Rome”; Pharaoh, a “Type of the Devil”; and Sodom and Gomorrah, a “Type of Hell” (56, 57).
4. Type and antitype, no matter how much they resemble each other by way of analogy, always manifest “a dissimilitude and a disparity between them in other things” – else they would be identical. The NT antitype must always surpass in clearness and magnitude the OT type. For example, Adam is a type of Christ, the second Adam.

However, as the latter infinitely transcends the former (1 Cor. 15:47), their disparity is seen in Adam's sin and mortality and in Christ's perfection, propitiation, and eternity. As the type is incomplete and can never fully match the antitype, so the priests of old were types of Christ but could never reach the Lord and Savior in grandeur or glory – let alone pardon sins. Likewise, as types, persons and things in the OT always fall short of Christ's perfection, the antitype, so Jonas was only “a partial Type” of the Messiah whom he shadowed forth in one aspect only: abiding in the grave for two or three days before rising again. Although a prophet and king, David fell short of Christ, the antitype, who was prophet, king, and priest; so Moses – a prophet, king, and priest – yet his priesthood was curtailed when Aaron was consecrated, and as king and judge Moses never gave himself as a sacrifice “unto Death for expiation of their Sins.” The type always falls short of the perfection of the antitype (57, 58).

5. Types differ from similes in that the former is an instrument of logical argument, but the latter merely a device of comparison. An arbitrary type resembles a fixed or instituted type, but the former is manmade, whereas the latter is devised by God himself. Thus “Marriage” may be compared to “the mystical Union between Christ and the Church” (Eph. 5), yet the former is merely “a Sign,” not a type, let alone a sacrament (“as the Papists” argue), else we would have “a thousand Sacraments.” We have but two, they many; ours are “Signs of Christ already come”; theirs but types of Christ yet to come (58, 59). Finally, types differ from parables in that the former reveal the mind of God and carry the “Stamp of Institution” as a thing set apart, whereas the latter is nothing but “a Sacred Similitude” used to illustrate one thing or another (58, 59).³⁸

In all these cases – no matter how beautiful and expressive – Samuel Mather warns his congregation that “Men must not indulge their own Fancies, as the Popish Writers use to do, with their Allegorical Senses, as they call them; except we have some Scripture ground for it. It is not safe to make any thing a Type meerly upon our own fansies and imaginations; it is Gods Prerogative to make Types” (55).

Samuel Mather's Figures or Types supplied his nephew in the American Boston with much valuable material for homiletic instructions. As in The Work of the Ark (1689) and in numerous other cases, Cotton Mather embedded his uncle's main points in this sermon and incorporated them as glosses into all pertinent places of Biblia Americana. During its thirty-year gestation period (1693–1728), this commentary increased to nearly five thousand folios and served Cotton as an encyclopedic sourcebook for hundreds of published and unpublished sermons and tracts that issued from his North- End pulpit.³⁹

To compare his uncle's Christological exegesis of Noah's Ark in Figures (71–77) with his nephew's homiletic adaptation in Work upon the Ark is to witness the transformation of a cut-and-dry dictionary definition into an imaginative tale told by a master storyteller. Cotton Mather makes Noah's archetypal story come alive for his maritime congregation by teasing out mystical analogies between the blueprint of shipbuilding and the gathering of pure churches, between being tempest tossed upon the billows of life and rowing in Eden of a heart in port. One example from Work upon the Ark must suffice:

That Noahs ARK was a Type of Gods CHURCH.

As a Ship is by Humane Ingenuity, often made a Resemblance of the Church; so the Ark which was a sort of a Ship; is by Divine Authority, exhibited as a Figure or Shadow of it. They compare the Pump in a Ship to Repentance, which fetches out the Corruption that endangers our Souls. They compare the Sails, to our Affections; in which when the Wind of the holy Spirit blows, we are carried swiftly on to the Harbour of Eternal Blessedness. The Rudder, that is compared unto the Tongue of man; the Compass, that may be compared unto the Word of God. But these comparisons are innumerable; as they that have read Navigation Spiritualized, by some Worthy English Writers, must needs be sensible; and I hope every Gracious Mariner does accustom himself to such Reflections. (Work, p. 4)⁴⁰

OBSERVATION. VIII.

There are very Different and Various Degrees in the Church of God. It was Enjoyed concerning the Ark, in Gen. 6.16. With Lower, Second, and Third Stories, thou shalt make it. Thus after some sort, there are Three Stories in the Church of God; there is the Visible Church, there is the Mystical Church on Earth, and there is the Triumphant Church in Heaven. These three are so many Ascending Stories in the Ark of the Lord.

APPLICATION

Let not a Room in the Lower Story of the Church content any of us. Count it not enough to be in the Church Visible; that is a part of the Ark, which any sorts of Creatures are often Crouding and Herdning together in. Doubtless, Noah's Quarters were Above, just under the Roof of the Ark. Let us Aspire to be in the Church Mystical; the Church of which 'tis said in Mat. 16.18. The gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Yea, Let us desire to be in the Church Triumphant; the Church described in Heb. 12.22. The Innumerable Company of Angels, the Spirits of Just men made perfect, and Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant. Get first into the middle Story of Grace, and so you shall step up into the upper Story of Glory, at the Last. (Work, p. 25)⁴¹

On some level, Mather's analogies between the various floors of Noah's grand vessel and the Church Visible (saints and hypocrites), Invisible and Mystical (militant on earth), and Triumphant (in Heaven) are highly instructive of how exegetes steeped in the figural language of the Bible discovered parallels of the remotest kind between both Testaments. Whether or not the presumptive author of Genesis intended these analogies as prophetic types of Christ and his Church would be anyone's guess – if it were not for the unstated assumption upon which the pericope of Noah's Ark is based. For both the patriarch and his ship to pass muster as prophetic types adumbrating NT fulfillments, they cannot be mere myths, legends, or parables but must be factual and grounded in historical reality. As Samuel Mather cautions, there must be “an Historical Verity in all those typical Histories of the Old Testament. They are not bare Allegories, or parabolical Poems, such as is the Song of Solomon, or Jotham's Parable, Judg. 9.7. or Nathan's Parable to David, 2 Sam. 12. but they are a true Narrative of Things really existent and acted in the World, and are literally and historically to be understood” (Figures, p. 128). Factual history, not make-believe!

To be sure, “the Nature of an Allegory” is not always “Res ficta,” Samuel Mather reminds us, for God as “the Author of all Arts” has not set “such Rule in the Art of Rhetorick,” even if some rhetoricians have done so by mistake. But to turn all “allegorical and typical Histories and Providences into meer Romances and Fictions,” Mather bedevils the defenders of “the Transubstantiation of the Sacramental Elements,” is to argue that “Things could not be Real, and yet Typical too” (pp. 128–29). Even if St. Paul figuratively likens Hagar and Sarah to “an allegory” of the Covenants of Work and Grace (terrestrial Jerusalem below and celestial Jerusalem above, “the mother of us all” [Gal. 4:22–26]) – they are really type and antitype in light of the Gospel and “most fully” refer to “Christ the Antitype” (Figures, p. 129). In short, the hidden meaning behind what St. Paul himself analogically calls “an allegory” is no allegory at all by the standards of Reformed exegesis but a real OT prefigurative type of which the NT Christ and his Church are antitypes. To be sure, Samuel Mather does not contradict his earlier argument. For him, the deciding factor is that St. Paul's extended metaphor is based on real historical persons and events: Abraham's two wives, bondwoman and freewoman, and the antithetical natures of Ishmael and Isaac (BA 1:563, 915–16). Terminological confusion aside, allegoresis had a much wider girth of legitimacy in Apostolic times than the Reformed were inclined to permit in post-Reformation Europe. Or, if Hermann Melville may for once serve as a biblical commentator, “Who in Noah's rainbow can draw the line where the violet hue ends and the orange tint begins? We see the difference of the spectral colors distinctly, but where exactly does the one first blend and enter into the other? So with type and allegory. In pronounced cases there is no question about them, but in cases less pronounced, to draw the exact line of demarcation between the four methods of the quadriga few but the most zealous exegetes will undertake.”⁴²

But undertake they did, seriously and plentifully. Cotton Mather’s Biblia Americana bears testimony to how mimetic typology in all its forms and manifestations flourished in early Enlightenment New England. In his lengthy commentary on the pericope of Noah’s flood (Gen. chs. 6–8), Mather did his utmost to ground the ancient story on the best historical, philological, and geological evidence he could muster to validate the history behind the deluge (BA 1:579–66). He was not satisfied with merely reciting his predecessors’ pious inferences; no, he went out of his way to supply his readers with the best scientific evidence available: Steno’s glossopetrae and seashells on the top of mountains the world over, giant fossils of the biblical Nephilim (Gen. 6:4) found in North America – true evidence, Mather held, that the flood was universal, not a local freshet in a valley of the Caucasus Mountains or regional inundation confined to Mesopotamia as some neoterics in his day were wont to claim (BA 1:582–601); the origin and quality of “Gopher-Wood” employed in the building of the Ark; calculations about the vessel’s shape, size, and capacity of the Ark’s interior stories and storage compartments to house Noah’s family, the animals, and provisions for the year-long journey (BA 1:602–24); Cartesian hypotheses, mechanistic explications, and mathematical guestimates of the antediluvian origin, its natural causation, and oceans of water necessary to cover the highest mountains on earth (BA 1:625–66). Skepticism was targeted with systematic evidence from the natural sciences. Those who question the candor of the Bible, Mather interjected, should turn to Georgi Horni Arca Noae (1666), sec. VI, pp. 26–27, by the celebrated Dutch historian George Horn (1620–1670). Here we learn that the Dutch Mennonite Peter Janslan had a ship built “according to the Proportion of Noah’s Ark.” Seamen and critics alike ridiculed this thing. Yet when the shipwright was done with his ark, “it was found to be most convenient for a Merchant-man in Time of Peace, as being a swift Sailor, and managed with fewer Hands than other Ships.” Alas, the vessel was equipped without guns! But “in this Respect,” Mather triumphs, “it had a greater Resemblance to Noah’s Ark, which was not intended for a Man of War” (BA 1:623–24).⁴³

In light of this evidentialist validation, Mather could confidently construct his analogies and insists that they foreshadowed Christ and his benefits: The door of Noah’s Ark is a type of Christ’s Church: “Our Saviour saies, I am the Door.” The Ark had openings for “Light and Air, in the Upper-Story,” and fresh air diffused through “Port-Holes”; so “the Church is likewise a Place of Light, and from a Glorious Christ, that Sun of Righteousness, it fetches all its Light”; although there were “many Mansions and Chambers” in Noah’s vessel, “yett they all made but One Ark,” just like the “many particular Congregations and Societies” constitute “One Catholick Church.” Both clean and unclean creatures entered the Ark, so “there are in the Church of God, Creatures of all Natures, both Good and Bad.” And those who “visibly belong to the Church, ought to lay aside their Evil Natures”; the “Raven” leaving the Ark never to return? “Apostates” and “Ill Birds, that go from the Church, without Returning again unto it any more!”⁴⁴ And the dove? Well, isn’t it obvious? (BA 1:622–23). Careful reconstruction of all manner of historical and scientific proof of the deluge, then, established for Mather and his peers that the story of Noah’s flood was true history, not the fables and fanciful imaginings of poets and pagan mythologists.⁴⁵ As realistic history, the pericope of Noah’s Ark could thus prop up the quest for legitimate Christological correspondences between the Old and New Old Testament. As he put it in his annotation on Isa. 58:13, “Our Bible is, The Book of the Messiah. If Men would come to the Reading of the Bible, præpared with a Resolution, to seek the Messiah, in every Part of it, they would then come to the Sense of this miraculous Book, and Behold and Confess its Glory” (BA 5:787). Ironically, while Mather heartens his readers to look at the Hebrew Scriptures through the prism of Christological foreshadowing and fulfillment, he could – almost in the same breath – warn them against straining their eyes too much. Through ignorance of Hebrew and excessive zeal, he cautioned, many of the pious strain “a Text, beyond what it would bear, to find a Prophecy of CHRIST contained in it.” Words for the wise, indeed. To be sure, Mather did not always practice what he preached; he, too, could get carried away as he yearned for “the Approaching Age of Light, when the Knowledge of CHRIST, will be the special Character of the Age, and the Sun of Righteousness will more than ever arise upon the World” (BA 5:715).

Typology and Natural Philosophy

If Cotton Mather’s Christological exegesis of Noah’s Ark, its tripartite levels, and creatures of ill omen strains the credulity of modern readers, Biblia Americana contains numerous examples that have more in common with the kind of fanciful allegories about which Samuel Mather warns than with prophetic types adumbrating NT accomplishment. Cotton Mather, sometimes, appears to be aware of overreading OT signs when he indulges his penchant to discover Christ in biblical metaphors and tropes. Yet he also appears to counterbalance this propensity by embedding his argument in the language of scientific extrapolations. A case in point is his typological elucidation of the Mosaic Tabernacle to which he devotes nearly eighteen manuscript folios of double-columned commentary (BA 2:336-70; Exod. 25:1-27:20). Every facet of the edifice is examined in minute detail as a recondite type of Christ: its size, measurements, layout, holy instruments, furnishings, courtyards, material covering and coloring – every aspect is of mystical import to any exegete looking for signs and seals of hidden meaning. Significantly, the main parts of the Tabernacle signify (1) the medieval macrocosm of the celestial imperium and the primum mobile and (2) the microcosm of the body of Christ and his Church:

- (1) the Tabernacle is a type of this world; the holy of holies, a type of the third heaven; the courtyards, the earth; the table with twelve loaves, the twelve signs of the zodiac; the seven lamps of the menorah, the seven planets; the four colors of the coverings, the four elements signified by the Tetragrammaton.
- (2) the court is a type of the Church visible; the court's amplitude, the Church's enlargement; the veil at the door and the interior hangings, Church admission only for the elect and divine knowledge through the eye of faith; the brazen altar and its horns, Christ as propitiatory sacrifice and his power to redeem sinners; the fire from heaven consuming the sacrifice, God's spirit embracing the faithful; the laver and its cleansing water, repentance and tears of compunction; the golden table and its shewbread, the messiah as the bread of life; the twelve loaves, sufficient food for all believers; the seven-branched menorah, a figure of particular (Reformed) churches and their members illuminated by Christ's gospel united in the Holy Spirit.

A mere summary provides but a foretaste of how Cotton Mather spiritualizes the intricate symbology of the Mosaic Tabernacle and its furnishings. Much the same can be found in his minute analyses of the High Priest's robes, the Urim and Thummim, ephods, girdle, and breastplate as types foreshadowing their antitypes (Exod. chs. 28–29). Perhaps one small aspect deserves closer attention here; it demonstrates the fertile imaginations of typologizers in their quest to trace Christ in the Hebrew Scriptures:

"The Tabernacle, was doubtless, a Type of our Lord Jesus Christ; particularly of His Body, wherein He Tabernacled among us." Assuming that his gloss amounts to "a Speculation worth our mentioning," Mather cannot help but explore how the dimensions of Christ's human body, his limbs, and location of organs, might be typified by the portable edifice and its appurtenances in the wilderness (BA 2:364–65). He had good precedent for doing so. Among the most memorable predecessors and contemporaries who correlated the measurements of the human body to Noah's Ark and the Mosaic Tabernacle are the French mathematician Johannes Buteo, aka. Jean Borrel (c. 1492–c. 1572), who had done so in his influential De Arca Noe, Cuius formae, capacitatisque; fuerit, in Buteonis Delphinatici Opera Geometrica (1554), pp. 11–12; and the German Jesuit polymath Athanasius Kircher (1602–1680), in his oft-cited Arca Noë, in Tres Libros Digesta (1675), lib 1, sect. 3, cap. 9, pp. 33–35. The relative dimensions of the human body and its limbs thus correspond in Kabbalistic fashion with the blueprint of the Ark and the Tabernacle – the music of the spheres in complete sync with things on earth. But Mather's case is a special one.

In the present illustration, none less than the English physiologist Nehemiah Grew (1641–1712) and his teleological Cosmologia Sacra (1701), bk. 6, ch. 8, p. 253, came to Mather's aid. Backed by De Architectura (1649), lib. 3, cap. 1, p. 38, a work on the style and harmony of classical architecture, by the Roman civil engineer Marcus Vitruvius Pollio (c. 90–c. 20 BCE), Grew and Mather declare that “Without symmetry and proportion there can be no principles in the design of any temple; that is, if there is no precise relationship between its members, as in the case of those of a well-shaped man.”⁴⁶ With this architectural premise in place, the brace can go out on their analogical limb: The measurements of the principal members that prop up the weight of the human body – thighs, legs, arms, feet, fingers, toes – proportionally answer to the measurements of the boards at the sides and end of the Mosaic Tabernacle; the four pillars supporting this tent correspond to the “four Bones of the Cubiti” (elbows) and “the Brachium” (arm) to form a right angle on each side. The five pillars at the Tabernacle's entrance match the body's “Five Principal Commanders”: 2 arms, 1 backbone, and 2 legs. Next, taking the measure of “the Dimple in the Upper Lip” of a man's mouth, plus “the First Joint of the middle Finger” ($\frac{1}{2}$ inch and 1 inch, respectively), Mather (and his source) extrapolate the size of their Tom Thumb, whose proportions answer the relational magnitude of the Tabernacle in multiple ways. Alas, this is not all! For just as much as a man's height “from the Sole of the Foot, to the Top of the Hip” and from “the bottom of the Os Sacrum [sacral bone] to the Crown of the Head” stands in the same proportional dimension to the length and height of the Tabernacle as the length of a man lying stretched out and his height when sitting upright, so, too, analogically “the Four Intrails of the Tabernacle” (i. e., throne, incense, altar, table) correspond “not unaptly” to the positions of “the Brain, the Heart, the Stomach, and the Liver.” Indeed, as a type, the dimensions of the human body and of the Mosaic tent (inside and out) answer the shape, size, and soul of Jesus Christ, the larger-than-life antitype. Any questions? “The Curious,” Mather adds, might pursue this comparison further, “but at present we desist.” And so shall we – in a moment.

Athanasius Kircher, Arca Noë (1675)

If we didn't know better, it might not be out of place to wonder if Drs. Cotton Mather (D.D.) and Nehemiah Grew (M.D.) are given to jesting. Get thee behind me, Satan! To be sure, Samuel Mather did issue his caveats against runaway allegories and Kabbalistic peculiarities, but when en route to the Celestial City, Mr. Zeal elopes with Ms. Piety at the crossroads of Gretna Green, a boundless bundle of mystical fancies, no doubt, will be their progeny. So here. Let's dismiss mirth and levity and send hilarity packing. But if we cannot see it their way, is it our place to judge?

And yet, Mather's analogy between the Tabernacle's external and internal furnishings on the one side and the physiological description of the inner and outer man on the other deserve another look. If farfetched to our secular imagination, Mather's comparison is entirely consistent with Jewish mysticism in the Zohar, the Book of Splendor. When God created man in his image, man's inner and outer Self corresponded to the supernal mysteries above and the lower mysteries below:

What, then, is man? Does he consist solely of skin, flesh, bones and sinews? Nay, the essence of man is his soul; the skin, flesh, bones and sinews are but an outward covering, the mere garments, but they are not the man. ... all have a symbolism in the mystery of the Supernal Wisdom, corresponding to that which is above. The symbolism of the skin is as the Master has taught us in connection with the words: 'Who stretchest out the heaven like a curtain' (Ps. CIV, 2); and again 'Rams' skins, dyed red and badgers' skins' (Ex. xxv, 5, in connection with the tabernacle). These skins are a garment which protects a garment, viz. the extension of the heaven, which is the outer garment (of the Divine). The curtains (of the Tabernacle) are the inner garments, corresponding to the skin upon the flesh. The bones and the sinews symbolize the Chariots and the celestial Hosts, which are inward. ... Esoterically, the man below corresponds entirely to the Man above. Just as in the firmament, which covers the whole universe, we behold different shapes formed by the conjunction of the stars and planets to make us aware of hidden things and deep mysteries; so upon the skin which covers our body and which is, as it were, the body's firmament, covering all, there are shapes and designs – the stars and planets of the body's firmament, the skin through which the wise of heart may behold the hidden things and the deep mysteries indicated by these shapes and expressed in the human form. (Soncino Zohar, Shemoth, sec. 2, Vol. 2, p. 76a).⁴⁷

Whether or not Mather and his source are cognizant of this Kabbalistic parallel – viewing the mystical correspondences between the inner and outer man, the inner and outer Tabernacle, and the celestial and terrestrial realms – is difficult to tell at first sight. However, typology as an exegetical tool to uncover hidden analogies between OT and NT, the first and second Adam, is ideally suited to remove the veil from the soul's inner eye: the material world becomes transparent as the eye mystically absorbs rather than reflects the light of the celestial sphere.

Other examples illustrating Mather's typological proclivities in Biblia Americana are equally telling. They demonstrate just how wide the scope of exegesis can be stretched when biblical types, natural philosophy, and eclectic reading habits join forces. Such is the case with Mather's figurative reading of the the proverbial manna (BA 2:242-45), perhaps the best-known of all Christological types. The analogy between the sustenance God miraculously provided to the mixed multitude in the Sinai desert (Exod. 16:12-35) and Jesus Christ as the "bread of life" (John 6:35), along with the feeding of the five thousand in the NT (Matth. 14:13–21, John 6:1–14, 31–35), seems obvious enough.⁴⁸ That said, Mather's typological manna dressing bears explaining: "The Manna was outwardly Despicable and Contemptible, but really an Excellent Food," Mather opens his historical and literal description according to his uncle's rules. "It was but little on Quantity: yett it was Angels Food; the Figure of it was Round; the Colour of it was White; the Tast of it, like Fresh Oyl, or Wafers baked with Honey. It sustained the whole Congregation of Israel; They might Eat it as they found it, or they might Grind it & Bake it" (BA 2:242). With the substance of the literal type in place, Mather moves to the next level of interpretation by drawing on the trope of Isaiah's suffering servant: "The outward Appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ, was in like Manner Despicable & Contemptible. [Isa. 53.3] But really Hee is the most excellent Object. [Cant. 5.16. 1 Pet. 2.7.] The Tast of Him, in His Promises, & in His Appointments, is very Delightful, to those that enjoy it. [1. Pet. 2.3. Psal. 119.103.] The Sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ, were the Grinding & Baking of the Manna, to bee Food for our Faith. And now Hee satisfies our Desire of no less than, the whole Israel of God." Notice how Mather's literal level of grinding wheat into flour and baking the bread is amplified at once into a figurative expression of Christ's torment on the cross and into a sacramental metaphor of the life-giving host.

Next, Mather probes how the typological sign or "Substance" surpasses the OT "Shadow" on the spiritual and mystical levels. In so doing, his analogies become increasingly strained as he searches more narrowly for hidden mysteries overlooked by his peers. As the literal manna was but able to "Feed the Body" of the murmuring Israelites in the wilderness, only the messiah, the bread of life, "Feeds the Soul" of spiritual Israel; the former sustained but the "Natural Life"; the latter, the "Spiritual and Eternal." If this manna was concealed "in the Dew," it "lept up, as it were, in Two Beds of Dew," one above in heaven and the other below on earth. God's Word is this "Bed of Dew," the only "Hidden Manna," to be found inside his Church; there is no salvation outside the camp of spiritual Israel (BA 2:243).⁴⁹

Next, moving to the tropological, moral level, Mather's interlocutor queries his readers: How and when is this manna to be gathered? All those who seek the Lord "must go out of their Tents"; i. e., "out of them selves, & out of their Sins, and out of all Creatures." This manna, like Christ, must be "gathered Early in the Morning" of our lives and on a daily basis, because none was to be set aside for another day. In like manner, the faithful are to trust in God's providence, feed upon Christ "Daily," and not let any of it "ly by us, unimproved."

Finally, on the level of the anagoge, Mather knowingly relates that when the Israelites arrived in Canaan, their manna ceased; just so the Mosaic

⁴⁸ See also Mather's commentary (BA 8, John 6:31, 32, 51,71).

"Ordinances" will cease "when wee come to Heaven." This is cessation of manna is also typified in a Latin passage, which Mather quotes from the Latin thesis De Oeconomia Temporum Testamentaria Triplex (1673), by the German theologian Wilhelm Momma: "On the sixth day, the Israelites received a double measure of manna; on the seventh, none was found. So on the sixth day of the week Christ expended all his strength, and he gave his life that the work of redemption was consummated and completed. On the seventh day he was neither in the sepulcher nor to be seen or found on earth among men."⁵⁰

Alas, not every scholar trained in exegesis saw eye-to-eye on this matter. Given the miraculous appearance of manna in the wilderness (OT) and its typological signification of Christ as the bread of life (NT), Mather is dismayed to have this heuristic prop challenged by none less than Claudius Salmasius (1588–1653), the famous classical scholar and professor of Oriental languages at Leiden University. Salmasius, looking over the shoulders of Aristotle, Galen, Avicenna, Pliny, and Scaliger, claims in his De Manna et Saccharo Commentarius (Paris, 1664) that this manna was nothing but a coriander-like, sweet-tasting gummy substance, which was not supernatural at all but an ordinary food staple when in season and commonly found in the Fertile Crescent. In short, Salmasius demythologizes this ancient miracle as pious hyperbole – just like Spinoza would do less than a decade later in his Tractatus Theologico-Politicus (1670) and Dom August Calmet in his Dictionary (1732).⁵¹ In thus separating the supernatural from the historic and actual realm, Salmasius's evidentialism not only undermined the mystery of the Word become flesh but also interrogated implicitly the transformative nature of the Lord's Supper. Mather's irritation at Salmasius should not mislead us into believing that the former was opposed to natural explanations

50 See Mather's commentary in BA 2:244n: "Sexto Die dupla Mannæ mensura dabatur; septimo non inveniebatur. Sexto Die Septimanæ Christus omnes vires impendit, et animam ipsam emisit, ut opus Redemptionis consummaret et perficeret. Septimo Die in Sepulchro jacuit, nec in terrâ inter homines visus aut inventus est," in Momma's De varia conditione & statu Ecclesiae Dei sub Triplici Oeconomia; Patriarcharum, ac Testamenti Veteris, & denique Novi; Libri tres. 51 On Spinoza's hermeneutics, see S. Nadler, "Spinoza" (827–36). Even the French Roman Catholic theologian Dom August Calmet, Abbot of Senones, in his 3-volume An Historical, Critical, Chronological and Etymological Dictionary of the Holy Bible. 3 vols. (1732), cites several source that testify that "still at this Day there falls Manna in several Places of the World: In Arabia, in Poland, in Calabria, in Mount Libanus, in Dauphine, and elsewhere. The most common and the most famous is that of Arabia, which is a kind of condensed Honey, to be found in the Summer Time upon the Leaves of the Trees, the Herbs, the Rocks, or the Sand of Arabia Petrea. It is of the same Figure as Moses describes. That which is gathered about Mount Sinai is of a very strong Smell, which is communicated to it by the Herbs upon which it falls. It very easily evaporates, insomuch that if thirty Pounds of it were to be kept in an open Vessel, there would hardly ten of it remain at the End of fifteen Days. This Arabian Manna is sold in the Apothecaries Shops, at Grand Cairo in Egypt" (2:122).

even when miracles seemed so much more apropos for typological interpretations. For Mather there is no conflict between teleology and natural philosophy as he asserts throughout his Christian Philosopher: A Collection of the Best Discoveries in Nature, with Religious Improvements (London, 1721/22). His eclectic reading in the natural sciences of his day helps him to validate his Christological exegesis of the OT just as much as it does to confirm the truthfulness of the Mosaic narrative.⁵² In fact, he could easily move back and forth with ease. After all, Theology was still the Queen of all Sciences, and Sophia, her twin sister, an instrument of reason and harmony.

Mather's lengthy annotation on Exod. 16:19–24 illustrates this point aptly. Manna was to be gathered every morning before the hot sun melted it away, according to God's directive, but none was to be kept for another day – except for the Sabbath. Those who disregarded this instruction discovered the next morning that their manna was flyblown; it “bred worms, and stank.” A miracle? Well, that depends on whether a lukewarm Cartesian like Mather allowed second causes to trigger this sudden metamorphosis or whether he had God offset the laws of nature by chasing one miracle with another.⁵³ As to miracles, Mather held with Nehemiah Grew to back him up that “A Miracle is the extraordinary Effects of some unknown Cause, limited by Divine Ordination and Authority, to its Circumstances, for a suitable End.” Put in a different way, miracles are less the effect of supernatural causation than the consequence of an unknown chain of events or secondary causes. For once they are located in nature, the events cease to be miraculous. Oddly enough, this definition is something like a half-way house between things above nature and the purely ordinary laws of nature. To be sure, Mather was not always happy with such demystifications. For just a few paragraphs later, he complains that “This brings too much of Nature into the Matter” (BA 2:161). Be that as it may, his lengthy commentary on Exod. 16:33 [20] allows him to bring to the table the cutting-edge insight into the age-old question of abiogenesis or spontaneous generation. He clearly wants his cake and eat it too (BA 2:248–51).

In Mather's day, the hoary belief in abiogenesis still enjoyed wide currency. Apparently posited by the Milesian philosopher Anaximander (611–547 BCE), the idea that insects, bees, hornets, and other simple organisms spring from putrefying matter, rotting vegetables, carcasses, excrements, and mud, without sexual generation, was taken over by the Greek Philosopher Aristotle (BCE 384–322), in his History of Animals (5.1.539a18–26; 5.19.550b3–551a7) and Generation of Animals (3.11.761a13–762a35) and widely circulated in the medieval academies until the early eighteenth Century.⁵⁴ The celebrated Italian physician and naturalist, Francesco Redi (1626–1697) put this question to the test. He describes the results of his experiments with carcasses of snakes, fish, scorpions, spiders, fruit, and other dead matter in open and covered containers, in his Experimenta circa Generationem Insectorum (Amstelodami, 1671). Redi's conclusions? That when the container remained uncovered, flies deposited their eggs abundantly and hatched myriads of maggots and flies. However, when hermetically sealed, "no living thing was ever produced" in his test tubes. Ergo, "all those Kinds of Putrefaction, did only afford a Nest and Food, for the Eggs and Young, of these Insects, that hee [Redi] admitted thereunto; but produced no Animal of themselves, by a Spontaneous Formation; when hee suffered those things to putrefy, in Hermetically Sealed Glasses, and Vessels close covered with Paper" (BA 2, 2:248). Empirical observation, not ancient tradition, is victorious in this battle of the books.

But how did worms breed "in the Intestines, and other Internal Parts of living Creatures" like plants? Another illustrious Italian physician and biologist, Marcello Malpighi (1628–1694), founder of microscopic anatomy, demonstrated beyond doubt that insects inject a sticky substance into leaves and stems of plants and cause tumor-like growths to appear upon which the insect pupae feed once they hatch from their eggs (Anatomus Plantarum pars altera, in Opera Omnia [1686–87], tom. 2, pp. 17–42). Application? Malpighi's microscopic observation helped biblical interpreters to demystify the well-known story about King Herod Agrippa (10 BCE–44 CE), who was punished for his pride with "Phthiriasis" or "Herods Disease," when pubic lice infected his putrefying ulcers, and his majesty was famously "Eaten by Maggots" (Acts 12:23). Likewise, the renowned Dutch physician Antonie van Leeuwenhoek (1632–1723) reported in his "Epistola de 17 Octobris 1686," published in Continuatio Epistolarum (Lugduni Batavorum, 1696), pp. 91–112, that "Lice and Flies, which have a most wonderful Acuteness of Sense, to find out convenient Places for the nourishment of their Young[,] do mightily endeavour to lay their Eggs upon Sores; and that one laies above an Hundred, which may naturally increase to some Hundreds of Thousands, in a quarter of a Year." No wonder, then, that when some hungry doubters in the wilderness of their own mind saved up their manna for a rainy day – against Moses' explicit direction – "it bred Worms & stank; it is to bee understood no otherwise, than it was Fly-blown" (BA 2:249–50). Yet another mystery demystified. Yet in demystifying the purported miracle, was the story deprived of its typological and Christological implications? True, the Hebrew lawgiver did not write a book of science, of course, but when his sacred history is subjected to scientific tests, Mather more than hints, his narrative does hold up to scrutiny.

One more illustration of how Mather's natural philosophy and Christological typology walk hand-in-hand in Biblia Americana (BA 22:922–37). After all, science, travel literature, and pagan antiquity must fortify the historical evidence behind the biblical account and thus furnish exegetes with the necessary “Sitz im Leben” as a foundation for their typological readings. Serpents, large and small, are particularly telling symbols among the ancients and moderns. So in Mather’s glosses on the book of Numbers: “What were the Fiery Serpents, which the Lord sent upon murmuring Israel?”⁵⁵ Given his wide reading in the medical lore of his day, Mather turns to De Morbis Biblicis Miscellanea Medica (1680), by Thomas Bartholinus (1616–1680), a distinguished Danish physician of the body and soul, to validate the biblical pericope with scientific evidence. Here, Mather comes across the “very singular Opinion” of the Genoese natural philosopher Fortunius Licetus (1577–1657), whose medical handbook De Spontaneo Viventium Ortu (1618) explains that these fiery serpents “were a Venemous and Malignant Sort of, Dracunculi, generated in the Bodies of the forward Israelites.” The sting of this “Dracunculi”; i. e., Guinea worms [Filaria medinensis] “cruelly eroded, and so inflamed, & so tormented, the Bodies, wherein they had their Generation” that those thus punished quickly succumbed.

Even the Greco-Roman biographer Plutarch (45–127 CE) knowingly tells of infected inhabitants near the Red Sea who felt “little serpents in their legs and arms, which did eat their way out, but when touched shrunk in again, and raised intolerable inflammations in the muscles” (Symposiacs 8.9). Likewise, the Dutch traveler Jan Huyghen van Linshoten (1563–1611), an eyewitness to such vermicular infections in Arabia and India, further confirms Mather’s story. In his Itinerario, Voyage ofte Schipvaert near Oost ofte Portugals Indien (1596), Linshoten relates that the natives of Hormus in the Persian Gulf were frequently struck by this strange plague of worms growing in their legs. The shape of these parasites are “like unto Lute strings” and they can grow in length up to “two or three fadomes longe.”⁵⁶ The only way to get rid of these pests is to “winde them aboute a Straw or a Pin” when they poke through the skin and “binde it fast and annoynt the hole” with fresh butter. The whole procedure can take “ten or twelve days” during which time the diseased must sit perfectly still and study patience. If at any time the worms thus extracted break off, “they should not without great paine get it out of their legge, as I have seen some men doe” (John Huighen van Linschoten, his Discourse [1598], bk. 1, p. 16). With tangible proof from physicians and travelers in place, Mather continues to tease his readers with name-dropping and brief citations from ancient and modern luminaries of body and of soul: Æsculapius, Galen, Josephus, Ibn Ezra, Abarbanel, and Nachmanides among the ancient Greeks and medieval rabbis, to Bartholinus, Linshoten, Sir Thomas Brown, Samuel Bochart, and Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Tenison among the moderns – all contribute their expertise on this intriguing matter. However, Mather was not convinced by mere medical explanations: The fiery flying serpents stinging the wayward Israelites in the Mosaic story – nothing more than a parasitic Guinea-worm infestation? What about the brazen serpent that healed those who looked at it in faith?⁵⁷

⁵⁵ “And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died. . . . And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived” (KJV, Exod. 21:6, 9)

Viewed from the vantage point of pagan superstition, Mather well knew that the ancients carried on their bodies effigies of talismanic serpents which they believed received their power from the stars and served as charms against snakebites. So, too, the ancient Babylonians, Egyptians, and Phoenician sacrificed to “a Great Dragon,” which they called Αγαθοδαίμονας, Agathodaimon, or good demon, that is, the hawk-headed serpentine Kneph of the Egyptians as described in Eusebius Pamphilus’s Praeparatio Evangelica (1.10.41c). Moreover, “Æsculapius, the God of the Physicians,” much like Hermes in Greek mythology, is represented by his winged caduceus twined by two writhing serpents. No surprise then that Egypt’s “Isis, or Osiris, or Bacchus” were never depicted “without a Serpent”; Alexander the Great was “begotten by a Serpent,” and the Indians of America, according to Jose Acosta, worshipped serpents. “The Reasons, why Serpents were thus Honoured might bee,” Mather leans on Mensa Isiaca, qua Sacrorum apud Ægyptios ratio & simulacra (Amstelodami, 1669), by Italian philologist of Padua Laurentius Pignorius (1571–1631), “partly because they could twine themselves into all figures; partly because of the mighty Energy of their Venom; & because of their mighty Bulk; & because they live to a great Age; are of a quick Sight, & Renew their Youth, by putting off their Skin.” We can then well imagine how “a Saraph, a flaming Angel in the form of a Fiery Flying Serpent whose Body vibrated in the Air, with Lustre,” deceived Eve who fell prey to the arch marplot of Eden who usurped the divine image and appeared to her as if “Part of the Shecinah of the Logos.” No surprise then that the ancient heathens “were overpowred by the Craft, Malice, & Pride of the Divel, who deluded Man in that Shape, & would as it were redeem the Loss, hee sustained, in the Curse of that Creature, by turning it into a venerable Idol” (BA 2:930): The serpent in Eden precipitates the Fall of mankind even as the archetype of evil is turned upside down and metamorphoses, oh felix culpa, into the brazen serpent of Moses, a symbol of healing and salvation. In its turn, as a type, this effigy prefigures the NT Christ, the savior of mankind.

O goodness infinite, Goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce,
And evil turn to good; more wonderful
Than that which creation first brought forth
Light out of darkness! (10.1360–64)⁵⁸

57 Mather published a lengthy sermon on this topic: Zalmonah. The Gospel of the Brasen Serpent, In the Mosaic History (1725). See also his glosses on Gen. 3:1, in BA 1:477–80.

But wait! “Whence could Moses bee supply’d, to make the Brazen-Serpent?” Mather’s reality check is intriguing, for it had become unfashionable by the late seventeenth century to resort to miracles when natural causation is called for. It must have been “a Coper-Serpent,” Mather responded, not one made of brass, because “Brass is an Artificial thing, of a later Invention, made with the Calamy-Stone [iron pyrite],” which the Israelites gathered in their waystation of “Dizahab” (Numb. 21:9) or at “Punon” (Numb. 33:43), famous for its copper mines but infamous as the site where the Romans in later ages worked their slaves to death in extracting the “Phennesia Metalla.”⁵⁹ Anachronisms, though not uncommon in the Bible, had to be ruled out as much as possible. Mather’s attention to such historical detail demonstrates that he is just as fully attuned to the history behind the biblical events as he is to their typological signification.

Typologically considered, the sting of the serpent in Eden was the OT type adumbrating the sting of the fiery flying serpents in the wilderness, its smaller historical antitype; likewise, the brazen serpent set on a pole in the camp of the murmuring Israelites prefigured Christ on the cross, the NT antitype, who cured the sting of original sin by becoming the propitiatory sacrifice.⁶⁰ But “the Sight of a Serpent, should cure the Sting of a Serpent?” Mather queries the old concept of sympathetic healing.⁶¹ It seems to be a “miracle within a miracle” that God “heals illness by means of the cause of sickness,” venomous inflammations healed by an antidote of venom, the sting of a deadly saraph, by the brazen effigy of a fiery nachash (Ramban, Commentary 4:235–36). And just as much as the brazen effigy saved the anguished Israelites who looked at this symbol of their affliction with faith, so “the Sight of Christ crucified, naturally filled His Crucifiers only with Anguish, when they look’d on Him whom they had pierced, & knew Him to be the Messiah.” And “by the Grace of God, it became their only Salvation, thro’ Faith in Him.” Thus Mather’s “Gospel of the Brasen Serpent” – like its metal – sounds across the chronological divide between Old and New Testaments, between Judaism and Christianity.⁶² Cacophony or no, biblical commentaries that synthesized the best knowledge available in books ceased

⁵⁹ See also Mather’s Zalmonah (1725), p. 5.

⁶⁰ “Verily, The Pole set up in the Wilderness, with a Brasen Serpent upon it, was a Pulpit, from whence a most Powerful Sermon on the Third of Genesis and the Fifteenth was preached unto us.” According to Mather, this pole was on a “Perch Six or Seven Foot high.” This Pole was really a “Standard,” which in ancient times “had a cross on the Top, and a Robe Extended and Expanded on the Cross” (Zalmonah, pp. 8, 28, 99).

to be mere pious glosses assuming abiding faith in the reader. They became seismic registers of religion encountering natural science in the Age of Enlightenment (BA 2:925-37).

We have come full circle once again. Typology as a heuristic device to discover the nexus between OT foreshadowing and NT fulfillment enabled the apostles to graft the Good News upon the Hebrew Scriptures in one seamless whole; it empowered ministers like Cotton Mather to assuage doubters of the Bible's authenticity and of typological proof with experiments in natural philosophy that the harmony between the macrocosm of biblical history and the microcosm of experimentation is complete – the same thing told in both. However, maintaining this concord of correspondences through typological parallels and analogies across the sands of time came at a high price; and Mather's annotations easily bear this out collectively. His exegesis of types becomes more open to free-wheeling allegoresis akin to the Midrashic commentaries on the Hebrew Scriptures. And like them, Mather's interpretive methods evolved as he responded to the hermeneutic crises of his own time. By the beginning of the eighteenth century, textual, philological, and canonical criticism had become a free-for-all source of skepticism; the bane of Arianism had become acceptable if not fashionable in certain intellectual circles which rejected the Trinity; OT prophecy and NT fulfillment – hitherto the most reliable proof of Jesus of Nazareth as the true messiah – lost their luster when the divine inspiration of the Bible and revelation itself came under attack by the disciples of Hobbes and Spinoza, let alone such Deists as Chubb, Toland, Anthony Collins, and Tindal; waterproof evidence from miracles lost its authority when Cartesian mechanism and philosophical materialism almost became the norm in the Republic of Letters; and if saving faith was no longer the sole province of supernatural grace but now stipulated the ascent of reason to a proffered good, Arminianism and historical faith in Jesus Christ made short shrift with arbitrary election and limited atonement. It is fair to say that Mather, in this whirlpool of hermeneutic challenges, gave full force to his pursuit of Christ in the Old Testament. Yet by permitting allegory to take over where the literal sense tried to reign in an interpreter's run-away imagination, Mather opened the backdoor to the medieval Quadriga that the Protestant Reformers had tried to shut for good.

Documenting his commentary with such massive detail spread across numerous disciplines, secular and sacred, is characteristic of Mather's omnivorous reading habits. Yet it also demonstrates that over time typology as an exegetical tool required much more than mere prophetic foreshadowing and fulfillment, historical parallels, and analogical similarities. More than ever before, typology in Mather's age demanded foregrounding and backgrounding, evidence from history, empirical science, philology, textual and linguistic acumen, to move his Lockean contemporaries to prop up their faith with rational evidence. Belief is seemingly warranted when evidence is commensurate to its epistemological purpose – else all is but the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.⁶³ No surprise then that collected in Biblia Americana, Mather's glosses frequently turned into full-sized essays across disciplines, essays into tracts, and tracts into a comprehensive database accessible at any time. He could repurpose these glosses for any impromptu delivery from his Boston pulpit or repackage them for any of his publishing ventures. Biblia Americana, then, is one of the great resources in the Republic of American Letters that registers the challenges of his age even as it bridges the intellectual gap between colony and imperial center.

Moses or the Egyptians?¹

Amongst all the Divine Philosophers, there was none that opened a more effectual door, for the propagating of philosophic principles and light, than Moses, who by his writings contained in his five Books ... laid the main foundations of al that Philosophie, which first the Phenicians and Egyptians, and from them the Grecians were masters of.²

To deny a people the man whom it praises as the greatest of its sons is not a deed to be undertaken lightheartedly – especially by one belonging to that people. ... It might have been expected that one of the many authors who recognized Moses to be an Egyptian name would have drawn the conclusion, or at least considered the possibility, that the bearer of an Egyptian name was himself an Egyptian. ... What hindered them from doing so can only be guessed at. Perhaps the awe of Biblical tradition was insuperable. Perhaps it seemed monstrous to imagine that the man Moses could have been anything other than a Hebrew.³

We do not know if the father of psychoanalysis and formulator of the proverbial Oedipus complex appreciated the implicit irony of symbolically “killing” the father of monotheism – in denying Moses his Hebrew parentage. There is no doubt, however, that for Sigmund Freud and his contemporaries more than mere curiosity in the mythic founder of Judaism or fascination with a remote age were involved. For if Freud was afraid that publishing his “Moses ein Ägypter” (1937) might “cause psychoanalysis to be forbidden in a country [Austria] where its practice was still allowed” (132), then his anxiety reveals the subversive potential the argument about the Egyptian origins of Moses and his religion still held at the time.⁴ Of course, developments in the field of biblical criticism and the wider acceptance of a historicist-comparative approach to the scriptures

1 This section – here slightly revised – first appeared as “Eager Imitators of the Egyptian Inventions,” in Cotton Mather and Biblia Americana, edited by R. Smolinski and J. Stievermann (2010), pp. 295–335.

3 Sigmund Freud, “Moses ein Ägypter” (1937), in Moses and Monotheism (1967), pp. 3–15.

4 This subversive potential is illustrated by the controversy started by the German Assyriologist Friedrich Delitzsch (1850–1922), three decades before Freud published his “Moses ein Ägypter” (1937). In his famous lecture Babel und Bible (1902), Delitzsch posited that most of the cultic rites and creedal points of the Israelites must have been adopted from their Babylonian-Assyrian (and Egyptian) neighbors, whose civilization was significantly older and much have since done much to defuse the explosiveness of the subject. But even today Jews and Christians who are invested in the literal truth of their sacred texts are bound to struggle with the claim about the pagan origin of the Mosaic religion.⁵ Indeed, in the words of Freud, it seems monstrous for some believers to imagine that the divine lawgiver could have been born and bred an Egyptian. For literalists, it appears blasphemous to allege that many of the Mosaic laws, rites, and customs did not originate in God's divine revelation on Mt. Horeb but were borrowed from their Israelites' Egyptian neighbors. Equally hard to accept is that the God of Israel would have Moses make use of idolatrous rites, turn them upside down, and adapt them to new uses in the service of the one true God. After all, from this perspective the truth claims of the Judeo-Christian religions – founded on supernatural revelation – would be critically undermined if they turned out to be mere borrowings of pagan sacraments.

If the modern disciples of Johann Salomo Semler (1725–91), Johann Gottfried Eichhorn (1752–1827), Ferdinand Baur (1792–1860), or of Julius Wellhausen (1844–1918), the formulators of Higher Criticism, no longer wince at such rationalist studies of God's law, we can well imagine how Cotton Mather and his peers must have responded when they encountered such iconoclastic assertions in works by serious and well-respected contemporaries. Perhaps the most notorious example in Mather's time was De Legibus Hebræorum Ritualibus et Earum Rationibus Libri Tres (1685), a thousand-page analysis of the grounds and reasons of Hebrew ritual laws, by John Spencer (1630–93), Christian Hebraist extraordinaire and master of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Reprinted in The Hague (1686), in Leipzig (1705), and in a considerably expanded and revised version in Cambridge (1727), De Legibus Hebræorum appeared in its final imprint in Tübingen (1732), from the press of the renowned publisher Johann Georg Cotta.⁶

Spencer's De Legibus is a massive work of late Renaissance erudition as only scholars of immense learning and leisure could compose. In its revised and expanded edition, it consists of four books (or parts) in polished Latin, complete more advanced than that of ancient Israel. The argument caused considerable uproar in its wake (see Lehmann).

5 More recently, the debate about an Egyptian origin of Moses and of the cultic rites of the Israelites has been rekindled by the German Egyptologist Jan Assmann, whose Moses the Egyptian (1998) sparked a controversy which Assmann addresses in his Die Mosaische Unterscheidung oder der Preis des Monotheismus (2003), the English translation subsequently appeared as The Price of Monotheism (2010).

6 The Tübingen edition (which constitutes the fifth edition of Spencer's work) is particularly noteworthy for its valuable "Dissertatio Preliminaris," a review of Spencer's critical reception among English and Continental theologians. The preface was composed by Christoph Matthäus Pfaff (1686–1760), a moderate Lutheran theologian and chancellor of the University of Tübingen, and bound with the 1732 edition. All citation references are to this Tübingen edition which, incidentally, uses identical pagination for the main text as the Cambridge edition of 1727 does.

with full-scale citations from Greek and Roman antiquity, the Church Fathers, and rabbinic literature. Here, Spencer sets forth what was then a heterodox thesis: that most of the ceremonial and cultic laws of the Levites were not given to Moses by Yahweh, the God of the Israelites, but were indeed translated (in the tradition of translatio studii) and adapted from their Egyptian, Chaldean, and Canaanite neighbors. Moses “was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and deeds,” as we learn from Acts 7:22.⁷ But according to Spencer, Moses was also a visionary statesman who fully understood that a new nation was not born in a day, that a nation of slaves and a mixed multitude of gentiles could not easily form a new identity as a separate people, let alone adopt a new system of beliefs and laws contrary to what they had imbibed for centuries. After more than four-hundred years in Egypt, they were fully assimilated; they were slaves not only in the sense of making bricks for their Egyptian overlord but also in worshipping their idols, whose adoration and customs they had completely internalized. To accommodate the habits of a fractious people and to indulge their penchant for pagan rituals and tangible idols, but redirect their devotions and instead offer them in the service of Yahweh, the invisible desert God of their ancestors, was therefore perfectly logical. Through this divine ruse Moses could make them embrace their unique identity as God’s peculiar possession and have them believe in a self-sufficient cult shaped in contradistinction to the idolatry of their pagan neighbors.⁸

If this evolutionary process of cultural assimilation and identity formation makes good sense to modern historians, then John Spencer’s De Legibus is all the more noteworthy as an early example of what in the late nineteenth century

7 All biblical quotations are from the King James Version. The Jewish philosopher Philo Judaeus (c. 20 BCE–c. CE 50) of Alexandria seems to be the first to argue that Moses was brought up in the wisdom of the Egyptians. Moses was an eager scholar, who had “all kinds of masters, one after another, some coming of their own accord from the neighbouring countries and the different districts of Egypt, and some being even procured from Greece by the temptation of large presents. But in a short time he surpassed all their lessons by the excellent natural endowments of his own genius; so that everything in his case appeared to be recollecting rather than a learning, while he himself also, without any teacher, comprehended by his instinctive genius many difficult subjects; for great abilities cut out for themselves many new roads to knowledge.” Moses received lessons “by Egyptian philosophers, who also taught him the philosophy which is contained in symbols, which they exhibit in those sacred characters of hieroglyphics, as they are called, and also that philosophy which is conversant about that respect which they pay to animals which they invest with honours due to God” (De Vita Mosi 1.20–22, 23; Works 461). Mather, too, spoke of Moses’ “Education in the Court of Egypt; His Fellowship in the Collodge of Diospolis [Thebes] ... His Conversation with the wisest Men of Arabia, and Idu-amaea, and, perhaps Phaenicia, during his long Exile” (BA 1:380). See also Edward Stillingfleet’s Origines Sacrae (1666), bk. 2, ch. 2, pp. 119–34.

would be called comparative religion.⁹ He examined the Mosaic ritual laws from the point of religious history, the history behind these laws, to reconstruct the historical zeitgeist and conditions that brought them forth. Instead of reading the ceremonial laws – as most Christian exegetes at the time were doing – as prophetic or typological foreshadowing of Christ in whom they were abrogated in the New Testament, Spencer insisted on historical literalism. He examined the origin of these laws in the context of the cultural and religious norms of the Egyptian and Phoenician neighbors, pagan rules which he deemed to be the true origin of the Mosaic laws. Spencer relegated the allegorical and typological applications of the ceremonial laws to a subordinate or secondary purpose, which he covers in less than sixteen folios out of more than 1,200, in a chapter entitled, “The Ritual Laws of Moses restricted to a secondary [minor] purpose” (De Legibus, lib. 1, cap. 15, fols. 208–23).¹⁰ Zealous interpreters are so eager to discover hidden meanings, Spencer complained, that in their hands the law becomes as malleable as a wax nose (“naseum cereum”), running this way or that just as it pleases them (208).

Although De Legibus was unrivalled in its academic profundity, Spencer was neither the first nor only scholar in his own day to notice the close correspondences between the cultic rituals of Israel and those of their neighbors.¹¹ Nor was he the first to argue that Moses translated the mysteries of the Egyptian religion into his own laws. What rendered Spencer’s thesis so subversive, however, is that he appeared to relinquish divine revelation as the sole basis of the Judeo-Christian religion, implicitly arguing for a gradual historical evolution from pagan polytheism – as David Hume (1711–76) would famously do in his “Natural History of Religion,” the first essay in his Four Dissertations (London, 1757).¹² The often vehement reactions to Spencer’s thesis are also partly explained by the charged atmosphere in which De Legibus was published. Cartesian, Hobbist, and Spinozist were shaking the foundation and authority of civil and ecclesiastical governments, even as such highly respected (albeit controversial) theologians as Richard Simon (1632–1712) and Jean LeClerc

9 This claim to fame is bestowed upon Bernard Picart’s Cérémonies et coutumes religieuses des tous les peuples du monde (1723–43), in nine volumes, by the Frenchmen Jean-Frédéric Bernard (1680–1744) and the engraver Bernard Picart (1673–1733), but they had many predecessors. (1657–1736) were challenging the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch and the dogma of the Bible's verbal inspiration.¹³

In Mather's period, Spencer's supporters and detractors approached the controversy from essentially three different positions: (1) Those who agreed with Spencer argued that the Israelites, an obscure and primitive people, borrowed their ceremonial rites and sacrifices from their more powerful neighbors, especially from the Egyptians, the most advanced civilization of the time. The list of proponents is relatively small and in the early modern era includes such noteworthies as Franciscus Moncaeus, Jacques Gaffarel, Athanasius Kircher, John Marsham, Samuel Parker, Charles Blount, John Toland, Augustin Calmet, and William Warburton. (2) Others who clearly recognized the value of Spencer's research but were opposed to his conclusion argued that neither the Israelites nor gentiles borrowed their religion from one another, because the cultic similarities were either accidental and natural (given the similarity of human nature) or, more likely, sprang from the fountainhead of their common ancestor: the patriarch Noah. Noah's sons – Shem, Ham, and Japheth – they argued, had carried the religion of their patriarch, the Prisca theologia, into all the corners of the world, before the true religion that God had taught Adam and passed down to Noah became corrupted by the passage of time, the dispersal of the people after Babel, and the admixture of human inventions and errors. It was for these reasons that many similarities can be found between the ancient myths the world over and the stories and heroes in the Hebrew Scriptures.¹⁴ (3) Predictably, the most vociferous and numerous group of theologians to oppose Spencer's thesis charged him with heterodoxy and flatly denied the validity of his argument. They employed Spencer's own evidence but reversed its thrust: The Egyptians, Chaldeans, Greeks, and Romans stole their rituals and ceremonies from Moses and God's chosen people whose sacred religion, magnificent Temple, propitious sacrifices, and elaborate ceremonies were the envy of their polytheistic

¹⁴ Rudiments of this position can be found in Lord Herbert of Cherbury's De Veritate, prout distinguitur à revelatione, à verisimili, à possibili, et à falso (Paris, 1624) and his De Religione gentilium (Amsterdam, 1663); Thomas Burnet's Archæologiæ Philosophicæ (London, 1692) and Doctrina Antiqua de Rerum Originibus (London, 1736); John Toland's Letters to Serena (London, 1704); Isaac Newton's "Theologiæ Gentilis Origines Philosophicæ" (c. 1680s, Newton Project); Jacques Basnage's History of the Jews (1708); and William Warburton's Divine Legation of Moses Demonstrated (1738–41). David Hume, in his Natural History of Religion (1757), turned this argument against its original intentions and insisted that superstition and polytheism – not primitive monotheism – were the sources of mankind's religion. Pierre Jurieu, like many others, frequently occupies a middle position and accepts certain aspects of Spencer's thesis while rejecting others. On this topic, see also F. E. Manuel's The Eighteenth Century Confronts the Gods (1959); D. P. Walker's The Ancient Theology (1972); P. Rossi's The Dark Abyss of Time (1984), esp. 123–32; F. Schmidt, "Polytheism: Degeneration or Progress?" (1987), pp. 9–60; J. A. I. Champion's Pillars of Priestcraft Shaken (1992), esp. ch. 5; and J. Assmann's Moses the Egyptian (1998).

neighbors; the chronology of the Pentateuch and the genealogy of the patriarchs down to Moses clearly demonstrates, so they argued, that the Hebrew God was the source of all wisdom and the Bible his revealed Word from which the pagan nations derived their philosophy.¹⁵

The French Huguenot divine Jacques Basnage de Beauval (1653–1723) at The Hague, whose History of the Jews (1708) Mather abstracts in his “Biblia Americana,” succinctly sums up the variety of positions more than twenty years after Spencer published his De Legibus (1685). Although partially agreeing with Spencer’s position on the origin of the Mosaic laws, Basnage knew only too well that many learned men maintained the Heathens took their Religion and Mysteries from the Jews. Some think the Patriarchs Abraham and Joseph instructed the Ægyptians: Others say, the Phenicians were the Channel that convey’d this Knowledge into the Isles of the Ægean Sea, Greece and Sicily, even to Spain and England, wither this nation had sent Colonies, who brought with them the Religion which their Ancestors had receiv’d from the Patriarchs. This Religion appears somewhat disguis’d, because it was receiv’d but at the secondhand, and these People being remote from the Source, understood not Hebrew, and could not infallibly reach the true purport of the Types of the Law; but yet there is sufficient Vindication, that these are Streams that flow’d from the Jewish Religion. Lastly, They fancy, that when the Books of Moses were publish’d, the Heathens seiz’d on them, and attempted to form a Religion like the Jewish, by copying the Writings of that Lawgiver. We take the quite opposite Opinion, as believing 1. That the Religion of the Ægyptians was much ancierter than that of the Jews. 2. That each Nation deified its Heroes, or made its Gods, without begging them from others. 3. That if there be any conformity betwixt the Heathen Religion and the Jewish, ’tis only in some faint Strokes that are artfully heightened. 4. But especially we are certain that the Jews deriv’d their Cabbala, and the method of teaching we are in quest of from the Ægyptians. (History, bk. 3, ch. 17, p. 207; see also chs. 18–19)

Basnage’s huge History is perhaps the most evenhanded discussion of the topic. It identifies the principal advocates of each standpoint, states their main arguments, and then allows ample space for their opponents to take their stand. Where more passionate minds might engage in polemics to denounce their opponents, Basnage allows reason and evidence to settle the points

15 In his “Dissertatio Preliminaris,” Christopher Matthäus Pfaff catalogues most of the well-known and lesser-known respondents of the day who rose up against Spencer’s thesis. Pfaff’s introductory essay is particularly useful, because he arranges the list of critics according to the particular subject and issue they target in Spencer’s De Legibus. Pfaff’s inventory includes detailed bibliographical information to locate each critic’s counterargument. See also A.J. Droge’s Homer or Moses? (1989), who demonstrates that such Jewish-Hellenist historians as Eupolemus, Artapanus, Josephus, and Philo, asserted the primacy of Moses from whom Israel’s pagan neighbors “stole” their religion and wisdom. In their steps followed the early Christian fathers Theophilus, Clement of Alexandria, and Origen. This argument was widely accepted in the seventeenth century, especially by Gerhard Vossius, Pierre-Daniel Huet, Theophilus Gale, Herman Witsius, and John Edwards.

dispassionately.¹⁶ So Mather. Responding to, and frequently moving between, all of the three major positions, Cotton Mather in his “Biblia Americana” rehearses, as it were in nuce, the controversial debate about the Egyptian origins of the Mosaic laws, rites, and customs.¹⁷

My examination will be largely restricted to Mather’s critical engagement with the first and most controversial of the three positions and its rationale. By focusing on his interpretation of several cultic instruments (Aaron’s golden calf, the polymorphous cherubim, and the ark of the covenant), we can gauge just how far Mather was prepared to go along with Spencer’s argument and where he drew the line in the sand. As I will demonstrate, Mather generally welcomed the historical contextualization of the Mosaic ceremonies, which Spencer compared to those in ancient Egyptian culture. He incorporated Spencer’s learned exegesis wherever it appeared relevant and acceptable to his own purposes and praises Spencer for his vast reading and erudition. However, Mather was hardly prepared to go along with Spencer’s radical conclusions when they appeared to threaten the divine authority of the scriptures. In order to understand Mather’s sometimes ambivalent response, we must examine Spencer’s argument in light of the contemporary intellectual debate.

John Spencer and Maimonides: Adaptation and Accommodation

“Indeed, all the Mosaic Rites, did in some remarkable Circumstances, vary from the Egyptian,” Cotton Mather confessed with amazement as he studied the piacular laws governing the sacrifice of the red heifer [BA 2, 2:903].¹⁸ He was even more surprised that God’s incommunicable name I AM THAT I AM seemed to correspond to the mysterious inscription on the statue of Isis at Saïs (Nile Delta). As Plutarch rendered the sacred name, “Ἐγώ εἰμι παν το γεγονος, και ην, και εσομενον, I am all that is, and was, and shall be.” This “is a plain reference to this Name of God in Exodus” Mather was surprised to discover. And if “the Inscription of EI, in the Temple of Delphos” can be trusted, then “EI, is the compleat Appellation of God.” For when we speak to God, “wee say, Thou art; attributing to Him, this True, Certain, & only Appellation, which agrees to Him alone, who is called, Being, or, Existing" [BA 2:137].¹⁹ Mather's shock of recognition upon perusing Spencer's De Legibus is, perhaps, not all that surprising. After all, Spencer's contextual analysis explores the historical grounds and reasons for the Mosaic rites through the whole corpus of ancient, medieval, and Renaissance literature that few if any of his peers had mastered to the same degree.²⁰ To be sure, Spencer was not the first to assert that God had Moses groomed in the Pharaonic court at Heliopolis, the Egyptian city On in lower Egypt, initiated into the priesthood of the inner adytum of the temple, and trained in the esoteric and exoteric mysteries of Egyptian hieroglyphics.²¹ No wonder, then, that Moses was able to translate the rites of Egypt into his Levitical laws, and the mysteries reserved for Egypt's priests and pharaohs into the ceremonies of the Mosaic religion. As Spencer had put it in De Legibus, "Some ceremonies long practiced [among Idolaters were] reshaped and transferred into God's own worship. [That] ... when the Law was given, God suffered not a few ancient ceremonies and rites to be transferred into his worship so as to accommodate unto himself the mores and devotions of the people."²²

20 Spencer was not interested in the Egyptian religion per se; he was not a nascent Egyptologist like the German Jesuit Athanasius Kircher (1601–80), whose huge Oedipus Ægyptiacus (1652–54) testifies to his heroic, but ultimately unsuccessful endeavor to crack the hieroglyphic code. That honor, of course, belongs to Jean-François Champollion (1790–1832) and his peers who, upon the discovery in 1802 of the Rosetta Stone, laid the foundation for modern Egyptology. Spencer did not have access to the scientific record of modern archeology; the only excavations he could undertake were to dig through tomes of Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Arabic manuscripts in Cambridge, Oxford, and London. Dannenfeldt (1959) illustrates the problems scholars faced during the Renaissance to access information on Egypt given the limited availability of original or translated sources in print. For those faced in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, see Iversen (88–145).

21 See Philo Judæus (De Vita Mosis 1.20–22, 23; Works 461). As Mather put it in his gloss on Lev. 27:34, "Moses was adopted by a Princess of Egypt, & educated in the Court of Egypt, and all agree, that he was a Man of mighty Interest among the Egyptians. They counted him so admirable a Person, that they challenged him for their own; they would needs have him to be an Heliopolitan. Doubtless they received many Instructions from him. And when he opposed their Tyranny with such amazing Plagues from Heaven upon them, they could not but conceive a mighty Fear of him, Fear, which is no small Instrument and Incentive of Religion in the World. Suidas tells us, That there had been Prophecies among the Egyptians, concerning the Exploits, which this great Person was to do upon them. And they were as ready to worship what Harmed them, as what Served them" (BA 2:789).

22 The Latin original reads, "Ritus aliquos longo usu receptos reformando, eosque ad Dei ipsius cultum transferendo. [Ut] ... Deum, cum legem daret, cultus antiquitus usitati ritus & instituta non pauca tolerasse, & in cultum suum transtulisse, ut seipsum populi moribus & affectibus accommodaret" (De Legibus, lib. 1, cap. 13, fol. 196). In his "An Account" (xix–xxxi), John Chamberlayne, the translator of James Saurin's Dissertations, Historical, Critical, Theological and Moral (London, 1723), extracts Jean LeClerc's trenchant review of John Spencer's thesis. LeClerc's valuable review first appeared in French, in LeClerc's Bibliothèque Ancienne & Moderne (1719), Tome XII, part II, pp. 237–320 (esp. 290–320).

That God saw the need to accommodate his people's addiction to their idolatrous customs can be inferred from the story of Aaron's molten calf (Exod. 32:4–8), Spencer thought. For while the divine lawgiver received the Decalogue high up on Mt. Horeb, the Israelites down below (fearing that Moses was dead) longed for the fleshpots of Egypt, reverted to the abomination (taboo) of their former masters, and fell to worshipping their golden idol. Quite obviously, their forty-year triage in the Sinai desert, as Moses quickly realized, was insufficient time to break their idolatrous habits. And to transfer their former adoration of the Egyptian god Nemur (the sacred calf Mnevis of On or the Apis bull of Noph) to Yahweh, or Deus absconditus, their ancestral desert God, whose most conspicuous quality was his invisibility, his proscription against carved images, and his injunction against pronouncing his ineffable name – such draconian measures seemed too much for a people raised in slavery. According to Spencer, the sacrifice of the paschal lamb (the Egyptian ram god Khnum, Amun-Ra, aka. Jupiter Hammon) at Passover, the ashes of the red heifer (sacred to the Egyptian Isis and Typhon) for ritual lustration, the scapegoat Azazel (the embodiment of Typhon) on the Day of Atonement, even the Ark of the Covenant, its cherubic statues, let alone the high priest's Ephod and the oracular Urim and Thummim – these and many more seemingly inexplicable institutions of the Mosaic religion had their origin and counterpart in Egypt, Phoenicia, and among the so-called Zabians.²³ Innumerable parallels between the rites and sacred instruments of the Hebrews and those of their heathen neighbors supply Spencer with the means to document his claims (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 1–8).

Spencer's main thesis was partly adumbrated in Maimonides's More Nebuchim (c. 1190; 1551; 1629), in Aquinas's Summa Theologica (c. 1265–74), in Franciscus Moncaeus's Aaron purgatus sive De vitulo aureo (1606), in John Selden's De Diis Syris Syntagmata II (1617), in Jacques Gaffarel's Curiositez inouyes sur la sculpture talismanique des Persans (1629), in Gerard Vossius's De Theologia Gentili, et Physiologia Christina, sive De Origine ac Progressu Idololatriæ (1641), in Lord Herbert of Cherbury's De Religione Gentilium (1663), and in John 23 See esp. Spencer's De Legibus (lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 1–2, fols. 639–663) and John Edwards's outrage at Spencer's claims ([ΠΙΟΛΥΠΟΙΚΛΙΟΣ ΣΟΦΛΑ] cap. 8–9, pp. 246–59; 276–84). The designation "Zabians," also spelled "Sabians," is best translated as "pagans." The term is variously claimed to be an "invention" of Maimonides (Guide 3.29–30.514–23), whose study of the Chaldean book The Nabatean Agriculture (allegedly translated by Ibn Wahshiyya in 904) led Maimonides to argue that Moses instituted certain ritual laws to combat pervasive idolatry of the Sabians. Mather refers to the Sabians throughout his commentary on the Pentateuch and distinguishes them from the Magians and Zoroastrians of Persia, in his fifth essay, "V. Antiqua. Or, Our Sacred Scriptures illustrated, with some Accounts of the Sabians and the Magians." See Mather's "An Appendix," which follows his commentary on Revelation (BA, vol. 10). For useful discussions of Maimonides and the Sabians, see esp. Elukin's "Maimonides" and Assmann's Moses the Egyptian (57–68).

Marsham's Chronicus Canon Aegyptiacus Ebraicus Græcus (1672).²⁴ All of these ponderous works are put to good use in Spencer's magnum opus and, ultimately, in Mather's "Biblia Americana." While Spencer's material evidence is laboriously exhumed from all the classical sources at his disposal, he does acknowledge in his "Prolegomena" his special indebtedness to the Sephardic philosopher Maimonides (1135–1204), whose מורה נבוכים More Nebuchim, Doctor Perplexorum (1551) had a lasting impact on many Christian Hebraists.²⁵ He praises Maimonides as his great master and his priceless book as his vademecum, because its rationalist foundation runs counter to the pervasive mystical and allegorical readings of the Bible alike practiced by Jews and Christians (De Legibus, "Prolegomena," caps. 1 and 3, sec. 4, fols. 1, 12–13).

Concerned with the preponderance of Aristotelian philosophy of his day, Maimonides tried to establish a rational foundation for the Mosaic laws, whose dual intent and utility he believed, were to lead his people to the true faith by preventing their regression into paganism.²⁶ Significantly, in More Nebuchim (Guide 3.31–33.523–34), Maimonides focuses on those ceremonial rites that appear to be without rhyme or reason. He objects to zealots and mystics who insisted that man should not enquire into the utility of God's laws because the Almighty is beyond human comprehension; the incomprehensibility of his laws is therefore proof positive of their divine origin. If man could penetrate their mystery, so they argued, God's laws would only lose their divine status and diminish our reverence because they could then have been devised by man. Maimonides's explanation takes the opposite stance: The rational benefit of the laws is the only possible proof that they are of supernatural origin. Why else would believers take pride in their wisdom?²⁷

²⁷ Maimonides argues, "They [zealots] think that if those laws were useful in this existence and have been given to us for this or that reason, it would be as if they derived from the reflection and the understanding of some intelligent [human] being. If, however, there is a thing for which the intellect could not find any meaning at all and that does not lead to something useful, it indubitably derives from God; for the reflection of man would not lead to such a thing." The case is quite different, Maimonides objects, because the divine wisdom of the law is revealed in its usefulness to us (Deut. 6:24; 4:6): "Now if there is a thing for which no reason is known and that does not either procure something useful or ward off something harmful, why should one say of one who believes in it or practices it that he is wise and understanding and of

John Spencer welcomed Maimonides's reasoning in part because Spencer himself attempted to counter what he regarded as "Judaizing tendencies" among radical Calvinists coming out of Cromwell's Interregnum. During the Restoration, these nonconformists tried to reimpose the sabbatical labor laws, which Spencer and the Church of England at large opposed (De Legibus, "Prolegomena," cap. 3, sec. 2, fols. 7–11).²⁸ However, Spencer does not rest there. His larger aims are fundamentally different from those of Maimonides. On the one hand, Maimonides underscores the rational utility of God's laws because he wants to stress their abiding significance. Only in those cases where this explication fails does Maimonides allow that certain ceremonial and cultic laws were borrowed from Israel's pagan neighbors. Spencer on the other hand does his best to demonstrate that all ceremonies and sacrifices were instituted to countermand pagan practices. To him, these Mosaic rites originated in the temporal expediency of combating idolatry; consequently, these rites were now completely abrogated because their purpose had been accomplished. Such ceremonial institutions as the Sabbath, ritual lustrations, observations of the new moon, the ark of the covenant, the use of the Urim and Thummim in divination, and many others, Spencer claimed, derived from Egyptian customs and demonstrate the extent to which the Mosaic laws were clearly indebted to pagan institutions. Spencer's historicism – studying the history behind certain laws – thus pursues a rather negative if not destructive approach; it borders on completely disavowing revelation as the origin of the Old Testament.

Why conservative exegetes would feel threatened by Spencer's heterodox approach is particularly apparent in the first book of De Legibus. As indicated in its subtitle "In quo fuse agitur de generalibus legum & rituum Judaicorum causis" (lib. 1, fol. 19), Spencer is mainly concerned with rationalizing the origin of the Mosaic laws and rites, and how they served as a means of abolishing idolatry and of separating the Israelites from their pagan neighbors. Once that was accomplished, the ceremonies would become obsolete. That is why these laws served a temporal purpose only. Consequently, their abrogation would occur either when idolatry among the Israelites was eradicated through their successful separation from the nations or – as the apostles and the early Church argued – in Christ's sacrifice when all temporal laws become null and void. For these reasons, Spencer argues, the laws governing the Sabbath, circumcision, diet, lustration, neomenia, sacrifice, and blood rituals are now obsolete because great worth? And why should the religious communities think it a wonder? Rather things are indubitably as we have mentioned: every commandment from among these six hundred and thirteen commandments exists either with a view to communicating a correct opinion, or to putting an end to an unhealthy opinion, or to communicating a rule of justice, or to warding off an injustice, or to endowing man with a noble moral quality, or to warning them against an evil moral quality. Thus all [the commandments] are bound up with three things: opinions, moral qualities, and political civic action" (Guide 3.31.524).

they were tied to specific times, persons, or locations, and borne out of a historical necessity no longer existent. In contrast to Spencer, Maimonides insists on the perpetuity of these laws which – though they had their origin in a particular historical necessity – remain relevant because of their intrinsic value. These laws could only be abolished by a new revelation.

Spencer's radicalism is, perhaps, most apparent in book three. In eight dissertations and great historical detail, he establishes why pagan customs were translated into the Mosaic laws: "De Ritibus e Gentium moribus in Legem translatis," "De ratione & origine sacrificiorum," "De lustrationibus & purificationibus Hebræorum," "De Neomeniarum Festis," "De origine Arcæ & Cherubinarum," "De Ratione & Origine Templi," "De Urim & Thummim," and "De Hirco Emissario, & præcipuis Expiationis Judaicæ Ceremoniis." Spencer's greatest contribution to the historical study of religion and religious customs is apparent in these dissertations. As he posited in his chapter on the Mosaic adaptation of pagan customs, it was fitting that God incorporate some observances that had been customary from antiquity into His own rites and that the Mosaic law had some similarities of the worship that had been accepted earlier. ... No doubt, given the Israelites's nature and what they had been subjected to, following their recent exodus, God deemed it necessary ... to allow them the use of some old rites and to reconcile those observances with their character and capacity. For the Israelites had been accustomed to the Egyptian habits, and conditioned by their use for many years. ... The Hebrews were not only habituated to the mores of Egypt, but they were also tenacious. ... The Hebrews were a superstitious people and destitute of nearly all literature. How thoroughly they were immured in the superstitions of nations can be seen in their laws, which were imposed on them as if remedies for their superstition. Superstition is a stubborn beast, particularly when it absorbed ferociousness and obstinacy from dark ignorance. It can easily be believed that the Israelites, who were only recently liberated from the house of slavery, had no knowledge of the more humane arts, and had experienced hardly anything other than the bricks and garlic of Egypt.²⁹

With Spencer's thesis in mind, we can easily see why he shared many points of interest with Maimonides's argument and where they parted company.

29 "[U]t Deus ritus aliquos antiquitus usitatos in sacrorum suorum numerum assumeret, & Lex a Mose data speciem aliquam cultus olim recepti ferret. ... Ita nempe nati factique erant Israelitæ, ex Ægypto recens egressi, quod Deo pene necesse esset ... rituum aliquorum veterum usum iis indulgere, & ipsius instituta ad eorum morem & modulum accommodare. Nam, POPULOS erat a teneris, Ægypti moribus assuetus, & in iis multorum annorum usu confirmatus. ... HEBRÆI, non tantum Ægypti moribus assueti, sed etiam refractarii fuerunt. ... HEBRÆI superstitiosa gens erant, & omni pene literatura destituti. Quam alte gentium superstitionibus immergebantur, e legibus ... intelligere licet, quæ populo, tanquam remedia superstitionis imponebantur. Contumax autem bellua Superstitio, si præsertim ab ignorantia tenebris novam ferociam & contumaciam hauserit. Facile vero credi potest, Israelitas nuper e servorum domo liberos, artium humaniorum rudes fuisse, & vix quicquam supra lateres atque allium Ægypti sapuisse" (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 11, fols. 731, 732).

Why did Moses and Aaron, his high priest, authorize certain arcane and incomprehensible practices? Maimonides contends that fallen man is powerless to cast off practices to which he has been accustomed for centuries; his fallen nature cannot change without constant prodding. For this reason, God wisely accommodated his laws to man's limited capacity. As Maimonides explains, "the universal service upon which we were brought up consisted in offering various species of living beings in the temples in which images were set up, in worshipping the latter, and in burning incense before them." God therefore used a "gracious ruse" which "did not require that He give us a Law prescribing the rejection, abandonment, and abolition of all these kinds of worship." Knowing that sinful man – like a leopard – cannot change his spots, God wisely suffered these forms of worship to continue, "but transferred them from created or imaginary and unreal things to His own name." He therefore "commanded us to build a temple for Him" (Exod. 25:8), just as we had seen the archetype in Egypt; "to have an altar for His name" (Exod. 20:21–24), just as we used to have for the idols of Egypt; "to have the sacrifice offered up to Him" (Lev. 1:2), just as we used to do for our idols in Goshen; "to bow down in worship before Him; and to burn incense before Him," just as we used to do before the gods of our Egyptian masters. But in the Holy Land, God outlawed "the performance of any of these actions" for any other god but Himself (Exod. 22:20; 34:14). "Through this divine ruse," Maimonides reasons, "the memory of idolatry was effaced" and worship of the one true God established, "while at the same time the souls had no feeling of repugnance and were not repelled because of the abolition of modes of worship to which they were accustomed" (Guide 3.32.526, 527). By divine direction, then, many inexplicable and seemingly arbitrary laws of Moses constitute what the Egyptologist Jan Assmann has designated a counter-religion, a "normative inversion," of idolatrous practices turned upside down and re-appropriated in the worship of the true God.³⁰ To be sure, this process of re-educating his people was slow and never-ending. Change, therefore, was not effected instantaneously through a miracle, but gradually, through a long process of training and accommodation. If God had been inclined to change man's habits through a miracle, the whole Mosaic pedagogy, all the prophets, and "all giving of the Law would have been useless" (Guide 3.32.529).

Ironically, Maimonides's explication of the Mosaic ceremonial laws – though grounded in the need to justify their rationality – turned out to be a double-edged sword. For in explaining, for instance, why a kid must not be boiled in its mother's milk (Exod. 23:19; 34:16, Deut. 14:21), or why linens and woolens or the seeds of different plants must not be mixed (Lev. 19:19; Deut. 22:9, 11), why tattoos and cross-dressing are strictly forbidden (Lev. 19:28; Deut. 22:5), why the blood of slaughtered animals must be poured on the ground and covered with soil (Lev. 19:26), or why only predominantly male animals (rams, goats, and bulls) – but no females (except a red heifer) – were acceptable to God (Lev. 1:3, 10; 22:19) or, finally, why God commanded that salt be added to the meat offerings, but no honey (Lev. 2:11, 13), Maimonides claims that these rituals originated among the Egyptians and Zabians (pagans), whose rites were so pervasive that they could only be erased by turning them on their head and by doing the exact opposite.³¹ Since the ancient ram-god Khnum (Amun-Ra) was widely revered in Egypt, the Israelites demonstrated their defiance by slaughtering the sacred ram of the Egyptians. That is why the abomination (taboo) of the Egyptians was sacrificed to the one true God and the blood of the paschal lamb (ram) was smeared on the lintels of the Israelites' door as an act of defiance. "In this way," Maimonides reasons, "an action considered by them [Egyptians] an extreme act of disobedience was the one through which one came near to God and sought forgiveness for one's sins. Thus wrong opinions, which are diseases of the human soul, are cured by their contrary found at the other extreme" (Guide 3.46.581–82).³² Either way, this divine expedient was grounded in the temporal necessity of preventing God's people from backsliding into the abomination of their former overlords.³³

31 For the proscription against seething a kid in its mother's milk, see Maimonides (3.48.599), Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 9, fols. 333–42), Mather (BA 2, Exod. 23:19); against mixing linens and woolens, and seeds, see Maimonides (3.26.507; 3.37.544, 548–49), Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 33, fols. 544–51), Mather (BA 2, Lev. 19:19); against tattoos and cross-dressing, Maimonides (3.37.544–45), Spencer (lib. 2, caps. 19–20, fols. 403–17), Mather (BA 2, Lev. 19:28); against consuming blood, Maimonides (3.46.585–86), Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 15, fols. 376–84), Mather (BA 2, Lev. 17:1, 19:26); sacrificing male animals, Maimonides (3.46.588–90), Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 4, fols. 293–300; lib. 3, diss. 2, cap. 2, fols. 755–57), Mather (BA 2, Exod. 12, insert; Lev. 1:3, 17); against sacrificing honey, Maimonides (3.46.582), Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 11, fols. 345–49), and Mather (BA 2, Lev. 1:17, 2:11). See also Aquinas (Summa Pt. 102, Art. 3; 2:1057–61).

32 Maimonides asserts that the first intention of maintaining sacrificial laws is to keep God's people from "worshipping someone other than Me [God]. . . . It is for the sake of that principle that I transferred these modes of worship to My name, so that the trace of idolatry be effaced and the fundamental principle of My unity be established" (Guide 3.32.530). For a much earlier example of this form of accommodationism, see Soncino Midrash Rabbah (Lev. 22:8). As the parable goes, the king cures his son from eating forbidden things by having him always eat from his table. See Thomas Aquinas – with Maimonides at his side – says as much in Summa Theologica (Pt. 1–2. Q. 102, Art. 3; 2:1057–1061; and Art. 5; 2:1067–1070, esp. Reply Obj. 2).

33 As a resident of Egypt late in his life, Maimonides was probably familiar with the writings of the Egyptian Manetho (fl. 280 BCE), high priest of Heliopolis. Manetho's Aegyptiaca, a history of Egypt from pre-historical times to 342 BCE, relates that in the eighteenth Dynasty (c. 1550–1292 BCE), sometimes during the reign of Amenophis, aka. Amenhotep III (c. 1388–1350 BCE), one of the priests of Heliopolis called Osarsêph, rose in rebellion against the Egyptian king and commanded his fellow rebels "that they should neither worship the gods nor refrain from any of the animals proscribed as especially sacred in Egypt, but should sacrifice

Maimonides's challenge to explain the dual function of the Mosaic ritual laws becomes apparent since neither function is rooted in divine revelation, but in the quite human need to adapt existing pagan rituals to the divine service of God. The bulwark of revelation upon which monotheistic religions built their claims to divine truth is thus seemingly relegated to the status of political expediency to control the common masses. Maimonides tries to solve this conundrum by limiting the inversions of pagan customs to those cases in which they are bound up with the polytheistic cosmology of the Israelites' pagan neighbors. Yet when the purpose of these customs can be separated from their heathen origin, he does not object to their wholesale adaptation and integration into the ceremonial laws.

His vindication of the Mosaic laws satisfied many to whom their divine origin was borne out most of all in their rational utility for man. There were many others, however, who chastised Maimonides for depriving these laws of their supernatural foundation. For instance, Moshe ben Nachman of Gerona, Spain (c. 1290–1375), Bachya ben Asher of Saragossa (c. 1255–1340), Yaakov ben Rabbeinu Asher, aka. Ba'al ha-Turim of Toledo (c. 1269–c. 1340), and many other rabbinic commentators reproached the great rabbi for questioning the mystery of divine revelation, the sole claim to the trustworthiness of revealed religion, and for relegating the ceremonial laws to little more than the farsighted policies of a statesman. According to Maimonides's rationale (so his critics argued), it was not God but man who seemed to have devised the time-honored ceremonies encoded in the Torah! "The disease of idolatry would surely have been far better cured if we were to eat [these animal-deities] to our full, which would be considered by them [Egyptians] forbidden and repugnant, and something they would never do!" Nachmanides fumed. "Far be it that they should have no other purpose and intention except the elimination of idolatrous opinions from the minds of fools" (Commentary 3:20, on Lev. 1:9). So, too, Rabbi Bachya ben Asher warned, "The whole subject of animal sacrifice dating back as it does to and consume all alike, and that they should have intercourse with none save those of their own confederacy." He framed "a great number of laws like these [that were] completely opposed to Egyptian custom. ..." Osarsêph and his Shepherd allies despoiled the sacred temples, defaced the images of the Egyptian gods, and turned their temples into "kitchens to roast the sacred animals which the people worshipped: and they would compel the priests and prophets to sacrifice and butcher the beasts, afterwards casting the men forth naked." When Osarsêph incited his followers to rise up in rebellion, "he changed his name and was called Moses" (Aegyptiaca, fragm. 54, in Manetho 127, 131). Likewise, the Roman historian Tacitus (c. 56–c. 120 CE) comments on the Mosaic inversion of Egyptian rites: "To ensure his future hold over the people," Tacitus reports in his Annals, "Moses introduced a new cult, which was the opposite of all other religions. All that we hold sacred they profane, and they allowed practices which we abominate. They dedicated in the innermost part of the Temple an image of the animal whose guidance had put an end to their wandering and thirst, after first killing a ram, apparently as an insult to Ammon. They also sacrifice bulls because the Egyptians worship the bull Apis" (Histories 5.4.234–35).

the first man is a subject replete with mystical significance. It contains hidden elements of the interrelations between different parts of G'd's creation. ... All those who do understand these matters are dutybound to conceal their knowledge and not publicise it indiscriminately. This knowledge may only be revealed for the sake of the Creator's honour to selected individuals, exceptionally pious persons" (Torah Commentary 5:1486).³⁴

Christian theologians were generally more accepting of Maimonides's rationalism. They welcomed Maimonides because he seemed to confirm their belief that the real purpose of the ceremonial laws of Moses was to serve as prophetic types and figures of Christ in the Old Testament and whose binding force was terminated in his crucifixion in the New. The ceremonies, whose mystical function was to foreshadow the new covenant, had now accomplished their office and were no longer applicable to his Church. Why else did God employ the Romans in 69 CE to raze Jerusalem and its Temple and thus stopped all sacrifices offered on his altar? so they argued. To be sure, Maimonides would not have agreed with his Christian counterparts on any of these issues. The law that God gave to Moses would last forever.³⁵ Neither the moral, ceremonial, or any other part of the Mosaic pedagogy would ever be abrogated. In fact, once the messiah arrived, he would lead his people back to their ancestral heritage, cast out all foreign oppressors, rebuilt Jerusalem and its Temple, and once again resume the ancient sacrifices in the only locale where God allowed them to be offered.³⁶ For the most part, the Christian Church did not expect the resumption of animal sacrifices in Jerusalem even if Christian literalists shared the belief in the return of the Jews to the Holy Land. After all, Jesus Christ's ultimate sacrifice had atoned for the sins of all true believers once and for all.³⁷

³⁴ For much the same argument, see Rabbi Yaakov ben Rabbeinu Asher's Tur on the Torah (3:786–88).

³⁷ Although their exoteric function had been abrogated in the death of Christ, theologians in the medieval church argued that animal sacrifices by themselves might yet be a useful tool in bringing pagans into the Christian fold. The medieval church was particularly prone to accommodate the demonology and rituals of pagan converts as long as they could be redirected and given a Christian signification. Perhaps the most prominent example of this sort of syncretism is preserved in the Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum (731), composed by the Venerable Bede (c. 673–735), the Father of English History. Writing the history of the English Church, Bede incorporates a missive of Pope Gregory the Great (c. 540–604) to Abbot Mellitus, who was about to go on a missionary journey to Britain. The letter is dated 17 June 601 and deserves to be quoted at length; it illustrates just how far the wisdom of Moses' accommodationism was operating even in the medieval church. Pope Gregory I gives the following instructions: "We have been giving careful thought to the affairs of the English, and have come to the conclusion that the temples of the idols among that people should on no account be destroyed. The idols

To be sure, Spencer, by way of contrast, did no more than pay lip-service to typological and Christological interpretations of the Mosaic laws and rites. His interest in Maimonides's rationalizing account of the laws' evolution served as a springboard for much larger claims about the pagan origins of the Jewish religion. Spencer's own position becomes clear in the third book of De Legibus, which consist of eight dissertations that move well beyond Maimonides's concern in More Nebuchim. For instance, Spencer's explication of the festivity of the New Moon and its origin ("De Neomeniarum Festis") is particularly interesting, because it is well known that of all the sin offerings only the sacrifice offered up on Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, is called "the sin offering unto the Lord" (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 4, fols. 804–28; diss. 8, fols. 1039–87). Maimonides explains that "only the he-goat offered on the New-Moon as a sin-offering is called in [Scripture] a sin-offering unto the Lord" (Numb. 28:15). This peculiar designation was devised to ensure that no one would mistake the sacrifice of a he-goat "to be a sacrifice to the moon, such as was offered by the Copts of Egypt at the beginning of the months." The purpose and common origin of this ritual thus becomes apparent. Maimonides, however, tries to rationalize the use and function of the scapegoat, the time, and day of the ceremony (first day of the new moon) by insisting that the goat is the most suitable sin offering and that it is to be distinguished from its pagan cousin by the designation "unto the Lord" (Guide 3.46.590). Spencer agrees but insists that the real reason was that Moses intended to cast aspersions on the goat, whose statue the people revered as a demonic god whom they sought to assuage through a live sacrifice. Nonetheless, the rite of the scapegoat, though originating among the pagans, served with minor variations an almost identical purpose among the Israelites (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 8, cap. 7, fols. 1059–63). Although his conclusions were certainly are to be destroyed, but the temples themselves are to be aspersed with holy water, alters set up in them, and relics deposited there. For if these temples are well-built, they must be purified from the worship of demons and dedicated to the service of the true God. In this way, we hope that the people, seeing that their temples are not destroyed, may abandon their error, and flocking more readily to their accustomed resorts, may come to know and adore the true God. And since they have a custom of sacrificing many oxen to demons, let some other solemnity be substituted there. . . . They are no longer to sacrifice beasts to the Devil, but they may kill them for food to the praise of God, and give thanks to the Giver of all gifts for the plenty they enjoy. If the people are allowed some worldly pleasure in this way, they will more readily come to desire the joys of the spirit. For it is certainly impossible to eradicate all errors from obstinate minds at one stroke, and whoever wishes to climb to a mountain top climbs gradually step by step, and not in one leap. It was in this way that the Lord revealed Himself to the Israelite people in Egypt, permitting the sacrifices formerly offered to the Devil to be offered thenceforward to Himself instead. So He bade them sacrifice beasts to Him, so that, once they became enlightened, they might abandon one element of sacrifice and retain another. For, while they were to offer the same beasts as before, they were to offer them to God instead of to idols, so that they would no longer be offering the same sacrifices . . ." (History 1.30.86–87). Clearly, then, Pope Gregory's directives are of a kind with those that Moses gave Aaron in the wilderness: to allow ritual sacrifice to continue but to consecrate them to the true God.

the most audacious, Spencer was neither the first nor the only Christian theologian in the seventeenth century to argue that the Israelites borrowed their ceremonial rites from their pagan neighbors, especially from the Egyptians, whose civilization was the most advanced and powerful in the hemisphere.³⁸ Thus, before we can appreciate Cotton Mather's position, it seems appropriate to offer a short survey of the early modern debate about the origins of the Mosaic laws.

All the Wisdom of Egypt: Mosaic Ceremonies and Pagan Religion

In the early seventeenth century, the learned French antiquarian Franciscus Moncaeus (François de Monceaux, fl. 1550–1600) had much to say on the issue. In Aaron purgatus, sive de Vitulo aureo libri duo (1606), he alleged that the winged cherubim on the ark of the covenant, the golden calves of Aaron and Jeroboam, Micah's teraphim, and many other ceremonial instruments were all borrowed from their Egyptian or Phoenician neighbors. The statues of the golden calves just like those of the teraphim, Moncaeus claimed, derived from the polymorphous cherubim and were perfectly lawful in ancient Israel. Originally, these bovine, winged cherubim were effigies of the Egyptian Apis bull set upon the ark of the covenant and served as the mercy seat upon which God is seated (Aaron purgatus, lib. 1, cap. 3, pp. 105–6). The cherubim were not angels shaped like humans – as is commonly believed – but rather winged calves or bulls (bk. 1, cap. 6, p. 111), because their purpose was to convey God like a ruler riding on steeds.³⁹ Angels in human shape would not at all be suitable for such a purpose (lib. 1, cap. 4, pp. 107–110). These bovine statues were no idols at all, so Moncaeus argues, but visible representations of divine power and glory. To be sure, the cherubim themselves were not to be worshipped; that would amount to idolatry and a capital crime. However, as symbols of God's supremacy, they were legitimate instruments through which the devout – lying prostrate before his throne as they did in front of their idols in Egypt – could direct their prayers to the ineffable and hidden God above (lib. 1, cap. 21, pp. 154–56). Although outwardly their devotions were the same, their true disposition could be discovered when they were forced to drink the water of separation, which like the bitter water in cases of adultery, would swell their bodies in token of their guilt (lib. 2, caps. 7–8, pp. 168–72).⁴⁰ So, too, Moncaeus posited that the golden calves in Jeroboam's temples at Bethel and Dan (1 Kings 12:26–30) were really replicas of Aaron's golden calf (Exod. 32:1–4), of the mercy seat of the Mosaic ark, and of the cherubim decorating the veil of the Mosaic Tabernacle and of Solomon's Temple (Exod. 36:8, 37:6–7; 1 Kings, ch. 7–8). In Ezekiel's Merkabah vision (Ezek. 1:6–10, 10:1, 14–22), these cherubim are mixed creatures with four faces – man, lion, ox, and eagle – and thus explain the polymorphous cherubim in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 6:21–35, 7:25) and the presence of the twelve brazen oxen supporting the huge laver (“moulten Sea”) of the abattoir. Had Jeroboam's golden calves not been exact copies of those in Jerusalem's Temple he tried to supplant, Moncaeus argued, the Israelites in the northern kingdom would not have accepted them but continued their thrice-annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem. Jeroboam was therefore no idolater as is commonly believed, but merely a schismatic who set up his own cultus. If Moncaeus tried to justify the use of icons, images, and statues in the Temple, his novel argument was taken quite seriously, because he dared to spell out what many had suspected all along. His Aaron purgatus appeared in the wake of sporadic iconoclasm that swept through Protestant countries during the Counter-Reformation. Worse yet, emphasizing the profane origin of certain Mosaic institutions, Moncaeus implicitly questioned the Bible's claim as an inspired book. Perhaps that is why he was condemned by Roman Catholics and Protestants alike.⁴¹ Surprisingly, the English and Dutch editors of Criticorum Sacrorum (1660, 1698) deemed his Aaron Excused, or Concerning the Golden Calf sufficiently noteworthy to reprint the Latin text – along with its official condemnation – in their nine-volume commentary (1:86–192).⁴²

Never quite willing to let a good controversy die without making the most of it, the French Orientalist Jacques Gaffarel (1601–81), astrologer extraordinaire and librarian to Cardinal Richelieu, published his Curiositez inouyes sur la sculpture talismanique des Persans (1629), for which he was censured by the theologians of the Sorbonne and forced to retract.⁴³ Unheard-of Curiosities (1650), the English title of Gaffarel's book, was a popular work in its time. It went through at least three French editions before Edmund Chilmead, chaplain of Christ Church, Oxford, translated it into English. "The Cherubins, which Moses made to the Arke, were in the figure of Calves" in imitation of Aaron's bovine creature, Gaffarel opined with Moncaeus's work to back his claims. As Moses' high priest, Aaron would have done "nothing, but what he conceived Moses himselfe would have done." These cherubim were made "after the pattern that was shewed to Moses," Aaron, "and the seventy Elders" in the mount and afterwards seen by Ezekiel, and St. John: where God appeared, sitting betwixt foure Cherubins, whereof the first was in figure like a Man; the second, like a Lion; the third, like a Calfe; and the fourth, like an Eagle" – just as we find them later described in Ezekiel's vision (Ezek. 10:14; Rev. 4:6–7). "If the People afterwards provoked God to wrath" by venerating these tauromorphous creatures, "it was not for making the Calfe, but for worshipping it" (Unheard-of, ch. 1, sec. 7, pp. 20, 22). Gaffarel then takes Moncaeus's argument one step further and equates the cherubim with the teraphim. Images such as the cherubim and teraphim, Gaffarel avers, were clearly employed in divinatory rites, even in Solomon's Temple (Unheard-of, pp. 68–75). Like his predecessor, then, Gaffarel does not object to the veneration of images per se but only to their receiving the adoration that is due to God alone. But who can separate the idolaters of Aaron's golden calf from those who directed their prayers towards the bovine effigy as a representation of the God of Moses? Gaffarel wondered.

The unusual frankness of such arguments rendered the motives of Moncaeus and Gaffarel sufficiently suspect that most of their peers dismissed their scholarship as heterodox. It was quite a different matter with Chronicus Canon Aegyptiacus Ebraicus Græcus (1672), by Sir John Marsham (1602–85), a learned Kentish antiquarian and chronologer. In more than six-hundred pages, he compares the history and chronologies of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, Greeks, and Hebrews. In Marsham's reading, the similarities between the cultural, legal, and religious institutions of these peoples make obvious their close contact and mutual influence. The Egyptian civilization and its astronomical periods far surpassed those of her neighbors, Marsham argues. The Hebrews, long touted by pious believers as the most ancient civilization, received many of their religious and civil laws from the Egyptians, whose chronology and kings list of thirty dynasties surpassed those of the Old Testament by thousands of years. "Immense are the religious institutions of the Egyptians, whether we examine the most ancient worship or varieties." According to Marsham, then, "the divine and semi-divine dynasties before the flood" had to be properly arranged, "even if they contradicted the Mosaic chronology, which the superstitious people begin with the age of Enosh" (Chronicus, p. 54).⁴⁴ Marsham tries to reconcile these diverging chronologies by arguing that the thirty Pharaonic dynasties were not successive but simultaneous, for they reigned at the same time in different parts of Egypt. Marsham received high praise from many of his peers in England and on the Continent for having bestowed order and harmony on Egypt's preposterously long chronology and for making a comparative history with Israel and its neighboring kingdoms possible.⁴⁵

His critics were far less kind. For instance, the French Oratorian Richard Simon (1638–1712) chastised Marsham in his "Avertissement" to the Rotterdam edition of Simon's own Histoire Critique Du Vieux Testament (1685) for asserting that Moses borrowed his laws from Egypt: "Je veux dire l'Histoire chronologique des Égyptiens de Marsham, qui semble n'avoir point d'autre but que d'insinuer dans l'esprit de son lecteur que toute la religion de Moïse et des Hébreux a été prise sur celle des Égyptiens" ("Avertissement" 796–97).⁴⁶ This dismissive criticism is rather ironic because Simon himself postulated in his Histoire Critique Du Vieux Testament that Moses was not the author of the whole Pentateuch, but only of some small parts, and that much of the Old Testament was periodically rewritten by "écrivains publics" (public scribes) who were responsible for keeping the ancient records up to date (107–41; quote at 135).⁴⁷

The implications of the ecclesiastical and political debate can be seen in the work of Samuel Parker (1640–88), bishop of Oxford, who seems to have borrowed his thesis from Moncaeus and Gaffarel. In his Reasons for Abrogating the Test Act (1688), Parker pleaded for toleration, especially for Roman Catholics, because the use of images and statues of saints, he claimed, did not constitute idolatry. If modern divines would “soberly enquire into the Nature and Original of Idolatry,” Parker argued, they would soon discover that they completely misunderstood God’s prohibition against graven images (Gen. 20:4–5). It is “not the meer Image it self that is the Idol,” Parker opined, “but the Image as representing a false God, tho it be only a Symbol, and not a Picture of him, as most of the Heathen Images were, of the Sun, as the Calf, and the Ram” (79). That Moses did not proscribe effigies per se, but only images that represent false gods, like those worshipped by Israel’s pagan neighbors, can be seen in the use of the two polymorphous cherubim, which God instructed Moses to set upon the ark of the covenant to serve as his mercy seat (Exod. 25:20–22). Likewise, the most learned scholars – Hugo Grotius, John Spencer, Juan Bautista Villalpandus, and Samuel Bochart – concluded they were of a mixed form, “in which that of a Bullock had the biggest share; but compounded of these four shapes, a Man’s Face, an Eagles Wings, a Lyons Back, an Oxes or Bullocks Thighs and Feet” (Parker, p. 123).⁴⁸ These sphinxlike cherubim with four faces “were the most solemn and sacred part of the Jewish Religion; and therefore, tho Images, so far from Idolatry; that God made them the Seat of his Presence, and from between them delivered his Oracles; so that something more is required to make Idolatry, than the use of Images” (125–26).⁴⁹

It is for these reasons that Dr. Edward Stillingfleet’s polemic A Discourse Concerning the Idolatry Practiced in the Church of Rome (1671) does not stand up to scrutiny, Parker insisted. For when the learned doctor (later bishop of Worcester) asserted that Moses and the Israelites “only directed their Worship towards the Images,” but did not worship the cherubim, Stillingfleet equivocates, Parker claimed. The Israelites bowed toward these images “as the Symbols of God’s Presence, and that is to Worship God by Images, or to give the same Signs of Reverence to his Representations, as to Himself. . . . And if so much outward Worship may be given to Images, as Symbols of the Divine presence, it is enough to justify it” (Parker, p. 126). If anyone did not accept his authority on this matter, Bishop Parker was only too glad to refer his readers to “that admirable Book of Dr. Spencers, concerning the Jewish Laws and the Reason of them.” For any one who loves the wisdom of the ancients “may have his glut of Pleasure and Satisfaction” in reading Spencer’s De Legibus (Parker, p. 98). The danger which Spencer's historicist argument posed to Protestant orthodoxy then becomes all too apparent. In the hands of distracters, it might be employed for all sorts of questionable purposes, perhaps even return icons, images, and saints' statues through the backdoors of Protestant churches from which the Reformers had much ado to cast them out – almost in living memory. Ultimately, Spencer's research might even have the (unintended) purpose of breaking down the wall of separation between sacred and profane religions. Worse yet, in tracing the origin of the Mosaic ceremonies to their alleged roots in paganism, Spencer's historical parallels might yet demonstrate that polytheism – rather than monotheism – was the source of all beliefs.⁵⁰

Spencer and Mather on the Idols of Egypt

It is now high time to cross the Atlantic and sketch Cotton Mather's involvement in the controversy over the Egyptian origin of the Hebrew ceremonial laws and cultic instruments. As is well known by now, "Biblia Americana" is a vast storehouse of arcane and modern knowledge, which clearly indicates the extent to which the English colonies in North America participated in the scholarship and intellectual debates of the period. Let me single out some of the most telling examples to illustrate how Mather negotiates the conflict between what constitutes idolatry and the alleged Egyptian origin of the Mosaic ceremonies: "There ha's been an Opinion, very plausibly maintained, and with a vast Variety of Learning laboriously defended," Mather invokes the specters of John Marsham, Athanasius Kircher, and John Spencer,

That the Egyptians were they who had the first Rules and Rites of Religion among them; and that not only the Religious Rites of other Nations, but even [those] of the Israelites themselves, were derived from the Egyptians: And that in the Reformation whereto the Great God brought the Israelites, He wisely considered, how strongly they were tinctured with the Egyptian Superstitions; And He therefore Allowed the Continuance of many of them; only He Corrected them, He Improved them, He Applied them unto better Purposes. Tis a prodigious Ostentation of Literature, which our Hero's have made, in the Asserting of this Opinion. (BA 2:714–15)

Having thus identified the bone of contention, Mather engages Marsham and Spencer in a process of give and take. The works of Samuel Bochart (1599–1667), John Edwards (1637–1716), Herman Witsius (1636–1708), Pierre Jurieu

(1637–1713), and Thomas Tenison (1636–1715), among many others, provide Mather with much useful ammunition to combat the alleged enemies of the sacred scriptures. Mather is not content, however, with presenting a one-sided interpretation of the matter. He is prepared to give both conventional and heterodox readings a fair hearing.

For instance, John Edwards, conservative English theologian that he was, tried his utmost to defend the sanctity of the Bible by somehow palliating the story of Aaron's golden calf (Exod. 32:1–8), in A Discourse Concerning the Authority, Stile, and Perfection of the Books of the Old and New Testament (1693–95), a three-volume compendium to many controversial debates on the Bible in the seventeenth century. In this pericope, Edwards saw a veiled allusion to the lean and fat cows in Pharaoh's dream vision (Gen. 41:1–7, 25–31), which Joseph providentially explicated to save the people from starvation. The Egyptian Apis or Serapis bull of Memphis (Noph), Edwards opined, was really nothing but "a true Hieroglyphic of Joseph," whose memory was sacred to the Egyptians for saving them from catastrophic famine. Edwards enlists for support the Roman monk and historian Rufinus of Aquileia, who related that "a Bushel was placed on its Head [Egyptian Serapis bull]; signifying, that Joseph was the Giver of Corn, and measured it with exact Proportions in his giving of it. Yea, tis probable, that Serapis, was originally Sorapis; a Compound of Sor, an Ox; and Apis, an Egyptian Word, perhaps of the same Importance" (BA 1:440).⁵¹ Edwards's argument suggests that the Israelites dancing around Aaron's golden calf revered as their savior no one else but the embodiment of the Egyptian hieroglyph of Joseph, their famous ancestor, who had saved them once before when starvation threatened Jacob's entire family. Edwards's Euhemeristic reading, the deification of Joseph, did not satisfy Mather, who revisits the story several times over. This is especially the case in Mather's lengthy synopsis of Herman Witsius's Aegyptiaca, et Dekaphylon (1683, 1696), one of the earliest polemics against

Marsham and Spencer, which Mather incorporates at great length in his commentary on Leviticus (ch. 27).⁵² And yet, Mather agrees with Spencer (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 5, sec. 4, fol. 857–62) that “Calf-Worship” originated in Egypt and that God’s people “became eager imitators of the Egyptian inventions.” He quotes Philo Judaeus’s Vita Mosis affirmatively on this issue. As if to out-Spencer Spencer, Mather enlists Strabo’s Geography, Cicero’s De natura deorum, Pliny’s Natural History, and Pomponius Mela’s De Chronographia – all confirming that the Egyptian “Apis,” a living black bull with white markings, was “worshipped by the Memphites, and Mnevis, by the Heliopolites, under the Figure of Oxen” (BA 2:716 and 174). More to the point, a golden image of a bull or Βούν διαχρυσον, representing the image of Osiris’s soul, was also worshipped by the Egyptians, Mather points out with citation references to Plutarch’s Isis and Osiris (39.366d–f).⁵³ To back up his point, Mather consults Samuel Bochart’s trusty 1663 edition of Hierozyicon sive Bipertitum de animalibus sacra scripturae (pt. 1, lib. 2, cap. 34, cols. 329–60), an encyclopedic study of biblical bestiaries, which provides him with much useful information on the topic. According to Bochart, Aaron’s golden calf must have been “an Imitation of the Egyptian Apis,” the considerably older cousin of the Serapis bull, which was not known in Egypt before the time of Alexander the Great (356–323 BCE). Or, if Philo Judaeus can be trusted, Aaron’s bovine idol was really an effigy of the Egyptian Typhon (Seth), an ancient personification of Chaos, who was worshipped in the shape of a red bull (BA 2:423–24).⁵⁴ Whatever the origin and function of Aaron’s idolatrous calf, Mather argued, its source must be sought in Egypt, because the adoration of bovine creatures was much older than the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. These idols were the “Abominations of the Egyptians,” a sacrosanct taboo whose violation would have been monstrous had the Egyptians witnessed “their Gods made a Sacrifice” once the Israelites had established their own sacred rituals in the Holy Land (BA 2:718).

All things considered, the Egyptian origin of Aaron’s golden calf is perhaps not all that controversial an issue because the worship of bovines as symbols of divine power, in Egypt, Phoenicia, Assyria, Medo-Persia, and Babylonia, was well known throughout the ages. It was a different matter, however, with the most sacred instrument in the Mosaic religion: the ark of the covenant and the winged cherubim between which the Shechinah of the Lord appeared as the visible symbol of his divine presence. Again, Spencer relates the historical evidence “of the ancient usage of the arks in the ceremonies of the gentiles,” who carried sacred chests (cistae) and images in their religious services and temples of their gods.⁵⁵ Furthermore, he reports that “the shape of the cherubim took their origin from the Egyptian symbols and images”⁵⁶ and were joined with the ark. The biblical description of the ark’s building material, dimension, and function was clear enough, because God had given Moses specific instructions (Exo. 25:10–22). But the cherubim seemed to be a totally different matter. Apart from their wings, posture, and position little can be discerned in the Pentateuch. Their form and appearance must have been well known to Moses’ contemporaries, Mather speculates, because the Hebrew lawgiver did not go into any detail. What was their size, shape, and function? And how come that God punished the renegade Israelites for worshipping Aaron’s calf, and then had Moses place images on the sacred ark? Did Almighty God’s Decalogue not specifically proscribe “any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth”? And did he not specifically command, “Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them”? (Exod. 20:4–5). If these laws were not explicit enough, how come that God instructed Moses to place iconic statues of cherubim at opposite ends of the ark of the covenant and centuries later permit Solomon to set up in the inner sanctum of the Temple two gigantic cherubim “each ten cubits high” and their extended wings of “ten cubits” touching in the middle and both sides of the Temple walls? (1 Kings 6:21–35) (BA 3:422). And lastly, what is one to make of the statues of twelve oxen carrying the laver, with graven images of lions, oxen, and cherubim decorating not only its basis, but also the embroidered veil that separates the foyer from the adytum of the inner Temple? Would the faithful Israelites not bow toward the veiled enclosure occupied by two enormous cherubim from between which God’s oracle spoke to the high priest? (1 Kings 6:21–35, 7:23–36) (BA 3:427–35, 438). Given Israel’s proclivity to worship visible icons of false gods, surely such prominent images in Solomon’s Temple and on the Mosaic ark must somehow be reconciled with God’s explicit prohibition against graven images unless something completely different is intended by that proscription.

⁵² See Witsius’s Aegyptiaca (1696 ed.), lib. 3, cap. 14, pp. 280–92.

⁵⁴ It is intriguing that R. Abraham Ibn Ezra (1089–c. 1164) seemed to exculpate Moses’ brother, positing that those who worshipped Aaron’s golden calf did not commit idolatry intentionally, because they believed that the invisible God of Moses “was to be identified with the calf” (Commentary 2:678) just as much as the Egyptians believed that the spirit of their gods resided in their images.

Francis Moncaeus, Jacques Gaffarel, and John Spencer tackled these issues by examining the Bible for historical evidence of similar graven images and linking them with parallel iconic statues and rituals among Israel's pagan neighbors. As previously stated, they speculated that Moses' winged cherubim were closely related to the talismanic teraphim which Rachel stole from her father and which King Saul's daughter Michal placed in David's bed to deceive her husband's attackers (1 Sam. 19:13) (BA 3:307). They were used for divination, Mather affirmatively cites Pierre Jurieu's Critical History (1705) on Gen. 31:19 (BA 1:1042–47), but their original was derived from the worship of dead ancestor whose effigies were placed on kenotaphia or empty tombs: "Upon these they sett the Teraphim, or the Images of their Ancestors, at the Two Extremities of the Tombs. And indeed, there was a little Resemblance to the Cherubim on the Ark of the Israelites" (BA 1:1045), because the cherubim were likewise placed at opposite ends of the Mosaic ark, and the voice of God was heard to issue from between the two images standing on his mercy seat.⁵⁷ In this sense, then, the divinatory function of the teraphim in delivering oracles was alike present in the cherubim on the ark, in Solomon's Temple, as well as in the Urim and Thummim in the ephod of Aaron's breastplate.⁵⁸ They were all instruments of divine communication with the invisible world. This liminal blurring of things sacred and profane was too much for Cotton Mather, who knew only too well where such an argument might lead. "The Opinion of Moncaus, and Gaffarel, and Spencer, is by no means to be allow'd, That the Cherubim and the Teraphim, were the same," Mather responded with Jurieu's Critical History (2:99) to back him up. "The Cherubim were a Mixed Figure, of no less than Four Animals; as they are described by Ezekiel: whereas the Teraphim were purely of an Humane Shape. And yet we may say, That the Teraphim were among the Idolaters, what the Cherubim were unto the Israelites. The Number Two, is one Instance of the Resemblance; Two Images for a Tomb were indeed enough" (BA 1:1045).⁵⁹ In Mather's way

57 Mather draws on Jurieu's Critical History (2:98). For these "kenotaphia" (empty monuments, tombs, or images), see also Diodorus Siculus (3.40.8) and 1 Kings 19:13 (LXX).

58 In linking the oracular function of the cherubim with the teraphim and the Urim and Thummim, Spencer ultimately yokes sacred with profane instruments (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 7, caps. 3–4, fols. 929–94). No wonder that Mather is almost beside himself in his vehement reaction to Spencer's outrageous claims: "Now, in the first Place, I do with much Distaste Reject the Opinion of Spencer. ... And because I Reject it, I will not so much as Translate it, but give it unto you in his own Words." Just a few short paragraphs later, Mather again lashes out at him: "This harsh, and hard, (and I may say, Horrid) Opinion of Spencers, is well confuted, by a Learned Foreigner, one Philippus Riboudealdus, in a Book printed in Geneva, 1685, unto whom I refer you, if you want further Satisfaction. ... Whereas this unhappy Scholar [Spencer] employes a vast Learning, to make the Urim and Thummim, (that illustrious Oracle) with which the God of Heaven distinguished His ancient People, to be Their Ordinances, or the Diabolical Ordinances of the Egyptians and Canaanites, Imitated and Continued by the Holy Angels of Heaven. Maimonides utters more Christianity, than this Gentleman, when he asserts, That the Jewish Rites, prescribed that People by God, were not an imitation of the Pagan Rites, but were in absolute Opposition to them" (BA 2:386–87).

59 See also Jurieu (Critical History 1:327–33, 339–40) and Gaffarel (146–56). In Ezekiel's visions (Ezek. 1:6–10; 10:1, 14–22), these cherubim are mixed creatures with four faces – man, of thinking, any functional similarity between these instruments of divination was either purely accidental or intended to be deliberately obfuscating because the devil – craving adoration – aped God’s institutions to mislead the faithful. This conventional explanation was prevalent among theologians of the day, and Mather was no exception (BA 1:435–36).⁶⁰ If the correspondence between sacred and pagan implements of worship pointed to their common origin, it was the wily serpent, the arch marplot of Eden, who mimicked the Lord. And if Israel’s idolatrous neighbors practiced the same rites, then, in Mather’s view, the envious pagans simply stole their ceremonies from God’s chosen people. From our modern perspective, Spencer’s massive expedition into comparative religion and iconography may have pointed in the right direction, but Mather and most of his contemporaries were unprepared and unwilling to accept the logical conclusion of their common origin. The Mosaic distinction between true and false worship, between sacred and profane, between monotheism and polytheism, was so ingrained in their mindset that they rejected offhand any evidence to the contrary. Too much depended on defending the primacy of the Holy Scriptures.⁶¹

The same holds true for the alleged Egyptian origin of the cherubim which (as previously stated) reappear not only on God’s mercy seat on the Mosaic ark, but also as enormous statues in Solomon’s Temple and in Ezekiel’s vision of God’s Merkabah. A quick glance at Matthew Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:446–47) demonstrates that the opinions of the standard authorities on Exod. 25:18 disagreed widely on the physical appearance of the golden cherubim on the ark. Junius, Ainsworth, Piscator, and Malvenda insisted they were of a human form; Munster, Menochius, Junius, and Piscator, agreeing with the standard rabbinic lion, ox, and eagle – but all cloven hoofed “like the sole of a calf’s foot.” Each having four wings – “two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies.” Hence the shape of the polymorphous cherubim in Solomon’s Temple (1 Kings 6:21–35, 7:25) and the presence of the twelve brazen oxen supporting the huge laver. On this, see Gaffarel (17–31, 68–75). Spencer’s examination of OT iconography climaxes in a lengthy disquisition in his De Legibus (lib. 3, diss. 5–6, fols. 829–1037). Here he claims that the images of the man-shaped teraphim were widely used in Egypt and Chaldea, and have the same function as the Mosaic Urim and Thummim used in divinatory rituals (Exod. 28:30). As if this bold claim were not enough, Spencer asserts (lib. 3, diss. 5, cap. 4, sec. 1–4, fols. 857–62) that the polymorphous cherubim (human, leonine, bovine, and aquiline) were derived from the figures of Egyptian deities and by Moses adapted for pious use to accommodate the Israelites’ desire for visible deities. Matthew Poole provides a useful summary of the controversy in his Synopsis Criticorum (1:446–47), on Exod. 25:18. Modern explications of the polymorphous cherubim agree in essence with those of Spencer that they were of pagan origin (Anchor 1:899–90).

sources, thought they were in the shape of boys, because the Hebrew word for cherub כְּרוּב is derived from כָּמוֹ רֶבִיָּא quasi puer “like a boy.” Drusius, however, deemed this bowdlerized derivation rather feeble. He enlisted John Calvin’s Commentary on the Four Last Books of Moses to argue that “those who suppose the כ [kaph] to be a note of similitude, render it ‘like a boy;’ which in itself is forced, and besides it is refuted by the words of Ezekiel, (ch. i. 10, and x. 1,) who calls the forms of a calf, a lion, and an eagle by this name as well as the human form” (2:157). Yet others pointed out that if they were boys, their arms would have interfered with their extended wings. Besides, interjected Oleaster, the “face of the cherub” (Ezek. ch. 10) is distinguished from a “human face.” To Grotius (Annotationes 55) and many others, the cherubim were μοσχόμορφοι (formâ vitulorum) “in the shape of calves,” perhaps commemorating Joseph’s dream vision of the seven fat and lean cows. And what in Ezek. 1:10 is called שׁוֹר [showr] “ox” is called כְּרוּב [kerub] “cherub” in Ezek. 10:14, which to Grotius is the primary form of the living creature in Ezekiel’s Merkabah vision. And where Menochius points out that the cherubim were a composite of four animal species – “vultus hominis, alæ aquilinæ, leonis jubæ” – the face of a human, the wings of an eagle, the mane of a lion – in addition to the face of an ox, Grotius allegorizes them as symbols of God’s mystical qualities: “man a symbol of goodness, the eagle of swiftness, the lion of judgment, and the feet of the oxen slowness.”⁶² Mather is not far behind and glosses, “The first Face, was the Face of a Cherub: That is to say, of an Oxe, or, a Calf: A Representation of great Account among the Jewes, for the sake of their Joseph. It is here intimated, That the Upper Part of the Cherubims Head, was distinguished, & remarkable, for Circumstances, that had something Bovine in them. The Second Face, was the Face of a Man; That is to say, the whole Countenance was Humane. The Third, the Face of a Lion; That is to say, The Neck, & the Main, was Leonine. The Fourth, the Face of an Eagle; This was in the Wings added unto their shoulders” (BA 6, Ezek. 10:14).

Thus Mather’s own commentary on the Mosaic cherubim bespeaks his indecision as he vacillates between their shape as polymorphous animals and as angelic creatures with a human body. Reaching out to Jacques Saurin’s Discours Historiques, Critiques, Theologiques et Moraux (1720), Mather acknowledges that the cherubim are “Hieroglyphicks” of angelic and celestial qualities frequently symbolizing “certain Mysteries of Religion and Morality.” However, whether the shape of the Mosaic cherubim is the same as those in the visions of Ezekiel and John in Revelation (4:7) is a different matter. The question still remains whether the assorted faces merely signify “some Likeness to those Objects, and not the Visage of them” and whether they “had Four Heads, or but one, or even whether Four Half-Heads.” Trying to find a satisfactory solution, Mather allows John Spencer to have his say that based on Ezekiel's vision, the cherubim "had mostly, something of a Bovine Figure belonging to them," because the ancient Hebrew meaning of cherub was 'An Oxe' with its related connotation in Arabic and Syriac suggesting "To Plough." Yet Mather is still ill at ease with what amounts to an endorsement of the Egyptian bestiary on the sacred ark. At last, he cuts through this Gordian knot and invites Maimonides to settle the issue – at least for the time being: "Be the Figure what it will; it is evident, That the Cherubim which Moses made by the Order of GOD, were Emblems of ANGELS." For according to Maimonides, God's purpose "was to inculcate the Doctrine & Beleeve of ANGELS" (BA 2:340).⁶³

Angels they may well be, but might there be any other mystery hidden in their physical presence on the sacred ark? In his gloss on Rev. 4:6, Mather turns, once again, to the signification of the cherubim – this time opting for an allegorical and ecclesial interpretation. Thomas Brightman (1562–1607), an influential English millenarian and biblical commentary, serves Mather as interpreter, yet at second hand via Jeremiah Burroughs (1599–1646), whose posthumously published Jerusalems Glory Breaking forth into the World (London, 1675), pp. 99–101, is Mather's immediate source. Burroughs, a well-respected Independent and member of the Westminster Assembly, here paraphrases Brightman's exposition on Rev., ch. 4, in A Revelation of the Revelation (Amsterdam, 1615), pp. 184–88. According to Burroughs, Brightman interprets the "Four Animals" (Rev. 4:6–8) as "Four Successive States of the Church," beginning with the Primitive Church, typified by the lion who raged against the "persecuting Emperours" and their torment of the early Christians.⁶⁴ Following this train of thought, Burroughs deciphers the "Oxe" as "The Second State of the Church," a time when Antichrist set upon the faithful who were "fitt to bear Burdens" like those of the beast of burden that represents them. Next in line is the "Third State of the Church," represented by "the Man," who "enquires after the Reason of Things, & understands them, and affects Liberty." This third state occurs "at the Beginning of the Reformation," when "Men would not now take the Yoke of Antichrist, as they did before." If they were treated "like Beasts" before, "now they will be Men, & understand what they do." Finally, the Church arrives in its fourth and final state, fittingly represented by "the Eagle" and the "High Flights of Christianity." In this state, the Church and her members "shall be of Heavenly Minds, and sore up like the Eagle, in their Dispositions" (BA 10, Rev. 4:6).

If this allegorical solution satisfied Mather for the moment, "Biblia Americana" purports to entertain his readers with anything but the worn and pedestrian. His synopses of some hieroglyphic inscriptions on an Egyptian mummy, originating in Athanasius Kircher's 1676 Sphinx Mystagoga, sive Dialectice Hieroglyphica de Mumiis (pt. 2, caps. 2, 4, pp. 21–23, 29–35), is a case in point. Mather extracts this curious passage at second hand from Herman Witsius's Aegyptiaca (lib. 1, cap 9, p. 46) without mentioning Kircher. It illustrates just how far Mather was prepared to go: "The Egyptians had their God Hempta," the ram-headed god Khnum (Kneph), whom the Greeks called Jupiter Ammon. He is attended by certain guardian spirits (genii): the first is Horus, with "the Face of a Boy," the god of the sentient world; the second is the vigilant Anubis, with "the Face of a Dog," signifying the Hermetic economy; the third is Thautus, with "the Face of an Hawk," representing the heat of the sun and the source of the earth's fertility; finally, the fourth is the formidable deity Momphta, with "the Face of a Lion," presiding over the Hylean (or watery) world.

"Was not Hempta, the same with the God /אמת/ Emet [Truth], of the Israelites," whose throne is on the mercy seat of the ark of the covenant? Mather wonders. "And were not the Cherubim, an Imitation of Hempta's Attendants" with the face of a man, lion, ox, and eagle? "God forbid, we should imagine so. We have no Proof of Hempta's Antiquity. And neither the Number nor the Figure of his Attendants, was the same with the Cherubim in the Tabernacle" (BA 2:746).⁶⁵ Mather clearly wrestles with the amazing similarities between divine and pagan emblems outlined by Kircher and here borrowed from Witsius (46). To Mather, the appalling implications about pagan idols resurfacing on the sacred ark of Moses even in Ezekiel's Merkabah vision were just too much. Yet Mather was unwilling to let go. In his commentary on Acts, he revisits the topic once again in an excerpt from Archbishop Thomas Tenison's Of Idolatry (1678). Here Mather argues that the angelic cherubim resembled a part of God's Shechinah glory, which Aaron and the seventy elders had seen in their ascent on Mt. Horeb. Aaron modeled his golden calf on the attending angelic cherubim,

who “appeared with Heads of a Bovine Aspect.” The Hebrew word cherub signifies “A Beef, and it was derived from the Chaldee /ברכ/ [keruwb] He ploughed.” Ironically, in worshipping the figure of the bovine cherub, the wayward Israelites turned the Shechinah glory “into a Similitude” of God’s presence and into “the Symbol of an Angel, which was not so much to the Shechinah of God, as one Spoke of a Wheel is to an Eastern Emperour in a triumphant Chariot.” The Israelites in the wilderness fell to worshipping it even as they danced around their Apis or Mnevis bull, the idol of the Egyptians (BA 8, Acts 7:2).⁶⁶ In stripping the cherubim of their bovine aspects, then, Mather turns the winged creatures once again into angels in human shape. In this as in many other instances, Mather acknowledges Maimonides as his master.⁶⁷ After all, the familiar appearances of winged angels and cupids, as they could be seen in myriads of medieval and Renaissance paintings and frescoes, inspired the beholder with assurance that comes with faith in the reality of things not seen. These winged messengers ascended and descended from God’s throne and comforted those who hoped for their own guardian angel to protect them from harm. They instilled in the faithful the same awe and wonder that Jacob must have felt when he beheld a ladder standing on earth and reaching all the way to heaven (BA 1:1018–19).⁶⁸

Mather’s frank denial notwithstanding, he seems simultaneously fascinated and troubled by the plenitude of new connections between iconography sacred and profane. Perhaps his well-known hypostatic vision of a shining angel appearing in his study is an indication why these strange and inexplicable cherubim or angels manifested themselves to the optic nerves in precisely the shape and manner as they had been imagined all along.⁶⁹ Once he recorded in his

⁶⁸ The transformation of the pantheon of the pagans into Judeo-Christian saints is illustrated in J. Seznec’s intriguing Survival of the Pagan Gods (1972) and F.E. Manuel’s The Eighteenth Century Confronts the Gods (1959).

Diary (1684–85) a startling epiphany: “A strange and memorable thing. After outpourings of prayer, with the utmost fervor and fasting, there appeared an Angel, whose face shone like the noonday sun. His features were those of a man, and beardless; his head was encircled by a splendid tiara; on his shoulders were wings; his garments were white and shining; his robe reached to his ankles; and about his loins was a belt not unlike the girdles of the peoples of the East. And this Angel said that he was sent by the Lord Jesus to bear a clear answer to the prayers of a certain youth [Cotton Mather], and to bear back his words in reply.” Tellingly, the angel spoke to him in the metaphors of the prophet Ezekiel (Ezek. 31:3–9), of the fair Cedars of Lebanon rooted by the running water of deep rivers, of majestic branches and “thick Boughs,” of a cedar in Eden, envied by all other trees in God’s garden (Diary 1:86–87).⁷⁰ Mather’s fervent prayer, the most heartfelt a young man could muster, came alive in this angelic vision.

Be that as it may, no matter his fascination with the supernatural world and Spencer’s iconoclasm, Mather’s admiration could also turn into downright hostility toward those who go where angels fear to tread. A notable instance occurs in his annotations on Numb. 10:36. Here, as in several other cases, Mather turns to parallel accounts in “Pagan Antiquitie” to validate the Bible’s primacy. He does Spencer the honor of accepting his evidence on Moloch’s portable ark (Amos 5:25, Acts 7:43), for as Spencer insists, the Canaanites and many other heathen nations employed sacred arks – like that of Moses – in the adoration of their gods whom they carried in chests or trunks into battle, long before the Israelites allegedly adopted the like custom (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 3, sec. 2, fol. 673–75). It is amusing to witness how Mather exploits Spencer’s primary sources as if they were Mather’s own. In one instance, Spencer cites Commentarii in Acta Apostolorum (1616), by Gaspar Sanctius (1553–1628), a learned Jesuit professor of theology at Alcala (Spain); in another, Moses and Aaron, or the Civil and Ecclesiastical Rites used by the ancient Hebrews (1678), by famous Dr. Thomas Godwin (1587–1643), rector of Brightwell (Berkshire). Both authors pinpoint similarities between pagan and Mosaic rites, but ultimately insist that the pagans had stolen theirs from Moses. With this evidence in place, Mather lashes out against Spencer:

The learned Pen, of Spencer, would needs perswade us, That the Tabernacle of Moloch, was the first Original of the Tabernacle of God; and that it is a Vulgar Error, with Christ as a descending dove, to the apostles as fiery tongues, to Paul on his conversion as a great light. All these expressions are plainly in harmony with the [then] current ideas of God and spirits” (Tractatus Theologico-Politicus (1670), in A Theologico-Political Treatise (Elwes translation), ch. 1, p. 25).

to think, That the Diuel Apes the Almighty. But it is a wonderful thing, that so Accomplished a Person [as Spencer], should pervert his Accomplishments, to maintain such monstrous Assertions. He will never bring so Præposterous a Scheme to bee embraced in the Church of God! (BA 2:854-55).⁷¹

But already in the next paragraph, Mather is forced to eat his own words: “Tis true,” he concedes, “Gods Tabernacle was portable; and so was Molochs. Gods Tabernacle had in it, his Ark & the Images of Cherubims: and Molochs had his Image in it. God exhibited, by Audible answers, & otherwise, his peculiar Presence in His Tabernacle; and Moloch did the like in his. God appeared as a King, in the Circumstances of His Tabernacle; and Moloch in his, claimed a Name that signifies as much.” So far, so good – so it seems. Yet Mather was not willing to embrace the logical conclusion of this analogy: “But it is far from True, That the Tabernacle of God, fetched its Pattern, from that of Moloch; or, that the Cursed Fiend is Imitated by the God of Heaven. The figure, which we call, The Cart before the Horse, runs thro’ the Writings of some learned Authors. But, wee now add, that from the Ark in the Tabernacle, the Gentiles Worshippers borrowed, the Little Chests, wherein they carried about their Gods” (BA 2:855). Mather’s vociferous objection to Spencer’s thesis belies how close he came to going along with Spencer’s comparative approach to the iconography and ritual practices of ancient Israel’s powerful neighbors. For Mather and those who shared his viewpoint, the Mosaic primacy and Israel’s cultural and religious superiority was a point of nonnegotiable dogma. If Spencer’s cultural archeology piqued Mather’s intellectual curiosity enough to embrace many of his ideas, Mather’s belief in the divine origin of the Judeo-Christian religions demanded that he rise in defense of the Bible’s authority.

Just how compelling Mather found Spencer’s cultural archeology is especially evident in his commentary on Amos, where the argument from De Legibus once again proves irresistible. Here, Mather provides a detailed summary of Spencer’s corroboration (lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 3, sec. 1, 664–70) that confirms the prevalence of portable arks, chests, shrines, and tabernacles employed by pagan neighbors and adapted – so Spencer – by the Israelites for their own use. One of Mather’s comments seems unique. In his gloss on Amos 5:26, he goes as far as to abet Spencer by encouraging readers to “Attend now to something of Curiosity!” as Mather explains why, in spite of the Second Commandment, the Israelites 71 In his commentary on the prophet Amos, Mather revisits Spencer, Sanctius, and Godwin on the likeness between Moloch’s ark and that of Moses. “To this Opinion [that the devil aped God’s portable tabernacle] of Sanctius, of Godwyn, and others, I rather incline, than to that scandalous one by Dr. Spencer, that the Mosaic Tabernacle was made in Imitation of the like Sacred Fabricks, commonly used among the more ancient Pagans. And yett unto that learned Mans Lucubrations, I will be beholden, for some Illustrations of the Texts now before us” (BA 6, Amos 5:26).

superstitiously carried the effigies of their household gods Remphan and Chiun with them during their travels through the wilderness:

These Deities were peculiarly accommodated unto the Condition of Israel in the Wilderness, according to the Notions of Paganism then prevailing. For Osiris, whom they considered in Moloch was accounted, according to Mercurius Trismegistus, The Overseer of every ones Body και ιχθυος και ρωμης καθηγητης, Virum et Roboris Ductor. Now, a Leader giving Strength to Travellers, how agreeably did the Idolatry of weary Travellers pitch upon him, for an Object of their Adoration? (BA 6, Amos 5:26).

In Mather's endorsement of Spencer's account, then, Moses accommodated the Israelites' idolatrous habits by allowing them to carry with them images of Chiun (Saturn, Jupiter), the patron god of prosperity and hospitality. For a traveler carrying such an image could not be refused hospitable reception, because "Saturn would avenge it, if it were denied him. The Israelites now being Afflicted Strangers, behold, what they have Recourse unto!" Thus until today, Mather claims, the rabbis have a particular regard for the planet Saturn and think of him "in the Hospitality of their Sabbaths" (BA 6, Amos 5:26).⁷² Mather seems so drawn to Spencer's comparisons, as these passages appear to suggest, that he frequently crosses over to the other side. In penetrating the logic of Spencer's argument and in following his argument closely, Mather tends to be unaware at times how this line of reasoning relativizes the Mosaic religion as just one among many ancient creeds vying for ascendancy. Put in a different way, Spencer's study of ancient iconography and rituals constitutes an early form of comparative religion.⁷³ 73 Perhaps inspired by Spencer's allocation of proof from eyewitnesses, Mather adds to his own collection a passage extracted from the Spanish Jesuit José Acosta (1539–1600), whose 1604 Naturall and Morall Historie of the East and West Indies (bk. 7, chs. 4–7, pp. 504–14) proved irresistible: "There is a strange Passage in Acosta, about the Indians, who came from afar, to settle about Mexico," Mather quotes from the English translation of Acosta's comparison between Native American religions in the Spanish colonies and his own Roman Catholic belief. "That the Divil, in their Idol, Vitzlipultzli, governed that mighty Nation, & commanded them to leave their Countrey, promising to make them Lords of all the Provinces, possessed by Six other Nations of Indians, and give them a Land, abounding with all precious Things. They went forth, carrying their Idol with them, in a Coffe of Reeds, supported by four of their papal Priests; with whom he still discoursed, in secret; Revealing to them, the Successes, and Accidents, of their Way. Hee advised them, when to march, and where to stay, and without his Commandment, they moved not. The first Thing they did, wherever they came, was to erect a Tabernacle, for their False God; which they sett alwayes, in the Midst of their Camp, and there placed the Ark upon an Altar. When they, tired with Pains, talked of, Proceeding no further, in their Journey, than a certain pleasant Stage, whereto they were arrived, the Devil, in one Night, horribly kill'd them, that had started this Talk, pulling out their Hearts. And so they passage on, till they came to Mexico (BA 2 2:855–56). Obviously, Acosta's etiological description to account for the temples and rituals he witnessed among the natives of Mesoamerica is viewed through the lens of Old Testament precedent and cultural conditioning – of the Promised Land to be given to Abraham's offspring, the Israelites' carrying the Ark of the Covenant, their rebellion under Korah, and their punishment by being swallowed up by the earth (BA 2:894–97).

72 See Spencer (669–70).

Was Mather fully cognizant of the implication of Spencer's radical thesis? His genuine admiration for Spencer's scholarship and his vociferous disapproval of Spencer's radicalism in places suggest that he was. What we can say with certainty, though, is that Mather's historical interest in the origin of and the history behind the Mosaic rituals and their parallels in paganism is evident throughout "Biblia Americana." He was fascinated by the intellectual panorama of his age, but he was reluctant to embrace its vistas. Spencer's subversive De Legibus is a case in point.⁷⁴ Although not the work of a Deist by any stretch of the imagination, Spencer's magisterial book was perhaps even more perilous than Charles Blount's Great is Diana of the Ephesians (1680), John Toland's Letters to Serena (1704), Adeisidæmon et Origines Judaica (1709), Clidophorus (1702), and Tetradymus (1720), or ultimately, David Hume's Natural History of Religion (1757) – an association Mather would have vehemently disavowed.⁷⁵ The aims of Blount or Toland were all too obvious; but those of Spencer, "our Spencer," as Mather calls him in moments of unrestrained admiration, were more ambiguous. Spencer's historical scholarship opened up hitherto unprecedented glimpses into the origin of religion as religion that to a mind like Mather's were tremendously appealing and yet frightful at the same time. Whether he critiques the philological scholarship of a Hobbes, Spinoza, Simon, or a LeClerc, or evaluates the accommodationist thesis of Maimonides and Spencer, Mather incorporates in his "Biblia Americana" the choice fruits of friend and foe alike. In his mind, they allowed him to plumb the depth of God's Word and to make its rich mines of wisdom accessible to readers of his commentary.

The religion of Moses, then, did not emerge in complete isolation from those of Israel's pagan neighbors – as Jewish and Christian theologians of Mather's time insisted it did – but as an evolutionary process with strong roots in the customs, ceremonies, and cultic rites of Egypt and Chaldea. To take Spencer's argument – and Mather's half-hearted assent – one step further, Christianity, then, as purported heir to Judaism equally derives its origin and legitimization from ritual and sacrificial practices with roots in paganism. But this conclusion did not become accepted until widely disseminated by German Higher Criticism in the nineteenth century. In some way, Mather must have been conscious that this new type of biblical criticism was very different from the partisan bickering of Protestant sectarianism. The stakes were much higher. Cotton Mather's "Biblia Americana," then, is a historical record of the Enlightenment debates that contributed to the breakdown of the old, established order, and to the destabilization of the Bible's authority. If nothing else, "Biblia Americana" reveals that in his embrace of Newtonian science as well as of philological and historical-contextual criticism, Mather had long transcended the regional scope of his Magnalia Christi Americana (1702) with its focus on New-England's place in providential history. In his "Biblia Americana," then, he carved out an intellectual space in which he could converse with his European colleagues on their terms.

Note on the Manuscript

Cotton Mather's commentary on the Pentateuch – Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy – consists of approximately 940 out of a total of c. 4,500 folios in manuscript and contains his longest (if not most detailed) annotations on any coherent unit of the Hebrew Scriptures or Old Testament.¹ The physical condition of the bound manuscript fascicles of Exodus through Deuteronomy (BA 2) shows similar wear and tear as that of Genesis (see BA 1:194–96). Nonetheless, the huge holograph manuscript is remarkably readable for its age and state of preservation. By all appearances, Mather did not use protective coversheets for the various fascicles and gatherings of each book of the Pentateuch. Those for Leviticus and Numbers were probably inserted at the time of their second binding – after the “Biblia” holograph was given to the Massachusetts Historical Society in the early nineteenth century (c. 1809). The coversheets for Genesis, Exodus, and Deuteronomy are missing. Most likely they were lost through excessive handling or torn out and used as scrap paper (BA 1:212). This is especially evident on the remaining coversheets for Leviticus and Numbers, of which about two-thirds of the blank paper below their ornately written titles are torn off. This phenomenon is all too common for manuscripts of the period; handmade paper was expensive, and anyone who perused the “Biblia” manuscript may have been tempted to repurpose blank portions for note-taking. The extant coversheets for Leviticus and Numbers now serve as title pages and bear the following inscriptions in the upper-third of the page:

and, respectively,
Illustrations upon the Book of

These titles are inscribed in the same flowing hand as that on the paper pasted to the spines of the bound fascicles. Sheets of paper from the same papermill were used as front- and end paper glued to the inside of the cardboard covers for each of the six bound volumes of the “Biblia Americana” holograph manuscript (see BA 1:53). These inscriptions are not in Cotton Mather’s hand but, very likely, in that of an early MHS librarian, because they appear on sheets of paper dating to the early nineteenth century. The paper of the coversheets, end papers, and spine bear the following countersigns:

They are associated with the papermill of Caleb and Abijah Burbank, of Sutton, MA (Worcester County), who supplied Isaiah Thomas and many other printers with high-quality paper.

Measurements, Watermarks, and Countermarks: Paper Use in the “Biblia” on Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy²

Because Mather gathered material for his Bible commentary over more than three decades (1693–1728), his more than 4,500 manuscript folios underwent innumerable changes. He cancelled and interpolated whole paragraphs, replaced entire fascicles of material with new collections of notes gleaned from more up-to-date sources, and interleaved fresh extracts on whole folios and half or quarto sheets between conjugate or loose leaves, by pasting them in the margins or gutter with sealing wax. His replacement of matter is particularly apparent in the different sizes of his individual manuscript sheets.

As can be gathered from the above tables, Mather introduced innumerable changes in the “Biblia” manuscript – substantive revisions of the text as well as interpolations and excisions of whole leaves and entire fascicles. These changes are noticeable in the varying heights [H] and widths [W] of each individual leaf, as well as in the breadth of the gutter [G] or margins. The four stages of growth of the “Biblia” holograph manuscript and the approximate dates for Mather’s revisions are discussed in BA (1:50–66).

To simplify the process of identifying each watermark (WM) and countermark (CM), I have assigned alphabetical letters to each group of WM and keyed them to their depiction in the standard catalogues accessible in most research libraries.³ However, the process of establishing the exact WM and CM is fraught with great difficulties: Signature designs such as the London Coat-of-Arms, the Arms of England, Lilies, Cross and Lions, Post Horns, were extremely popular in Mather's time; moreover, paper makers and owners of paper mills in the Netherlands, France, England, or N America were not shy about copying each other's designs or introducing minor variants – perhaps to mislead their customers about the origin and quality of the paper. Variants of these WM were numerous and puzzling; they might only differ in some minute details such as more elaborate gowns, larger or smaller shields, crowns with straight or curved horns, or pots and vases surrounded by slightly different garlands and ornaments. If that were not enough, deciphering barely visible, smudged, or incomplete WM is a real challenge, especially when the manuscript leaves are bound into fascicles and limit access to WM and CM buried in the gutter of the binding. Much the same is true for CM that are separated from their corresponding WM. In numerous cases, reconstructing their design – let alone identifying the paper makers or year of production – amounts to informed guesswork.

The WM and CM references listed in the Tables (above) are given in alphabetical order from (A) to (Z) and from (Aa) to (Ua). CM consist mostly of the initials of names or of fanciful doodles. They are keyed to the designs reproduced in the catalogues of watermarks listed in footnote 3 (above). For a detailed description of the WM and CM, see BA (1:200–2002).

(C), (F), (M), (S), (Da) London Coat-of-Arms

The WM in (C), (M), and (Da) are most like those in Heawood (PL 78 # 466, # 473), Gravell (p. 70 # 188), and Churchill (PL CCCXIV # 243). Heawood's dates are London, 1722; Gravell's Philadelphia, 1714; and Churchill's Amsterdam, 1707. (F) and (S) are most like Heawood (PL 79 # 478), Gravell (p. 70 # 190), and Churchill (PL CCXIII # 240). Heawood's date for (F) is London, 1708; for (S) England, 1700. Gravell's for (F) and (S) is Philadelphia, 1716; Churchill's for (F) and (S) are 1692.

Gravell and George Miller, A Catalogue of Foreign Watermarks Found on Paper used in America, 1700–1835 (New York, NY: Garland Publishing, 1983); William Algernon Churchill, Watermarks in Paper in Holland, England, and France, etc. in the XVII and XVIII Centuries and their Interconnection (Amsterdam, Netherlands: Menno Hertzberger, 1935; rpt. Nieuwkoop: B. De Graff, 1990); Edward Heawood, Watermarks, mainly of the 17th and 18th Centuries (Amsterdam, Netherlands: Paper Publications Society, 1950; rpt. Hilversum, Netherlands: Paper Publications Society, 1981); and Alfred H. Shorter, Paper Mills and Paper Makers in England 1495–1800 (Hilversum, Netherlands: Paper Publications Society, 1957).

(I) and (Q) Arms of England

The WM in (I) and (Q) are closest to the ones depicted in Heawood (PL 76 # 451) and are by him dated to England, 1694; Churchill (PL CLXXXVIII # 212) assigns the date of 1690.

(A), (H), (K), (T), (W), (Y), (Aa), and (Ua) Fleur-de-Lis

The WM in (A) is closest in design to Heawood (PL 225 # 1662); those in (H) and (T) to Heawood (PL 224 # 1651); those in (K), (W), (Y), and (Aa) to Heawood (PL 226 # 1673 and PL 227 # 1627); those in (K), (Y), and (Aa) to Churchill (PL CCLXXXIX # 390 and PL CCXCI # 395). According to Heawood, the paper of (A) was made in London, between 1678–80, but (H) and (T) are without place or date. Churchill assigns a date of 1684 for (K), (W), (Y), (Aa), and (Ua) but without place of origin.

(B), (Pa) Fleur-de-Lis

The WM in (B) – only dimly visible on the ms page – looks similar to the shield in Heawood (PL 236 # 1746) but without crown above and wreath of lilies below the shield. The WM in (Pa) closely resembles those in the preceding category, except that it lacks shield and gown. It is closest in design to Heawood (PL 210 # 1528) and is dated to 1690 (London).

(G), (J), (P), (X), (Fa), and (Ta) Horn

The WM and CM in (G), (J), (P), (X), (Fa), and (Ta) are almost identical with the design in Gravell (p. 106 # 338) and in Heawood (PL 342 # 2688 and PL 357 # 2780), except that they all differ slightly in size: (X) is the largest one, measuring 90 mm by 55 mm. All others are somewhat smaller and measure from 55 mm by 35 mm for (P) and 65 mm by 44 mm for (G), (J), (Fa), and (Ta). The CM for all of them consists of the abbreviation HG – in as far as they are not lost in the gutter or through excision. Gravell assigns the date of 1693; Heawood dates them to 1686 and 1684, respectively.

(Ca) Coat of Arms / Arms of Amsterdam

(Ca) is the most elaborate WM in the entire bundle and is closest in appearance to Heawood (PL 73 # 437), Gravell (p. 79 # 225), and Churchill (PL III # 1). Whereas Heawood assigns the date “after 1694,” Gravell dates it to 1745 and Churchill to 1635. The design’s close similarity to others in this category allows for differing conclusions.

(Ha) and (Ka) Circles

WM (Ha) consist of three horizontally aligned circles that touch the circumference of the middle circle. It is closest to Heawood (PL 49 # 317) but without crucifix. (Ka) consists of three touching vertical circles topped by a three-pronged boxy-looking crown (like a trident). A cross – like that in Heawood (PL 46 # 250) – appears in the first circle, a capital letter L in the middle circle, and capital I in the bottom circle. The crown looks most like that in Heawood (PL 46 # 263).

(Ra) Coat of Arms

This WM consists of a crowned oval, a large cross inside the oval, and two spiky lions on the outside of the oval, facing each other. The design looks most like that in Heawood (PL 116 # 742) and Churchill (PL CDIV # 555) but without circles below the oval. Heawood dates this WM to 1678 (London).

(Ba) Hats

This WM consists of three interconnected u-shaped hats that most closely resemble the design in Heawood (PL 334 # 2599) and by him dated 1694 and made in Padua (Italy).

Alphabetical Countersigns

(D), (L), (N), (O), (R), (V), (Z), (Fa), (Ga), (La), (Na), and (Oa)

These CM are the initials of papermakers' names but difficult to match up with any of the above-named WM from which they are completely separated. The alphabetical CM – generally never larger than 15 mm by 20 mm – are HD in (D) and (R), HC in (J) and (Fa), VI in (L), GG in (N), G in (O), H in (V), DS in (Z), MC in (Ga), PC in (La), IVC in (Na), and AR in (Oa).

Symbolic and Incomplete Countersigns

(E), (Ea), (Ia), (Ja), (Ma) (Qa), (Sa)

The CM in (E) consists of the Greek capital lambda Λ (or upside-down capital V) and left-leaning D; the pointed end of Λ is linked with a short horizontal and long vertical line ending in what appears to be a heart-shaped design. The vertical line separates both capital letters. The CM in (Ea) consists of a rectangular box (8 mm by 50 mm) and contains one horn at each end and a cloverleaf without stem in the middle. CM (Ia) consists of the capital letters C and H; the letter C above the H is pierced by a single line resting on the crossbeam of the letter H. This design is closest to that in Heawood (PL 377 # 2943 and 2946). CM (Ja) is similar in design to the preceding one, except that an elongated letter P rests on the crossbeam of the letter H. This design is closest to Heawood (PL 376 # 2935). CM (Ma) consists of interlinked single-lined capital letters T and M (10 mm by 20 mm). CM (Qa) consists of a small crescent moon with what appears to be a chalice at its center. This moon-shaped design hovers over a capital letter X interlinked by two elbow-like lines on the right side. CM (Sa) looks like a rectangular numeral 3 resting on a short horizontal line.

2 Son of Shem and grandson of Noah, Arphaxad, also Arpachshad (Gen. 11:10–13) was born two years after the Flood and is the purported progenitor of the Chaldeans. Archbishop James Ussher's date agrees with that of the KJV, in Annals of the World (1658), p. 3, but the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus (c. 37–c. 100 CE) lists “twelve years after the Deluge” (Antiquities 1.6.4–5). See also ABD. On Ussher's chronology, see J. Barr, “Why the World” (1985).

3 Variouslly called שְׁמוֹת [Shemoth] or, וְאֵלֶּה שְׁמוֹת [ve'elleh shemoth] signifying “And these are the names” (the Hebrew opening phrase in Exod. 1:1), the second book of the Pentateuch is generally identified by its Latin title Exodus and signifies “the way out” or “departure” and thus by implication “redemption from captivity.” Mather here alludes to R. Moshe ben Nachman of Gerona (1194–1270), aka. Ramban and Nachmanides, whose Commentary on the Torah (2:626) refers to Exodus as “the Book of Redemption” /סֵפֶר הַגְּאֻלָּה/. See Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus (1:xiii). Mather's reference to Luke 9:31 alludes to Christ's death at Jerusalem (foretold by Moses and Elias), and allegorically, to the exodus of the redeemed from mortal sin through Christ's propitiation.

4 Mather mentions the legendary Busiris (Bousiris), son of Poseidon (Neptune) and Lysianassa, renowned for his cruelty to strangers. According to Apollodorus (Bibliotheca 2.5.11), Busiris sacrificed foreign visitors to Zeus, but was himself slain when Heracles (Hercules) arrived and vanquished the eponymous tyrant (Herodotus 2.45, 59, 61; Strabo 17.1.19; Diodorus Siculus 4.18.1, 4.27.2–3). him into Egypt, where in a little while, hee became a great Favourite of the King. Hee adds, "This Man was very skilful in the doing of Wonders, & was the first that found out the Interpretation of Dreams. The Scarcity which happened in Egypt, hee foresaw many Years before it came. The Land had perished, if the King had not, by his Advice, laid up Corn in Store. Hee was a Kind of Divine Oracle, and consulted by the World, because of his infinite Sagacitie, his Transcendent Wisdome, and Knowledge."⁵

Q. What might bee the True Name of the Egyptian King, who first began to afflict the Israelites?

A. Dr. Usher, thinks, that Chronology will well allow it to bee Ramesses Miamun; whose Name also seems to have given Appellation unto one of the Cities in building whereof the Israelites were employ'd.⁶

That learned Man also thinks, that Ramesses Miamun, might bee the same with Neptune; Mia having affinity with Moy, which, according to Josephus, in the ancient Egyptian Language, signifies, Water. Neptune is also said, to bee the Father of Busiris, who at this Time, Tyrannizing, about the River Nile, cruelly slew such Strangers as came anear him. His Name was also Amenophis; and the Story may well enough bee taken from their Cruelty to the Israelites.⁷ A. Gellius tells us, That the Poets call'd Bloody Men, by the Name of Neptune; as born of 5 Justin, i. e., the Roman historian Iustinus Marcus Iunianus (3rd c. CE) is principally remembered for his epitome of Gnaeus Pompeius Trogus's Historiae Philippicae et totius mundi originis et terrae situs, a history of the world (late 1st c. BCE). Numerous Latin and English editions were available throughout Mather's lifetime. The Latin original of the citation appears in Historiarum Philippicarum in Epitomen Redacti A. M. Iuniano Iustino (36.2.6–10), which Mather also quotes (at second hand) in his commentary on Gen. 4:24 (BA 1:525). See also Robert Cordington's popular History of Justin, fourth edition (1682), pp. 251–52.

6 There is no unanimity about the time period, name, or dynasty of the Egyptian king of the Mosaic exodus – as is apparent from the various appellations and dates employed by historians in Mather's time. According to Ussher's influential chronology Annales Veteris Testamentum (1650), pp. 17, 18, Pharaoh Ramesses Miamun (Armesses Miammoun) ruled for more than sixty-six years (AM 2427 to 2494; or BCE 1577–1511), the length of his reign being derived from an extant fragment of Manetho's Aegyptiaca (epitome) (fragments 50, 51, # 16), a history of ancient Egypt, by the Egyptian priest Manetho of Heliopolis (fl. 280 BCE). However, this fragment, surviving in Theophilus's Ad Autolyceus (3.19) appears to be based on a chronology by Josephus (Contra Apion 1.15.93) and identifies "Tethmosis" (Thutmose), one of the four pharaohs of that name in Dynasties XVIII/XIX (c. 1580–1293 BCE), as the king who expelled the Israelites. The Egyptian city named after Ramesses – Ussher believes – is "Raamsis" or "Ramestis" (Annales 18). Modern dates for Pharaoh Ramesses II's rulership over Egypt are given as BCE 1279–1212 (ABD, HBD).

7 Josephus (Contra Apion 1.15). The (untrustworthy) linguistic derivation of names is a close paraphrase of Ussher's Annales (18) and derives from Suidas (Suda), Lexicon (alphabetic letter mu, entry 1347), which associates the root Mōv [Moy], among the Egyptians, with τὸ ὕδωρ (the water). Neptune's paternity is acknowledged by Apollodorus (2.5.11). Mather thus links the mythical story of ruthless Busiris with the Egyptian pharaoh of the Exodus saga.

the Raging Sea.⁸ Behold then a sufficient Reason, why Ramesses Miamun should be called so! T'was for his Inhumanity to the Israelites, & their Children.

There is a famous Fragment of Manethon quoted by Josephus, which makes the Name of this King to be Timaus.⁹

Q. The marvellous Increase of the Israelites in Egypt? v. 7.

A. Because there are used Six Words in all, to express this Increase, tis concluded by some of the Hebrewes, that they brought forth Six Children at a Birth. Others conclude it, because the Word, Jischretzu, is used here; which is a Word whereby the Increase of Fishes, is expressed.¹⁰ (Gen. 1.20.) Theodoric Hacsban observes this, one of Baal-hatturim and Jalkut, & thinks, the Tradition is not to be rejected.¹¹

¹⁰ The six Hebrew words (Exod. 1:7) are פָּרוּ וַיִּשְׂרְצוּ וַיִּרְבוּ וַיִּעֲצְמוּ בְמֵאֵד מְאֹד – all linked with fertility: fruitful, swarm (prolific), become many, vast (numerous), exceedingly, mighty. מדרש תנחומא Midrash Tanchuma (Shemos 1:22) offers a superlative explication: Rabbi Yanai opines that the six words referring to fecundity signify sextuplets. Yet others argue that these six phrases suggest that Hebrew women “bore twelve children.” For “the multiples mentioned in the verse [Exod. 1:7] equals twelve.” The most renowned of Europe’s medieval rabbis, Solomon Jarchi, aka. R. Shlomo Yitzchaki (1040–1105), best known by his acronym RASHI, wrote an acclaimed commentary on the Tanakh (Hebrew Bible) and Talmud. According to Rashi’s reading of Midrash Rabbah (Exodus 1:8), “each [Hebrew] woman bore six at one birth.” (See also Rashi’s Commentarius Hebraicus [1710], 399–400). This hyperbolic explanation was not unanimously accepted by any means (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:5–5a). The Hebrew word יִשְׂרָצוּ (Gen. 1:20) swarm, teem, suggesting abundance [Strong’s # B10679], is here linked with the phrase וַיִּשְׂרְצוּ [wayYishretzu] and teeming (Exod. 1:7). The fishlike spawning or multiplication of Jacob’s offspring in Egypt is also asserted by the French Roman Catholic Hebrew scholar Franciscus Vatablus (c. 1485–1547), in his Biblia Sacra ... Annotationibus [1546] (1729), on Exod. 1:7: “Vox Hebraea propriè de piscibus dicitur qui foetum edunt multiplicem & numerosum” (p. 77). The Dutch magistrate and professor of jurisprudence at Franeker, Paulus Busius, aka. Buis (c. 1565–1671), affirmatively cites Pliny (Naturalis Historia 7.3.33–34) and Caius Julius Solinus (De mirabilibus mundi libri lvii (1.50) that septuplets were born at a single birth, in Busius, Commentarii in Pandectas D. Justiniani (1614). Pliny believes that “drinking the water of the Nile causes fecundity” (Naturalis Historia 7.3.33). In his commentary on Exod. 12:37, Mather calculates how the Israelites might have multiplied during their residence in Egypt.

Q. How could the Egyptians, pretend the Israelites, to be more & mightier than they? v. 9.

A. More in Proportion, And, q.d. more than we can safely allow of. So, as Mr. Pyles observes, the Word, Mimennu, may be justly translated.¹⁵

Sefer Jalcut, attributed to R. Shimon HaDarshan of Frankfurt (13th c.), and on Aristotle's De Historia animalium (7.5), appear in Hackspan's Notarum (1:273–274, 276).

¹² The Greek philosopher Aristotle (BCE 384–322) similarly describes the fruitfulness of Egyptian women, who sometimes gave birth to three or four children at a time. To top it all off, he relates that “There was once a certain woman who had twenty children at four births; each time she had five, and most of them grew up” (History of Animals 7.5; 584b, line 35). The German Jesuit scientist Caspar Schottus (1609–66) relates the prolific story of Helienora Salviata, spouse of the Florentine citizen Bartholomaeus Friscobaldus, in his popular collection of grotesquely shaped animals and humans Physica Curiosae (1662), lib. 3, cap. 29, p. 470.

¹⁴ Abarbanel argues that the four adjectives in the Torah indicate the prolific birth rate of the Israelites: “When it tells us they were ‘fruitful,’ it means that miraculously, there weren’t any barren or childless couples among them. They were like a fruitbearing tree that produces its fruit with guaranteed reliability – year in year out. ‘They teemed’ ... means, they swarmed and they produced multiple births.” According to Midrash Yilamdeinu, “it was not uncommon for them to have sextuplets” yet without any diminution of body or health as it often happens with children of multiple birth. “They increased” means, “these babies did not die prematurely[;] they were not victims of a high mortality rate.” Lastly, “they became very strong,” which means, they grew up to be strong and robust, with good health and an unusual resistance to disease and sickness,” thus filling the land (Selected Commentaries: Shemos/Exodus 2:33, 34). Simon Patrick (Exodus, pp. 3–5) is Mather’s primary source for his commentary Exod. 1:7, but Patrick, too, relies on the standard sources of his predecessors.

Q. Wee find the Name Pharaoh, to bee the Royal Name of Egypt, or the Name common to the Kings of that Countrey: What may bee the true original Etymology of that Name? v. 11.

A. Not that, I trow, which ha's been commonly given. I suppose פרעה to come from the Word פרע which signifies, To bee at perfect Liberty.¹⁶ 'Tis that whereto Kings in all Ages have pretended, especially, when by Conquests they have Enslaved others. When Samuel described unto Israel, the משפט המלך or Jus Regis, as it was then exercised by the Kings of other Nations, hee painted it out with all the Colours, of the most Absolute & Arbitrary Liberty.¹⁷ Herodotus also, and Plutarch will sufficiently expound unto us, those Passages of Samuel.¹⁸ From hence might proceed, that Custome of, Nourishing Long Hair, whereby Kings signifies that the Israelites were “Not more numerous or stronger than all the Egyptians; but more in proportion than we [Egyptians]; or more than is safe for us [Egyptians] to allow of” (Paraphrase 1:7n, second series of pagination). Pyle appears to rely on Abarbanel's argument that Mimennu “does not mean that the People of Israel were more numerous than the Egyptians,” only “physically taller and stronger than the Egyptians” (Selected Commentary: Shemos/Exodus 2:36). The multiplication of the Israelites was discussed by all the major commentators of the early modern period, who also guesstimate their numbers, in Poole (Synopsis Criticorum 1:317–18, and Works 4:18–21, 23).

did anciently distinguish themselves; whereof you may Read, Suetonius, on Vespasian.¹⁹ And it is worth observing, That indeed, the very Name, Pharaoh, carries Long-Hair, in the Signification of it; & is as much as to say, A Long Hair'd Man. Consult the Hebrew Text, in Deut. 32.42. מֵרָאשׁ פְּרָעוֹת אוֹיֵב De capite comatorum Inimici; and in Ezek. 44.20. and you'll see the Evidence of what I say.²⁰ If all this will not satisfy, I may tell you, That in the Arabian Dialect, Pharoh, denotes the Top, or Heighth of any thing. And thus, an High Spy-Tower, was a Pharos, in the Language of the Egyptians. Thus also the Name agrees well, with the Highest Man of a Kingdome.²¹

Q. The City of Pithom which the Israelites built for Pharaoh? v. 11.

A. Bochart supposes, it may be the City, which Herodotus calls, πατουμος. But that was a City of Arabia.²² Sir John Marshams Conjecture is more probable; That it was Pelusium, the most ancient fortified Place in Egypt; called by Ezekiel; [ch. 30.15.] The Strength of Egypt; and by Suidas long after, κλεις του Αιγυπτου,²³ The Key of Egypt; Because it was the Inlett from Syria, into his Countrey. This was the Reason, as Diodorus tells us, that they most of all fortified, το πελουσιακον στομα.²⁴ This agrees with the Signification of Pithom, if D. Chytraeus guess right;

²¹ The Pharos (lighthouse) of Alexandria is perhaps the best example. See Josephus, Wars (4.10.5).

²³ The renowned English chronologer Sir John Marsham (1602–85) identifies the Mosaic Pithom with Pelusium, in his Chronicus Canon (1672), Seculum VIII, p. 105. Marsham here relies on Manetho's excerpt in Josephus Flavius's Contra Apion (1.32–33); Josephus Flavius associates the city Avaris with Pelusium. See also BA 1:1104. Suidas (Suda), Lexicon (alphabetic letter pi entry 1516, line 1) has κλεις της Αιγύπτου. Nota Bene: Generally, Mather does not bother with Greek diacritics or breathing marks – even if his source text does supply them. As he argues in his Manuductio ad Ministerium (1726), “I can't encourage you [students of theology], to throw away much Time, upon an Accurate Skill in the Greek Accents: But rather wholly to drop them, when your Quill comes to convey any Greek into your Pages. ... One shall hardly find any Accents on the Greek, in any Manuscripts written above Eight Ages [800 years] ago: Nor was the Invention of the Accents, with which our Greek is now encumbered, of any other than a Musical Intention” (29–30).

Q. Pray, give us the Hebrew Chronology, relating to the Time of Israels Continuance in Egypt, and Deliverance from it? v. 14.

A. Behold, how the Seder Olam expresses the Matter!²⁷

When Jacob returned out of Mesopotamia, his Wife Rachel died, being about Thirty Six Years of Age. Leah lived until Forty Four. They were both of them, Twenty Two, when they married unto Jacob; and supposed to be Twins. When Jacob returned unto Isaac his Father, then Joseph was Nine Years old. He was at the Age of Seventeen, when sold into Egypt; and that Year Leah died. He was Twelve Months a Servant unto Potiphar, and he was Twelve Years a Prisoner. In the Thirtieth Year of his Age, he was brought before Pharaoh, and in that Year his Grandfather Isaac died. Seven Years of Plenty Rolled away. In the Second Year of the Famine, came Jacob unto him in Egypt; when he was Thirty Nine Years old. Joseph was the first who Dyed of all his Brethren, as tis intimated, Exod. 1.6. Joseph died, and all his Brethren. He was then One hundred and Ten Years old. Levi lived the longest of them all; even to the Age of One hundred & Thirty Seven. And the Children of Israel did not fall under Affliction as long as he lived. From the Death of Levi, to the Coming out from Egypt, there passed

²⁶ See Mather’s commentary on Gen. 28:14 (BA 1:1018) and on Isa. 54:9 (BA 5:818). St. Augustine’s City of God (18.7) argues that the Israelites “multiplied with God-given fertility” (NPNFi 2:364).

²⁷ A Hebrew chronology dating to the second century CE, the Seder Olam Rabbah [The Long Order of the World], a midrashic chronology traditionally attributed to R. Yose ben Halaftha (c. 160 CE), describes the events from the creation to the time of the Roman Emperor Hadrian (76–138 CE). The first Hebrew edition was published in Mantua, 1513; a dual-language Hebrew-Latin edition, translated by Gilbert Genebrard, was printed in Paris, in 1577. Mather translates an excerpt from Johannes Meyer’s dual-language edition סדר עולם רבא וזוטא Seder ‘Olam raba ve-Seder ‘Olam zuta, sive Chronicon Hebraeorum (1699), cap. 2, pp. 4–9, a text which went through several editions. Slight variations occur in the lifespans assigned to Leah who, according to Gilbert Genebrard’s translation Chronologia Hebraeorum Maior quae Seder Olam Rabba Inscriptur (1578), cap. 2, p. 16, died at age 46.

Q. Of what Nation were the Hebrew Midwives? v. 15.

A. The learned Jewish Historian and Antiquary, deservedly judges them to be Egyptians.²⁹ And from several Circumstances in the Sacred Story, we may gather, that they were of the Egyptian Nation. Tho' they are call'd Hebrew Midwives, yett the Reason of the Denomination seems only to be, because, they did the Office of Midwives to the Hebrew Women. For such as these now to be struck with the Fear of God, was the remarkable Work of God!

What they Report of the Hebrew Women, was doubtless a Truth. An Officious Lye is by no means to be charged upon them.³⁰

Q. What were the Houses, which the Lord made for the Midwives, that feared Him? v. 21.

A. I don't know, that it is any where said, that Hee made Them Any: Calvin thinks, tis not said in the first Chapter of Exodus, where you think, you find it.

³⁰ The commentators synopsized in Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:319–20) were evenly divided on the identity of the midwives. Nicholas de Lyra, André Rivet, Siméon Marotte de Muis (Muisius) argue they were Hebrews; however, Giovanni Steffano Menochius, Jerome Olivier (Oleaster), and Isaac ben Judah Abarbanel believe they were Egyptian since they were to carry out Pharaoh's orders: "They were called Hebrew midwives not because they were Hebrew," Abarbanel insists, "for, how could Pharaoh trust Jewish midwives to act with such cruelty against their own sisters? ... So we should not translate [מילדת העברית] 'Meyaldos Haivriyos' as Hebrew midwives, but we should translate it as midwives of the Hebrews, and it means the Egyptian midwives [who were generally called Shifra and Puah] who helped out with the Hebrew women during childbirth, just as it says later 'when you deliver the Hebrew women' and it was to these Egyptian midwives that Pharaoh directed his words" (Selected Commentaries: Shemos/Exodus 2:42). See also Poole, Works (4:30–32).

If you look into the Original, you'll see, that, [THEM] is of the Masculine Gender, where tis said, God made Them Houses. Whence, except you'l absurdly make Man-Midwives of them, you cannot make the Midwives the Owners of the Houses.³¹

It remains then, that wee explain this Clause, God made them Houses, from the præceding Verse, The People multiplied, & waxed very mighty. So that, The Fear of God, which caused the Midwives to contribute what they could, unto the Præserva-tion of the Israelitish Issue, procured large Families for the People, and so the Lord Built the People Houses.

But then, Patrick answers, Tis not unusual in Scripture, when the Speech is of Women, to use the Masculine Gender. Compare, Ruth. I.8. Yea, do but go to the next Chapter to this. Exod. II.17.³²

God gave these Midwives a Numerous Offspring.

Their Courage rendered them worthy of the Masculine Gender.

Monsr. Saurins Gloss, is, Because they saved the Lives of the Hebrew Children, GOD increased the Number of Theirs.³³

³¹ Calvin (Commentary on the Four Last Books 1:36–37) insists that the pronoun “them” here refers to the Israelites as a whole, not the midwives. However, the standard commentators in Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:320–21) and Works (4:35–39) are deeply divided on this issue, some arguing that special houses for pregnant women were established to ensure that Pharaoh’s command to keep alive only female babies were obeyed by the midwives. Mather’s terse rejection of the absurd notion of “Man-Midwives” reflects the changing perceptions and professional standards on midwifery in the eighteenth century. It similarly touched Lawrence Sterne’s Shandean funny bone in The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy (1759), vol. 1, ch. 18. For a discussion of the rise of male-midwives in eighteenth-century England, see Jean Donnison’s Midwives and Medical Men (1988).

³² Patrick, on Exod. 1:21 (Exodus 15).

³³ Mather greatly appreciates the scholarship of Jacques Saurin (1677–1730), Huguenot theologian and preacher in London and later in The Hague. A revised English translation of the two-volume French original (1720) served Mather throughout his Biblia commentary on the Pentateuch. In the present instance, Mather cites from Saurin’s Dissertations, Historical, Critical, Theological and Moral (1723), “Dissertation XLIII” (1:354). The “List of those who have already Subscribed to this Work,” following the translator’s address “To The Reader,” indexes “The Rev. Dr. Cotton Mather of New England” as one of the subscribers to the 1723 edition of Saurin’s work.

Q. We find Amram the Grandson of Levi, to have married Jochebed the Daughter of Levi, his Fathers Sister? v. 1.

A. So ingenuous was Moses, as not to conceal this, tho' it might not be for his Credit, in future Ages.

Possibly Jochebed was born to Levi in his old Age & might be younger than her Nephew Amram. She might be but his Half-Sister.

Besides, as Patrick observes, a *Gran\{d\}*daughter may be called a Daughter. They are commonly called so. Thus, Jochebed may be only the Cosen of Amram; however called a Sister. So all Objections against the Marriage do vanish.¹ But Usher maintains against Scaliger & Pererius, that she was really Levi's Daughter, & Amrams Aunt.²

Q. The Daughter of Pharaoh.] What might be her Name? v. 5.³

A. She is called, Thermutis, by Josephus. But by Artapanus in Eusebius's Præparatio Evangelica she is called, Meris, or, Merris. And this is her Name (as Jacobus Cappellus observes) in the Fasti Siculi. The same Artapanus reports, that she was married unto Cenephres, King of the Countrey above Memphis; but had no Child by him.⁴ Clemens of Alexandria reports the same; & saies not only that she

1 Extracted from Patrick's commentary on Exod. 2:1 (Exodus 17–18). The close consanguinity between Amram and his aunt Jochebed raised some eyebrows, and Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:320–21) and Works (4:41–42) list the standard Reformation and post-Reformation commentators who took sides in the debate. John Selden argues that intermarriages between siblings and other close relatives were widely practiced before the Law was given, in De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 5, cap. 9, pp. 583–84. On the significance of Selden's De Jure Naturali, see J. P. Rosenblatt (158–81).

2 Usher, in his Annals of the World (11–12) and Chronologia Sacra (cap. 11, pp. 179–181), avers Amram married his aunt, but the most learned man of his time, the Franco-Dutch scholar Joseph Justus Scaliger (1540–1609), appears to disagree, in Animadversiones in Chronologica Eusebii, included in his magnificent Thesaurus Temporum (1658), second series of pagination (p. 32). The learned Spanish Jesuit Benedictus Pererius (1535–1610) asserts that Moses' mother Jochebed was not Levi's daughter, but the daughter of Levi's brother. Hence Amram married his uncle's daughter, or first cousin. The debate is skillfully outlined in Pererius's first disputation on Exod. ch. 2: "Prima Disputatio: De Mosis parentibus Amram & Jochebed," in his Primus Tomus Selectarum Disputationum Sacram Scripturam: Exodi, editio tertia (1607), pp. 33–36. See also Mather's annotation on Exod. 6:20 (below).

3 Mather erroneously lists v. 2. Here silently corrected.

4 Patrick's commentary on Exod. 2:5 (Exodus 20–21). Josephus (Antiquities 2.9.5). Bishop of Caesarea, Eusebius Pamphilus (c. 265–c. 341), in Praeparatio evangelica (9.27.432a), quotes from the Jewish historian Artapanus of Alexandria (3rd–2nd c. BCE), whose work survives in extracts in Eusebius and Clement of Alexandria. Pharaoh's daughter was married to Cenephres, "king of the regions above Memphis" (as Eusebius relates). The French Orientalist and professor of theology at Sedan, Jacobus Cappellus (1570–1624), in Historia sacra et exotica ab Adamo was a married Woman, but also that she had long been childless in that State, τεκνον δε επιθυμουσα: *Very desirous to have a Child.*⁵

Take another Curiosity, by the way; Moses was hid at his Birth, lest he should be murdered; And he was hid at his Death, lest he should be worshipped.

We may add; There is a Tradition mention'd by Clemens of Alexandria, in his first Book of Stromes; That the Parents of Moses, at his being circumcised, putt on him the Name of Joachim; which signifies, The Resurrection of the Lord; foretelling that by him God would Raise & Revive & Restore His People. Moses also is of an Active Signification; *One who drawes out of the Water.*⁶

Q. The Egyptian Smiting the Hebrew, who, and why? v. 11.⁷

A. The Life of Moses, in Hebrew; and, Schalsch Hakkabalah, report, that this Egyptian had broken the Hebrewes House, & bound him, & ravished his Wife, and endeavoured now to murder him. This looks like a Tale; but (as Dr. Patrick observes;) it is a little better told by the Author of Shemoth Rabbah, & others mentioned by Mr. Selden; That this Egyptian was one of the Taskmasters, who call'd this Man out of his Bed in the Night, to go to Work, & then took this Opportunity to slip into it, & lye with Shelomith his Wife, who took him for her Husband. The plainest Account of all is Philo's; That some of Pharaohs Officers, little differing from the most furious Beasts, not at all mollified, but more exasperated by Entreaties, one of those Violent fellows, fell in a most outrageous Manner upon an Hebrew, because he did not dispatch his Work as fast as he would have had him, & beat him, till he had almost killed him.⁸

usque ad Augustum (cap. "Israelitæ in Ægypto," p. 75), agrees, arguing that "Amenophis filia, quæ Mosis aluit, in Fastis Siculis vocatur Merris," i. e., Amenophis's daughter, who suckled Moses, was called Merris." Cappellus dates the event to A. M. 2388, but acknowledges Eusebius as his source. See also BA 1:1111n, 1149, 1151n.

⁷ Mather's "Answer" is extracted from Patrick's commentary on Exod. 2:11 (Exodus 27).

Q. How can Moses's Action, in killing the Egyptian be defended? v. 12.

A. The Hebrewes generally say, Moses kill'd him only with the Word of his Mouth, as Peter did Ananias and Sapphira. Clemens of Alexandria has this Tradition.¹⁰

Maimonides flies to a Divine Impulse; it being the first Degree of Prophecy, to be animated by God, unto some Heroic Enterprise. And Stephen seems to countenance this Thought.¹¹

1587), fol. 5.2, which contains among other things a genealogical history from the time of the Mosaic Lawgiver to the year 1587 CE. However, this history is frequently faulted for its many errors (JE). Both Rashi, Ibn Yahya, and their followers ultimately derive this story from the midrashic original found in "Shemoth Rabbah," i.e., Exodus Rabbah (1:28). Mather's source (via Patrick) is John Selden's magisterial De Synedriis (1653), lib. 2, cap. 1, pp. 5–6. Philo Judaeus, On the Life of Moses I (8.42–44), in Works (463), only recounts the cruelty of the Egyptian taskmaster, nothing however, of the midrashic story of Shelomith or that of her husband.

¹⁰ This and the following paragraph are synopses of Patrick on Exod. 2:12 (Exodus 28). The manner of slaying the Egyptian has engaged many commentators over the centuries. According to Exodus Rabbah 1:29, "Moses took counsel with the angels and said to them: 'This man deserves death.' They [angels] agreed." R. Abyathar has Moses kill him with his fist. Others argue with a "clay shovel and cracked his skull." Yet other rabbinic commentators insist that Moses "pronounced God's name against him [the Egyptian] and thus slew him" – all in Midrash Rabbah (Exodus 1:29). The Jerusalem Targum on Exodus 2 (Etheridge 1:447) does mention that "the Holy Spirit" revealed to Moses that "no proselyte [i.e. righteous person] would ever spring from that Misraite [taskmaster]; and he killed him, and hid him in the sand." The manner of death, however, remains unclear. Rashi (Jarchi) and Ramban – following Exodus Rabbah – agree that Moses slew the Egyptian "by merely pronouncing the Tetragrammaton" יהוה, God's ineffable name; Midrash Tanchuma offers much the same: "Some say he killed him with a mud-rake that he picked up and beat out his brains. Others say that he pronounced the Ineffable Name and killed him" (Metsudah Midrash Tanchuma: Shemos I (3:35). Alas, Ibn Ezra begs to differ, claiming, "those who say that 'he struck down the Egyptian' by means of the Tetragrammaton are incorrect, as I shall explain. He struck him with a stone or with a spear" (Jarchi on Exod. 2:14, in Commentarius Hebraicus 411; Nachmanides, Commentary 2:18; Ibn Ezra, JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot: Exodus 2:12). Be that as it may, St. Peter similarly punished Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1–11) for lying about their bequest, a tradition also related by Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.23.154, subsec. 1), who explains that "the mystics say that he [Moses] slew the Egyptian by a word only; as, certainly, Peter in the Acts is related to have slain by speech those who appropriated part of the price of the field, and lied [Acts 5:1]" (Stromata 1.23, in ANF 2:335).

Q. Moses Flying to dwell in the Land of Midian, after his Appearing to Redeem Israel: What Remark may be made upon it? v. 15.

A. It is a marvellous Passage of a Jew, in Midrasch Ruth, which I wish, his whole Nation would think of. R. Berachia dixit; Sicut Redemptor primus, ita Redemptor ultimus. Sicut Redemptor primus, id est, Moyses Revelebatur, et rursus occultabatur ab eis, et demum Revelatus est; ita Redemptor ultimus, id est, Messias.¹³

The Quæstion then being putt, How long? R. Tanchuma, answers, Till the End of the Forty Five Years, which make 1290, in Daniel to arise unto 2335.¹⁴ that his fellow Israelites somehow grasped that he was the one to deliver them from bondage: “but they understood not” (Acts 7:25). On Maimonides, see S. Stroumsa, Maimonides in His World (2009).

12 The renowned Dutch jurist, philosopher, and Arminian theologian Hugo Grotius, aka. Hugo de Groot (1583–1645), asserts in his annotations on Acts 7:24 that “the law of nature gives the right to the innocent as well as [to those who] protect the innocent against the one harming.” Mather here cites Grotius, Annotationes ad Acta Apostolorum (cap. 7:24), in Opera Omnia Theologica (1679), tomi II, volume I, p. 595. See also De Iure Belli ac Pacis (lib. 2, cap. 20, sec. 8), where Grotius argues on the basis of Num. 35:19, that the Mosaic talion law allows a man to revenge the injustice done to his kinsman (Rights of War and Peace 2:971). On Hugo Grotius as a significant biblical exegete, see especially Henning Graf Reventlow’s Epochen der Bibelauslegung: Band III Renaissance Reformation Humanismus (1997), 3:211–25; or in J. O. Duke’s English translation of Reventlow’s History of Biblical Interpretation (2010), 3:209–23.

13 Mather’s Latin citation from Midrash Rabbah (Ruth V:6) is most likely quoted at second hand from Pugio Fidei adversus Mauros et Judæos (1651), Pars 3, dist. 3, cap. 16, sec. 25, p. 668, by Raimundus Martinus (c. 1220–c. 1284), a Dominican theologian and Medieval Orientalist of Catalonia. Martinus’s Pugio Fidei (i.e., Dagger of Faith) is a Latin polemic against Judaism and Islam and draws at great length on the Talmud, Midrash, and Cabbala (see also BA 1:822–23). The Latin citation – adapted from Midrash Ruth (V:6) – can be rendered as follows: “R. Berachia [Berekiah] said [in the name of R. Levi:], ‘Just as the first Redeemer, so will be the greatest [i.e., last]. Just as the first Redeemer, who is Moses, revealed himself and again was hidden from them, so the last Redeemer, who is the Messiah, will finally be revealed to them, and then be hidden from them.’”

14 Mather’s “2335” years appears to be a slip of his pen, for if 45 years are added to Daniel’s 1290, the sum total is 1335 (Dan. 12:11–12). Soncino Midrash Ruth (V:6) supplies conflicting answers about the length of the Redeemer’s hiding: “The future Redeemer will be like the former Redeemer [Moses]. Just as the former Redeemer revealed himself and later was hidden from them (and how long was he hidden? Three months, as it is said, And they met Moses and Aaron [Ex. V, 20]1), so the future Redeemer will be revealed to them, and then be hidden from them. And how long will he be hidden? R. Tanchuma, in the name of the Rabbis, said: Forty-five days, as it is said, And from the time that the continual burnt offering shall be taken away ... there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Happy is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand and three hundred and five and thirty days (Dan. XII, 11–12).” Midrash

Q. What Pharaoh was he, that Moses fled from? v. 15.

A. Eusebius calls him, Orus, (who succeeded Amenophis, in whose Reign Moses was born,) & he is said to have Reigned Two and Forty Years.

After him, Eusebius makes Acenceres to Reign; and after him Achoris. Both of which died, before Moses returned into Egypt.¹⁵

Q. How may that Expression be taken, The Priest of Midian? v. 16.¹⁶

A. The Word, Cohen, indifferently signifies, either a Priest, or a Prince. Of old, the latter. See Job. XII.19. Afterwards, the Sons of David, are called, Cohenim. [2. Sam. VIII.18. with 1. Chron. XVIII.17.] Compare, 2. Sam. XX.26.

This Gentleman, was probably a Ruler of some one Province in Midian;

Dr. Patrick thinks, it may best be rendred, A Prince of Midian.¹⁷

But of old, the Princes executed the Priesthood also. Plato observes, They did it among the Egyptians. The Consuls and Emperours of Rome, were ambitious of the Dignity.

Jarchi, saies, The Word, Cohen, denotes a Divine Ministry or Function, except where there is an Addition of some particular Principality to it; as, Cohen of Midian; and Cohen of On; and there it signifies, a Prince, tho' a Priesthood might be joined with it.¹⁸

Tanchuma (Tanḥuma), a homiletic midrash on the Torah attributed to the Palestinian scholar R. Tanchuma bar Abba (c. 350 CE), was first published in Constantinople in 1522, a revised edition appeared in Venice (1545) and Mantua (1563). Perhaps due to a printer's error, this text has Moses remain in Midian only "for twenty years, until Yisroel was worthy of redemption," in Metsudah Midrash Tanchuma: Shemos I (3:38). The prophetic timetable (Dan. 12:11–12) referred to here and in Midrash Ruth (V:6) was of great significance to all millennialists (like Mather), who were keen on deciphering God's redemptive chronology. See especially Mather's lengthy commentary on Dan. 12:7ff [BA 6] and R. Smolinski, "When Shall These Things Be?" in Threefold Paradise (60–78).

¹⁷ Patrick (Exodus 32).

¹⁸ Extracted from Selden (De Synedriis, lib. 1, cap. 16, pp. 648–49), the passage from Jarchi (Rashi) on Gen. 47:22 is by Selden quoted in Hebrew and translated into Latin. See Jarchi's

Artapanus mentioning Moses's Flight, saies, He came to Raguel, τῷ τῶν τοσῶν Ἀρχόντι, The Ruler of those Parts. The Jewes in their German Translation of the Bible, call him, HEER, Lord of Midian.¹⁹

It is most likely, he was no Idolater, but a Worshipper of the True God.

Commentarius Hebraicus (361). See also Rashi on Gen. 47:22, Gen. 41:45 (!) and Exod. 2:16, 19:6, in Mikraoth Gedoloth: Genesis 3:595, 3:523(!) and Exodus 1:23^b and 1:285). Rashi's annotation is based on Exodus Rabbah (1:32) and explains that Jethro as a "Cohen Midian" was "the most prominent among them [Midianite chiefs], but because Jethro "had abandoned idolatry, so they banned him from [living with] them (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:23^b). Ibn Ezra's explication is much the same, arguing that "the term kohen (priest) in Scripture refers to one who ministers either to the Lord or before an idol" (Commentary: Exodus 46).

Q. What was the Mystery exhibited unto Moses, in the Burning Bush? v. 2.¹

A. I will give it you, first from the Jews themselves. In elle Shemoth Rabba, S. 3. we read; Quærè rem istam Mosis ostendit Deus, S. B. 'Quia *Moses in Corde suo cogitavit; Fortè Ægyptij funditus perdent Israelitas. Proptere à Deus S. B. ostendit ei Ignem ardentem et non consumentem; Dixitque ei, Quemadmodum Rubus iste, in Igne ardet, et non consumitur; sic Ægyptis Israelitas consumere non possunt.*²

But I will now give it you in the Language of Christianitie.³

The State of the Church, which was then a Bush in the Fire of sore Distresses, but was to outlive all the Flames of this Distressing Fire.

The Church of God, is fitly compared unto a Bush, for the Lowness, the Meanness, the Contempt, which commonly attends it. Hence tis compared unto a Myrtle-Grove. [Zech. 1.8.] Myrtles are but low and mean Shrubs. And it is fitly compared unto a Bush, because tis a Dangerous Thing, for any to fall foul on it. The Hebrew Word, for a Bush here, notes one that had Prickles on it; & wee are told by Travellers, the Bushes hereabouts are so prickly, that if a Bird light on one of them, hee can hardly {e}scape without a Deplumation. Compare Act. 9.5.⁴

1 In his "Note Book of Authors and Texts Throughout the Bible" (1720), AAS, Mather Family Papers (1613–1728), Octavo Vol. # 50, Mather records as his source for Exod. 3: "v. 2, 3 &c Owen on ye Glory of Christ, p. 48." The reference is to XPICTOAOIOLA, Or, A Declaration of the Glorious Mystery of the Person of Christ (1679), ch. 16, pp. 229–30, by the English Puritan divine John Owen. Here, Owen associates the burning bush episode (Exod. 3:2–3), the presence of God's Shechinah, with the glory of Christ. See also Owen's Works (1721), part 1, ch. 16, p. 120.

2 Midrash Rabbah (Exodus II:5), "In this Shemosh Rabba, sec. 3, we read, 'Why did God S.[anctus] B.[enedictus], the Holy One, show Moses such a thing? Because Moses contemplated in his heart that the Egyptians, perchance, might destroy the Israelites. That is why God S. B. [the Holy One] showed him a fire which burnt but did not consume; and He said to him, Just as the bush is burning and is not consumed, so the Egyptians will not be able to consume the Israelites.'"

3 Mather's Christological reading of the burning bush is perfectly consistent with his efforts to extract hidden or arcane meaning from biblical types. His uncle's work on typology, Samuel Mather's Figures or Types (1705), pp. 132, 133, 326 may well have guided him here as it did in previous and subsequent cases. See Appendix A.

4 The English traveler and later bishop of Ossory and Meath (Ireland), Richard Pococke (1704–1765) relates his eyewitness account of many biblical sites he visited during his sojourns in Egypt and Palestine (1738–1740). His observations are published in his two-volume Description of the East and Some Other Countries (1743–1745). Relevant for our purposes here is Pococke's description of the bramble bush at the foot of Mt. Horeb, the purported site of Moses' burning bush (Exod. 3:1–4). Noteworthy is that Pococke clearly separates biblical archaeology from pious motives and wishful thinking, as local monks point to the brambly shrubs planted thereabouts (Description of the East [1743], vol. 1, bk. 3, ch. 3, pp. 143–46, 150–51).

But then, there is the Fire of much Affliction, which the Church of our Lord must encounter withal. Hence, 1. Pet. 4.12. Yea, and of Contention too. Hence, Prov. 26.19, 20.

Yett the Church out-lives all. The Presence of the Lord Jesus Christ (the Angel here, who is, The Lord,) with His Church, is its Grand Praservative. Consider, Deut. 33.16. and Dan. 3.25.⁵

Call in Isa. LXIII.9. to the Meditations on this Noble Subject.

Dr. Patrick thinks, The Fire in the Bush here, was also an Intimation, That the Lord would meet with the Israelites in this Place, & give them His Law, in Fire, & Lightning; & yett not consume them. For this was the Place, where the Lord afterwards delivered the Law unto them. The Mount was called, Sinai, as the Jewes tell us, in Pirke Elieser, from this Bush. The Name signifies, A Thorn-bush. Before this, it was called, Horeb, from its Drieness & Barrenness.⁶

Q. Is there any further, and higher Mystery, of the Burning Bush, to bee considered? v. 2.

A. The Ancients considered, it, as a Figure of the Messiah, wherein the Bush of His Humanity, is possessed, & yett not consumed, by His Divinity, which is a Consuming Fire.⁷

Thus Gregories Gloss upon it, is; Per succensum Rubum ostensum est, quod ex illo populo exiret, qui Igne Deitatis Carnis nostræ Naturam, quasi Rubi Spinam

5 Mather's Christological reading is ultimately an adaptation of a similar allegory, which can be found in Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 40). Its putative author, Rabbi Eliezer, son of Hyrkanus (1st c. CE), relates the fire of the burning bush to the condition of Israel: "But the fire refers to Israel, who are compared to fire, as it is said, 'And the house of Jacob shall be a fire' (Obad. 18). The thorn-bush refers to the nations of the world, who are compared to thorns and thistles. He [God] said to him [Moses]: Likewise shall Israel be in the midst of the nations. The fire of Israel shall not consume the nations, who are compared to thorns and thistles; but the nations of the world shall extinguish the flames of Israel – (these flames) are the words of the Torah. But in the future that is to come the fire of Israel will consume all the nations, who are compared to thorns and thistles, as it is said, 'And the peoples shall be as the burnings of lime' (Isa. xxxiii.12)" (pp. 316–17).

6 Mather, via Patrick on Exod. 3:2 (Exodus 41–42), draws on פרקי רבי אליעזר Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer (1644), cap. 41, p. 108, relating that Horeb חֲרֵב [choreb], signifying "desert," would be named Sinai סִינַי [Cinyay] because of the word for the burning bush סִנָּה [cenah]. See also the Friedlander translation of Pirke (ch. 41, p. 321).

7 Acts 7:30–35. In his Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1705), pp. 132, 133, 326, Samuel Mather (1626–1671), Cotton Mather's uncle and eldest son of Richard Mather of Dorchester, graduated from Harvard in 1643, became chaplain at Magdalen College (Oxford) and, subsequently, preacher at St. Nicholas, in Dublin, Ireland. Samuel Mather is mostly remembered for his collection of sermons on OT typology, posthumously published as Figures or Types of the Old Testament (Dublin, 1683) and twice reprinted thereafter. My citation references are to the second edition, published in London (1705).

I will add the emphatical Words of Bernard. *Scrutare Scripturas, et vide quàm pulchrè et concordanter, Sanctorum mirè-facta, et mystica dicta sibi invicem concinunt, et hoc unum de Virgine, et in Virgine factum Miraculum, quot Miracula prævenerunt; quot Oracula promiserunt. Quod enim Moysi in Igne monstratum est, Aaron in Virgâ et Flore, Gedeoni in Vellere et Rore; hoc apertè vidit Solomon, in Forti mulieri, et pretio ejus; Apertius præcinit Jeremias de Fæminâ et Viro; Apertissimè Esaias de Virgine et Deo: et Gabriel tandem exhibuit ipsam Virginem Salutando.*⁹

Q. Why would the Lord chuse a little Bush, rather than a Plant of greater Figure, therein to exhibit himself?

A. Athanasius answers this Quæstion so; Our Lord would chuse a Bush, as tis thought by some, for its being a Plant, which would not afford a Stock, out of which it should be possible for the Jewes to shape an Idol. But hee adds, it might be ὅτι μέλλει ἐν τῇ ἐξακανθισάσῃ ἡμῶν σαρκοῦσθαι φύσει.¹⁰ Because it would come to pass, that Christ would one day germinate in our Thorny Nature.

Q. What Mystery may there bee, in the Order given unto Moses, to putt off his Shoes, upon the Holy Ground? v. 5.

A. Reverence was the Thing required. And Gregory Nyssen observes, that hence was derived the Order for the Priests to bee Bare-foot in the Temple.¹¹

⁸ The Latin gloss from Liber Expositione Veteris ac Novi Testamenti, De Diversis Libris S. Gregorii Magni Conginnatus, Lib. II “De Testimoniis libri Exodi,” cap. IV, “De flamma in rubo,” col. 724. [PL 079. 0724C], is by Pope St. Gregory the Great (c. 540–604), one of the most important medieval Fathers of the Church. According to St. Gregory, “by the burning bush it was shown that it went out from that people, who received the nature of our flesh by the fire of the Deity, as if the thorn of the bush should keep the undiminished substance of humanity in the very flame of divinity.”

⁹ The “Emphatical Words” are adapted from the Cistercian Abbot Bernard of Clairvaux (1090–1153), Sermones De Tempore. In Laudibus Virginis Matris. Super Verba Evangelii <Missus est angelus Gabriel> Homiliae Quatuor, Homilia II: In Luc. 1:26, 27, sec. 11 [PL 183. 066C–D]. Bernard admonishes, “Examine the scriptures and see how beautifully and harmoniously the wonderful deeds of the Saints and the mystic words resound reciprocally with each other, and how many miracles anticipated this one miracle about the virgin and made in the virgin; how many oracles promised [it]. For this was shown to Moses in the fire, to Aaron in the rod and flower, to Gideon in the fleece and the dew; this Solomon clearly saw in the brave woman and her worth; Jeremiah quite openly predicts about the woman and the man; Isaiah foretells very plainly about the virgin and God: and Gabriel finally showed it forth by greeting the virgin herself.”

But now, the Fathers have several fine Descants upon that Cæremony. Origen thinks, the Prohibition of Shooes, made of the Skins of Dead Creatures, instructed Moses, to putt off the Indicia Mortalitatis, when hee was approaching to the Immortal God.¹² And Jerom explains those, to bee, Opera Mortua, even the Dead Works of Sin.¹³

The Custome of Putting off the Shoes at the Gate of the Temple, is followed by several of the Oriental Nations. Bartholomew Georgivez reports it of the Mahometans; The Abyssines observe the same Rites, as we are told by Zaga Zabo, a Bishop of Theirs: who says; *Our Churches resemble the Mountain of Sinai, where GOD spake to Moses, and sayd, putt off thy Shoes.*¹⁴

Q. Had the Heathens any Traditions of this, Burning Bush not consumed?

A. The Heathens had Read or Heard of this Wonder, as appears by Artapanus, who mentions it; [In Eusebius:] but misreports it, as a Fire that suddenly broke forth out of the Earth, & flamed, when there was no Matter, nor any kind of Wood in the Place, to feed it. But then, another, an ancient Tragedian, [In by Patrick (Exodus 44) – is Justin Martyr's First Apology (ch. 62), where the Apostolic Father relates that the priest's command to remove one's shoes before entering the temple was copied by "the devils," who "learning what happened to ... Moses [at the burning bush]," gave the same command "in imitation of these things" (ANF 1:184). Be that as it may, Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 40, p. 314) suggests as much that the sages derived this command from Exod. 3:5, that "Anyone who enters the Temple must remove his shoe, for thus spake the Holy One, blessed be He, to Moses."

12 The reference is to Origen of Alexandria's Homilies on Genesis and Exodus (2002), "Genesis Homily VIII," p. 142, who believes the instruction given to Moses was to take off "the evidence of mortality." Much the same is suggested in Antonii De Escobar et Mondoza, In Evangelia Sanctorum Commentarii Panegyricis Moralibus illustrati. Volumen Primum (1658), lib. IV, sec. I, Observatio VII, p. 126, ## 54–57, by the Spanish Jesuit and voluminous author Antonio Escobar y Mendoza (1589–1669).

13 In his epistle to Eustochium (Letter XXII.19), the great Latin Father Eusebius Hieronymus Stridonensis, aka. St. Jerome (c. 342–420) submits that "when Moses and Joshua were bidden to remove their shoes because the ground on which they stood was holy [Exod. 3:5], the command had a mystical meaning" (Letters of St. Jerome 22.19), in NPNFii (6:29).

14 Mather here relies on Joseph Mede's exposition of Eccl. 5:1 "The Reverence of God's House," in Works (1664), bk. 2, sec. 3, pp. 442–43. In turn, Mede's source is Bartholomeo Georgievits (c. 1490s–1560), whose De Turcarum Ritu et Caeremoniis (1544) is an apologia and diatribe by Barthélemy Georgievitz, a Hungarian captive among the Turks. First published in Antwerp in 1544, De Turcarum Ritu et Caeremoniis was republished several times with the variant title De Turcarum Moribus Epitome (Epitome of the Turkish Mores). The applicable passage to which Mather here refers (via Mede) describes the Muslim custom of removing one's sandals and washing one's hands and feet, before entering the mosque for prayer. My reference is to De Turcarum Moribus Epitome (1558), pp. 11–12. Mede also supplies the reference (out of Damian à Goes's De Aethiopum Moribus [1521]) to the Ethiopian Bishop Zaga Zabo, who served as ambassador of the Abyssinian King David to John III (1502–57) of Portugal (Mede, Works, pp. 442–43). Republished multiple times in the 16th and 17th centuries, Fides, Religio, More Que Aethiopum (1540), sign. Eo-iii^r, Gii^r and Miii^r, was composed by the Portuguese writer Damião de Góis (1502–74). For much the same extract from Mede, see James Saurin's "Dissertation XLIV," in Dissertations (1723) 1:363–64.

Eusebius:] reports it exactly; saying just as Moses doth here: That the Bush burnt in a great Fire, & yett remained entire & green in the Flame. There is a Story something like this, in Dion Prusæus, where, he saies, the Persians relate concerning Zoroaster, that the Love of Wisdome & Vertue leading him to a solitary Life, on a Mountain, he found it one Day, all in a Flame, shining with Cœlestial Fire; out of the Midst of which, he came without any Harm. Ursin long ago endeavours to prove, that this was the corrupted Story of Moses.¹⁵

Q. Canaan is here called, A Good Land & a Large. Give mee the Character which a Gentile Pen ha's putt upon the Jewish Land, thus described? v. 8.

A. Hecateus, writing of the Jewes, ha's this Passage, τριακοσίας μυριάδας ἀρουρών σχεδὸν τῆς ἀρίστης καὶ παμφορωτάτης χώρας νέμονται.¹⁶ They possess Three Thousand Thousand Half-Acres, of the best & fruitfulest Land in the World.

¹⁵ Via his primary source in Patrick on Exod. 3:2 (Exodus 42–43), Mather draws on Almetanae Quaestiones (1690), lib. 2, cap. 12, § 10, pp. 193–94, by the French bishop of Avranches and distinguished scholar Pierre-Daniel Huet (1630–1721), who also supplies the reference to Artapanus's "misreport," in an excerpt by Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 9.27.434c). Ezekiel, the Jewish tragedian of Alexandria (2nd c. BCE), in his Exagoge (a dramatic adaptation of the Exodus saga), speaks of the τεράστιον μέγιστον, the "greatest marvel," because "A sudden mighty fire flames round the bush,/And yet its growth remains all green and fresh" (Eusebius Pamphilus, Praeparatio evangelica 9.29. sec. 7, lines 6–7; 440d). Not to be left out, the Roman philosopher and playwright Lucius Annaeus Seneca (4 BCE–65 CE) in his Thyestes (line 674) mentions similar manifestations of a non-consuming fire – including an instance of St. Elmo's Fire – on the tips of Roman lances, in Naturales Quaestiones (1.1.12–13). Much the same phenomena are mentioned in Pharsalia (3.420), by Roman poet Marcus Annaeus Lucanus (39–65 CE). The Bithynian rhetorician and orator Dion Prusaeus, aka. Dion Chrysostomus Prusaensis, aka. Dio Chrysostomus Cocceianus (a contemporary of Christ), relates his version of Zoroaster's beatific vision in his Orationes 36 (sec. 40–41). Zoroaster (Zarathustra), the founder of Zoroastrianism (c. 628–551 BCE), taught that Ahura Mazda (Ormuzd), the creator god, made the world with the help of Spenta Mainyu and other benign spirits, but was embattled by Angra Mainyu (Ahriman), an evil spirit who tried to thwart him (ODCC). Finally, in his Zoroastre Bactriano (1661), esp. "Prooemium," pp. 5–8, and "Exercitatio Prima," Sec. 8, pp. 56–57, 69–72, Johannes Henricus Ursinus (1608–67), German Lutheran pastor of Regensburg, insists that Zoroaster stole his ideas from the Hebrew Lawgiver and from other portions of the OT. In this, Ursinus was not much behind the same endeavor in Pierre-Daniel Huet's magisterial Demonstratio Evangelica Ad Serenissimum Delphinum (1690), prop. IV, cap. 5, pp. 88–95, where Huet asserts the primacy of the Mosaic Scriptures from which Zoroaster and other founders of religions ostensibly derived their inspiration. Huet's masterpiece went through several editions. (Hereafter, all references are to the third edition of Huet's work, published in Paris, in 1690). However, the English Hebraist and professor of Hebrew and Arabic at Oxford, Thomas Hyde (1636–1703), seems to trump them all in his Historia Religionis Veterum Persarum, eorumque Magorum (1700), which also includes a Latin translation of Zoroaster's precepts (pp. 429–88).

¹⁶ Hecataeus's description survives in Josephus (Contra Apion 1.22.616) and can be found in Fragmenta (Jacoby) (Vol.-Jacoby#-F 3a, 264, F fragm. 21, lines 41–42), by Hecataeus of Abdera (c. 360–290 BCE), a disciple of Pyrrhon (skeptic) and author of several ethnographies (OCD).

Q. That Phrase of, A Land flowing with milk & honey? v. 8.

A. By this very Phrase, the Poets express the greatest Plenty. Bochart brings Instances out of Euripides, and Horace, and Ovid.

Abundance of Milk and Honey, argue a Countrey to be well-watered, fruitful, full of fair Pastures & Flowers; From whence the Flocks may fill their Dugs with Milk, & the Bees their Cells with Honey.

Ælian, [L.III. de Animal. c. 39.¹⁷] saies, The Goats of Syria, (which includes this Countrey,) afford such Plenty of Milk, as in no other Countrey.¹⁸

Q. The Proposing of a Future Miracle to serve as a Token for the Accomplishment of a present Promise, is what seems to contradict the End of Signs & Tokens. Yett such was that which GOD here gave to Moses. And such another was given to Hezekiah? v. 12.

¹⁸ Mather's annotation is extracted from Patrick on Exod. 3:8 (Exodus 47). In turn, Patrick's trusty source is Samuel Bochart's encyclopedic Hierozyicon (1663), pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 12, col. 518, which cites the Greek Athenian playwright Euripides (c. 480–407/6 BCE), whose Bacchae (142–43) has the Lydian mountains flow with milk, wine, and honey; the Roman lyric poet Horace, aka. Quintus Horatius Flaccus (65–8 BCE), whose Carmina (lib. 2, Ode 19, lines 10–12) has his Bacchantes sing of fountains of wine, rivers of milk, and golden honey oozing from tree-trunks; and the Roman poet Ovid, aka. Publius Ovidius Naso (43 BCE–17 CE), whose Metamorphosis (1.111–112) describes the Golden Age as flowing with milk and honey, issuing from the veins of the earth even as honey drips from the bark of oaks. Finally, the Greco-Roman author Claudius Aelianus (c. 175–c. 235 CE) has the goats of Cyrene produce milk in abundance (De Natura Animalium 3.39). The cornucopia of the poets' Golden Age, Mather seems to imply, is inspired by the Mosaic hyperbole of Canaan as the "Land of Milk and Honey." That being said, Mather was well familiar with the infamous dispute between John Calvin (1509–1564) and Michael Servetus (1511–1553), which led to the latter's execution by burning for heresy, at the hands of the Swiss Reformer (see Mather's lengthy comments on Deut. 8:7). As is well known, the Spanish humanist and cartographer Michael Servetus, aka. Miguel Serveto, published an edition of Claudii Ptolemaei Alexandrini Geographicae Enarationii Libri Octo (1535). Servetus 1535 edition reprinted the previous 1525 edition along with the Latin annotations by the Italian translator Jacopo d'Angelo (1406). Alas for D'Angelo's annotation, which included eyewitness accounts by merchants and travelers who described Judea as "incultam, sterilem, omni dulcedine carentem" (uncultivated, barren, and everything without charm) – anything but a land flowing with milk and honey, as the Mosaic Lawgiver had claimed (Exod. 3:8). If that was not an outright attack on Moses' veracity, the Italian annotator trumped, "Quaere promissam terram pollicitam, & non vernacula lingua laudantem pronuncies" (hence it [Promised Land] can only be so extolled in the vernacular in that it was hyped [as a land of milk and honey], not that it had much promise), in Claudii Ptolemaei Alexandrini Geographica (1525), lib. 8, "Asiae Minoris," Tabula Terre Sanctae, Judaea (fol. 41). For Calvin, long perturbed by the Spaniard's anti-Trinitarianism, Servetus's reprinted annotation was the straw that broke the camel's back: To righteous Calvin, Servetus blasphemed the Holy Spirit by implicitly charging Moses with prevarication, an offense deserving nothing less than the gibbet and pyre (Defensio Orthodoxae fidei de sacra Trinitate, contra prodigiosos errores Michaelis Serveti Hispani [1554], 58–59. On Servetus's alleged culpability and trial, see esp. W. K. Tweedie's Calvin and Servetus (1846).

A. Monsr. Saurin wonders that Interpreters have taken so little Pains to solve the Difficulty. He observes, That there have been Promises of GOD, unto which there have been Conditions annexed: And there have been Promises which have had no Dependence on any Conditions. To bring Promises of the First Kind, is a Glorious but a Dangerous Ministry. The Messenger may be in perpetual Fear, that they to whom he brings the Promises, may fail in the Conditions. But he to whom GOD has given a Commission of the Second Kind, can have nothing to Dishearten him: The Infallibility of the Event might support him against all the Obstacles he meets in his Way. Moses might be afraid, That the Unbelief of the Israelites would be a Bar to their Deliverance. To expel this Fear entirely out of his Mind; GOD makes him sensible, that the Promise He gave him depended not on any Condition, but on the Accomplishment thereof, with all the, Circumstances, was absolutely determined in His Decree: and therefore Acquaints him with the Exact Place in which they should pay their Homage to their Deliverer, after their Deliverance.¹⁹

Q. That Name of God, I AM THAT I AM; are there any acknowledgments of it, in Pagan Antiquitie? v. 14.²⁰

A. Doubtless, Plato's το ον, came of Moses's, Ο ων, as the LXX here translate the, /אֶהְיֶה/ in the Original. As the same Philosophers, το πρωτον ον, οντως ον, Αυτο ον, answer to JEHOVAH.²¹

Yea, Plutarch affirms a Remarkable Thing to this Purpose; That the Inscription on the Temple of Minerva, in Egypt, was thus, Εγω ειμι παν το γεγονος, ¹⁹ Saurin, "Dissertation XLIV," on Exod. ch. 3 (Dissertations 365). 2 Kings 19:29.

²¹ According to the regnant belief in Mather's day, Plato's "the Being" came from Moses's THE BEING (LXX 3:14), as the Septuagint translates the Hebrew אֶהְיֶה [Ehyeh] "I AM." See for instance, Plato's Timaeus (27d–28c, 37d) and Phaedo (78d, lines 4–5). Aristotle also speaks of τὸ πρῶτον ὄν "the being" in his Metaphysics (7.1.14, Bekker page 1028a, line 14); and so do Plato and others of ὄντως ὄν "that which is" (Leges 10.894a, line 6), and again in Aristotle's Metaphysics (3.4.1001a, line 30), αὐτὸ ὄν "being-itself" – all of which terms Mather here associates with the Hebrew God.

και ην, και εσομενον, I am all that is, and was, and shall be:²² which is a plain reference to this Name of God in Exodus. Hee also reports the Inscription of EI, in the Temple of Delphos, which hee thus applies; “EI, is the compleat Appellation of God; In our Answer and Speaking to God, wee say, Thou art; attributing to Him, this True, Certain, & Only Appellation, which agrees to Him alone, who is called, Being, or, Existing.”²³ And afterwards, hee expatiates upon the feeble and labile Nature of Man, & of all Things, in Comparison of GOD, who is most properly said, To BEE, eternally. This now is Ehejeh, learnt from the Hebrewes. Eusebius takes a great deal of Pains, (as Dr. Patrick observes,) to prove, That Plato took his Notion of α, το ον αιει, γενεσιν δ’ ουκ εχον· A Being, that is alwayes, but had no Beginning; from these Words of Moses. Numenius the Pythagorean speaks it more plainly; το ον, αιδιον βεβαιον τε εστιν, αιε κατα ταυτον και ταυτον· That which is, is Eternal and Stedfast, alwayes the very Same, without Variation.²⁴

Tis no Wonder (saies our Patrick) these Men, if they mett with this Passage in Moses, were highly pleased with it: For Hilary himself tells us, that he lighting upon these Words, as he was musing about God & Religion, before he was yett a Christian, was struck with Admiration; There being nothing so proper 22 Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride (354c, line 6). More accurately, ‘ἐγώ εἰμι πᾶν τὸ γεγονὸς καὶ ὃν καὶ ἐσόμενον’: “I am all that has been, and is, and shall be.” Mather’s slightly shortens the Greek citation and generally omits the diacritics (on this issue, see his Manuductio 29–30). True to his Hellenist heritage, the Greco-Roman historian and biographer Plutarch (c. 46 BCE–120 CE) argues that the statue of the Egyptian goddess Isis in the temple of Saïs (Nile Delta) is the same as the Greek goddess Athena (the Roman Minerva). As protectress of motherhood, fertility, and the new-born, Isis arrogated unto herself the cryptic title of the God of the Israelites – so Mather and his peers believed in the best manner of Prisca theologia. Matthew Poole’s magnum opus Synopsis Criticorum (1:328–29) and Works (4:69–70) offers the standard wisdom on the topic of God’s ineffable name. The German Jesuit polymath Athanasius Kircher (1601–80) spent much time in depicting the statue of Isis and in describing her ancient significance in his omnium-gatherum Edipus Aegyptiacus (1652), tom. 1, synt. 3, cap. 4, pp. 185–89. (See also BA 1:1061–62n). The Anglican divine Thomas Tenison (1636–1715) – later archbishop of Canterbury – discusses the same point in his Of Idolatry (1678), ch. 5, part 2, p. 52, but is not Mather’s source in this instance.

23 Here, as in the entire paragraph, Mather closely follows Patrick’s annotations on Exod. 3:14 (Exodus 51–52). In turn, Patrick’s source is, among others, Eusebius Pamphilus (c. 265–c. 341), bishop of Caesarea, whose Praeparatio evangelica (11.10–11; 527d–528a) in its turn excerpts the disquisition on the Transcendent Being “εἷ” [EI], from Plutarch’s De E Apud Delphos (392a, lines 1–9).

24 Exod. 3:14 “I am that I am” (KJV), Hebrew אֶהְיֶה [Ehyeh] or Ehejeh in Mather’s vocalization. The Greek passage τὸ ὃν αἰεὶ, γένεσιν δὲ οὐκ ἔχον appears in Plato’s Timaeus (27d, line 6) and is excerpted in Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 11.9. sec. 4, line 4; 524b). The adapted citation from the Pythagorean Platonist Numenius of Apamea (second century CE) appears in Eusebius’s Praeparatio evangelica (11.10. sec. 4, lines 3–4) and reads in the original Τὸ ἄρα ὃν αἰδιὸν τε βεβαιὸν τέ ἐστιν αἰεὶ κατὰ ταῦτόν καὶ ταῦτόν. Like that of Plato, it is a third-hand thing which Mather extracts in abbreviated form from Simon Patrick’s commentary Exodus (53), which also supplies Mather with his translation.

to GOD, as, To BE. He thought it worthy of GOD, to say of Himself, I AM THAT I AM; and, HE THAT IS, hath sent me to you.²⁵

It is remarkable, That we still have in the Fragments of Pythagoras, commonly called, His Golden Verses; an Oath by Him that has the Four Letters. He makes Use of the Term, τετρακτῶε upon which Macrobius ha's made a Comment much more obscure than the Text itself.²⁶ Our Selden ha's given us a Better. Doubtless, the Name /יהוה/ the Tetragrammaton, is what he has an Eye unto.²⁷

Q. Some further Thoughts on that Name of the Glorious God, I AM THAT I AM? v. 14.

A. I cannot mend them, & therefore you shall have them in the Expressions of Dr. Arrowsmith. [His, Chain of Principles.]²⁸

"I cannot but applaud the wise answer of that Philosopher, who when his Hearers said to him, Sir, You have uttered many excellent Things concerning God, but we cannot as yett understand what he is; told them plainly, were I fully able to sett forth God, I should either be God myself, or God Himself would cease to be what He is. [Si omninò ego Deum declararem, vel ego Deus essem, vel ille Deus nonforet.]"²⁹

25 Patrick's commentary on Exod. 3:15, in Exodus (52). St. Hilary (c. 315–67), bishop of Poitiers, expresses his amazement in De trinitate 1.5 [PL 010. 0028], in NPNFii (9:41).

26 Mather alludes to Pythagoras's Fragmenta (p. 170, line 15) which, like his Carmen aureum (line 47), mentions the τετρακτὴν; i. e., quaternion (Tetragrammaton), the mystical Four Letters of God. The poet swears an oath on "the Quaternion, or Number of Four, which is the Source of the Eternal Order of the World." According to the annotations of the French classical scholar André Dacier (1651–1722), this source "is nothing else than God himself, who has created all things" (The Life of Pythagoras [1707], pp. 316–17, esp. note g). See also Mather's BA (1:336–37, 950). In his Commentarii Somnium Scipionis (lib. 1, cap. 2 ad finem), the Roman grammarian and Neoplatonist philosopher Ambrosius Theodosius Macrobius (4th–5th c. CE) summarizes the ancient philosophic disquisitions on the gods, including those of Pythagoras of Samnos (c. BCE 570–495).

27 The English scholar and orientalist John Selden (1584–1654) traces the Tetragrammaton, the Four Letters of God's Hebrew appellation, in the context of the names of the pagan gods "Baal and Belus" of the Chaldeans, Babylonians, and Phoenicians, in Selden's De Diis Syris Synagoga II (1617), synt. 2, cap. 1, esp. pp. 103–15. On Selden's significance as an early modern mythologist, see G. G. Stroumsa's New Science (44–49).

28 Mather's extract is from Armilla Catechetica. A Chain of Principles (1659), a collection of exegetical exercises and aphorisms, by John Arrowsmith D. D. (1602–59), master of St. John's and Trinity College, Cambridge, professor of divinity, and member of the Westminster Assembly.

29 Arrowsmith, Armilla Catechetica, Aphorism III, Exercitation 3, § 1, pp. 130–31. Arrowsmith (p. 130) states that "some" attribute this wise saying to the Stoic philosopher Epictetus of Hierapolis, Phrygia (c. 55–c. 135 CE). Mather supplies the translation of the Latin quote in the preceding italicized passage.

“Were all such Passages sett aside, as are not originally the Heathens own, but borrowed from Jewish or Christian Authors, I should not be afraid to affirm, that there is one very short Expression in Scripture, to witt this, I AM THAT I AM; which Reveleth more of God, than all the large Volumns of Ethnic Writers.³⁰ An Expression so framed, as to take in all differences of Time, according to the Idiom of the Hebrew Tongue, wherein a Verb of the Future Tense, as *Ehje*h is, may signify Time past and present, as well as that which is to come. Hence ariseth a great Latitude of Interpretation; for according to different Readings, it implies different Things. Reading as we do, I am that I am, it imports the Supremacy of Gods Being. The Creatures have more of Non-Entity, than of Being in them. It is proper to Him, to say, I AM. Εγώ ο ων. So the Septuagint. Or, the Simplicity thereof. Whereas in Creatures, the Thing and its Being, Ens and Essentia, are distinguishable; in Him they are both one. Or, the Ineffability; as if the Lord had said unto Moses enquiring His Name; I am myself, and there is nothing without myself, that can fully express my Being. Which putt Scaliger upon inventing that admirable Epithet, Αὐταυτός, that is, Ipsissimus Ipse.³¹ Or, lastly, the Eternitie thereof; since there never was, never will be, a Time wherein God might not, or may not say of Himself, I am. Whence it is, that when CHRIST would manifest His goings out from Everlasting, as Micah phraseth it,³² He makes Use of this Expression, Before Abraham was, I AM;³³ not, I was; for that might have been said of Enoch, Noah, and others who lived before Abrahams time, yett were not eternal; but, I am. If it be rendred, I am what I was, as Piscator would have it, then it speaks His Immutabilitie;³⁴ I am in Executing, what I was in | Promising; Yesterday, & To Day, & the Same forever. If, as others, I will be what I will be, then it denotes His Independency. That Essence which Creatures have, depend upon the Creators Will; None of them can say, I will be; not having of and in itself any Power to make itself persevere in Being, as God hath. It may perhaps intimate all these; and much more than the Tongues of Angels can utter.

³⁴ The German Reformed theologian Johannes Piscator (1546–1625), professor of Oriental languages at the Reformed academy at Herborn, argues in his Commentarium in Omnes Libros Veteris Testamenti Tomus Primus (1643–46), on Exod. 3:14, Scholia in cap. III, p. 156, note 14, and Observationes ex cap. III, p. 157, note 10, that God’s existence before the patriarchs speaks his immutability and independency.

Verily, It is a Speech containing more in it, (as a learned Writer acknowledgeth,) than Humane Capacities can attain.”³⁵

Quæ verbulo hoc continentur omnium hominum capacitatem transcendunt.

Rivet, in loc.³⁶

“Lett me only observe, before I leave it, the notorious Impudence of Apostate Spirits. Satan, not contenting himself to have gott the Name of Jove, in Imitation of Jehovah, the Incommunicable Name of GOD, prevailed with his deduced Followers, to ascribe unto him that which the Lord of Heaven & Earth assumes to Himself, in this mysterious Place of Exodus; saying, I am that I am. For, over the Gate of Apollo’s Temple, in the City of Delphi, so famed for Oracles, was engraved in Capital Letters, this Greek Word, ΕΙ, which signifies, Thou art; whereby those that came thither to worship, or to consult Satans Oracle, were instructed to acknowledge him the Fountain of Being, & the only True God; as one Ammonius is brought in, discoursing at large of this very thing, in the last Treatise of Plutarchs Morals.”³⁷

Q. On the Glorious GOD conversing with Moses? v. 22.³⁸

A. Blackwel observes, Those Expressions in Homer and Horace, that Minos discoursed with Jupiter, and was admitted unto his Cabinet Councils, do seem to be taken from those wonderful Passages in the Scripture, which acquaint us,

³⁸ See Appendix B. In his “Note Book of Authors,” on Exod. 3:22, Mather identifies his sources as “Dr. J. Edwards’s C. P. H. T. Exercitations”; i. e., John Edwards’s Exercitationes Criticæ, Philosophicæ, Historicæ, Theologicæ (1702), Exercitation III (Exod. 3:22), pp. 44–53 – Edwards’s elucidation on why the departing Israelites were justified in “borrowing” their neighbors’ “jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and rayment.” Mather probably excised his earlier extract or reference to Edwards’s Exercitation and (for whatever reason) replaced it with Thomas Blackwell’s gloss (see below), which would be more appropriate for an annotation on Exod. 33:11. Yet in scouting for evidence among the ancients that the pagan gods communicated with their mortal charges, Mather allocates proof that the Almighty did not deign it beneath him to speak to Moses face to face.

that Moses conversed with GOD, and that His Infinite Majesty spoke to that highly favoured Man Face to Face, as a Man speaketh unto his Friend.³⁹

39 Exod. 33:11. Mather's likely source (though something of an anachronism) is the Scotsman Thomas Blackwell (1701–57), professor of Greek at Marischal College, at Aberdeen, whose An Enquiry into the Life and Writings of Homer (1735), sect. 10, p. 189, points out that “of all the ancient Heroes, Minos alone is celebrated as the Companion of Jove, with whom he conversed as with a Friend. From him, tis said, he had his Laws; and to account for this Familiarity, he was afterwards called his Son” (189). Blackwell's footnote refers to Homer's Διὸς μεγάλου δαριστύς (Scholia in Odysseam [scholia vetera], bk. 19, hypothesis-verse 178, line 2), which the Roman Horace translates as “Jovis Arcanis Minos admissus,” suggesting that “Minos was admitted to the secret councils of Jove” (Carminum, lib. 1, Ode 28, line 9). Blackwell's innovative study of mythology (especially in his Letters Concerning Mythology [1748]) posited that in removing the accretions of priestly alterations from ancient mythological tales, one can arrive at the origin of Chaldean and Phoenician sources, which also informed the Hebrew writers of the OT. Blackwell's revolutionary argument flew in the face of those of his predecessors and contemporaries, including Mather himself – see f.e. BA 1:312–16, 436–39; Theophilus Gale's The Court of the Gentiles [1669–78]) – who argued that the similarity between OT narratives and those found in pagan mythology resulted either from pagan borrowings from the Hebrew Scriptures or from the corruptions of the original tales passed down by Noah's offspring and disseminated in distorted versions among all peoples. (ODNB). In this Gale and his peers followed the claim of Clemens Alexandrinus (c. 150–c. 215 CE), who insisted that the Greeks had their philosophy and wisdom from the Hebrew patriarchs (Stromata 1.21–29; 2.5, 18, 22; 5.14; 6.3–5). As Sir Walter Raleigh put it, “it cannot be doubted, but that Homer had read over all the bookes of Moses, as by places stolen thence, almost word for word, may appear” (History of the World [1614], bk. 1, ch. 6, § 7, p. 93. See also H. C. Maddux, “Euhemerism and Ancient Theology” (337–59).

Q. On that Clause, They will not hearken to my Voice? v. 1.

A. Dr. Gell takes notice of a special Emphasis in the Hebraism; They will not hear in my Voice. There is an, Inward Word convey'd in the Outward Voice. It is a, Saying of Anselm, Aliud est verbum, aliud est vox. Many times Men are not sensible, who speaks to them, when the Messengers of God utter their Voice. They don't Hearken to God in the Voice. Our Saviour saies, He that heareth you, heareth me.¹

Q. Why is Moses bidden to take the Serpent by the Tail? v. 4.

A. Dr. Lightfoot ha's this Ingenious Remark upon it.² It is worth observing, That Moses is commanded, to take the Serpent by the Tail: For to meddle with the Serpents Head, belonged not unto Moses, but unto Christ, that spoke to him out of the Bush. [Gen.3.15.]

And when you have observed this, you may also note, that the Rod, which at Sinai, became Nahash, an ordinary Snake, before Pharaoh became Tannin [Exod. 7.10.] a Serpent of the greater Dimensions; perhaps a Crocodile (Pharaohs own Picture!) which Beast the Egyptians adored; & unto whose Jawes they had exposed the poor Hebrew Infants in the River.³

¹ Extracted from An Essay toward the Amendment (1659), p. 191 (top), a critique of the KJV translation, by the Anglican clergyman Robert Gell, D. D. (1595–1665), rector of St. Mary, Aldermary (London), and chaplain to the archbishop of Canterbury, Gell's Essay is perhaps the most detailed (though largely ignored) attack on the accuracy of the AV. The reference is to Anselmi Laudunensis, Enarrationes in Evangelium Matthaei, cap. 3 [PL 162. 1262B–C], by the French theologian and early scholastic Anselmus of Laon (c. 1050–1117), and translates, “One is the Word, the Other is the Voice” (Luke 10:16), based on “the voice crying in the wilderness” (Isa. 40:3–5). Mather's extract from Gell was originally intended as a gloss on verse 13, but he there cancelled Gell's passage and moved it to its present position. Mather also quotes Gell's Essay on several other occasions in BA 1:666, 671, 942, 1053–54, 1080–81. On the history and reception of the KJV (1611) translation, see D. Norton's History of the English Bible (2000), his “The KJV at 400: Assessing Its Genius” (3–27), and H. P. Scanlin's “Revising the KJV” (141–55).

Moses's flying from the Serpent will not be wondrous at, by him that reads how the Crocodile is described, Job. 41.14, 25. *His Teeth are terrible, round about; when he raises up himself, the Mighty are afraid.*⁴

Q. That Prodigy of Moses's leprous Hand, what Use was there made of it, among the Pagans of those, & after Ages? v. 6.

A. Moses, no doubt, acted over this Prodigy before Pharaoh: for 't'was required here, v. 21. *Omnia illa prodigia, quæ posui in MANU TUA, facias coram Pharaone.*⁵ Well, you shall now see, how prodigiously our Blessed Moses, ha's been upon this Account abused. If you read Josephus against Appion, you'll find that the Ancient Historians generally spread a Story about the World, That Moses was a Lepër; altho' they otherwise acknowledged great Vertues in him; they report him διὰ τὴν λέπραν συνεξέληλαμένον, for his Leprosy driven with the rest of the Israel, out of Egypt.⁶ The Simplicity and Integrity of those Historians, makes mee think, that they did not forge this Fable out of pure Malice; but that from the Egyptian Traditions, which were made with a sufficient Partiality, they snatch'd a Peece of a Story, which ha's been with Malice enough thus disguised. It is also possible, That from the very Writings of Moses himself, the Gentiles took further Occasion to Reproche the whole Israelitish Nation, as Infected with the Leprosy. The Largeness & Fulness of the Mosaic Lawes, about that Malady, might invigorate that Reproche.⁷ Altho', I confess, it is not altogether unlikely that the oppressed Way of Living, whereto the Israelites were compelled in Egypt, might make this Distemper more common among them. Those Words in Exod. 15.26. I am the Lord thy Healer, would intimate, that the People had been much disordered with a Disease, whereof the Lord was now healing them.

Samuel Bochart's encyclopedic study of the biblical bestiary adds two more interpretations of Tannin: leviathan and crocodile – both applied to the Egyptian Pharaoh, in Hierozyicon (pars 2, lib. 5, cap. 16, col. 770, lines 20–34, and cap. 18, col. 795, lines 33–46). Philo Judæus (De Vita Mosis 1.77, line 3) calls it ὑπερμεγέθης δράκων “an immense serpent,” or more literally “an immense dragon” (Works 466). Finally, Pirke de Rabbi Eliezer turns Moses's staff into a “fiery serpent” (ch. 40, p. 316).

⁵ Exod. 4:21 (VUL): “All the wonders which have been put in your hand, do them before Pharaoh.”

⁷ Mather here closely follows Manetho's account in Josephus (Contra Apion 1.31).

Dr. Patrick thinks, that as Manetho perhaps did not maliciously devise the Story of Moses's having the Leprosy, out of his own Head, so those Historians from whom he borrow'd his Work; might have but an imperfect Tradition of the Truth, derived from this Passage of Moses appearing with a Leptous Hand before Pharaoh; which was presently noised about the Countrey, without the other Part, of his being immediately cured. And thus, Helladius Besantinus, an Egyptian Writer, in his, Chresto-Mathia, mentions one, who saies, Moses was called, Αλφα, because his Body τοις ἀλφοῖς καταστικτος ἦν: was mark't with white leptous Spotts. The same is affirm'd by Philomæus Hephæstionis.⁸

Q. The Leptous Hand of Moses, what Remarkable Intimation was there in it? v. 6.

A. The Power of Moses himself, to do any of these Miracles, was hereby disclaimed. It could not bee so Impure and Unclean an Hand, as that of Moses, that could work such mighty Wonders.⁹

Memorandum. Wee read not of Miracles, before This, done by any Prophet: and the Miracles of the great Prophet herein seem referr'd unto. Never any, that wee read of, cast out a Divel, (the old Serpent), or, heal'd a Leper (for Elisha did no more than Direct Naaman) until the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ: who was to do these two things, for the Soul, as well as for the Body.¹⁰

Q. This Business (what you were just now saying,) That it is not altogether unlikely, the Leprosy might bee somewhat common among the Israelites in Egypt; it seems as if it might bee a Conjecture that would assist the Explication, of some further Matters & Scriptures? v. 6.

⁸ Via Patrick (Exodus 61), Mather draws on Helladios Bésantinos (4th c. CE), an Egyptian-Hellenist grammarian of Antinoupolis (Egypt), whose Chrestomathia is extant in fragments, in Bibliotheca, by the Byzantine scholar and Patriarch of Constantinople Photius Constantinopolitanus (c. 810–c. 893). (KP). The Greek passage is adapted from τοις ἀλφοῖς κατάστικτος ἦν and appears in Patrick, whose immediate source is Helladion Besantinoon Chrestomatiai: cum notis Joannis Meursii (1686), by the Flemish classical scholar extraordinaire Johannes Meursius, aka. Jan van Meurs (1579–1639). Meursius's many books on, and editions of, ancient Greek literature and history were among the tools of the trade of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century classicists. Philomæus Hephæstionis, mentioned in Meursius's notes in Chrestomathia, is probably the Greek grammarian of Alexandria (2nd c. CE), whose Ἑγχειρίδιον περὶ μέτρων consists of a fully extant representation of the system of Alexandrian (poetic) metrics (KP).

⁹ Similarly, Moses's speech impediment (Exod. 4:10) is frequently cited to remind believers of his mortality – else his followers might have deified him after his death in the best Euhemerist manner of the day.

¹⁰ One of the many wonders performed by Elisha, the prophet, is that of healing the Syrian general Naaman from leprosy (2 Kings 5:1–19).

A. You know the wretched and sottish Account about the Jewish Nation, given in the Annals of Tacitus.¹¹ Among other things, hee saies, “Sundry Authors agree, that there being an Epidemical Scabies throughout Egypt, which polluted their Bodies; King Occhoris addressing himself to Hammons Oracle, and supplicating a Remedy, received this Mandate, To purge the Kingdome of that Sort of People, | which were not acceptable to the Gods and convey them into other Countreyes.”¹² [5v] Whereupon, Inquisition being made, they were gathered together, and proscribed for a March.” – The rest of the Story is too long to transcribe. I’ll only add, that Passage from him. “They abstained from Swines Flesh, in Memory of their Scabies (whereto this Creature is very obnoxious) with which they were polluted.”¹³

Now, tho’ I beleeve a great Part of the Stuff related about the Jewes, by this Historian, just as much as I do his derivation of the Name Judæi, from the Mountain Ida in Crete;¹⁴ yett, for the Reasons, which I have already told you, I do suspect, there may bee so much True, That the Scab of Egypt, was very much upon the Israelites themselves, as well as upon the Egyptians, just before their first Coming out from among them. Now if this may bee Admitted, Then, altho’ you find in another Place assigning other Causes for the Law so strictly prohibiting Swines-flesh, yett I will here plainly confess, my Opinion, That the true Original of the Law against Swines-flesh, was not only the Ceremonial Remembrance of the Egyptian Scab, once epidemical among the Israelites, but also a Medicinal Caution against the Catching, and Breeding of this Malady, which the Swine, especially in those Countreyes were notorious for their frequent Infection with. And the Original of the more than ordinary Antipathy in the Israelitish Nation against Swines-flesh, was from a Commemoration of that primitive Calamity and Indignity.¹⁵

11 The story is told in Tacitus’s Historiarum (5.3–4), not his Annals, by the Publius Cornelius Tacitus (56–117 CE), Roman senator and historian.

12 Mather uses an alternate spelling of the king’s name. Tacitus (Historiarum 5.3) calls him “Bocchoris.” Modern historians generally point to Pharaoh Bocchoris, an eighth-century BCE ruler of the 24th dynasty, whereas the Mosaic exodus is generally dated to have occurred in the thirteenth-century BCE. However, a recent historian argues that Bocchoris lived considerably earlier than is commonly assumed (see D. Ridgway’s “Rehabilitation”). The Egyptian oracle of Hammon is believed to be that in the Libyan oasis Siwah (Tacitus, Histories, vol. 3, p. 179, note 7). On the oracle of Hammon (Ammon), see Antonius van Dale’s De Oraculis Ethnicorum Dissertationes Duæ (1683), Diss. Prima, pp. 86–90; Diss. Secunda, pp. 287–88.

13 Tacitus (Historiarum 5.4). Much the same is related out of Manetho’s Ægyptiaca, in Josephus (Contra Apion 1.26–28).

14 Tacitus (Historiarum 5.2).

15 In his comments on Tacitus’s distortions of the Mosaic history, Mather appears to lean on the same objections Josephus launches against Manetho’s version, in Josephus (Contra Apion 1.31). The parasitic disease Trichinosis – the result of eating undercooked pork – was well known throughout history, but the infectious Trichinella larva was not discovered until the nineteenth century (OED).

Q. The Slow Speech of Moses? v. 10.¹⁶

A. The Jewes think, He had an Impediment in his Speech; so that he could not pronounce exactly some Letters or Words; at least not without some Difficulty; but it was long before he could bring them forth. The LXX understand it, as if he had but a weak, & small Voice; or spoke, Voce gracili et exili, (as it may be translated,) which rendred him unfit, he thought, for an Ambassador. This disagrees not, with what Stephen saies, Act. 7.22. He was mighty in Words. The Sense of what he spake was weighty, tho' his Pronunciation were not answerable. One would also think, That by Exercise he grew prompt in the Delivery of his Mind; For he made very long Speeches to the People, before he went out of the World.¹⁷

Q. Unto whom is it probable, that Moses referr'd, when he said, I pray thee, send by the Hand of Him, whom thou shouldest send? v. 13.

¹⁶ In his "Note Book on the Authors" (Exod. 4:8), Mather identifies as one of his sources "Mathers, Latter Sign. V. 8. MSS. Pat. No. X. Sermon. 63." This cryptic notation is probably a reference to Cotton Mather's own collection of short-hand notes of his father's millenarian and Christological interpretations of Exod. 4:8–9 – the Israelites' disbelief in the voice of the first and latter signs. Among Increase's eschatological publications are The Mystery of Israel's Salvation (1669), Diatriba De Signo Filii Hominis, Et De Secundo Messiae Adventu (1682), A Dissertation, wherein The Strange Doctrine (1708), Appendix, pp. 91–135; and A Dissertation Concerning the Future Conversion of the Jewish Nation (1709). See also Cotton Mather's Threefold Paradise (1995).

¹⁷ Extracted from Simon Patrick on Exod. 4:10 (Exodus 63–64). According to the LXX (Exod. 4:11) Moses was "weak in speech, and slow tongued." His alleged speech impediment was hotly debated by commentators throughout the ages. Rashi argues that Moses had always been a "stammerer" (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:50); Ramban insists that Moses' impairment had been from his youth and that he did not implore God to cure him because "of his [Moses'] great desire not to go [on the mission]" (Commentary 2:46–49); Rashbam relates that Moses claimed he was "not fluent in the Egyptian spoken by the upper classes of the aristocracy," because he had fled Egypt before his education was "completed" (Hachut Hameshulash 4:938). Perhaps the most fanciful cause of Moses' stammering is told in R. Bachya ben Asher (Commentary 3:798–99): According to Pessikta Zutrata, Moses "burned his tongue" on a "glowing coal," when as a boy he played with Pharaoh, grabbed his crown, and threw it on the ground. When Pharaoh's advisers tried to augur the meaning of this insolence, they tested the boy's evil intent by having him choose between "a golden coin and a glowing coal." However, an angel interposed and directed Moses to grab the burning coal and place it on his tongue. For had the boy taken the gold coin instead, "this would be a sign that he was dangerous and he would have to be killed." However, mystically interpreted, Moses' burning coal placed on his lips prefigures his divine inspiration – if the like event in Isaiah's time (Isa. 6:6–13) may serve as a prophetic antitype. The Reformation and post-Reformation commentators on both sides of the aisle similarly pondered the meaning of Moses' impediment (see Poole's Synopsis Criticorum 1:331 and Works 4:80–82). Mather's own youthful struggle with stammering (Diary 1:2–3, 49–52) – which nearly incapacitated him to become a clergyman – was cured (no doubt) by less miraculous means, when his old Latin School teacher, Elijah Corlet, taught him to practice "a dilated Deliberation in speaking" (Samuel Mather's Life of Cotton Mather [1729], p. 26).

A. Shilo, no doubt.¹⁸ Moses prays, for the Messiah to be sent on this weighty Undertaking. He uses the same Word, that Jacob had used, in his Prophecy of the Messiah.¹⁹ Consult the Samaritan, the Syriac, the Arabic, the Persic, together with the Jerusalem Targum, and that of B. Uzziel, (tho' in this last, Phinehas be foolishly named,) and then Judge, whether they do not all favour this Interpretation.²⁰

And Fleming thinks, the Consideration of the Context, will render it yett more probable; seeing here God allowes Moses to be a Typical Schiloh, and raises him above the Character of a Prophet, which He yett gives unto Aaron. See v. 16. and ch. 7.1.²¹

Q. D. "Thou shalt be a Sort of a Shiloh, and therefore thou art now allow'd in a Metaphorical Sense, the Character of a God, which belongs properly to my Shiloh; and Aaron shall be thy Prophet."²²

¹⁸ Far from being singular, Mather's messianic interpretation that Moses asked God to send "Shilo" appears to be informed by John Edwards's Farther Enquiry (1692), p. 14, where Mather's conservative friend and correspondent argues that the designation "Shiloh" is derived from the verb Shalah, i.e., שָׁלַח Shalach, the imperative verb form of "send" [Strong's # 7971]. In this messianic application, Mather (via Edwards) is supported by such Reformation divines as Vatablus, Fagius, Castalio, Schindler, Avenarius, Hottinger, and Mede. See Mather's commentary on Gen. 49:10 (BA 1:1129–30, note 97).

²⁰ The Targums Onkelos and the Samaritan, the Syriac, Arabic, and Persic translations of the Pentateuch – all have Moses ask God to send someone else without mentioning his name (Walton, Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 1:240, 241). However, the Targum Jonathan Ben Uzziel (Walton, Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 4:108) has Moses ask God to "Send now Thy sending by the hand of Phinehas, by whom it is to be sent at the end of the days"; whereas the Jerusalem Targum renders the passage, "Send now by the hand of him by whom it is opportune to send" (The Targums 1:453). R. Abraham Ibn Ezra (Commentary: Exodus 102–03) identifies Aaron as the one intended here. On the history of the Samaritan Pentateuch and its relation to the Torah, see R.T. Anderson and T. Giles, The Samaritan Pentateuch (2012). An intriguing, new interpretation asserting that the Samaritan Pentateuch preserves an older textual tradition than that of the Masoretic Text is advanced by Benyamin Tsedaka, in the recently published "The First English Translation of the Israelite Samaritan Torah," in Tsedaka's translation The Israelite Samaritan Version of the Torah (2013), pp. xxi–xxvi. The same argument about the authenticity and trustworthiness of the Samaritan Pentateuch is central to the thesis of William Whiston's An Essay Towards Restoring the True Text of the Old Testament (1722), esp. Prop. VI, pp. 164–71; and Prop. XIII, p. 329; and Appendix I, pp. i–xv (sep. pag.), in which Whiston collates the then recently printed Samaritan Pentateuch (Paris Polyglot, 1645; Walton's London Polyglot, 1657) with the Hebrew Masora and the Greek Septuagint (LXX). On the evolution of the various polyglot bibles in the early modern period, see A. Schenker, "Polyglot Bibles" (774–84).

²² Significantly, Fleming suggests that as an anointed high priest Aaron, too, was a type of the Messiah and of Christ (Christology, vol. 1, bk. 2, ch. 6, p. 254). Mather's point which was to be proven (his "Q.[E.] D.") is that in Exod. 4:13, Moses asked God to send the true "Shiloh" to Pharaoh to redeem the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. See also his commentary on Gen. 49:10 (BA 1:1125–35).

Q. Upon the Difficulty of Moses, to undertake the Conduct of the People? v. 14.

A. Dr. Patrick mentions the Observation of Plato, L. I. de Rep: which Eusebius ha's also noted out of him; "No Magistracy being designed for the Profit of him that governs, but of those that are governed, I must needs conclude, saies he, μηδενά εθελειν εκοντα αρχειν.²³ That no Man (who is considerate, he means,) will voluntarily take upon him the Government of a People. For he that will use his Power well, Never does that which is best for himself, but for those whom he governs."²⁴

Q. What is the Meaning of that Passage, Thou shalt be to him instead of God? v. 16.

A. Grotius takes the Meaning to bee, Thou shalt have [Jus gladij] the Power of Life & Death, over him and others: And hee notes, *Nunquam hoc nomen hominibus datur, nisi ad significandum jus Vitæ ac Necis.*²⁵

Q. Have wee not here an Opportunity, to entertain ourselves with some Curiosities, concerning that great MOSES, whom wee find here employ'd, as a Deliverer, & a Lawgiver, to the People of God? v. 18.²⁶

A. Some do conceive Moses, to have been the first, who instructed Mankind, in the Mystery of Writing. If hee were so, hee deserves to bee *Written of.*²⁷

²³ The Greek citation μηδενά εθελειν εκοντα αρχειν appears in Eusebius Pamphilus's Praeparatio evangelica (12.9.3, line 2; 582d) can be rendered "no one will voluntarily govern." The great Greek Father of Caesarea here comments on a passage from Plato's Republic (1.342e), which Eusebius also excerpts. As usual Mather omits all diacritics from his Greek citations (see his MAM 29–30).

²⁴ Mather's annotation is extracted from Patrick on Exod. 4:14 (Exodus 67).

²⁷ Edwards, Discourse Concerning the Authority (3:158–60). Much the same tradition can be found in Theophilus Gale's Court of the Gentiles (1672), part 1, bk. 1, ch. 10, § 4, pp. 55–58; and in Pierre Jurieu's Critical History (1705), vol. 1, ch. 4, pp. 30–34. The pious myth of Moses as the inventor of the art of writing (St. Augustine, De Civitate Dei 18.39) was often extolled by conservative defenders of the primacy of the Holy Scriptures. On this issue, see Pierre-Daniel Huet's Demonstratio Evangelica (1690), prop. IV, cap. 2, §§ 37–42, pp. 62–64; and John Edwards's discussion (ch. 8), in Discourse (1:268–75). In one way or the other, they all harked back to Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.21–29; 2.5, 18, 22; 5.14; 6.3–5), who claimed the

Tis true; There is no mention of any Writing, before the Tables of the Law, written by the Finger of God; from whence, if wee say, that Moses did learn the Use of Letters, & then show it first unto the Jewes, from whom the other Eastern People of the World Received it, it will bee agreeable enough, unto the Opinion of Eupolemus, and Artapanus, Two very Ancient Historians, quoted by Clement of Alexandria.²⁸

It was a general Report among the Pagans, That Letters were derived from the Phœnicians. Herodotus, & Plutarch, testify it, of the Greek particularly; & that therefore they were called, Phœnician Letters. Lucan therefore saies

*Phœnices primi, famæ si creditur, ausi
Mansuram rudibus vocem signare figuris.*²⁹

Now Phœnician, is as much as to say, Hebrew. And when Pliny professes, Literas semper arbitror Assyrias fuisse, hee points to the Countrey of the Hebrew philosophy of the Greeks was stolen from the ancient Hebrews. Such claims became more insistent as the authority of the Scriptures became increasingly embattled by Hobbists and Spinozists in the second half of the seventeenth century. Although Mather, too, embraces this myth time and again, he seems to be aware that it is based on wishful thinking rather than actual fact. See especially his commentary on Gen. 1:1 (BA 1:307–16, notes 110–125).

28 Edwards (Discourse 3:159). Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.23) relates that “Eupolemus, in his book On the Kings of Judea, says that ‘Moses was the first wise man, and the first that imparted grammar to the Jews, that the Phœnicians received it from the Jews, and the Greeks from the Phœnicians’” (ANF 2:335). There was no consensus on this issue in the Mather family either. Cotton Mather’s uncle, the Rev. Samuel Mather (1626–1671) of Dublin, Ireland, favored Moses as well, arguing that the art of writing is nowhere mentioned before Moses. And yet, if not Moses, he continues, “the invention is so admirable, that it seems to transcend all humane Wit and Industry” (Figures or Types [1705], pp. 37–38, see also p. 42). Yet, Cotton Mather’s brother, the Rev. Samuel Mather of Witney (Oxfordshire), disagrees with this pious claim, arguing that there are “books more ancient than the writings of Moses, quoted by the prophet [Moses] himself” (Vindication of the Holy Bible [1723], bk. 1, ch. 1, pp. 1–12. The editor of Shakespeare and Alexander Pope, the learned William Warburton (1698–1779), bishop of Gloucester, goes a different route and points in the direction of Egypt: “I think it highly probable that MOSES brought Letters with the rest of his Learning from Egypt, yet I could be easily persuaded to believe that he both enlarged the Alphabet, and altered the Shapes of the Letters” (Divine Legation [1738], bk. 4, sec. 4 (2:139–40). The works of Eupolemus (fl. c. 150 BCE) and of Artapanus (2nd c. BCE), both Hellenist Jewish historians, only survive in fragments in Clemens of Alexandria and in Eusebius Pamphilus. Yet as philosemites, they defended Moses as the fountainhead of all learning. See A. J. Droge’s Homer or Moses? (1989), 12–101.

29 Edwards (Discourse 3:159). Diodorus Siculus (5.74.1) summarizes the various legends about the origin of letters and the art of writing; Herodotus (5.58) relates that the Phœnicians who came with Cadmus brought their alphabet to Greece, but made “a few changes in the form of the letters” and called them “Phœnicians.” Plutarch (Quæstiones conviviales 738ef) has Hermes remind his confreres that “The first letters called Phœnician from Cadmus are four times four, or sixteen; and of those that were afterwards added, Palamedes found four, and Simonides four more.” The Roman historian Pliny, a.k.a. Gaius Plinius Secundus (23–79 CE) praises the Phœnicians for “having invented the alphabet and the sciences of astronomy, navigation, and strategy” (Natural History 5.13.67). Marcus Aeneas Lucanus (39–65 CE), the Roman poet of Corduba, registers his doubts about the origin of writing, in Pharsalia sive De Bello Civili (3.220–21): “The Phœnicians, if rumor can be trusted, dared to write down the fleeting word in rude letters.”

Patriarchs.³⁰ But when Plato, Diodorus Siculus, Tully, and others, assert, that Mercury and Thooth (which are the same) was the Inventor of Letters; it is very certain, that Moses is the Person thereby intended.³¹ And why may not the very Name of Μοῦσαι, The Muses, (the celebrated Authors of Learning) refer to the Name of Moses; for Plato (than whom there was not a greater Searcher into Antiquity among the Philosophers) acknowledges, that this Word is borrowed from the Barbarians; and it is well-known, that the Barbarians, unto the Greeks were the Hebrewes. And this Plato adds, That the Greeks Received their Letters from the Barbarians, who were elder than they. Moreover, There is a notable Expression, in Plutarch, who saies, The Egyptians think, that Hermes, was the Inventer of Grammar. But our Moses, was the ancient Hermes.³²

However, if Moses were not hee, who did first Reveal the Art of Writing, when the Angels of God, had sett him an Illustrious Copy of it; yett hee was one who did at a great rate Restore this Art. And it is a Curiositie, That hee who was miraculously præserted in the Egyptian Papyrus, when an Infant, should afterwards Instruct Mankind, how to præserve in that Papyrus, whatever should bee memorable.³³

Other Curiosities, you shall have at another Time, & in another Place.³⁴

Q. The Lord saies concerning Pharaoh, I will Harden his Heart. I pray, give mee, a brief, but a full, Paraphrase upon that wonderful Expression, which occurs, I think, Nine Times over in this Book? v. 21.³⁵

³⁰ Edwards (Discourse 3:160). Pliny believes that “the Assyrians have always had writing” (Natural History 7.56.192) and that others think this art was invented in Syria and by Cadmus brought to Greece from Phoenicia. Moreover, Pliny points to Aulus Gellius (Noctes Atticae 5.14), who attributes the invention of this art to the Egyptian Mercury. See also B. A. Curran, “The Renaissance Afterlife of Ancient Egypt (1400–1650).”

³⁵ Mather’s comment is justified considering that the word “harden” and “hardened” occur at least 18 times in Exodus: 4:21; 7:3, 13, 22; 8:15, 19, 32; 9:7, 12, 34, 35, 10:1, 20, 27; 11:10;

Dr. Patrick observes, There are Three distinct Words used in the Story, about this Matter; First, Chazak, Then Rashah, Lastly, Cavad; which seem to signify a gradual Increase of his Obstinacy, till at last it grew very grievous.³⁷

13:15, 14:4, 8. Mather's manuscript "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 4:21) refers to "Franzius Interp. p. 361" as a source to be consulted. The German Lutheran professor of Theology at Wittenberg, Wolfgang Franzius (1564–1628), aka. Wolfgang Franz, published his omnium gatherum with the title Tractatus Theologicus Novus & Perspicuus, De Interpretatione de Sacrarum Scripturarum maxime legitima (1619), republished in Wittenberg in 1708. In its present context of Exod. 4:21, Franzius offers a long polyglot disquisition on Pharaoh's hardened heart, titled "Oraculum XXIV Sacrum" (361–420). Franzius's tome is commonly referred to by its running title De Interpretatione. Mather also quoted this popular work in his annotations on Genesis, in BA (1:536, 942, 1003, 1010, 1048, 1111–12) and elsewhere.

36 Mather quotes from Antonius Scattergood's edition Annotationes in Vetus Testamentum, et in Epistolam ad Ephesios (1653), pp. 52–53. The Latin passage from an uncertain author on Exod. 4:21 puts words into Pharaoh's mouth of to emphasize his resolve to wallow in his own sin: "I will determine beforehand the action (which is good because it is action); I shall subtract the Spirit; I shall concede to myself the flesh; and instigated by Satan, and with the opportunities of sin offered, I will grant myself to sin, so that I may even interweave earlier sins. I shall set a limit upon wickedness. Finally, I may steer and direct the sinner and the sin toward ends far more wholesome."

37 Simon Patrick on Exod. 4:21 (Exodus 73). Patrick's own source appears to be Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:332). Significantly, in using the infinitive "to harden" here and elsewhere, the translators of the KJV (1611) gloss over several nuances implied in the Hebrew original. Thus in Exod. 4:21, 14:4, 14:17, Josh. 11:20 God's intention "to harden" Pharaoh's heart is expressed by the infinitive חָזַק [chazaq] (Strong's # 2388), which entails both positive and negative connotations: "to strengthen, to prevail, to harden [as well as] to be courageous." In Exod. 7:3, the Hebrew adjective קָשָׁה [qashah] (Strong's # 7185), signifying "to be hard, be severe, be fierce, be harsh," stands in for the same intent: "I will harden Pharaoh's heart." In Deut. 15:7, God's mandate "thou shalt not harden thine heart" is expressed by the Hebrew infinitive אָמַץ ['amats] (Strong's # 0553), which also carries in its signification "to be strong, alert, courageous, brave, stout, bold, solid, hard." Finally, 1 Sam. 6:6 "Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts" is expressed by the Hebrew verb קָבַד [kabad] or קָבַד [kabad] (Strong's 3513), suggesting such a variety of meanings as "to be heavy, be weighty, be grievous, be hard, be rich, be honourable, be glorious."

to fall upon him; with a Drawn Sword, perhaps, as to Balaam, or, to David. Others imagine, only a sudden Disease inflicted on him.³⁸

Q. Why was the Circumcision of the Child so long delay'd? v. 25.

A. Most say, Zipporah was unwilling. Not from any Abhorrence of the Rite, for she was descended from Abraham, who first received the Commandment; But because the Midianites did not circumcise so soon as the Israelites, but imitated their Neighbours the Ishmaelites, who deferr'd it until their Children were, as Ishmael, Thirteen Years of Age. Or, she might omitt it, because of the Journey; intending to do it, when they came to be settled among the Israelites. But such a Man as Moses, should have trusted God with the Child, & not have been afraid of Consequences.³⁹

Q. What meant Zipporah, by a Bloody Husband? v. 25.

A. A Circumcised Person, was called by the Name of חתן, an Espoused One; quia circumcisionis Die, Deo quasi desponsatur.⁴⁰ This I take to be the Intendment of this Place. Our Version carries it, as if the Words of Zipporah, were spoken to her Husband, and as shee called him a Bloody Husband out of her Enmity to the Rite of Circumcision; But, First, The Hebrewes never call an Husband, by that Name of Chathan, after the Seven Dayes of Espousal are over; but Zipporah had been married several Years. Again, Zipporah's Father, being a godly Midianite, must needs keep up Circumcision in his own Family: Yea, Ancient Histories, particularly Herodotus as well as Josephus affirm, that the Ishmaelites in their Time used it.⁴¹ Zipporah, was an Arabess, and the Arabians, the Turks, at this ³⁸ Extracted from Patrick (Exodus 74). The confusing reference in Exod. 4:24 ("And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that the Lord met him, and sought to kill him") has engaged a considerable number of Reformation and post-Reformation theologians, because the pronoun "him," lacking a clear noun antecedent, could also apply to Pharaoh, whom Moses addresses in verse 23. See esp. John Selden's De Synedriis (1650), lib. 1, cap. 6, pp. 87–88, and Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:333–34) and Works (4:89–92).

³⁹ Patrick on Exod. 4:25 (Exodus 75–77).

⁴⁰ Patrick's source is – among other works – Lexicon Pentaglotton, Hebraicum, Chaldaicum, Syriacum, Talmudico-Rabbinicum, & Arabicum (1612), col. 677, voce חתן [chathan], by the Lutheran Valentin Schindler (1543–1604), celebrated professor of Oriental languages at Wittenberg and Helmstedt (Germany). However, the Latin citation, which reads, "because on the day of circumcision, he is betrothed to God," is Mather's (not Patrick's) and is adapted from Schindler's Lexicon (677 E). See also John Spencer's De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 1, cap. 4, sec. 5, fol. 55. Not to be ignored is the great Anglican divine and professor of Arabic at Cambridge, Edmund Castellus (1606–85), who provides his definition in his labor of love Lexicon Heptaglotton (1669), col. 1451: חתן [chathan], i. e., husband, bridegroom, son-in-law, daughter's husband (Strong's # 2860). Edward Pococke, in his "Notae Miscellanea," in באב מוסי Porta Mosis sive, Dissertationes Aliquot à R. Mose Maimonide (1655), Notae, cap. 4, pp. 52–54 (sep. pag.), supplies his linguistic derivations. On the Christian Hebraists in Reformation-era Europe, see S. G. Burnett's Christian Hebraism (esp. ch. 3).

⁴¹ Mather here alludes to Herodotus's conjecture (2.104) – synopsised in Josephus (Antiquities 8.10.3) – that the practice of circumcision spread from the Colchians, Egyptians, and

Day, are circumcised. Further, Would Zipporah have been so daring, as to have Reviled her Husband, when shee saw the Lord in the Room, ready to kill him? Add, The Angel went away upon her saying what shee did; Sure, not because of her Invectives against her Husband. No, shee only pronounced; the Child, A Circumcised One. As well the Arabians as the Israelites, use to call a Newly Circumcised Person, by the Name of Chathan. So then, Zipporah now speaks over &c unto her Child, Thou art one espoused by Blood, unto the Church of God.

This is Mr. Medes Interpretation.⁴²

Q. Give us, if you please, Kimchi's Account of this Matter?

A. The Angel, (saies Kimchi) would have killed Moses, for not circumcising of his Son. Moses, who because of Illness was not able to do it himself; then caused his Wife to do it. She cast the Foreskin at Moses's Feet, saies to this effect; "If this be the Cause of thy Sickness, Behold, a Remedy! The Blood of the Circumcision recovers thee. By this Blood I have an Husband Restored unto me."

*Ob hanc circumcisionem, quasi Novus factus es Sponsus.*⁴³

Ethiopians to other peoples, including the Phoenicians and Palestinian Syrians, who acknowledge the Egyptians as the originators of the practice. Mather raises the same issue in his commentary on Gen. 12:1 (BA 1:862), but his source there is Johann Heinrich Heidegger's commentary on Rashi's Aboth ראשי אבות Sive De Historia Sacra Patriarcharum [1667–71] 2 vols. (1729), 2:158, Exerc. VII, § 28.

42 Even though much the same is given in Patrick, including the reference to Mede (Exodus 76–77), Mather does cite from his personal copy of Joseph Mede's Works (1664), "Discourse XIV," pp. 70–71. See also Mather's mss. "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 4:24), where he refers to "Medes Works. B. I. Disc. 14" and to the previously cited "Franzius Interp. p. 838." The latter reference is to Wolfgang Franz's brief discussion "De instrumento Circumcisionis, Exodi 4, 25," in De Interpretatione de Sacrarum Scripturarum (1619), "Oraculum LXXII. Sacrum" (828). It is fair to say that although Patrick's Commentary is among Mather's most significant primary sources for Biblia Americana, Mather does appear to check his primary source against available secondary sources in his private library whenever possible.

43 Mather here draws on his own copy of Sebastian Münster's magnificent Hebraica Biblia, latina planeq. nova. Secunda editio (1546), fol. 119, annot. (i), and renders into English Münster's Latin translation of R. David Kimchi's Hebrew gloss on circumcision (Exod. 4:25). After circumcising her son Gershom, Zipporah tells Moses, "because of this circumcision, you have become betrothed [to me] anew." Hebraica Biblia remained a trusty source for many theologians without direct access to Daniel Bomberg's Biblia Rabbinica [1516–17]) or to rare Latin translations of the classic rabbinic midrashim.

Q. That Clause: The God of the Hebrews ha's mett with us? v. 3.

A. It may be read, He is called upon us. They assert their Relation to Him. Compare; Isa. XLIII.7. and Jer. XIV.9. Thus the Chaldee Paraphrase carries it, The God of the Jews is called upon us. We ought, as Dr. Gell notes upon it, much to consider, whose Name is called upon us; who owns us for his People.¹

Q. Of what Use was the Straw, in making the Brick? v. 7.

A. 'Tis variously conjectured. Some think, It was mixed with the Clay, to make the Bricks more solid. Others, that they only heated their Kilns therewith, to burn the Bricks. Others, who think, they were not baked in a Kiln, imagine, it served only to cover them, that they might not be crackt by the violent Heat of the Sun, wherein they were Baked. So Vitruvius tells us, That the Best Bricks were made in the Spring and in the Autumn; ut uno tenore siccescant, that they might Dry with an æqual Heat; they that were made in the Solstice, being too suddenly crusted over with the Sun, & left too moist within.²

I find, Baumgarten in his Travels, being at Cairo, or Memphis, reports; The Houses for the most Part, are of Brick, that are only harden'd by the Heat of the Sun, and Mixt with Straw to make them firm.³

Q. How shall we well apprehend the Matter, of, The Peoples being scattered abroad, thro' all the Land of Egypt, to gather Stubble instead of Straw? v. 7.

A. The Matter will be apprehended, if we consider, how hard it was, to acquire any Quantity of Stubble in Egypt. The Stalk of the Corn there, was so short, that to acquire any ordinary Measure, it required more than ordinary Labour. This is discovered, by the Account that Pliny hath happily left unto us. [Lib. 18. Nat. Hist.] In the Corn of Egypt, the Stalk is never a Cubit long: because the Seed lies very shallow, and ha's no other nourishment, than from the Mud and Slime left by the River; under which there is nothing left but Sand and Gravel.⁴

² Extracted from Patrick on Exod. 5:7 (Exodus 84–85). The Roman architect and engineer Marcus Vitruvius Pollio (1st c. BCE) describes the art of brick making in his De Architectura Libri Decem [1649], lib. 2, cap. 3, p. 22). Some Latin editions have "ut uno tempore siccescant" or, "that they may dry at one and the same time"; i. e., "uniformly," in The Ten Books of Architecture (2.3.2), p. 43.

The Stubble being so short, it was difficult to gett any Quantity of it. A Few Fields afforded it not. They must wander far, that would arrive to any Store of it.⁵

Q. How could it be said unto Moses, That God was not known to Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, by His Name JEHOVAH? We know that God said expressly, to the First of these Patriarchs, I am Jehovah, [Gen. 15.7.] And Abraham saies himself unto the King of Sodom, I have lift up my Hands unto Jehovah? [Gen. 14.22.] Yea, Moses observes, That Men began to call upon the Name of Jehovah, in the Dayes of Seth! v. 3.

A. Endless would it be to transcribe Dorscheus, and Gataker, and a thousand more, that have made their Essayes to Reconcile this Matter, & Preserve unto Moses, the Priviledge of having first known God, by the Name Jehovah.¹

It is enough, to putt an End unto all at once, by observing, That the Hebrew Particle here used [Lo] is very often taken Interrogatively. [Compare Exod. 8.26. and Lam. 1.12.]

In some Copies of the LXX, the Text now before us, is rendred, I have even manifested myself to them, by my Name, LORD.²

And the most learned Rabbis have noted, That this Particle, is not absolutely Negative, but Comparative; As when it was said, [Gen. 32.28.] Thy Name shall no more be called Jacob, but Israel. And, [1. Sam. 8.7.] They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected mee. And, [Hos. 6.6.] I desired Mercy, & not Sacrifice.³ And Moses elsewhere saies, Your Murmurings are not against us, but against the Lord. One Mr. Ross proposes to have all these translations thus rectified.⁴ Thy

1 Mather's exasperation may be justified if one examines the throng of theologians who aimed at solving this conundrum, as synopsised in Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (cols. 338–40). Poole (col. 340) refers to Johann Georg Dorsche (1597–1659), Lutheran professor of theology at the University of Rostock, whose Dissertatiuncula Philologico-Theologica De Nomine Dei ... Jehova (1642), § 7, pp. 8–9, is favorably cited and extracted in Adversaria miscellanea in quibus Sacrae Scripturae primò (1659), cap. 18, pp. 180–81, by Thomas Gataker (1574–1654), Anglican clergyman and member of the Westminster Assembly. Gataker's earlier Dissertationis De Tetragrammato suae a D. Ludovici Cappelli (1652) has much to say on the same topic and also cites Dorsche's tract (p. 54). On Dorsche, see NDB 4:87.

2 The Hebrew particle לוֹ [Strong's # B 4782] can indeed be used as an interrogative when it invites an affirmative answer. See also Hugh Ross, Essay for a New Translation of the Bible (1701), part 1, ch. 9, pp. 128–29.

3 See Ibn Ezra (Commentary: Exodus 129–35), Ramban (Commentary: Exodus 63–67), and Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus (1:74–77). Rashi explains the issue as follows: לֹא הוֹדַעְתִּי is not written here אֲנִי כְּתִיב בְּאֵן (I did not make known), but, rather הוֹדַעְתִּי (I did not become known) [meaning:] “I was not recognized by them by My attribute of keeping trust, the reason for which My Name is called ה' [which denotes that] I may be trusted to keep My promises” (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi. Shemos 2:57).

4 An obscure clergyman of the Church of England, Hugh Ross published a two-part Essay for a New Translation of the Bible (1701–1702). Whereas part 1, first published anonymously in Name shall not only be called Jacob, but likewise Israel. And, They have not only rejected thee, but they have rejected me also. And, I take Pleasure in Mercy, & not only in Sacrifice. And, Your Murmuring is not only against us, but also against the Lord.

For the Text now before us, take your Choice of these two Readings. Either, I have not only made myself known to them, by my Name Jehovah. Or, *was not I even known to them by my Name Jehovah?*⁵

Q. The Meaning of that Phrase, Uncircumcised Lips? v. 12.

A. Dr. Patrick observes, That it was the Manner of the Hebrewes, to call those Parts Uncircumcised, which are inept to the Use for which they were designed, & cannot do, their Office. Thus Jeremiah saies of the Jewes, [Jer. 6.10.] Their Ear was uncircumcised; and adds the Explication, They cannot hearken. Uncircumcised in Heart, [Jer. 9.26.] are such as cannot understand. Compare, Act. 7.51. So, Uncircumcised Lips, are Lips that cannot utter Words. Perhaps Moses thought it some Disparagement unto him, that he was not able himself handsomely to deliver his Mind unto Pharaoh; Therefore he mentions this again, to move the Divine Majesty, to Circumcise his Lips, & remove the Impediment.⁶

Q. A Remark on what Moses relates, of his Father marrying his own Aunt? v. 20.

A. How sincere a Writer was Moses! As we said formerly on this Occasion.⁷

But then, Dr. Patrick adds, 'Tis observable, that Moses does not say one Syllable in Commendation of his Parents; tho' their Faith deserved the greatest 1701, acknowledges on its title page that this work was "Done out of French, with necessary Alterations and Additions, relating particularly to the English Translation," the second edition of part 1, published in 1702, drops this opaque acknowledgment altogether and attributes the authorship to "H. R. a Minister of the Church of England." Be that as it may, part 1 of Hugh Ross's Essay (1701–1702) is a free translation of Projet d'une Nouvelle Version Française de la Bible (1696), a controversial critique of the French, Geneva, and KJV translations of the Bible, by Charles Le Cène (c. 1647–1703), a Socinian Huguenot exile sojourning in England and the Low Countries after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1685). In turn, Le Cène's critique was countered by his fellow Huguenot countryman Jacques Gousset (1635–1704), in Considerations Theologiques et Critiques sur le Project D'une Nouvelle Version Française de la Bible, Publié l'an M.DC.XCVI. Sous le nom De Mr. Charles Le Cene (1698). To be brief, Mather's extract is from Hugh Ross, Essay for a New Translation (1701, 1702), part 1, ch. 9, pp. 128–29.

Praise, as the Apostle observes unto the Hebrewes. J. Capellus notes; Moses did not write for his own Glory, but for the Service of God, & of his Church.⁸

Q. A few of Dr. Grewes philosophical Touches, if you please, upon the Miracles done in Egypt? v. 1.¹

A. The Creation of the World, tho' it be not called, A Miracle, yett it is the greatest of all Miracles, and after which, no other can bee looked upon as Incredible.²

But, it is Dr. Grewes Opinion, That God having made, & putt into perfect Order, a World of Instruments, or Second Causes, it seems not becoming His Divine Wisdome and Majesty, to do any thing, [I will add, Ordinarily,] without some Use of these Causes.³

He thinks, That God hath some Way or other established a Power in the Vital, over the Corporeal World; and as He hath made the Minds of Men & of other Animals, able to command their own Bodies, it would be strange if a superior Mind, an Angel, should not have as much Power, over all Bodies.⁴

Unto a Miracle, it is requisite, that the Cause be unknown to us, either in itself, or as to the Manner of its Operation. The Effect also must be extraordinary, for the Limitation of Time, and Place, and other Circumstances. And the Design of it, must be something that is Good, and Great, and Necessary. Accordingly, Dr. Grew thus defines it; A Miracle is the extraordinary Effect of some unknown Cause, limited by Divine Ordination and Authority, to its Circumstances, for a suitable End.⁵

He thinks, The Rods of Aaron, of the Egyptian Magicians, were not converted into Real Serpents; for then, God must have given them, a Mind, with all the External and Internal Organs, necessary unto Motion, Nutrition, Generation, and Sense: the doing of which had been altogether in vain, & of no Use,

1 An English botanist, physician, and member of the Royal Society, Nehemiah Grew (c. 1641–16712) published Cosmologia Sacra: Or a Discourse of the Universe As it is the Creature and Kingdom of God (1701), an ambitious attempt to reconcile natural philosophy (science) with the regnant biblical purview of biblical miracles (ODNB). Mather made ample use of this work in his commentary on Genesis (BA 1:330–36, 522–27, 531, 566, 595, 698–99, 1016–17), but did not always approve of Grew's purely naturalist and mechanical explanation of biblical miracles. Similarly, Mather spoke dismissively of Aristotle's natural philosophy, in Manuductio ad Ministerium (§ 9, pp. 47–48).

2 Grew (Cosmologia Sacra, bk. 4, ch. 5, p. 194 § 4).

3 Grew (194–95, § 5).

4 Grew (195, §§ 7, 8). On the concept of vitalism, see W.B. Hunter's "Plastic Nature" (1950).

5 Grew (195, 196, §§ 9, 10, 11, 13). Grew's definition of miracles echoes similar ones by Descartes (mechanism), Hobbes (Leviathan, ch. 37), Spinoza (Theologico-Political Treatise, ch. 6), and Locke (Discourse of Miracles). See my discussion in BA (1:105–112); R. M. Burns's The Great Debate on Miracles (1981); J. Earman's Argument Against Miracles (2000), ch. 7; and P. Harrison's "Newtonian Science, Miracles, and the Laws of Nature" (1995).

for a Creature immediately to be turn'd into its former State again. The Rods, he thinks, were only invested with the phantastic Image of a Serpent, in which the Circumstances were thus limited by God, that the Rod of Aaron, devoured those of the Magicians, and the Magicians were not able, either to Prevent it, or to Imitate it. All the Lords Holy Ends, the Hardening of Pharaoh, & the Confirming of Moses, were sufficiently obtained by such a Dispensation.⁶

The two following Signs, The Turning of the Rivers into Blood, and, The Bringing the Frogs thence into the Houses of the Egyptians; By what Means this great Corruption in the Waters was effected, is unknown to us. Dr. Grew suspects, That the Pestilential Plague, which in the Process of this Transaction, was inflicted, both upon the Beasts of the Field, and upon the Body of Man, began here in the Waters; And that all the Fish, small and great, with the Hippopotamus, and Crocodile, and other Amphibious Creatures, were siezed with a Dysenteric Murrain; by which they were constrained with their Excrements, to void so great a quantity of purulent Blood, as would serve to colour and corrupt the Waters, in most of the Rivers. And it was not impossible, for the Divels, having the Permission of Heaven, to inflict the like Plague, upon the Fish in those Waters, which Aaron had left untouched. Nor was it less easy for them, to direct the Motion of the Frogs, to the Houses of the Egyptians, as Aaron had done; yett herein were they limited, that when they had brought the Frogs thither, they could not remand them; which was reserved for Moses.⁷

[9v] We know not how the Dust of Egypt was turn'd into Lice, perhaps (as Dr. Grew thinks,) the Eggs of some Sort of small | Insect, here called Lice, being mixed every where with the Dust, and suddenly Hatched, Swarmed on the Bodies of Men and Beasts, as the Frogs had done upon the Land. However, their Coming was miraculously limited unto that very Season, when Aaron struck the Dust with his Rod.

The Flies that follow'd in Swarms, were probably brought by a Southern Wind, from some other Part of Africa; but a small Wind, & therefore not mentioned.⁸

It is likely that the same Still and Hot African Wind, brought the Infection, which bred the following Murrain. And whereas, for the ensuing Boils, tis said, The Ashes, that were sprinkled by Moses toward Heaven, should become small Dust, in all the Land of Egypt; it may seem, that hereupon there fell a Shower of Dust, such as often happens in such Countreyes; but it was accompanied with an infection of the Air, which suddenly bred the Boils. The Divels wanted not the Power to do these things, but wanted the Authority.⁹

⁷ Grew (196–97, § 15).

⁸ The two preceding paragraphs are extracted from Grew (197, § 16).

⁹ Grew (197, § 17).

The Hail, and the Locusts, & the Darkness, that followed, wanted not their Natural Causes. But they were all under a Threefold Limitation; to the Persons, to the Time, and to the Place. And indeed, all the Ten Plagues, mett all together within the Compass of Six Weeks, or perhaps, of One Month, or thereabout. For they began, at a warm Time of the Year, fitt for the Breeding of Murrains, Frogs, and Insects. The Hail, the Seventh Plague, fell when the Flax was bolled, & the Barley eared; yett before the Wheat and Rye were grown up. And they were all finished, the Night following the Fourteenth of the Month Abib, or the Julian Fourth of May.¹⁰

The Transactions were so notorious, that Jethro, the Priest of Midian, came to congratulate Moses upon them; the Hivites of Gibeon were frighted into their Witts, to make their Peace with the Israelites; and the Philistine Priests [1. Sam. 6.6.] kept fresh among them the Memory thereof no less than four hundred Years. And Sethosis, the Successor to Amasis, or Armais, drowned in the Red-Sea, was, it seems, under such Astonishment hereat, that tho' his Exploits in the East, are sett down by Manetho, as performed in the First Nine Years of the Israelites being in the Wilderness, yett he dared not in all this Time, to touch that unarmed People.¹¹

Tis very ill done of Josephus, to compare the Passing of the Israelites thro' the Red-Sea, with the Passage of Alexanders Army thro' the Pamphylian. By Strabo, we are better informed, That the Hill Climax lying upon the Pamphylian Sea, leaveth a Narrow Passage upon the Shore, which at a low Ebb, lies so Dry, that it may be forded on foot; But Alexander coming thither, before the Waters were gone off, was fain with his Souldiers, to wade all day long, up to the Middle. But then, I know not how far Dr. Grewes Conjecture will hold, That the strong East-Wind, blowing athwart the Red-Sea, not only divided the Waters, but also Froze them with so Thick an Ice, as to bound them like a Stone Wall, on both Sides the Way it made; which emboldened Pharaoh to venture in; and that a Western Wind, which is a warm one, suddenly Thawing the Ice, Lett the Sea in upon them: However, both miraculous. This brings too much of Nature into the Matter.¹²

Sir Walter Raleigh (1552–1618), too, dismisses non-miraculous explanations of Moses' crossing the Red Sea (History of the World [1614], bk. 2, ch. 3, pp. 262–63, § 9). And Jean Le Clerc, in his Twelve Dissertations (1696), Diss. 13, pp. 319–44, struggles to have it both ways – secondary causes and miracles. Mather here criticizes Grew for confining his argument to purely

Q. A Remark on the Affair of Moses & the Magicians? v. 10.

A. Some Ingenious Men, consider Pharaoh, as a Type of the Devil, and the Magicians as a Type of the False Teachers, which he employs for the Prejudice of the Gospel.¹³ Yea, our Blessed Apostle Paul countenances this Consideration. It may be pursued with much of Elegancy & Instruction. Among other Things, there is This to be observed. Aarons Rod became a Living Creature. The Work of Grace wrought with the Truth of the Gospel, is Life, & a Spirit, for Living unto GOD. The Souls that were as Dead Sticks, are turned into Living & Heavenly Creatures. The Instruments of the Devil try to imitate it & pretend unto Spiritual Life, and Holiness, & Love and Zeal, & Self-Denial; and whatsoever is found in the True Disciples of our SAVIOUR. The Design of these False-Teachers, and their Followers, is to Discredit, the Truth of the Gospel, and so to Disappoint the Design of it. They bring People to a Loss, which is the Right. By seeming sometimes even to out-do the Right, and by a wonderful Zeal, even for some Good Things, they draw People into that which is Evil.

Prosecute the Subject in your Meditations.¹⁴

Q. The Names of the Magicians of Egypt? v. 11.¹⁵

A. We read, 2. Tim. 3.8. the Principal of them, were Jannes and Jambres. And it is remarkable, That several Jewish, and Greek, and Roman Writers, tell us the same thing. In Ushers Annals, and in Bocharts Hierozoicon, you will find many Traditions from Antiquity, for these very Names of the Magicians. We will mention only the Author Schalsch-Hakkalah, who calls them by these Names, & saies, That in our Language we would call them, Johannes, and, Ambrosius.

secondary or natural causes thus depriving the biblical account of its emphasis on miraculous occurrences. Mather's conflicted views of biblical miracles are discussed in my introduction to Biblia Americana (BA 1:105–12).

13 See Samuel Mather (Figures or Types, p. 57).

14 Cotton Mather's recommendation to meditate on the allegorical and typological implications of this verse is consistent with his avowed purpose to extract at least one significant interpretation from each biblical verse.

15 In his "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 7:11), Mather refers to "Glanvils Proof of Apparitions, p. 32"; i.e., "Proof of Apparitions, Spirits, and Witches, from Holy-Scripture," the running title of Saducismus Triumphatus: or, Full and Plain Evidence Concerning Witches and Apparitions. In Two Parts (1681), part 2, pp. 1–88, esp. secs. 12–13, pp. 38–47, by the English clergyman, natural philosopher, and apologist for the invisible world, Joseph Glanvill (1636–1680). Saducismus, his best-known work on the topic, went through several editions and numerous versions in the 17th and 18th centuries. Perhaps it is telling that Mather here chose his extract from Simon Patrick's learned commentary on the Egyptian magicians rather than Glanvill's popular work. After all, Mather here aims to allocate proof from pagan sources, of which Patrick is more forthcoming than Glanvill, whose pneumatical collections chiefly target the material philosophy of Cartesian and Hobbesian "Nullibists."

Artapanus, in Eusebius, calls them, ἱερείς ὑπὲρ Μεμφιν· Priests at Memphis, whom Pharaoh sent for to oppose Moses.¹⁶

Q. On the Rod of Moses, devouring the Rods of the Magicians, what Remark is to be made? v. 12.

A. Good old Prosper shall give you a Remark. *Voravit Serpens Moysis Mago- rum Serpentes, ut nostri ducis Christi Virga, doctrinæ, Omnia Paganorum Hæreti- corumque dogmata, divina Virtute consumpsit.*¹⁷

And here, Dr. Patrick takes notice of a Remarkable Passage, in Numenius the Philosopher, which is recorded by Eusebius, L. IX. Præpar. Evang. c. 8. He expressly saies, That Jannes and Jambres, were Αἰγυπτιοὶ ἱερογραμματεῖς, inferior to None in Magical Skill; & therefore chosen by the common Consent of the Egyptians, to oppose Musæus [as the Heathen called, Moses] the Leader of the Jewes; Of whom he also gives this noble Character, That he was, ἀνδρὶ γενομένῳ Θεῷ εὐξασθαι δυνατωτάτῳ A Man most powerful with God in Prayer. A 16 Mather's primary source is Patrick on Exod. 7:11 (Exodus 112–13), and Patrick's own is, among others, John Marsham's ample discussion of pagan magicians in Chronicus Canon Aegyptiacus (1672), speculum IX, pp. 136–40. Pliny (Naturalis Historia 30.1–6) describes the various magicians and wizards among the Greeks, Persians, Italians, Romans, Galls, and Egyptians, and how they were consulted for cures of all kinds. Perhaps the most forthcoming author on the topic of ancient magic and wizardry is the Roman writer of North Africa Lucius Apuleius of Madaurus (c. 125–c. 180 CE), who invokes his own Apologia. Sive pro se de magia liber (sec. 4, pars 90) in defense of his innocence: “Carmendas himself or Damigeron or Moses, or Jannes or Apollobex or Dardanus himself or any sorcerer of note from the time of Zoroaster and Ostanès till now.” In his annotations on the year of the world Anno Mundi 2513, Archbishop James Ussher (Annales Vêteris [1650], p. 20), relates how Moses at age 80 and his brother Aaron at 83 confronted Pharaoh and Jannes and Jambres (2 Tim. 3:8). Samuel Bochart, in his chapter on the significance of he-goats in Hebrew theology (Hierozoicon de Animalibus [1663], lib. 2, cap. 53, col. 645) has much to say on magic and the Egyptian magicians Jannes and Jambres. Rabbi Gedaliah Ibn Yahya ben Joseph (1515–c. 1587), of Imola, in his ספר שלשלת הקבלה Sefer Shalshelet ha-Kabbalah (Venice, 1587), also transliterated as Schalscheleth Hakkabbalah, offers a Latin equivalent for the names of Pharaoh's principal magicians. In an excerpt from Artapanus, Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 9.27.30, line 2; 435c) relates that Pharaoh called “the priests from [above] Memphis.” The competition between Moses and the Egyptian magicians engaged the imagination of the devout, as can be seen in The Book of Jannes and Jambres, an apocryphal fragment referred to by Origen (on Matthew 25) and by other medieval writers. See James H. Charlesworth, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha (2:427–42). See also D. B. Haycock, “Ancient Egypt in 17th and 18th-Century England” (133–160).

17 Attributed to St. Prosper of Aquitaine (c. 390–c. 463), in Liber de promissibus (pars 1, cap. 35). [PL 051. 0761], the gloss suggests that “the serpent of Moses devoured the serpents of the Magi, as the rod of our leader Christ, his teaching, has destroyed all the doctrines of the pagans and heretics by divine power.” Much the same can be found in Augustin Calmer's distinction between true and false miracles and their alleged causes, in “A Dissertation Upon True and False Miracles, And the Power of Demons and Angels over Bodies,” in Samuel Parker's Bibliotheca Biblica (1728), 4:420–42.

plain Confession, That he took Moses to be, as he is called in our Bible, A Man of God.¹⁸

Q. What was the Occasion, on which Pharaoh, went forth unto the Water{?} v. 15.

A. Perhaps, for a Recreation. Or, To worship the Nile. For, as Bochart observes out of Plutarch, οὐδεν οὕτω τιμῇ Αἰγυπτίοις ὡς ὁ Νεῖλος, Nothing was had in such honour among the Egyptians, as the River Nilus. If it were so in Moses's Days, Pharaoh might go thither to pay his Morning-Devotions.¹⁹

Or, If he were a Magician, as the Hebrewes fancy, he might be skilled in that which they call, ὑδρομαντεία. So they say in the Talmud; That this carried Pharaoh to the River. Jonathan follows it, in his Paraphrase, Behold, he goeth out, to observe Divinations upon the Water, as a Magician.²⁰

Patrick, on Exod. 8.20. saies, He might go to worship the Rising Sun; For Moses is bidden to go forth Early, to meet him.²¹

Q. Some further Thoughts on Pharaohs going out unto the Waters? v. 15.

A. Dr. Edwards in his very learned Essay, upon, The Idolatry of the Gentile-World, I perceive, inclines to the Opinion, That Pharaohs Intention was, to worship the Nile.²²

Atheneus tells us, That the Nile was called, The Egyptian Jupiter. It is an high Rant, that Lucan ha's concerning it;

²¹ The annotations on Exod. 7:15 and 8:20 are synopsized from Patrick (Exodus 118–19; 138).

²² Mather's commentary on verse 15 (including his citation references to Athenaeus, Lucan, and Selden) is extracted from “Discourse of the Idolatry or Polytheism of the Gentile World,” in Theologia Reformata (1713) 2:389, 390, by the English nonconformist and controversialist divine John Edwards, D.D. (1637–1716), whose many conservative apologetic publications Mather greatly appreciated. Pharaoh's reverence for the Nile River is mentioned in Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride (5.353a, line 2). On the topic of idolatry, see also J. Sheehan's article “Sacred and Profane” (2006).

Aut Jovis, in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo.*²³

Pharaoh now goes to pay his Adoration unto the River, which was esteemed such a Deity. It seems, from what we find in the following Chapter, it was his frequent & his daily Course, to repair unto the Nile on this account. It was in the Morning; The Idolaters made it their Early Devotion. They thought themselves not blessed in the ensuing Day, if they neglected this Homage in the Morning.

Mr. Selden, in his Treatise of the Syrian Gods; Syntag. 1. gives a particular Account of the Adoration paid unto the Nilus.²⁴

But now, imagine, how grievous & how dreadful a Plague, was the first of the Ten, which our GOD inflicted upon Egypt! For to turn into Blood the Waters of the River, which they revered as a God!

Q. What Remarks are to be made upon the Ten Plagues of Egypt? v. 16.

A. Many. But among the rest, there is a Curiosity in Old Prosper, so fine, and indeed so strain'd, that if it were not for the Antiquity of the Author, I would not have mention'd it.

He considers the Ten Plagues upon Egypt; and then he considers the Ten Commandments that God gave unto Israel: And in the Violation of each of those Ten Commandments, he finds a Spiritual Calamity upon the Children of Men, analogous unto that which each of the Ten Plagues, in their Order, brought upon the Egyptians.

The Matter may be too fancifully managed, for ought I know; but it will remain a Truth forever, That the Plagues of Egypt, are not so bad, as that of being left unto Sin against the Commandments of the God of Israel.²⁵

Q. In the Plague upon the Waters of Egypt, what Remarkable? v. 17.

²⁵ St. Prosper of Aquitaine's quasi typological and mystical comparison appears in his Liber de Promissionibus (pars 1, cap. 36, §§ 49–52) [PL 051. 0761–0763].

A. The δεκάπληγος ὄργη (as tis called by Cedrenus) upon Egypt, begins with a severe Infliction upon the Waters; which the Egyptians honoured above all the other Elements, as the Principle of all Things; and the River Nilus in a peculiar Manner.²⁶ Philo gives this as a Reason of the Plague upon the Waters; God sent a Curse upon that which they most Valued & Admired; their Idol proved a Plague unto them.²⁷ It is also to be observed, That the Blood of the Murdered Infants, which had been Drowned by Pharaohs Command, was thus repræsented by these Bloody Waters. The Colour of the Waters, now accused the Egyptians, of their Bloody Action, their Drowning so many Innocents.²⁸ Yea, there was an horrible Omen in this Matter; these Red Rivers, were a Presage of the Fate, which they were afterwards to undergo in the Red-Sea.

The Hebrew Doctors add one Reason more, for this Punishment; Because the Egyptians had hindred the Israelites from their wonted Baptisms; as tis expressed by, the Author of, The Life & Death of Moses; That is, saith Gaulmyn, from purifying themselves in the River, by Bathing, after they had lain in of their Children; which in the Scarcity of the Water in that Countrey, could no where be done, but in the River.²⁹

Q. A Remark on the First of the Miraculous Plagues, dispensed by Moses? v. 17.

A. It has been Remark'd by some; That Moses began his Miracles, with turning of Water into Blood. Our JESUS began His Miracles, with turning of Water into Wine. The Law brought by Moses, was a Dispensation of Deadly Terror. But the

²⁹ Simon Patrick on Exod. 7:17 (Exodus 121). Patrick here relies on Gilbert Gaulmin (1585–1665), a French philologist and statesman, whose notes on Michael Psellus. De vita et morte Mosis (1629), lib. 1, cap. 11, esp. pp. 253–55, are here paraphrased. The reference to the "Hebrew Doctors" who allegedly mention the "wonted Baptisms" of the Israelites is a misleading (if not a deliberate) swipe, which originates in Gaulmin's De vita et morte Mosis ("The Life and Death of Moses"). In the heading of chapter eleven, Gaulmin refers to the ritual cleansing of women in the Mikveh [miqveh] bath after menstruation, as "De Baptismo Iudaeorum, Confessione, Balneum mulierum" (lib. 1, cap. 11, pp. 252–55; see also p. 28). On second thought, Gaulmin's allusion to the ritual purification in the Mikveh may well be a pun on the Hebrew word for the "pools [reservoir] of water" (Exod. 7:19), which is rendered in the Hebrew original as מִקְוֵה "miqveh"; i. e., literally "gathering of waters," which in the first plague Moses turns into blood to punish Pharaoh. See also Midrash Rabbah (Exodus IX:10) for the likely origin of the connection between the ritual bath for purification and the waters of the Nile.

Gospel of our JESUS, is a Dispensation of Grace and Truth, which makes Glad the Heart of them that receive it. —³⁰

Q. The Time of the First Plague? v. 20.

A. Ussher makes Account, this first Plague was inflicted about the XVIIIth day of the Sixth Month; which in the next Year, and ever after, became the Twelfth Month.³¹

Q. Whence had the Magicians the Water, to try their Experiments upon? v. 22.

A. Dr. Patrick would have all Conjectures, to be superseded, with granting (as the History leads us to conclude,) that Moses did not in a Moment change all the Waters of the Countrey, but only those of the River, and afterwards, by Degrees all the rest; when the Magicians had first of all tried their Art upon some of them.³²

Q. When the Waters of Egypt were turned into Blood, it is said, Seven Days were fulfilled after that the Lord had smitten the River. What is there, that appears Remarkable, in this Period? v. 25.

A. Of Necessity, One of the Seven Days was that which must have been the Sabbath. Now upon a Sabbath must the Egyptians bee forced to Dig, & Delve, & to Toyl, for the seeking of potable Water. This was a Just Vengeance of God upon them, for denying the Liberty of a Sabbath unto the Israelites in their Servitude, who came thereby, tis probable, utterly to forgett that Ordinance of Heaven. They that had constrained others to work on the Sabbath, must now do it themselves.³³

Indeed, there is an Observation in Philosophy, about the Number Seven, in the Corruption of Waters; That if Water corrupt Seven Times, & are so often

³³ See also JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot: Exodus (2:51) for the significance of the seven-day time period of this plague. Nachmanides (Ramban) believes that "the Egyptians were unable to drink from the Nile, and had to dig around it for water, until seven days had passed."

purified, they never do corrupt any more. But it is unto little Purpose to observe it, in this Place.³⁴

Q. In what Space of Time, is it supposed, that the Ten Plagues were inflicted upon Egypt?

A. Tis by some supposed, That in Twenty Nine Dayes they were all dispatched.

The First Plague, in 7 dayes.

The Second, in 3.

The Fourth, in 3.

The Seventh, in 3.

The Eighth, in 3.

The Ninth, in 3.

The Third, in 2.

The Fifth, in 2.

The Sixth, in 2.

The Last, in 1.

Thus did *a Month devour them!*³⁵

Q. In the Plague from the Frogs, on Egypt, what Remarkable? v. 2.

A. T'was a Plague more grievous, than the former, which Turned the Waters into Blood. This Plague infested the Land, as well as the Waters; and it was unspeakably Troublesome to the People, in all their Senses.¹

Was there not in it also some Repræsentation of the Sin committed by the Egyptians? For, as one saies, Vagitus Infantium neglexerant Ranarum ad Modum Reptantium.²

It is likewise probable, that there were good Store of Toads among the Frogs.

Wee have read of other People, that have been sorely plagued with Frogs. The Abderitæ, were driven out of their Countrey by Frogs; and so were the Pæonians, and the Dardanians, and so the Indian Artoryti. —³

The Jewes add, Here was Mensura pro Mensurâ.⁴ For it was a Peece of their Bondage, That the Egyptians, when they pleased, sent them a fishing; & now the River spawn'd nothing but Frogs.

Q. The Magicians did so, with their Enchantments? v. 7.

A. They should rather have shown their Skill in Removing the Frogs, or in destroying those which Moses had brought. It may be thought, Pharaoh expected this from them; for they being unable to do it, he betook himself to Moses, whom he entreats, to take them away. He would never have done this, if their

1 Matthew Poole (Synopsis Criticorum 1:345) relates that according to Jacobus Bonfrerius, Cornelius à Lapide, and Valentinius Benedictus Pererius, this amphibious plague “severely vexed all the senses: vision, by their multitude and ugliness; hearing, by their croaking; smell, by the stench, either of the living, or of the dying; taste, by their befouling of foods; touch, by contact, and by lying together in the same bed” (Works 4:140). The miraculous multiplication of frogs is amplified by a several rabbinic scholars, in Midrash Rabbah (Exodus X:3).

2 “They [Egyptians] had disregarded the wails of the infants after the manner of crawling frogs.” The Latin passage is extracted from the annotations on Exod. 8:2, in Observationes Selectae (1723), p. 88, by Jakob Rhenferd (1654–1712), a German-Dutch philologist and professor of oriental languages at Franeker. See also Bochart (Hieroicoicon, lib. 5, cap. 2, col. 661, line 7).

3 Samuel Bochart (Hieroicoicon, lib. 4, cap. 13, col. 439, lines 29–38) relates how the populations of Paeonia and Dardania (modern Balkans), as well as those of a town in India, were overcome by a plague of frogs and other pests. Diodorus Siculus (3.30.3) knowingly reports that the Autariatae, an Illyrian people, believed “frogs were originally generated in the clouds, and when they fell upon the people in place of the customary rain, they forced them to leave their native homes and to flee for safety to the place where they now dwell.” Claudius Aelianus (De Natura Animalium 17.40) tells a similar story about a plague of scorpions driving out the good people of Lake Arrhatan, in India.

4 That God punishes his enemies “measure for measure” is affirmed in Midrash Rabbah (Exodus I:18, III:8). See also Maimonides, מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Rabbi Mosi Majemonidis Liber... Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 1, cap. 1, p. 6. For much the same, see BA 1:491, 492 (note 39).

Power had not quite failed here. So, Aben Ezra observes; He call'd for Moses; *Because he saw, the Magicians had only added unto the Plague, but could not diminish it.*⁵

Q. In what Sense are to be taken the Words of Moses to Pharaoh, Glory over me? v. 9.

A. “Glory, that thou hast such an one as I am to stand thy Friend so far as to prevail with the Lord, for the Removal of the Frogs from thee. This is more than all thy Magicians can do for thee!” Hanc spem de tuis magis habere non potes. Thus Munster carries it.⁶ Bochart's Paraphrase is much approved by Patrick: (adding the Word, Saying;) “Tho’ it belongs not unto thee, to determine the Time of thy Deliverance, which depends wholly upon the Will and Pleasure of God; yett I, who am His Minister, give thee Leave, to take so much upon thee, as to præscribe what Time thou pleasest, for the Removal of this Plague.” *Glory over me, by telling me when I shall Intercede for thee.*⁷

Bonfrerius ha’s express’d in short, the literal Sense of the Hebrew Words; Tibi hunc honorem desero, ut eligas, quando – &c⁸

Q. Is there any Monument of Antiquity, concurring with the Mosaic History of the Plague of Lice upon the Egyptians?

A. Herodotus, (L. 2. c. 37.) saies; That the Egyptian Priests did on every Third Day shave their Bodies, ἵνα μήτε φθειρ, μήτε τι ἄλλο μυσσάρων – *That neither a Louse, nor any other unclean thing may be about them in their Worship.*⁹ And Plutarch in his Isis, gives this Reason for the Linen-Garments worn by the Priests of Egypt; because that Sort of Garments, was ἡκίστα φθειροποιον, *the least apt to breed Lice.*¹⁰ Now saies our most learned Bochart; Quas cautiones crediderim illos habuisse in 5 Extracted from Patrick (Exodus 129), whose source – including that of R. Aben (Ibn) Ezra on Exod. 8:3 (Commentary: Exodus 157) – is Matthew Poole’s synopsis on Exod. 8:8 (Synopsis Criticorum 1:345). See also Bochart (Hieroicoicon, pars 2, lib. 5, cap. 2, col. 663, lines 20–31) – all sharing the same information.

6 Mather’s Latin citation of Sebastian Münster’s gloss on Exod. 8:9 appears in Hebraica Biblia (1546) 1:127, note c). Aaron taunts Pharaoh, saying “You cannot get this hope from your magicians.”

7 Bochart's paraphrase (Hieroicoicon, pars 2, lib. 5, cap. 2, col. 664, lines 7–20) and Patrick's annotations are extracted from Patrick (Exodus 130–31).

8 Patrick (Exodus 131) cites the annotations on Exod. (8:9) from Pentateuchus Moysis commentario (1625), pp. 377, by the Flemish Jesuit scholar and professor of Hebrew at Douai, Jacobus Bonfrerius (1573–1642). Mather gleans Bonfrerius’s Latin comment from Patrick, but does not provide Patrick's translation, which reads, “I will do thee the honour, that thou may’st assign the time.”

9 Adapted from Herodotus (3.37, line 8), which reads (with the diacritics restored) ἵνα μήτε φθειρ, μήτε ἄλλο μυσσάρων.

10 Adapted from ἡκίστα δὲ φθειροποιόν, in Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride (352e, line 11).

*hujus plagæ memoriam; illâ enim verisimile est Magos et Sacerdotes gravius fuisse afflicto.*¹¹ He thinks, 't'was in remembrance of this Plague, which fell more severely on the Magicians, (the Priests) than any others.

Q. I have seen that Question putt, Why did God punish the Egyptians, with such Mean, Vile, Inconsiderable Animals, as Lice, rather than Lions or some other more devouring Monsters? v. 17.

A. I have seen an Answer given to it. It is old Philo's Answer. The Design of God was to Correct the Egyptians, & not to Destroy them. Had Hee designed their Destruction, Hee needed the Help of no Animals at all: Hee had Plagues enough to have done it.

Moreover, It was a Divine and Glorious Triumph over the Pride of Haughty Pharaoh, to make him stoop to a Louse! How could he have held up his Head, against the Angel, whom God sent against Sennacherib?¹²

We may add, (this last Observation is in Dr. Patrick,) That tho' we read of particular Persons, who for great Crimes, were punished with the Plague of Lice, yett we do not find in any Story, a whole Nation infested with them. | But there is a Dispute among Interpreters, what these Creatures were, which our Translation has called, Lice.¹³ The Septuagint, as we call it, and Philo, translate it by a Word, which according to Pliny, & Columella, & Hesychius, & Origen, signifies, a Sort of Gnatts.¹⁴ It seems unto some, to have been a New Sort of Creature called Analogically by an old & a known Name; which is the Conjecture of

11 Says our most learned Bochart (Hieroicoon, pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 18, sec 579, lines 33–35), "I might believe that they [priests] had held these precautions to promote the memory of this plague [of lice], for it is probably that the wizards and the priests had been more seriously afflicted by it."

12 The two preceding paragraphs are paraphrase of Bochart (Hieroicoon, pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 18, sec. 578, line 74–sec. 579, line 25), who also cites Philo's answer from De Vita Mosis (1.19.110). According to 2 Kings 19:35, God sent his angel against King Sennacherib (BCE 705–681) of Assyria and slew "an hundred fourscore and five thousand" of his troops. On this feat, see also Pierre-Daniel Huet's Alnetanae quaestiones (1690), lib. 2, cap. 12, sec. 12, pp. 198–99.

13 Patrick on Exod. 8:18 (Exodus 136). The Hebrew phrase לִכְנִיִּם [lekinnim] (Exod. 8:16), derived from the noun כֶּן [ken] (Strong's ## 3654, B4589), suggests "gnat, gnats, gnat-swarm," but also "lice." The former interpretation is supported by Philo, Origen, Munster, Fagius, Rivet, Vatablus, and Grotius; the latter, by Drusius, Pagnine, Montanus, Tigurinus, Oleaster, Ainsworth, and others (Poole's Synopsis Criticorum 1:347 and Works 4:149–50). Whatever loathsome vermin it might have been, the itch, assuredly, was quite real in either case.

14 The LXX on Exod. 8:17 renders it "σκνίφες" [skniphes], "lice" or "gnats." Philo Judaeus (De Vita Mosis 1.26.145, line 1) has "σκνίπες" [sknipes], i. e., "lice" (Works 472). Pliny (Naturalis historia 11.1.2 and 11.41.118) calls them "culices," variously signifying "fleas" and "gnats." Ancient Rome's premier writer on agriculture, Lucius Junius Moderatus Columella (fl. 20–60 CE) offers remedies for fly-blown wounds in De re rusticate (6.33.1; 7.13.1–2) where he speaks generically of "muscas" (flies) and "pulix" (fleas). Hesychius (Commentarius brevis, Psalm 104, sec. 31, line 3) also has "σκνίπες" [sknipes], but Origen (Contra Celsus 5.7.30) spells it "σκνίφες" [skniphes], i. e., "gnats." Well, there it is.

Pererius, & approved by Rivet.¹⁵ Some take this to be the Reason, why the Magicians could not counterfeit or emulate this Miracle, as they did what went before.

Q. The Speech of the Magicians upon the Plague of Lice, This is the Finger of God! How do you understand it? v. 19.

A. My Dr. Lightfoot understands it, as an Hideous & Horrid Blasphemy.¹⁶

You may observe, That in the Two Foregoing Plagues, of Blood, and Frogs, Moses gave Warning thereof, before hand; but of this hee gave no Warning. And, that the Lice also fell upon the Israelites as well as the Egyptians; for wee read not of any Severing between Goshen and Egypt, until the next of the Plagues, which was that of the Flies.

When Moses turn'd the Waters of Egypt into Blood, the Sorcerers turn'd the Waters of Goshen too. When Moses brought Frogs upon Egypt, the Sorcerers brought Frogs upon Goshen too. And so, they still think, that their God, is as considerable as the Jehovah of Israel: altho' these two Plagues, were not felt so much by the Israelites perhaps, as by the Egyptians.

But when the Plague of Lice comes, it comes upon Goshen, from the Lord Himself: The Lord laid it as a Plague upon His own People: They had partook so much in the Sins of Egypt, that they must also partake in some of its Plagues.

For this Reason, the Man of God, in the Seventy Eighth Psalm, reckoning up the Plagues of Egypt, mentions not the Plague of Lice; because that was æqually a Plague to Israel, as to the Egyptians; and a Plague from the Lord. Indeed, the Israelites had Blood & Frogs, as well as the Egyptians; but not from the Lord.

The Egyptians acknowledged a supreme Deitie, whom they adored with, and in their petty Deities. They adored not an Ox, a Dog, a Crocodile, but the Good Useful, Helpful Qualities thereof; as Eusebius intimates.¹⁷

Now, they accounted not, JEHOVAH, the God of the Hebrewes, any other than a petty God; such as every Nation had one or more of: A God able to do something, as they saw in the Blood & the Frogs; but not All things; nor, so much as Their own God was able to Do. Who is JEHOVAH? saies Pharaoh; I know not JEHOVAH.

So then, the Words of the Egyptians may seem to bee of this Importance; “When Blood and Frogs came upon us, Moses did from Jehovah, give Warning thereof; but these Lice came without any Warning. Hence tis plain, this is none of Jehovahs Doing; If it were, Moses would have known of it. Again, when the Jehovah of the Hebrewes brought Blood and Frogs upon our Land, Hee brought none upon Theirs; Hee spared His own People; but these Lice are upon them, as well as upon us; and this without the Doing; Wherefore This is not from Jehovah, who certainly would not vex His own People. But this is done by the Finger of Elohim, the Supream Deity of all; and Jehovah still is a God of no value with us.”¹⁸

Q. Some Remarks upon the Plague of Flies, wherewith God visited the Egyptians? v. 21.

A. It is amiss in our Translation, to render the Word only, A Swarm; Tho’ many of the Ancients (besides Josephus,) have done so, and left it applicable unto a Colluvies of Beasts of all Sorts.¹⁹ Bochart proves, That Arob, the Name used here, signifies one certain Animal; and indeed otherwise, how could it be said, Exod. 8.31. That not one Arob was left? He proves, That it was, particularly the Cynomyia, or the Dog-flie; and he shewes, That the Lord singled out this Flie, for the Vexation of the Egyptians, not only because it was a very grievous one, but also, because it was peculiarly odious unto the Egyptians, for its being so injurious unto the Dogs, a Creature by them worshipped.²⁰

*Omnigenumque Deum monstra, et latrator Anubis.*²¹

Huguenot Pierre Jurieu (1637–1713), in A Critical History of the Doctrines and Worships (Both Good and Evil) of the Church (1705) – all of which works Mather put to good use throughout his Biblia Americana. See also R. Smolinski, “Eager Imitators” and D. B. Haycock, “Ancient Egypt in 17th and 18th-Century England.”

I add, from Dr. Patrick, the Flies were so venomous, as to leave a Poison in the Bodies they stung. Many of them Swell'd & Dy'd upon it. The Psalmist understood it so. Psal. LXXVIII. 45.²²

When Trajan assaulted the Agarens, he was so assaulted with them, as to desist from the Enterprize.²³

Q. When this Plague, forced from Pharaoh, a Concession for the Israelites to sacrifice in the Land, Moses answers, Lo, we shall sacrifice the Abomination of the Egyptians before their Eyes; and will they not stone us? v. 26.²⁴

A. 'Tis well-known, That the Egyptians worshipped a Beef. Besides the Apis of the Memphites, and the Mnevis of the Heliopolitans, a Beef is mention'd by Strabo, under this Character, ἅπαντες κοινῇ τιμῶσιν Αἰγυπτίοι. All the Egyptians worship it.²⁵ And Herodotus reports a Cow sacred among them, on the account of Isis.²⁶ A Ram, and a Goat were as Inviolably Sacred; for their Jupiter Ammon had a Rams Head; and Mendes, or Pan, the Face and Feet of a Goat.²⁷ Hence the Poet,

— *Lanatis animalibus abstinet omnis
Mensa, nefas illic fetum jugulare capellae*.²⁸

²² Patrick (Exodus 138).

R. Joshua saies, That a Ram was the more Holy among them, for their Opinion, that their Countrey was peculiarly under the Sign of Aries;²⁹ But, lett Cicero's account of them, serve instead of all; (in his Tusculan Questions.) Ægyptiorum morem quis ignorat? quorum imbutæ mentes pravitatis erroribus quamvis carnificinam prius subierint, quam Ibim, aut Aspidem, aut Felem, aut Canem, aut Crocodilum violent? Quorum etiamsi imprudentes quippiam fecerint, pœnam nullam recusent.³⁰ Accordingly Diodorus tells us, That he was an Ey-Witness, of the Fury with which the Egyptian Mob, fell upon a Roman Souldier, for accidentally killing a Catt.³¹ And the Zeal of Religion sometimes on this account, you find celebrated in Juvenal, where he brings a Tentyrite with a Cannibal fury devouring an Ombite, because one worshipped an Hawk, t'other a Crocodile.³²

Moses then had sufficient Reason to be slow of Killing for Sacrifices, the Creatures whom the Ægyptians worshipped as their Gods.

Or, If not the Creatures, yett the Ceremonies of the Sacrifices, would be offensive to the Egyptians.³³

29 R. Joshua as quoted in Ibn Ezra on Exod. 8:22 (Commentary: Exodus 165). "Rabbi Joshua further states that the god of Egypt was shaped like a lamb [ram] because the Egyptians believed that the constellation of the lamb ruled over their land." See also Maimonides, Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 46, p. 481.

30 Cicero, Tusculan Disputations (5.27.78): "Who does not know of the custom of the Egyptians? Their minds are infected with degraded superstitions and they would sooner submit to any torment than injure an ibis or asp or cat or dog or crocodile, and even if they have unwittingly done anything of the kind there is no penalty from which they would recoil."

31 Diodorus Siculus (1.83.8, lines 10–15). Little did the poor soldier know that he had killed the feline goddess Bastet, sacred to the people of Bubastis.

32 Juvenal (Satire 15.6) is bemused by the feud between the Egyptian cities Tentyra and Ombi because the former revered the ancient falcon-headed Horus (son of Isis and Osiris), whereas the latter adored the crocodilian Sobek (son of Seth and Neith), god of the Nile. See also R. H. Wilkinson (Complete Gods, 200–11, 218–20).

33 Mather's primary source for his annotations on Exod. 8:26 – including his citations from, and references to Roman, Greek, and Hebrew authors – is Bochart's encyclopedic Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 16, col. 559–62, esp. 559 [lines 48] to 561 [line 10]). See also Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:349) and Works (4:157–58).

Q. While the Plagues were inflicted on the Egyptians, there was an Exemption of the Israelites, from a Share in them. And there is particular Notice on this Occasion taken, of their being in the Land of Goshen. How did that Land ly? v. 1.

A. It lay on the East Part of the Land of Egypt, and was the best Part of it. It was on every Side surrounded with the Land of Egypt, except on the East Side, where the Red-Sea lay upon it. It was the Policy of the Egyptian Pharaohs, to keep the Israelites in such a Scituation, & so wedged in, that they could not without Leave, pluck up Stakes & be gone.¹

I will take notice of a Criticism on this Occasion. The Lord had said, ch. VIII. 22. I will sever in that Day the Land of Goshen. The Word implies in it, something that carries Wonderment with it. The Lord uses a Word, which renders it much as if He had said, I will separate the Land of Goshen, & will therein do a marvellous Thing.²

The Separation of the Christian Jews, that carried them to Pella, at & from the Destruction of Jerusalem, carried them to a Place, which harmonizes with the Word /פלא/ used here.³

Moreover, It is there said, I will putt a Division between my People & thy People. The Word which we render Division, signifies, Redemption. /פרת/ We are

1 The applicable source may well be An Historical Geography of the Old Testament (1711–12), vol. 1, ch. 13, p. 369, a three-volume geography, by Edward Wells, D.D. (1667–1727), Anglican clergyman, educator, and rector in Cotesbach, Leicestershire. Mather also employs this source in his glosses on Exod. ch. 14 (below) as well as on Gen. ch. 11 (BA 1:836–37). According to Wells, the Land of Goshen is also known as “the Land of Rameses” (Gen. 47:11). The LXX renders “Goshen, by Ἡρώων πόλιν Heroum urbs [Gen. 46:28], the same which by some Writers is simply called Heroum, and is, by the Consent of ancient Geographers, placed in the Eastern Part of Egypt, not far from the Arabian Gulf. So that from hence it may be well inferred, that the Land of Goshen was situated in the Easterly Part of Egypt, betwixt the River Nile, and the Town called Heroum; and consequently, that therein stood the City Rameses” (1:369). See also Claudius Ptolemaeus (Geographia 4.5.54, line 4) and Eusebius Pamphilus (Onomasticon 94, line 11).

2 See Henry Ainsworth on Exod. 8:22 (Annotations, second series of pagination, p. 27). The best source is still Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:347) and Works (4:154).

3 Mather typologically links Exod. 9:4 “And the Lord shall sever” [וַהֲפִלָּהּ] and Deut. 30:11 “it is not hidden [separated] from thee” [נִפְלְאָתָא] with Pella [פלא], one of ten prominent cities of the Decapolis in Roman times (HBD), frequently identified as the city of refuge to which early Christians fled during the Jewish revolt (66–70 CE) just prior to the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus Flavius Sabinus Vespasianus (39–81 CE). Mather evidently alludes to Matth. 24:15–18, the prophetic command to flee Jerusalem when “the abomination of desolation ... stand[s] in the holy place” (24:15).

here led unto Thoughts of the Spiritual Redemption, which our great Redeemer has wrought out for us.⁴

This may be a Reason, why the Outstretched Arm of the Lord, is often mentioned in the Deliverance of Israel from Egypt. The Holy Spirit would lead us to the Redemption wrought by our Saviour, whose Name is, The Arm of the Lord.⁵

Q. How did the Plague of the Boyls proceed? v. 9.

A. Instead of the Ashes, which Moses and Aaron threw up into the Air, there came down a small Sleet, like that of Snow, or the Hoar-frost, which scalded the Flesh of Man and Beast, & raised a Blister in every Part, on which it fell. The Poison of this penetrating into the Flesh, made sore Swellings, like those we now call Bubo's; Compare, Lev. 13.18, 19. with Deut. 28.27.⁶

This Plague was inflicted about the Third Day of the Seventh Month, according to Dr. Ushers Computation. Who thinks it probable (as many others do,) that from hence the Tale came to be spread among the Heathens, that the Egyptians drave the Israelites out of Egypt, because they were scabby; lest the Infection should spread all over the Countrey. They endeavoured, in future Ages, to make it beleaved, that what befel themselves, was a Plague on the Israelites.⁷

Tis thought by some, that from hence came the Calamity, which Trogus Pompeius, and Diodorus Siculus, and Tacitus, and other Heathens cast on the Hebrews, That they were expelled {from} Egypt, for being Scabby and Leprous; A gross Mistake! It was for their having brought such Diseases on the EGYPTIANS.⁸

⁶ Patrick (Exodus 150). Mather also alludes to Philo’s account De Vita Mosis (1.22.127), according to which the dust caused “a terrible, and most painful, and incurable ulceration over the whole skin both of man and of the brute beasts; and immediately their bodies became swollen with the pustules, having blisters all over them full of matter which any one might have supposed were burning underneath and ready to burst. ... For there was one vast uninterrupted sore to be seen from head to foot” (Works 471).

Q. The Magicians could not stand before Pharaoh, because of the Boils? v. 11.

A. This Plague siezing on them, and in Pharaohs Presence too, perfectly confounded them.

Tho' since the Plague of Lice, which they could not counterfeit, we read of no Attempt, they ventured to make, to vie Miracles with Moses and Aaron; yett they still continued about Pharaoh, & endeavoured to settle him in his Resolution, not to lett Israel go: Perhaps perswading him, that tho' Moses for the Present had found out some Secret beyond their Skill, they should at last be too hard for him. Whereas now being on a sudden smitten with these Ulcers, they were so amazed, that we do not find, they appeared again, to look Moses in the face. For now, as the Apostle speaks, Their Folly was manifested unto all Men: [1. Tim. 3. 8, 9.] In that they could not defend themselves, from this terrible Stroke; which publickly siezing on them before Moses, in the Sight of Pharaoh & all his Servants, rendred them so contemptible, that we never hear more of them.⁹

Q. What is the Meaning of that Passage, I will send all my Plagues upon thine Heart? v. 14.

A. Patrick thus paraphrases it; "Such as will make thy Heart Ake; not only afflict thy Body and Goods, but fill thy Soul with Terror, or Grief, or Rage."

All my Plagues.] Tis truly expounded by Menochius; *Not all that I am able, but all that I design to send for thy Destruction.*¹⁰

Q. That Passage; For now I will stretch out my Hand, that I may smite thee, & thy People with Pestilence? v. 15, 16.

A. We do not read of a New Pestilence upon Pharaoh. Fagius, and Hacspan, and Junius, translate these Words, I had smitten thee & thy People with Pestilence, (when I destroy'd thy Cattel with a Murrain,) and thou hadst been cutt off from expelled him [Moses], with those who had the disease, out of Egypt, that the distemper might not spread among a greater number" (Justin's Epitome of the Philippic History, p. 245). Diodorus Siculus (34/35.1.1–2; 40.3.1–2) relates that the Egyptians expelled "lepers" and "aliens," who were blamed for the wrath of the gods. Publius Cornelius Tacitus (Historiarum 5.3), referring to a consensus of writers, argues that Bocchoris, king of Egypt, consulted the oracle of Hammon and cleansed Egypt by expelling Moses and all those who were disfigured by the disease. Much the same is reported by the Egyptian historian Manetho (Aegyptiaca, fragm. 54), in a fragment extant in Josephus Flavius (Contra Apion 1.26–35).

⁹ Patrick (Exodus 151–52).

Q. The Plague of the Hail? v. 18.

A. Such as hath not been in Egypt.] It shewes, that the Rain was not frequent in Egypt, yett sometimes they had both Rain & Hail also.

The Author of, The Life & Death of Moses, fancies, God sent this to punish the Egyptians for the Drudgery they imposed on the Israelites, in making them Till their Fields for them.

The Miraculousness of this Plague, did particularly appear in this, That whereas other Storms of Hail generally reach but a little Way, (sometimes not a Mile,) this extended over the whole Countrey.¹²

Q. On that Passage; Entreat the Lord, for it is enough? v. 28.

A. In the Original it sounds no more than this; And Much. If we refer it unto the Act of Prayer, as Arias Montanus does, it may import Pharaohs Request for very much Prayer. q.d. “Intreat the Lord, not Negligently, Perfunctorily, Indifferently; but Much Earnestly, Zelously, with Importunity.” Compare, Jon. III. 8. /רַב/ is as much as, ικανως και μεγαλως.¹³

11 Patrick (Exodus 155–56). Mather (via Patrick) refers to the translation of, and annotation on, Exod. 9:15, in Thargum hoc est Paraphrasis Onkeli (1546), sign. L⁴ and L^{4v}, by the distinguished German Hebraist at Strasbourg and Cambridge Paulus Fagius, aka. Paul Büchlein (1504–49); to Theodor Hacksan (on Exod. cap. 9), in his Notarum Philologico-Theologicarum (1664), pp. 324–25; and to the collaborative Latin translation of, and annotations in, Biblia Sacra (1593), p. 63, notes 8–11, by the Huguonot Franciscus Junius, the elder (1542–1602), and the Italian-Jewish converso Immanuel Tremellius (1510–80) – all preferring the simple past or pluperfect to solve the implied contradiction. See also Matthew Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:350) and Works (4:165–66), which, however, do not include the reference to Hackspan.

12 Patrick (Exodus 157, 158–159) and Gaulmin’s De Vita et Morte Mosis (1629), p. 30, # 7. Mather (via Patrick) refers to the apocryphal Wisdom of Solomon 16:16, 22 – although neither verse explicitly mentions that the seventh plague covered the whole country. Patrick’s source for this reference is Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:351) on Exod. 9:24. The extraordinary magnitude of the hailstorm mixed with fire and thunder (the seventh plague) was of great interest to pious Poole, for he cites both ancients and moderns to show conflicting evidence: that it neither rains nor hails in Egypt (Claudianus Mamertus, Pliny, Josephus, and Philo); conversely, that it does rain or hail there (André Thevet and Seneca) or, in any case, that it does so only rarely (Jacobus Bonfrerius and Jacobus Tirinus). All too common, experts agree to disagree.

13 The distinguished Spanish-Jewish converso Benito Arias Montanus (1527–98), in the famous Antwerp Polyglot Biblia Sacra, Hebraice, Chaldaice (1571), on Exod. 9:28, offers, “et multum, nè sint voces”; i. e., “And more, lest there be voices” (Poole, Synopsis Criticorum 1:351; Works 471). Mather’s cryptic /רַב/ [Strong’s # 7227] suggests (among others) “much,” “abundant” as well as “enough,” a signification which Mather apparently finds confirmed in Origen’s Fragmenta in Psalmos (Psalm 97:5–6, line 15), where the Alexandrian Father uses the Greek

Q. On that Passage; I know, that Ye will not yett fear the Lord God? v. 30.

A. Dr. Gell observes, The Word also signifies, Prius, or, Before. See Exod. I. 19.

And so it may be, as if Moses had said, I know Yee are all afraid of the wrathful Face of the Lord God, before I pray. This Disposition in the Egyptians, might be a good Motive unto Moses, to pray for them; and also bespeak the Pitty of Heaven to them.¹⁴

Q. Wee have Occasion to touch upon the ancient Agriculture. We read, The Flax & the Barley was smitten; for the Barley was in the Ear, and the Flax was bolled. But the Wheat and the Rye were not smitten; for they were not grown up. This may seem strange unto English Observers, who call Barley, Summer-Corn sown so many Months after Wheat, and (beside Hordeum Polystichon, or, Big-Barley,) sow not Barley in the Winter, to anticipate the Growth of Wheat? v. 31, 32.¹⁵

A. But (as tis observed by Sir Tho. Brown,) in Egypt, the Barley-Harvest, was before the Wheat-Harvest. We know, that it was in Judea so. Of Ruth we read, that she came into Bethlehem, at the Beginning of Barley-Harvest, and staid unto the End of Wheat-Harvest. And it was the Custome of the Jewes, to offer the Barley Sheaf of the First-fruits in March, and a Cake of Wheat-Flower but at the End of Pentecost.¹⁶ Theophrastus observes, That the Egyptians also sowed their Barley early, in reference to their First-fruits; And the same Author mentions it, as a common Rural Practice; Maturè seritur Triticum; Hordeum, quod etiam maturius seritur. Wheat and Barley are sow'd early; but (he saies) Barley the earlier of the Two.¹⁷ phrase ικανώς και μεγάλως to signify “ably and powerfully.” On Montanus, see B. Rekers, Benito Arias Montano (1972).

¹⁷ Thomas Browne, “Observations” (Works 3:255), cites Aristotle’s successor Theophrastus of Eressos (c. 372–287 BCE), who discusses the seasonal planting of wheat and barley in Egypt,

Flax was also an early Plant. The Israelites kept their Passeover in Gilgal, on the Fourteenth Day of the First Month. And the Spies, which were sent from Shittim unto Jericho, not many dayes before; were hid by Rahab under the Stalks of Flax, which lay drying on the Top of her House: which argues that the Flax was newly gathered. For this was the first Preparation of the Flax, and before the Fluviation, or the Rotting, which Pliny tells us, was after Wheat-Harvest.¹⁸

The Wheat and the Rye, we read, were not now grown up. Moses understood the Husbandry of Egypt. Perhaps he may emphatically declare the State of the Wheat and the Rye, this particular Year. If so, the Time of the Flood of Nilus, and the Measure of its Inundation, is to be considered. If that were very high, and the Ground were over-drenched, they were forced unto a later Seed-time; and so the Wheat and the Rye escaped. They were Grains that grew more slowly, and by reason of the greater Inundation of the River, they might this Year be sown later than ordinary; especially in the Plains near the River.

By this Account, of the Grains, which were smitten, and which escaped, the Plague of the Hail seems to happen in February. This is to be collected, both from the New and Old Account of the Seed-time and Harvest in Egypt.¹⁹

According to Radzevil, the Rising of the River is in June; and the Banks are cutt in September; they sow about St. Andrewes, when the Flood is retired, & the Ground growing moderately Dry permitteth it. The Barley anticipating the Wheat, either in time of Sowing or Growing, might be in the Ear in February.²⁰

According to Pliny, they cast the Seed, upon the Slime and Mud, when the River is down; which commonly happens in the Beginning of November. They begin to reap and cutt down, about the Middle of March, and in the Month of May, their Harvest is in. So the Barley anticipating the Wheat, it might be in the in De historia plantarum (8.1.sec. 3, 5–6). One of the esteemed dual-language editions of Theophrastus in the seventeenth century is Theophrasti Eresii Historia Plantarum Libri Decem Graecè & Latinè (1644), edited by Julius Caesare Scaliger. Mather also puts Browne's material from Theophrastus to good use in BA (1:326, 481, 483 etc.). Much the same is related in Bochart's Hieroicoicon (pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 3, col. 462), which may well have been Sir Thomas's own source in this instant. See also R. David Kimchi's annotation on the maturation of wheat and barley (Exod. 9:31), cited in Münster's Hebraica Biblia (1546), fol. 230, note g, and of course Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:352–53) and Works (4:171–72).

Mikołaj Krzysztof VIII Radziwiłł (1549–1616), of Vilna (Lithuania). First published in Polish and appearing in a Latin translation in 1601 (Brunsbergae), the Latin edition was reprinted several times. See also BA (1:1038). The Feast of St. Andrews (a first-century apostle of Bethsaida) is observed on November 30th.

Ear in February; and the Wheat not yett grown up, at least unto the Spindle, or Ear, to be destroy'd by the Hail.²¹

The Turning of the River into Blood, shewes in what Month these things did not happen. That is, Not when the River had overflown; For it is said, The Egyptians digged round about the River, for Water to drink. This they could not have done, if the River had been up, and the Fields under Water.²²

But how can we, without some Hæitation pass over the Translation of Rye. The Original Cassumeth, is by the Greek rendred, Olyra; by the French and Dutch, Spelta; the Latin, Zea; and not Secale, the known Word for Rye. The common Rye, so well understood at present, was not well known to early Antiquity; or, at least, we have it not very distinctly described. In this Uncertainty, some have thought it the Typha of the Ancients.

Cordus will have it be Olyra; and Ruellius will have it some kind of Oryza. But we have no vulgar and well-known Name for those Grains; we embrace an Appellation of near Affinity; we tolerably enough render it, Rye.²³

While Flax and Barley, and Wheat and Rye are named, it may be wondred, that no mention is made of Rice; wherewith at present Egypt so much aboundeth. But it may be doubted, whether this Grain grew so early in that Countrey. Rice is originally a Grain of India, and might not be then transplanted into Egypt.²⁴

Q. The Time of this Plague?

A. The Flax & Barley were smitten.] Whence N. Fuller observes, That it fell out in the Month Abib. So Usher observes, in his Annals. It appears by Pliny and others, that Barley began to ripen in those Countreyes, in March, but Wheat, not until April.

Herm. Conringius a little differs from this Account; For he thinks, (in his Treatise, De Initio Anni Sabbatici;) that this Hail fell in the Month of February.

²³ Browne, "Observations" (Works 3:257). Browne refers to Valerii Cordi Simesusij Annotationes Pedanij Dioscoridis (1561), p. 42, by the German botanist, herbalist, and physician Valerius Cordus (1515–44), who discovered ether and authored an acclaimed book on pharmaceutical and herbal medicines, Dispensatorium sive pharmacorum omnium (1535). The French physician Joannes Ruellius, aka. Jean Ruel (1479–1537), is best known for his De Natura Stirpium libri tres (1536) and for publishing his Latin translation of Dioscorides's De materia medica (1516). Significantly, a handbook on the Latin nomenclature of plants, Pedanij Dioscoridis Anazarbei, De Medicinali Materia Libri Sex, Ioanne Ruellio suessionensi interprete (Franc[furt]: apud Chr. Egenolphum, n.d.), which includes both Ruellius's Latin translation of the Greek physician and pharmacologist Pedanius Dioscorides c. 40–90 CE) and the annotations of Valerius Cordus, identifies Olyra [Bromus secalinus] as a type of rye, and Oryza [Oryza sativa], originating in India, as rice (lib. 2, cap. 87 and cap. 92, pp. 125, 127, 474).

The English Hebraist Nicholas Fuller (c. 1557–1626), prebendary of Salisbury Cathedral, insists that this plague occurred in the month of Abib (March/April), in his respected Miscellanea Theologicorum (1617), lib. 3, cap. 11, pp. 389–90. James Ussher (Annals [1658], p. 14) seconds Fuller's choice. Pliny reports that in Egypt, barley is harvested "in the sixth month after sowing and wheat in the seventh" (Naturalis historia 18.10.60); the German polymath Hermann Conringius (1606–81) points to the month of February, when flax and barley were ripening in Egypt, in De initio anni Sabbatici et tempore messis Ebraeorum commentariolus (1675), pp. 174–75. Conringius (p. 175) enlists for support De Re Rustica (2.7; 2.8.2; 2.10.17–18), by the Roman tribune and writer on agriculture Lucius Junius Moderatus Columella (4–70 CE). Mather also draws on Columella in BA (1:619, 655); for Mather's analysis of the formation of hail, see his Christian Philosopher, ch. 15, pp. 69–70. The Month of "October" and "the VIIth of the Ides of December" in the ancient Julian Calendar correspond to the eighth month (August) and, respectively, the seventh day (before the Ides) of the tenth month (October 15th), in our Gregorian Calendar. The latter was adopted by RC Europe in October, 1582, but Protestant England did not follow suit until January 1, 1752.

Q. A Taste, or two, if you please, of the Egyptian Locusts? {v. 6.}

A. There was in the Plague of Locusts upon Egypt, something extraordinary; even what neither their Fathers, nor their Fathers Fathers had seen, since the Day that they were upon the Earth.

I suppose, there is no need of our concluding, That the Locusts were of a Dimension more than ordinary; like those Indian Locusts, whereof some, according to Pliny, were Three Foot long, & some Four Cubits; and when they were Dead, & Dried, their Legs were used instead of Sawes.¹

It is enough, that they were more Numerous, and more Mischievous than ordinary.

Unto what, Mischievous? For we read, in the præceding Chapter, The Hail had smote every Herb of the Field, & broke every Tree of the Field.² Some have imagined a Years Time, to intervene between the two Plagues, of the Hail and the Locusts. Besides other Arguments to confute that Imagination, lett this be considered. From the Time that Moses began to work his Miracles in Egypt, unto the Time of his Departure out of this World, there passed præcisely Forty Years. [Exod. 7.7. with Deut. 34.1, 5.] And the Israelites were Forty Years in the Wilderness. (Josh. 5.6.) If Moses now spent a Year, in doing his Miracles in Egypt, there would not have been allow'd Forty Years for that Peregrination of the Israelites.

Consider then a little further, That it is here expressly said, (v. 5, 12, 15.) That the Locusts did Eat the Residue of that which had escaped, and remained unto them from the Hail; – even, what the Hail had left. And what was that? We read, ch. 9.31, 32. The Wheat and the Rie were not smitten, for they were not grown up. According to Pliny, the Wheat in Egypt, comes a Month after the Barley.³

The Wind which brought in the Locusts upon Egypt, (which we translate, An East-Wind,) was probably, A South-Wind. The Greek renders it, Νότον, and [14v] Λίβα, and Καύσωνα.⁴ And so the Wind probably brought | them from Ethiopia; a Land very Fruitful of these horrible Plagues. Whole Nations there, as

¹ Pliny (Naturalis historia 11.35.103) introduces this tall tale with the caveat, “In India, it is said.” Perhaps inspired by Joel 1:2, 4, 6, Gilbert Gaulmin (De Vita Mosis, p. 30, # 8) believed the locusts of the eighth plague had teeth very similar to those of lions. Gerard Vossius details the voracious appetite of the locusts and their devastating effect on any and all plants (De Theologia Gentili [1641], lib. 4, cap. 94–95, pp. 1625–32); Samuel Bochart (Hieroicoicon, pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 1–8, pp. 441–96) obliges us with their biblical signification in all their variety.

³ Pliny, Naturalis historia (18.10.60).

Agatharchides tell{s} us, are, Acridophages, or, Locust-Eaters, for the Plenty of them.⁵ The Winds being thus employed in bringing on, & carrying off, these Locusts, is but agreeable to what we find in Pliny, and in Orosius, and others.⁶ And very particularly in Jerom; who saies, (on Joel. c. 2.) *Etiam nostris temporibus vidimus agmina Locustarum terram texisse Judæam: quæ postea misericordia Domini – vento surgente, in mare Primum et Novissimum præcipitate sunt.*⁷

Q. Pharaoh's Relenting on this Plague? v. 16.

A. Such a Plague it was, as all Men accounted a manifest Token of the Divine Displeasure. Pliny saies, L. XI. c. 29. Deorum Ira pestis ea intelligitur. Some Copies have it; Mira pestis.⁸

Q. The famous RED-SEA? v. 19.

A. The Hebrewes call it, The Sea of Suph, or, Flags. [We Translate it so; Exod. 2.3.] It was full of a certain Weed, which the Latins call, Alga, & the Greeks, Φυκίον.⁹ Some Travellers affirm it to be of a Red Colour, & to make the Water appear, as if it were also Red. Some fancy it, thence called, the Red-Sea.

5 For a modern discussion of these ancient gourmands in Greco-Roman antiquity, see J. R. Kelhoffer's The Diet of John the Baptist (ch. 2, esp. pp. 60–80).

6 The Greek geographer and historian Agatharchides of Cnidus (c. 215–post 145 BCE), in De mari Erythraeo [excerpta] (sec. 58, lines 4–6), mentions unimaginable swarms of locusts. Pliny (Naturalis historia 11.32.92) relates that grass-hoppers (“tettigonia”) rather than locusts are much appreciated as food among “the Eastward races, even the Parthians.” The Spanish historian Paulus Orosius (early 5th c. CE), in Historiarum contra gentes (lib. 5, cap. 11, secs. 312–15) [PL 031. 0941–0942], also describes the horrific swarms of locusts that devastate vast regions in N Africa. But it is Strabo (Geographia 16.4.12) who relates that the Ἀκριδοφάγοι, the locust-eaters of Ethiopia, are of small stature and rarely live longer than four decades.

7 In his Commentarium in Joelem (lib. 2) [PL 025. 0970, sec. 195], St. Jerome (c. 342–420), the great Latin father and biblical scholar, comments, “Even during our times [4th–5th c. CE], we saw that swarms of locusts had covered the land of Judaea, which afterwards, by the mercy of God, with the wind rising, were plunged into the Dead Sea and the Mediterranean Sea.” Mather's principal source for the preceding paragraph is Bochart's indispensable Hierozyicon (pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 3, col. 463).

8 Patrick (Exodus 171) also furnishes Mather with the reference to Pliny (Naturalis historia 11.35.104). Patrick's Latin citation – following the standard version – reads “Deorum ira pestis ea intelligitur” and “Mira pestis” “a plague of the anger of the Gods” [or rather, “This plague is understood as a sign of the wrath of the gods”] and “a wonderful Plague.” A popular work, Pliny's Naturalis historia – according H. Rackham – went through numerous printed editions, the earliest known being those of Spira 1469, published in Venice, followed by that of Beroaldus, published in Parma in 1476 (Loeb Classical Library LCL 330, vol. 1, pp. xii–iii). None of the five different early editions I was able to check (including the 1561 Lugduni edition, published by Joannes Frellonius) contained “miræ pestis” – no doubt a misprint of “Deoru[m] iræ pestis,” the terminal letter “m” of “Deorum” merging with “iræ” into “miræ” – and thus the plague as “the wrath” of the gods, by way of misprint, metamorphoses into the “wonderful [or amazing] plague of the gods.” Let him who famously published on Herman Melville's “soiled serpents” of the sea eat humble pie!

9 Φυκίον, also Φύκος, suggests “rouge,” but also “seaweed” (Lat. fucus), and “a red colour prepared from it, rouge” (Liddell & Scott). Diodorus Siculus (3.40.4, line 1) insists that the

It is very certain, there is abundance of that Weed in the Sea, from whence it ha's the Name of Suph. The Inhabitants of the Coast, pulling it out of the Water, & laying it in Heaps to be dried in the Sun, it becomes so compact, that they build Houses with it; as Bochart ha's observed in his Phaleg.¹⁰

But the Name of, The Red Sea, had another Original. What the Hebrewes called, The Sea of Suph, the nearer Neighbours called, The Sea of Edom; from the Countrey which it washed; namely, Idumaea. [1. King. 9.26. Num. 21.4.] Whence, the Greeks called it, Ἐρυθρὰν Θάλασσαν.¹¹ The Red-Sea; because Edom signifies Red. [Gen. 25.29.]¹² seaweed in the Arabian Gulf is so thick that the color of the water seems "green." However, Agatharchides, De mari Erythraeo (excerpta), sec. 5, lines 35–42 (see also sec. 2) insists that the waters of the Red Sea are not red and that the designation is really a misnomer. Artemidorus in Strabo, Geographica (16.4.7, line 9) also speaks of the seaweed in the water making the crossing dangerous. More modern is the claim that the Red Sea derives its name from the Trichodesmium erythraeum, a naturally occurring algae bloom that can photosynthesize and turn tropical waters red. If this is so, the famous plague that turned water into blood (Exod. 7:14–24) was brought about by secondary causes. Oh, yee demythologizers!

Q. How can you Excuse the Israelites Borrowing of the Egyptians, without Res-titution? v. 2.

A. My Way to Excuse it, shall bee to Deny it.

The Israelites did not Borrow, but Beg, of the Egyptians. The same Word, that is here Translated Borrow, is [in Judg. 8.24.] translated, Request. And accordingly, the Jewels of Silver, & Jewels of Gold, and Raiment, which the Israelites had of the Egyptians, were not Lent, but Given.¹

Q. But how came the Egyptians, to bee so ready to part with their Jewels unto the Israelites? v. 2.

A. The Idolatrous Egyptians, did use to deck themselves, with Jewels, and Earrings, and Fine things, thereby to make themselves, as they thought, the more acceptable unto their Deity. They now thought, that since the Israelites, who asked for these Knick-knacks, were going to sacrifice, they might sacrifice unto the Egyptian Gods, as they did heretofore. Dr. Lightfoot, guesses, this to bee one Reason, of their Liberality, on this Occasion.²

Q. The Maid-Servant that is behind the Mill? v. 5.

A. None were more miserable, (as Dr. Patrick observes,) than the Slaves, whose Work it was, to turn a Mill with their Hands, & grind Corn perpetually. Especially, when they were condemned unto this in a Prison, & in a Dungeon. That this is here intended, appears from, chap. XII. 29. The Captive in the Dun-geon.³

² Extracted from John Lightfoot’s annotations on Exod. 12:35, 36, in what is appropriately called, An Handful of Gleanings, sec. 20, in Works (1684) 1:709–10.

The ancient Comœdians often mention this. And we find an Instance of such a Drudgery, in the Story of Sampson.⁴

Q. On that, The Lord hardened Pharaohs Heart? v. 10.

A. It is on all hands agreed, That the Holy God is not the Author of Sin. But then, as the Origin of Evil, is a most unsearcheable Mystery: so, the Holy Influence of the Divine Providence on the Obduration of Sinners in their Moral Evil can by the Searching of no Man upon Earth, be Sought out unto Perfection.⁵ We exercise ourselves, in what is too High for us, when we attempt a Scrutiny into this mysterious Matter; and, if some have conjectured, that it was one of the Unutterable Things learnt by our Apostle, when he was caught up into the Heavens, we may all confess, that we despair of being able to handle the Matter wisely, or understand it, until we come into that Sanctuary of God.⁶

However, we may with some Admiration take notice, how surprisingly the Holy Providence of God, presents unto Sinners, these Objects, whereof their corrupt Inclinations make such an Ill Use, that they are thereby Hardened in their Sins. In Pharaohs Case now before us, lett us a little, with Dr. Arrowsmith, consider it.

After Pharaoh had been freed from two or three several Plagues, by Moses's Prayer upon his Hypocritical Relentings; he might perhaps begin to think the God of Israel, such an one as might be Deceived with Fair Shews, and so the less to be feared. Again; It pleased God not to strike Pharaoh himself with any Plague; nor to suffer His People to rise up against him, & by main Force to rescue themselves. This might have a further Tendency to harden him, & putt him upon saying, If He be so great a God, why does He not smite me in my own Person; or carry out His People, whether I will, or no? Besides; He never saw one Plague twice inflicted; and then, he might think, that when a Plague was gone, it would never come again; and there could not come a worse; the God of Israel had now done His worst against him. Anon comes the last Scène of the Tragœdy. The 6 The issue of God's hardening Pharaoh's heart raises the troubling question about the origin of sin and evil (see Isa. 45:7; Amos 3:6), for if God is responsible for Pharaoh's relentlessness, then the king is essentially blameless for his actions, for he is nothing but a pawn, and God is thus the author of sin. In his commentary on Isa. 45:7 (BA 5:777–78), Mather tries to solve this conundrum through a historical annotation on the ancient Iranian prophet Zarathustra (Zoroaster), who taught that Ahura Mazda (the creator god) representing light, wisdom, and truth, is locked in eternal combat with his counterpart Angra Mainyu, representing evil. Hence all evil tendencies can be attributed to the latter. Nonetheless, Mather's evasive answer (above) reveals his discomfort with the underlying philosophical dilemma. For a contrasting argument in the case of sickness, see his Pastoral Letter, to Families Visited with Sickness (1721), sig. A1v–A2.

Hebrews are all found in a sure Place; the Sea before them, & huge Mountains on each side of them. What an Encouragement here, unto Pharaoh to carry on his Persecution unto the uttermost! By 'nd by, a Way is made for the Israelites, thro' the Sea; He might think, why is not the Way made for me, as well as for them? The Prey is now in View: lett go this one Opportunity, & they are gone forever. He passes on, & is punished! — passes on, & perishes.⁷

Q. Ha's Pagan Antiquitie, any Remembrances of the Jewish Passeeover? v. 1.

A. Yes. Epiphanius tells us, That the Egyptians had a Custom of Marking their Trees and their Flocks, with something of a Red Colour, as a Kind of Præservative against any Mischief, that might befall them.¹ [Compare Exod. 12.22.] Yea, and this was done by them, at the Vernal Æquinox, when the Israelites distinguished their Houses, by the Bloody Token. Quære, Whether the Διαβατηρία, or, Sacrifices for Passing, mentioned by Xenophon, Thucydides, & Plutarch, as usual among the Græcians, were not all Imitation of the Jewish famous Pesach, which was Διαβασις, a Passeeover? Especially, considering that the Jewish Feast, is called, not only διαβασις, but also διαβατηριον, by Philo, by Cyril of Alexandria, by Gregory Nazianzen, and others?²

Q. The Time of Israel's Redemption out of Egypt was the Month Abib. What is there else to signalize this Time of the Year? v. 2.

A. It was at this very Time, that our Lord suffered. There is a Tradition among the Jewes, That as they were Redeemed from Egypt on the fifteenth Day of Nisan, so they should on the same Day bee Redeem'd by the Messias. How remarkably was this Accomplished!³ And yett they know it not.

1 St. Epiphanius Constantiensis (c. 315–403), bishop of Salamis, describes this custom of the ancient Egyptians in his “medicine chest” against heresies, Panarion (c. 374–77). The story can be found in The Panarion of Epiphanius of Salamis (bk. 1, sec. 1, ch. 18, § 3.1–2, pp. 43–44) and is quoted at length in my note on Exod. 12:11 (below).

2 Mather's unnamed source for the entire paragraph is John Edwards, A Discourse Concerning the Authority, Stile, and Perfection (1693), ch. 4 (1:139–40). Edwards's comparative historical approach greatly appealed to Mather, who put this three-volume work to good use throughout his commentary on Genesis (BA 1:307–09, 412–16, 430–42, 504–08, 603–06, 916–18 etc.). The Athenian historian and philosopher Xenophon (c. 430–355 BCE) mentions in his history Hellenica (3.4.3, lines 1–4; 4.7.2, lines 4–6) that Agesilaus as well as Agesipolis offered the customary sacrifices before engaging in their respective expedition. Thucydides of Alimos (c. 460/455–c. 395 BCE), a Greek historian best known for his History of the Peloponnesian War, also stresses the significance of sacrifices in his Historia (5.54.2; 5.55.3; 5.116.1); Plutarch (Lucullus 24.6–8), Plutarch's Lives (2:549); Philo Judaeus (De Vita Mosis 2.41.224; 2.43.233; De specialibus legibus 2.28.150; De congressu eruditionis 19.106.); St. Cyrillus Alexandrinus (d. 444), Patriarch of Alexandria mentions both διάβασις and διαβατηριον in his De adoratione et cultu in spiritu et veritate [PG 068. 1073, line 42]; the Capadocian Father St. Gregorius Nazianzenus (329–89) separately mentions διάβασις and διαβατηριον in his De moderatione in disputando [orat. 32] [PG 036. 0205, line 6] and in his Epistulae (120.1, line 5).

3 Perhaps Mather (via Patrick 184) is thinking of R. Joshua's explication that “In Nisan the world was created; in Nisan the Patriarchs were born; in Nisan the Patriarchs died; on Passover,

This Month was called, Abib, signifying, An Ear of Corn; because the Corn was then Eared. It was in After-Ages called, Nisan, from Nissin, (as Bochart thinks,) that is, Banners, or Ensigns; denoting this to be the Month, wherein they went out to War. So the Hebrewes understand that Place; 2. Sam. XI.1.⁴

Q. The Number that were to eat the Lamb of the Passeover? v. 4.

A. They were not to be Fewer than Ten Persons, nor more than Twenty, to the Eating of One Lamb. Every one must eat a Peece, at least as big as an Olive; as the Hebrew Doctors tell us.⁵

Q. What was the Precise Time for the Killing of the Passeover, which is ordered in the Hebrew Text, here to be, Between the Two Evenings? v. 6.

A. About this Point, there ha's been a great Variety among Interpreters. But the Truth of the Matter is This. The Jewish Day consisted of Twelve Hours: All the Forenoon was counted Morning; and all the Afternoon was therefore counted Evening. Their Evening was then divided into Two; the Former & the Latter Evening. The Former Evening, was, Vespera Declinationis, and it was to be reckoned from Noon to Sun-sett. Their Latter Evening was Vespera Occasus, and it was Isaac was born; on New Year Sarah, Rachel and Hannah were visited; on New Year Joseph went forth from prison; on New Year the bondage of our ancestors ceased in Egypt; and in Nisan they will be redeemed in time to come" (Babylonian Talmud, tractate HaShana 11a).

4 The immediate source is Patrick (Commentary 184), the mediate Bochart (Hieroicozon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 50, col. 557, lines 29–70). Philo Judaeus, for one, points out that "Moses puts down the beginning of the vernal equinox as the first month of the year, attributing the chief honour, not as some persons do to the periodical revolutions of the year in regard of time, but rather to the graces and beauties of nature which it has caused to shine upon men; for it is through the beauty of nature that the seeds which are sown to produce the necessary food of mankind are brought to perfection" (De vita Mosis 2:49.222; Works 510–11). See also Mather's gloss on 2 Sam 11:1 (BA 3:362). Sebastian Münster's Latin note (a) on 2 Sam. 11:1 begins with "Putantur" ("it is believed"): "hoc tempus esse, quando segetes in agris inveniuntur pro equis pascentis," in Hebraica Biblia Latina, tomus secundus (1534), fol. 291^r, nota (a) to argue that war could be waged when the fields were ripe with corn to feed horses. In his Hieroicozon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 50, col. 557, line 54–col. 558, line 41), Bochart supplies his proof that among the ancient Israelites, Persians, and Romans, Spring time was the time for war. Hence, נִסָּן nisin, id est, militaria signa (558, line 12); Nissin is the military banner of war.

5 Extracted from Patrick (Exodus 186–87). According to Josephus Flavius (Wars of the Jews 6.9.3), "a company [sharing the Passover sacrifice] may not [be] less than ten belong[ing] to every sacrifice, (for it is not lawful for them to feast singly by themselves,) and many of us are twenty in a company." See also Jarchi (Rashi) on Exod. 12:4, in Commentarius Hebraicus (461): "Each according to his fitness to eat, to exclude the sick and the old who cannot eat a kezayis (a piece the size of an olive" (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi: Shemos (2:115). R. Maimonides (Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Korban Pesach 2.3 and 8.3) notes that "if one of the members of the company was a minor, an elderly person, or infirm, he may [be counted among those] for whom the Paschal sacrifice is slaughtered if he is capable of eating an olive-size portion." According to Laws of the Paschal Sacrifice, "Even if one does not eat more than an olive-size portion, he fulfills his obligations" (Mishneh Torah 30:24, 74).

from Sunset, unto the End of Twilight. The Intermedial Time then, between the Suns Declining and Setting, was the Time, Between the Two Evenings.⁶

You have this Distinction of Evenings, in the Purification of the Unclean; Deut. 23.11. It shall bee, when Evening cometh on, (that is, the Former Evening) hee shall wash himself with Water. And when the Sun is down (there is, the Latter Evening) hee shall come into the Camp. Thus in 2. Sam. 11.2. In an Evening-tide David rose from off his Bed: The Vulgar ha's not amiss translated it, Post Meridiem: for it was the Custom of the Eastern Countreyes, to take Rest after Dinner. See 2. Sam. 4.5. This was the Former Evening. Of the Latter Evening, see Josh. 10.26, 27. and Mark. 1.32. You have Both Evenings, in Math. 14.15, 23.⁷

Accordingly, 'twas also commanded, That the Continual Burnt-Offering, was to bee offered, Num. 28.4. Between the Two Evenings. Now in the Mishna wee read, That the Daily Evening-Sacrifice was killed at the Eighth hour and an Half, (that is, Half an Hour after our two a Clock) and offered up, at the Ninth Hour & an Half, (that is, Half an Hour after Three.) Only, in the Evening of the Passeover, 'twas done sooner, by Two Hours. This also was (Act. 3.1.) The Time of Prayer; the תפלת מנחה which was an Attendent upon the Daily Evening-Sacrifice.⁸ If it bee objected, that the Order is in Deut. 16.6. Thou shalt Sacrifice the Passeover at Even, at the going down of the Sun, at the Season that thou camest forth out of Egypt: R. Solomon shall answer you, That in these Words wee have Three several Times before us. First, The Time of Killing the Paschal Lamb; this was, At Even; that is, after the Sixth Hour of the Day, & onward. Secondly, The Time of Eating the Passeover; and this is, when the Sun setts. Thirdly, The Time of Burn-

Besides, It may bee none of these Times here mentioned in Deuteronomy, refer to the Passeover, but the Evening only. As it is said in the Second Verse of this Chapter, Thou shalt Sacrifice unto the Lord thy God, of the Flock & the Heard; whereas, tis evident that only the Flock relates to the Passeover; the Herd must belong to some other Matter; and therefore the Jewes understand it of the Chagigah, or the other Offerings, which were offered up during the Passeover.¹⁰

At sunset – eat it. At the time you left [Egypt, i.e., at daybreak] – you burn it, meaning that it is disqualified as nosar [leftover], and must be removed to the burning site” (Metsudab Chumash/Rashi, Devarim (5:194). R. Bachya ben Asher (aka. Bechai), on Deut. 16:6, glosses, “the Torah here mentions three separate times. 1) ‘in the evening,’ the Passover is to be slaughtered beginning with a period which can be termed ‘evening,’ i.e., after noon [sic]. 2) ‘when the sun sets,’ this is the time when you may eat it. 3) ‘at the appointed time;’ if this time has passed any leftovers have to be burned ([Talmud, tractate] Berachot 9),” in Commentary (7:2542).

Well, you must now lett mee observe to you, That as our Lord, was crucify'd at the Passeover, so Hee seems to have Dy'd at that very Moment of Time, when they were wont to slay the Paschal-Lamb. At the Ninth Hour, Marc. 15.34. Hee cries out; & presently upon that, wee read, Hee gave up the Ghost. All happened before the Latter Evening; & therefore, Between the Two Evenings. For, when Even was come, tis said, Joseph beg'd His Body. (See Kidders Demonstration.)¹¹

Q. The Blood of the Passeover was to be sprinkled on the Upper Door-Posts: what were the Upper Door-Posts? v. 7.

A. The Hebrew Word, Maskuph, is no where to be found, but in this Chapter. It carries in it a Signification of, looking through. It may induce us to think, They had Lattices at the Tops of the Doors, thro' which they could look, to see who knock'd, before they opened them.¹²

The Blood was not sprinkled on the Threshold; lest it should be, by any body Trodden on.¹³

This rite of Sprinkling the Posts, was peculiar to the First Passeover; There being afterwards, no Occasion to distinguish Houses.¹⁴

¹² Contrary to Rashi, R. David Kimchi (aka. Radak), and R. Samuel ben Meir (aka. Rashbam), who argue that the Hebrew term הַמַּשְׁקוֹף [ha-mashkof], “the lintel,” suggests “upper door post [beam]” against which the door bangs when it is closed (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:153), R. Abraham Ibn Ezra (Commentary: Exodus 225) insists that מַשְׁקוֹף [mashkof] “lintel” [Strong’s # 4947] suggests “a window,” which “was in the door.” To be sure, Ibn Ezra reminds us, this lintel was not of the external gate of the courtyard (common to all Egyptian houses), but only on the door posts of the interior door, visible only to those on the inside. Had the Israelites tried to affront their Egyptian neighbors, Ibn Ezra reasons, “then the blood should have been placed on the entrance to the courtyard,” visible to all passers-by. “However, the blood was placed in secret, for they [Israelites] closed the gate of the courtyard ... before they slaughtered the lamb at dusk, which is close to night, so that no one would see them” (Commentary: Exodus 226, 227).

A. Dr. Fryer, in his, Present State of Persia, has a Passage, not unworthy to be transcribed in this Place.¹⁵

“At the Beginning of April, they have a Feast, where the Emperour is to give the People of Suffahau a Camel, to be slain; which they lead about the Streets with a confused Noise, being dressed very Fine, with Flowers and Garlands for the Altar; & being brought unto the Priest, he cutts the Throat, & burns the Entrails; distributing to each principal Ward of the City, the several Quarters, to be eaten publickly after they are Roasted; the Head only being presented unto an old Sibyl, the only Relict of the Tribe, to which it appertains by Right; which she præserves till next Year, and then produces it at the Feast, for which she has a settled Pension. And the BLOOD of the Fresh Slain, is scrambled for, to besmear their Lintels and Side-Posts; signing them with the Sign of the Cross. What Relation it ha’s, to the Passeover ordained to the Jews, I could never learn from them; but they say, it is to keep their Houses free from Evil Spirits. It is called, Æde-Corboon.”¹⁶

¹⁶ Fryer’s New Account (Letter 5, ch. 14, p. 401) describes his eye-witness account near Isfahan (modern Iran).

¹⁷ See Appendix B. Mather may have Pliny’s description of the pomegranate tree [Lat. Punica granatum] in mind because of the aromatic unguent, which is extracted from its rind (“mali granati cortice”), and because its “red-leaved” variety may typify Christ’s suffering and crucifixion. The medicinal qualities of this tree were much appreciated by the ancients (Naturalis historia 13.2.9; 13.34.113; 23.57.106–61.114). The rabbis of the Talmud give the following instructions about roasting the Passover lamb: “We bring a spit or pomegranate wood and thrust it into the mouth [right down] as far as its buttocks, and place its knees and its entrails inside it: This is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said: This is in the nature or seething, but they are hung outside it. One may not roast the Passover-Offering either on a [metal] spit or on a grill.” The Gemara recommends that the wood “of the pomegranate tree” is particularly suited for this purpose because like that of the palm, fig, and oak trees, it is “hollow” and “exudes water, so that it is boiled,” but “Its knots are smooth” (Mishnah Pesachim 74a). See also Maimonides’s explication in Hilchot Korban Pesach (8.10), in Mishneh Torah (30:76, 78).

Q. In the After-ages, who was to kill the Passeover? v. 8.

A. Every one was to kill his own Lamb; there being such a vast Number of them, that it was impossible for the Priests to kill them all.

Yea, as Monsr. Jurieu observes, even in relation to the other Sacrifices, every one was at Liberty to kill his own Victim: which is evident from Lev. I.5. and IV. 4.

At Hezekiah's Passeover, the Levites kill'd the Victims, because the People had not purified themselves.¹⁹

Q. The Bitter Herbs?

A. The Tradition of the Jews, is: Figs, Dates, Raisins, Vinegar, &c sown & sweet, stamp'd in a Mortar, & made a Thick Sauce. This, Charosbeth, represented, they say, their Præparing of Lime, which was their Employment in Egypt. In this our Saviour dip'd His Bread, at the Passeover.²⁰

Q. There is a Command given, To Eat the Passeover with Bitter Herbs: what Herbs? v. 8.

A. Herbs is a Word of our Putting in. The Hebrew Word is only, Bitterness, or, Bitter Things. The Chaldee, the Samaritan, the Arabic, do keep the Hebrew Word, without any Addition of, Herbs. Here is a General Rule given, (as worthy Mr. Firmin observes,) but what those Bitter Things should be, whether, Herbs, Roots, etc. there is no Determination. Hence then (saies he) I might go into several Houses at that time, where they had prepared in one House, such Bitter Herbs, as Cichory, and Wild Lettice, (which they say, they used:) in another

Eliezer ben Zadok [Tzadok], argues that הַחֲרוֹסֶת “The charoset [Mather's Charosbeth] is a mitzvah [requirement] ordained by the words of the Sages, to commemorate the clay with which [our forefathers] worked in Egypt.” The recipe for the charoset is as follows: “take dates, dried figs, or raisins and the like, and crush them, add vinegar to them, and mix them with spices, as clay is mixed into straw” (pp. 146–148 and Halachic commentary 11). See also Talmud Mishnah (Pesachim 114a and 116a) for contrasting opinions. Mather also refers to Christ's Last Supper (John 13.26), in which he dipped his bread and gave it to Judas Iscariot. Q. Altho' I look upon it as a great Injury unto our Lord Jesus Christ, & His Gospel, to Deny that the Mosaic Cæremonies were Types, under which were both Vail'd, and yett also Taught, our Evangelical Mysteries; yett I am not unwilling to Beleeve, that many of the Mosaic Cæremonies were likewise appointed by the All-Wise God, in Opposition unto the Idolatries wherein Mankind was generally then entangled. Indeed wee shall but Acknowledge and Illustrate the *Wisdom*e of the Great God, by considering, how Both of those Ends, were Answered, in the Institutions of the Mosaic Pædagogy. Wherefore, if you please, make, first, an Experiment upon the Passeover; see whether, confessing our Blessed Lord Jesus Christ, our glorious Paschal-Lamb, the Antitype of all, you cannot yett also find, some Circumstances of the Passeover, designedly opposed unto the Idolatrous Usages of the Pagans, then prevailing in the World.²³

21 Apart from some minor phonetic spelling changes of "Cichory" (Sichory) and "Centaury" (Centory), Mather extracts this paragraph from The Questions Between the Conformist and Non-conformist (1681), p. 7, by Giles Fermin (1613/14–1697), an ejected English Presbyterian minister with strong ties to New England. The illustrious Joseph Justus Scaliger likens the bitter taste to that of common mustard, in his mighty Opus De Emendatione Temporum (1629), lib. 6, p. 572: "Vocabatur חרושֶׁת. [charoset] Id hodie conficitur ad spissitudinem illius embammatis, quod vulgo Mustaceam nonnulli, omnes autem Galli Mustardam, a sinapi vocant."

22 See Appendix B. "Tansy" [Lat. Tanacetum vulgare] of the Asteraceae family is an herbaceous flowering plant also known as Mugwort, Bitter Button, and Cow Bitter. (The bacon-bits paragraph was added at a later time.)

23 Mather and many of his peers were appalled when John Spencer (1630–93), the renowned English Hebraist and master of Corpus Christi College (Cambridge), appeared to denigrate the Christological and typological readings of the Ceremonial Laws of Moses, by relegating them to a mere secondary if not allegorical function. In his huge De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus et Earum Rationibus Libri Tres (1685), lib. 1, cap. 11, fols. 178–97, Spencer took exception to the allegorical engines of pious Christian commentators who completely ignored the didactic purpose of the ritual laws and the historical context that brought them forth. These laws, Spencer insisted, served a central function in the Mosaic Pedagogy and must be understood in the ancient milieu that brought them forth. They were instituted to wean the Israelites from their addiction to the pagan rites of their Egyptian and Chaldean overlords. To break this dependence, Spencer argued, Moses allowed his people to continue practicing the ritual laws of the pagans (Zabians), but turned them upside down and redirected them to the divine service

A. Having had from you, so fair a Confession of the Lord Jesus Christ, as the Grand END OF THE LAW, I can with some Safety offer you, such Curiosities, as Maimonides first & then our most learned Spencer, have laboriously dug out of the Monuments of Antiquity.²⁴ Know then, That the Ancient Chaldees, having Apostatised from the true Knowledge and Worship of God, even before the Dayes of Abraham, did sett themselves to Infect the rest of the World, with superstitious Usages. These famous Idolaters and Magicians, in a Manner gave Law to the World, and there were few Nations, but what submitted unto their Superstitions. They were afterwards, perhaps not until the Dayes of Mahomet, called, Zabians, which is as much as to say, Orientals.²⁵ Many Writings left by some Renowned Authors, not known to Europeans, till our later Ages, have at last exhibited most notable Things unto us, concerning the Primitive Idolatries; from whence may bee fetched thousands of most surprizing Illustrations upon a considerable Part of the Old Testament; an Abstract whereof, I may give you, here and there scattered among our Entertainments.²⁶ of the true God. As Maimonides put the issue, God in his wisdom used a “gracious ruse” and “suffered” these pagan rites “to remain, but transferred them from created or imaginary and unreal things to His own name” (Guide 3.32.526). In this way, God’s people suffered no hardship, for they now practiced their accustomed (albeit pagan) rites in their devotions to the true God. Beyond their primary purpose of re-educating the Israelites, Spencer insisted, the ritual laws could thus be applied to the NT Christ only in a minor, secondary, or allegorical sense. No wonder, then, Spencer’s aim to historicize the Ceremonial Laws rendered their typological abrogation in Christ more than vulnerable. For Mather’s response to Spencer’s incendiary claims, see section 2 of my introduction. On Spencer as an Enlightenment scholar, see D. Levitin, “John Spencer” (2013).

24 Maimonides (Guide 3.31–33.523–34). Spencer’s massive De Legibus (1685) went through at least five editions and painstakingly unearthed from innumerable sources of the ancients the many parallels between the ritual laws of the Zabians (pagans) and those of Moses. For Spencer’s argument that Moses “borrowed” these laws from the Zabians and adapted them in the service to God, see especially De Legibus (lib. 1, cap. 9–10, fols. 177–79). Counterarguments by conservative critics were not long in coming. See for instance, John Edwards, ΠΟΛΥΠΟΙΚΙΛΟΣ ΣΟΦΙΑ. A Compleat History (1699), chs. 8–9, pp. 246–59 and 276–84; and the collected repudiations by Christoph Matthäus Pfaff, rector of the Lutheran university of Tübingen, in his “Disertatio Praeliminaris” (sig. c-g^v) – refutations which did not keep Pfaff from republishing Spencer’s 1,300 folio-page masterpiece in Germany, in 1732.

25 The term “Zabians” (also: “Sabians”) is best understood as Maimonides’s generic designation for “idolatrous pagans” in ancient times. Mather wrote a brief essay on this topic, “V. Antiqua, Or, Our Sacred Scriptures illustrated, with some Accounts of the Sabians and the Magians,” which he incorporated in “An Appendix. Containing Some GENERAL STORES, of Illustration” and appended to his commentary on Revelation, at the end of the holograph manuscript. See also John Edwards, ΠΟΛΥΠΟΙΚΙΛΟΣ ΣΟΦΙΑ. A Compleat History (1699), ch. 8, pp. 243–46. For useful discussions of the Sabians, see J. Elukin’s “Maimonides and the Rise and Fall of the Sabians” (619–37) and Guy G. Stroumsa’s “John Spencer and the Roots of Idolatry” (1–23).

26 The origin and proliferation of pagan creeds and their similarities to Judeo-Christian beliefs were of great interest to Mather and his peers and generated massive tomes on the topic. See especially Gerard Johannes Vossius, De Theologia Gentili (1641), Herbert of Cherbury’s De

First. The Matter of the Passeover, was to bee a Lamb, or, in want thereof a Kid [2. Chron. 35.7.] of the Male kind: Thus would the Lord rescue His People, from the Zabian Superstition, of the Egyptians; among whom, as Juvenal tells us, Lanatis animalibus abstinet omnis mensa.²⁷

Thus the Idols of Egypt, must become the Sacrifices of Israel.²⁸

If any Sex must bee offered unto God, the Zabian Superstition would have said, Lett it bee the Female. So Servius, upon those Words in Virgil, – Cæsà iungebant fœdera porcâ, observes, In omnibus sacris, fœminini generis plus valent victimæ. But, behold, here how contradicted!²⁹

The Egyptians worshipped, their Gods, Hammon, and Osyris, under the figures of a Ram, and a Bull; Whence, the Signs in the Zodiac have been thus distinguished; first, Aries, then Taurus, and so the rest. Now, when the Sun was in that very Sign of Aries, the Lord will confront their Idolatries, by enjoining the Slaughter of that Creature. Whence, the Pagan Historian Tacitus, Religione Gentilium (1663), Theophilus Gale's The Court of the Gentiles (1669–78), and Pierre Jurieu's Critical History of the Doctrines and Worships (1705), esp. vol. 2. Early travelers to the New World were similarly tasked with explaining the amazing similarities between Judeo-Christian and Inca ceremonies and rituals in South-Central America. The Spanish Jesuit missionary José Acosta (c. 1539–1600) is a good case in point. His oft-translated Historia Natural y Moral de las Indias (1588–90; English: 1604), demonstrates how he wrestled with what modern students of comparative religion consider universal rituals and beliefs. See also S. MacCormack's Religion in the Andes (1991) and her On the Wings of Time (2007)

27 Extracted and translated from Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 1, fol. 257. The line from Juvenal's Satire (5.15.11) ridicules the Egyptian veneration of animal deities and reads, "No animal that grows wool may appear on the dinner-table" (Ramsay translation). The Index to Spencer's 1732 edition identifies his source as "Juvenal & Persius, cum Comm. E. Lubini 4to. Hanov. 1603," one of many quarto editions of Juvenal's work that included a commentary and annotations by Eilhardus Lubinus (1565–1621), professor of poetics and theology, and finally, rector of the University of Rostock (NE Germany). See also D. B. Haycock, "Ancient Egypt in 17th and 18th-Century England."

28 Or, as Maimonides rationalizes the issue, "In this way an action considered by them [Egyptians] as an extreme act of disobedience was the one through which one came near to God and sought forgiveness for one's sins. ... With a view to the same purpose we have been commanded to slaughter the paschal lamb and to sprinkle with its blood in Egypt the gates from outside, so that we should manifest our rejection of these opinions, proclaim what is contrary to them, and bring forth the belief that the act, which they deemed to be a cause of destruction, saves from destruction" (Guide 3.46.581–82).

29 Spencer, De Legibus (258), quotes a line of commentary on Virgil's Aeneid (8.641), by Maurus [Marius] Servius Honoratus (late 4th c. CE), a Latin grammarian and commentator on the works of Virgil. The Mantuan poet relates that the regal sons of Romulus and Tatius "made covenant o'er sacrifice of swine" at the altar of Jupiter. Servius glosses, "In every sacrifice, the healthiest female offspring [are chosen] as victims." The Index to Spencer's 1732 edition of De Legibus identifies the source as "Virgilius, cum Notis Servii, 4to. Paris. 1532." This popular edition, which includes Servius's commentary on Virgil's Aeneid, was first published in Venice and Florence, in 1471. Several other editions of this work are also listed in Spencer's Index.

when hee speaks of the Jewes, hee gives this Report, – Cæso Ariete, velut in contumeliam Ammonis.³⁰

And the Lords Ordering, that the Creature thus to bee slaughtered, should first stand bound in the House, for three or four Dayes together, gave the People, a full Opportunitie, with a most Reasonable Consideration, to putt off all Idolatrous Respect unto it.³¹

Again; It was a special Prohibition, concerning the Passeover, Eat not of it Raw. T'was an usual thing among the Gentiles, in the Feast of Bacchus, to do, as Julius Firmicus ha's described it; Illic inter ebrias puellas, et vinolentos senes, cum scelerum pompa præcederet, alter nigro amictu teter, alter ostenso angue terribilis, alter cruentus ore, dum viva pecoris membra discerpit.³² Thus Plutarch, in his Treatise, about, The Ceasing Oracles, tells us, of the Festivals wherein there were ωμοφαγίαι και διασπασμοι, The Tearing and Eating of Raw Flesh, in Honour of the Evil Demons.³³ For this Cause, Bacchus, whose possessed Priests, would in their Furies, as Peter Castellanus relates it, render themselves horrible with their Crudivorous Rites, was called, Ωμηστής Διονυσος, Bacchus the Crudivorous.³⁴ But the Feasts of the other Gods also, as well as Bacchus, became Remarkable, for the like Extravagancies attending them. Whence Arnobius mentions, Caprorum

³¹ Exod. 12:3–6.

³² Spencer, De Legibus (lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 2, fol. 265). Mather, via Spencer, cites from De Errore Profanarum Religionum (1652), p. 10, by the Italian rhetorician Julius Firmicus Maternus (d. after 360). Probably a Sicilian by birth, Firmicus wrote this work in c. 347 CE and appealed to the fraternal emperors Constantius II (337–61) and Constans (337–50) to demolish pagan idols and temples throughout the Roman Empire (ODCC). Selecting a particular notorious anecdote of one Liber of Thebes, famous for his tyranny and magical powers, Julius Firmicus points at the scenes of Bacchanalian excesses: “There amid drunken girls and wine-soaked oldsters, with all his scoundrelly cortege still going on before, one hideous in a black garment, another spreading terror by displaying a snake, a third with lips blood-flecked from rending the limbs of a living animal.” No wonder, Lycurgus, the lawgiver, punished Liber by hurling him off a nearby cliff and having his body rot at the bottom of the precipice as a warning to all (The Error, ch. 6, sec. 8, p. 57).

*Reclamantium viscera cruentatis oribus dissipatis*³⁵; and even to the later Ages, Benjamin Tudelensis, relates the Continuance of the Cæremonies of Raw-flesh-Eating among the Eastern Idolaters.³⁶

Briefly, Maimonides assures us, That it was an Usage among the ancient Pagans, Idolaters to cutt off a Member of a Living Animal, and eat it with the [17v] Blood running about it. And Theodoret | assures us, That the Divels, who delight in Cruelties and Miseries, when they saw Men began to abominate sacrificing one another, invented ωμοφαγίας, The Eatings of Raw Flesh, instead thereof. For this, among other Causes, The Passeover might not be Eaten Raw.³⁷

Behold, by the way, something of the Reason, why the Passeover must be all eaten within Doors. T'was in Opposition to the pompous & public Circum- gestation of the Raw Flesh used by the Worshippers of Bacchus. And thus also, the Lord would have the Paschal-Lamb, to bee Roasted Whole, without a Bone of it Broken. T'was in Opposition to the Divulsions of the Torn Creatures, used by those Wretches, when, as Catullus ha's it,

Pars è divulso jactabant membra Iuenco,

*Pars sese tortis serpentibus incingebant.*³⁸

And when, according to Clemens Alexandrinus, ωμοφαγια την ιερομανειαν αγοντες, και τελισκουσι τας κρεωνομιας των φονων, ανεστειμμεναι τοις οφεσιν. They expressed

35 The Christian apologist Arnobius of Sicca (d. 330) decries in his Contra Gentes (5.19.1) [PL 005. 1119A] the wild Bacchanalia, in which the Corybantic ravers “tear in pieces with gory mouths the flesh of loudly-bleating goats” (ANF 6:496).

36 The whole paragraph (by way of translation) is extracted from Spencer's De Legibus (lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 2, fols. 265–66). The famous Sephardic traveler of the Middle Ages Benjamin of Tudela, Navarre (fl. 1150–1200), journeyed from Italy through Greece and the Ottoman Empire all the way to India, and supplied his readers with a fascinating account, in his Sefer ha-Massa-ot (Constantinople, 1554). Translated into Latin, it was reprinted in many bilingual editions. Mather's reference is to Itinerarium D. Beniaminis (1633), p. 98, which was edited by the distinguished Dutch Hebraist Constantijn L'Empereur (1591–1648), professor of theology, Hebrew, and Chaldaic at the University of Leiden. R. Benjamin reports that he met with descendants of the Lost Tribes (Dan, Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali) near the river Gozan in NE Persia, who are allied in war with the “Kofar al-Turak, who worship the wind and live in the wilderness, and who do not eat bread, nor drink wine, but live on raw uncooked meat. They have no noses, and in lieu thereof they have two small holes, through which they breathe. They eat animals both clean and unclean, and they are very friendly towards the Israelites” (The Itinerary, p. 60).

37 Spencer (De Legibus 266) quotes Maimonides Rabbi Mosi Majemonidis Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 48, p. 496. Although Spencer's index lists both Buxtorf's 1629 (Basil) Latin translation and Bishop Augustinus Justinianus's 1520 (Paris) translation of Maimonides's work, neither version agrees with the Latin passage quoted in Spencer (266). The passage from Bishop Theodoret of Cyrrhus (c. 393–c. 466) is from Theodoret's episcopi Cyri Opera Omnia (1642), Sermonis 10: De Oraculis (625C), which appears in our modern editions in Theodoretus, Graecarum affectionum curatio (bk. 10, sec. 9, lines 9–12).

their Madness by Eating of Raw Flesh, and Pulling the Slaughtered Flesh asunder, crowned with Serpents.³⁹

Now, Herodotus tells us, that tho' the Græcians and Romans most used the Bacchanalia, yett the Bacchanalia had their Original in Egypt. And Plutarch, will mentain the same Original of those horrid Festivities. Wherefore the Israelites, coming out of Egypt, might well bee thus cautioned.⁴⁰

Furthermore, Tis a further Prohibition concerning the Passeover, Eat not of it, sodden at all with Water, but Rost with Fire. If you read Philochorus,⁴¹ hee'll tell you, That the Athenians, who had their Gods and Rites very much from the Egyptians, when they sacrificed unto the Horæ, οὐκ ὀπτῶσιν, ἀλλ' ἔψουσι τὰ κρέα, They don't Boil, but Rost, Flesh, & Pray those Goddesses, to avert calamitous Seasons from them.⁴² These Horæ, doubtless were akin to Horus (which Macrobius tells us, was the Sun) the Idol of Egypt.⁴³ Now in Opposition to those Magical Cæremories, as also, to the Kid seeth'd in its Mothers Milk, by superstitious Wretches, at this Time of the Year; the Lord commands the Roasting of the Passeover; which Commandment the Israelites accordingly observed, with much Stress laid upon it. [2. Chron. 35.13.] And its being Roasted with Fire, (whereof the proud Jewes, quoted by Hottinger, give this Reason, Hæc enim est consuetudo Filiorum Regum

39 Mather's less-than-perfect second-hand quotation (via Spencer 267) is from Clemens Alexandrinus (Protrepticus 2.12.2, lines 1–3), who decries the heathens for honoring Dionysius by ὠμοφαγία τὴν ἱερομανίαν ἄγοντες καὶ τελίσκουσι τὰς κρεονομίας τῶν φόνων ἀνεστεμμένοι τοῖς ὀφείσιν: “the eating of raw flesh, and go[ing] through the distribution of the parts of butchered victims, crowned with snakes” (Exhortation to the Heathen, ch. 2, in ANF 2:175).

40 Spencer (De Legibus 268). Herodotus (History 2.49) and Plutarch (De Iside et Osiride 355b^f and 362a^f). The index to Spencer's 1732 edition identifies Rapheleng's 1603 (Leyden) edition of Herodotus as the one used as well as Plutarchi Opera (Lutetiae Parisiorum, 1624).

41 Mather's holograph erroneously reads “Prochorus,” rather than Philochorus as it appears in Spencer (De Legibus [1685], lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 3, pp. 269–70).

42 Spencer (De Legibus 269–70) quotes a fragment of the Greek historian Philochorus (c. 340–260 BCE), in Fragmenta (Volume-Jacoby-# F 3b, 328F fragment 173, line 2) – second-hand crumbs falling off the dinner table of the Deipnosophistæ 14 (Kaibel paragraph 72, line 13, p. 656A), by the Egyptian Athenaeus of Naucratis (fl. 200 CE). Spencer relies on the bilingual edition by the illustrious Isaac Casaubon, Athenaei Deipnosophistarum libri XV (1598), lib. 14, p. 656A.

43 Son of Isis and Osiris, the falcon-headed Horus is one of the most significant deities of ancient Egypt. His hieroglyph is both that of a human eye and that of a falcon-headed man wearing the white and red crowns of upper and lower Egypt. Revered as a sky-god, he also served as protector in war. (See R. H. Wilkinson, Complete Gods 200–03). According to Macrobius, “Osiris is the sun [:] the Egyptians carve a scepter whenever they want to represent him in hieroglyphics: on the scepter they set the image of an eye and with this symbol signify Osiris, showing that this god is the sun and that he looks down on all things with power on high, as the ancient called the sun the eye of Jupiter. The Egyptians also call Apollo – that is, the sun – Horus, who gave his name to both the twenty-four hours [horæ] that a day and night comprise and the four seasons [Gk. hōrai] that complete the year's cycle” (Saturnalia 1.21.12–13). See also Herodotus (2.156), Diodorus Siculus (1.25.6), and Plutarch (De Iside et Osiride 372b).

et Principum, qui carne assâ, tanquam cibo electo, et sapido, fruuntur);⁴⁴ the Dignity of their Nation, must have Roast-meat, carved for it,) it might bee in Opposition to the Egyptians, who had other Wayes of Roasting their Flesh, and, as Heliodorus reports, in the Sun particularly. Thus Plutarch makes Enquiry, why in the Thesmophorian Sacrifices, they roasted the Flesh in the Sun, & not by the Fire? And Herodotus mentions, a Persian Custome, to choose Furnaces for this affayr; whereas the Lord here calls for an Open and a Naked Fire to præpare the Sacrifice. If to all this, you add Plato's Note, That, Roasted Meats are μάλιστα τοῖς στρατιώταις εὐπορα, Militibus maximè parabilia, the Quickness of Dispatch, may come in, as a Peece of a Reason, for this Law.⁴⁵

Tis added, concerning the Passeover, That his Head, with his Legs, & the Purtenance thereof were to bee Roasted & Eaten. This doubtless was in Opposition to the Idolatrous Rites of those Ages. For, tis certain, that the ancient Idolaters, did sett aside the Reliques of their Sacrifices, for superstitious & abominable Uses; to which Purpose read, if you please, the Words of Baruch, [chap. 6.27.] Isaac Casaubon, describes to us, the Græcian Custom, to carry home little Bits of their Sacrifices, from the Temples, as Good Omens for their Houses; whence ὑγίεια or, Health, was the Name, which they putt upon them. And Herodotus relates like Matters, of the ancient Persians.⁴⁶

⁴⁶ Spencer (De Legibus, lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 4, fol. 274). The Apocryphal Baruch (6:27–28) addresses the feebleness of idols and the exploitation to which they are put by priestcraft: “They also that serve them, are ashamed: for if they [idols] fall to the ground at any time, they cannot rise up againe of themselves: neither if one set them upright can they move of themselves: neither if they be bowed downe, can they make themselves straight: but they set gifts before them as unto dead men. As for the things that are sacrificed unto them, their priests sell and abuse: in like maner [sic] their wives lay up part thereof in salt: but unto the poore and impotent, they give nothing of it.” Spencer (274) cites from Animadversionum in Athenaei Deipnosophistas (1600), lib. 3, cap. 29, p. 138, lines 41–42, by Isaac Casaubon (1559–1614), an erudite Swiss

Finally, upon that Passage, Moses called for all the Elders of Israel, and said unto them, Draw out, & take you a Lamb, the Words of Jonathan the Paraphrast, are, Subtrahite manus vestras ab Idolis Egyptiorum; In which, hee seems to consider the whole business of the Passeover, as a Sacrament of the Renunciation of the Pagan Idolatries. Hence, the Reforming Princes of Israel, when they would Recover the People from Idolatries, began with an Instauration of the Passeover.⁴⁷

It is therefore the Observation of Heinsius, Nullum Festum magis a scelestis Paganorum Ritibus esse alienum; et Quod proprie adversus eorum Superstitiones et Idola, institutum sit. And therefore in the Institution of the Passeover, the Lord says, I will execute Judgment against all the Gods of Egypt. – It was a Judgment on Hammon, to command the Killing of the Lamb; on Apis to command the Slaughter of another Sacrifice with this; on Bacchus, to forbid Raw Flesh; and on Horus, when the Passeover was to be Roasted. Tho' I do not count this the whole Design of that Scripture.⁴⁸

Q. What was the Term, for such a Sacrifice, as the Passeover, used (not without some Imitation of the Israelites) among the Gentiles? v. 11.

classical scholar, philologist, and Christian Hebraist whose renown for learning was second to none. Herodotus (1.131–32). On Casaubon, see A. Grafton and J. Weinberg, Isaac Casaubon (2011) and John Considine, “Philology and Autobiography in Casaubon” (2003).

47 Spencer (De Legibus, lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 5, fol. 276) cites Targum Jonathan ben Uzziel on Exod. 12:21. Significantly, Spencer follows the Hebrew text of Jonathan and renders the term מִצְרָאִי [mitsrai] as “Egyptiorum,” i. e., “Egyptian” rather than “gentium,” i. e., “of the nations” or “gentile,” as given in Walton’s Latin translation of Jonathan (Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (1653–57) 4:122. The Latin passage reads, “Take off your hands from the Egyptian idols.”

48 Slightly altering the text and tempus, Spencer (276) cites Aristarchus Sacer, sive ad Nonni in Iohannem Metaphrasin Exercitationes (1627), cap. 4, p. 122, by the distinguished classical scholar Daniel Heinsius (1580–1655), professor of classical languages at Leiden University. Unlike Spencer, Heinsius denies any connection between the sacrificial rites of the Israelites and those of their pagan neighbor, insisting “that no festival is more distant from the evil rites of the pagans, and that it [Passover meal] has been instituted precisely against their superstitions and idols.” Following Maimonides (Guide 3.46.581–92), Spencer clearly demonstrates that many of the cultic rituals of Moses were borrowed from Egypt, but turned upside down and reclaimed in the service of the true God. Thus the ram (male lamb) of the Egyptian Amun (Hammon), the bull of Apis (Hapi-ankh) worshipped in Memphis, the crudiverous rites of Bacchus (Dionysius), and the human sacrifices honoring the falcon-headed sky-god Horus (Osiris) – all were turned on their head, purified, and redeployed in the adoration of Yahweh. Says Maimonides, God in his wisdom “suffered” these pagan rites “to remain, but transferred them from created or imaginary and unreal things to His own name, may He be exalted, commanding us to practice them with regard to Him” (Guide 3.32.526). See also J. Assmann’s Moses the Egyptian (1998) and Of God and Gods (2008). Herodotus (2.45–50) has much to offer on the cultic adaptation of the Egyptian deities among the Greeks.

A. They called it, A Sacrifice, Propter Viam, That is, as Festus interprets it, Proficiscendi Gratiâ. Tis a notable Passage in Macrobius, [Saturn. II. c. 2.] *Sacrificium apud veteres fuit, quod vocabatur Propter Viam; In eo mos erat, ut si quid ex epulis superfuisset, igne consumeretur. Hinc Catonis Jocus est; nam et Albidium quendam, qui sua Bona comedisset, et novissimè Domum, quæ ei reliqua erat, incendio perdidisset, Propter Viam fecesse dicebat, quod comesse non potuerat, id combussisse.*⁴⁹

If you will beleieve Epiphanius; The Egyptians had among them, something that seem'd a Memorial of the Passeover. At the Æquinox, they mark'd their Cattel, and their Trees, and one another, ἐκ μίλτεως, with Red Oker, or some such thing; which they fancied would be a Præservative to them.⁵⁰

Q. How did the Lord now Execute Judgment against all the Gods of Egypt? v. 12.

A. Artapanus in Eusebius, tells us, Most of their Temples were overthrown with an Earthquake.⁵¹

Perhaps to this Event may be ascribed a singular Feast celebrated among the Egyptians in the following Ages: That of Osiris. They rose at Midnight; the[y] lighted Candles; they sought for Osiris with Groans and with Tears.⁵²

⁵² Mather refers to an ancient tradition related by Lactantius (Divine Institutes 1.21; ANF 7:35). In Mather’s annotation on verse 30 (below), this story is embellished in Sacrorum Elaeo-chrismaton Myrothecium Sacroprophanum (1625), lib. 1, cap. 6, pp. 43–45, by the learned Italian antiquarian and professor of theology at Verona, Padua, and Rome, Fortunatus Franciscus Scacchus (1573–1640). The same story appears in Scacchus, Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacro-Prophanarum (1725), lib. 1, cap. 6, cols. 23–24. (Unless otherwise specified, all references are to the 1725 edition of this work). See also Simon Patrick on Exod. 12:30 (Exodus 207). See also Mather’s gloss on Exod. 12:30 (below).

Q. The Rescue of Israel from Egypt, and their Passage thro' the Red-Sea, is there no Typical Consideration to bee allow'd unto it? v. 12.

A. There were Typical Dispensations of God, in the Dayes of the Old Testament, both for the Deliverance of His People, and the Destruction of his Enemies. Tho' there was a Real Historical Verity, in these Dispensations, yett there was also a very Destructive Allegory.⁵³

Thus, the Protecting Providence of God, over the Patriarchs, [Psal. 105. 12, 13, 14, 15.] it was a Pattern and Figure of the Protection to bee granted unto the Faithful in Future Ages.

But there are two Articles particularly proposed, in the Quæstion, that is now before us.⁵⁴

I. The Rescue from Egypt.

This may bee applyd, unto our Lord Jesus Christ Himself. [See Math. 2.15. from Hos. 11.1.] what was Typically done to the Members of the Lord Jesus Christ, was accomplished in their Head. As Israel, in the Infancy of that People, went down into Egypt, and was brought out from thence again: This very Thing befel our Lord in His Infancy.⁵⁵

Again, Here was a Representation of our Spiritual Deliverance from our Misery under Sin and Satan, in our Unregeneracy, into a State of Grace and 53 In this and the subsequent paragraphs, Mather does his uncle Samuel Mather (1626–71) of Dublin, Ireland, the honor of paraphrasing a typological disquisition on 1 Cor. 10:11, preached on May 7 and 21, 1668, and gathered in Samuel Mather's Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1705), pp. 154–58. In Ireland, Nathaniel Mather, Increase Mather's brother, had some ado to get this work published after the sudden death of Samuel (1671). In his letter to Increase in Boston (10th of the 2^d [April] 1683), Nathaniel complains that his English publisher would not undertake the printing of the work, unless "some here [Dublin] would subscribe towards the charge of printing at least halfe of it." The expense of printing the work (which was to "bee a folio of about 10 s. price") was not all that hampered its publication. For Nathaniel carped that the manuscript "cost mee considerable payns to fit it as it is, many places beeing [sic] hiulcous [i. e., broken] in his notes, & many ill written, & many things left to [be] inserted from other & loose papers" (Mather Papers 43, 44). Cotton Mather, too, hints at the Herculean labors it cost uncle Nathaniel to whip the manuscript into shape for publication, in Magnalia Christi Americana (1702), bk. 4, ch. 2, p. 152, § 14. Subscribers to Figures or Types, perhaps encouraged by the design to have the famous Puritan divine John Owen write a preface, ultimately did collect a sum of "about 35 £" as we learn from Nathaniel's subsequent missive of May 31, 1683 (Mather Papers 45). However, it took another three years before Figures was ready for distribution (Mather Papers 61). The book went through at least three reprints, two in Dublin (1683 and 1685) and one in London (1695), before a second edition was printed in London, in 1705, which includes a useful index, absent from all other editions. All references are to this London edition of 1705.

Glory. Sin is upon all accounts, the Egypt of the Soul. The Præface to the Ten Commandments, ha's an Eye to that Egypt.⁵⁶

The Egyptians made the Israelites, to Serve with Rigor. Josephus reports, the Pyramids to be Monuments of their Service. But the Bondage under Sin, is worse than that of Egypt. [Isa. 57.10.]⁵⁷

The Israelites, tho' they sigh'd under their Bondage, had none to Help them; and when Help was offered, they foolishly and frowardly Refused it. Sinners that in Terrors of Conscience, cry out of their Bondage under Sin, yett Refuse the Offers of Grace. [Jer. 8.4, 5.]⁵⁸

When the Israelites began to think of getting Free, Pharaoh pursued them with all his Might. And when the Soul begins to gett loose from the Bondage of Sin, then Beelzebub Roars, and falls upon the Soul with hideous Temptations. [Luk. 11.21.]⁵⁹

But notwithstanding all Opposition, God brought the Israelites forth, with a mighty Hand, and a Stretch'd out Arm. Hee will do thus, by the Omnipotent Power, & Irresistible Grace, of His Holy Spirit, on His Elect; in despite of all our Interior Adversaries.⁶⁰

Once more; and in the Third Place. Here was a Representation of the Deliverance of the Church in the New Testament, from the Yokes of Antichrist. Egypt is expressly assign'd, as a Picture of Rome. [Rev. 11.8.] Antichristian Bondage, is worse than Egyptian; because tis over the Souls of Men, as well as their Bodies. The Church brought out of Antichristian Bondage, therefore sings the Song of Moses. [Rev. 15.3.]⁶¹

But then

II. The Passage thro' the Red-Sea.

Baptism, as well [as] the Outward Form, as the Inward Good of it, is by this Represented unto us.⁶²

⁵⁶ Samuel Mather (155 § 2).

⁵⁷ Samuel Mather (155, 156 § 1) and Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 2.9.1). Significantly, the Dutch professor of classical languages at Leyden Jacobus Perizonius, aka. Jacob Voorbroek (1651–1715) rejects the idea that the Israelites built the pyramids since the Scriptures only mention they were making bricks (Aegyptiarum Originum et Temporum [1711], cap. 21, pp. 383–94). For the same argument, see George Sandys's ever popular illustrated narrative A Relation of a Journey begun (1615), lib. 2, pp. 127–28.

⁵⁸ Samuel Mather (156 § 2).

⁵⁹ Samuel Mather (156 § 3). The holograph ms of BA reads "Belzebul," whereas all other imprints and editions of Figures reads "Beelzebub." Here silently corrected. The poet John Donne couldn't have agreed more with this reading, for in his Holy Sonnet 14, "Batter my heart, three-person'd God," he pleads, "I, like an usurp'd town to another due,/ Labor to admit you, but oh, to no end;/ Reason, your viceroy in me, me should defend,/ But is captiv'd, and proves weak or untrue./ Yet dearly I love you, and would be lov'd fain,/ But am betroth'd unto your enemy" (lines 5–10).

⁶⁰ Samuel Mather (156 § 4).

⁶² Samuel Mather (157).

The Element of Water, was here applied by Moses, a Minister of God, unto the whole Church of God, Men, Women, and Children. The drops of Water, blown upon the Israelites, by the Strong East-Wind, did Baptise them to Moses in the Sea.⁶³

But that wee may speak more Inwardly. When the Israel of God are to make their Escape, unto their Everlasting Rest, they see before them, the Billows of the Wrath of God ready to swallow them up, and the Iniquities of their Heels, with the Powers of Darkness pursuing of them. The Lord Jesus Christ then dries up, the Floods of Divine Wrath: but causes those very Floods to overwhelm their Enemies.⁶⁴

Q. The Meaning of that Sentence, That Soul shall be cutt off? v. 15.

A. 'Tis, To be sent into Banishment. Mr. LeClerc ha's taken a great deal of Pains, to prove, That the Phrase means a Disfranchising, and a Banishing out of the Countrey; And not any of those Things, of which it is commonly interpreted.⁶⁵

Q. The First Month? v. 18.

A. Here is the Jewish Computation of Time, which may enlighten many Passages in the S. Scriptures. There are Four Beginnings of Years.⁶⁶ The First Day of the Month Nisan, or March, in the Royal Year, or that of the Feasts. The First Day of the Month Elul, or August, is that of the Tithes of the Flocks. The First Day of the Month Tisri, or September, is the Year of Years, or that of the Release

⁶⁴ Samuel Mather (157–58).

of Captives, of the Jubilee, of Planting and Setting Trees & Herbs. And the First Day of Sebat is the Year of Trees; that is, when their Fruits may be eaten.⁶⁷

Q. The Horror of the Night, in which Pharaoh & the Egyptians Rose, to drive away the Israelites? v. 30.

A. Dr. Patrick thinks, The Angel made a great Noise, when he came to give the mortal Blow; which made the Egyptians to start out of their Sleep, & behold the Calamity that was come upon them. Or, perhaps, the First-born gave such a lamentable Shriek, when they were struck, that it awakened the whole Family.

It is no improbable Conjecture, made a great while ago, by Fortunatus Scacchus, That the Solemn Feast among the Egyptians, wherein they went about with Candles in the Night, seeking for Osiris, with Tears and Great Lamentations, took its Original from Pharaohs Rising out of his Bed at Midnight, & all the Egyptians with him; who lighting their Candles, & finding their Children Dead, bewayled them with loud & lamentable Ejulations. And it is not unreasonable to think, as he does, that Pharaohs Eldest Son, who was now slain, had the Name of Osiris.⁶⁸ He observes out of Apuleius, that the Time of this Anniversary Ceremony, was when the Moon was at the Full. And so it was, when this Slaughter was made in Egypt.⁶⁹

Q. Is it not Unaccountable, That Seventy Souls, going down into E{g}ypt, should there in a Matter of two Hundred & ten Years, multiply into Six hundred Thousand, that were Men, besides Women & Children? v. 37.

A. Not at all. For, suppose 50 Men should Beget Children, & this not until arrived at the Age of 20; and allow them no more than 3 Sons apiece; yett, in the Space of 200 Years, the Number would bee, 2952450.⁷⁰

Q. If there were 600000 Males of the Israelites, able to go forth unto War, what might bee the whole Number of all the People?⁷¹

A. It appears upon Observation, That the Number of the Males among a People, from the Age of Sixteen to Fifty Six, is as 34 to an 100. By this Computation, the Males of Israel must bee at this Time, One Million, Seven Hundred Sixty four Thousand, & seven Hundred. Unto these add Females, near one fifteenth fewer; suppose, to make the Summ even, one Million, Six Hundred thirty five Thousand, three hundred; The Total is, Three Millions, and three hundred thousand; Add then Forty three thousand, for the Levites; (not included in the former Accounts:) the entire Sum will at last amount unto Three Millions, & three hundred forty three thousand Souls.⁷²

But we also find, A Swarm of People, (which is the proper sense of Moses's Expression) that followed the Children of Israel; either Proselytes, or the Offspring of Marriages between Israelites and Egyptians, or Egyptians who (as Monsr. Saurin expresses it) preferr'd the Horrors of a Wilderness to the poison'd Delights of Tyranny.⁷³

Q. I am willing to see yett another Calculation, by which the Multiplication of Israel, may bee Demonstrated?

of Bath and Wells. The same standard calculations and figures are given in Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:317), on Exod. 1:7. Mather was given to similar calculations about the multiplication of post-deluvians in his "Trip paradisu" (Threefold Paradise 242). He had good precedent in The Sacred Theory of the Earth (1681), Third edition (1697), bk. 1, ch. 3, p. 16, by Thomas Burnet (c. 1635–1715), Master of the Charter House, London, and friend of Isaac Newton; and in A New Theory of the Earth (1696), bk. 3, ch. 3, pp. 175–181, by William Whiston (1669–1752), Lucasian chair of mathematics at Cambridge and successor to Isaac Newton (Force, Whiston 40–54). See also Mather's gloss on Exod. 1:7 for the fishlike multiplication of the Israelites in Egypt.

71 See Appendix A. See also Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:317). Ibn Ezra seems perturbed to defend this hyperbolic figure (Exod. 13:18): "We already have enough trouble with the Islamic scholars who ask, 'How could 55 males produce 600,000 males in just 210 years, let alone doubling and redoubling that number when you include the women and children?' ... But if you consider that after 46 years Jacob had 69 male descendants, then in another 46 years his 13 sons – counting Ephraim and Manasseh in place of Joseph – would have over 700 descendants; after 92 years, over 9,300; after 194 years, over a million and a half. And that is still less than 210 years" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot: Shemos 2:100).

72 The numbers are extracted from Whiston's New Theory of the Earth (1696), bk. 3, ch. 3, pp. 176–77. Whiston's calculations are based on Natural and Political Observations ... upon the Bills of Mortality (1676), Observation 84 (13), p. 86, by Capt. John Graunt (1620–74), an English statistician and member of the Royal Society of London (ODNB). For similar calculations, see Thomas Burnet's Sacred Theory of the Earth (1684, 1697), bk. 1, ch. 3, p. 16. On Mather and Graunt, see T. McCormick's "Statistics in the Hands of an Angry God?"

73 Extracted from Jacques Saurin Dissertations, Historical, Critical, Theological and Moral (1723), "Diss. XLIX," pp. 399–400.

A. You shall. Tis Cappellus's. If but One Man, in the Thirtieth Year of his Age, begin to bee a Father, and have in all, no more than Ten Children; who also, with their Posterity, should Beget, at the same Age, that One Man, before 200 Years, would have descended from him, of the sixth Generation, of the fifth	100000

of the fourth	10000 of the great Grand-Children	1000
of the Grand-Children	100
of the Children	10
Summ Total	1111110

But that the Israelites, began to bee Fathers, before the Age of Thirty, is more than probable: Nature sometimes not requiring Half that Time.⁷⁴ [Scaliger saies, Meâ Memoriâ, in civitate Lectoratensi Novempopulenâ, puer minor annorum duodecim genuit ex puellâ consobrinâ suâ, quæ nondum decimum Annum expleverat. Rem notam narro, et cujus memoria adhuc recens est in Aquitaniâ.]⁷⁵ And there is Reason to think, That they often exceeded the Number of Ten Children. Wee ⁷⁴ Mather's staggering multiplication table is a tabular arrangement (and translation from the Latin) of Jacques Cappellus's calculation in Historica Sacra et Exotica (1613), cap. "ISRAELITÆ in Ægypto," p. 71A–E. One of Cappellus's historical sources is Pliny (Naturalis Historia 7.3.34), which records that the Roman mater familias Eutychis of Tralles "was carried to her funeral pyre by twenty children and who had given birth 30 times." Lest the story sounds apocryphal, we learn from Paul Gallivan and Peter Wilkins that "The largest family in [Roman] Italy is that of Iulia Gemella of Puteoli who bore Philadelphus 18 children before dying at age 32 and 5 months." If that is an astounding record of fertility, Iulia Gemella has nothing on the obscure eighteenth-century Russian peasant woman, who – so The Guinness Book of Records 1994 (p. 61) – gave birth to a staggering 69 (!) children. This and more in P. Gallivan and P. Wilkins, "Family Structures in Roman Italy" (p. 245, note 12). Be that as it may, Abdon was a minor judge of Israel (Judg. 12:13–15), had forty sons, thirty grandsons, and seventy donkeys; Jair, the Gileadite only mustered thirty sons (Judg. 10:3–4); much better, polygamous Gideon, judge in Israel, had seventy (Judg. 8:30); not to be outdone is King Ahab, with three-score and ten sons (2 Kings 10:1); Danaus, son of King Belus of Libya, was blessed with one hundred children, fifty of them daughters, who married fifty of their cousins, sons of the eponymous Aegyptus (brother of Daneus) – alas, forty nine of Aegyptus's sons did not survive to tell the tale of their wedding night (EGRM 103). Fifty sons (and many daughters) were also among the fortunes of King Priamus of Troy and of Darius III (Codomanus) of Persia. But none were as prolific as Artaxerxes Memnon of Persia, who fathered 115 sons (not to mention daughters), and the Arabian King Hierotimus (Erotimus) with seven (not six) hundred (!) – that is, if Marcus Junius Justinus and his Epitome of the Philippic History of Trogus Pompeius (10.1.1; 39.5.6, pp. 88, 270) did not miss a few. I am getting lightheaded!

find in the Scripture, Abdon to have had 40 Sons; Jair to have had 30 Sons; Gideon to have had 70 Sons; and Ahab, to have had as many. Ægyptus, Danaus, Priamus, and Darius, History reports to have had, each of them, 50 Children. Justin saies, Artaxerxes had 115; and Hierotimus, no less than 600.⁷⁶

Lett us a little pursue this Matter.
I will offer you the Hypothesis of Torniellus, In Annal. Sacris. ad A. 2329. § 19. where he supposes, Virum unum cum sua conjuge singulis Tricenis Annis Potuisse gignere quatuordecim liberos, partim mares, et partim fæminas, et sic deinceps singula conjugatorum paria; and then he concludes, *proculdubio in Septimo Tercentario, h.e. in fine Anni Ducentesimi decimi posse genita esse plusquam sexies et decies centena millia, et quadraginta septem millia hominum.*⁷⁷ Here's the Scheme.

Pairs	1.	multiplied by sevens, into	7.	At Years,	30.

	49.		343.		90.
	343.		2401.		120.
	2401.		16807.		150.
	16807.		117649.		180.

76 Marcus Junianus Justinus, in Epitome of the Philippic History of Pompeius Trogus (10.1.1; 39.5.6) relates that Artaxerxes of Persia had “a hundred and fifteen sons by his concubines, but only three begotten in lawful wedlock, Darius, Ariarathes, and Ochus” (p. 88) The prolific heroes who scattered their Maker’s image throughout the land are all listed in Johann Leyser’s Polygamia Triumphatrix (1682), Thesis LXII, § 2, pp. 339–40. See especially the unnumbered Index to this work under the heading “Liberorum multitudo signum Gratiae” (indeed!) and “Hierotimus Rex Arabum.” Johann Leyser (1631–84) was a German Lutheran theologian who served as preacher in various military campaigns of the King Christian V of Danmark but was also a prolix defender of polygamy as a natural right, which he proclaimed in various German and Latin procreations of this work. Mather also offers a similar “Fish-like Multiplication” of the earth’s population in his description of the post-Confagration New Earth, “Triparadisus” (Threefold Paradise 275–76).

77 Mather’s calculation table is copied from Agostino Tornielli’s Annales Sacri et Profani, Ab Orbe Condito Ad Eumdem Christi passionem redemptum (Coloniae Agrippinae, 1622), “Ab Orbo Condito Annus 2329,” § 19, pp. 250–51. Trying to prove the miraculous multiplication of the Israelites, Tornielli figures, “that one man with his wife every thirty years could have been able to propagate fourteen children, partly males and partly females, and so in succession for each of the couples.” Tornielli concludes, “without doubt, in his seventh period of thirty years, that is by the end of his two hundredth and tenth year, more than sixteen hundred and forty-seven thousand men could have been begotten.” Good luck with that!

If one Couple could afford so large an Increase, in this Time, what might be done by 70 Persons?

Johannes Temporarius, in his Chronology, goes another Way to work. He proceeds upon Propagation, by the Number Ten, as Cappellus did; but he begins Generation for them, at the Age of Twenty. And so by that Time Two Hundred & ten Years are expired, the Number arises, to so many, that, *si tota Jacobi Familia funditus interijisset, uno tantum Josepho superstite, ex hoc uno surculo armorum non solo millia 600, verum etiam supra centies centena millia, in annis 210. sine ullo Naturæ prodigio excitari potuerint.*⁷⁸

I know not whether many will entertain the Opinion of one Mr. Tanner, That each of the Sons of Jacob, had a considerable Number of circumcised Servants belonging to him, [As we know what their Great Grandfather had!] who were not Aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel, and might not be turned off. The Sacred Scriptures in relating the Condition of the Church often, omitt the Circumstances, that carry any thing of worldly Pomp, & Grandeur in them.⁷⁹

Q. They spoiled the Egyptians.] Lett us enquire into the Lawfulness of the Action? v. 36.

A. There is a Story told, in the Gemara of the Sanhedrin; That in the Time of Alexander the Great, the Egyptians brought an Action against the Israelites, desiring, they might have the Land of Canaan, in Satisfaction for all that they borrowed of them, when they went out of Egypt. Unto which, Gibeah ben Kosam, who was Advocate for the Jewes; replied, That before they made this Demand, they must prove what they alledged, that the Israelites borrow'd any thing of their Ancestors. Unto which the Egyptians thought it sufficient to say, That they found

⁷⁹ Mather's source is Thomas Tanner (1630–82), historian and rector of Winchfield (Hampshire), whose Primordia: Or the Rise and Growth of the First Church of God Described (1683), ch. 35, p. 256, and appended "Letter In Answer to a Question," in Primordia (pp. 17–18, sec. ser. pag.) explore among other things the miraculous multiplication of the Israelites in Egypt until their exodus.

it Recorded in their own Books; mentioning the Text now before us. Well then, said the Advocate, look into the same Book, and you will find the Children of Israel sojourned in Egypt, four hundred & thirty Years. Pay us for all the Labour of so many Thousand People, as you employ'd all that time, and we will Restore what we borrowed. Unto this, they had not a Word to answer. Tertullian makes mention of such a Controversy, between the Two Nations, as an ancient Tradition. L.II. adversus Marcion.⁸⁰

Besides this: 'Tis not impertinent to observe, That the | Egyptians were Declared Enemies to the Israelites. Now 'tis not unlawful to spoil such Enemies; nor may it be call'd, A Theft. Clemens Alexandrinus adds this Reason to the former.⁸¹ [19v]

But Dr. Patrick thinks, No body ha's express'd this matter better than Dr. Jackson. He considers the Great GOD, as become now the King of this People, in a proper & peculiar Manner. Unsufferable Wrongs had been done by the King & People of Egypt, unto this People of God, who were now become His Peculiar Subjects, or, Proprietary Lieges. He concludes, That this Fact was more Justifiable, even by the Course of Humane Law, or Law of Nations, than Royal Grants of Letters of Man, or other like Remedies, are, against such other Nations, as have wronged their Subjects, or suffered them to be wrong'd, by any under their Command, without Restitution, when they solemnly, or by way of Embassy demanded it.⁸²

In short; whatever the Israelites took from the Egyptians, they took & kept, by the Law of Reprisal: That is By Vertue of a Special Warrant granted, by the LORD Himself, as He was now become in Special, not only the God of His People, but their King also.⁸³

I will add a Remark of another, [Dr. Burnett of Westkington] upon it.

It had been foretold unto Abraham, That his Offspring should come away from Egypt with Great Substance. The Egyptians were so afraid of being destroy'd for them, they were glad of getting rid of them at any rate. Considering what the Israelites had suffered from them, there was all possible aequity, in the Direction

⁸³ Patrick (Exodus 212).

& Appointment which GOD gave them on this Occasion. Here was not only some Recompence for their Sufferings in general, but some Satisfaction for what was due to them of Right for their Labours. Doubtless, having been used like Slaves, their arbitrary Masters had oppressed them in the Matter of their proper & promis'd Wages. The Matter of the Straw, was one flaming Instance of it. What we render, They Borrowed, the Word signifies, They Demanded: which they did, as a Right, tho' the Egyptians might call it, a Loan. And GOD accordingly gave them Favour in the Sight of the Egyptians; T'was His Work. T'was no Injustice in the Israelites; But GOD made them His Instruments, to take from the Egyptians, what they held by the Bounty of His Providence, & had forfeited by their Transgressions.⁸⁴

⁸⁴ Mather excerpts this passage from the two-volume The Demonstration of True Religion (1726), vol. 2, ch. 11, pp. 191–92, 193, by Thomas Burnett, D.D. (d. 1750), prebendary of Sarum and rector of Westkington (Wiltshire), who delivered the prestigious Boyle lecture series for 1724–25. Mather put the same work to good use in BA (1:504, 815–16, 926). Whether the Israelites who “borrowed” their Egyptian neighbors’ jewels (Exod. 12:35–36) were justified in keeping them in restitution for unpaid slave labor has generated a long history of debate. The conflicting positions on justifying the ways of God to man in the post-Reformation era can be gathered in Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:368–69) and Works (4:240–44). Mather’s gloss on Exod. 12:48, most likely excised from his earlier version of the “Biblia Americana” manuscript, still exists as a reference to “Arndt. Vol. 1. pag. 42” (“Note Book of Authors” on Exod. 12:48). Whatever the reason for its excision, Mather references the two-volume De Vero Christianismo libri quatuor (1708), 1:42, a Latin translation of Vier Bücher vom wahren Christenthum (1610), by Johann Arndt (1555–1621), the distinguished German Lutheran pietist. Mather’s Frederician correspondent at the Hanoverian court in London, Anton Wilhelm Böhme (1673–1722), translated this popular work into Latin, and Mather made it a point “every Morning before I rise, to read a Chapter in my dear Arndt; and communicate unto her [Mather’s third wife] the principal Thoughts occurring on it” (Diary 2:335–36, 348).

Q. What were the Frontlets between their Eyes, to be worn by the Israelites? v. 16.

A. We have elsewhere spoken to it. I will here only insert a little Curiositie about them. 1 Simon Patrick on Exod. 13:8 (Exodus 233–34). Pierre-Daniel Huet's commanding Demonstratio Evangelica (1690), prop. IV, cap. 6, § 4, pp. 97–98, serves Patrick and Mather as their primary source here. This popular work went through several editions. Patrick (and thus Mather) renders Huet's marginal notation "Marc. Paul. l. 1. c. 45" as a reference to "Paulus Venetus ... L. I. c. 45," and thus erroneously sends busy editors on a fool's errand among the remains of the Italian logician Paulus Nicolettus Venetus (c. 1369–1429). However, Huet's source is Marcus Paulus, better known as Marco Polo (c. 1254–1324), the famous Venetian traveler, whose IL Milione was translated into many languages and printed in many editions. Most likely, Huet drew on one of the several Latin or French incarnations and editions of the Italian Delle Maraviglie del Mondo vedute da Marco Paulo (Venice, 1496). At any rate, The Travels of Marco Polo (1845), part 1, sec. 35 (!), pp. 246–49, relates that the province of "Tangut" was part of the W Mongol Empire at the time and that its inhabitants are a hodgepodge of "idolaters mixed with some Nestorian Christians and Saracens." At the end of the year, parents praying for the safety of their children sacrifice a sheep to their idol and afterwards eat the cooked meat and invite their relatives to the feast (247). It is this ritual that strikes a familiar cord with Mather and his peers.

2 The classical rabbinic commentators are divided on both the origin and meaning of the word טֹפֶת [totaphoth] and with the Hebrew תְּפִלִּין commonly identified as תְּפִלִּין "tephillin." Rashi asserts both Coptic (Egyptian) and Afriki (Phrygian) roots, while Menachem ibn Saruk and Ibn Ezra associate it with other meanings found in Ezek. 21:2, Micah 2:6, and Exod. 13:9 (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:183–85). Mather quotes the Hebrew and Latin passages from Sebastian Münster's annotations on Exod. 13:16, in Hebraica Biblia (1546), fol. 138 (note g), who associates the meaning of totaphot with mar'awth "things to look at [looking glasses] or places for spying out [eyeglasses], which the elders apply to their eyes by which they may see more clearly."

compound the Matter with Metius the Dutchman, who pretends to have been the First Inventor of those Noble Instruments.³

Q. We read, The Children of Israel went up harnessed. The Hebrew Word, which we render, Harnessed,⁴ you know carries, Five, in the Signification of it. For which Cause, our Margin renders it, By Five in a Rank. What may be the true Sense of the Word? v. 18.

A. We will pass by the Jewish Figments employ'd on this Occasion; as not worth Reciting.⁵ And we will pass by the Notion of the Gentlemen, who, following the LXX, make the Fifth Generation, to be here intended.⁶

There is a Difficulty in conceiving how Ranks could be Regularly kept by Fives, when there belong so many Women and Children to the Company: & when the Men themselves newly coming out of a State of Servitude, were very unlikely to conform under the Order, (or indeed, the Armour) of a well-disciplined Army. Harnessed, says our Translation. But where should they get their Armour? Lyra raises this Difficulty; but {explains ?} it not.⁷

But there is no Difficulty at all, in the Account, of this Matter, which Munster brings out of Sepharadi. *Quinque Turmis ascenderunt sub quatuor Vexillis; Nam Moses cum Senioribus Israel, in medio quatuor Turmarum manebat.*⁸ They went up, in Five Squadrons; Four of them, were such as we find afterwards encamped in the Wilderness; and Moses with the Elders of Israel in the Midst of them, composed the Fifth. Agreeable to this, is, what Pocock observes in his, Porta Mosis. Among the Arabians, the Word, Chamis, notes, An Army. *Quòd ipsorum corpus, quasi è pluribus membris aggregatum, quinque partibus seu ordinibus constare soleret; Vid: Prima Acies Corde, Dextro cornu, Sinistro Cornu, et Crus seu, extrema acies.*⁹ Dr. Gell would have it rendred, Girded. This Girdle was wont to be worn under the Fifth Rib; tho Hypochondria, the Jews called by that Name. To be Girded was to be Fifth'd, as one may say.¹⁰

Q. The Pillar of Cloud and Fire; shall wee consider the Typical Importance of it? v. 21.

Rashi: Shemos (2:157 note 13) and Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael (1:199). However, an even more severe punishment is mentioned in tractate Beshallah (ch. 1): "Some say only one out of fifty [came out]. And some say only one out of five hundred" (Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael 1:119). Ibn Ezra begs to differ (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot: Shemos 2:99–100).

7 In his unpaginated Postilla Super Totam Bibliam (1492), on Exod. 13:18 (note e), the Franciscan scholar and master of the University of Paris, Nicholas de Lyra, aka. Lyranus (c. 1270–c. 1340), opines that the Egyptians furnished arms to the renegade Israelites to protect them against robbers (!).

8 A direct quotation from Münster's Hebraica Biblia (1546), fol. 138 (note h). Based on a comment by the as yet unidentified R. Abraham Sepharadi, the Latin citation translates, "They went up in five squadrons under four banners; for Moses with the elders of Israel stayed in the midst of the four squadrons."

9 Mather's slightly altered citation is from באב מוסי Porta Mosis (1655), "Notae Miscellanea," cap. 4, pp. 54–55 (second series of pagination), by the learned English Orientalist Edward Pococke (1604–91), professor of Hebrew and Arabic at Oxford. The famous Arabist notes, "this body of them [army], as if united with more divisions, used to consist of five parts or orders, namely, the first battle-line [cohort] in the division, with the right wing, the left wing, and the foot, or the very end of the battle-line."

10 Robert Gell, An Essay toward the Amendment (1659), p. 216. Gell explains that the girdle was "worn under the fifth rib" and thus called "Hypocondria," because "the Liver and vesica fellea, and the Spleen" are there located (2 Sam. 2:23). See also Ibn Ezra on the "fifth rib" (Exod. 13:18) and its numerical implication for the number of the mixed multitude escaping from Egypt, in JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot: Shemos (2:99–100).

A. If you please.¹¹

It was a supernatural and miraculous Cloud; and it was of such Height and Bulk, as to be seen by all the House of Israel. It remained with the Congregation, for Forty Years together, even till they came into Canaan. The lower Part of it, rested on the Tabernacle, after the Tabernacle was erected; and from thence ascended like a Pillar of Smoke. It appeared as a Cloud by Day, and Fire by Night: Not, Ignis Urens, but only, Ignis Lucens; It consumed not the Tabernacle, tho' made of combustible Matter. It kept its Form, and was not moved by the Wind, or any ordinary Cause. And out of it, the Lord exhibited His Oracles, unto Moses, & the People.¹²

Now there was a Mystery in this Pillar. Isa. 4.5, 6. The Divinity and Humanness of our Lord Jesus Christ, had some Shadow in this Cloud. The Fiery Brightness here was over-clouded; there was Cloud as well as Fire. See, Rev. 1.10.¹³

The Pillar gave Direction to the People, in their Way, thro' the Arabian Deserts. [See Num. 9.17, 18.] Thus doth our Lord Jesus Christ mercifully Direct and Conduct His People, in their Travel, thro' the Wilderness of this World, unto Heaven. See Joh. 1.9. Joh. 14.6.¹⁴

The Pillar also gave Protection to them; sheltring them, from the Scorches of the Sun, in the burning Deserts of Arabia; [See Psal. 105.39.] And from the Assaults of other Enemies. [See Exod. 14.19, 20.] Every Church of Saints, is a Spiritual Army of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a Terrible Thing to Offend or Trouble them. There is a Protecting Presence of the Lord upon them. [See Isa. 4.5, 6, and Zech. 2.5.]¹⁵

The Pillar was a Glory to Israel; and it was a Thing very glorious. The Lord Jesus Christ, is the Glory of His Church. See Isa. 4.2. And there is a spiritual Glory, in the meannest Assemblies of the Saints, which indeed Carnal Eyes are not able to discern. Psal. 29.9.¹⁶

In fine; The Ordinances of the Lord Jesus Christ, are an Antitype, unto this Pillar, as they are the visible Tokens of the Lords being with us. Baptism is 11 Deists – like the Irish freethinker John Toland (1670–1722) – were less given to mystical, typological, or miraculous explications of the famous pillar of cloud and fire, which guided the Israelites through the Sinai Desert. In his Hodegus. Or, the Pillar of Cloud and Fire, That Guided the Israelites in the Wilderness, not Miraculous (1720), Toland saw little more than the well-established expediency of burning bitumen carried in an iron pan at the head and rump of troops trekking through irregular terrain. At night, the bituminous fire was visible as a glowing light; during the day, as a black cloud – no more, no less. A detailed response to Toland's argument is given in Bibliotheca Biblica (1722), 2:166–79.

12 Extracted from Samuel Mather's sermon on 1 Cor. 10:11 (Oct. 3, 1667), in his Figures or Types (1705), pp. 133–34. Cotton Mather's uncle assures his readers that the pillar of cloud as an occasional type was not a “Burning Fire,” but only [a] “Shining Fire.”

particularly so. [1. Cor. 10.2.] The Pillar seems to have Bedewed the Congregation, with a Refreshing Moisture; which cool'd them from the Heat usually Raging. In like Manner do the Dewes of Baptism Refresh the Souls of the Faithful.¹⁷

This Cloud was, (as R. Levi ben Gersom speaks,) An Emanation from God; and (as others of the Jewes express it,) a Sign, that God was Day & Night with them, to keep them from Evil.¹⁸

There are Allusions to it; Isa. LII.12. and, Mic. II.13.

It is no improbable Conjecture of Taubman, in his Notes upon Virgil; That from hence it was, that the Poets never make a Deity to appear, but in a Cloud, with a Brightness in it; Est autem Nimbus, Nubes divina; seu fluidum lumen quod Deorum capita tingit.¹⁹

Q. Is there, in Pagan Antiquitie, any thing, referring, to the Cloudy Pillar, which led Israel in the Wilderness?

A. You know, that the Jewes were accused by the Pagans, as Worshipping the Clouds & the Heavens. Tho' the Jewes were not the Cælicola, mentioned in the Code, under the Title of, De Judæis et Cælicolis; for in the Theodosian Code, from whence Justinian took it, it is called, An unheard of Name;²⁰ whereas, according 17 Samuel Mather (136). See also (BA 9, on 1 Cor. 10:1).

18 Via Simon Patrick's commentary on Exod. 13:21 (Commentary 239), Mather quotes Levi ben Gershon, aka. Gersonides, also known by his Hebrew acronym Ralbag (1288–c. 1340), French rabbi, physician, philosopher, and mathematician, born at Bagnols (Provence). The third-hand quotation is from Gersonides's commentary on the Torah, Perush al ha-Torah (Venice 1547), also in JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot: Shemos (2:100–101).

19 Extracted from Patrick on Exod. 13:21 (Exodus 241–42), who cites Friedrich Taubmann (c. 1565–1613), a learned German philologist and professor of poetry and belles lettres at the University of Wittenberg. Taubmann's scholarship greatly contributed to the restoration of the works of several Roman playwrights and poets (ADB). Mather here refers to Taubmann's edition Publius Virgilii Maronis Opera Omnia: Bucolica, Georgica, Aeneis; Ciris et Culex: Cum Commentario Frid. Taubmanni (1618), p. 475. Taubmann's gloss is on Virgil's Aeneid (2:616), "Insedit, nimbo effulgens & Gorgone seva" (Opera Omnia, p. 473), where the Tritonian Pallas Athena "gleams with storm-cloud and grim Gorgon" in her battle against the Dardan army. Taubmann's gloss reads, "N I M B O] nube divinâ. Est enim Nimbus fulvidum (f. fluidum) lumen, quod deorum capita tinguit ..." (Opera Omnia, p. 475). The same comment appears in Taubmann's address to the reader "Bonarum Litterarum Candidatis," preceding his edition of Virgil's Ciris ad Messalam (Opera Omnia, p. 7, sep. pag.). At any rate, Mather's Latin extract suggests, "there is moreover Nimbus, the divine cloud, or a fluid light that moistens the heads of the gods."

20 Codified between 429–438 CE, the Codex Theodosianus was compiled by Byzantine Emperor Flavius Theodosius II (401–50 CE) and encapsulated all Roman laws since the time of Constantine the Great (c. 272–337 CE). Mather's third-hand reference is to Codicis Theodosiani Libri XVI [1586]), lib. 16, tit. 8, lex xviii [sic], p. 511. Titled "De Iudæis cælicolis & Samaritanis," the Roman emperor decreed, "Cælicolarum nomen inauditum quodammodo novum crimen superstitionis vindicavit. Now it cannot bee imagined, that their Looking towards Heaven in their true Devotions, or their Minding the Host of Heaven, in their false Ones, would have been derided, by the Pagans, who did so themselves.²³

Learned Mr. Selden, thinks, that whereas the Jewes did sometimes call God Himself, by the Name of Shamajim, or, The Heavens, the Gentiles, by a Mistake, inferr'd, that they made the Heavens themselves to bee a Deitie. But, there being but one Place in the Bible [Dan. 4.26.] where that Name is thus used, one can hardly admitt this Conjecture.²⁴

Wherefore, I rather concurr, with my Judicious Edwards, in conceiving, that the chief Raillerie, in the Satyr, lay in, The Clouds; and, The Heavens, are only mentioned by the By, as the Place of them. Which invites us now to call unto Mind, That the Lord led the Israelites thro' the Wilderness, with a Cloud that went before them; to this Cloud they look'd continually, for their Conduct; this Cloud was an Object of much Reverence among them. The Report hereof

Christianam conversi fuerint, his legibus, quibus præcipimus hæreticos adstringi, se quoque noverint adtinendos"; or in our own vernacular, "The name of Caelicolists, hitherto unheard of, shall vindicate to itself a new crime; that is, the name itself shall be a crime. Unless such persons return to the worship of God and the veneration of Christianity within the limits of one year, they shall know that they also will be held subject to those laws by which We have commanded heretics to be restrained" (Theodosian Code 16.8.29, p. 469). Theodosius II called this new sect of gentile and Jewish Christians "Caelicolarum nomen inauditum," worshippers of heaven whose name is unheard of and who allegedly engage in unheard-of superstitions. St. Augustine also mentions them in his Epistle 44 (398 CE) to "Eleusius, Glorius, and the two Felixes," in which Augustine warns against the heresy of the "Coelicolae," who "introduced a new baptism among them, and had by this impiety led many astray" (Letter XLIV, ch. 7, §13), in NPNFi (1:289). Roman emperor of the East Flavius Petrus Sabbatius Iustinianus, aka. Justinian (c. 482–565 CE), collected, updated, and streamlined the Theodosian Code (containing nearly 2,500 imperial laws), which Theodosius II had gathered in his Codex Theodosianus (438 CE) as a means to supplementing the older Codex Gregorianus and Codex Hermogenianus. In updating the Theodosian Code, Justinian "tried to restate the whole of Roman law in a manageable and consistent form" in a single, unified volume (OCD). For a lengthy discussion of these "worshippers of heaven," see the public debate between professors of theology Johannes Andreas Schmidt and Johannes Christianus Busmannus at the venerable University of Helmstedt (Germany), published as Historiam Coelicolarum ad Tit. Codicis de Iudæis & Coelicolis (1704).

21 Strabo (Geographia 16.2.35–36, 46).

22 The Roman satirist Juvenal (Satyra 14.97) scoffs at those who "worship nothing but the clouds, and the divinity of the heavens."

23 The above and following paragraphs are extracted from John Edwards, Discourse Concerning the Authority, Stile, and Perfection (1693), vol. 1, ch. 4, pp. 154–57. Among Edwards's own sources here is John Selden's De Diis Syris Syntagma II (1617), synt. 2, cap. 16, pp. 277–78.

24 Edwards, Discourse (1:155) and Selden, De Diis Syris (277)

must needs bee famous among the Gentiles; who thereupon took it for granted, that the Israelites were Cloud-Worshippers.²⁵

And whereas there was Fire as well as Cloud, which now went before the Israelites, it makes us to suspect, that the true Reading of the Poet, should bee that which Farnaby & others, tell us, that some Copies have,

Nil præter Nubes, et Cæli Lumen adorant.²⁶

The Cæli Lumen, was the Fire, which led them, in the Night. [Compare Psal. 74.14. and Exod. 13.21.]²⁷

But that we may make a further Visit unto Pagan Antiquity, on this Occasion, we will quote a Passage from Christian Antiquity. Tis from Clemens of Alexandria; who saies, [L. I. Stromat.] It need not seem incredible, that the Jewes were thus led by a Pillar of Fire, when the Greeks consider, that they beleieve Thrasybulus was thus directed, πυρ εαράτο προηγούμενον.²⁸ A Fire went before him, and conducted him in a Dark Winternight, thro' unknown Wayes, when he brought back the Athenian Exiles to their Countrey; tho' that of Thrasybulus (if it were true) were but of a short Appearance; As was also the Light, which they say, shone from Heaven, to bring Timoleon unto his Port, when he sailed into Italy: whereas this led Israel forty Years together.²⁹

25 Via Edwards (1:156) Mather targets Aristophanes's comedy The Clouds (c. 423 BCE) in which the Athenian Old Comedy playwright (c. 446–c. 386 BCE) pokes fun at grumpy Socrates, head in the clouds, and stumbling over the rock at his feet in his famous "Think-ery" (ODCL).

26 Mather refers to the distinguished English classical scholar Thomas Farnaby (c. 1575–1647), whose popular edition of the satires of Juvenal and Persius first appeared in 1612 and was reprinted many times throughout the seventeenth century. Quoted at second hand from Edwards (Discourse 1:157), Mather's citation is adapted from Farnaby's edition Iunii Iuvenalis et Auli Persii Flacci Satyræ: Cum Annotationibus ad marginem (1612), p. 117 (Satyra XIII [sic], line 98). Farnaby's edition has "Nil præter nubes, & cæli [lumen] numen adorant" ("worship nothing but the clouds, and the [celestial light] divinity of the heavens"), but his marginal note 62 refers to "numen" and points out that "Alii Lumen legunt" ("others read Light"), i. e., "celestial light," and thus (arguably) alludes to God's pillar of clouds that showed the way at night.

27 Edwards (1:157) and Selden (De Diis Syris 277–78).

28 The third-hand quotation from Clemens Alexandrini (Stromata 1.24.163.2, line 2) reads in our modern edition "πῦρ ἑωράτο προηγούμενον" or "a fire appeared leading the way" (The Stromata 1.24), in ANF (2:337). Like Clemens, Mather tries to render credible the miraculous pillars of cloud that guided the Israelites through the trackless Sinai desert, by demonstrating that a similar pillar of fire led the "brave-willed" Athenian general Thrasybulus (d. 388 BCE) and the Phylitian exiles through a trackless region near Munychia. The English Deist John Toland was anything but partial to miracles and demythologized the whole matter, in his Hodegus. Or, the Pillar of Cloud (1720), arguing that this pillar was nothing but a pan of burning bitumen carried by soldiers to light the way. See Bibliotheca Biblica (1722) 2:166–79 for a detailed defense of this Mosaic miracle.

29 Simon Patrick on Exod. 13:22 (Commentary 242). Patrick's own primary source is Pierre-Daniel Huet, Alnetanae Quaestiones (1690), lib. 2, cap. 12, § 14, pp. 205–06. If Plutarch's Life of Timoleon is an indication of how commonplace such "miraculous" phenomena were in ancient

Clemens thinks, This Pillar signified, the το ἀνεικονιστον του Θεου. That no Image could be made like unto God.³⁰

Huetius thinks, That from this Pillar, which had Two Appearances, the Two Pillars were erected unto Hercules, in his Temple at Tyre; and Two likewise were sett up in the Temple of the Sun, in Egypt.³¹

Q. How long did the Cloudy Pillar continue unto Israel?

A. Until the Death of Moses: (except, when it was a while withdrawn, upon the Provocation of the Golden Calf). At the Death of Moses, it seems to have left them: for when they were to march thro' Jordan, the Ark led the Way; which, it never did as long as the Cloudy Pillar continued, but it went in the Heart of the Army.³²

But as there was a Departure of the Cloud at the Death of Moses, thus when the Great Prophet, who was the Antitype of Moses appeared, the Cloud again appeared. Luk. 9.34.

warfare, then the Greek general Timoleon of Corinth (c. 411–337 BCE) was also guided by the miraculous light of the goddess Persephone, who piloted the Corinthian ships across the Mediterranean to Italy (Plutarchi vitae parallelae: Timoleon 8.4–8), in Plutarch's Lives (6:279).

³¹ Patrick (242) and Huet (Alnetanae Quaestiones 205–06). According to Strabo (Geographia 3.5.5), the Pillars of Hercules in his temple at the Tyrean city of Gades (probably modern Cadiz, Spain), were “bronze pillars of eight cubits” in height and guarded the entrance to the Mediterranean Sea. Mather may see their likeness in the twin pylons (or obelisks) often found at the entrance to Egyptian temples dedicated to Ra, the god of the sun, at Heliopolis (Herodotus 2.7). To Mather and his peers, the Pillars of Hercules or of Ra were little more than pagan imitations of the Mosaic pillars of cloud, which King Solomon commemorated in the twin pillars of Jachin and Boas in the Temple at Jerusalem (2 Chron. 3:15; 1 Kings 7:19, 21). Christologically interpreted, the twin pillars signify to Samuel Mather God’s “Will and Love” (Heb. 10:23) and Christ’s “Almighty Power,” for “Our Faith stands upon these two Pillars; these two do support the Church, and the Churches Faith,” in Figures or Types (1705), p. 363; see also p. 388.

Q. Pihahiroth? v. 2.

A. Pi signifies, A Mouth. Some are of the Opinion, That by these Two Words, Pi-bahiroth, is to be understood a Mouth, or narrow Passage, between two Mountains called, Chiroth, or as the LXX has it, Eiroth; and lying not far from the Bottom of the Western Coast of the Red-Sea.²

Q. They Encamp over against Baal-zephon? v. 2.

A. Baal-zephon was the Name of a Town, or City; as Ezekiel the Tragedian expressly calls it.³ Baal was the Name of a City. [1. Chron. 4.33.] And it is likely, there being more of the same Name, this was called Zephon, to distinguish it, from some other Baal in those Parts; either because it lay North; or had an eminent Watchtower in it.

There are those, who following the Jewish Doctors, imagine there was an Image of Baal, sett up by the Magicians of Egypt, by Pharaohs Order, near this Arabian Gulf, to hinder the Israelites in their Passage.⁴ Varenius does not altogether disallow it; For he takes Baal zephon to have been a great Plain, into which they were to enter, by the Chops of Pihahiroth; where an Idol was worshipped, which looking from the Red-Sea, toward the North, was called, The Lord of the North, as Baal zephon imports.⁵ Kircher seriously maintains, it had a Power

2 A close paraphrase of Dr. Edward Wells, An Historical Geography of the Old Testament (1711), ch. 2, sec. 1 (2:83, 84). Much the same is found in Simon Patrick (Exodus 243) and Ainsworth (Annotations [1627], pp. 50–51, sec. ser. of pag.) on this verse. Rashi believes that [Pi Hachiros] is Pisom, but was now called Pi Hachiros, because there they became free men”; פִּי הַחִירוֹת signifying freedom (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi 2:159); Abarbanel believes that Pi-hahiroth פִּי הַחִירוֹת refers to “the mouth of Suez” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:193a); tractate Beshallah (ch. 2), in Mekhilta De Rabbi Ishmael (1:127) adds several additional interpretations. Mather’s phonetic spelling “Chiroth” is generally transliterated as “Hiroth.” See also Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:377) and Works (4:275–76).

3 In his tragedy The Exodus, the Jewish tragedian Ezekiel of Alexandria calls the city near the sea “Baal-zephon,” extant in Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 9.29.444d).

4 According to the Targums Jonathan ben Uzziel and Hierosolymitanum (Exod. 14:2), in Walton’s Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (4:117), “Baal-zephon” was an Egyptian idol. Rashi agrees in his Commentarius Hebraicus (1710), p. 490, arguing that it was the only Egyptian idol left “in order to mislead them – so that they [i.e., Egyptians] might say that their god was [too] difficult [to defeat]” and thus give chase to the Israelites (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi 2:159). Ibn Ezra does not stand on the sideline but explains that “some say that the Egyptian magicians made bronze images which drew power from the stars, and that Baal-zephon was a statue that no slave fleeing Egypt was able to pass by” (Commentary: Exodus 273–74).

5 Mather, via Patrick (244), refers to Augustus Varenius (1620–84), German Lutheran professor of Hebrew and theology at the University of Rostock (ADB). Varenius’s geographical of Fascination, to stop the Israelites in their Journey. But there is no Cause to beleve this. For such Images made under this and that Constellation for such Purposes, were not now in Use. There is Reason to think, That Apollonius Tyanaeus was the First Inventor of them.⁶

It is the Opinion of many learned Men, That Baal-zephon (which signifies, God Watching) was the Name of an Idol, on which they depended, for his keeping the Borders of the Countrey, & hindring Slaves from running away, & making their Escape out of it. Perhaps the Idol had its Temple on the Top of an adjacent Mountain. But the Sacred Historian shows how unable he was to hinder the Israelites from going out of Egypt.⁷

Q. It was told the King of Egypt, that the People fled. Who told him? v. 5.

A. Some of the Mixed Multitude that went along with them, seeing this strange Turn, it is likely forsook the Israelites, & returned unto Pharaoh, to inform him, that they had lost their Way; and were shifting for themselves, by Flight into dangerous Places.

[23v] Or, as it is commonly Interpreted, some Spies, which Pharaoh had upon them, seeing them leave the Way to Horeb, whither | they desired to go Three Dayes Journey to offer Sacrifice, concluded, they never intended to Return to Egypt, but would run quite away from them.⁸

reading of Baal-zephon appears in his huge Decades Mosaicae: In duos priores Libros Pentateuchi & Exodum (1659), on Exod. 14:2. See also BA (1:702, 704).

⁶ Mather's source is Simon Patrick on Exod. 14:2 (Exodus 244); Patrick's own is John Selden's De Diis Syris Syntagma II (1617), synt. 1, cap. 3, pp. 43–45. Devoted to deciphering the Egyptian hieroglyphs more than a century and a half before the discovery of the Rosetta Stone, the German Jesuit polymath Athanasius Kircher (1601–80), professor of mathematics and Oriental languages at the Collegium Romanum, published his colossal Œdipus Ægyptiacus. Hoc est Universalis Hieroglyphicae (1652–54). Mather's second-hand reference is to Kircher's discussion in Œdipus Ægyptiacus (tom. 1, synt. 4, cap. 7: "Beelsephon," pp. 277–82). Significantly, Kircher is not as credulous as Mather (or Patrick for that matter) makes him out to be, for when Kircher mentions the idol's hypnotical power which prevents runaways from crossing the Red Sea, Kircher actually cites the Hebrew gloss of Ibn Ezra (see my note above) and records in the margin, "Beelzephon idolum averruncum sine Telesma magicum" (278), or "[Grant] Beelzephon, the averting idol, magical payment." Be that as it may, the Neopythagorean Apollonius Tyanaeus (fl. 1st c. CE) is described as a veritable magician and miracle worker in Philostratus's semifiictional Life of Apollonius. Apollonius even raised a young woman from the dead (4.45). Mather may have in mind the magical life-like statue of Memnon (6.4), which Apollonius visited. All of that might be pardonable had not Hierocles, one of his admirers, favorably compared Apollonius to Jesus of Nazareth – so John Lemprière (c. 1765–1824), in his immortal Classical Dictionary (1788).

Q. What was the Number of the Egyptians in the Pursuit of the Israelites? v. 7.
A. We read, Pharaoh took six hundred Chosen Chariots; the Best Chariots in Egypt, which were alwayes ready prepared for such Expeditions. And all the Chariots of Egypt; that could be gott ready on a Sudden; for he had not time to muster all his Force. He pursued them with Chariots and Horsemen, who could make larger Marches, than the Israelites on foot. The Strength of the Kingdome also consisted much in Chariots, which carried Men in them, who fought out of them. Every body knowes that Egypt abounded with Horses.⁹

We read, There were Captains over every one of them. It seems, to every Chariot there belonged a Troop of Horsemen, (we know not of what Number,) who were commanded by a Captain. The Hebrewes tell us, There were Fifty Thousand Horsemen; The Arabians make them as many more.¹⁰

Q. Is there no Remarkable, and Unrecited Peece of History, to bee gathered from the Words of Moses, unto the Distressed Israelites at Pihahiroth? v. 13, 14.¹²

A. The Jewes have a Tradition, that when the People were in this Distress, they were divided into four Opinions.

1. The Opinion of some was, To Run into the Sea. In Opposition hereunto, saies, Moses, Stand Still.

2. The Opinion of some was, To Return back for Egypt. In Opposition hereunto, saies Moses, The Egyptians, Yee shall see them again, no more forever.

3. The Opinion of some was, To Fight the Enemy. In Opposition hereunto, saies Moses, The Lord shall fight for you.

4. Lastly, T'was the Opinion of some, that by Loud Shrieks & Cries, they might confound their Adversaries. And the Words of Moses, in Opposition hereunto are, Yee shall Hold your Peace.¹³ sent along with the Israelites on their purported pilgrimage to sacrifice in the desert who then alerted the king that the Israelites “were not returning to Egypt” once the mixed multitude had “reached the point of three days [journey], which had been fixed for them to go and to return” (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi 2:161).

9 Patrick on Exod. 14:6 (Exodus 247).

10 Patrick (Exodus 247–48). The belief that “Captains” were placed over every chariot is first mentioned in Targum Onkelos (Walton, Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 1:287) and then adopted by subsequent commentators (Poole, Synopsis Criticorum 1:377–78, and Works 4:278). According to Josephus Flavius the pursuing Egyptians numbered “six hundred chariots, with fifty thousand horsemen, and two hundred thousand footmen, all armed” (Antiquities 2.15.3).

12 Mather’s “Note Book of Authors” lists “Blady’s Sermons. Vol. 2” as his purported source for Exod. 14:13. Both author and sermon volumes remain unidentified.

Q. What shall be thought of the Account given by Josephus, concerning the Passage of the Israelites thro' the Red Sea? v. 14.¹⁴

A. His Words are; "No body ought to look on it as an impossible thing, that Men who lived an innocent & simple Life in those First Times, should have found a Passage thro' the Sea, to make their Escape, whether it opened of itself, or whether it was by the Will of God: since the same Thing happened a long time after to the Macedonians, when they went thro' the Sea of Pamphylia, under the Conduct of Alexander; God being willing to make Use of that Nation to destroy the Persian Empire: as it is reported by all the Historians, who wrote the Life of that Prince. However, I leave to every Body, the Liberty of Judging of it, as he thinks fitt."¹⁵

Yes, And we will take the Liberty also to Judge of what you have written, Syr, as we think fitt. For my own Part, I Judge that this is a scandalous Passage, & chargeable with no little Folly and Falsehood. First, It is untrue, that all the Historians, who wrote the Life of that Prince, have mention'd the Passage of Alexander thro' the Streights of Pamphylia near Phaselis, as having any thing of

R. Ishmael, the Mekhilta (also Mechilta) is generally quoted by all the classical rabbinic commentators of the medieval period included in the Rabbinical Bible. See Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus (1:199b).

Miracle in it.¹⁶ Plutarch the greatest of them all, clearly shewes, that there was nothing miraculous on that Occasion. Had there been any such thing, it can by no Man living be imagined, but Alexander himself, would have mention'd it, in his Letters about the March of his Army, which we have in our Hands, and have boasted of his being a Favorite of Heaven.¹⁷ Consult our Strabo, & you will soon have a just Notion of the whole Matter. Strabo saies, that Mount Climax lies near the Sea of Pamphylia, so near, that it is only sever'd from it by a Narrow Way, which one may go afoot, when the Sea is calm; tho' it be covered with Water, when that Sea is rough. Alexander ordered his Army, to go thro' that Place, without waiting for the Time of the Year, when the Waters go off; & the Souldiers went over, when the Waters were up to their Bellies. Here was all the Wonder!¹⁸

Josephus discovers his great Want of Judgment, in making such a Complement¹⁹ unto his Greek Philosophers as he has done, in this Part of his History. Le Tellier does well to say, Imperitè, ne dicam Impie, fecisse Josephus videatur. Tis easy to see most Capital Differences, between the affair of Moses and of Alexander. He must be stark blind who sees them not. Joachim Vadianus in his Commentary on Pomponius Mela, was inexcusably wicked, for saying, Moses waited for the Time, when the Red-Sea, was to retire into the Ocean, & leave the Bottom dry. Tis well-known, its Channel is never dry!²⁰

16 Extracted from Bayle (Historical Dictionary 4:2586).

17 Bayle (Historical Dictionary 4:2586) cites an undetermined Latin translation of Plutarchi vitae parallelae: Alexander (17.4–8) – one of several handfals that appeared throughout the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries – but Mather extracts his critique from Bayle's contextual explanation why no miracle was involved in Alexander the Great's wading through the Straits of Pamphylia.

18 Mather cites Bayle's dismissive comment (4:2587) on Alexander's "miraculous" fording of the Pamphylian Straits which, according to Strabo (Geographia 14.3.9. lines 6–18), can be waded through near Mt. Climax with little or no trouble at all.

19 I.e., Compliment.

20 Via Bayle (4:2587), Mather extracts the Latin notation of the Jesuit scholar Michael Le Tellier (1643–1719), rector of the College of Louis Le Grand and subsequently Confessor of Louis XIV, from Le Tellier's annotated edition of Q. Curtii Rufi De Rebus Gestis Alexandri Magni Cum Supplementis Freinshemii. Interpretatione et Notis Illustravit Michael Le Tellier (1678), lib. 5, sec. 12, p. 193 (note 4). The Latin passage reads in my free translation, "Ignorant, truly wicked, of Josephus to make that comparison." Moreover, via Bayle's citation of Gèneberrard's marginalia in Histoire de Fl. Josephhe (livre II, ch. vii, p. 71, note a), Mather also censures the Swiss humanist Joachim Vadianus, aka. Joachim von Watt (1484–1551), sometime dean of the University of Vienna, doctor of medicine, friend of the Reformer Huldreich Zwingli, and finally, one of the leading proponents of the Protestant Reformation in Switzerland. Vadianus's unpardonable offense was to argue that sly Moses knew the ebb and tide of the Red Sea and had the Israelites ford the shallow waters (without a miracle) at low tide. First published in Vienna (1518), the offending passage appears in Joachim Vadianus's commentary on Pomponius Mela's description of "Pamphylia," in Pomponii Melae De Orbis Situ Libri Tres, accuratissime emendati, una cum commentariis Joachimi Vadiani Helvetii Castigatioribus (1540), p. 65 (note b). Mela and his erstwhile skeptical annotators were not the only ones who spurned wondrous explanations. For even the Hellenist historian Artapanus of Alexandria (fl. 3rd–2nd c. BCE) more than hinted in an extant fragment of his Concerning the Jews that "the people of Memphis [Egypt] say, that

Q. Was there any Remarkable Circumstance & Accident, that might contribute, unto the Dividing of the Red-Sea, by Moses not mentioned? v. 21.

A. I suspect there was; and this the most Agreeable thing in the World. An Angel of God, was now notably exhibiting himself in the Camp of Israel; and an Earth-quake is no unusual Symptom to accompany the Descent of an Angel. An Earth-quake will quickly make Dry-Land appear, where the Water ha's been deep for Ages; now, tho' Moses do's not mention an Earth quake at this Time in Exodus, yett hee may do it elsewhere; and I'l tell you where. – Tis in Psal. 77.18, 19, 20. The Earth Trembled and Shook; Thy Way is in the Sea, and thy Path in the great Waters, and thy Footsteps are not known; Thou Leddest thy People, like a Flock, by the Hand of Moses and Aaron. —²¹

However, we are sure, the Shechinah was present; and the Divine Majesty employ'd His Angels in this Work. Thus you have it well express'd in Pirke Elieser; The Holy Blessed God appeared in His Glory upon the Sea, and it fled back. Yea, thus the Psalmist; *The Waters saw thee, O God, the Waters saw thee, they were afraid.*²²

Q. The Passage of Israel, was it overthwart the Red-Sea? If so, How many Miles was it? v. 22.

Moses being acquainted with the country waited for the ebb, and took the people across the sea when dry" (Eusebius Pamphilus, Praeparatio evangelica 9.27.436b). Heterodox notations such as these may have tempted the contentious Jean LeClerc into making the same claim in his Twelve Dissertations out of Monsieur Le Clerc's Genesis (London, 1696), "Dissertation XIII," p. 321. See also my introduction to BA (1:107) and M.J. Hollerich, "Moses and Constantine in Eusebius" (esp. pp. 82–85).

²² Extracted from Simon Patrick on Exod. 14:19, 21 (Exodus 254, 256), who quotes פירקי רבי אליעזר [Pirke de Rabbi Elieser] Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. XLII, p. 112. The passage is well-worth quoting at length, for it magnifies God's omnipotence in the face of nature's resisting Moses' endeavor to divide the waters: "And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea . . . but the sea refused to be divided." Hence, God "looked at the sea, and the waters saw the face of the Holy One, blessed be He, and they trembled and quaked, and descended into the depths, as it is said, 'The Waters saw thee, O God; the waters saw thee, they were afraid: the depths also trembled' (Ps. lxxvii.16)," in Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer [2004], pp. 329–30. The post-Reformation divines François Vatable (d. 1547) and Giovanni Stefano Menocho (1575–1655), too, assert angelic intervention in the matter, in Poole, Synopsis Criticorum (1:379) and Works (4:284).

A. The People went into the Sea, by Megdol, and came out again, on the other Side, in the Wilderness of Shur: Now according to Thevenot, it is but Eight or Nine Miles over, in any Place whereabout they went over. They could not come out again, on the same Side they went in, because the Tide was turned upon the Egyptians, which were behind; so that the Sea must have been Twice divided for them, to have come out again on the same Side.²³

Q. The Time? v. 22.

A. Our Mede says, It was the Sabbath-day. Justin, [L. XXXVI. c. 2.] And also, Tacitus, [L. V.] do seem to be of the same Opinion.²⁴

Q. Some Remarks on the Ancient Chariots? v. 25.

A. If we may allow Homer for a competent Interpreter, we will a little consider, how his Iliad represents the Chariots of Antiquity.

There we find, The Chariots must be very low Things. We frequently see a Person who stands erect on a Chariot killed, (and sometimes by a Stroke on the ²³ For “Megdol,” see Edward Wells, Historical Geography (1711), vol. 2, ch. 2, sec. 1, p. 84. In his notable Relation d’un Voyage fait au Levant (Paris, 1665), partie 2, ch. 25, p. 315; ch. 33, p. 334, the French aristocrat and botanist Jean de Thévenot (1633–67) relates that the wilderness place called “Shur” in biblical times (Exod. 15:22) “is at present called Corondel” and that the distance between the eastern and western shore of the northern gulph of the Red Sea was nowhere “above eight or nine Miles over. This Sea ebbs and flows like the Ocean,” in Thévenot’s Travels (1687), part 1, bk. 2, ch. 25, p. 165, and ch. 33, p. 175. Extracted from Thévenot (Travels 175), much the same is given in Wells, Historical Geography (2:95, 97–98).

²⁴ Mather refers to Joseph Mede’s “Discourse XV,” on Ezek. 20:20, in Works (1664), bk. 1, p. 74. The eminent Mede tries to resolve the conflicting rationale for observing the Sabbath. For in the first version of the Decalogue (Exod. 20:11), God commands the Israelites to keep the Sabbath holy, “For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it.” However, in the second version of the Fourth Commandment, (Deut. 5:15), God mandates to sanctify the Sabbath for seemingly different reasons: “And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day.” Mede confesses that Scripture is silent on this issue, except that “The example of the Creation [Exod. 20:11] is brought for the quatum, one day of seven . . . and not for the designation of any day for that seventh. Nevertheless, it might fall out so, by disposition of Divine Providence, that the Jews designed [that the] Seventh day was both the seventh in order from the Creation, and also the day of their deliverance out of Egypt. But the Scripture no where tells us it was so, (however most men take it for granted) and therefore it may as well be not so” (Works [1664], p. 75). Likewise, Marcus Junianus Justinus relates in his Epitomen Redacti (36.2.14) that “from a seven days’ fast in the deserts of Arabia, he [Moses] consecrated the seventh day (according to the present custom of the nation) for a fast-day, and to be perpetually called a Sabbath, because that day had ended at once their hunger and their wanderings” (Epitome of the Philippic History (245). Finally, Tacitus (Historiae 5.3, 4) informs his readers that the Jews set aside the seventh day to rest from their labors because after a six-day journey, they took possession of their new country from which they evicted its inhabitants.

Head,) by a Foot-Souldier with a Sword. How readily do they light or mount on any Occasion? To facilitate which, the Chariot was made open behind. The Wheels were but small; This we learn, from a Custome they had, of taking them off & setting them on, still as they used them. When a Chariot was call'd for in Haste, Then the Wheels were putt on. A modern Commentator upon Homer, thinks that this may illustrate what we read of the Egyptians, The Lord took off their Chariot-wheels, so that they drave them heavily. The Sides were also low; for whoever is killed in his Chariot, throughout the Poem, constantly falls to the Ground, as not having any thing to support him. [verso] That the whole Machin was very small and light, is evident, from a Debate held, by one whither he shall draw a Chariot out of the Way, or carry it on his Shoulders to a Place of Safety. On the old Græcian Coins, the Tops of Chariots reach not so high, as the Backs of the Horses; The Wheels are yett lower; And the Hero's who stand in them, are seen from the Knee upwards.²⁵

Q. How did the Lord, thro' the Pillar of Fire & Cloud, now trouble the Host of the Egyptians? v. 26.

A. Probably, the Cloudy Part of the Shechinah, had been towards the Egyptians hitherto. It now turned the other side towards them; & the fiery Part appearing, both lett 'em see the Danger, into which they had thrown themselves, and by its amazing Brightness perfectly confounded them. So Philo understood it.²⁶

Patrick supposes, That the Glorious Light flashing in their Faces, putt them into a Great Consternation. Josephus adds, That there was a dreadful Storm of Lightning and Thunder from the Cloud. The Psalmist saies, *The Clouds poured out Water, the Skies sent out a Sound, thine Arrowes also went abroad; The Voice of thy Thunder was in the Heaven; the Lightnings lightned the World.*²⁷

Their Chariot Wheels were taken off; Perhaps, burnt with Lightning, or broke with Hailstones.²⁸

²⁵ Mather does the English poet Alexander Pope (1688–1744) the honor of extracting the entire paragraph from “An Essay on Homer’s Battels,” in Pope’s acclaimed translation of The Iliad of Homer (1718) 2:9–10 (sec. ser. of pag.). The ancient Greek coins to which Mather (via Pope) refers are depicted in De Re Nummaria Antiqua. Opera Quae Exstant Universa. Tomus Tertius (1708), “Nomismata Insularum Graeciae,” Tabula XVII: ΔΗΛΙΩΝ, # viii, ix, and x; Tabula XVIII: ΔΗΛΙΩΝ # i, ii, and Tabula XXVI: ΚΕΡΑΥΝΙΩΝ # ix (second series of tables), by the German numismatist Hubert Goltzius (1526–83), whose several tomes on numismatics almost single-handedly reawakened interest in ancient coins.

Q. The Passage of Israel through the Red-Sea, into the Desert, are there any Footsteps of it, in Pagan Antiquitie? v. 31.²⁹

A. Some: tho' the Heathen did endeavour to mince it all they could.

Justin tells us, that the King of Egypt followed the Jewes, when they had left Egypt, but was forced back, by the Rising of a Mighty and a Sudden Tempest.³⁰

Diodorus Siculus, tells us, "There is a Report spread among the Ichthyophagi, a People inhabiting the Shore, near the Arabian Gulf, [which is by Geographers called, The Red Sea,] that all the Place were that Gulph is, was dried up, the Waters flying back: but after the bottom had appeared, for some time, the Place, by a Reflux of the Sea, was turned into its former Condition." [A most remarkable Testimony to Exod. 14.21, 27, 28. tho' the Egyptians were willing to conceal their Disgrace in the Matter.]³¹

The Coming forth of the Israelites from Egypt, is attested, by Berosus, by Strabo, by Numenius, and by Justin; the last of whom adds, That Moses, who led them, Stole from the Natives, of that Countrey, some of their Sacred Things; which any Man may see founded, on the Sacred Story. [Exod. 12.25 & 31.21.] Hee also reports the Travels of the Jewes, in the Desert of Arabia & the Coming of Moses to Mount Sinai.³²

The Sea, there, was among the Ancient Pagans, called, Mare Erythraea or, the Red-Sea: That the Colour of that Sea, was Red, is a meer fiction & falshood, confuted by all the Travellers that ever saw it. Indeed, the Weed growing in it, whence the Bible calls the Sea, Jam Suph, that is, Mare Algosum,³³ or, Mare Junci, is a Kind of Saffron, whence is made a Red Colour, called Sufo, by the Ethiopians:

³⁰ Edwards (Discourse 1:140); Justinus (Epitome of the Philippic History 36.2, p. 245).

³¹ Edwards (Discourse 1:140–41) cites Diodorus Siculus (30.4.9) speculates that the fish-eating "Ichthyophagi handed this Report [Exod. 14:32, 37] to the Historian [Gnaeus Pompeius Trogus], not the Egyptians; though he had a Converse with these a long time, and they had Correspondence with the Ichthyophagi: but the Egyptians were so cunning as to conceal their Disgrace and Misfortune: and hence it is that there is so little said among the Pagans concerning the matter" (1:141). See also Mather's gloss on Psal. 74:14 (BA 4:583–84).

But still, the Sea it self was never Dyed with it. Why then do the LXX style it, Ερυθρα θαλασσα; Briefly, it had a Reference to one that was Ερυθρος; and this was no other than Esau, who was also called, Edom; [Gen. 36.1.] and Edom in the Hebrew, is the same with Ερυθρος in the Greek.³⁴ Philostratus accordingly tells us, that Mare Erythræum was called so, from Erythras;³⁵ and Strabo, & Curtius, with other Historians, mention Erythræus as a King of the Coast thereabout.³⁶ Esau was called Edom, as from the Ruddy Colour which hee had at his Birth, so from the Ruddy Pottage for which hee parted with his Birthright: and hee became Owner of the Countrey that lay hereabout. [Num. 21.4.] so that the Red-Sea, is as much as to say, The Sea of Edom, who was thus commemorated among the Pagans.³⁷

The Sea was called Jam-Suph, because of the Abundance of Sea-weed growing in it. The Egyptian Ichthyophagi, who lived near it, made their Hutts, with Fishes Ribs which they covered with Sea-weed.³⁸ Nay, in those Parts, there is great Quantity of Sea-weed, heap'd up together like a Mountain, which in Process of Time is become so hard, that these People dig therein Holes, or Caves, which are their Dwelling-places.³⁹

It is usual for Seas, to take their Names from the Countreys they ly upon; As, The British Sea, the Irish Sea, the German Sea, the Spanish Sea, & the rest.

34 With the Greek diacritics restored, the “Red Sea” would read in the nominative Ερυθρά θάλασσα, and “Red,” Ερυθρός.

35 Flavius Philostratus (Life of Apollonius of Tyana 3.50) relates that even though the Red Sea “is of a deep blue color,” it is really gets its name from King Erythra.

36 Strabo confirms that the Erythrean Sea was named after “Erythras [who] reigned as king over that region” (16.3.5), but also mentions other possibilities such as a Persian herdsman “Erythras” as well as “the son of Perseus” (16.4.20), who had been a ruler in this region. Finally, the Roman historian Quintus Curtius Rufus (fl. 1st–2nd c. CE) snickers in his Historiarum Alexandri Magni Macedonis (8.9.14) that “the sea by which India is washed does not differ even in color from other seas. Its name was given it from King Erythrus; for which reason the ignorant believe that its waters are red” (Quintus Curtius 2:307).

37 The entire paragraph is an extract from Edwards’s Discourse (1:141, 142, 143). It is telling that Mather chooses to ignore James Saurin’s explicit rejection of the eponymous naming of the Red Sea after Jacob’s brother Esau or after legendary King Erythrus (Dissertations, Historical [1723], “Diss. XLIX,” pp. 410–11). The lugubrious debate is reduced to absurdity in Adriaan Reland’s trenchant Dissertationum Miscellanearum (1713), “II. Dissertatio. De Mari Rubro, sive Erythraeo,” pp. 59–117.

38 Mather has in mind the “Ichthyophagi” or “Fish-eaters” in Strabo (15.2.2). See also Herodotus (3.19).

39 This paragraph and the two following are extracted from Edward Wells, Historical Geography (1711) vol. 2, ch. 2. sec. 2 (pp. 88–89, 90, 91, 94, 95). Artemidorus in Strabo (Geographica 16.4.7, line 9) also speaks of the seaweed in the water making the crossing dangerous. Diodorus Siculus (3.40.4, line 1) maintains that the seaweed in the Arabian Gulf is so thick that the color of the water seems “green.” Likewise, Agatharchides, De mari Erythraeo (excerpta), sec. 5, lines 35–42 (see also sec. 2) contends that the waters of the Red Sea are not red and that the designation is really a misnomer. See also Bochart, Geographia Sacra, seu Phaleg (1707), pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 29, col. 283, lines 3–7.

The Countrey of Edom extended unto this Weedy-Sea; Ezion-Geber, which belonged unto the Kings of Edom, stood on the Weedy-Sea.⁴⁰

The Arabians call it, Buhr El Calzem, The Sea of Clysona. There is a Town called so; seated much about the Place where the Israelites pass'd the Sea. Clysona signifies Drowning; & was probably built in Memory of what befel the Egyptians there.⁴¹

Q. You know what Eumings the Socinians, and others make, of this Passage, They Beleeved the Lord and His Servant Moses: As if no other Faith were to be exercised by us on our JESUS, than what the Israelites placed on their Moses? v. 31.⁴²

A. Certainly, there is a Difference, between Beleeving the Truth of Moses, as a Prophet, and a Relying on Him, that for the Sake & by the Hand of Him, we may obtain the Eternal Redemption.

The Israelites beleeved Moses to be a True Prophet. But was it with such a Dependence on him, as is to be placed on the Glorious GOD?

It is one thing, to Beleeve that a Man speaks the Truth: Another thing to Depend on Him as the Bestower of Everlasting Life.⁴³

The Church beleeves, that the Apostle Paul was an Apostle of our SAV-IOUR, & Faithful in the Discharge of his Apostolate; but not, that He was crucified for us. Are we Baptised in his Name? or, Do we trust in Him for Salvation?

⁴¹ Extracted from Wells (Historical Geography 2:94, 95), whose acknowledged source is Jean de Thévenot's Travels (1687), part 1, bk. 2, ch. 33, p. 175.

⁴² Mather addresses the followers of the Italian theologians Lelius Socinus (1526–62) and Fausto Socinus (1539–1604) who, broadly speaking, denied Christ's divinity and rejected Trinitarianism. The reference to "Eumings" or "Cumings" remains unidentified.

[22v] As we are to trust in a Crucified Redeemer, in whose Name we have been Baptised? and in so being, have been Dedicated unto Him; and who | has therein been owned as the True GOD!

It is a Passage indeed, in Tacitus's History. L. 5. Mosen unum exulum monuisse, ne quem Deorum Hominumve opem expectarent, ab utrisque deserti, sed sibimet ut Duci Cælesti crederent. But the Israelites did not make, a GOD of Moses, Tertulian saies, [Apol. c. 15.] *Cornelius Tacitus, Mendaciorum Loquacissimus.*⁴⁴

A. One Pitts of Exeter, in a late Relation of a Pilgrimage to Meccha, ha's these Instructive Passages.⁴⁶

"Tis but a few Miles after we come out of Egypt, before we enter into the Wildernesses.

"We anchored at Toor, or Eltor, a very small Town & Port; where we refreshed ourselves with Water; for every Passenger carries his own Water. We had also here plenty of Apricots, & other Fruit, which were brought from Mount Sinai, which is called, by them, Toor-dog, i. e. The Law-Mountain; because the Moral Law was given there.

"After we had sailed a little further, we were shewed the Place, where, they say, the Children of Israel passed thro' the Red-Sea; which they term, Kilt El Pharown, i. e. The Pitt of Pharaoh; meaning, where he & his Host were drowned.

"I guess, that the Breadth of the Red-Sea in this Place, where the Israelites are said to have passed through, is about Six or Seven Leagues.

"There is no safe Sailing in this Sea by Night, unless it be in one Place of about two Nights Sail, because of the Multitude of Rocks which are so thick, that we were alwayes in Sight of some or other of them, & sometimes in the ⁴⁴ The Roman historian Tacitus (Historiarum 5.3) reports that "One of the exiles, Moses by name, warned them not to hope for help from gods or men, for they were deserted by both, but to trust to themselves, regarding as a guide sent from heaven the one whose assistance should first give them escape from their present distress." In his Apologeticus Adversus Gentes [PL 1.364.420.59], the Ante-Nicene Church Father Tertullian calls Tacitus the "most loquacious and lying man" (The Apology 16), in ANF (3.31).

In which is a particular Relation of their Pilgrimage to Mecca; the Place of Mohammed's Birth* (1704). Q. What may one observe in general, upon the Song of Moses? v. 1.

A. This is the First Song upon Holy Record: And it casteth a Look, not only Backward, on what was done in the Deliverance from Egypt, but also Forward, on what the Lord shall do for His Church in Future Ages. The Deliverance from Egypt, was, as our Charnock expresses it, but a Rough Draught of something more excellent to bee wrought towards the Closing up of the World, when the Plagues shall bee poured out upon the Antichristian Powers, which will Revive the same Song of Moses, in the Church, as fitted so many Ages before, for such a Scæne of affairs. Tis observed therefore, that many Words in the Song, are putt in the Future Tense, noting a Time to come: And the very First Word of the Song, Then sang Moses, is /יָשַׁר/ shall sing; Implying, That it was calculated for the Celebrating of some greater Action, to bee wrought in the World hereafter. Upon this Account, some of the Jewish Rabbins, even from the Consideration of this very Remark, asserted the Doctrine of the Resurrection to bee meant in this Place: That Moses, & those Israelites, must Rise again, to sing the same Song, for some greater Miracles that God should work, exceeding those of the Deliverance from Egypt.¹

¹ Stephen Charnock, "A Discourse upon the Holiness of God," in The Works of the late Learned Divine Stephen Charnock, 2 vols. (1684) 1:499. Mather (via Charnock) here alludes to Manasseh ben Israel's De Resurrectione Mortuorum Libri III (1636), lib. 1, cap. 1, p. 7 § 5, who reads the Hebrew phrase אָז יִשַׁר "Then ... sang" as an allusion to the future resurrection of the dead. Taking issue with R. Mehir's preterit reading of Exod. 15:1, Manasseh ben Israel insists that Moses "does not say he will sing, but he will sing thereafter. From this point of the law, it appears that there will be a resurrection of the dead. Take note according to the grammarians that שָׁר is past and that יִשַׁר is future. When it is proclaimed, then Moses and the children of Israel sing of what is said. This interpretation is not without a divine mystery" (p. 7). Significantly, the classic rabbinic commentators are not at all agreed upon the meaning of the future tense of this Hebrew phrase. Rashi, for one, dismisses the use of the future tense here by arguing that the Hebrew letter ך [yud], though signaling the future tense "may serve to indicate a thought" or "express and intention." However, Rashi does acknowledge that the Hebrew sages, following the Talmud, tractate Sanhedrin (91b) and tractate Shirata, ch. 1 (Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael 1:169), maintain that this future tense "is an allusion from the Torah to the resurrection of the dead" (Mikra'oth Gedoloth: Exodus 1:210). Ibn Ezra, not to be left out here, is more concerned with the grammatical sense, explaining that "Biblical Hebrew frequently follows the word 'then' [אָז] with the past tense expressed by a 'future' form; e.g., Deut. 4:41, Josh. 10:12, and 1 Kings 11:7. Arabic does the same. But in my opinion this is meant to be the present tense, which does not exist in Biblical Hebrew and hence is sometimes expressed by the future and sometimes by the past" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 2:110–11). Not easily given to eschatological flights, the famous Dutch jurist and biblical commentator Hugo Grotius embraces Ibn Ezra's opinion on the subject (Annotations [1679] 32).

Q. Upon the Drowning of Pharaoh in the Red-Sea? v. 1.

A. There is a Vulgar Error, that should be a little corrected.

In our popular Discourses, we sometimes very well observe, how remarkably the Sins of Men are suited in their Punishments. But among the Examples of it, we make a Remark upon Pharaoh. We say, Pharaoh, who drowned the little Sons of the Israelites in the River, was himself drowned in the Sea. This Remark should be a little corrected.

Jacob came unto Egypt, in the Time of Orus, the Son of Osiris, who was a Friend & Favourer of the Israelites; But under Busiris, or Orus the Second, they were grievously oppressed. He it was that made the Edict of Drowning the Male-Children. After this Orus, there succeeded his Daughter, Queen Thermutis, who took Moses out of Nilus, in an Ark of Reeds. There were Two Brothers of this Lady; One of whom, namely Rathoris, did succeed her in the Kingdome. And his Son Cenchres did succeed him. This was he, who did refuse to dismiss the Israelites, & was drowned in the Red Sea. However, we may say, That the Offence of Orus & his People, was very suitably punished in the Drowning of Cenchres & his People.²

Q. Can you find here any Prædiction, That God should ever become a Man, and the Son of God, become Incarnate? v. 3.

A. Yes. Tis here said, Jehovah is a Man of War. Behold /יהוה/ becoming /איש/ Jehovah will bee a Man, for the Redemption of His People.³

² Extracted from “The Second Discourse on the First Article of the Creed,” in Theologia Reformata (1713) 1:111–12, by the conservative English theologian and controversialist John Edwards (1637–1716), a voluminous author and Mather’s correspondent (ODNB). See also Jacques Saurin’s Dissertations Historiques (1723) 1:350, 576. The line of descent in the list of Egyptian kings is based on the extant fragments of Manetho’s Aegyptiaca. As is to be expected the spelling of Pharaonic names and the periods of kingly rule differ widely. William Whiston, Mather’s erstwhile friend and correspondent, offers a more elaborate, yet different genealogy of the Egyptian ruler who drowned in his pursuit of the Israelites. Whiston proposes “Harmesses Mi-Amoun” (Ramesses the Great, “ruler of ‘the Lower Egypt’”) who was “the Grandfather of Sesostris ... when Moses was born: Amenophis III. his Son was there King after him, during Moses’s Youth; and Sethos, or Sethosis, or Sesostris the Great, the Son of Amenophis III. was so during the rest of the Servitude of the Children of Israel in Egypt; and was that very Pharaoh who perished in the Red Sea,” in Whiston’s An Essay Towards the Restoring the True Text of the Old Testament (1722), Appendix III, pp. cxxxix–lxii. For the drowning of the Egyptian charioteers as punishment for Pharaoh’s edict to drown all male Israelite children, see Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer (ch. 42, pp. 331–32) and the apocryphal Jubilees 48:14.

³ Rashi explains that “Wherever אִישׁ [iysh] or אִישִׁי, or אִישִׁיךָ [appear] they are translated by Targum [Onkelos] as “master of.” Thus אִישׁ מִלְחָמָה [iysh milchamah] signifies “man of war” or “master over subordinates” (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi: Shemos 2:181). Mather aims at a Christological interpretation.

Q. Chosen Captains?] v. 4.

A. Henricus Valesius, whom Dr. Patrick honours with the Title of, A very learned Man; thinks, the LXX have rightly translated the Word, by, τριστατας: which he Translates, Three fighting out of a Chariot. For, πρωτοστατης and, παραστατης, are both Words belonging to the Military Discipline; and he takes τριστατης, to be of the same Kind, & rightly rendred by Ruffinus, Ternos Stator-es.⁴

Q. How is it said, Fearful in Praises? v. 11.⁵

A. Mr. Pyles proposes, That the Abstract is putt for the Concrete. q.d. Terrible in such Performances as He is to be praised for. Thus, Laus, among the Latins, frequently signifies, Atchievements. We read,

– sunt hic etiam sua premia laudi.⁶

[24v]

Q. How did the Earth swallow them? It was the Sea! v. 12.

A. Compare Jon. 2.6.

The Sea, that swallow'd up the Egyptians, is in the Dep{t}hs of the Earth.

R. Elieser thinks, that they being thrown upon the Sea-shore, the Earth opened her Mouth, & swallowed them up.⁷

4 Simon Patrick (Exodus 271) supplies Mather with the second-hand annotation of Henricus Valesius, aka. Henri Valois (1603–76), a learned French philologist and ecclesiastical historian, whose bilingual edition of Eusebius's Church History, EYSEBII TOY ΠΑΜΦΙΛΙΟΥ ΕΚΚΛΗΣΙΑΣΤΙΚΗ ΙΣΤΟΡΙΑ (1659) was well received at the time. (My references are to the new edition of this work, printed in Amsterdam 1695). Eusebius Pamphilus, Historia Ecclesiastica (9.9.5, line 4). However, Valesius's Latin attribution of "Ternos Statores" or rather "militēs ternos" (as the emended 1695 edition reads, p. 293[C]) suggests "three soldiers [per chariot]" but does not appear in Rufinus Aquileiensis (as both Patrick and Mather claim), but in Rabanus Maurus, abbot of Fulda and archbishop of Mainz, in his Commentariorum in Exodum Libri Quatuor, lib. 2, cap. 4 [PL 108. 0068D]. Be that as it may, it is Origen (Homilies on Genesis and Exodus 288 n), who appears to be the first to claim that τριστατας [tristatas] (Exod. 3:4, LXX) indicates that three men occupied the chariot.

5 In his "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 25:11), Mather lists "Charnock, of God. – p. 493. 1. vol." as a reference about evidently decided to go a different route in the present instance. The reference is to the Works of the late Learned Divine Stephen Charnock (1684), 1:499, particularly Charnock's "Discourse upon the Holiness of God" (Exod. 15:11; in Works (1:499–573).

6 Extracted from Thomas Pyle's Paraphrase with Short and Useful Notes On the Books of the Old Testament (1717), 1:85, on Exod. 15:11 (n). Appearing in the same footnote, the second-hand quotation from Virgil's Aeneid (1.461) has Aeneas bewail the ravages of Priam's war but praise the heroism of the champions: "Here, too, virtue has its due rewards."

7 Patrick (Exodus 273) invokes Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer, ch. 39, p. 309; ch. 42, pp. 331–32. R. Eliezer's hyperbolic explication is embraced by Vatablus and Bonfrerius, but the majority of the medieval and post-Reformation divines – Menochius, Lyra, Rivet, Junius, Piscator, and Ainsworth – argues that Pharaoh's troops were "devoured by the earth," i.e., "buried in the bed [or bottom] of the sea" (Poole, Synopsis Criticorum 1:383, and Works 4:303). Much the same is given by Ramban (Commentary: Exodus 203–04).

Rather, after the Israelites had spoiled them, the Sea, which had cast them ashore, afterwards, as is usual, carried them off again, & buried them in the Sand or Mud.⁸

Q. Miriam, the Sister of Aaron. Why not, of Moses? v. 20.⁹

A. The common Answer is, Aaron and she, lived longest together: Moses having been absent from them XL Years. Or perhaps, Moses was not by the same Mother, which Aaron and Miriam had.

She was married unto Hur, if we may believe Josephus.¹⁰

Q. Miriams bearing a Part in the Song of Moses; Can you tell of any thing thereby occasioned? v. 20.

A. From That, (& from the Poetic Inspiration of other Women in the Sacred Scriptures) the Poets, may have taken Occasion, to Report, that Poetry was of a Female Extraction & that Calliope, one of that Sex, was the Author of their Faculty.¹¹

Huetius conjectures, That from the Dancing of Miriam, and her Companions, on the Sea-shore, Callimachus in his Hymn to Diana, ascribes to her, ἐξήκοντα χορηγίδας ὠκεανίνας, Threescore Dancers, the Daughters of the Ocean.¹²

Q. The Lord shewed him a Tree.] What may be the Meaning of it? v. 25.

A. The Lord shewed him the Nature and Vertue of the Tree; or made him understand it. And shall I now go on with what Munster fetches from the Book Zeror Hammor on this Occasion? Sicut et postea Solomonem docuit Naturas et Proprietates omnium Herbarum, de quibus ille quoque librum scripsit; sed quia is venit in Abusum, et multi confidentiam suam magis in Herbas posuerunt quam in Deum, abstulit Ezechias Librum illum ne posteris sui peius aberrarent et in infirmitatibus, non ad Deum principaliter, sed ad Herbas recurrerent.¹³

⁸ Drawing on tractate Shirata, ch. 9 (Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael 1:211–12), Rashi offers the same explanation on this verse (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi: Shemos 2:191–92).

¹⁰ Patrick (Exodus 275) and Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 3.2.4).

¹³ Sebastian Münster, on Exod. 15:25, in Hebraica Biblia Latina Planeque (1546), fol. 143, note (k), quotes from ספר צרור המור Sefer Zeror ha-Mor [Zeror Hammor, sive Fasciculus Myrrhæ], a popular midrash on the Torah (Venetiis, 1567), by the R. Abraham Saba of Castile

Probably the Waters of Marah, contracted their Bitterness by its Mixture with Nitre, with which those Parts abound. Probably Marah was not far from the Place where Hagar apprehended she should perish by Thirst. The Israelites ought now to have cried unto Him who releev'd Hagar; But, —¹⁴

Whether the Miracle consisted in Gods Revealing to Moses a Wood which had really the Faculty of Sweetning the Waters, (which Monsr. Saurin takes to be likely,) or intended only to make the People sensible, that He could work what Miracles he pleased, by what means he pleased, it is not easy to be determined.¹⁵

The Jews have their Fancies about this Wood (by them called, Aroofne) which are not worth reciting.¹⁶

Demetrius, an Heathen Author, quoted by Eusebius, relates this History with just such Particulars, & almost the same Expressions, as Moses.¹⁷

Tertullian will have this Wood, as an Emblem for our SAVIOURs Cross.¹⁸

(1440–1508), (JE): “Just as he [God] later taught Solomon the natures and properties of all herbs, so he [Solomon] also wrote a book about herbal [medicine]. Since God is no longer revered as he used to be, and as many have placed their confidence more on herbs than on God, Hezekiah took away that book lest his descendants might stray even worse and in their weaknesses might not mainly have recourse to God but to herbs.” Münster acknowledges as one of his sources ספר צרור המור Sepher Zeror HaMor (Tzeror HaMor), a commentary on the Torah with emphasis on mysticism, published in Venice (1567), authored by R. Abraham ben Yakkov Saba (d. c. 1508), a Sephardic Kabbalist and biblical commentator, born in Zamora, Spain.
14 Gen. 21:14. In the following paragraphs, Mather’s principal source is Jacques Saurin, “Dissertation L,” Dissertations (1723) 1:416–17.

15 Saurin (Dissertations 1:417). For much the same, see Simon Patrick on Exod. 15:25 (Exodus 279). Whether the miracle consisted in the transmutation of the bitter water, or in the finding of the magical piece of wood in the desert, or in the fact that a piece of bitter wood could render the water potable – these issue and more are also debated in Pierre-Daniel Huet’s Alnetanae Quaestiones (1690), lib. 2, cap. 12, § 16, pp. 208–09 and, of course, by the classic commentators Ramban, Ibn Ezra, Midrash Tanhuma Buber (4.18 Exod. 15:22, Part IV), and in tractate Vayassa’ (ch. 1), in Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael (1:227); JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot (2:119–20).

16 Saurin (Dissertations 1:417), Mather’s source, has “Ardofne.” The translators of both Targums Jonathan ben Uzziel and Hierosolymitanum Latine אַרְדִּיפְנִי as “Ardiphne,” in Walton (Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 4:132). See also Simon Patrick, Exod. 15:25 (Exodus 279). Guestimates about the type of wood intended include the following: wood from a cedar (Kimchi), olive tree (R. Joshua), willow tree (R. Nehemiah), “the roots of a fig tree,” “the roots of a pomegranate, since there is nothing as bitter as those. But the sages say: It was ivy wood, and there is nothing as bitter as that” (Midrash Tanhuma [Buber] 2:89). Mather’s dismissive remark about rabbinic commentators is informed by his quest for Christological typology in the OT.

17 Eusebius Pamphilus, Praeparatio evangelica (9.29.445d), cites Demetrius, who relates that when Moses did not find “sweet water, but bitter, at God’s command he cast the wood of a certain tree into the fountain, and the water became sweet” (Preparation 1:474).

18 In Adversus Judaeos (cap. 13), Tertullian typologically links this mysterious piece of wood “Ardofne,” which sweetened the bitter waters in the desert, with the wood of Christ’s redemptive cross (ANF 3:169–70).

Q. Can you tell any odd Report among the Heathen, occasion'd by this Passage; They came to Elim, where were twelve Wells of Water, and threescore & ten Palm-trees? v. 27.¹⁹

A. 'Tis an odd Passage, in C. Tacitus; *Cum grex Asinorum agrestium è pastu, in Rupem nemore opacam concessit, sequuntur Moses, conjectura herbidi soli, largas aquarum venas aperit.*²⁰

Bochart thinks, that the Original of this Tradition, was, the finding of Water at Elim. For Josephus reads the Word Elim, (and no doubt, many others of the Ancients took it so,) as being Ἰλιν, Ilin, and having, Asses, in the Signification of it. For in the Syriack, Ilin, signifies the Colts of Asses, or of Wild-Asses.²¹

The Twelve Wells here, lead some to consider the Twelve Apostles of our Saviour, as well as the Twelve Tribes of Israel. And the Seventy Palm-trees, to the Seventy Disciples, of our Saviour, as well as the Seventy Elders of Israel.²²

Q. The Typical Consideration of the Manna, will Illustrate the Oracles of God? v. 14, 15.¹

A. It will so. And you shall have it.²

That the Manna was a Type, whereof our Lord Jesus Christ is the Antitype, our Lord Himself assures us. [Joh. 6.32, 51.] see 1. Cor. 10.3.

Manna was a Portion, præpared by God, and bestowed from Heaven, on an Unworthy and Rebellious People. The Word, Manna, may bee rendred, either, What is it? or, Tis a Portion prepared. It was the Corn of Heaven; [Psal. 78.23, 24.] a Food, without any Cares, or Pains, or Industry of their own, granted unto them; and this when they were in a very sinful Frame of Murmuring. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ; Hee is a Portion for an Hungry Soul; Hee is prepared by God, and Hee is bestowed from Heaven, even upon the Rebellious. [Psal. 68.18.]³

The Manna was outwardly Despicable and Contemptible, but really an Excellent Food. It was but little on Quantity: yett it was Angels Food; the Figure of it was Round; the Colour of it was White; the Tast of it, like Fresh Oyl, or Wafers baked with Honey. It sustained the whole Congregation of Israel; They might Eat it as they found it, or they might Grind it & Bake it. Yett the Murmurers grew weary of it, & called it, Light Bread. The outward Appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ, was in like Manner Despicable & Contemptible. [Isa. 53.3.] But really Hee is the most excellent Object. [Cant. 5.16. 1. Pet. 2.7.] The Tast of Him, in His Promises, & in His Appointments, is very Delightful, to those that enjoy it. [1. Pet. 2.3. Psal. 119.103.] The Sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ, were the Grinding & the Baking of the Manna, to bee Food for our Faith. And now Hee satisfies the Desires of no less than, the whole Israel of God.⁴

But the Substance here, as in every other Type, exceeds the Shadow. The Manna did but Feed the Body; our Lord Jesus Christ Feeds the Soul. The Manna did but contribute unto the Natural Life; our Lord Jesus Christ gives a Spiritual and Eternal. [Joh. 6.49, 51, 58.]

1 For an intriguing discussion of literal and allegorical readings of manna in rabbinic and Philonic literature, see M. Kister, "Allegorical Interpretations of Biblical Narratives in Rabbinic Literature, Philo, and Origen: Some Case Studies" (esp. pp. 162–72).

2 Mather's typological reading of the celestial manna is extracted from his uncle's sermon "The Gospel of Occasional Types," preached in Dublin, Ireland, on April 16, 1668, and published in Samuel Mather's The Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1705), pp. 137–42. See also John 6:31–48.

The Quantity of Manna to bee gathered, was an Omer, something less than half a Peck of our Measure.⁵ Here is at least an hundred and fifty thousand Bushels of Manna every Night gott ready for the People. The Vessel that Receives the Lord Jesus Christ, the Heavenly Manna, is the Heart and Soul. Their Manner was, when they had gathered the Manna, to distribute unto each Person, the Quantity of an Homer full. [Compare, Exod. 16.18. with, 2. Cor. 8.14, 15.] There is a Sort of Equality among all Beleevers, in this Point; That all Beleevers have an æqual Portion in the Lord Jesus Christ, the true Manna. [Gal. 3.28, 29. 2. Pet. 1.1. Jude. 3.] Justificatio non Suscipere magis et minus.⁶

Where was the Manna to bee gotten? The Manna was to bee found no where, but in the Camp of Israel. And if wee should find the Lord Jesus Christ, the Bread of Life, it must bee in His Church. Extrà ecclesiam non est salus.⁷

The Manna was hidden in the Dew; lept up, as it were, in Two Beds of Dew, the one above it, the other under it. The Word of God is compared unto the Dew. [Deut. 32.2.] The Lord Jesus Christ, is to bee in His Word conversed withal; Hee is there, The Hidden Manna.⁸

They must go out of their Tents, to gather the Manna. And they that would enjoy the Lord Jesus Christ, must go out of them selves, & out of their Sins, and out of all Creatures.

When was the Manna to bee gotten? The Manna was to bee gathered Early in the Morning. And wee must seek after our Lord Jesus Christ Early, in the Morning of our Lives, with our first Endeavours. [Prov. 8.17. Math. 6.33.] The Manna was to bee Daily gathered, and none to bee Reserved for another Day. This taught us, to depend on the Providence of God, for our Daily Bread, and not bee Tortured for to morrow. But especially our Lord Jesus Christ must bee Daily fed upon; Hee must not ly by us, unimproved.⁹

They were to gather a Double Portion of Manna, on the Sixth Day, and None on the Seventh. A Rest on the Sabbath was taught by This. And wee may learn, That God usually Dispenseth most of the Lord Jesus Christ unto Men, & most plentifully towards their latter End. But learn also, that if wee don't make sure of Him, before this Life bee ended, all Hopes of an Interest in Him, are over forever.

7 Samuel Mather, pp. 139–40. The Latin passage, oft-cited and adapted, signifies, "No salvation outside the Church," and expresses the determination of the early Church Fathers to impose conformity on its members. The passage is generally attributed to St. Cyprian of Carthage (c. 200–58), in his "Epistle LXXII: To Jubaianus, Concerning the Baptism of Heretics," § 21 (ANF 5:384–85), and became a major issue in the debate with Bishop Jubaianus of Mauritania at the Synod at Carthage (257 CE). It is also repeatedly cited in St. Cyprian's "Epistle LXI: To Pomponius, Concerning some Virgins," § 4 (ANF 5:358); in St. Augustine of Hippo (345–430), in De Baptismo contra Donatistas (4.17.24) [PL 043. 169–70] (NPNFi 4:458) and, before Augustine, in Origen's In Jesu Nave homiliae (3.5).

When they came to Canaan, the Manna ceased. Ordinances will do so, when wee come to Heaven.

Yett there was a Golden Pott of Manna Reserved in the Holy of Holies. All the Dispensations of the Lord Jesus Christ, which we have had in this. Life, will remain in precious Remembrance with the Saints in Heaven, to all Eternity.¹⁰

I will add a Thought which Momma in his Oeconomia Temporum has upon the Manna.

*Sexto Die dupla Manna mensura dabatur; septimo non inveniebatur. Sexto Die Septimana Christus omnes vires impendit, et animam ipsam emisit, ut opus Redemptionis consummaret et perficeret. Septimo Die in Sepulchro jacuit, nec in terrâ inter homines visus aut inventus est.*¹¹

I suppose we shall not easily consent unto Salmasius, who endeavours to make us Beleeve, That this Manna was what usually fell in the Eastern Countreys; and that the Miracle consisted not in the Creation of any New Thing, but in the Continuance of it; The Manna in those Parts falling only at certain Seasons of the Year.¹²

¹⁰ Samuel Mather, pp. 141–42.

¹¹ Wilhelm Momma (1642–77), a student of the Dutch theologian Joannes Cocceius (1603–69), presented his thesis De oeconomia temporum testamentaria triplex (1673) to the theological faculty at Leiden University and thus launched a cantankerous repartee between his teacher and Samuel Maresius (1599–1673), on the issue of the economy of the covenant of grace. Momma's thoughts on the matter are grounded in his Christological reading of the OT type: "On the sixth day a double measurement of manna was given; on the seventh it was not found. On the sixth day of the week, Christ expended all his strength and gave up his spirit so that he might accomplish and complete the work of redemption. On the seventh day, he lay in the tomb, and he was neither seen nor found on earth among men." The same Latin passage also appears in Momma's De varia conditione & statu Ecclesiae Dei sub Triplici Oeconomia; Patriarcharum, ac Testamenti Veteris, & denique Novi; Libri tres. Editio secunda (1683), lib. 2, cap. 6, § 17.9, p. 124. Alas, on the 12th of March, 1703, Momma's opus was placed on the RC Index of Forbidden Books. See Index Librorum Prohibitorum Sanctissimi Domini Nostri Gregorii XVI, Pontificis Maximi (Neapoli, 1862), p. 306.

¹² Mather is displeased with the demystification of the biblical manna as related by Claudius Salmasius, aka. Claude de Saumaise (1588–1653), classical scholar and professor of Oriental languages at the University of Leiden. In his dissertation De Manna et Saccharo Commentarius (1664), pp. 1–75, Salmasius enlists an army of scholars from Aristotle and Galen to Avicenna, and Pliny to Scaliger – all demonstrating that manna, a coriander-like, sweet-tasting gummy substance is a common food staple naturally occurring in the Fertile Crescent. An emended version of this treatise is appended to Salmasius's magnum opus Plinianae exercitationes [1629] (1689), tom. 2, pp. 245–54, but references to the common existence of manna appear throughout Plinianae (Index II, 2:90). Even the French theologian Dom August Calmet, Abbot of Senones, in his An Historical, Critical, Chronological and Etymological Dictionary of the Holy Bible. 3 vols. (1732), cites several authors who admit that "still at this Day there falls Manna in several Places of the World: In Arabia, in Poland, in Calabria, in Mount Libanus, in Dauphine, and elsewhere" (2:122). The first French edition of Calmet's famous Dictionary appeared in 23 quarto volumes and was published in Paris (1707–1716). How devastating such

Q. What might be the Reason, why the Almighty was pleased, for to feed His People with Manna? v. 15.

A. Many and Weighty.

As there might be the Justice of Heaven, to confine them unto this one simple sort of Diet, in a Way of Punishment upon them, for their Infidelity and Impatience, under their want of Meat; so there might be a Kindness of Heaven in it, particularly unto their Health, by cleansing them with that soft fine aerial Diet, from the Egyptian Mange, wherewith many of them, in the Time of their Bondage, could not but be more or less infected, & which a more luxurious Diet might have made so contagious, as to have spread all over the Camp. God would thus also tame their wanton Appetites, which hanker'd after Egypt, and sleighted the inestimable Favour of their Deliverance from thence. And He would thus prove their Faith, in that Alsufficiency, to which a Paradise & a Wilderness were all one; and His Ability, not only to Spread their Table, but also to Bless, whatever He should sett upon their Table.¹³

Q. But why would the Lord supply them (now the Bread they brought out of Egypt with them failed,) with Manna, every Day, and not once a Week, or once a Month? v. 15.

A. Munster mentions a Good Reason for it; – *Ut nullus transiret Dies, in quo Dei circa se non sentirent Beneficium; atque ob id Dei semper essent memores.*¹⁴ challenges could be to the divine inspiration of the Mosaic Pentateuch can be seen in an epistle, most likely written by the English deist Charles Blount (1654–93), inserted in the English translation of Thomas Burnet's Archaeologiae Philosophicae: Or, the Ancient Doctrine Concerning the Originals of Things (1729): "I know that Manna is now plentifully gathered in CALABRIA, and JOSEPHUS tells me in his Days it was plentiful in ARABIA; the Devil therefore made me Quaere, where was then the Miracle in the Days of MOSES, since the Israelites saw but that in his Time, which the Natives of those Countries behold in ours?, in C.B. "A Letter to Mr. E. Curll, Bookseller," p. viii.

13 Matthew Poole's trusty Synopsis Criticorum (1:387–88) may for once be quoted at length. To the question of whether this celestial manna was any different from the commonly found manna in other regions, Poole's commentator answers, "It [celestial manna] purges only gently: and in the beginning it was capable of purifying every evil humor which might have been picked up from the foods of Egypt, their cucumbers, melons, etc.; and finally to be made gradually by habit of nature an altogether suitable food. For some make use of poison with impunity due to frequent usage. Add that, since it was produced by the ministry of Angels, it was more excellent by far than what is common with respect to taste, purity, etc." (Works 4:323–24). See also Johanne de Mey (1617–78), Dutch Reformed clergyman and professor of philosophy at Middleburg, in Sacra Physiologia. Editio secunda (1655), cap. 2, Locus V. Exod. 16.14, 15, 16 (pp. 113–16).

14 Sebastian Münster, Biblia Hebraica (1546), fol. 145, note (c), insists that God distributed his manna daily "so that no one might pass days on which they did not feel the kindness of God around them; and on this account they would always be mindful of God."

Q. Why was a Memorial of the Manna præserted, in the most Holy Place, & no such Memorial kept of the Water that followed Israel in the Desert? v. 33.

A. Almighty God, by Miracle supplied His People in the Wilderness, both with Meat & with Drink. Their miraculous Meat was Manna from Heaven; their miraculous Drink, was Water out of the Rock. In the Most Holy Place, was reserved, a Memorial of the Manna; but none of the Water. T'was herein a Model of the Terrestrial Paradise; where there was a Sacrament for Eating, namely, the Tree of Life; but none for Drinking. The Manna being formed in Heaven, might very properly bee laid up in the Most Holy Place, that repræsented Heaven. But the Water proceeding from a Rock in the Earth, could therefore claim no Higher a Place at best, than the Sanctuary, which repræsented the Church on Earth. Moreover, The Priest carried into the Holy of Holies, not the Flesh, but the Blood of the Sacrifices: not the Flesh, for the Manna was already carried thither; but the Blood, inasmuch as there was none of this Water there, so that supply'd the Place of this. [See Isaac Sarrau.]¹⁵

I will here mention a Curiosity, which Reland ha's in his Antiquitates Sacrae.

The Pott full of Manna, was a Pott of Gold, with Two Ears. In Greek, this Vessel was called, Ovoç: which Word usually signifies, An Ass. Upon this, he saies, it was, that the Pagans accused the Jews, of consecrating in their Sanctuary, An Ass; by whose Means their Lives were præserted in the Wilderness.¹⁶

Monsr. Huet, thinks, he has found among the Heathen a Monument of the Manna falling in the Wilderness. He pretends, that most of the Characters, which the Heathen bestow'd on their God Pan, are borrowed from what the Sacred History says of Moses. Like Moses, he lived in the Wilderness; like Moses, he had Rays of Light proceeding from his Countenance; like Moses, he carried a Rod in his hand; like Moses, he not only follow'd a Shepherds Life, but march'd at the Head of Armies, form'd Sieges, & gave Battles. But what chiefly appears to this learned Man, taken from the Writings of Moses, is what the Heathen say, That their God, Pan, being on the Mountains, was like to perish with Hunger, but that in one of the Caves he mett with Ceres, who help'd him to the Food that saved his Life.¹⁷

¹⁶ The Dutch scholar, cartographer, and professor of philosophy and oriental languages at Harderwijk and Utrecht, Adriaan Reland (1676–1718), relates this old chestnut in his Antiquitates Sacrae Veterum Hebraeorum breviter delineatae (1708), pars 1, cap. 5, sec. 15, p. 23. The story is probably based on that told by the Roman historian Tacitus (Historiae 5.3.3) that a statue of a donkey was set up in the Sanctum Sanctorum of the Temple. See also Mather's commentary on Exod. 15:27 (above).

Q. An Omer of Manna; How much was it? v. 33.

A. Some learned Men have taken a deal of Pains, to Reduce these Measures, unto those of the Greeks and Romans. Particularly Salmasius in his Epistles; and Conringius, in his Treatise, De Mensuris Hebraicis. But Dr. Patrick thinks, that none have done it so exactly as Dr. Cumberland, in his Book of Scripture Weights & Measures. He computes, an Ephah, to have contained Seven Wine-Gallons, a Pottle & half a Pint. An Omer then, was near Three Quarts. But lest any imagine, this was too great a Portion, to be allow'd unto one Person every day; he propounds, That Manna was of a Globular Figure; & must needs have many Empty Spaces between every Three or Four Grains; those Vacuities may be esteemed a Third Part of the Vessels Capacity. It was also a light Aerial Food, & inwardly Porous, & of a Spungy Contexture. Doubtless it wasted in Dressing by Fire, as it melted by the Sun, when it grew hott. Consequently, Three Quarts, might be reduced unto Three Pints of an oily Liquid Substance; which might not bee too much for Three Meals a day, in an hungry Desert.¹⁸ quest for allusions to biblical heroes and their exploits as remembered in ancient stories of fabulous deities and champions is masterfully demonstrated in his magnum opus Demonstratio Evangelica Ad Serenissimum Delphinum (1679), a popular work which went through several editions. If the index to this work is any indication of his achievement, Huet's analogical reading of the story of Moses as echoed in pagan myths is une fête sans pareil. Mather here refers to Huet's rendition of the cloven-hoofed and horned Pan, Arcadian god of wild mountainous regions and patron of shepherds, whose exploits are allegedly inspired by those of the biblical Moses, in Demonstratio Evangelica [third edition 1690] prop. IV, cap. 8, §§ 4–5, pp. 108–09.

18 Extracted from Patrick, on Exod. 16:36 (!), in Exodus (308–09). The illustrious French classicist, textual critic, and prolific author Claude Saumur, aka. Salmasius (1588–1653), shares his insights into ancient Hebrew measurements in his missive of 8 Febr., 1635, to Joannes Walaeo (“Epistola LXVII”), in Claudii Salmasii Epistolarum Liber Primus (1656), pp. 141–47. Mather (via Patrick) wrongfully attributes De Mensuris Hebraicis to the German polymath Hermann Conringius (1606–81), instead of to Stanislaus Grsepsius, aka. Grzepski (c. 1524–70), a Polish mathematician and philologist. Quite possibly, Patrick misattributed this work to Conringius, whose De Nummis Ebraeorum Paradoxa (1675) is similarly concerned with numismatics and measurements, because Patrick had previously cited this work in his commentary on Exod. 9:31 (Exodus 161–62). Well, now that we have restored the plumes to its rightful owner, the treatise on converting ancient Hebrew coins, measures of lengths, areas, and capacities into their Roman and Greek equivalents appears in Grsepsius, De Multiplici Siclo et Talento Hebraico. Item De Mensuris Hebraicis, tam aridorum quàm liquidorum (1568), pp. 103–52. However, more accessible in its use of conversion tables than Grsepsius's treatise is An Essay Towards the Recovery of the Jewish Measures and Weights, Comprehending their Monies (1686), by Richard Cumberland, D. D. (1631–1718), bishop of Peterborough (Cambridgeshire). Mather's reference is to ch. 3, pp. 64, 87, 88, of this work, but he also supplies future readers of Biblia Americana with his own conversion table: “III. Tables Of the MEASURES, WEIGHTS, and COINS, occurring in the Sacred Scriptures,” which Mather appends to his commentary on Revelation. Those of his peers who owned the six-volume set of the London Polyglot could also find such a conversion table in Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, vol. 6, “De Mensuris seu Vasis” (42–44), first series of pagination.

Q. The Manna unduely Reserved, Bred Worms & Stank: It may bee, some philosophical Disquisitions about the Generation of Insects, on this Occasion, may bee serviceable to the Illustration of the Scriptures, & particularly affect our True Apprehensions of the Creation therein described? v. 33.

A. Know, in general, That no Animal ever did proceed æquivocally from Putrefaction, but all, even the most contemptible Insects, are generated, by Parents of their own kind, Male and Female. This is a Discovery of that great Importance, that, a learned Person saies, perhaps few Inventions of this Age can pretend unto æqual Usefulness & Merit, & it were sufficient alone, to exterminate rank Atheism out of the World. For if all Animals bee propagated by Generation, from Parents of their own Species, and there bee no Instance in Nature of so much as a Gnat, or a Mite, spontaneously de novo produced, how came there to bee such Animals in Being, & whence could they proceed?¹⁹

Lett us appeal unto Experiment. It ha's been the general Tradition and Opinion, that Maggots, Worms, and Flies, breed in putrified Carcases; Bees from Oxen, Hornets from Horses, & Scorpions, from Crabfish; and the like. But it is all Fable and Mistake. The Sagacious Francisco Redi, made Innumerable Trials of all sorts, on Beasts, on Fowls, on Fishes, on Serpents, on corrupted Cheese, on Herbs, on Fruits, and even on Insects themselves; and hee constantly found, that all those Kinds of Putrefaction, did only afford a Nest and Food, for the Eggs and Young, of these Insects, that hee admitted thereunto; but produced no Animal of themselves, by a Spontaneous Formation; when hee suffered those things to putrefy, in Hermetically Sealed Glasses, and Vessels close covered with Paper, Yea, and, lest the Exclusion of the Air might bee supposed an Hindrance to the Experiment, in Vessels covered with Fine Lawn,²⁰ so as to Admitt the Air,

& Keep out the Insects, no living thing was ever produced there, tho' hee expos'd them to the Action of the Sun, in the Warm Climate of Florence, & at the most kind Season of the Year. Even Flies mortified and corrupted, when inclosed in such Vessels, did never procreate a New Flie. But when the Vessels were open, & the Insects had free Access unto the Aliment in them, hee diligently observed, That no other Sort were produced, but of such as hee saw go in to deposit their Eggs there; which they would readily do in all Putrefaction; even in a Mucilage of bruised Spiders, where Worms were soon hatch'd out of Eggs, and quickly chang'd into Flies of the same Kind with their Parents.²¹

| As to the Worms bred in the Intestines, and other Internal Parts of living [26v] Creatures, the happy Curiosity of Malpighi, and others, hath informed us, That each of those Tumors of Plants, out of which there generally issues a Worm, or a Flie, are first made by such Insects, which wound the Tender Buds, with a long hollow Trunk, and lay an Egg in the Hole, with a sharp corroding Liquor, which causes a Swelling in the Leaf, & so closes the Orifice: and within this Tumour, the Worm is hatch't, & receives its Aliment, until it hath eaten its Way through.²² Neither need wee recur to an æquivocal Production of Vermin, in the Phthiriasis, and in Herods Disease, who was, σκωληκόβρωτος, Eaten of Maggots.²³ Those horrible Distempers, are alwayes accompanied with putrefying Ulcers; & it hath been observed by Lewenhoeck, that Lice and Flies, which have a most wonderful Acuteness of Sense, to find out convenient Places for the nourishment of their Young do mightily endeavour to lay their Eggs upon Sores; and that one laies above an Hundred, which may naturally increase to some Hundreds of Thousands, in a quarter of a Year; which may give a satisfactory Account of the Phenomena, in those Diseases. And whereas it is here said, That some of the Israelites left of the Manna, until the Morning, & it bred Worms & stank; it is to bee understood no otherwise, than that it was Fly-blown. It was then the Month of October, which in that Southern Climate, after the Autumnal Rains, doth afford a fitt Season, & a full Repast, for infinite Swarms of Insects. It was rather a Miracle, that all the rest of the Manna was kept untainted, than that this Bred Worms. If any one rigidly urge the literal Expression of Breeding, tis to bee answered, that in the common affairs of Life, the Language of the Vulgar is to bee used.²⁴

21 Bentley, Confutation (1692), pp. 28–29, paraphrases Experimenta circa Generationem Insectorum (1671), a frequently reprinted discussion of experiments by Francesco Redi (1626–97), a celebrated Italian physician and naturalist. Redi surveys the origin of the ancients' belief in abiogenesis (pp. 1–26), describes the results of his experiments with carcasses of snakes and other dead matter in open and covered containers (pp. 27–51), and then analyzes the diverging results of his peers (pp. 52 ff). See also the modern translation Experiments on the Generation of Insects (1909).

23 Acts 12:23 (LXX) relates how King Herod Agrippa (10 BCE–44 CE), punished by an angel, was “eaten by worms.” Phthiriasis is a skin infection (esp. around the eyelid margins) caused by pubic lice (Phthirus pubis). OED.

If wee consult the Accurate Observations of Swammerdam, wee shall find, that the supposed Change of Worms into Flies, is but supposed: for the most of those Members, which at last become visible to the Eye, are existent, in the Beginning, artificially complicated in one another, & covered with Membranes, & with Tunicles, which are afterwards laid aside; and all the rest of the Process, is no more surprising, than the Eruption of Horns in Bruits, or of Teeth and Beard in Men, at certain Periods of Age.²⁵ No, nor indeed can the meanest Plant bee raised without Seed, by any Formative Power, that is Residing in the Seed which may bee gathered. First, for the Known Seeds of all Vegetables, one or two only excepted, that are left unto future Discovery; which Seeds, by the Help of Microscopes, are all found Real and Perfect Plants, with the Trunk, & its Leaves, curiously enclosed in the Cortex: Nay, one single Grain of Wheat, Rye, or Barly, shall contain four or five distinct Plants, under one common Covering: A convincing Argument of the wonderful Providence of God, that those Vegetables, which were to bee the chief Sustenance of Mankind, should have that multiplied fecundity above others: And, secondly, by that famous Experiment of Malpighi, who a long Time enclosed a Quantity of Earth in a Vessel,

secured by a fine Clothe, from the Small Imperceptible Seeds of Plants, that are blown about with the Winds, & had that Success of the Curiosity, to discover this noble Truth; That no Species of Plants can bee produced out of the Earth de novo, without a præexistent Seed; and consequently, they were all created, at the Beginning of things, by God the Almighty Gardener.²⁶ See Mr. Bentleys Confutation of Atheism.²⁷

²⁷ Mather also put Bentley's Boylean lectures to good use in his commentary on Genesis (BA 1:350–51, 385–99).

Q. Moses, in the Sight of the Elders of Israel, smiting the Rock? v. 6.

A. The Fame of this, as Dr. Patrick thinks, reached other Nations. The Memory of it remains in several of their Fables. There is a manifest Allusion to it, in Euripides his Bacchæ; where he makes one of them smiting the Rock at Cithæron, & Waters gushing out of it. This is observed by Bochart, in his Canaan. Huet ha's observed many more such Instances, out of Nonnus, and Pausanius, and diverse other Authors, in his Alnetanae Quaestiones. L. II. c. 12. n. 18. And he thinks it very probable, That the Fable of Janus, was forged from hence; for which he alledges many Arguments (in his Demonstratio Evangelica;) and this among the rest; That Albricus describes his Image, holding a Rod in his left Hand, with which he smites a Stone, & out of it Water flowes.¹

Q. The Rock yeelding Water to Israel; was it not a Type? v. 6.²

A. Yes. Else the Apostle would not have said, 1. Cor. 10.4. which Rock was Christ.

There is in Christ, the Everlasting Strength of a Rock. [See Isa. 26.4. Isa. 33.16. 1. Pet. 2.6. Math. 16.18.]

There is also in Christ, the comfortable Shade of a Rock. [See Isa. 32.2.]³

1 The entire paragraph is from Simon Patrick, on Exod. 17:6 (Exodus 315–16), whose own source for the reference to Euripides's corybantic gyrations, Θύρσον δὲ τις λαβοῦσ' ἔπαισεν ἐς πέτραι, ὅθεν ὁροσώδης ὕδατος ἐκπηδαῖ νοτίς. i. e., "Someone took a thyrsus and struck it against a cliff, and out leapt a dewy spring of water" (Bacchæ 704–705), is Samuel Bochart's Geographia Sacra (1707), pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 16, esp. fols. 431–32. In the best manner of Prisca theologia, the dissemination of the ancient theology, Mather (via Patrick) also alludes to the Hellenic epic poet Nonnus of Panopolis, Egypt (fl. CE 450–70), whose vivid description of the frenetically dancing bacchantes and of Dionysius striking a rock until water gushes forth (Dionysiaca 45.8–31, 273–331 and 48.570–89) appears to echo the well-known episodes in the Exodus saga. Likewise, Graeciae Descriptio, by the periegetic writer Pausanias (fl. c. 150 CE), as well as Herodotus (5.82, 83), allegedly recalls many instances of Moses' exploits in the wilderness – at least if the French Roman Catholic bishop Pierre-Daniel Huet and his disquisitions on the topic in his Alnetanae Quaestiones (1690), lib. 2, cap 12, § 18, pp. 212–14, has his say on the matter. For the story of Bifrons, aka. Janus (god of doorways) as derived from the Exodus story of Moses, staff in hand, striking the rock, see De Deorum Imaginibus, by Alb[er]icus Londoniensis, aka. Alexander Neckham (1157–1217), abbot of Cirencester. Here, too, Huet's learned Demonstratio Evangelica (1690), prop. IV, cap. 9, § 2, pp. 134–35, is Mather's second-hand source used as a means to reify biblical authority by reclaiming the extra-biblical testimony of pagan authors as proof of the Mosaic miracles. For the identification of Albricus and his images of the deities, see Jean Seznec's Survival of the Pagan Gods (170–79).

2 The following typological explication of the famous water-spouting rock of Moses appears in Samuel Mather's sermon "The Gospel of the Occasional types," preached in Dublin, Ireland, on April 16, 1668, and collected in his Figures or Types (1705), pp. 142–44. See also 1 Cor. 10:4.

3 Samuel Mather, p. 143, §§ 1–2.

Hee is likewise fitly compared unto a Rock, for the Offence and Scandal, which the Lusts of Men dispose them, to take at Him. [See, 1. Pet. 2.8. Rom. 9.33. Isa. 8.14. and 28.16.]⁴

Again, who would have look'd for Water out of a Rock? Hence tis mentioned with such Admiration; Psal. 78.20. The Rock, was a Thing of no great Pomp to see to, but only a Rude Thing in a Desert. Thus the outward Meanness of our Lord Jesus Christ, made the Carnal Reason of the Jewes, not imagine it likely, that our Salvation should proceed from Him. [See, Isa. 53.3.]

And as the Rock, repræsented Christ, so the Water of the Rock, the Spirit of Christ; [see Joh. 7.37, 38, 39. Isa. 44.3.] The Spirit proceeds from Christ, as Water issued out from the Rock. [Joh. 15.26.]⁵

The Water came forth, out of the Rock, when Smitten with the Rod of Moses. Had not our Lord Jesus Christ been Smitten [Isa. 53.4.] with the Curse of the Law, wee had never been Refreshed, with the Consolations of the Holy Spirit.⁶

The Spirit of Christ followes us, in all our Changes, & all our Travels, thro' the Wilderness of this World: As the Streams flowing from the Rock followed the Congregation of Israel.

At length, God in His unsearcheable Providence ordered the Waters of the Rock to cease. The People then Murmur, and Moses himself staggers. The Rock must now bee broached again; and then it must bee Spoken to. Some have made this Reflection upon it, that Christ must not only bee Smitten for us; but also bee preached to us; Tis in the Speaking & the Preaching of the Gospel, that the Spirit communicated. [see Gal. 3.2.]⁷

Q. What might be the Special Motive, that stirr'd up Amalek in making War upon Israel? v. 8.

A. Munster offers a very probable one. Amalek, was of the Posterity of Esau, and feared that Israel now coming with a mighty Force, with an Intention for the Land of Promise, would reap the full Accomplishment of that Blessing, that Jacob gott away from Esau.⁸

Q. Moses lifting up his Hand? v. 11.

A. No doubt, He prayed earnestly. But the Occasion of his Lifting up his Hand, was to advance the Rod of God, which he held in his Hand, & lifted up, as their Standard or Banner, to which they should Look, & Hope for Help, from the mighty Power of God, who had done such Wonders with the Rod.

The Sight of the Rod, inspired them with such Courage, that their Enemies could not stand before them. Their Spirits flagged, when they did not see the Rod; they began to give ground, imagining perhaps that Moses despaired of the Victory.

This is Dr. Patrick's Notion of it.⁹

Q. The Prevailing of Israel against Amalek, while Moses held up his Hands, what might there be of Evangelical Mystery in it? v. 11.¹⁰

A. It is a notable Hint, that old Prosper ha's upon it, Extendens Moyses manus ad Deum, Crucifixi instar expressit. Moses used the Gesture and Posture of one Crucified; An Intimation, That our Victory is obtained by our Crucified Redeemer. And Prosper, making those Words of the Psalmist, Lett the Lifting up of my Hands, be as the Evening Sacrifice, to be the Words of our Saviour, by the Lifting up of His Hands there, understands His Crucifixion.¹¹

Q. How did Aaron and Hur stay up the Hands of Moses? v. 12.

A. Sometimes Moses held up the Rod in his Right Hand, sometimes in his Left; for in the Eleventh Verse we read, but of one hand used at a Time. Aaron and Hur alternately help'd him, to hold up, first one hand, then the other; For, as Patrick notes, If they had done it both together, they might have been as weary as he.¹²

Q. That obscure Passage of, The Hand of the Lord, on the Throne of the Lord; how may wee understand it? v. 16.

¹² Patrick (Exodus 319).

A. The Scituation of the famous Mount Casius, is well known, from the Accounts, which both Strabo, and Pliny have given of it. It was, according to Antoninus, about Forty Miles from Pelusium. Casius, in Ptolomy, is written, Κάσσιον, Cassion, and Κασσιῶτις, Cassiotis; and so it is, in Dion Cassius, who tells us; That Pompey died at Mount Cassius, on the very Day, whereon formerly hee Triumphed over Mithridates, and the Pyrates; and when from a certain Oracle, hee had Suspicion of the Cassians, there were no such People intending him any Hurt, but hee was murdered and Buried, at the Mountain of that Name.¹³

Now, for the Words of Moses here, which do so Rack Interpreters, יד על כסִיָה Jad gual Cas-jah; the LXX renders ‘em, Ἐν χειρὶ κρυφαίᾳ πολεμεῖ κύριος, The Lord wars with a Secret Hand.¹⁴ Almost all other Versions render it, The Hand upon the Throne of the Lord; that God hath sworn. But hear Dr. Lightfoot. Saith hee, what if כסִיָה Cas-jah, be Cassiotis? For that Countrey, was the Countrey of the Edomites, but especially of the Amalekites, whereof Moses is treating in this History. Wee do but modestly propound this Conjecture; which, if it may take any Place, the Words may bee rendred without any Scruple, to this Purpose; The Hand of the Lord, is against Cassiotis, (the Countrey of the Amalekites, for) the Lord hath War with Amalek, from Generation to Generation.¹⁵

13 Mt. Cas(s)ius, a sandy mount, c. 50 km (c. 31 miles) E of ancient Pelusium on the NE branch of the Nile Delta, is frequently mentioned by Strabo (Geographica 1.2.31; 1.3.4, 17; 16.2.8, 26, 28, 32, 33) and by Pliny (Natural History 5.14.68). According to Pliny, “the temple of Jupiter Casius, and the tomb of Pompey the Great” (BCE 48), a Roman military leader, are found at the foot of Mt. El Kas (Mt. Casius). According to the Itinerarium Antonini Augusti (# 152.2, 4), a 3rd/4th c. CE register of distances between points of importance in the Roman Empire, the distance between “Casio” and “Pelusio” is c. 40 Roman miles (p. 69). The Greco-Roman geographer Claudius Ptolemaeus (c. 90–c. 160 CE) mentions “Kassion” in his Geographia (4.5.12.2, 5.15.8.3); and in his Roman History (42.5.5), the Roman historian Dion Cassius (150–235 CE) relates the fateful death of Pompey the Great, aka. Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus (BCE 106–48) on the anniversary of the demise of Mithridates VI (BCE 120–63), king of Pontus and formidable enemy of the Romans (Roman History 37.13).

14 Exod. 17:16 (LXX). Mather erroneously transliterates יָהּ עַל־כִּסִּיָּהּ (Exod. 17:16) as Jad gual Cas-jah instead of following his source, Lightfoot’s יד על כסִיָה Jad Al Cas-jah, in Works (1684) 2:291.

15 The passages from Lightfoot are extracted from A Chorographical Decad [sic] Searching into some Places of the Land of Israel: Those especially whereof mention is made in St. Mark (ch. 1, sec. 3: Cassiotis), in Works (1684) 2:291, by John Lightfoot (1602–75), the great English rabbinic scholar and master of Catharine Hall, Cambridge, best known for his six-volume Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae (1658–78).

Q. On what Occasion comes in the Story of Jethro in the Middle of Exodus, when the True Place of it is, between the Tenth & Eleventh Verses, in the Xth Chapter of Numbers? v. 2.

A. Amalek is cursed, in the former Chapter of Exodus. But Jethro lived among the Amalekites. [1. Sam. XV.6.] Now the Story of Jethro is introduced immediately, to shew, that Jethro found favour both with GOD & Israel.¹

Q. Upon Jethro's Rejoicing for all the Goodness that God had done unto Israel? v. 9.

A. Pelican observes, That the Gentiles more devoutly acknowledged Gods Mercies, when they understood them, than the Jewes themselves did. Our Saviour, when He came, upbraided that People with the same; finding such Faith among the Gentiles, as He could not meet withal in Israel.²

That Passage occurring in the Speech of Jethro, In the thing wherein they dealt proudly, He was above them; is thus expounded by the Chaldee Paraphrase; In that very thing, wherein they thought to Judge, (i. e. to Punish or, Destroy,) the Israelites, [Egyptians], they were Judged themselves; (i. e. Drown'd in the Sea, as they thought to Drown all the male-Children of the Israelites).³

1 Mather's question appears in Patrick, on Exod. 18:6 (Exodus 326). Patrick's own acknowledged source is John Lightfoot's A Handfull of Gleanings out of the Book of Exodus (1643), sec. 23, pp. 26, 27. It is Lightfoot who argues that the passage is misplaced, because the story of Jethro "should come in between the 10th and 11th Verses of that Tent of Numbers." It seems unlikely, Lightfoot believes, that Jethro would wait for a whole year before meeting up with Moses after Jethro learned of his son-in-law's arrival in the vicinity. (See also Poole's Synopsis Criticorum [1:393] and Works [4:347]). However, neither James Ussher (Annals [1658], p. 18) nor John Selden (De Synedriis [1653], lib. 2, cap. 2, sec. 4, esp. pp. 73–74) appears to agree with Lightfoot. Be that as it may, according to tractate Amalek (ch. 3 and 4), Jethro, the priest, teamed up with Moses after hearing of the battle with Amalek and the giving of the Law (Me-khilta De-Rabbi Ishmael 2:271, 281–82).

2 Patrick on Exod. 18:9 (Commentary 328) here relies on Konradus Pellicanus (1478–1556), professor of Greek, Hebrew, and Old Testament at the University of Zürich, in his Commentaria Bibliorum, id est XXIII. Canoniorum Veteris Testamenti librorum (1536) 1:89.

3 See Patrick, on Exod. 18:11 (Commentary 329–30). Mather here clarifies Jethro's seemingly contradictory statement, "Now I know that the Lord is greater than all gods: for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he was above them" (Exod. 18:11). Since the pronoun "them" lacks a clear antecedent, it could refer either to the pagan gods, or to the Egyptians, or the Israelites themselves, an ambiguity which the post-Reformation divines (Vatablus, Fagius, Malvenda, Rivet, Munster, Tigurinus, Ainsworth, Oleaster, Junius, Tremellius, Piscator, and Montanus) hotly debated without coming to a consensus (Poole, Synopsis Criticorum 1:394, and Works 4:352). Mather cuts through this Gordian knot by consulting the Chaldee Paraphrase (Targum Onkelos) on this verse, in Brian Walton's magnificent Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (1653) 1:303. See also J. W. Etheridge, Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel (1:386).

Q. Upon the Settlement of Government by Moses, in Conformity to the Advice of his Father-in-Law, tis worth while to inquire; what was the ancient Form of Government among the People of God? v. 20.

A. The Jewish Polity seems to have been, of this fashion.⁴

First, There was in every Town, a sufficient Number of Overseers, to the People; who mett, upon Occasion, to do them Right. The Families of the Tribes, were Numbred by Thousands, Hundreds, Fifties, Tens, & over each Division; there præsided Rulers, which were called, Their Captains: whose Business t'was to decide lesser Causes.⁵

There were other Officers of yett a larger Jurisdiction; called, Princes, and, Heads of the Tribes, and, Chief of the Tribes, and, Officers among the Tribes, and, Judges & Officers throughout the Tribes. There were Twelve of these; for every Tribe had its Præsident; and by these, the Causes of an higher Nature, were determined.

Moreover, There was a Senate of Seventy, chosen out of these Two Ranks; who were designed at first, as Co-adjutors unto Moses. [Num. 11.16.]

These are mentioned with the other Two, in Josh. 23.2. and 24.1. For, by the Elders, in both of these Places are meant, the Seventy Seniors, as wee may suppose; and by the Heads of Israel, wee are to understand the Representatives and Governours of the Tribes; and by Officers and Judges the Ordinary & Inferiour Captains.⁶

The Judicature of Seventy Men, was the most considerable. Moses was Præsident over it; the Jewes called it, The Judicature of Seventy One; and others, adding Aaron to the Number, say, it consisted of Seventy Two. This famous Council, which was at first appointed by Moses, in the Wilderness, was afterwards a settled Council for Governing the People in the Land of Canaan, & was called the Sanedrim, (which is a Greek Word originally, but crept into the Hebrew, as other Greek Words have done,) but to distinguish it from the lesser one, it is called, The Great Sanhedrim. The other Courts, had their Session in every City and Tribe; This did sitt at Jerusalem, and would sitt no where else. This Great Consistory, judged of All Matters, whereas the others took only Cognisance, of lesser ones. The more special Work of this Court, was to Try the most Weighty Causes: and the most Important Affairs of the Kingdome, & such as belong'd unto the Safety of the Public, were here considered. This Great Senate was chosen out of all the Tribes; the King, or Chief Civil Magistrate, was the Head of it. All other Courts appeal'd unto this; but from This was no Appeal. But some [28v] add a Fourth | Court of Justice, to wit, The Publick Council & Congregation of all the People. This is by some thought the Highest Court, as in the Case of Levites Wife. The Captains of Thousands, the Seventy Seniors, and all the Chief of the People, mett together, made this Great Assembly, this Parlament. This (they say) is that which is called, The Congregation of the Lord, and, The whole Assembly of Israel, and, The whole Congregation, and, The Great Congregation, or, Assembly. – These were the several Courts of Judgment amongst the Jewes.⁷

Q. How could it bee said, The Israelites departed from Rephidim, & came to Sinai? Rephidim and Sinai, were all one. The Mountain whereon the Law was given, was called indifferently, Horeb, and Sinai. [Exod. 19.18. with Mal. 4.4.] But when they were at Rephidim, they were at Horeb. [Exod. 17.1, 2.] So then, to go from Rephidim to Sinai, seems to go from Horeb, to Horeb. v. 2.

A. The Hill, on which the Law was given, had Two Names, and according to Bellonius also, Two Tops. The one side was called Horeb, for the Rocky Drought of it; being destitute of Water: the other was called Sinai, from the Bushes which grew upon it, one of which was by Moses beheld miraculously flaming; (if not from Sini, the Son of Canaan.) Now, when Israel lay at Rephidim, they lay on Horeb Side; & there out of the Rock, Moses fetch'd Water. Their March from Rephidim, is at the skirts of the Hill, from Horeb, to Sinai-Side of the Mountain. So saies Paul, in 1. Cor. 10.4. The Rock follow'd them: that is to say, The Water that gushed out of one side of the Hill Horeb, ran along with them, as they march'd at the Foot of the Hill, till they came on the other side of the Hill Sinai. So saies Moses in Deut. 9.21. I cast the Dust of the Golden Calf, into the Brook, that descended out of the Mount. Not that it gushed out of the Mount, on the same side, that the Calf was erected, but on the other, and at the skirt of the Hill, as Dr. Lightfoot saies, came running to that.¹

Q. It is here said, Thus shalt thou say to the House of Jacob, & tell the Children of Israel. Why are those Two Names used? v. 3.

A. Perhaps to putt them in Mind, That they, who had lately been as low as Jacob, when he came to Padan-aram, were now grown as great, as God made him, when he came from thence, & was called Israel.²

Q. A Further Thought on the Promise to Israel? v. 5.

² Patrick on Exod. 19:3 (Exodus 342).

[29v] A. As to that of being, A Peculiar Treasure, take the Gloss of Menachem, a Jewish Rabbi; SEGULLAH denotes that they should be exceeding Dear to God; that they should be like those Treasures which a King does not entrust | unto any of the Officers of his Crown, but takes them under his own Immediate Care. Tis the Idæa He gives us of the Children of Israel in the Book of Deuteronomy; THE LORDS PORTION IS HIS PEOPLE; JACOB IS THE LOTT OF HIS INHERITANCE.³

As to that being, A Kingdome of Priests, Monsr. Saurin remarks, it was very proper to give them an high notion of the Priviledges they were to enjoy, if they faithfully observed the Law now to be given them. They were just come out of a Countrey where the Persons of the Priests were Inviolable. Joseph left them untouched, when he purchased the Lands of the other Egyptians.⁴

Q. Upon what accounts was the People of Israel to bee, A Kingdome of Priests? v. 6.

A. The God of Heaven, would in a very peculiar and visible Manner bee the King of that People. Hee therefore exhibited His Glory before them, and obtained their Election, and Submission, whereby they explicitly putt themselves under His Government. Hee thereupon claimed all the Rights of Majesty, in Determining their Lawes, their Wars, and their Officers; which rendred their Condition, wonderfully easy and happy, and less liable to Apostasies. They were not now at the Arbitrary Disposals of their Humourous and Ambitious Fellow-Mortals, nor had they any Judges to mislead them into Idolatries; whereas, after they came to have Mortal Kings, the Son of Sirach tells us, Præter Davidem Hezekiam et Josiam, omnes Peccatum commiserunt; nam reliquerunt Leges Altissimi, Reges Judæ, et contempserunt Timorem Dei.⁵

Now the Kingdome of God, over this Nation, was mentained & managed, not only by giving of those excellent Lawes, in the Observation whereof they were most sensibly under the Empire of Heaven; but also, by the Oracle of the Urim, which when consulted in the Difficulties of the State, gave Audible Answers, for their Direction. The Tribes of Israel, in their Wars against the Benjamites, twice miscarried horribly, if I mistake not, for their Engaging before

3 Jacques Saurin, Dissertations Historicales (1723), “Diss. LII,” pp. 436–37, quotes from the gloss of the as yet unidentified R. Menachem, on Exod. 19:5 (“Parascha Vaisch. Jethro, fol. 67”), the seventeenth weekly Torah portion (parascha or parsha), as quoted in Saurin, Dissertations (p. 437, note 5). The Hebrew word סְגֻלָּה [segullah] suggests “possession, property,” “valued property, peculiar treasure,” or plain “treasure” (Strong’s # 5459).

4 Saurin, Dissertations (437).

5 The Latin quote appears in the Liber Ecclesiasticus 49:5–6 (Vulgate) [PL 029. 0466C] and is translated in the 1611 edition of the KJV as follows: “All [kings], except David and Ezechias, and Iosias, were defective: for they forsooke [scorned] the Law of the most High [dreadful God], (even) the kings of Iudah failed” (Sir. 49:4).

they had first waited upon the, Oracle, with that Quæstion, Whether they should engage at all, or no?

But there was one Remarkable Way wherein the Kingdome of God, over them, was Administred; and that was, The Interest of the Priesthood, in Administring all of their Affairs. In the Breast-Plate, of the High-Priest, were laid up the Urim, that uttered all their Oracles, and unto the High-Priest, were all weighty Matters to bee referr'd. Hee was the great Representative of God, and Lord-Lieutenant of Heaven, in ordering the Kingdome of Israel. Moreover, The ordinary Priests, were also ordinarily the Judges of the Land; for which Office, their Liesure and their Knowledge, above other Men, did more than a little Qualify them.⁶

And this is the Special Reason, why the People of Israel are called, A Kingdome of Priests; they were a Kingdome, which God governed by the Ministry of His Priests. Tho' I would not exclude, a further sort of Sacerdotal and Honourable Character upon the whole Nation, as Devoted unto the Special Service of God, from a Room, among the Causes of this Expression.⁷

Q. The Death for those who touched the Mount? v. 13.

A. This was either Stoning, or Shooting.⁸

The former of these Terms is Equivocal, and may signify likewise a being Præcipated, or thrown down from some Eminence. [The Word occurs, Exod. XV.4.] Selden thinks, it here denotes a Punishment like what was in Use among the Romans, who cast some Offenders headlong from the Tarpeian Rock.⁹ Ten Thousand Idumæans found this Punishment practised among the Jews in King

6 On this Mosaic divinatory instrument and its alleged Egyptian origin, see John Spencer's Dissertatio De Urim & Thummim (1669).

7 See Lev. 27:21. Mather's "Note Book of Authors" lists "MSS. No. 9, p. 203" as a potential source to be extracted for his gloss on Exod. 19:10, 11; however, he subsequently elects to omit his annotations on vv. 10–11.

8 Mather's immediate source is Jacques Saurin's Dissertations Historiques ("Diss. LII," pp. 438–39). Among Saurin's own sources is Patrick, on Exod. 19:13 (Exodus 351–52). R. Abraham Ibn Ezra's commentary on Exod. 19:13 sheds additional light on what should be done to the transgressor: No hand shall touch him] "The word bo (him) refers to the person who touches the mount. It means that no one shall enter after him to grab him. On the contrary, those who see him shall immediately stone him from where they are standing or shall shoot him through with arrows if he be distant" (Commentary: Exodus 380–81). See also Targum Jonathan ben Uzziel, in Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (4:138) and Etheridge's The Targums (1:509): "Touch it [mountain] not with the hand; for he will be stoned with hailstone, or be pierced with arrows of fire; whether beast or man, he will not live." Tractate Sanhedrin (6.1–6, in The Mishnah (389–91), gives detailed instructions on how to proceed in such a case: death by lapidation. See Tractatus de Synedriis (6.1–6), in Surenhusius, סדר נזיקין [Seder Nezikin] sive Legum Mischnicarum Liber qui inscribitur Ordo Damnorum. Pars Quarta (1702), fols. 233–37.

9 The ancient foundation of a Sabine temple, the Tarpeian Rock (Tarpeius Mons) was a high cliff (part of the Capitoline Hill), one of the seven hills of the city of Rome, overlooking the Forum. The Rock was used for executions until Sulla's time (1st c. BCE). See Livy's Ab Urbe Condita (6.17, 20), Lucan's Pharsalia (8.863), and Virgil's Aeneid (8.347, 652).

Amaziabs Time.¹⁰ Saurin says, perhaps GOD reserved immediately to Himself, the Execution of this Threatning, The Stones might be such as GOD would cause to roll down from the Mountain, on the Trespassers.

The Latter, might accordingly mean, Darts of Fire, that were to come out of the Mountain, & penetrate them, and extinguish them.¹¹

What follows, when the Trumpett soundeth long, they shall come up to the Mount, seems a Contradiction to the Prohibition. But Saurin proposes to have it rendered, when the Trumpett ceases to sound, they may then come up to the Mount. The Children of Israel, encamped for one whole Year about Mount Sinai; And GOD allow'd them, to ascend the Mount, and admire the Footsteps of His Presence, when the dreadful Ceremony of the Promulgation of the Law was over. It was then, a Mount that might be touched.¹²

Francois Du Jon (1545–1602), Dutch Reformed theologian at Heidelberg and Leiden, in Biblia Sacra (1593), p. 73, note 24. Most likely the reference to Junius comes from Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:399) and Works (5:25) rather than directly from Junius.

Tertio die, facto Manè. *Potestue dici, quòd data fuerit in silencio? Docet quòd non, quod dictum est, Et fuerunt Voces et Fulgura. Potestue dici, quòd non audierunt Vocem? Docet quid sit ad hoc dicendum, illud quod dicitur, Psal. 29.4. Vox Domini in Fortitudine Vox Domini in Magnificentià, Vox Domini confringens Cedros. R. But Maimonides has a Passage worthy to be noted, *The Law was given to them on a Cloudy Day, to denote the Veil which was drawn between their Eyes & the Truth.*¹⁵ Our Apostle may allude unto this Maxim, when he says, *The Veil is upon their Hearts.*¹⁶

Q. Please, among the Ancient Pagans, any Remarkable Testimony to the Lawes of Moses?

A. Yes. Particularly, Strabo (L. 16.) besides many excellent Things relating to the Jewish Religion, ha's these remarkable Words concerning Moses. ἔφη γὰρ ἐκείνους καὶ ἐδίδασκεν, κλ· He did affirm and teach, that the Egyptians did exceedingly Err, when they attempted to Represent God, by the Images of Wild or Tame Beasts; and that the Africans and Græcians did also grievously mistake when they described Him by Humane Figures. For seeing God was no other than the Universal

14 The second-hand Latin quote is most likely from Opus de Arcanis Catholicae Veritatis. Hoc est, In omnia difficilia loca Veteris Testamenti, ex Talmud, aliisque Hebraicis libris [1518] (1550), lib. 2, cap. 3, p. 48, by Petrus Galatinus (1460–1540), an Italian theologian and Orientalist, who quotes the same passage in defense of the German Hebraist Johannes Reuchlin, aka. Capnio (1455–1522), to demonstrate that the truth of the Christian religion can be found in Hebrew books. The Latin translation from the Hebrew tractate Baḥodesh (Mekhila de-Rabbi Ishmael 2:293–94) reads, “The Torah was given in public openly in a free place. For had the Torah been given in the land of Israel, the Israelites could have said to the nations of the world: You have no share in it. But now that it was given in the wilderness publicly and openly in a place that is free for all, everyone wishing to accept it could come and accept it. One might suppose that it was given at night, but Scripture says, ‘And it came to pass on the third day when it was morning.’ One might suppose that it was given in silence, but Scripture says: ‘When there were thunders and lightning.’ One might suppose that they could not hear the voice, but Scripture says; Ps. 29.4. The voice of the Lord is powerful, the voice of the Lord is full of majesty; The Voice of God breaks Cedars. Rabbi Jose says (and the holy blessed God himself says so in Isa. 48:16), I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time, namely, that the Mosaic Law was, there am I.”

15 Mather here translates Manasseh ben Israel's comment on R. Maimonides, Liber More Nebuchim Doctor Perplexorum (1629), lib. 3, cap. 9, p. 350 (Guide 3.9.437), in Manasseh ben Israel Conciliator, sive de convenientia locorum S. Scripturae, quae pugnare inter se videntur (1633), p. 137. Manasseh quips, “Lex autem, ut in direttore observat R. Moses [Maimonides], die nebuloso, ad innuendum impedimentum, sive velum, quod oculis nostris adimit prospectum veri” (Conciliator [1633], Exod. Quaest. XXVII, sec. 5, p. 137; and The Conciliator [1842], Question 97, Reconciliation, p. 150): “And as Maimonides said, the Law was given on a cloudy day, to denote the veil and impediment of latent matter that intervenes between us and Truth” (1:150). See also S. S. Kotttek, “Nishmat Ḥayyim, The Breath of Life” (146–56).

16 2 Cor. 3:15.

*Nature of things, therefore he said, That no wise Man would dare to represent Him by any Statue or Picture; and that therefore we ought to banish Images from the Worship of God, and adore Him without these, in magnificent Temples. And Strabo adds, That in this all good Men are of Moses's Opinion. Nay, he sticks not to say further, That his Institutions, are neither too great a Burden to the Purse, nor disagreeable to Reason. By which he seems to Accuse his own Pagan Rites, on both of those Accounts.*¹⁷

*Dion Cassius, in his 37 Book, which is the 3^d of those that are now extant, gives us a succinct Account of the Jewes, with more Impartiality than could be well expected from a Pagan, κεχωρίδαται δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν λοιπῶν ἀνθρώπων κλ. The Jewes differ from other Nations, as in other things so chiefly in this, that they worship none of the other Gods, but adore One onely with the greatest Veneration. – Their Profession was This, that their God was ineffable & invisible. In the Worship of Him they did exceed all Mortals. – The Day, which we call Satureday, they dedicate wholly to Religion, and observe it with great Strictness, abstaining then from all Manner of Work.*¹⁸

Q. Who are the Priests, mentioned on this great Occasion; For Aaron and his Sons, were not yett consecrated? v. 22.

A. The Jewes readily answer, They were the First-born, whose Prærogative it was to minister, as Priests unto God. But this Observation is confuted, by Examples of those, who Sacrificed, & were not First-born. Vitringa ha's overthrown that Opinion; and so ha's Outram.¹⁹

Conradus Pellicanus (as Dr. Patrick observes,) in the Beginning of the Reformation, gives a better Account, of the Priests here mentioned; That they were the prime & most honourable Persons in the several Tribes; the Elders, & such as administred the Government under Moses.²⁰

¹⁷ Freely adapted from Strabo's Geographia (16.2.35, line 5ff). The Greek opening phrase reads, "For he said, and taught, etc."

¹⁸ Adapted from Cassius Dio's Historiae Romanae (37.17.2, line 1ff).

²⁰ Patrick (Exodus 356) cites at second hand Conradus Pellicanus, on Exod. 19:22, in Commentaria Bibliorum (1536) 1:91, from Vitringa's Sacrarum Observationum (1689), lib. 2, cap. 2, p. 42 (top).

Being thus fallen on this considerable Subject, we will bestow a further Prosecution upon it. And Monsr. Jurieu shall afford us his Assistences.²¹

It ha's been the opinion of the Jews, That among the Prerogatives of Primogeniture in every Family, the Eldest Son still claimed, the Dignity of being the Sacrificer. The Talmud expressly affirms it. [Tract. Melikim, in Mischna. 14.] that, Before the Tabernacle was erected, the Use of Private Altars & High Places was permitted; and the Eldest of each Family performed the Sacrifices.²² In Bereschith Rabba, fol. 7. there is this Passage; That Jacob had a most passionate desire, to obtain the Privilege of Primogeniture from Esau, because, as we have it from Tradition, before the Building of the Tabernacle, the Use of Private Altars was not forbidden, and the Eldest was the Sacrificer of the Family.²³ The Commentators {on} the Epistle to the Hebrews, where the fact of Esau is mentioned, run into this Notion. And Jerom had gott the same Tradition from his Masters; who in his Queastiones Hebraicæ tells us, That all the First-born since Noah, were Sacrificers, until Aaron was putt into the Privilege.²⁴

Be sure, Aben-Ezra upon the Text now before us, will have the Priests here to be the First-born. And the Jews find the First-born of the Families, invested with the Right of Sacrificing, when Moses built an Altar on Mount Sinai; [Exod. XXIV.8.]²⁵ And he sent young Men of the Children of Israel, which offered. Onkelos, the Chaldæan Interpreter, has translated it; And he sent the First-born of Israel, to sacrifice.²⁶ It seems, as if the Holy Spirit alludes to this Custome, when, after He had called the Church, A General Assembly of the First-born, He styles it afterwards, A Royal Priesthood. It is also well-known, That in those times, the Supremacy in Spiritual and in Civil Affairs, was Inseparable. Without citing Virgil, his, Rex idem hominum Phæbique Sacerdos and what Servius remarks upon it; we find Moses in quality of the Prince of the Israelites, exercising the Sacerdotal Function.²⁷

21 The following paragraphs are extracted from Pierre Jurieu's Critical History of the Doctrines and Worship (Both Good and Evil) of the Church (1705) 1:81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87.

23 Midrash Rabbah (Genesis LXIII:13).

24 Jurieu (Critical History 1:82) Heb. 12:16; St. Jerome's Quæstiones Hebraicæ Libros Genesios (1868), p. 24.

25 Jurieu (Critical History 1:82–83) cites Ibn Ezra, on Exod. 19:22 (Commentary: Exodus 390–91). Mather copies Jurieu's erroneous reference to Exod. 24:8, rather than 24:5.

26 Jurieu (Critical History 1:83); Targum Onkelos (Exod. 24:5), in Walton (Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 1:329) and The Targums (1:399).

27 Jurieu's Latin citation (Critical History 1:82) from Virgil (Aeneid 3.80) translates, "King Anius – at once king of the people and priest of Phoebus." The famous Roman grammarian and commentator on Virgil, Maurus Honoratus Servius (late 4th c. CE), has the following gloss on this Virgilian passage, "Sane majorum hæc erat consuetudo, ut rex esset etiam sacerdos; unde

But if we more narrowly examine this Tradition, we shall find some Errors that should be rectified.

It is very certain, That the Younger Sons, as well as the Eldest, had the Priviledge of Sacrificing: yea, all Mankind were by their Birthright entituled unto it, without any Respect unto Elder or Younger. Abel was a Sacrificer, as well as Cain; and so was Jacob, on the Mountain, where Laban overtook him. Every Chief of a Family, had the Priviledge of Sacrificing for his own House. Yea after the Sacerdotal Function was annexed unto the House of Aaron, we still find the Heads of Families, pretending to sacrifice upon private Altars; and retaining some Footsteps of their Ancient Priviledge. Gideon and Manoah, are Instances. And when an Israelite brought his Victim unto the Tabernacle, he was to kill it himself; [Lev. IV.4.] which was the First Function of a Sacrificer. Interpreters have not always understood this; and so have been betray'd into Mis-translations. But Maimonides convinces us, that all the Jews are agreed in the Point, of Mens killing their own Sacrifices. Be sure, At the Passeover, as tis observed by Philo, (tho' he was but indifferently versed in the Antiquities of the Religion of his Ancestors,) the whole Nation were Sacrificers, and kill'd their Victims with their own hands.²⁸

The Young Men sent by Moses to sacrifice at the Foot of Mount Sinai, are a convincing Instance, that the Priviledge of Sacrificing, did belong to all Males, without any Distinction. Had the Primogeniture taken place here, there must not have been sent Young Men, but the Chief Men of the Tribes.²⁹

As far as we can gather, | The Sons of a Family, while they lived in their Fathers House, could not sacrifice of their own Accord. They had nothing of their own to offer. But, as soon as a Son had left his Fathers House, & had a Family with Possessions of his own, he did himself become a Sacrificer. Briefly; The First-born enjoy'd the Right of Sacrificing, as they did that of Royalty. Now the Supremacy of the Eldest Son, did not impair thus far the Natural Right; but that every Chief of a Family, had a particular Authority over his own Family, Children, Servants, & Possessions; thus, the Sacerdotal Function possess'd by the Eldest Son of a Family, in the most eminent Degree, was yett subdivided among all the Brethren; as they were distinguished into separate Families. The Younger Sons of each House, were Priests only to their own Respective Families, & not unto those of their Brothers; But the Eldest Brother, was the Chief Priest unto all the Families of his Brethren, his Inferiours; & had the Priviledge of calling them hodie Imperatores pontifices dicimus," in P. Virgilii Maronis Opera, cum integris commentariis Servii, Philargyrii, Pierii (1717), p. 504, note 79 (ad Aeneid 3.80). Servius's annotation reads, "Of course, this was the custom of the ancestors, that the king was also a priest; whence today we call the emperors pontiffs."

together, & sacrificing for them. At a Feast, where all the Branches of an House came together, doubtless, the Prærogative of Sacrificing for the whole, belong'd unto the Eldest of them. It may be, the more advanced in Age a Patriarch was, and the more Descendents he had from his Race, he might have a more ample & general Sort of Sacerdotal Jurisdiction.³⁰

Exodus. Chap. 20.

Q. In the Introduction to the Ten Commandments, tis said, God spake all these Words. What is there that appears Remarkable in this Passage? v. 1.

A. Something appears Remarkable in the Word, All. As the Lord fore-seeing that the Papists, would one Day deny the Cup to the Laity, expressly made Provision, Drink Yee ALL of it: So, the Divine Spirit foreknew, that in after-Ages, there would arise those, that would be for taking Some of these Words away; the Papists would be for taking away the whole Second Commandment. Now, behold a wonderful Anticipation of it; God spake ALL these Words. No Humane Wisdome, could so long aforehand foretell such an Occasion for such an Intimation.²

Q. On the Introduction to the Ten Commandments; – I am the Lord thy GOD, that brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage? v. 2.³

¹ “Note Book of Authors” (Exod. 20:1–2) identifies Mather’s preferred authors on the Ten Commandments as “J. Durham’s Exposition of the ten Commandments”; “J. Edward’s [sic] Exposition of the Ten Commandments”; and “Rivet on Commands” [sic]. The first reference is to The Law Unsealed: Or, A Practical Exposition of the Ten Commandments (sec. ed., 1676), by James Durham (1622–1658), a Scottish Presbyterian minister at Glasgow. Durham’s popular work reached its fifth edition by 1677; Mather’s second item refers to John Edwards’s previously cited two-volume Theologia Reformata (1713), vol. 2, part 3, “Of the Ten Commandments” (2:281–619); and the third to Praelectiones In Cap. XX. Exodi, in Quibus Ita explicatur Decalogus (1632), a huge exposition of the Mosaic Decalogue, by André Rivet (1572–1651), the French Reformed theologian and professor of theology at Leiden.

² Mather’s anti-Catholic diatribe is unusual given that the standard commentators on this verse generally debate whether God addressed Moses and the Israelites in His own voice or indirectly through the medium of an angel. Ainsworth’s Annotations (1627), p. 71, Grotius’s Annotationes: Exodus (33), Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:399) and Works (5:31–32), and the majority of Roman Catholic commentators incline toward an angelic communication, because Heb. 2:2, Acts 7:38, 53, and Gal. 3:19 speak of angels who communicated the Law to Moses. Those opposed point at Deut. 4:12, 5:4, 22. The classic rabbinic commentators – Rashi, Rashbam, Ibn Ezra, and Abarbanel – have God address Moses and the people directly (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 2:155). See also Maimonides (Guide 2.33.363–66) and the Latin and Hebrew commentary on the Decalogue extracted from Abraham ibn Ezra, In Decalogum Commentarius Doctrina et Eruditione non carens, Docti in Hebraeos Rabbini (1568), by the RC professor of Hebrew at Paris, Johannes Mercerus, aka. Jean Mercier (c. 1510–1570).

³ Mather’s “Note Book of Authors” (Exod. 20:2–3) lists “Jean le Sennes Sermons” as the preferred source, which – alas – remains unidentified.

A. The Glorious GOD gave a Covenant unto Abraham, wherein He promised unto that Father of the Faithful, an Offspring in and by whom all the Nations of the Earth should be Blessed, and be Redeemed from the Curse of Death; and of a Countrey where He and his Children, should enjoy the Heavenly Blessedness of a Deathless and so a Sinless World. The Glorious One, thus becoming the GOD of Abraham, gave him also a Promise, to bring his Posterity out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage, where He would leave them for a while to undergo great Oppressions. Now, when the GOD of Heaven, here says, I am the GOD, who has brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage, it is as much as to say, I am the True GOD, and the GOD of Abraham. Yea, 'Tis as much as to say, I am the GOD, that have promised the Coming of a REDEEMER, and of one that shall Raise the Dead, & bring them to all the Blessings of an Heavenly Countrey. We Christians are as much concerned in this Character of our GOD, as any Israelites whatsoever. We consider His bringing them out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage, as the Proof of His being the GOD, who has made such a Covenant, & will certainly accomplish it.⁴

Q. Observe you no Remarkable Harmony between the Two Tables of the Law?

A. A very Remarkable one.

The First begins with the Honour which wee owe to God, in Heaven who ha's given us our Being. The Second begins with the Honour which wee owe to our Parents, thro' whom tis that Hee gives us our Being.

The First, forbids our making any Image of God. The Second, forbids the Murder which Defaces the Image of God.

The First, forbids our Spiritual Adultery, on the Score of the Lords being a Jealous God. The Second, forbids Corporal Adultery.

The First, forbids our Abusing the Name of God. The Second, forbids our Slandering the Name of other Men.

The First, Requires us to Labour Six Dayes, that wee may live on our own. The Second, Rebukes our Taking from others.

The First, commands a Rest of Body on a Sabbath, for our Servants, & our Cattel, as well as ourselves. The Second, also commands, a Rest of Spirit, in a Content, without having the Servants, the Cattel, the Possessions, which others enjoy.

Finally, The Love of God, is the first; the Love of our Neighbour, is the Second.

⁴ Mather's argument that the opening statement (Exod. 20:2) is not a commandment but an introduction or preamble to the Decalogue is confirmed by most of the Church Fathers and post-Reformation divines, in Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:400) and Works (5:32). See also Grotius, on Exod. 20:2 (Annotationes: Exodus 1:33).

Q. The Name of ELOHIM, which is the most ancient Name of God, in the Scripture, what is the Signification of it? v. 2.⁵

A. Of late learned Men derive it, from the Arabic Word, Alaha, which signifies, To Worship, Adore, and, Serve. Hottinger ha's taken a great deal of Pains in his Hexameron, and elsewhere, to confirm this out of that, & out of the Ethiopic Language also.⁶

1375.

Q. That Clause, in the First Commandment, Before my Face; what peculiar Sense, is to bee observed in it? v. 3.

A. I'l Transcribe the Words of the excellent Jurieu on this Occasion.

"This Face of God, is a lively Spring of Light, that swallowes up, whatever of Brightness, there is in the most excellent Creatures, in such a Manner, that they are as Nothing, in the Presence of GOD. There is but one Creature, that is not swallowed up in these Rayes, and that is, The Humane Nature of the Son of God: This is upheld by the Glory of the Second Person, to which it is supernaturally united. By reason of this, the Son may bee Invocated, Before the Face, and in the Presence of the Father. But it is an Abomination, to go and Worship, and Invoke, a Simple Creature, Before the Face of God, and at the Foot of His Throne. Wee may lawfully pray the Saints on Earth, to pray unto God for us; this is the Plea of some; and what greater Harm is there, to invoke them in the Heavens? The Difference is plain. The Saints on Earth, are conceived as far from God; their Rayes are not swallowed up, by the infinite Brightness of the Divinity; wee may give them some Homage. But to go and serve them Before the Face of God in Heaven, tis insolently to violate the Majesty of God. It would bee Treason, to render Homage unto a Subject Before the Face of the Sovereign; tho' hee may bee highly preferred, when alone."⁷

5 See also Simon Patrick's A Brief Exposition of the Ten Commandments and the Lords Prayer (1665).

6 Extracted from Patrick, on Exod. 20:2 (Exodus 360). Mather, via Patrick, refers to Johann Heinrich Hottinger (1620–67), scion of the famous Swiss Hottinger family dynasty, professor of church history and Oriental languages at the universities of Zurich and Heidelberg. Hottinger traces the origin of the designation אֱלֹהִים [Elohiym], a plural noun variously signifying rulers, judges, divine ones, angels, gods, as well as the true God (Strong's # 0430), to its variant meanings in Hebrew, Arabic, Chaldaic, and Ethiopic, in his erudite opus, KTIZIZ EΞAHMEPOΣ: [Ktisis Hexaemeros] Id est; Historiae Creationis Examen Theologico-Philologicum (1659), cap. 1, Quaestio X–II, pp. 19–22.

7 Mather extracts this paragraph from the millenarian firebrand Pierre Jurieu, whose The Accomplishment of the Scripture Prophecies, or the Approaching Deliverance of the Church. In Two Parts (1687), part 1, ch. 19, pp. 193–94, went through several French and English editions. On Jurieu's radical ideas in the wake of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantres (1685), see R. J. Howells, Pierre Jurieu, Antinomian Radical (1983) and G. H. Dodge, The Political Theory of the Huguenots of the Dispersion (1972).

Q. Other Gods? v. 3.

A. It may also be rendred, After Gods. Lett the Arians consider this.⁸

Q. In Gods Visiting the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, why is no further than the Third and Fourth Generation mentioned? v. 5.

A. What if the Reason should bee This? Tis to bee supposed, That the Father whose Iniquity is Visited, may live unto the Third or Fourth Generation, & thereby See with his own Eyes, the Sufferings of his Children, so as to suffer in them; or, at least, others that knew the Iniquity of the Father, may live, to bee Eye-Witnesses of the Divine Justice in the Punishment.⁹

Q. Tis observed, That God, in no Command, but the Second, which forbids His Worship in any Way not appointed by His Word, threatens to Visit the Sins of the Fathers on the Children; Why so? v. 5.

A. Because the superstitious Worshippers are of all Men most strengthened by the Traditions of their Fathers. They will tell us, What? shall wee bee wiser than our Fathers? Now because they Resolve, that they will Sin with their Fathers, God Resolves, that they shall Suffer for their Fathers. All that they can plead for their Superstitious Worship is, Their Fathers use to do such things.¹⁰

Q. How may it be said, That God visits the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children? v. 5.

A. Interpreters are putt upon some Difficulty to state this Matter unexceptionably; especially to reconcile it with the express Prohibition [Deut. 14.16.] of making the Children to Dye for the Sins of the Parents; and the Protestations of Abraham, and Moses, and Ezekiel; & the constant Maxims of the Gospel, That God will not destroy the Righteous with the Wicked.

It is therefore proposed, whether the Præposition, Lamed, may not here be well translated by the English particle, By; since it often signifies, that the Persons or Things, which it goes before, are made the Instruments of bringing somewhat about. [Compare 1. Chron. 19.5. and Psal. 15.3.]

The Text being thus explained, we have a Remarkable Instance of it, in the Person of David, whom God suffered, for His Dishonouring of His Name, to be persecuted by his own Son Absalom, with the greatest Indignities imaginable.

If the Iniquity of the Fathers, might intend, only their Iniquity, & not the Fathers themselves, we shall find the Words notably verified in the History of Ahaz and Ammon, whose Idolatry was abolished by their Sons Hezekiah and Josiah. M. Launai, Therefore urges to have this Text rendred so; The Lord visits the Iniquity of the Fathers by the Children.¹¹

Or, if this may not be consented unto, why may not the Præposition Lamed, be rendred, Because of the Children? That is to say, In Favour of them? It is of that Signification in many Places of Scripture. God punishes Parents, that so Children may learn Instruction, and gain Piety, from their beholding of the Punishment.¹²

Q. Some further Illustration on that Passage, of, The Lord visiting the Sins of the Fathers on the Children, to the Third & Fourth Generation? v. 5.

A. Dr. Sherlock has upon it, some good Thoughts, which I will transcribe.¹³

“All Divines grant, that the innocent Posterity of bad Men, never suffer for their Parents Sins, but only the wicked Children of wicked Parents; & that even in this Case, the Children never suffer more than their own Sins deserve, tho’ they may suffer a severer & more sudden Vengeance, than God would have executed upon them, had they not been the Wicked Posterity, of a Succession of wicked Parents. Tho’ to speak my Mind freely of this Matter, this Threatning of the Second Commandment, as it expressly relates only to the Sin of Idolatry, so it seems principally, if not wholly, to intend the Publick State of the Jewish Nation; that when they should decline to Idolatry, and one Generation after another persist in their Idolatrous Worship, tho' God might bear with them for some time, yett in the Third or Fourth Generation, when the Evil was grown so old and obstinate, that there was little or no Hope of a General Reformation, then God would punish them, either with a Final Extirpation, as He did the Ten Tribes of Israel, or with a long Captivity, as He did the Children of Judah in Babylon. And this is the Meaning of our Saviours Threatening; Matth. 23. 35, 36.¹⁴

¹¹ The Swiss Reformed theologian Pierre De Launay (1573–1661), author of several explications of the Bible, including Remarques sur le Texte De La Bible; ou Explication Des Mots, Des Phrases, et Des Figures difficiles de la S. Ecriture (1657), is Mather’s vademecum. De Launay’s proof text is “1. Rois 14.16” (1 Kings 14:16) and affirms the imputation of sins upon the children: “Sur l’Imputation du peché des Peres aux Enfants” (Remarques 518).

¹³ The Dean of London’s St. Paul Cathedral, William Sherlock (1641–1707), supplies Mather with the following paragraph, from a work Mather had previously consulted in his commentary on Gen. 17:12 (BA 1:927–36).

And this Reconciles the Second Commandment with the 18th of Ezekiel, where God so fully declares against punishing the Children for their Fathers Sins. Others have observed, It will at once extricate us out of all Difficulties in the Interpretation of this Text, if we understand it as restrained only to criminal Societies and Communities, & not extended unto Particular Persons.¹⁵

I will take this Place to insert an Observation of Maimonides; That Visiting the Iniquity of the Fathers on the Children, is denounced only against the Sin of Idolatry; and unto the Fourth Generation is only mentioned, because the [verso] most that any Man ordinarily lives to see of his Offspring, is the Fourth Generation. A City of Israelites becoming Idolaters, was to be destroyed, with all their Offspring; Even the Great Grandchildren, & the Newborn Infants.

The same Rabbi observes; That in the Bible we never find the Words, Augers, Fury, Indignation, and, Jealousy attributed unto GOD, are never used, but in relation to Idolatry: Nor any called, Haters, & Enemies or Adversaries of GOD, but Idolaters.¹⁶

Q. The Third Commandment? v. 7.¹⁷

A. Salvian applies it unto the Trivial Naming of GOD, and our SAVIOUR, upon all Occasions, and sometimes upon Bad Occasions. Nihil jam penè vanius, quàm Christi nomen esse videatur.¹⁸

¹⁵ Sherlock, Discourse (1704), ch. 5, sec. 4, p. 479.

¹⁶ The two preceding paragraphs are based on Maimonides's More Nebuchim (1629), pars 1, cap. 54, p. 89; and Guide (1.54.127).

¹⁷ Mather's "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 20:7, 8) lists one of his sermon manuscripts "MSS. No. VIII. Sermon. 44" as well as "Jean Le Senne's Sermons" on both vv. 7 and 8.

But it is not my Purpose, to note such things, as occur in the Multitudes of professed Expositions on the Commandments, which we are all furnished withal.¹⁹

Q. A further Thought on the Third Commandment?

A. It may be rendred, Thou shalt not Bear the Name of the Lord thy God in vain. Arias Montanus renders it so; *Non feres.*²⁰

It may be extended, as Dr. Gell observes, unto all False Pretences of Goodness: and the Hypocrisy practised under a Shew of Holiness in the wicked Art of Seeming. The proper Name of GOD, JEHOVAH, signifies, Being; And all that Bear His Name, He requires, Being; Sincerity; Reality. – I will add, They who bear the Name of Christians, but won't lead the Life of Christians, are guilty of the Breach of this Commandment.²¹

Q. The General Extent of the Third Commandment, wee acknowledge; but what may bee the more special Import of it? v. 7.

A. The whole First Table of the Law, is very sensibly aim'd at the Abolition of Idolatry. And the more Special Import of the Third Law, in this Table, may bee, That no Name, Work, or Attribute of the true God, should bee given to a false Deity. Hence the LXX, so translate it, οὐ λήψῃ τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ σου ἐπὶ ματαιῶν.²² Now, Ματαιῶν, is with the LXX sometimes, the Name for, An Idol.²³ And hence Tertullian thus expresses himself in Primâ Legis parte; Non sumes, inquit Nomen Domini Dei Tui in Vano, *id est, in Idolo. Cecidit igitur in Idololatriam, qui Idolum Dei Nomine Seriò honoraverit.*²⁴ When the Gentiles putt the Octo Libri Dati ad S. Salonium Episcopum, lib. 4, cap. 15 [PL 53. 0088A] can be rendered, “Nothing now seems to be emptier than the name of Christ.”

[Mind the repetition of it, in Lev. 19.12.] For which Cause, the Ancient Indicts those, for breaking this Commandment, who, consuetudinis vitio, Meherculè, medius fidius dicere solent, Ignorantes Jusjurandum, esse per Herculem.²⁶

Q. What Seventh Day is it, that the Fourth Commandment calls, The Sabbath of the Lord thy God? v. 10.²⁷

A. I will give you some of Dr. Wallis's Thoughts.²⁸ It saith not The Seventh Day, of the Week, as reckoned from the Creation; for tis extremely probable, that the true Seventh Day, is now wholly lost; yea, tis more probable that Sunday is that Seventh Day, than that Sature-day should bee so. But the Seventh-Day required for a Sabbath, in this Commandment, is, The Seventh Day, after Six Dayes of Labour. As when tis said, A Male Child is to bee circumcised the Eighth Day; it is not meant of an Eighth Day in Course from the Creation, but the Eighth Day from the Birth of the Infant. [Compare Exod. 12.16.] I do most readily grant, that a Weekly Sabbath should have been observed, even from the Creation, by all the Patriarchs; but some think, that by the horrible Degeneracy of Mankind, the Weekly Sabbath was utterly lost in the Church of God; and being once lost, there was no Possibility of its Recovery without a Divine Revelation. It is not very probable that the Israelites in their Egyptian Captivity and Idolatry, had any Reliques of a Sabbath among them. The First Revival of the Sabbath among them, was the Seventh Day after the first Raining of Manna about their Tents in the Wilderness. And that this was a new Course of Sabbaths, to them, is evident thing,' that is, in an idol. Whoever, therefore, honours an idol with the name of God, has fallen into idolatry" (On Idolatry, ch. 20, in ANF 3:74).

from this; If there had been an uninterrupted Course of Sabbaths among them, then the next Seventh Day before this, would have been a Sabbath too; that is, the next Day before the first Raining of Manna. But on that very Day, we find, [Exod. 16.12, 13.] the Quails came up, & covered the Camp, without any Prohibition, to gather those Quails. If therefore they might not NOW gather Manna because it was a Sabbath, but might BEFORE, gather Quails, it should seem, that it was not a Sabbath.²⁹

It cannot be found by any Footsteps in History that any other Nation, but the Jewes, did for many Ages after this Time, so much as measure out their Time, by Weeks. And if you'll read the Stromes of Clemens Alexandrinus, you'll bee satisfy'd, they had no such Measure of Time at all. What Hesiod, has about the ἐβδομή ἡμέραν ἡμῶν, the Seventh Day Sacred, refers only to that of the Month.³⁰

Wherefore, if Moses fixed a new Epocha, for the Sabbath, by the falling of Manna, on the Earth, surely, the rising of our Jesus, the true Manna, out of the Earth, may bee a Just Occasion of yett another Epocha for our Sabbath; and the Apostles by his Direction, proceeded accordingly. Now the very Letter of every Clause in the fourth Commandment, speaks as much to Sunday, as ever to Saturday; and the Lord having ordered our Six Dayes of Labour to begin the Day after His Resurrection, (for still Hee chose on this Day to call off His Disciples from Labour) the fourth Commandment sais, The Seventh Day from thence, is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.³¹

I suspect a Mistake in Dr. Wallis, when he affirms, That Weeks were not of such Antiquity. However, the most of his Thoughts are worthy to be considered.³²

²⁹ John Wallis, Defense (9, 10).

³² Wallis (Defense 4, 5) does not believe that the Sabbath was observed "from the Creation to the Flood" or that "any other Nation but the Jews did (for many Ages after this time [exodus from Egypt]) so much as measure out their time by Weeks."

Q. Some Antiquities relating to the Observation of the Seventh Day? v. 10.

A. Theophilus, the Bishop of Antioch, affirms, [ad Autolycum] That the Seventh Day is celebrated in all Nations.³³

Tertullian, [ad Ration.] tells the Pagans, of their keeping the Saturday.³⁴

Josephus, [adversus Appion.] says, There is not a City, either among the Greeks, or Barbarians, or in any Nation, unto which there is not derived the Custome of keeping the seventh day, as we do.³⁵

Philo, [De Kosmos.] says, That the Sabbath was observed as a Feast, all over the World; & was the only one, which deserved the Title of, πάνδημος, for the Universality of it. In his Book of, The Life of Moses, he repeats the Observation.³⁶

Suetonius, in the Life of Tiberius, mentions a Grammarian, called Diogenes, who did use to teach on the Sabbath; Tiberius, curious to hear him, went into the School where he taught; but found the Exercises to be expected, not until the Next Saturday. The Grammarian coming after this, to pay his Respects unto the Emperour, Tiberius only told him, he should come again seven Year{s} hence.³⁷

John Philoponus, a famous Commentator upon Aristotle, in the VI Century, tells us expressly, That all Nations did agree in this Point, of Seven Days belonging to their Week; For which universal Opinion, he says, no Reason can be given, but that mentioned by Moses.³⁸

The Chronology of Georgius Syncellus, mentioned by Salmasius, asserts, that the Ancients computed their Time by Weeks, long before the Division of Months and Years was introduced.³⁹

³⁴ Tertullian, Ad Nationes 1.13 (ANF 3:123). Again, Jurieu's English translation misidentifies the work as "Ad Ration. L. 1.c. 13."

³⁵ Josephus Flavius, Against Apion 2.40 (Complete Works 636).

³⁶ Philo Judaeus, De Opificio Mundi (89.4) and On the Creation (30.89); De Vita Mosis (2.209–210) and On the Life of Moses (2.39.209–210), in Works (pp. 13, 509).

³⁷ Gaius Suetonius Tranquillus. Vita Divi XII Caesarum: Tiberius (3.32.2).

³⁸ Johannes Philoponus, aka. John the Grammarian (c. 490–570), was a Christian philosopher, theologian, and commentator on Aristotle (SEP). Mather (via Jurieu 152) refers to Philoponus's commentary In Cap. I. Geneseos, Mundi Creatione Libri Septem (1630), lib. 7, cap. 14, p. 282: "cuius rei, quam certè aliam ratione darem possimus, praeter illam solam, quam Moyses assignavit"; Mather supplies the English translation of the Latin original (quoted here) via the English translation of Jurieu's French original.

The Romans look'd on the Sabbath, (which they styled, The Day of Saturn,) as an unlucky Day, on which they would not begin any Work of Moment. In Tibullus, it is mentioned as ominous,

*Saturni aut Sacram me tenuisse Diem.*⁴⁰

Ovid forbids an Undertaking, on,

*Culta Palæstino Septima festa Viro.*⁴¹

The Attempts of Monsr. Jurieu, to enervate the Inferences, drawn from hence, to the advantage of the Sabbath, are but feeble ones.⁴²

Q. What are the Jewish Traditions about, keeping the Sabbath? v. 10.

A. Some of them, have been Severe, Absurd, and Superstitious. Munster ha's enumerated some of them.

Non licet pomum carboni admovere ut assetur.

Non licet Allium quod edere velis decorticare.

Prohibitum est Saltantem pulicem capere.

Super Herbas cavetto gradi, ne calceamento herbam evellas.

⁴⁰ Tibullus (Elegy 1.3, line 18): "Sometimes, on Saturn's day, the festivities detained me."

But Munster tells us, That there are some among them, who write more wisely about the Observation of the Sabbath; and say, Sabbathum datum est, ut advertas opera Dei et Mediteris in Lege ejus.⁴⁴

Q. The Fourth Commandment is thus directed, Thou, and thy Son, & thy Daughter, thy Manservant, & thy Maidservant, and the Stranger that is within thy Gates. Why no mention of the Wife herein? v. 10.

A. Saies Dr. Fuller, “The Wife is Part of the Husband, comprized in him, as a Parcel of, THOU. Thus, Gen. 1.27. So God created Man in His own Image; In the Image of God, created Hee him; Male & Female created Hee Them. Why, Him, and, Them? Why is the Number altered? It is a sad Family, where this Doubt is not daily cleared. Man and Wife, (tho’ Plural in Person,) are in Affection, One Flesh; and being but One, good Reason why the Result of Both, should bee styled, Him; and not, Her; denominated from the more Noble Gender.”⁴⁵

Q. What Curiosities about the Sabbath, can you find, in the Evangelical History of our Lord Jesus Christ; the Life of Him, who was Lord of the Sabbath? v. 10.

A. A many. But I’ll here only Touch upon Two or Three.

Never was any Miracle, that wee know of, wrought upon the Sabbath-Day, before the Coming of our Lord; It seems the special Prærogative of our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, to have wrought Wondrous Works on this Day. Accordingly wee find our Lord signaling that Seventh Day with His Miracles, diverse Times: Would you know how many Times? Truly, Just Seven Times. There was just that Number of Perfection, in the Miracles wrought by our Lord, on the Sabbath Day.

[See (I.) Luc. 4. (II.) Joh. 5. (III.) Luc. 6. (IV.) Marc. 6. (V.) Joh. 9. (VI.) Luc. 13. (VII.) Luc. 14.]

Again, Tho’ wee find several Instances in the Scriptures, of Persons Raised from the Dead; wee don’t find any Instance of any one Raised on the Sabbath-Day. Why was this? One Answer may be, Our Lord Himself was to ly Dead all this Day, & therefore it was not fitt that any one should bee Raised on it. But I have seen this Answer also given; The Dead were gone into a State of Rest, and the Sabbath being the Day of Rest, it seem'd not proper, on this Day, to Raise & Fetch any Person from their Rest, into the Travails of Humane Life.

⁴⁴ At the end of his note (a), Munster (p. 152) insists, “the Sabbath was given to direct the mind toward the works of God and to reflect on His Law.”

⁴⁵ The Anglican clergyman Thomas Fuller, D.D. (1608–1661), Chaplain Extraordinary to Charles II, and perhaps best remembered for his popular The History of the Worthies of England (1662) and Pisgah-Sight of Palestine (1650), supplies Mather with the extract from Fuller’s occasional sermon on Psal. 11:3, Comfort in Calamitie. A Sermon preached upon a special Occasion in S. Clements Church, London, (1654), p. 37. On Fuller, see ODNB.

Once more; I have seen it enquired, Why wee never find any of the Sad-ducees, abroad, in the Synagogues or elsewhere, on the Sabbath-Day, when wee Read the Gospel; whereas, wee find the Pharisees at every Turn on that Day concerned abroad? And the Answer, which they give, is This: The Sad-ducees, misunderstanding the Law, in Exod. 16.29. thought it a Violation of the Sabbath, to go forth of their Houses on the Sabbath-Day; whereas the Pharisees were from Lev. 23.3. better instructed than so.⁴⁶

Q. In the fifth Commandment, the Sanction is, That thy Dayes may bee long. Is there any further Emphasis on that Sanction than wee find expressed in this Translation? v. 12.⁴⁷

A. Yes. It may bee Read, That They may prolong thy Dayes. THEY! Who? I answer, Thy Father, & thy Mother; THEY shall prolong thy Dayes, and make thee Happy, by their Blessing of thee, in the Name of the Lord, if thou carry it well unto them.

The very Heathen gave such an Encouragement unto obedient Children; Saying, That those Children would be dear to the Gods both Living & Dead. So Euripides.

Οστις δε τους τεκοντας εν βιω σεβει
Οδ' εστι και ζων και θανων θεοις φιλος⁴⁸

This famous Senarius is also mentioned by Henricus Stephanus, with many other notable Passages.

Ικανως βιωσκεις γηροβοσκων τους γονεις⁴⁹

⁴⁶ In his “Note Book of Authors” on Exod. 20:11, Mather refers to “MSS. Pat. No. IX. Serm. 16.”

*Thou shalt live as long as thou desirest, if thou nourishest thy Aged Parents. Whence Children are call'd by Xenophon, & others, Γηροβοσκοί.*⁵⁰

Q. But May there not be some very observable Reference, (hitherto not observed) in that Admonition of the Fifth Commandment; That thy Dayes may be long upon the Land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee? v. 12.⁵¹

A. How often have I Read, and Said, the Fifth Commandment; and yett never thought of an Elegancy in it, which lies now so very plain, that I wonder all the World ha's not thought on it?

Mind it then. The Land which the Lord gave unto the Israelites, was, the Land of Canaan. The Canaanites were driven out of that Land, when God gave it unto the Israelites, as an Effect of the Curse which had long before been pronounced upon Canaan; the Son of Cham. Why was that Curse pronounced? It was because Cham did not Honour his Father. Now, what an Admirable Emphasis is there in the Sanction of the Commandment? Honour thy Father. The Canaanites which are driven out of the Land, that the Lord thy God giveth thee, have a Curse entailed upon them, as they are descended from one who did not Honour his Father. Do not thou tread in the Steps of Cham, the Father of Canaan, by forgetting to Honour thy Father, lest I also drive thee out of the Land, as I do the Canaanites, the Children of Cham. It intimates, That the Judgments of God upon Disobedient Children, should have much Notice taken of them.⁵²

Q. The Tenth Commandment? v. 17.

A. It is a little surprizing, to see that, Menander hath something like it.

Μηδε βελονης εναμμ' επιθυμης Παμφιλε
Ο γας Θεος βλεπει σε πλησιον παρων
Do not so much as Covet the Threed of a Needle;
For God sees thee, being intimately present with thee.

⁵³ Mather's third-hand citation (via Patrick's Exodus 376) from an extant fragment of Menander originates in Hugo Grotius's “Prolegomena” to his edition of Stobaeus, Dicta Poetarum quae apud Io. Stobaeum extant Emendata et Latino Carmine reditta ab Hugone Grotio (1623), “Prolegomena,” [o. iiij(r)]. A modern edition of Menander's Fragmenta (683, lines 11–12) reads, μηδε βελόνης ἐναμμι' ἐπιθυμῆσης, φίλε, / ὁ γὰρ θεὸς βλέπει σε πλησίον παρών. However,

Q. We are here on Mount Sinai. The Circumstances of that Mountain reported by Travellers, may be worth reciting? v. 21.

A. Mount Sinai, and Mount Horeb, one may rather look on, as Two Different Heads of One Mountain.

However the Religions in those Parts, do now distinguish Mount Sinai, which they call, The Mount of Moses, from Mount Horeb; and call them Different, tho' Adjoining Mountains. And besides there is a Third, for which they have a great Veneration, called the Mountain of St. Catharin. To which they suppose her Body translated, after she was first of all tortured on the Wheel (now called by her Name,) and then Beheaded at Alexandria, for her converting so many to the Christian Religion.⁵⁴

For these Thousand Years, as Thevenot saies, the Greeks have been in Possession of the Monastery of St. Catharin, which the Emperour Justinian bestow'd upon them. It is a great and strong Monastery; and Sandys tells us, it is to entertain all Pilgrims; having an Annual Revenue of Sixty Thousand Dollars, from Christian Princes. It stands at the Foot of Mount Sinai, or, The Mount of Moses. There were formerly Steps from it, up to the very Top of the Mountain; and Fourteen Thousand was the Number of them.⁵⁵ And yett this is not so high by a Third Part, as the Mountain of St. Catharin. When Thevenot was there in the Month of February, he found much Snow upon both of them. There are several good Cisterns on the Mount of Moses; especially near the Top there is a very fair one. There are also Two Churches on it; one for the Greeks, another for the Latins. There is likewise a little Mosch; and by the side of it, a little Cave, where they tell us, Moses fasted Forty Dayes. And a little Grott, in which they tell us, Moses hid himself, when the Glory of the Lord was to pass before him.⁵⁶

Heretofore these Places were inhabited by Hermites, in so great a Number, that in the Mountain of Moses, there were at one time Fourteen Thousand of them. Afterwards the Greeks kept their Monks here, to celebrate their Divine given the peculiar spelling of επιθυμης Παμφίλε, the passage derives more likely from Menander's extant citation in Eusebius Pamphilus, Praeparatio evangelica 13.13.45, lines 16–17) μηδὲ βελόνης ἔναμμι' ἐπιθυμῆς[ης] Πάμφιλε. Patrick supplies Mather with the English translation.

Offices. But at present, the Places are much deserted; because the Arabs have too much molested them.⁵⁷

Sandys tells us, Mount Sinai has Three Tops of a marvellous Height; whereby, probably, he means, the Mount of Moses, the Mount of St. Catharins and Mount Horeb; This last, he represents as the most Western of the Three Tops. This agrees very well with the Sacred History. And so, Mount Horeb lay nearest unto Rephidim. From whence the Israelites removed into the Wilderness of Sinai, where Thevenot had shown to him, the Rock out of which Moses brought the Water. It is a Stone of a prodigious Height & Thickness; Rising out of the Ground. On the Two Sides of it, he saw several Holes, by which the Water has run; as may be easily known by the Prints of the Water, which has much hollowed it. But at present there issues no Water out of them.⁵⁸

Q. The Lord saies, In all Places, where I Record my Name, I will come unto thee. What Places are intended? v. 24.

A. The Chaldee seems to have given us the True Intention.

In every Place where I shall make my Glory, [that is, The SHECHINAH:] to dwell, from thence I will bless thee; that is, Hear thy Prayers.⁵⁹

Q. What's the Meaning of that Order, An Altar of Earth, shalt thou make unto mee; and if thou wilt make mee an Altar of Stone, thou shalt not build it, of hewn Stone? v. 24, 25.⁶⁰

A. This Mosaic Præcept, was not intended for the Altars of the Tabernacle, or the Temple; Brasen and Golden Altars were used there. But for Altars upon other Occasions elsewhere erected, the Lord forbad all Polishments about them; in Part because Hee would now have no stated Altar any where at a Distance from the Sanctuary; & in Part, because if any occasional Altar should bee raised elsewhere, there might bee nothing of Ornament about it, whereby the Minds of ⁵⁷ Wells (2:114–15) and Thévenot (169).

⁵⁸ Wells (2:117–18 and 2:107), Thévenot (169), and Sandys (123).

Weak People might bee seduced, into too much Respect unto it. Thus the Altar at Sinai, the Altar on Ebal, the Altars of Gideon, Manoah, Samuel, David, Solomon and Elias.⁶¹

But besides all this; by such a Plainness of Altar, the Lord would also represent the Cross, whereon our Lord made Himself a Sacrifice unto God; the Cross, I say, an Instrument, made still of unpolished, rough, rude Sticks, grown out of the Earth, and now again fastned into it. Moreover, if wee add, that the Wood on the Altar, was laid still Decussately, Transversely, and Cross-wise, (and the Talmud assures us, t'was usually the Wood of the Fig-tree too; the Tree, to which, you know, our first Father had his first Recourse after hee had Sinned,) I should thereby further intimate, how much the Cross of our Lord, had the Altars of old, conform'd unto it.⁶²

But if wee may enquire, a little more particularly, into this Matter, Wee shall find, That these Earthen Altars were chiefly allowed unto Israel, while in their Wilderness; unto whose Travelling & Militant Condition, they were indeed most agreeable. These Altars, were usually made of Green Turfs; to which the Nations were so accustomed in their Camps, that Mars had as it were appropriated unto himself, Aras è cespite virente: So Lucan sang,

Erexit subitas congestu cespitis Aras.⁶³

Accordingly, the Lord here adds, the Intimations of His being ever at Hand, for the Relief of His People, tho' they were never so Sudden, yea, and never so Homely, in their sincere Addresses to Him. Indeed, such plain Rites, were all that were used, in the first Ages of the World. Thus Tertullian observes, That before the Dayes of Numa, there was among the Romans, Frugi Religio, et Pauperes Ritus et nulla capitolia certantia Cælo; sed Temeraria de cespite Altaria. — Sciopius pretends to a Copy that reads it, Temporaria. Jamblicus calls them, Βωμους αυτοσχεδιους, Extempore Altars.⁶⁴

⁶¹ Patrick (385) and Spencer, De Legibus (1685), fol. 277.

As for the Prohibition of Hewn Stone for an Altar, both sacred & common History, have told us, how exact the Religion of the Jewes, ha's been in all Ages. [Josh. 8.31. and 1. Mac. 4.47.] The Native and Virgin Purity of the Stone, was more agreeable to the true Notions of Worship; when the Worship of God, comes to have the Art of Man, pretending to add beauty thereunto, it thereby undergoes a sort of Defiling Adulteration.⁶⁵

But you should permitt mee, on this Occasion, to consider that Expression, In all Places where I Record my Name, I will come unto thee. I am to tell you, That the Word /זָכַר/ from whence comes our Word, Sacred; signifies, not only to Record, but also, to Worship; which, I think, was never observed by any but by the Polyglot Lexicographer.⁶⁶ [Compare Isa. 66.3. and Amos. 6.11.]

Wherefore, Lett it here bee translated, In all Places where I make my Name to bee worshipped. And lett it not bee said, in 1. Chron. 16.4. Hee Appointed Levites to Record; but, hee appointed them to Worship. Thus, the אֶזְכָּרְתָּה or Memorial, as wee render it, in the Levitic Peace-Offerings, was thus called, because it belonged not unto the Priest, but pertained purely to the Worship & Service of God. This Consideration will correct many of our Thoughts, in Reading a Thousand Passages of the Bible.⁶⁷

Q. Steps of Ascent unto the Altar, are forbidden. Yett there were Steps to the Brasen Altar in the Temple, which was Ten Cubits high? v. 26.

Compare, Ezek. 43.17.

adversus Gentes Pro Christianis, cap. 25 [PL 001. 0430A], that before the days of Pompilius Numa (753–673 BCE), legendary king of Rome, religion “was frugal in its ways, its rites were simple, and there were no capitols struggling to the heavens; but the altars were offhand ones of turf” (ANF 3:40). Gasparus Scioppius, aka. Scioppio, aka, Kaspar Schoppe. (1576–1649), a learned German Lutheran humanist, convert to R. C. in 1598, and author-editor of numerous books on classical and theological matters, speaks of “impermanent altars.” And the Neoplatonic philosopher Iamblicus Calchidensis (c. 245–c. 325 CE) mentions “makeshift altars,” in his De vita Pythagorica (3.17.3–4).

⁶⁵ Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 6, fol. 281.

⁶⁷ Spencer's de Legibus (lib. 2, cap. 5, fol. 280); the Hebrew term (Lev. 2:2, 2:9) אֶזְכָּרָה [az-karah] suggests “memorial offering” (Strong's # 0234).

A. By Steps therefore, Dr. Patrick would have understood, many Steps, or such as the Gentiles had unto their Bamoth, or High Places.

A very Few served for Solomons Altar. And the Hebrew Writers tell us, they were so contrived, that there was no danger of what God intended to prevent.

Not like the High Towre of Mexico, to which they ascended by an Hundred & Eighty Steps.⁶⁸

[35r]

Q. What may bee the Design, and Meaning of that Law, Neither Shalt thou go up, by Steps, unto mine Altar, that thy Nakedness bee not discovered thereon? v. 26.

A. Wee know that the Mosaic Altar had its Bases; [Ezr. 3.3.] And Villalpandus thinks, upon good Ground, that it was Five Cubits high.⁶⁹

The Altar erected by the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, was of such an Heighth, that the Vulgar sais it was [Josh. 22.10.] Infinita Magnitudinis.

Villalpandus Judges, that the Altar of Solomon, with its Bases, was Twelve Cubits high.

And of Ezekiels Altar, tis expressly said, [Ezek. 43.17.] It had Stairs.⁷⁰

Yea, the very Name of Altar, carries Altitude in it.

How shall wee Reconcile this Matter? Not by the Wayes that Expositors, whether Jewish or Christian, have commonly taken. But the learned Spencer

⁶⁹ John Spencer, De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 2, fols. 294–95, cites In Ezechielem Explanaciones et Apparatus Urbis ac Templi Hierosolymitani (1596–1606), tomus 2, lib. 4, cap. 80: "De Altaris Holocaustorum proportione, & magnitudine, Cap. LXXX" (Ezek. 43:17), fols. 401–02, by the Spanish Jesuit scholar, architect, and mathematician Juan Bautista Villalpandus (1551–1608), and by Hieronymus Pradus (1547–95), Villalpandus's confrere and collaborator, now mostly remembered from their architectural representations of Ezekiel's visionary temple, which inspired Sir Isaac Newton's own studies of the subject. From a comparative-proportional analysis of the altar in Solomon's Temple, Villalpandus argues that the Mosaic original measured five cubits in height. Patrick, however, pointing at Exod. 27:1 (Exodus 386), insists it was only three. Brian Walton and his co-editors of the London Polyglot deemed Villalpandus's architectural marvel and its visual depiction of great significance and included it, along with Ludovicus Cappellus's discussion and Hugo Grotius's annotations, in the magnificent Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, tom. 6 (1657): "TPIEATION sive Templi Hierosolymitani Triplex Delineatio" (6:1–46; sec. ser. of pag.).

offers us, this Opinion, That the Lord prohibited not Any Steps, but Many Steps, unto His Altar; Hee prohibited such pompous Ascents unto His Altar, as the Gentiles, upon many superstitious Accounts, were used unto.⁷¹

It is very certain, That the Ancient Pagans, affected an enormous Height of Altars. Those Things that are called Altars [Exod. 34.13.] are called High Places, [Num. 33.52.] And when the Lord threatens to destroy their High Places, in Multitudes of Scriptures, Hee intends not their Mountains, or Places that were by Nature High, but their Altars, which by Idolatrous Art were made so. Hence / בָּמָה / Altitude, signifies an Altar; and the Targum on Jer. 48.35. is, Excindam offerentem super Altari: And in Ezek. 16.16. the High Places decked with diverse Colours, were the Altars thus Adorned.⁷²

It is also certain, that the Pagans to accommodate this Height of Altars, had their / המעלות / as the Word of the Law is, that is, their Spacious and Ample Ascents unto them. Thus, the Tower of Babylon, which was once also an Altar, had Seventy such mighty Steps leading up unto it. And probably, that one most conspicuous Pyramid of Egypt, which is yett standing, if not all the rest, was a Noted Altar for that Countrey. This High-Place is accordingly Four squared, right Altar-fashion; and it has a Square to do the Service of an Altar at the Top; tis a Plain of Ten Cubits, as the Prince Radzivilus,⁷³ an Ey-Witness has informed us; and Bellonius, an Ey-Witness, gives us this Account of it; Gradus in eà, ab Imo ad Verticem, plus minus Ducenti et Quinquaginta, numerantur; et Gradus illi Altiores sunt, quàm ut à scandentibus sine magno Negotio possint Superari.⁷⁴ Herodotus, 71 Spencer, De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 2, fol. 295.

72 Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 1, fol. 290; and Villalpandus, In Ezechielem Explanaciones, tom. 2, lib. 4, cap. 79, “Nefarium,” fols. 397–401. The Hebrew designation בָּמָה [bamah] signifies “high place, ridge, height” (Strong’s # 1116). Targum Jonathan on Jer. 48:35 (Walton’s Biblia Sacra Polyglotta 3:50) has בְּמָתָה [bamatha], which the Latin translators render “in excelsis,” or “in a high [eminent] place.” Mather’s Latin rendition (via Spencer 295) reads, “destroy [him that] offers upon high places.”

73 The Hebrew term / המעלות / suggests “many steps.” Mather, via Spencer (290), here refers to Ierosolymitana Peregrinatio Illustrissimi Principis Nicolai Christophori Radzivili (1614). “Epistola Tertia,” p. 162, by Prince Nicolaus Christoph Radziwiłł of Vilna (Lithuania). See also Mather’s commentary on Exod. 9:31, 32 (above) and BA (1:1038).

74 The Latin quotation is a third-hand quotation from Petrus Bellonius Cenomani’s Liber de Admirabili Operum Antiquorum et Rerum susciendarum praestantia (1553), lib. 1, cap. 3, pp. 4, 5, here dealing with the burial rituals of the ancients. A French naturalist and diplomat, Bellonius, aka. Pierre Belon (1517–1564), travelled through the Mediterranean region, including Asia Minor, Arabia, Palestine, and Egypt (1546–49), and published his account as Les Observations de Plusieurs Singularitez et Choses Memorables (1553). At any rate, Bellonius’s testifies that “the steps on it [pyramid], from the bottom to the top, are numbered more or less two hundred and fifty; and those steps are much taller and cannot be climbed without great effort.” Spencer’s De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 1, fol. 290, presents a conflated citation (here copied by Mather), which reads in the Parisian original as follows: “Gradus in ea imo ad verticem plus minus ducenti, & quinquaginta numerantur: quorum quilibet ita latus est, ut extensis ulnis vir utrasque oras vix pertingat: altus verò circiter [p. 5] quatuor pedes cū dimidio, licet Herodotus who survey'd this Pyramid above Two Thousand Years ago, sais, 'Εποιήθη [δὲ ὥδε] αὕτη ἡ πυραμὶς ἀναβαθμῶν τρόπον: And Kircher, who spent his Life in Egyptian Curiosities, tells us, That these Pyramids were called, Deorum Columnas, seu Aras; ad quas (hee adds) per gradus Ascendebatur.⁷⁵

The Imitation of these Things, was that which God forbad unto His People.

Accordingly, wee may call to Mind a notable Passage, to this Purpose, in Ezek. 20.29. Then I said unto them, What is the High-Place whereunto yee go? And the Name thereof is called Bamah unto this Day. You may take this Paraphrase upon it; “When I forbad your making of extended Steps unto my Altar, I declared abundantly, how little Value I had, for an Altar that should bee an High-Place, like those among the Heathen. | Wherefore I then called my Altar by the Name of / מִזְבֵּחַ / and not / בְּמָה / But you have been so sett upon the Rites, and the Terms of Heathenism, that you are for High-Places, and you retain the Word / בְּמָה / Bamah, a Gentile Word, among you, to this Day.”⁷⁶

Accordingly, you find that the Altars among the Jewes, tho’ they had Stairs to them, yett they were Mean, and Small, and very Moderate. Yea, at last, they came to Avoid, all Stairs at all; and Josephus tells us, that in his Time, the Ascent unto the Altar, was, μὴ διὰ βαθμίδων, Non per gradus, sed Terram leniter acclivem.⁷⁷

The old Gentiles, had their Baalim, and Elohim; their Deos Inferos et Superos; and their Altars were accordingly Higher or Lower, according to the Qualitie of the Gods, unto whom they sacrificed. Vitruvius ha’s thus described the Matter unto us; Ararum Altitudines ita sunt explicandæ, ut Jovi, et Omnibus Cælestibus, quàm excelsissimæ constituentur; Vestæ, Terræ, Marique Humiles collocentur. And aliter triginta altitudinē eius esse scribat. Crederem eā circiter mille pedes altam esse. Cū verò gradus seu areæ altiores sint, quā ut à scandentibus sine magno negotio possint superari, artifices ad singulos pyramidis angulos tres minores gradus in qualibet arula exciderunt, quo facilius pyramis conscendi posset” (Liber de Admirabili Operum, cap. 3, pp. 4–5); See also Plurimarum Singularium & Memorabilium Rerum (1605), lib. 2, cap. 43, and Mather’s previous paraphrase from the latter work in his commentary on Exod. 19:2 (above).

75 Herodotus (2.125, line 1) relates, “This pyramid was made like stairs, which some call steps and others, tiers” (Godley transl.). And Athanasius Kircher, in his magnificent Cædipus Ægyptiacus. Hoc est Universalis Hieroglyphicæ Veterum Doctrinæ (1652), tom. 1, synt. 4, cap. 12, p. 310, as quoted in Spencer’s De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 2, fol. 290, calls the pyramid “Divine Monuments, or Altars; it [pyramid] was ascended by steps.”

76 Spencer (291). The Hebrew words / מִזְבֵּחַ / [mizbe’ach] and / בְּמָה / [bamah], the former signifying “altar,” the latter “high place” (Strong’s ## 4196, 1117).

77 Spencer (291) cites Josephus (Antiquitates 4.201.2), who relates that the ascent to the altar was “not by steps, but by an acclivity of raised earth” (Antiquities 4.8.5). The Greek passage, which means “not by steps,” is repeated in the Latin translation as well. Mather here does not do justice to Spencer’s argument, for the master of Corpus Christi, Cambridge, does not speak of the ascent to the altar in Josephus’s time, but cites Josephus’s version of the Mosaic fiat: “Let the ascent to it [the alter] be not by steps, but by an acclivity of raised earth.”

Porphyrius ha's thus Adjusted it; The Cælestial Gods had, Βωμοὺς, The Terrestrial Gods had, Ἑσχάρας, The Subterraneous had, Βοθροὺς.⁷⁸

Now the Prohibition of Heaven, saved the People of God, from all these ungodly Vanities.

You know, how the High-Places are blamed all the whole Bible over; but you will not find them to be prohibited in any one Text of the Bible, except you take this Text for their Prohibition.

And indeed, such Pagan Altars had their Stairs ordered, in so Rising a Manner, as to require those Divarications of the Legs, in Ascending them, which make a Room for the Caution here mentioned, That thy Nakedness bee not discovered thereon. Such were the Altars of Juno, mentioned by Virgil,

*Ærea cui gradibus surgebant limina.*⁷⁹

Wee cannot suppose, with Villalpandus, a Crime here forbidden, but a Chance; not the Crime of a designed Exhibition in the Offerer to advance Turpitude in the Spectators of the Sacrificers; but the Chance, which might follow, perhaps from the Winds blowing the Clothes of the Priests. For, as Bochart speaks, In Oriente, Vestes Talares Judæis in usu errant, quas ità subduci, ut corpus videretur, Ignominiosum habebatur. So, what wee render, the Kings Dishonour, is called, in Ezr. 4.14. The Kings Nakedness.⁸⁰

The Impurities committed, in the Worship of Idols frequently, especially of Baal-Peor, were so offensive unto Heaven, that the least Accident, which might have a Tendency towards those Impurities, is, by the Law of Heaven, here Anticipated.

78 Mather, via Spencer (292), enlists a citation from the Elzevier 1649 Amsterdam edition of De Architectura Libri Decem (lib. 4, cap. 8, p. 77), by the great Roman architect Marcus Vitruvius Pollio, who instructs would-be temple builders that “The heights of the altars are to be adjusted thus: for Jove [Jupiter] and all the celestials, let them [altars] be constructed as high as possible; for Vesta and Mother Earth, let them be built low” (The Ten Books of Architecture 4.9, pp. 125–26). And the Neoplatonic philosopher of Tyre, Porphyrius (234–c. 305 CE) knowingly relates that the celestial gods were honored with “altars on raised platforms,” the terrestrial gods with altars on “stands,” and those nether ones, with nothing but “a hole in the ground” (De antro nympharum 6.19, 20).

79 Spencer (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 1, fol. 293 cites Virgil's Aeneid (1.448) in explication of the elevation of the altars of the ancients: “Brasen was its threshold uprising on steps.”

80 Spencer (1685), lib. 2, cap. 7, sec. 2, fols. 295–96, cites Villalpandus, on Ezek. 43:17, In Ezechielem Explanaciones (1596), tom. 2, lib. 4, cap. 79, p. 401; and at second hand via Samuel Bochart's De animalibus (pars. 1, lib. 2, col. 676), Spencer cites from Constantine L'Empereur's bilingual edition of קמחא בבא [Baba Kamma] De Legibus Ebraeorum Forensibus (1637), “Baba Batra,” cap. 8, §1, pp. 185–86. Tractate Baba Kamma (“the First Gate”), Baba Metzia (“the Middle Gate”), and Baba Batra (“the Last Gate”) originally formed part of the Talmud, tractate Nezikin (“Injuries”), in the Babylonian Talmud. L'Empereur's bilingual edition was one of the earliest translations into Latin. At any rate, Mather's Latin citation from Bochart describes the modest robes of Oriental Jews: “In the East, ankle-length tunics were used by the Jews, which were thus pulled down, as it was dishonorable for the body to be seen.”

The Poet Martial mentions it, as a Singular and a Reproachful Disaster, befalling a Priest, that in Sacrificing, His Ingens Iratis apparuit Hernia Sacris.⁸¹

Q. Did not other Nations borrow some of their best Lawes from the Jewes? To give some Instances of their doing so, would be a pleasant Illustration upon some of the Mosaic Lawes? v. 1.¹

A. The other Nations wanted not Opportunities of acquaintance with the Jewes, as well in their several Captivities, as in their Countrey; where every Seventh Year, it was required of all Strangers to be present at the Reading of the Law; which proved an Introduction to their further Acquaintance with the Jewish Priests. And many of their Law-givers, in their Travels, came among the Jewes, for this very Purpose; thus Lycurgus conversed with their Disciples;² Pliny saies of Solon, Cognitionis et multarum rerum usus gratiâ, vagatum per orbem fuisse; and Laertius the like of Plato: and it can't be imagined, that Judea, then so famous, was omitted.³ Numa was descended of the Lacedemonians; and the Lacedemonians were a Colony that issued out of Canaan. The most ancient Lawes of the Romans, were borrow'd of the Spartans. Numa's going to the Capitol on the Tarpeian Hill, that he might consult the Augur there, seems a little reference to Mount Sinai, & the Temple on Mount Sion.⁴ And the Ten Tables of Roman Lawes, digesting the Græcian, do in their Number imitate our Ten Commandments.⁵

1 In his "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 21:1–3), Mather lists "Franzius Interp. p. 1326"; i. e., Wolfgangus Franzius, Tractatus Theologicus Novus & Perspicuus, De Interpretatione Sacrarum (1619), "Oraculum CXLI. Sacrum, p. 1326, is a grammatical and textual analysis of the purchase and indenture of servants and their offspring.

2 See Appendix A.

3 The Greco-Roman biographer and philosopher Plutarch of Chaeronea (46–c. 120 CE) relates in his Parallel Lives: Lycurgus (4.1–6) that the Spartan lawgiver (7th c. BCE) sailed to Crete, Asia, Egypt, Libya, and Iberia, studied their laws and forms of government, and digested their best rules in his own codex before he returned to Sparta. Likewise – so Plutarch – the Athenian lawgiver Solon (c. 630–c. 560 BCE) preferred travel for the purpose of acquiring learning to the quest for lucre. It is Plutarch (not Pliny as Mather erroneously argues), whose Solonic anecdote (here given in Latin) encapsulates Solon's character qualities: καίτοι φασὶν ἔνιοι πολυπείριάς ἔνεκα μᾶλλον καὶ ἱστορίας ἢ χρηματισμοῦ πλανηθῆναι τὸν Σόλωνα "and yet, some say that he [Solon] travelled to get experience and learning rather than to make money" (Parallel Lives: Solon 2.1, lines 5–7). In his Lives (3.6), the ancient Greek biographer Diogenes Laertius (fl. 3rd c.) has young Plato search for knowledge throughout the Hellenic world, including Italy and Egypt.

4 According to Plutarch's Parallel Lives: Numa Pompilius (1.3, 7.2, 10.1), legendary Roman king Numa Pompilius consulted the deities in the Sabine temple once located on the Tarpeian Rock of the Capitoline Hill overlooking the later city of Rome.

5 On the subject of the pagans borrowing their laws from Moses, see John Edwards, Discourse Concerning the Authority (1693), vol. 1, ch. 9, pp. 299–319; Theophilus Gale's Court of the

It was the Athenian Law, Impius ne audeto placare donis, iram Deorum.⁶ And this was the Sense of the external Purifications, required in the Law of Moses.

Our Third Commandment saies, 'The Lord will not hold him guiltless, who taketh His Name in vain.' As Numa appointed an Oath, for the chiefest Obligation (Plutarch and Livy tell us,) is Truth; so, 't'was the Athenian Law, Perjurij pœna humana, Dedecus; Divina, Exitium. And whereas, (Num. 30.2.) the punctual Payment of a Vow is required, Cicero tells us, it was another Law of the same Commonwealth, Sanctè vota reddunto.⁷

The Festival Dayes kept in the Gentile World, were an Imitation of those in the Jewish.

After Religion (saies Plato,) follows the Honour due to our Parents. What could be more plainly and aptly spoken of our Fifth Commandment?⁸

All Aristocracies had their Pattern in the Jewish Eldership.

Plato would have his well governed City, divided unto Twelve Tribes. Behold, an Imitation of the Division of the Israelitish Nation! Both he, and Lycurgus, would have the Fields divided by Lott. Was not Canaan so?⁹

The Rule about Inheritances, prescribed in the Institutes of Justinian, L. 3. tit. 1, 2. is much the same; with the Rule in the Twenty Seventh Chapter of Numbers.¹⁰

God, the better to show how much He abhorred Murder, commanded that a Beast which kill'd a Man, should be immediately killed. Plato ordains the same.¹¹

Gentiles (1672), part 1, bk. 3, ch. 9, pp. 87–95; Gerard Johannes Vossius's De Theologia Gentili (1641), one of the principal sources for all 17th c. theologians engaging in this subject; and, of course, Pierre-Daniel Huet's huge, oft-reprinted Demonstratio Evangelica (1679). In this claim, Judeo-Christian apologists are indebted to Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.21–29; 2.5, 18, 22; 5.14; 6.3–5) and his predecessors. See A. J. Droge's Homer or Moses?

6 It was the Athenian Law which, according to Cicero's De Legibus (2.22), decreed that "No wicked man shall dare to appease the wrath of the gods with gifts."

7 Both Plutarch, in his Parallel Lives: Numa Pompilius (16.1), and the famous historian of Rome, Titus Livius (BCE 59–17 CE), in his Ab Urbe Condita (1.21), speak of the sacredness of oaths. The Roman statesman and philosopher Cicero insists in his De Legibus Libri Tres (1727), lib. 2, cap. 9, pp. 107–08, that "for the perjurer the punishment from the gods is destruction; the human punishment shall be disgrace." Likewise, he believes that "Holy vows shall be scrupulously performed" (De Legibus 2.22).

8 Plato (Leges 11.930e).

9 Plato has his Magnesians model city governed by twelve groups of magistrates (Leges 12.946cd). According to Plutarch (Parallel Lives: Lycurgus 8.3), the Hellenic lawgiver Lycurgus divided the land of the Laconians among his "free provincials, in thirty thousand lots," that of the Spartans "in nine thousand lots." Similar divisions were instituted in the division of Canaan among the twelve tribes (Joshua, chs. 13–19).

10 Justinian's laws governing inheritance stipulate (like that in Numb. 27:7–11) that in intestate cases when no sons are alive, the deceased's daughter, grandson or granddaughter of a son or of a grandson are next in line as legitimate heirs (Institutes of Justinian, lib. 3, tit. 1, § 2, p. 266).

11 Exod. 21:28–32; Plato (Leges 9.873e).

The Punishment of Corporal Injuries, was Like for Like. [Exod. 21.23, 25.] Agreeably hereto, Justinian will tell you, Pœna ex lege duodecim Tabularum, propter membrum ruptum, Talio erat.¹² But if Satisfaction were given by a Fine, the Judges were they that sett it. [Exod. 21.22.]

So saith Sextus Cæcilius in A. Gellius; Nolo hic ignores, hanc quoque ipsam Talionem, ad astimationem Judicis redigi, necessariò Solitam.¹³ In Case of Damage done by a Beast, compare the Law of Exodus, with that of the Twelve Tables; Si Equus calcitrosus calce percusserit, aut Bos Cornu petero solitus, Cornu petierit, noxæ dedantur.¹⁴

Upon the Miscarriage of Nadah and Abihu, that Command was given, [Lev. 10.9.] Do not drink Wine or strong Drink, when yee go into the Tabernacle of the Congregation, lest yee Die. And Plato informs us, (De Leg. 2.) That by the Law of the Carthaginians, no Man that was to enter upon an Office, or Business of Moment, might so much as Taste any Wine; which was resembled by another of Lycurgus, that Plato much commended.¹⁵

The Dietetic Lawes, in the Eleventh of Leviticus; were imitated by Lycurgus, who, regulated the Lacedæmonians, as Plutarch saies, Præscriptis Opsonijs atque Epulis.¹⁶

The Law of Moses, which permitted a Man to marry his Brothers Widow, where there was no Heir, was also the Law of Solon, where the Husband was Impotent; and yett he allowed any Man that siezed an Adulterer, to do as Phinehas in that Case did, & forthwith to kill him. The Julian Law, as well as the Solonic, punished Incest, & Sodomy, with the same Severity, that the Mosaic {did}.¹⁷

12 The ancient Lex Talionis (law of retribution) of Roman Emperor Justinianus set forth that "The penalty [for injuries] under the law of the Twelve Tables was a limb for a limb" (Institutes of Justinian, lib. 4, tit. 4, § 7, p. 421). See also Mather's glosses on Exod. 21:14–32.

13 The Roman jurist Sextus Cæcilius Africanus (d. c. 169 CE), in discussing the Lex Talionis of an eye for an eye, tells his companion Favorinus, "I want you to realize this, that this retaliation also was wont of necessity to be subject to the discretion of a judge" (A. Gellius, Noctes Atticæ 20.1.37).

14 Exod. 21:35 stipulates, "If one man's ox hurt another's, that he die; then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it; and the dead ox also they shall divide." Likewise, the Institutes of Justinian decrees the same punishment: "If a kicking horse should kick, or an ox, apt to gore, should inflict an injury with his horns," then the animals are to be relinquished as restitution (lib. 4, tit. 9, p. 467–68).

15 Plutarch (Parallel Lives: Lycurgus 28.4) and Plato (Leges 2.674ac). Aristotle, too, had a high opinion of Carthaginian law and government (Politics 11.11.1272b, 25ff).

16 Lycurgus emphasized a sparse diet and physical activity for all Spartans, especially the young (Parallel Lives: Lycurgus 10.2–3), and "required them to steal whatever food they can" (17.4–5).

17 The proscription against marrying one's brother's wife (Lev. 18:16) does not apply in the case of a Leviratic marriage (Deut. 25:5–6), when an offspring is to be procreated for the deceased brother. The laws of Solon similarly governed cases of performing marital duties, in Plutarch (Parallel Lives: Solon 20.1–4). Those caught in the act of adultery were liable to be killed in Solon's time (Parallel Lives: Solon 23.1) – perhaps in the same manner as Phinehas did with

Lycurgus forbad the Spartans, as Moses did the Jewes, To marry with Strangers. And the Degrees of Affinity prohibited in Marriage, secundum Jus Vetus Romanum, [Just. Just. L. 1. T. 10.] are much the same, with those that are sett down in the Mosaic Law.¹⁸

The Removing of Landmarks, is forbidden, by Moses, and by Plato, almost, in the same Words.¹⁹

[36v] Moses, and Solon, and Plato, require of a Thief, the same Restitution. | And whereas the Insolent Thief was to be sold, [Exod. 22.3.] we find in A. Gellius too, That Lex duodecim Tabularum, Furem in Servitutem tradit. And as the Divine Law, would have no Blood shed for a Thief, kill'd in the Act, before Sun-rising; Plato too, would have it no Crime to kill a Nocturnal Thief; and the Decemviri, Furem tum demum occidi permiserunt, si cum faceret Furtum, Nox esset.²⁰

A False Testimony, was punished among the Israelites, by the Rule of Retaliation. The Romans punished it, with casting the convicted Person from the Tarpeian Rock. But the Greeks, thinking, as it seems, that God by the Third Commandment reserved unto himself the Punishment of this Crime; no Legislator, for a long Time, took further Notice of it, than to hold the Criminal in Disgrace; Charondus the Catanian, as Aristotle tells us, was the first that ordained a Mulct for it.²¹ his javelin to the Israelite who lay with a Midianite woman (Numb. 25:6–8). Much the same appears in Institutes of Justinian (lib. 5, tit. 18, § 4, p. 505). The Julian marriage laws stipulated banishment for incest and death for sodomy (Institutes of Justinian, lib. 1, tit. 10, §§ 1–8; lib. 4, tit. 18, § 4). Lev. 20:11–14 and Lev. 18:22; 21:13.

18 Lycurgus tried to suppress foreign habits and customs among his people by regulating their interactions with strangers (Plutarch, Parallel Lives: Lycurgus 28.3–4); Deut. 7:3. The Institutes of Justinian (lib. 1, tit. 10, § 2, pp. 33–34) governed that “a brother and sister are forbidden to marry, whether they are the children of the same father and mother, or of one of the two only”; Lev., ch. 18.

19 Deut. 19:14, 27:17; Plato (Leges 8.843a).

20 Leviticus (ch. 22) specifies the required restitution for various crimes against the property of another; Solon abolished the Draconian laws which treated every crime as a capital offense (Plutarch, Parallel Lives: Solon 17.1–2); Plato required restitution as well (Leges 9.857ab). The Latin passage adapted from Aulus Gellius, Noctes Atticae (11.18, lines 6–7), reads in the full text, “Decemviri autem nostri, qui post reges exactos leges, quibus populus Romanus uteretur, in XII tabulis scripserunt, neque pari severitate in poeniendis omnium generum furibus neque remissa nimis lenitate usi sunt. Nam furem, qui manifesto furto pressus esset, tum demum occidi permiserunt, si aut, cum faceret furtum, nox esset, aut interdiu telo se, cum prenderetur, defenderet.” But our decemvirs, who after the expulsion of the kings compiled laws on Twelve Tables for the use of the Romans, did not show equal severity in punishing thieves of every kind, nor yet too lax leniency. For they permitted a thief who was caught in the act to be put to death, only if it was night when he committed the theft, or if in the daytime he defended himself with a weapon when taken.” And Plato asserts that “if he [owner] catches a thief entering his home at night to steal his goods, and kills him [thief], he shall be innocent” (Leges 9.874bc).

21 The ancient Sicilian lawgiver Charondas of Catania (c. 650 BCE), according to Aristotle (Politics 2.12.1274b, 6–9), punished perjury with denunciation and transgressions with fines

Other Lawgivers, besides Moses, forbad the Multiplying of Silver & Gold. Lycurgus was one, & Plato was another. Usury was as odious, among the ancient Persians, and Græcians, and Romans, while they continued vertuous, as among the Israelites.²²

All Causes among the Israelites, too difficult for Inferiour Courts, were finally heard by the Supream Judges of all: Thus Hippodamus, the Milesian, ordained one Chief Court of Justice, to which all Causes, that appeared ill decided in any other, should be brought by Appeal. And it was the Advice which Mecænas gave to Augustus, Nemo tam integram potestatem in Judicijs habere debet, quin ab eo provocare liceat.²³

God required Justice to be administred indifferently unto all, and of the Afflicted. He saies, If the Afflicted cry to Him, He will certainly Hear their Cry. This taught Plato, in like Manner, to say of God, Φύλαξ διαφέρων τοῦ παθόντος γίγνεται He becomes an Eximious Guardian to the Afflicted. Especially, God forbad the Oppression of a Stranger. Which Plato minded so as to say, That of all Injuries, those done to Strangers, ἐστὶ εἰς Θεὸν ἀνηρητημένα τιμωρὸν μᾶλλον, God took a particular Care to Revenge them.²⁴

Thus the most Renowned Persons among the Pagans, confessed the Excellency of those Oracles, that gave Lawes unto the Jewes.²⁵

(Constitution of Athens 8). On the ethics of mendacity in Aristotle and Plato, see J.S. Zembaty's "Aristotle on Lying."

²³ Every town in ancient Israel had its own small Sanhedrin (court) for religious and civil matters. Appeals were referred to the Great Sanhedrin, which was the supreme authority in the land (JE). The Greek architect, mathematician, and philosopher Hippodamus of Miletus (498–408 BCE), "father of urban planning," established a supreme court to which all appeals could be referred for final decision (Aristotle, Politics 2.8.1267b, 40–41). Gaius Cilnius Maecenas (70–c. 8 BCE), renowned patron of the arts and political advisor to Augustus Caesar, aka. Octavian (BCE 63–14 CE), warned his liege that "nobody should have power so absolute in the legal processes, unless it is lawful to make an appeal to them."

²⁴ Plato (Leges 730a, lines 7–8; 729e, lines 4–5)

Q. This Expression, Hee shall surely be putt to Death, (it often recurrts among the Lawes,) about what kind of Death are we to understand it? v. 1.

A. When tis only said, Hee shall surely be putt to Death, it means, by Strangling; But when tis added, His Blood shall be upon him; then Stoning is intended.²⁶

Q. In giving of Lawes to Israel, why doth Moses begin with the Lawes about Servants? v. 1.

A. Because they had been Servants themselves; and it was very proper to begin with such things, as might mind them of their late Condition, and such things whereof they might bee further minded by their late Condition.²⁷

Q. Why is the Term of Seven Years limited for an Hebrew Servitude? v. 2.

A. Doubtless, there is a Character of Sabbatism to bee considered in this Term. Nevertheless, there may seem in it also, a Consideration, and Contradiction of the Hardship, that Jacob, the Father of the Israelites mett withal. When Jacob was with his Hard Uncle, hee served Seven Years; now, in Remembrance of this Cruelty, the Children of Jacob, may not make one of their Nation serve more than Six.²⁸

Q. If thou buy an Hebrew Servant.] Of what Sort? v. 2.

A. Some sold themselves, by reason of Poverty. Of that Sort, the Hebrewes understand that Law; Lev. XXV.39.

²⁶ The phrase “he shall surely be put to death” occurs in several directives of the Pentateuch: Exod. 21:12; Lev. 20:13, 15, 16; Numb. 35:16, etc. According to Babylonian Talmud, tractate Sanhedrin (52b, 84b, 89a), death by strangulation was imposed when no other forms of capital punishment were stipulated. Death by lapidation was imposed for a variety of reasons: for touching Mt. Sinai when Moses received the Law (Exod. 19:13), when an ox gored someone to death (Exod. 21:28), for Sabbath-breaking, cursing God, or rebellion (Numb. 15:32–36; Lev. 24:10–16; Deut. 21:18–21), for various forms of idolatry (Lev. 20:2–5, 20:27; Deut. 17:2–7, 13:7–12), and for violating the codes of sexual conduct (Deut. 22:13–21, 22:23–24). For the handling of capital punishment in the Bible, see “Capital Punishment” (JE), “Punishments and Crimes” (ABD), and W. J. Webb, Corporeal Punishment in the Bible.

²⁸ See John Selden, De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 6, cap. 7, pp. 704–08.

Others were sold by the Court of Judgment; which was in Case of a Theft, for which they were not able to make Restitution. Of these, they interpret, Deut. XV.12. But this Sale, they say, did not extend unto both Sexes; For a Woman was not to be Sold for Theft.²⁹

Q. The design of the Custome, To Bore the Servants Ear; what was it? v. 6.

A. As a Sign of Honour to that Noble and Useful Part, the Ear, they did of old insert Rings of Gold, or Silver, with Jewels, into small Perforations of it. This was the Custom of the Orientals; according to that of Juvenal;

*Natus ad Euphratem, melles quod in Aure Fenestra
Arguerint.*³⁰

Hence, the Lord expressed His Bounty to His People, by that, in Ezek. 16.12. I putt Ear-rings in thine Ears. And it is evident, from Exod. 32.2. Earrings, in the Ears of Sons, & of all the People, that it was an Ornament not confined unto the Female Sex. (Compare, Num. 31.50. and Judg. 8.24.)³¹

But how came this to bee a Sign of Servitude, the Boring of the Servants Ear? Tis to bee answered, This was not a Mark of their being Servants; but a Testimony of their Voluntary Subjection & Obedience unto their Masters, & a Mark whereby they might bee known to bee Theirs. The great Love of the Servant unto his Master, made him to continue where hee was, and a Service, not constrained, but Loving and Cheerful, was testified, by the Boring of the Ear. The Perforation of that Organ of Hearing, signified, the Servants Resolution to Hearken unto the Voice of his Master. And probably, the Master did herewithal putt into the Ear of the Servant, a Ring of some Value, according to the Esteem, which hee had of his Faithfulness; to hang there, as a visible & perpetual Memento, of his Dutifulness.

The Arabians, from long before the Dayes of Job, had no mean Opinion of this Peece of Gallantry, as Petronius has informed us.³² Yea, Pliny saies, that punching a Lap of the Ear, and putting some Ornament there into, was an

³¹ Mather’s primary source appears to be Samuel Bochart’s Hierozaicon (1663), pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 6, col. 781, lines 32–40. For much the same, see Poole (Synopsis Criticorum 1:414).

universal Practice, in the Eastern Parts of the World.³³ Other Authors observe the same, concerning the Africans; whence that Raillery in Plautus, Digitos in manibus non habent; Incedunt Annulatis Auribus: hee speaks it of the Carthaginian Servants.³⁴ Among the Romans, how wide Incisions they made, for Ear-rings, Lett the Poet say;

*Auribus extensis, Magnos commisit Elenchos.*³⁵

At last, they became so lavish; that Seneca complains, whole Patrimonies dangled at the Ladies Ears: which unsufferable Prodigality, was lash'd by the Christian Fathers, who complained with Tertullian, Graciles Aurium cutes, Kalendarium expendant; they laid out a whole Years Revenue in those Trifles.³⁶

[38v] | And while wee are Discoursing on this Matter, wee will here observe; That Ears were Bored sometimes, and Ringed, for Idolatrous Purposes. [Consider, Gen. 35.2, 4.] Enchanted Rings were usual, as wee learn from diverse Passages in History, besides that of Gyges: which may bee one Reason, why they were called, Lechashim; from Lachash, to whisper, to mutter, to charm. Gold Rings were a sort of Talismans, used, as Petronius relates, to Repel Diseases, and Perform Wonders.³⁷ In their Ear-rings they had the Effigies of their Deities, & they were the Phylacteries of their Gods. Austin reproves the execrable Superstition of the Ligatures, in 33 Pliny (Historia Naturalis 11.50.136).

34 The early Roman playwright Titus Maccus Plautus (c. 254–184 BCE) captures the contemporary rivalry between the Carthaginians and the Romans, when Milphio, a servant of Agorastocles Adulescens, jokes with his master that the Carthaginian servants “have no fingers on their hands”; that is why “they go with their rings in their ears” (Poenulus 5.2.980–81).

35 Juvenal’s misogynist narrator rants that an indulgent woman takes all the freedom she wishes, once she “has fastened giant pearls to her elongated ears” (Satire 6.459).

36 Lucius Annaeus Seneca (the Younger) vents his ire at the conspicuous consumption of the haute monde of his day: “Video uniones non singulos singulis auribus comparatos; iam enim exercitatae aures oneri ferundo sunt; iunguntur inter se et insuper alii binis superponuntur. Non satis muliebris insania viros susperiecerat, nisi bina ac terna patrimonia auribus singulis pependissent” (De Beneficiis 7.9.4–5). Mather provides the translation of the last sentence. Tertullian’s oft-quoted Latin passage appears in several of his works, including his Apologeticus Adversus Gentes pro Christianis, cap. 6 [PL 001. 0304A] and De Cultu Foeminarum, lib. 1, cap. 9 [PL 001. 1314B]. Be that as it may, Tertullian complains, they spend “a whole month’s worth [of money] on the fine appearance of their ear,” or more poetically, they “have every member of the body heavy laden with gold” (ANF 3:23). Pliny, in his Natural History (9.56), follows suit: Our ladies quite glory in having these [bulbs of pearls] suspended from their fingers, or two or three of them dangling from their ears. Mather has much to offer on the topic of female comportment as well in his Ornaments for the Daughters of Zion (1691), esp. “Counsel” 4–5, pp. 49–60, a work on female conduct, including her apparel. The work went through at least four editions, the 1694 imprint being published by Thomas Parkhurst in London. See also Richard Brathwait’s The English Gentlewoman, drawn out to the full Body (1631).

37 Glaucon tells the story of the magical ring which renders Gyges of Lydia invisible, in Plato’s Republic (2.359d–360b). Petronius tells his story about golden charms in his Satyricon (67).

those Dayes made with Ear-rings which the Men wore, in Summis ex unâ parte Auriculis, ad Serviendum Dæmonibus.³⁸ Hee calls them, The Mark of the Diel.³⁹

Q. The Mosaic Law, allows a Man to Sell his Daughter. I have mett with a Deist, cavilling, that so unnatural and covetous a Practice could not bee allowed by a Law of God? v. 7.

A. And I have mett with an Answer of his Cavils, to this Purpose.

This is barely a Provisional Law, and not the Permission of the Thing, so much as the Regulation of it. And yett, in Case a Jew do such a Thing, upon an extraordinary Necessity, the Daughter was not hereby brought into the Condition of a Servant, but was to bee betrothed unto the Man that bought her, or unto the Son of that Man. This Restrained the Promiscuous Buying and Selling of Daughters, merely for the Satisfaction of Lust. And the Jewes tell us, This was never to bee done, but where there was a Præsumption of such a Betrothing. This was therefore look'd on, as a kind of Espousal of a Girle, by another taken into Wardship: Yett so, that shee were not Betrothed, shee was to remain her Six Years, during her Minority, unless she were Redeem'd, or, Sett free, or the Jubilee came, or the Master Dyed, or the Time of her Minority expired.⁴⁰

Yea, The Case of Necessity being supposed, it ha's been thought lawful, for Parents to make Advantage by their Children, by other Nations as well as the Jewes, who have been in the greatest Esteem for Wisdome. For by the Law of the Twelve Tables among the Romans, the Father had the Liberty of Selling his Son Three Times, for his own Advantage, as tis related by Dionysius Halicarnassensis.⁴¹ And before Then, it was not only in Use among the Romans, but in such XXXVIII. Colorum fucis mulieres uti non debent. Item Augustinus ad Possidium, et qui cum eo sunt fraters, epist. LXXIII. [PL 187. 1868B]. In his letter to Possidius, bishop of Calama, Augustine takes issue with men who wear "ear-rings at the top of the ear on one side" thereby "doing homage to devils" (NPNFi 1:588).

³⁹ On the ancient custom of boring a servant's ears, see Sir James George Frazer's Folk-lore in the Old Testament (vol. 3, part 4, ch. 3, pp. 164–269).

⁴⁰ See Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:414–15) and Works (5:85–86). Representative of all the classic rabbinic commentators, Rashi glosses on Exod. 21:7, "This verse speaks of a minor [daughter]. One might think [that the verse applies] even if she shows signs [of puberty]. You must say [that this is not so] a fortiori: Just as one who is sold beforehand (as a minor) goes free upon showing signs [of puberty], as is written: 'She goes out free, with no repayment of money,' which we expound as referring to one who shows signs of adolescence, then one who has not yet been sold [at this age] does logic not dictate that she not be sold at all?" (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi 2:280) and tractate Nezikin (ch. 3), in Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael (2:367–68).

Esteem among them, that upon the Review of their Lawes, the Decemviri durst not leave it out; but by one of the Lawes of Numa Pompilius, it was restrain'd unto the Times before Marriage; for in Case, the Son had the Fathers Consent to Marry, hee could not sell him afterwards.⁴² This Law continued in force among them, till Christianitie prevailed in the Roman Empire: For altho' there were a Prohibition of Dioclesian against it, yett that signified nothing, till Constantine took effectual Care, That such Indigent Parents should bee Releev'd out of the Public Charge.⁴³ And yett, after this, the Custome did continue, when the Parents were in great Want, as appears by a Law of Theodosius; Omnes quos parentur miseranda Fortuna, in Servitium, dum Victum requirunt, addixit, Jugenuitati pristinae reformatur.⁴⁴ And even in Constantines Time also, notwithstanding his Law, Parents, which thought themselves overcharged with Children, would still part with their Interest in them, unto others, for advantage; but it was chiefly while they were Sanguinolenti, as the Law expresses it; that is to say, New-born.⁴⁵

By the Lawes of Athens, before the Time, of Solon, Parents might sell their Children as appears by his Life, in Plutarch; and the same is reported of the Phrygians by Philostratus: Tis then also among the Chinese, at this day, if Persons think themselves unable to bring up their Offspring.⁴⁶ Two things are to bee said for it; One is, The Natural Obligation, lying on Children to provide for their Parents in their Necessity, any Way that they are able. Another is, The Probability to three times, after which king's bargain, the son was to attain his freedom from paternal authority. De Patria Potestate, in The Institutes of Justinian (lib. 1, tit. 9, § 1, pp. 29–30), reaffirmed parental power over their children's liberty.

42 Plutarch (Parallel Lives: Numa 17.4) praises the Roman lawgiver Numa for amending the ancient Roman law permitting fathers to sell their sons: Numa "made an exception of married sons, provided they had married with the consent and approval of the father. For he [Numa] thought it a hard thing that a woman who had married a man whom she thought free, should find herself living with a slave."

43 Roman Emperor Gaius Aurelius Valerius Diocletianus Augustus (c. 244–311), aka. Dioclesian, is prominently remembered as a persecutor of the early Christians. Eusebius Pamphilus relates in his Life of Constantine (1.43, 3.48, 4.44) that the munificence of Constantine the Great (c. 272–337 CE) was boundless: "Orphans of the unfortunate he cared for as a father, while he relieved the destitution of widows, and cared for them with special solicitude" (NPNFii 1:494). He "bestowed abundant provision for the necessities of the poor, desiring even thus to invite them to seek the doctrines of salvation" (NPNFii 1:536); finally, "he also distributed lavish supplies of money and clothing among the naked and destitute" (NPNFii 1:552).

44 Mather cites from Codicis Theodosiani Libri XVI (1586), lib. 3. tit. 3, p. 42. Titled, "De Patribus qui filios distraxerunt" ("Fathers who have sold their Children"), the law stipulates that "all those person whom the piteous fortune of their parents has consigned to slavery while their parents thereby were seeking sustenance shall be restored to their original status of free birth" (Theodosian Code 3.3.1, p. 65).

45 Sanguinolenti, derived from the Latin sanguinolentus, "Of or pertaining to blood; tinged or stained with or containing blood," though now mostly used in pathology (OED) is here applied to "newborns" still stained with the blood of their mother.

46 Plutarch (Parallel Lives: Solon 13.2–3, 23.1–2). In his Life of Apollonius of Tyana (8.7.12), Flavius Philostratus (c. 170–c. 247 CE), the Athenian sophist, reports that the Phrygians did not consider slavery and servitude disgraceful and even sold their own children.

of better Education under more able Persons. The Thebans had a Law, *That Parents in Case of Poverty, were to bring their Children unto a Magistrate, as soon as they were born, & put them out unto such as were Judg'd fitt to bring them out, & to have their Service for the Reward.*⁴⁷

Q. The Wilful Murderer, to be Taken from the Altar? v. 14.

A. It seems to be determined, Deut. XIX.12. The Elders of the City, were the Persons, that were to take him. In aftertimes, the King ordered it.

If a Man Refused to come from the Altar, after Proof of a Capital Crime, he might be killed There; as Ritter[s]husius shoves, in his Book, De Jure Asylo-rum; where he observes, out of Plutarch, That Agesilaus declared publicly at the Altar of Pallas, where he sacrificed an Oxe, that he thought it lawful to kill one who treacherously assaulted him, even at the Altar.⁴⁸

Q. Why so severe a Law, against him who Stole a Man, & Sold him? v. 16.

A. No Israelite would buy him: And therefore such Plagiaries sold him to Men of other Nations. This made the Crime to be punished with Death; because it was a Cruel Thing, not only to take away his Liberty, but also to make him a Slave to Strangers.⁴⁹

Q. He shall cause him to be thoroughly healed? v. 19.

A. L'Empereur notes, that the Civil Law ha's made just such a Provision, as we find here in the Constitution of Moses. *Iudex computat mercedes medicis præstitas, cæteraque impendia, quæ in curatione facta sunt. Præterea operas quibus caruit, aut cariturus est, ob id, quod inutilis factus sit.*⁵⁰

⁴⁹ Patrick (Exodus 399) and John Selden, De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 6, cap. 2, p. 668. Maimonides (Guide 3.41.562) equates kidnapping with murder. See also Samuel Sewall's The Selling of Joseph A Memorial (1700), p. 1. See also Stievertmann's "Genealogy of Races."

Q. On that, An Eye for an Eye? v. 24.

A. Mr. Selden in his Table-talk, (and lett it pass for such!) sais, “It does not mean, that if I putt out an other Mans Eye, therefore I must lose one of my own: For what is he the better for that? Tho’ this be commonly received. But it means, I shall give him what Satisfaction an Eye shall be judged to be worth.”⁵¹

Q. The Owner of an Ox given to push, by which a Man was killed; must he alwayes be putt to Death? v. 32.

A. Here is Provision made, There may be laid upon him a Sum of Money. Tis thus expounded by L’Empereur. Either the Knowledge which the Owner had of the Ill Conditions of his Oxe, was certain, or uncertain. And his Carelessness in preventing the Mischief he was wont to do, was greater or lesser. And the Friends of him that was killed, pressed the strictest Justice, or were content to Remitt it. In the former Cases, if the Knowledge were certain, the Carelessness very gross, & the Friends very strict in the Prosecution, he was punished with Death. But if otherwise, he was punished only by Setting a Fine upon him. God permitted the Judges to accept of a Ransome, as they saw Cause.⁵²

Q. The Lawes about Mischievous Cattel? v. 32.

A. L’Empereur on Bava Kama takes Notice, that Solon wrote, βλάβης τετραπόδων νόμον· A Law concerning Mischief done by Cattel; as Plutarch relates in his Life.⁵³

Q. Some Reason, why these Cases, rather than some others, are here insisted on? v. 32.

A. It is probable, they were then Cases in fact, actually depending before Moses; For, in the Wilderness, where they lay closely encamped, & had their Flocks & Herds among them, such Mischiefs were likely enough to be of a frequent Occurrence.⁵⁴ second-hand quotation from Institutes Iustiniani (via L’Empereur, p. 197) more accurately reads in the original, “Judex enim computare debet mercedes medicis præstitas, ceteraque impendia, quæ in curatione facta sunt. Præterea operarum, quibus caruit, aut cariturus est, ob id, quod inutilis factus est,” and translates, “The judge ought to take into account the fees paid to the physician, and all the other expenses of the man’s illness, as well as the employment which he has lost, or will lose, by being incapacitated” (Institutes 425).

⁵³ Patrick, on Exod. 21:32 (Exodus 410–11). Mather cites directly from L’Empereur’s commentary on tractate בבה קמא [Baba Kama] De Legibus Ebraeorum Forensibus (1637), cap. 4, sec. 5, p. 85, along with Plutarch’s quote, βλάβης τετραπόδων νόμον, “a law concerning the damage done by cattle,” from Plutarchi vitæ parallelæ: Solon (24.3, line 1), a biography of the famed Hellenic lawgiver.

Q. If a Man Steal an Oxe or a Sheep, hee shall Restore Five Oxen for an Oxe, and Four Sheep for a Sheep. Why Five for the Oxe, when but Four for the Sheep? v. 1.¹

A. For diverse Causes; but this especially; The Labour of the Oxe was hindred in this Theft; and Restitution must bee made for That.²

Q. But are there not several other Points of exact Justice observable in these Mosaic Lawes?

A. Yes; We will touch upon a few of them.

If an Ox, Ass, or Sheep stolen, were found Alive in the Hand of the Thief, he was to Restore Double: [Ex. 22.4.] to witt, the Principal, and the Value of it, for the Trouble given to the Owner. If kill'd, or sold, he was to Restore Fourfold: [v. 1.] the Trouble of obtaining Restitution thereby becoming much the greater.³

If the Thief could not make Restitution, he was to be Sold: [v. 3.] rather than be kept for to work it out; lest he should study Revenge: Nor had every Owner, Occasion for such a Servant.⁴

He that committed a Nocturnal Theft, might innocently be killed. [Ex. 22.2.] For Killing is then frequently intended by the Thief, rather than fail of the Theft, or of Secrecy therein.⁵

When the Injury was done by a Cheat, the Principal was to be Restored, and a Fifth Part of the Value, to be added unto it. [Lev. 6.2, 5.] A Reparation much less than what was required upon a Downright Theft. Because one may have his Goods to be stolen, tho' he takes Care to præserved them; whereas, if he be cheated, it was more his own Fault.⁶

If a Beast entrusted with any Man, was evidently Stolen, he was to make it Good. For he that entrusts any thing with another, thinks it Safer in the Trustees Hands, than in his own; and he that accepts the Trust, bids him think it so. But if it were driven away, no Man seeing it, he was not bound then to make it Good. [Ex. 22.10.] For that, notwithstanding any thing appearing to the Contrary, might be done by the Owner himself. Nor if it were Torn. [Ex. 22.13.] Because he was not bound, for the Safety of another Mans Beast, to venture his own Life.⁷

Q. Was there not a Difference between Penitent Theeves, & Impanitent? v. 1.

A. There was a Difference, between a Thief, who came and confessed his Sin of his own Accord, & him that stood out until he was Apprehended and Convicted of it.

In the former Case, Moses requires only the Restitution of that which was stolen, with the Addition of a Fifth Part of the Value, & a Sacrifice. [Lev. 6.4, 5.] This was more æqual than Plato's Constitutions; which for all Thefts required the same Punishment, the Payment of Double; εαν μεγαλ, εαντε σμικρον, κλεπτη τις.⁸

Q. The Law, Thou shalt not suffer a Witch to live? v. 18.⁹

A. Dr. Patrick observes, This Law about Witches, followes the Law about Virgins; because Witches, among other Practices, did by Evil Arts, allure silly Virgins, to consent unto the Sollicitations of their pretended Lovers. Epiphanius reports, from one that saw it, such a magical Operation used by a Jew, to procure the Love of a Christian, who was præserv'd, from the δυναμις φαρμακειας, Power of his Witchcraft, by the Seal of Christ, wherewith she fortified herself. But such Wretches did a World of other Mischief, & were therefore to be putt to Death; whether Men or Women.¹⁰

7 Maimonides's explication of the laws pertaining to theft, in Mishneh Torah: Hilchot Geneivah (chs. 1–9) are echoed throughout this paragraph (Sefer Nezikin 152–229).

8 Maimonides, Hilchot Geneivah (1.5), in Mishneh Torah (19:154). Plato (Leges 9.857, line 3) insists that ἐάντε μέγα ἐάντε σμικρόν κλέπτη τις, the thief “must pay twice the value of the stolen article” (Works 1514).

9 “Note Book of Authors” identifies “Perkins Works, vol. 3. p. 607” as Mather’s recommended source on Exod. 22:18. The distinguished English theologian and master of Cambridge University, William Perkins (1558–1602), was highly influential in the Puritan movement during the Elizabethan period (ODNB). His numerous works include his oft-reprinted Discourse of the Damned Art of Witchcraft; So Farre Forth as it is Revealed in the Scriptures, and manifested by true experience (Cambridge, 1608). Mather’s specific page references is to this discourse in The Works of that Famous and Worthy Minister of Christ in the Universitie of Cambridge, M. William Perkins. The third and last Volume. Newly corrected and amended (London, 1631), pp. 607–652. Perkins’s well-known essay on Exod. 22:18, on the Mosaic proscription against witchcraft, was first published in 1608. In his Wonders of the Invisible World (1693), pp. xxvii–xxix, Mather abstracts Perkins’s guidelines on the nature and culpability of witchcraft.

10 Patrick (Exodus 423–24). In his book on heresies, St. Epiphanius of Salamis addresses φαρμακειας δυναμις “the power of his witchcraft” to ensnare a person, in Panarion (vol. 1, cap. 30, p. 344, § 8, line 7).

The Scripture indeed mentions a Witch only (saies the Gemara of the Sanhedrim, C.7. n. 10.) because, for the most Part, they were Women, who were addicted unto Witchcraft. And Maimonides gives the same Reason.¹¹

Maimonides adds, That in all Witchcraft there was a Respect unto the Stars. There was a Worship of the Stars in all they did. Now the Scope of the Law, was, that all Idolatri should be taken out of the World; & no Vertue ascribed unto any Star, for Good or Evil. It followed, That Witches were to be putt to Death, because they were Idolaters. But Maimonides thinks, A Witch is rather mentioned than a Wizard, (tho' both are intended,) because Men are naturally more Tender towards the Female Sex, & apt to favour them. Therefore, tis as if Moses had said; Thou shalt kill, even a Woman, that is guilty of this Crime.¹²

Other Hebrew Doctors, give this Reason, why Witches must not live; "Because they directly thwarted God most Blessed, who made all things, when He created them, for such & such Purposes; which they perverted, and by Devices of their own, made to serve other Ends, which God | never designed. They could not do this, without the Help of Evil Spirits. Therefore their Crime consisted in a Familiaritie, & Confœderacy with them, whose Assistance on such Occasion they invoked. And it was a Renouncing of GOD."¹³ [41v]

This was an Impiety, which had overspread the whole World; especially the Eastern Parts of it. And as for the Romans, we find a Law, as old, as the XII Tables, against Witchcraft. Apud nos in Duodecim Tabulis cavetur, nè quis alienos

11 R. Judah explains the rabbinic tradition as follows: "Our Rabbis taught: [Thou shalt not suffer] a witch [to live]: this applies to both man and woman. If so, why is a [female] witch stated? – Because mostly women engage in witchcraft," in Babylonian Talmud, tractate Sanhedrin (67a). And Maimonides adds the following reasons in his מורה נבכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629) 3.37.445–46: "With regard to most of these magical practices, they [Sabian/Zabian idolaters] pose the condition that those who perform them should necessarily be women." For instance, to discover water, "ten virgins must put on ornaments and red clothes and dance and crawl, going in turn forward and backward, and point to the sun, and perform the rest of this long operation until, as they think the water goes forth. In the same way they mention that if four women lie down upon their backs, raise their legs, holding them apart, and say and do certain things while in this disgraceful posture, hail will cease falling down upon that place. And they [idolaters] recount many such fables and ravings. And you will never find them posing some condition other than that they should be performed by women. In all magical operations it is indispensable that the stars should be observed" (Guide 3.37.541–42).

13 Patrick (Exodus 425) translates the passage from R. Aaron ben Joseph ha-Levi of Barcelona, whose halachic explication of the Torah's 613 mitzvot ספר החינוך Sefer ha-Chinnuk [Book of Education] appeared in Johann Heinrich Hottinger's bilingual edition Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI (1655). The passage in quotation marks (which Mather transcribes from Patrick) appears in the Hebrew and Latin version in Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI (1655), sec. VI, praecept. LXII (on Exod. 22:18), pp. 71–72.

Fructus excantassit, saith Seneca; L. IV. Nat. Quæst. c. 7. where he mentions the like Law among the Athenians. The Greeks were extremely addicted unto it especially in Thessaly. Plato in his Eleventh Book of Lawes, orders Punishments for the various Wayes of it.¹⁴

Q. On that, Thou shalt neither vex a Stranger, nor oppress him? v. 21.

A. The first of these, the Hebrews will have to consist, in a not upbraiding of him with his former State of Paganism; or giving him any Afflicting Words, Remember what thou wast, or which thy Father did. The Second consisted in using him hardly in their Dealing with him, as in making him to pay for a thing more than it was worth; R. Levi of Barcelona observes, That Maltreating of Proselytes, might be a Temptation unto them, to return unto Idolatry.

The Jews observe, That for that Reason, this Præcept is inculcated in one & twenty Places.¹⁵

Q. What may bee the Intention of that Passage, Thou shalt not Revile the Gods? v. 28.

A. I'll recite unto you, the Words of a late Writer upon it.

"I never liked making Sport with any Mans Religion. Tis a very Inhumane cruelty. Perhaps that Precept in the Mosaic Law, Thou shalt not speak evil of the Gods of the People, is to bee understood in this Sense. For, when the Jewes were going into a strange Countrey, it was the most probable Way, to gain Proselytes unto their Law, rather to demonstrate the Truth of their own, than to Rail at the Heathens Religion."

¹⁵ Patrick (Exodus 427) refers to R. Aaron ben Joseph ha-Levi of Barcelona's סֵפֶר הַחֲנוּךְ Sefer Ha-Chinnuk (1523), in Hottinger's bilingual edition Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI (1655), sec. VI, praecept. LXII–XIV, pp. 73–75. See also John Selden's De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 2, cap. 4, pp. 159–60; Talmud, tractate Berachoth (63b); Exod. 23:9, 30:33 etc., and tractate Nezikin (18), in Mekhilta De-Rabbi Ishmael (2:451–54).

What I have against this (tho' I find Philo for it,) is; That it was Julians Exposition; which Cyril confuted.¹⁶

¹⁶ Via Patrick (Exodus 431) and John Selden, De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 2, cap. 13, pp. 268–69, Mather alludes to Philo Judaeus's De specialibus legibus (1.53.4–5), who insists that “they [Jews] must not give a license to their jealous language and unbridled tongues, blaspheming those beings whom the other body looks upon as gods, lest the proselytes should be exasperated at such treatment, and in return utter impious language against the true and holy God” (Works 538–39). Philo offers the same caution in his De Vita Mosis (2.205.5–6) and Works (509). The Hellenist historian Josephus Flavius is in full agreement in his Antiquities (4.8.10): “let no one blaspheme those gods which other cities esteem such (Complete Works 96). In Contra Julianum, lib. 7 [PG. 76. 0217–251] Patriarch Cyril of Alexandria (c. 376–c. 444) reproaches the Roman Emperor Flavius Claudius Julianus Augustus (c. 331–363 CE), aka. “the Apostate,” for ridiculing and dismissing Christianity as a local, or Galilean, religion without any connection to the Old Testament.

Q. On that, Thou shalt not follow a Multitude; – v. 2.¹

A. It may also be rendred, Thou shalt not follow the Great Ones, the Rich Ones.²

Q. If thou meet thy Enemies Oxe or Ass going astray. – In Deut. 22.1, 2. instead of the Word, Enemy, we find Moses uses the Word, Brother? v. 4.

A. And therefore, as R. Levi of Barcelona tells us, the Jewish Doctors restrain the Word, Enemy, to an Israelite; as if they thought not themselves bound unto such Kindness, for one of another Nation.³

But, as Dr. Patrick observes, It should rather have taught them, to look upon all Men, even Enemies, as Brethren; having the same common Original, & bearing the Image of the same God.⁴

Q. Thou shalt not wrest the Judgment of Thy Poor? v. 6.

A. Conr. {adus} Pellican observes, There seems to be an Emphasis, in the Word, THY Poor: Importing that they had such a Relation to them, that they ought to be as much concerned for them, as any other Member of their Body.⁵

[42v] But the Jewes, fancying this | to be sufficiently included in the Third Verse, understand by the Poor here, A Bad Man: One who is, Pauper Præceptorum, not, Pauper Facultatum; One that wants Vertue, not, one that wants Money. To whom a Judge might not say, He was a Wicked Fellow, and condemn him, without any further Hearing of his Cause. For it belongs unto GOD, (saith R. Levi Barcelonita.) to execute Judgment upon the Ungodly; and not unto the Judges.⁶

1 Mather identifies “Taylors, Multitude no prevailing Argumt [sic]” as a potential source for his gloss on Exod. 23:2, in “Note Book of Authors and Texts Throughout the Bible” (1720). The specific reference is to “Multitude no prevailing [sic] Argument” (on Exod. 23.2), a sermon preached at St. Magnus-the-Martyr, London, “at New-Years Tide in 1627,” by Thomas Taylor, D.D. (c. 1576–1632), of Richmond (Yorkshire), “sometimes Pastor of Mary Aldermanbury London.” This exegetical homily was published in Taylor’s huge collection of sermons and essays, The Works of that Faithful Servant of Jesus Christ (London, 1652), pp. 544–47, by Joseph Caryl (1602–1673), an ejected Puritan clergyman turned printer-publisher, at whose church Taylor had preached his sermon in 1627.

Q. A Gift blinds the Eyes.] What Gift? v. 8.

A. The Hebrew Lawyers say, That not only Pecuniary Gifts are here forbidden, but such Words also (perhaps they mean Promises of Reward,) as may win the Affection, and that he who gave the Present, was guilty, as well as he that Received it.

J. Coch, on the Sanhedrin and Maccoth, gives this ingenious Derivation of the Hebrew Word, Schochad, which we translate, Gift;⁷ Out of the Treatise, called, Chetuboth; where it is said to be as much as, Schechu Chad; that is, whereby he is one. For the Party, who receives the Gift, ha's his Mind so drawn to the Giver, that he becomes one & the same with him. And no Man is fitt to be a Judge in his own Cause.⁸ Plato thought this Law so necessary, that he expressly enacts, (L. XII. de Legibus,) that all Men, who served their Countrey in any Office, should, δῶρων χωρὶς διακονεῖν. Perform their Duty without Gifts.⁹ He adds; ὁ δὲ μὴ πειθόμενος ἀπλῶς, τεθνάτω ἀλous τῇ δικῇ. He that offended against this Law, was to Suffer Death. And this was the Law of the XII Tables among the Ancient Romans, Iudex, qui ob rem dicendam, pecuniam accepisse convictus est, capite punitor. In Plain English, The Judge that is convicted of having Received Money, for giving his Sentence, Lett him Lose his Head.¹⁰

Q. On the Seventh Day, thou shalt Rest?] v. 12.¹¹

A. He would have them know, That even in the Sabbatical Year itself, the Weekly Sabbath was to be kept with the usual Strictness. This may be the Reason of the Repetition here. R. Levi Barcelonita, observes, That this Præcept, is repeted in the Law, XII Times.

Coch” is to Johannes Cocceius, aka. Johannes Koch, also Coch (1603–1669), the learned German-born Dutch Reformed theologian, Hebraist, and voluminous author, whose Summa Doctrinae de Foedere et Testamento Dei (1648), is the most significant work on covenant theology of the period (EB). In the present context, Mather refers to Cocceius’s extracts and commentary on Duo Tituli Thalmudici Sanhedrin et Maccoth (1629). On Cocceius, see W.J. van Asselt’s Federal Theology (2001).

2318.

Q. The Gospel of the Jewish Festivals, may properly bee Introduced here? v. 15.

A. Then here you shall have it.

There were Five Annual Festivals. The Feast of the Passeover; the Feast of Pentecost; the Feast of Tabernacles; [the Two former of which, lasted Seven dayes together, & the last of them Eight; the first Day, & the last of them, were Holy Convocations; & all the Males must go up to Jerusalem at them:] and the Feast of Trumpets, & the Feast of Expiation.¹³

There were Five General Rules, to bee observed about all the Yearly Feasts.

First, The Feasts were all to bee celebrated at the Place which the Lord should choose; namely, at Jerusalem. An Intimation, That there are some Ordinances, which may not bee enjoy'd, but in Church-Society; such is the Lords-supper, which to Administer unto Persons Alone, upon their Death-beds, is unwarrantable.¹⁴

Secondly. The Feasts were all in the Summer-time, and not in the Winter. An Intimation, That God will have a Tenderness to the Bodies of His People in His Worship. And how great a Sin is it, for Men to Hurt their own Bodies!

Thirdly. They might not come unto the Feasts empty-handed. An Intimation, That unto the Duties of Worship, there must bee joined the Duties of Mercy and Bounty; Tis Hypocrisy, that is all for a Cheap Religion.¹⁵

Fourthly, God assured them, of a Special Protection at the Time of their Feasts, from the Invasion of their Enemies. An Intimation, That the Way of Duty, is the Way of Safety; Jerusalems being Taken at the Time of the Passeover; proved, That the Passeover was Abolished, by the Coming of the Messiah.

Fifthly; Those Feasts, were both Commemorative of Former Benefits, and Præfigurative of Future ones.¹⁶

Now more particularly.

12 Patrick (Exodus 444) cites R. ha-Levi of Barcelona's סֵפֶר הַחֲנוּכָּה Sefer Ha-Chinnuk, from Hottinger's Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI (1655), sec. VII, praecept. LXX, LXXI, pp. 87, 88.

I. The Feast of the Passeover.

The peculiar Things in this Feast, were, The Killing & Eating of the Paschal-Lamb; the Eating of Unleavened Bread, for Seven Dayes; And the Waving of the Sheaf of the First-fruits, on the Sixteenth day of the Month.

The End of this Feast, was not only to keep Alive the Remembrance of Israels Deliverance, from Egypt, and from the Destroying Angel; but also bee a Shadow of our Redemption by our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Lamb of God, that hath been Slain for us, and slain at the Very Time of the Passeover.

1. The Paschal Lamb itself, preached Christ, & proclaimed several of His personal Qualifications.¹⁷

It was to bee a Lamb without Blemish. Our Lord Jesus Christ, who knew no Sin, was expressly called so. [1. Pet. 1.19.]¹⁸

It was to bee a Male. The Excellency & Perfection of our Lord, might bee therein pointed at; the Son born unto us. [Isa. 9.6.]

It is a Creature of much Meekness and Patience. There never was display'd such, as was in the Sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ. [Isa. 53.7.]

2. The Killing and the Dressing of the Lamb, described the Sufferings of our Lord.

The Taking of the Lamb, show'd the Siezing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Slaying of the Lamb, did point us unto the Death of our Lord Jesus Christ, who still is to bee seen by Faith, a Lamb as it had been slain.

The Roasting of the Lamb in the Fire, was to signify the Fire of the Wrath of God, which fell upon our Lord Jesus Christ for our Sins; when Hee poured out His Fury like Fire. Yea, Justin Martyr acquaints us, That at the Passeover they Spitted the Roasted Lamb, in such a Manner, as to Resemble the Figure of a Cross; & he particularly tells us, How. If we consider, That this ancient Writer, was born & bred in Palastine, & well-skill'd in Jewish as well as Pagan Customes, & that he spoke these Words in Conference, which a learned Jew, who could have contradicted a Mistake, we may look on this as a considerable Passage.

Not a Bone of the Lamb, was to bee Broken. This was by the over-ruling Providence of God, wonderfully performed in our Lord. [Joh.19.33, 36.]¹⁹

3. There was an Analogy between the Time of the Killing of the Lamb, and the Sufferings of our Lord.

The Lamb was to bee taken up, at a Fitt Age, namely, that of a Year old. So was our Lord Jesus Christ, at a Fitt Age, and, as the Apostle speaks, In due Time.

The Lamb, tho' Taken the Tenth Day, was not Slain, till the Fourteenth. Our Lord Jesus Christ, entred on His Public Ministry, the Thirtieth Year of His Life, which is the Tenth thrice told, but suffered not until the Four and Thirtieth.

¹⁷ Samuel Mather (417).

¹⁹ Samuel Mather (418).

The Lamb was to bee slain on the Fourteenth Day of the First Month. Our Lord Jesus Christ suffered at that very Time of the Year; It was at the Passeover.

The Lamb was to bee slain, between the Two Evenings; There was the Evening of the Day, which began at Three in the Afternoon; and there was the Evening of the Night, which began at Sun-sett. Thus, the Death of our Lord, fell out, about Three in the Afternoon.²⁰

4. In the Blood of the Lamb, there was the Blood of our Lord, shadowed forth unto us.

The Blood of the slain Lamb, was not spilt on the Ground, for to bee Trodden under foot, but kept in a Basin, as a precious Thing. The precious Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, must not bee Rejected by Unbeleef, which treads underfoot the Blood of the Covenant.

The Blood of the Lamb, was to bee Sprinkled, with a Bunch of Hyssop. The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, applied unto our Souls, is, The Blood of Sprinkling. The Promises, & Ordinances of the Gospel, with Faith, in the Hand of the Spirit, are as a Bunch of Hyssop, for this Application.

The Blood of the Lamb, typically made Atonement. The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, Really doth so: Nothing else indeed can make our Atonement.

For the Sake of the Blood of the Lamb, the Destroying Angel, did pass over the Israelites, & spare them when the Egyptians were cutt off. When Unbelievers are cutt off eternally, the Faithful are saved, thro' the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, Sprinkled upon their Consciences.²¹

[43v] | 5. The Eating of the Lamb, was like our Feeding on our Lord by Faith, especially in the Sacrament of the Eucharist. It was to bee done, in due Order.

There was one Circumstance, that seems to have been peculiar unto the First Passeover; namely, To Eat it, Standing, with their Staves in their Hands, their Shoes on their Feet, and their Loins girt, which was a Posture of Readiness for Action and Motion. Thus ought wee to behave ourselves, in the Egypt of this World, & of Unregeneracy, & of Antichristianism; even bestir ourselves to gett out of it, & follow the Lamb, whithersoever Hee goeth.

The Lamb was to bee Eaten with Sower or Bitter Herbs. Our Lord Jesus Christ, who was a Man of Sorrowes, must bee Fed upon, with our Sorrowful Remembrance of our Sins, & of His Sorrowes for our Sins.

The Lamb was to bee Eaten without Leaven, even with an Abstinence from Leaven for Seven Dayes together. Having once laid Hold on the Lord Jesus Christ by Faith, wee must putt away the Old Leven of our sinful Corruptions; not for Seven Dayes only, but all the Dayes of our Lives.

The Lamb was to bee Eaten, and none of it left. Thus by Faith, wee must Receive a whole Christ, and all His Benefits.

²⁰ Samuel Mather (419).

²¹ Samuel Mather (420).

The Lamb was to bee Eaten, by the whole Family; and if the Family were too little, others were to bee called in. Both the Communion, and the Enlargement of the Church, is here noted unto us.

But no Uncircumcised Person, might Eat of the Passeover. Nor may any Unbaptised Person come to the Supper of our Lord; nor may wee admitt any apparently Unregenerate.²²

II. The Feast of Pentecost.

It was thus called, πεντεκοστή, or, The Fiftieth, because it was kept Fifty Days after the Passeover.²³

And it was called, The Feast of Weeks, because they were to reckon Seven Weeks, from the Morrow after the Passeover; & then they were to offer unto the Lord, their two Wave-Loaves. Now,

1. One Mystery in this Feast, was, To present their Thankfulness to God, for the Land of Canaan, and for the Fruits of that Land in their present Harvest. It is therefore called, The Feast of Harvest, and, The Feast of First-Fruits, and, The Feast of Weeks of the First-Fruits of the Wheat-Harvest. As in the former, the First-Fruits of their Barley-Harvest, so in this the First-Fruits of their Wheat-Harvest, must bee offered unto God.

These Lessons were herein taught unto us. That God must bee acknowledged in Earthly Mercies, & have the Rent of Thankfulness paid Him for the Fruits of the Earth.

That a Christian then becomes truly Thankful, when the Blood of Christ, the true Paschal-Lamb, ha's been first applied unto him.

That wee must Begin betimes in our Acknowledgements of God. When Barley was Ripe, they were to begin their Acknowledgments, even on the Sixteenth day of the Month; and not stay till they had gotten their whole Harvest. Wee must, Reddere illi prima, qui nobis dedit omnia.²⁴

And, That then our Acknowledgments of God must bee still Increasing. First they were to offer a Wave-Sheaf of Barley; But now Two Wave-Loaves of Wheat. Then but One Lamb; now, Seven Lambs. The greater our Mercies are, the greater shall bee our Praises.²⁵

2. A Second Mystery in this Feast, was, To commemorate the Time, when the Law was given; For that was at this Time of the Year. For a People to have the Law of God Reveald unto them; especially a People, who had been under the Will of cruel Task-Masters as a Law; This was an inæstimable Mercy, worthy to bee kept alwayes in precious Remembrance.²⁶

3. A Third Mystery in this Feast, was, To repræsent the Pouring out of the Spirit, which was granted in the New Testament, at the very Time that the Law was given in the Old. The Apostles thus furnished with the Spirit went forth, to Gather that which the Prophets had Sown. And wee were here taught, that under the Gospel, wee Receive the Spirit of Christ, which enables unto the keeping of His Law.²⁷

III. The Feast of Tabernacles.

It began on the Fifteenth Day of the Seventh Month, and lasted Eight Dayes, the First & Last whereof, where Holy Convocations.

The principal Cæremony, which distinguish'd this Feast from the rest, was, The dwelling of the People in Booths, or, Tabernacles. Now,

1. One Mystery in this Feast, was, To putt the People in Mind, of their Dwelling in Tents, when they were Travelling Forty Years together, thro' the Wilderness. This Teaches us, to Remember the Dealings of God with our Fathers.²⁸

2. Another Mystery in this Feast, was, To Instruct them, That they were but Pilgrims & Strangers here below, and Sojourned in a Strange Land, passing thro' it, unto a better Countrey. [Ps. 39.12.]

The Rite of this Feast, namely, the Sojourning in Booths, had been strangely neglected, for about a Thousand Years together, until their Deportation into Babylon, taught them, to keep it better. [Neh. 8.13.]²⁹

3. A Third Mystery in this Feast, was, To point the Time, when God Himself would come to Tabernacle, and Pitch His Tent among Men. The First Day of it, pointed us unto the Nativity; the Eighth Day, pointed unto the Circumcision of our Lord. Thirteen Bullocks offered the First Day, Twelve the next, so every Day less & less, to the End of the Feast; and on the Last Day, no more than One. This might shadow forth unto us, the Evanition of the Legal Offices by the Coming of our Lord.

[44r] The Hosannah then usually sung, has an Eye to the Messiah. Solomons Temple was then Dedicated, & the Ark brought into it. | The Baptism of our Lord, falling out, about this Time, it is clear that about this Time, His Birth also fell out.

The December-Festival, of Christmas, observed in Christendome, is wrong placed, as it may bee evinced, by a Thousand Arguments.³⁰

IV. The Feast of Trumpetts.³¹

This was upon the First Day of the Seventh Month. It was kept as a Sabbath; It had its peculiar Sacrifices; It was also celebrated with the Blowing of Trumpetts.

The General Scope of these Trumpetts, was to signify, the Joyful Sound of the Gospel. The Ministers of the Gospel, are therein to Lift up their Voice like a Trumpett. Wee read therefore, That the Tongue of the Just is as choice Silver. (Prov. 10.20.) Perhaps, in Allusion to these Trumpetts, which were of Silver.³²

The Grace and Joy of the Holy Spirit, might bee another Thing intimated by these Trumpetts. A glad Melody is thereby made, in the Consciences of the Faithful [Psal. 98.6. with Eph. 5.18, 19.]

Moreover, These Trumpetts were used by Divine Appointment, in the Time of War. It was to call them forth unto the War, with an encouraged Faith, of their being Remembred by God, and Successful over their Enemies. [Num. 10.9. with 2. Chron. 20.21, 22.]³³

Furthermore, It was the Office of the Priests, to sound these Trumpetts. Thus the public Dispensation of the Gospel, is entrusted chiefly with the Ministers of the Gospel, sett apart for that special Service.

As for the Matter of these Trumpetts, they were made, some of Silver, and some of Horn. There were Cornets used with the Trumpetts. [Psal. 98.6.] Rams Horns were employ'd, for beating down the Walls of Jericho. The Meanest Gifts, of Sincere and Godly Ministers, may, in like Manner bee accepted.

The Number of these Trumpetts, was at first, no more than Two; even for the Two Sons of Aaron. But in Process of Time, David added many other Musical Instruments, by Direction & Authority from God. [2. Chron. 29.25. 1. Chron. 16.42. 2. Chron. 7.6.] And in Solomons Time, wee read of, One Hundred & Twenty Priests, who did Sound with Trumpets. This might note, the Enlargement of the Church, & of its glad Circumstances, in the Times of the Gospel; even in Times of the greater Solomon.

But, Lastly, why was this Feast, on the First Day of the Seventh Month? No doubt, because of the many great Occurrences, in this Month, whereof some were past & some to come.³⁴ days commonly assigned by the Western and Eastern Churches, respectively: "So it is but lying, for Men to keep Days of their own Invention; and the Lye appears in that they pretend to do it for the Honour of God and of Jesus Christ, whereas they unspeakably dishonor him thereby. It is the framing of a Lye in Mens own Hearts when they keep such Days" (433).

V. The Feast of Expiation.³⁵

This was, The Great Day of Atonement, kept on the Tenth Day of the Seventh Month. It was indeed most properly a Fast; but it is commonly called a Feast, because it was a Solemn Time; And tho' it were a Day of Afflicting their Souls, yett there was Joy in the End of it, for their Peace made with God, & a Jubilee proclaimed.

It was indeed, with all the Administrations of it, the most compleat Shadow, of the Great Work of Redemption, that is under the Law to bee mett withal.

You have the Matter directed, in the Sixteenth Chapter of Leviticus.³⁶

The first thing that occurs is, The Occasion of the Institution. And here the Tragical Death of Aarons Two Sons, is particularly mentioned. Which teaches us, That there must bee an Holy Fear of Sinning, in our Approaching to God, in His Ordinances. And, That when some Dy, in and for their Sins, the Lord provides for the Salvation of others, that they do not Sin, & Dy.

But some think, That the great Sin of the Idolatry of the Golden Calf, was Remembred in this Fast. Yea, that the First Fall of Man, about this Time, was therein Referr'd unto.³⁷

Well, The Priest is here charged, that hee come in before God, only in such a Manner as God Himself hath appointed; And that Manner is thus appointed.

1. The Priest must wash himself. [Compare, Heb. 10.22.] Thus, our Lord Jesus Christ was Baptised, before Hee entred on His Public Ministry; & Hee was also perfectly Clean and Pure and Holy, without the least Pollution of Sin upon Him.

2. The Priest must bee Attired, not only in the Holy Garments, but also in the Most Holy ones; not only in his White Garments, but also in his Golden ones. An Emblem, of our Spiritual-Cloathing. [Psal. 132. 9, 16.] But these two Sorts of Attire, intimated the Different State of our Lord, when Hee performed the Work of Redemption for us. First Hee wore but the White and plain Garments of Grace; Innocent, tho' in the Form of a Servant. But after His Resurrection, Hee wore the Golden & bright Garments of Glory.³⁸

3. Wee pass to the Offerings, on this Day of Atonement.

First, There was to bee an Offering for the Priest himself; & for his own House. This Teaches us, the Imperfection and Insufficiency of the Aaronical Priesthood. [Heb. 5.1, 2, 3. and, Heb. 7. 26, 27, 28.]

It also shoves us, That they who ly under unpardoned Guilt themselves, are not fitt to bee Intercessors for others.

³⁶ Samuel Mather (440, § 5).

³⁷ Samuel Mather (450, 451). See also J. Sheehan's "Sacred and Profane" (2006).

³⁸ Samuel Mather (452, 453).

Now for this Offering, these things were to be done.

The Priest was to kill it, and so make Atonement with it. This represented the Death of our Lord.

| The Priest was then to bring Incense into the Holy of Holies. The Intercession of our Lord Jesus Christ, was herein represented unto us. Now, the Priest was to do this, before hee sprinkled the Blood, in the Holiest of all: Intimating, our Lords præparing His Way into Heaven, by His Prayer, in the Seventeenth of John. Again, The Incense was to bee beaten small; Intimating the Contrition, & Agony of Heart, wherewith our Lord, pray'd unto His Father. Once more, Hee took a Censer full of Burning Coals, from off the Altar, to kindle the Incense; Intimating, the Spirit of God, which inflamed the Affections of our praying Lord. Moreover, The Cloud of Incense was to Cover the Mercy-Seat, that hee dy not. If wee think to behold the Mercy-Seat, without the Cloud of Incense, wee dy. It is the Death of many a Soul, that in the Day, when they are afflicting themselves for Sin, they think, that God is merciful, & they cry to God for Mercy, but they do not look up to the Mercy-Seat, as covered with the Incense of the Mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ. [44v]

Hereupon, The Priest was to Sprinkle the Blood, upon the Mercy-Seat, eastward; that is, upon the Fore-Part of it. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ, with His own Blood, hath entred into Heaven for us, to make Way for us, to come thither also. [Heb. 9.7, 11, 12. Heb. 10.19, 20.] But this Blood must bee sprinkled Seven Times; which notes a perfect & copious Application.³⁹

Secondly, There were to bee Offerings for the People.⁴⁰

There was to bee, a Ram, for a Burn-Offering. About this, the common Rules were observed.

But there were to bee also, Two Goats for a Sin-Offering.

Here, in general, They were to cast Lotts on these two Goats. Now, a Lott is a Referring of a Thing, by an Appeal, to a Determination of Providence. Nor was it without a Special Hand of Providence, that our Lord Jesus Christ was to Dy. But it is thought, that these two Goats, a Slain Goat, and a Scape-Goat, One was to shadow, Christ, as Dying for our Offences, another was to shadow Christ, as Rising for our Justification.

More particularly; The Actions about the Slain Goat, were these.

The Blood thereof was to bee Sprinkled, upon & before the Mercy-Seat. This was to Represent the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, as making Way, for Him & us, into Heaven.

Hereby Atonement was made, for the Holy Place, for the Tabernacle, because of the Uncleanness of the Children of Israel. This teaches us, the Defilement, ³⁹ Samuel Mather (453, 454).

⁴⁰ Samuel Mather (455).

cleaving to the very Ordinances of God, & our Holy Services, thro' our being exercised in them. If the Ordinances themselves, bee not sprinkled with the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, they never could bee Accepted, or Effectual.

The Priest must Enter Alone, into the Holy Place, in this Transaction. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ was Alone, in the Work of our Redemption: Horrible the Sin of the Papists, to join other Mediators with Him.

The Priest was to go out, from the Brass Altar of Offerings, to the Golden Altar of Incense, and Atoned it, by putting the Blood of the Sin-Offering upon the Horns thereof. This was to intimate, That the Intercession of our Lord, is founded in His Oblation. To separate the one from the other, is to Divide what God hath joined. It also intimates, That our Prayers, come to bee Accepted, thro' the Sprinkling of the Blood of the Lord.⁴¹

The Actions about the Scape-Goat, were these.⁴²

The Priest was to confess their Sins over the Head of the Scape-Goat. Thus are wee to confess our Sins, over the Head of a Dying Saviour, on whom God hath laid the Iniquity of us all.

The Scape-Goat then carried their Sins afar off, into the Land of Oblivion. A most lively Shadow, of the Great Mystery of the Pardon of Sin. [See Psal. 103.12. and Jer. 50.20.]

The High-Priest was now to go into the Tabernacle, & change his Raiment, and wash his Body, & so come forth, and offer the Burnt-Offering, & burn the Fatt of the Sin-Offering, according to the Ordinances.

All these things are Illustrated, in our Account of the Sacrifices.

Hee that carried away the Scape-Goat, must wash his Cloathes, & so come into the Camp. This not only denotes the Imperfection of the Levitical Priesthood, but also instructs us of the Iniquity of our most Holy Actions.

The Sin-Offering of the slain Goat, was now to bee Burnt without the Camp. Thus our Lord suffered, without the Gate.

Now, on this Great Day of Atonement, was the Jubilee, to bee proclaimed by the Sound of Trumpett[s]. Thus, after the Work of Redemption, was performed by the Lord Jesus Christ, Hee caused the Trumpett of the Gospel to sound, publishing & proclaiming the Glad Tidings of our Salvation, throughout the World. And it is the Performance of the Work of Redemption, that is a Foundation of the Preaching of the Gospel.

Lastly; This Day of Atonement, is a Day of Humiliation, for Afflicting of their Souls. Dayes of Humiliation are Dayes of Reconciliation. The Affliction. of our Souls, fitts us to Receive Atonement.⁴³

But where these Five, all the yearly Feasts under the Law?⁴⁴

There seem no more to have been of Divine Appointment, that were Perpetual and Religious.

The Solemn Feast of Solomon, at the Dedication of the Temple, was not a standing yearly Festival.

They had also their Fasts of the Fifth & the Seventh Month. [Zech. 7. 3, 5.] But these were only Temporary. The Calamity of the Captivity occasioned them; they ceased when the Sorrowes of that were over.

| There were likewise the Dayes of Purim, [Est. 9.21, 22.] annually kept on the Fourteenth and Fifteenth of Adar. But this Feast seems only a political Constitution. Peculiar Sacrifices were appointed for all the Holy Festivals; but none for This. And there is nothing but Civil Rejoicing, mentioned as the Way of celebrating it. If it were a Religious Feast, wee must suppose that Mordecai had a Revelation from Heaven about it. [45r]

Wee read of Two Feasts more appointed in the Time of the Maccabees; One for the Dedication of the Altar, another for the Purification of the Temple. It is to bee doubted, that these were unwarrantable.

These were the Israelitish Holidayes. Two other Holy Times, occurred among them; New Moons, and Sabbaths.

They began their Months, at the New Moons, which they solemnized, with an Holy Convocation, Abstaining from the business of their Callings. [Amos. 8.5.] Repairing to the Prophets, for Instruction in the Word of God, [2. King. 4.23.] Blowing of Trumpetts, [Num. 10.10.] And offering peculiar Sacrifices; [Num. 28.11.] whereto wee may add, Solemn Feasts of Amity. [1. Sam. 20.5, 6.]

Doubtless, there was an Evangelical Mystery in these Institutions.

Wee were here taught, the Acknowledgment of God, in the Revolutions, & Renovations of His Creatures. Yea, God is to {be} bless'd even at the New Moon, when there is Least of the Creature to bee seen; & in the Least of Mercies. But Renovations in a Way of Grace, are especially to bee acknowledged. The Church is compared unto the Moon, which borrowes her Light, from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Sun of Righteousness. When the Church ha's a New Face of Reformation, beginning upon it, God is therein to bee glorified. And now, under the Gospel, the Illuminated Church, is to abound in the spiritual Exercises, that are the Antitype, of what was done at the New Moons. Moreover, If wee reckon from the Feast of Tabernacles, Thirty Eight Weeks backward, it brings us to the Change of the Moon; at which, wee know, there is a Conjunction of those two great Luminaries, the Sun and the Moon. Might not here bee a Shadow of the Conjunction of the Two Natures of our Lord, in one Person, at His Conception.⁴⁵

They had also their Sabbaths.⁴⁶

The weekly Sabbath was to be a thing of perpetual Observation. But yett, the Time for the weekly Sabbath, whereto the Jewes were directed, had something in it ceremonial. It was a Commemoration of their Deliverance from the Bondage of Egypt. And it might præfigure the Rest of the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ in His Grave, on this very Day. There were more Sacrifices on this Day, than on other Dayes: To teach us, the special Degree of Holiness, that should on the Sabbath bee endeavoured. They might not then build the Tabernacle; To Teach us, That in this Life, wee have our only Opportunity to do any Work about our Salvation. Manna might not then bee gathered; To Teach us, That Offers of Christ, end with this Life.⁴⁷

Besides the weekly Sabbaths, there was the Sabbatical Year. Such was every Seventh Year, in which the Land was to Rest from its usual Husbandry. [Lev. 25. 4, 5.] This plainly told, That the Land was the Lords; and it instructed them to depend upon Divine Providence for Supply and Support. And because the Poor were not to Eat, what the Land yeilded, and Creditors were now to Release their Debtors, the great Lessons of Bounty & Mercy, were thus inculcated.

The Mystery of Rest by Christ, was taught also by the Sabbatical Year.

But especially, by the Jubilee, which was a Third sort of Sabbaths; a famous Year, that recurred after Seven Sabbaths of Years. [Lev. 25.9.] On this Year, was a general Redemption of such as were in any sort of Bonds. A Notable Shadow of Redemption by our Lord Jesus Christ. [Compare, Isa. 61.1.]

And the Sounding of the Trumpet this Year, to proclame Redemption, leads us to the Great Trumpet of the Gospel [Isa. 27. ult.]

But that which renders this Matter the more observable, is, That the Death of our Lord Jesus Christ, very probably fell out, upon the Year of Jubilee.

Israel came out of Egypt, about A. M. 2513. They were Forty Years in the Wilderness, & Six or Seven in Conquering of Canaan. Then began their Sabbatical Year; From whence, Twenty Eight Jubilees, bring us to A. M. 3960. the Year of the Death of our Lord.⁴⁸

It is now time for mee to acknowledge, that in these Illustrations, the Discourses of my Uncle Mr. Samuel Mather, on the Types of the Old Testament, have not a little assisted mee.⁴⁹

⁴⁷ Samuel Mather (444, 445).

⁴⁸ Samuel Mather's dates (in Figures or Types 448) for the year of the world A. M. (Anno Mundi) differ from those of James Ussher, who sets the year of Christ's crucifixion at A. M. 4037 (Annals of the World [1660], p. 835). The Chronologia Sacra of Ludovicus Cappellus – erudite and detailed though it is – juxtaposes the chronology of the Hebrew, LXX, and Samaritan version of the Torah but offers alternative numbers (Table XI), in Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (6:20–24, sep. pag.). Q. After what Manner was that Law observed, Three times in a Year all thy Males shall appear before the Lord God? v. 17.

A. Grotius, on Luk. 2.41. conjectures, That the People in every town divided themselves into three Parts; and so, taking their Turns for the Three Times, they appeared at Jerusalem; one Part at one Time, appear'd; another at another, & so in a Year, they all appeared. Nevertheless, whenever any Third was to make their Appearance, any Devout & Pious Person, of any other Third, was at Liberty to make their Appearance also. And the Godly Women, tho' the Law said nothing of them, did Propriâ Religione, make their Visits unto the Temple, once a Year; which was usually at the Passeover.⁵⁰

Q. What was the True Intention, and Original of that Law, no less than Three Times inculcated, Thou shalt not see the a Kid [or, a Lamb, for the Word signifies both] in its Mothers Milk? v. 19.

A. I must consent unto the great Bochart, That Vix ulla sit Lex in toto Pentateucho de cujus sensu minus constet. However, Waving the more Ordinary and Allegorical Fancies of common Interpreters, I will give you as fair an Exposition, as I can.⁵¹

Know then, That a certain Superstitious, Idolatrous, and Magical Rite used among the Ancient Zabians, is herein prohibited. A Goat, was alwayes of special Use, in Sacrifices to the Divel, who usually appeared in some Hircine Form unto his Votaries; and such an Unnatural Mixture, as a Kid in its Mothers Milk, was yett a more agreeable Sacrifice unto a Demon. For which Cause, the Jewes to this Day, do with so much Exactness avoid, all Communion with this Rite, that at their Tables, Flesh and Milk, must not bee seasoned with the same Salt; nor Flesh and Cheese cutt with the same Knife.⁵² complained to his brother Increase Mather in Boston, "It is an imperfect work, being for the most part taken out of his owne notes, onely in some places filled up from his broken scraps of paper, or some other ways, which cost mee considerable payns, as also the correcting the press will doe." In "Nathaniel Mather to Increase Mather, May 31 [1683]," The Mather Papers (1868), p. 45.

⁵⁰ Hugo Grotius, Annotationes: Lucam (356), in Opera Omnia (1679), tom. 2, vol. 1, 356.

⁵² Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:435–37) and Works (5:162–67) provides the best

Know, Secondly, That in the Use of this Magical Rite, the Flesh of the Kid was not only Seethed, but also Eaten: which both Maimonides & Aquinas have long since intimated. The Jewish Expositors take this for granted; and hence also, this Law occurs once among the Lawes, about Unclean Meats. [Deut. 14. 19, 21.] Moreover, the Kid-Flesh, thus præpared, was probably meant, in Isa. 66.17. In the Gardens, they eat Swines Flesh, and the ABOMINATION, and the Mouse: And in Isa. 65.4. The Brothe of Abominable Things is in their Vessels. This Diabolical Kid-Flesh is doubtless meant, in those Passages, The Abomination, and, Abominable Things. And besides, To Eat Part of the Sacrifice was ever esteemed, a Sacrament of Communion with the Deity Sacrificed unto.⁵³

Know, Thirdly, A main Stroke, in this Magical, was to take the Milk, thus boiled, and sprinkle of it, upon Fields or Trees, for the rendring of them Fruitful, in the Year ensuing. There is a notable Testimony of this Custome, in R. Menachem, as well as in Maimonides; and the Paraphrase of Jonathan upon this Place, may have some reference unto it; for, hee adds, Ne Irascatur Furor meus, et coquam Proventum Vestrum, Frumentum et Paleam Simul. q.d.⁵⁴ lest I disappoint your Expectations, by sending the Plagues of Sterility upon you. It is therefore observable, That this Order is here Introduced, upon the Lords requiring of the survey of the entire debate on this Mosaic proscription (Exod. 23:19). The majority of the classic rabbinic and early modern Christian commentators appear to follow Maimonides's argument (Guide 3.48.599) that seething a kid in its mother's milk was an ancient Zabian (Sabian) fertility and harvest rite and was therefore an idolatrous (if not magical) practice outlawed by God; others, however, interpret it as a prohibition against cruelty to animals (esp. unweaned kids), but that argument does not hold (some objected) since sacrificing a suckling lamb to God was specifically allowed (1 Sam. 7:9; Exod. 22:30; Lev. 22:27); a third group, addressing the culinary practices of the Fertile Crescent, read this stipulation as a dietary law against uncleanness. See tractate Kaspā (ch. 5), in Mekhilta De Rabbi Ishmael (2:486–92). For modern discussion of the Zabians (Sabians), see J. Elukin's "Maimonides" and G. G. Stroumsa's "John Spencer." The designation "Zabian," interchangeably spelled "Sabian," is best translated as "pagan" (gentile). Sabian is variously claimed to be an "invention" of Maimonides (Guide 3.29–30.514–23), whose study of the Chaldean/Syriac book The Nabatean Agriculture (al-Filāḥa an-Nabaṭiyya) – believed to be translated into Arabic in 904 by Ibn Waḥshiyya, aka. Abū Bakr 'Aḥmad bin 'Alī (fl. 9th–10th c. CE) – provided Maimonides with the grounds and reasons why Moses instituted certain ritual laws to combat pervasive Sabian idolatry, i. e., sexual fertility rites. On the significance of this work, see Jaakko Hämeen-Anttila's The Last Pagans of Iraq (2006) and Ibn Waḥshiyyah, in The Filāḥa Texts Project.

53 Mather refers to Maimonides's More Nebuchim (1629), 3.48.496, and to Hilchot Ma'achalot Assurot (9.1–3), in Mishneh Torah (26:368–70); Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologica (2:1060, 1079, pt. 1–2, Q.102, A3, Reply Obj. 11; A6, Reply Obj. 4); see also Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 8, sec. 2, fols. 303, 306.

54 Via Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 8, sec. 2, fol. 305, Mather refers to the Sephardic Torah scholar, R. Menachem Ben Aharon ibn Zerach (c. 1306–c. 1374) of Navarre (Spain), whose צֶדֶה לְדֶרֶךְ [Tzedah LaDerech], i. e., Provision for the Way, is a renowned study of Jewish law. The passage on ritual law appears in an undated 4^o edition (fol. 83, col. 2), published in Savionet (Ferrara, 1554). CBTEL. Maimonides (Guide 3.48.599). The Latin passage from Targum Jonathan ben Uzziel, on Exod. 23:19 (Walton, Synopsis Criticorum 4:146) can be rendered, "[Do] not [make] me angry, lest I will cook for you wheat and chaff with your food."

First-fruits to be annually paid unto Him; – which Tostatus remarks, by subjoining this Reason, by Way of Paraphrase upon it; Nam tanta erit Frugum Copia, quòd Ritus ille non erit Necessarius.⁵⁵ Indeed, it still follows upon the Feast of Tabernacles; at which Time of the Year, the Idolaters of those Dayes did use to seek propitious | Influences for the Year ensuing; and God had commanded {that} Kids at that very Festival, after another Manner, to be offered unto Himself. To confirm all; Wee find full Evidence, That the Old Pagan, Roman Husbandmen, had an Usage not much unlike to This among them, after the In-gathering of their Fruits. Then, saith Horace: (Ep. Li. 2. Ep. 1.) [46v]

Tellurem Porcà, Sylvanum Lacte piabant.⁵⁶

The Words of Abulensis hereupon, are considerable; Gentiles, ut Sylvanum (quem Sylvis et campis præponebant) placatum haberent, ad habendam frugum multitudinem, ei lac, prout et porcum Cereri, offerebant. Utrum autem in illo lacte, quod Sylvano offerebatur, Hædus aut Agnus, coqueretur, non constat è Libris Poeticis, sed satis est verisimile.⁵⁷ And famous is the Distich of Ovid: (Fast. L.4. v. 742.)

Adde Dapes, mulctramque suas, dapibusque refectus

Silvicolam tepido Lacte precare Palem.

They bespoke the favour of Pales to their Husbandry, by Dapes cum Lacte Tepido.⁵⁸ Furthermore, Tis well-known, what Figure, Milk and Kid, had in the Sacrifices of Bacchus. Yea, At this very Day, in Guinea, the poor Salvages, have a Boild Kid, after they have Tilled their Ground; whereto inviting one another, they then walk over their Ground, with songs to their God Fatesso for the Prosperity of their Husbandry.⁵⁹

55 The Latin passage is adapted (via Spencer 305) from Commentaria in Primam Partem Exodi (1596), Quaestio XXXVI (super Exodi XXIII), p. 266v, by Alphonsus Tostatus Abulensis, aka. Alonso Tostado (c. 1400–55), bishop of Avila. Tostatus's paraphrase reads, "There shall be such an abundance of harvests so that this rite will not be indispensable."

56 The second-hand quotation from Horace's Epistola (2.143), which reads, "by propitiating the Earth with a pig, Silvanus with milk," is extracted from John Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 8, sec. 2, fol. 306.

57 The second-hand citation from Alphonsus Tostatus Abulensis (via Spencer 306) is adapted from Tostatus's Commentaria in Primam Partem Exodi (1596), Quaestio XXXVII (super Exodi XXIII), p. 266v: "Gentiles, to keep Sylvanus placated (whom they considered in charge of the management of forests and fields) so as to have bountiful harvests, we used to offer him milk and, proportionately, a pig to Ceres. However, there is no agreement in the poetic books whether a kidskin or lamb would be cooked in the milk offered to Sylvanus, but it is quite plausible."

58 Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 8, sec. 3, fol. 308. In Fasti (4.745–46), Ovid has the poet entreat shepherds to offer sacrifices to Pales (goddess of shepherds): "Add viands and a pail of milk, such as she loves; and when the viands have been cut up, pray to sylvan Pales, offering warm milk to her." As Mather puts it, the ancient shepherds and husbandmen curried Pales's favor by offering a "sacrifice of warm milk."

59 Via Spencer (308), Mather paraphrases a passage from an anonymous travel account to Africa, The Golden Coast, or A Description of Guinney (1665), [ch. 1], p. 14. For an anthropological, folkloristic interpretation of the Mosaic proscription against seething a kid in its mother's milk, see Sir J. G. Q. The Lord saies, Behold, I send an Angel before thee. What Angel? v. 20.

A. The Words do seem here to come in very abruptly. But it may be, (as Mr. Robert Fleming thinks) they should come in at the Twelfth verse of the Thirty Third Chapter.⁶⁰

Moses begs of God, that He would lett him know, what Angel or Messenger He would send along with him, under whose Conduct he should lead the People. He receives this Answer, That His Presence, [or, Face,] should go along with him, to give them Rest. Onkelos renders this, The Shechinah, or Majesty of God. Moses answers, If thy Face, [Thy Shechinah, or thyself,] go not with us, carry us not up hence. God accordingly answers; That He would grant his Desire.⁶¹

Now, why may not the Angel, in the Twenty Third Chapter, be the same with the Presence, in the Thirty Third Chapter? The Angel of Gods Presence. Compare, Isa. 63.9.

What other Angel can be said, to have the Name of God in Him, or be one with God? who else can punish Rebellion as he pleases? who else was to be obey'd, on Peril of the Divine Displeasure? who else, could lead the People into Canaan, & subdue their Enemies there?

Is it not in reference to what we read here, concerning this Angel, that Moses tells the People? Deut. 7.21. The Lord their God was among them, a mighty & a terrible God. Compare, Josh. 24. 16, 17.

You will also find, That He who is called JEHOVAH, [Exod. 13.21. and 14.19.] even He, who went before the Camp of Israel, in a Pillar of Cloud and Fire, is called also, The Angel of JEHOVAH. And so He is by Stephen. [Act. 7.38, 39.] And the Apostle asserts, That this Angel of the Lord, was CHRIST. [1. Cor. 10.9.]⁶²

But notwithstanding all this, I will take the Leave, to lay before your Consideration, another Illustration of this Text, which was made as long ago, as Eusebius, in his Demonstratio Evangelica, and given as the Sense of the Church in those Days. He saies, That as Moses gave (by Commission from God, and as Figurative & Prophetical) the Title of CHRIST, [or, The Anointed One,] unto Aaron, who sustained the Priestly Office, thus he gave the Title of JESUS [or, ⁶⁰ Robert Fleming, Christology. A Discourse concerning Christ (1705), vol. 1, bk. 2, ch. 6, pp. 230–32 (n).

⁶² Fleming, Christology (1705), 1:230–32 (n).

Joshua, a Saviour,] to him that succeeded in the Kingly Office. It is plain, He was first called, Oshea, [Num. 13.8, 16.] But Moses foreseeing the Office of the Messiah expressed in this Name, adds a Jod, the first Letter of the Name, of Jehovah unto it, and calls him, Jehoshua, or, Jah-Oshea; As if He would have said, This is a Type of that Saviour, whose Name shall be Jah, or, Jehovah.⁶³

The Time of thus changing the Name of Joshua, is not mentioned. But probably, it was upon the Occasion of his Defeating the Amalekites; than | which [47v] there could be nothing more Typical of our Lords Victory over the Enemies of our Salvation; And it was a Pledge of the Victory over the Canaanites.

Now, according to Eusebius, the Angel here spoken of, is in the Literal Sense no other than Joshua, the Successor of Moses; whom the Israelites are commanded to honour and follow, with an exact Obedience, because he bare the Same Name, that He Himself was to be known by, when He should Assume our Nature.⁶⁴

If this be the Sense of it, then we may add, that the Meaning of those Words, [He will not pardon your Sins, or, He will not suffer your Rebellion to go unpunished,] will be This; That Joshua having only the Executive Power of Lawes already made, committed unto him, and not being under the Character of a Temporary Mediator, as Moses was, would not have the same Opportunity to go up into the Mount, or into the Immediate Presence of God, to plead with Him, for the Sparing of the People when they should Sin, as Moses had.

Then what followes, is easily understood. If the People did obey Joshua, as the Angel, or Messenger of God, he should indeed be a Temporary Saviour unto them; and then God Himself would go along with him and them, and consume all their Enemies before them.

Quære. Whether both of these Interpretations may not well enough go together; the former, as the Ultimate, and the Antitypical; the latter, as the Literal, and the Immediate?⁶⁵

A further Consideration?

Dr. Patrick saies, That tho' a great many Christians, think this to be an In-created Angel, the Eternal Son of God; he is himself afraid to assert it. It seems dangerous unto him, to call him simply an Angel, a Minister, or Messenger, without some such Addition as that; III. Mal. 3. The Angel of the Covenant. So He was at His Incarnation; Before which, he dare not ascribe unto our Lord, such ministerial Works as those of going before Israel, to lead them the Way to Canaan. This was properly the Work of an Angel; To whom therefore Moses attributes it: XX. Num. 16. This Angel, was a prime Minister in the Heavenly Host, by whom he was accompanied. So he saith to Joshua; ch. V. 14. I am come as Captain of the Host of the LORD; which is the very Title of Michael, [Dan. X. 13, 21.]

This does not exclude the Presence of the LORD Himself, but rather confirm it. For this Angel, & his Host, was sent from the Shechinah; which was in the Pillar of Cloud.⁶⁶

Mr. Pyles thinks, That the Angel offered by GOD, for the Guardianship of Israel, might be the same Angel, that smote the First-born of Egypt, and by whose Voice the Ten Commandments were delivered.⁶⁷

Q. Here are but Six Nations mentioned. Where's the Seventh? v. 23.

A. Some have conjectured, That the Gergasites, who are here omitted, had been subdued by the Amorites, & were mixed with them; who were the most powerful of all the VII Nations, & had spread themselves into many Parts of the Countrey. [see Gen. 14.13. Num. 13.29. Deut. 1.7, 19, 44.]⁶⁸

Q. The Fulfilment of that Word; I will sent Hornets before thee? v. 28.

A. Either before they came thither, or when they marched against the People of that Countrey.⁶⁹

Dr. Patrick thinks, Both may be true. Many of them were forced to quitt their Countrey, when it was infested by the Hornetts, which God sent in great

Swarms among them. And they who remained, when they came to fight, were assaulted by these Hornets, which flew in their faces, and so sorely prick't their Eyes (as Kimchi, and R. Solomon take it,) that they could not see to strike a Stroke. Whence these Words | of Joshua, who expressly saies, That this was fulfilled, XXIV. 12. That the Amorites were not driven out by the Sword and Bow of the Israelites, but by the Sting of these Hornets. They seem also, to have pursued them, when they fled away, & killed them in their lurking Holes, where they hid themselves after the Fight. [Deut. 7.20.]⁷⁰ [48v]

That several Nations have been driven out of their Countrey, by such contemptible Creatures, as Frogs, and Mice, and Snakes, and Gnatts, is made good by Bochart, out of several Authors. And he ha's particularly shown, That by Wasps and Bees, People have been forced even to forsake their Countrey: as Herodotus, and Appian, and Strabo, testify. He shoves also, that the Sting of an Hornet, is of all other the most pernicious. It is bigger than the ordinary Wasp; & fiercer. Pliny saies, It seldome stings without putting Men into a Fever. And of Hornets flying in Mens Eyes particularly, good Authors have many Surprising Passages.⁷¹

Q. Thou shalt make no Covenant with them.] v. 32.

A. Maimonides is of Opinion, That such of the VII Nations as Renounced Idolatry, were to be received into their Friendship.⁷² The Law [Deut. XX.] of sending a Summons to the besieged, with an Offer of Peace, he extends unto them. [see Josh. XI.19, 20.] It may be objected, what need had the Gibeonites then of any Craft, to obtain a League with the Israelites? His Answer is, That Joshua had sent a Summons, with Offers of Peace, to them, and all the rest: which they Rejected, but afterwards would gladly have Accepted; and then it was not to be Admitted. Therefore they contrived that cunning Way, to be received into Friendship with the Israelites. Consult Cuneus, L. II. de Rep. Hebr. c. 20. And, Selden, L. VI. Solomon Jarchi, aka. Rashi (Commentarius Hebraicus [1710], p. 619. Rashi believes that the Hebrew term צִרְעָה [tsir'ah] (Strong's # 6880), generally rendered "hornet," was either a kind of reptile or an aggressive insect. Ibn Ezra believes it was a "disease of the body" (JPS Migra'ot Gedolot 2:205).

⁷¹ Samuel Bochart (Hierozoicon [1663], pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 13, cols. 541) seems to have the last word on whether this insect was a particularly pesky wasp or hornet, by citing Herodotus's skeptical testimony (5.10.2–3) that according to the Thracians, bees are so thick N of the Ister (Danube) that no one can travel there; Appian (Bellum civile 2.68) reports that a swarm of bees settled on the altar upon which Pompey was sacrificing; and Pliny (Natural History 11.24) reports that a hornet sting causes fever, and twenty-seven stings can kill a man.

out of the Jerusalem Gemara, which saies, That Joshua sent Three Letters to the Gibeonites.⁷³

Dr. Patrick is inclinable to the Opinion of Maimonides. The Place in Joshua favours it. So does the Story of Rahab & so the Practice of Solomon, who only putt the Remainder of these Nations under Tribute. [1. King. IX.20, 21.]⁷⁴

⁷³ Patrick (Exodus 460); Mather has in mind Petrus Cunaeus, De Republica Hebraeorum (1617), lib. 2, cap. 20, pp. 299–301, by the Dutch Christian Hebraist Petrus Cunaeus, aka. Peter van der Kun (1586–1638). With Maimonides to back him up, Cunaeus argues that the Israelites had indeed offered peace to the Gibeonites. However, after this Canaanite tribe had rejected the peace offering, Joshua had them all exterminated, in part because the Gibeonites allegedly practiced incest against which custom the Israelites were to safeguard themselves. See Cunaeus (Hebrew Republic 131). John Selden, De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 6, cap. 13, p. 736, quotes from R. Samuel ben Nachman's commentary on the three letters Joshua sent to the Gibeonites, in tractate Shebi'it (6.III.8E) of The Jerusalem Talmud.

Q. Wee find mention here, & elsewhere, of, The Seventy Elders of Israel; what Remarkable Event concerning the Scripture, ha's appeared circumstanced with that Number unto us, on the Occasion of the Seventy Elders? v. 1.

A. There was a famous Translation of the Old Testament, into the Greek Tongue. I suppose, the utmost, that we have certain concerning it, is, That Ptolomy, surnamed, Philadelphus, the King of Egypt, was gratified by Eleazar the High Priest, with sending him Five of the Seventy Elders, to form such a Translation.¹ Whether what we now have in our Hands be That, is very uncertain; and it is not certainly concluded, How large a Portion, (whether any more than the Pentateuch;) was then translated. But then, you know, what famous Fables we have, about the LXX, [or LXXII] Interpreters; tho' as Zuinglius writes, we may as well say, Seven Thousand.² The Fables of their Separation, in Seventy Cells, and yett their exact Harmony & Agreement in their Work, dispatching it in Seventy (or 72) dayes, have been Imposed on credulous Antiquity, and been as much beleev'd, as that of the Fish Remora stopping a Ship.³ I will not ostentate my little Reading, with a thousand Quotations about these things; but only tell you, that Heinsius, in his Aristarchus,⁴ conjectures the Original of the Fables concerning the Seventy Interpreters; to have been from the very Text that is now

1 Mather refers to the famous "Letter of Aristeas" (Old Testament Pseudepigrapha 2:12–34), ostensibly written by Aristeas (3rd c. BCE–1st c. CE), an Alexandrian Jew, to his brother Philocrates, during the reign of Ptolemy II (285–247 BCE), king of Egypt. According to this legendary account, the Egyptian ruler instructed his librarian Demetrius of Phalerum to amass copies of all the books in the world for his royal library in Alexandria. Accordingly, Demetrius sent a missive to the high priest at Jerusalem, and six scholars of each of the twelve tribes were sent to Alexandria to translate the Hebrew Bible into Greek. Legend has it, this feat was accomplished by seventy-two translators in exactly seventy-two days – miraculously developing seventy-two identical translations. See ABD (5:1096): "Septuagint: C." See also Bonaventura Cornelius Bertram's De Republica Ebraeorum (1641), ch. 6, pp. 62–70.

2 Ulrich Zwingli, aka. Huldreich Zwingli (1484–1531), Swiss Reformer and professor of OT at Zurich, was highly critical of the trustworthiness of Aristeas's account and wanted to put an end to such fabulous stories: "if we claimed something occurred in a miraculous way, the lying would have no end." Quoted in H. Graf Reventlow, History of Biblical Interpretation (3:109).

3 Remora brachyptera (Fam. Echeneidae: suckerfish or sharksucker). Pliny (Natural History 32.1.3–6) relates how such a Remora (Lat. re + morari; i.e., to delay) "stopped the flagship of [Marcus] Antonius" at Actium and "stayed the ship of the Emperor Gaius as he was sailing back from Astura to Antium." It seems that Melville's white whale and Capt. Ahab's Pequod have nothing on Pliny's fishy tale.

4 Dutch classical scholar extraordinaire, Daniel Heinsius (1580–1655) was professor of Latin, Greek, and poetics at Leiden University. Mather refers to Heinsius, Aristarchus Sacer, sive Exercitationes ad Nonni in Iohannem Metaphrasin (1627), "Exercitationes Sacrae," ch. 10, pp. 206–08.

before us; And whereas, tis added, v. 11. οὐ διεφώνησεν οὐδὲ εἷς· hence came the Fables of their Symphony.⁵

It must also be Remembred, That the Jewes are alwayes to be suspected of Romances, when the Number Seventy, comes into their Discourses: Their Fancies do strangely luxuriate upon that Number.⁶

Q. The Translation. v. 1.

A. Tis a Covenant. Moses personated GOD Himself. Aaron, his two Sons, & the Seventy Elders, represented the whole Congregation. GOD allow'd them to come into one of the Eminences in the Mount. A Monument was erected there as there uses to be on such Occasions: In the Twelve Stones, wherein the Twelve Tribes were answered. Sacrifices were offered; in which the Parties mutually subjected themselves unto the Punishment, inflicted on the Victim, if they proved unfaithful in the Covenant. Moses took the Blood, and sprinkled Part of it on the Altar, which represented the Deity; and Part of it on the People. At the same time, he took the Book, which contained the Clauses of the Treaty, or Covenant between GOD and the People; And he did as you Read. The Flesh of the Victims was eaten, as was usual on such Occasions; they Eat and Drank there. But that it might appear more evidently, that GOD was a Party to this Covenant, He gave them a sensible Token of His Presence. They saw the GOD of Israel, and there was under His Feet, as it were a paved Work of a Sapphire Stone. Monsr. Saurin thinks, this Token was præferr'd, because the Sapphire was the Emblem of the Royalty & the Priesthood, among the Egyptians. The Reasons may be seen in the Hieroglyphicks of Valerianus.⁷

Q. He took the Book.] Some have made it a Difficulty, to find what Book it was? v. 7.

5 Heinsius, Aristarchus Sacer (p. 207), quotes a phrase from Exod. 24:11 (LXX), which translates, “not even one missing.”

6 Signifying spiritual perfection, the number seventy is significant in several biblical instances: Gen. 10:1–32: the table of the seventy nations; Gen. 46:27: Jacob’s seventy family members entering Egypt; Exod. 24:9–10: the seventy elders who accompanied Moses on Mt. Sinai; Ps. 90:10: the seventy years of our lives; Luke 10:1: Christ’s seventy disciples; and the seventy members of the Great Sanhedrin. According to the Talmud, tractate Shabbath (88b), God’s every Word is “split up into seventy languages.” See also Talmud, tractates Sanhedrin (17a) and Sukkah (55b).

7 A close paraphrase of Jacques Saurin’s Dissertations (1723), “Diss. LII,” p. 440, Mather’s excerpt here alludes to the Italian Renaissance humanist Joannis Pierri Valeriani Bolzanij Belunensis, aka. Pierio Valeriano (1477–1558). In his Hieroglyphica, sive De Sacris Aegyptiorum, Aliarumque Gentium Literis (1678), lib. 41, cap. 38, pp. 520–21 (“Sapphirus”), Valeriano argues that one of the reasons why sapphires were esteemed among the ancients is that they believed the gem to be a celestial stone through which the gods restored power and esteem to its possessor. Valeriano’s popular work went through many editions until the early eighteenth century.

A. It plainly refers, to v. 4. Moses wrote all the Words of the Lord; that is, the Commandments and Statutes, and Judgments, in the Four foregoing Chapters. Tho' these made no great Volumn, yett they might be called, A Book, in the Language of the Hebrewes.⁸ For, even the Bill of Divorce, which they gave their Wives, (and was very short,) is called by the Name of, Sepher, A Book. [Deut. XXIV.1.]⁹

The Apostle [Heb. IX.19.] saies, He Sprinkled the Book, as well as the People; which is not here mentioned, but supposed. For, when he went to Sprinkle the Blood, we must conceive, that he laid down the Book, to be at more Liberty for this other Action. Perhaps, he laid it on one of the Twelve Pillars, where it was Sprinkled, as they were together with the People, whom they represented.¹⁰

Q. The Sprinkling of the Blood on the People? v. 8.

A. The, Twelve Pillars which represented the People, were Sprinkled.¹¹ Behold, A Figurative Speech: So the Bread is called, The Body of CHRIST.

⁸ There is considerable disagreement about what is included in this Book of the Covenant. Rashi, for one, appears to be most explicit about what is meant by Moses writing down all the words of God (Exod. 24:2–4, 7): ‘the command to separate [from their wives] and the setting up of boundaries [at Mount Sinai]; the seven mitzvos given to the descendants of Noah [as well as the mitzvos of:] Shabbos, honoring one’s parents, the red heifer, and administering justice which were given to them in Marah; Moshe wrote down [everything] from Bereishis [Genesis 1:1] until the giving of the Torah [Exod. 34:28] and he also wrote down the mitzvos that they were commanded at Marah’ (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi: Shemos 2:354, 356). R. Chizkiyahu ben R. Manoach (Exod. 24:7) clarifies this issue as follows: “It is well known that the Torah was not written in chronological sequential order. The Mekhilta d’Rabbi Yishmael, on the 19th chapter of the Book of Exodus, has proven this beyond any question.” For instance, in Leviticus 25:2, the Torah states “that the soil of the land of Israel is to observe a year of lying fallow, (immediately after the Israelites entering that land) and the Torah proceeds to list the laws pertaining to the shmittah cycles followed by the Jubilee cycles, concluding with [Lev.] 26, 46: ‘these are the statutes and social laws that G’d has given as applying to the Jewish people all of which He had revealed to Moses at Mount Sinai’” (Chizkuni 2:570). For the same, see Mekhilta D-Rabbi Ishmael (Exod. 19:10–17), tractate Bahodesh, ch. 3 (2:301–302). Abarbanel believes that Exod. 24:7 merely entails “what he [Moses] had written the night before (v. 3); he gave them a chance to sleep on it,” in JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot (2:209). Given this disagreement, it is perhaps not surprising that in the 17th c., the English philosopher Thomas Hobbes, the French Oratorian Richard Simon, the Dutch philosopher Baruch Spinoza, and his fellow countryman, the controversialist theologian Jean LeClerc (among others) – all claimed that Moses wrote little more than the Ten Commandments and only those (few) chapters of the whole Pentateuch in which he is specifically mentioned as writing things down. On this topic, see A Vindication of the Holy Bible (1723), bk. 3, ch. 1, pp. 157–75, by Cotton Mather’s brother, Samuel Mather, preacher in Witney (Oxfordshire). For Cotton Mather’s response to this challenge to the Mosaic authorship, see my discussion in “Cotton Mather: Theologian, Exegete, Controversialist” (BA 1:113–74).

Israel thus entering into covenant with GOD, their Elders draw near to Him; which could not have been done without Peril while they were out of Covenant.¹²

Q. On the Paved Work under the Feet? v. 10.

A. Nothing is described here, but what was under the Feet of GOD. For our Conceptions of the Glorious GOD are all below Him.¹³

Q. How may that Passage be understood, On the Nobles of Israel, He laid not His Hand? v. 11.

A. The Jewes understand it so; The Lord imparted not unto them the Gift of Prophecy, as He did unto Moses. But others carry it so; He did not slay them, according to that Rule, No Man shall See me and Live.¹⁴

To sett this whole Matter, in its true Light, The Shechinah, of the Divine Majesty, surrounded with an Heavenly Host of Angels, was now seen by the Elders of Israel. This Glorious Light, had no determinate Form, nor could it be described by any Art. The Feet, that is to say, the lower Part of it, rested, as it were, on a most glorious Pavement; like that Sapphire called, Χρυσοστιγῆς (whereof Salmasius, on Solinus) spotted with little Points of Gold, that shine like Stars interspersed in the Body of it.¹⁵ Briefly, The Glory of the Lord, appeared far above the Glory of the Sun, in its greatest Brightness; upon a Pavement sparkling like the Stars of Heaven, in its greatest Clearness. | So dazzling was the Splendor of that Glorious Light, that it was a singular Favour, it did not putt out their Eyes, ¹² Patrick, on Exod. 24:8 (Exodus 468).

¹⁴ Rashi believes that the leaders of Israel (Nadab, Abihu, and the elders) deserved punishment because “They looked at Him while engrossed in eating and drinking.” Nachmanides believes they were “authorized to see the vision that they saw, of God, and had not broken through to see ‘the Lord.’” Ibn Ezra thinks that because none of these leaders (except Moses) ‘had ever prophesied before, or seen God ... they lived and felt no fear.’ Chizkuni opines that “He did not send His hand” means that God “did not extend his prophecy to them, since they were busy eating and drinking.” Abarbanel agrees with Chizkuni, maintaining that Exod. 24:11 can be understood by way of a similar phrase in Ezek. 37:1 and therefore “‘The hand of the Lord came upon me,’ refers to prophecy, which the elders achieved but these leaders did not.” That is why the leaders who only saw God spiritually, not literally, did not need to avoid food, but could eat and drink as they celebrated” (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 2:210–11).

as the Light, wherein Paul saw our Saviour did unto His. We are told, v. 17. The Sight of the Glory of the Lord, was like Devouring Fire. This might putt them in fear, of being scorch'd by it, when it flash'd out upon them; but they did not find the least Hurt by it. No; Instead of that, they did Eat & Drink. After they had Seen God, they Feasted with Him, on the Reliques of the Peace-Offerings, with the greatest Gladness. Yea, we may suppose, the Glory of the Lord; shone on them, as they Satt down to Eat & Drink, in token of their full Consent unto the Covenant now made. [for so the Custome; Gen. 24.30. & 31.54.] And they continued to Finish their Feast; not being Dispirited, [as Good Men sometimes were, with their Visions; Dan. X.8, 16, 17.] but rather Strengthened, & made more Vigorous.

The Word, Saw, is not the same with that in the former Verse: intimating, that the Appearance lasted for some time.¹⁶

Q. When Moses went up into the Mount of God, for to Receive the Two Tables, hee was attended with Joshua; might there bee any Mystery in that Matter? v. 13.

A. Yes. When Moses went up to Receive the Two Tables, on which the Decalogue was written, hee was attended with Joshua. When hee received the other Præcepts, hee was attended with Aaron, & his Sons. It was to Import, that the Decalogue must bee observed under the Gospel, in the Times of Jesus, as well as Moses: The other Præcepts, only during the Priesthood of Aaron.

On this Occasion wee may add; An Ark was prepared for the Preservation of the Decalogue. No such Provision was made for the Ceremonial Law. The Ark where the Decalogue lay, was separated for many Years from the Tabernacle, where all the Ceremonial Service was performed; & never joined again, to that which was of Dauids Erection. David made a New Tent for it, at Jerusalem, leaving the Old at Gibeon; to shew, that when Moses's Tabernacle, with all the Ceremonial Constitutions were laid aside, and a more perfect Tabernacle erected, by the Son of David, the Ten Commandments would still retain their Vigour.¹⁷

Q. The Cloud covered it.] Covered what? v. 16.¹⁸

A. It covered the Glory of the Lord, not the Mount; as Aben-Ezra observes. The Cloud was not the Glory of the Lord; but compass'd and cover'd it. For Six Dayes nothing but the Cloud, appeared unto the Israelites; [perhaps, a Mystery in this, referring to the Millennium:] till on the Seventh Day, the Cloud was Rent, or Opened; and the Glory of the Lord, appear'd like Flaming Fire. Moses was all that while, hidden in the Cloud; wrapt up in Darkness; which might have astonish'd him, if God had not mightily supported him. On the Seventh Day, (which, some think, was the Sabbath;) the Glory broke out, and appear'd unto him. And the People then also saw it. To this the Psalmist alludes; Psal. 97.2, 3. Clouds and Darkness are round about Him, & Fire goes before Him. This Glory sometimes appearing in an amazing Brightness, beyond that of the Sun; & sometimes being wrapt up in a Thick Cloud; God is likewise said, both to Dwell in Light, and in Thick Darkness. [1. King. VIII.12.]¹⁹

Q. On that, The Cloud covered the Mount Six Dayes, & on the Seventh Day Moses is called up into it by God? v. 16.

A. 'Tis a glorious Type, of what shall be done for us in the Seventh Millennium.²⁰

Q. Moses was in the Mount, Forty Dayes and Forty Nights; How often did Moses Fast Forty Dayes? v. 18.

A. I'll give you Dr. Lightfoots Observation. It is a doubt, saies hee, of no small Import, seeing it pleased God, to appoint the Feast of Expiation, in that Month of the Year, when Sin came into the World, Hee did not also appoint on the same Day of the Month, namely, the Sixth rather than the Tenth.

Hee tells us, wee must observe the Fasts of Moses in the Mount; & from the Conclusion of the Last, wee shall see the Reason, why this Day is pitch'd upon.

That hee Fasted Thrice Forty Dayes, is not so frequently observed, as it may bee easily concluded, from his own Words.

The First Fast, occurs in the Text, now before us; and at the End of these Dayes, they make the Golden Calf.

The Second Fast, you have in Exod. 32.30. On the Morrow Moses said, Yee have Sinned a Great Sin, & now I will go up into the Mount. This is explained in Deut. 9.18. I fell down before the Lord, as at the first, Forty Dayes.

The Third Fast was, when hee went up, with the New Tables; in Exod. 34.28. And hee was there with the Lord, Forty Dayes.

All which, being reckoned from the Seventh of Sivan, the Day after the giving of the Ten Commandments, it will bee found, that this Last Fast, when hee had obtained Pardon for Israel, & the Tables Renewed, ended on the Tenth of Tisri, on which Day, hee came down with the glad Tidings of Reconciliation. In Memorial hereof, this Day was observed ever after, as the Feast of Expiation.²¹

Q. I observe, that for the Description of the whole World, Moses employes, but One or Two Chapters; whereas hee employes, it may bee, Seven Times as many Chapters in describing of that one little Pavilion, the Tabernacle. What may bee the Reason of this Difference? v. 1.¹

A. 'Tis to Teach us, in short, That the Church, wherein the Service of God is performed, is much more precious than the World; which was indeed created for the Sake & Use of the Church.

Q. We have the Description of the Ark, in this Chapter? v. 1.

A. It is a Remark of Monsr. Saurin upon it; It is pretty extraordinary, that we should give this wonderful Token of the Divine Presence, the Same Name with the Vessel which Noah built by the Order of GOD. It would not be easy to find any One Word, that should signify Two such Different Things. The Ark of Noah was a sort of a Ship, that was made for the holding of him, & his Family, & all Animals that live in the Air, and Food for their Subsistence. The Ark of the Most Holy Place was a Coffre, or a Chest. There is no Similitude between these Two Things. The Hebrew Terms, which the Sacred History has made use of, to express them, have not the least Analogy. It was the Version which we ascribe to the LXX, which assign'd the same Name of Κιβωτός, to both of these. And this has led us all into it.²

² Jacques Saurin, Dissertations (1723), "Diss. LIV," p. 482. In the Septuagint, the term κιβωτός (Gen. 6:14; Exod. 25:9[10]) is used both to designate Noah's ark and Moses' ark, i. e., chest, coffre, or box. Mather offers much the same typological reading in his Work upon the Ark. Meditations upon the Ark as a Type of the Church (1689).

Q. Wee read, That for the Covering of the Tabernacle, there were employ'd, Rams Skins died red, and Badgers Skins; what were the Badgers, which thus afforded their Skins unto the Tabernacle? v. 5.

A. None at all!

The Hebrew Name /תחש/ Thachas, which we translate, A Badger, is not the Name of a Creature, but of a Colour, as the learned Bochart ha's fully demonstrated.³

The Jewes are at a Loss, what Creature to advance unto the Honour of being here intended; some say, a Badger, some a Ferret, some, I know not what; until at last their Doctors come to say, Tachas, qui fuit Mosis ævo, creatura fuit specialis, de quâ Sapientes non definiverunt, utrum domestica fuerit Bestia, an Fera. Habuit autem in Fronte, Cornu Unicum, et cum oblata est Mosi, is ex illa fecit Tabernaculum, Deindè occultata est; It was a Creature it seems, that vanished out of the World, as soon as the Tabernacle was finished.⁴

The Name Taxus, was first used in Translating the Hebrew Name Thachas, as far as we understand, in the Seventh or Eighth Century, by the Author of the Book, De Mirabilibus Scriptura.⁵ But the Skins of Badgers are not fitt for such Uses, as the Thachas Skins are here putt unto. And it is certain, That all the more

3 Samuel Bochart, Hierozaicon (1663), lib. 3, cap. 30, cols. 985–92, is the prime source for this and many other biblical topics during Mather's lifetime. The Hebrew word תחש [tachash] (Strong's # 8476) variously signifies "a kind of leather, skin, or animal hide 1a) perhaps the animal yielding the skin 1b) perhaps the badger, or dugong dolphin, or sheep." The term is shrouded in mystery and has occupied many scholars over the millennia (Poole, Synopsis Criticorum 1:443–45). Even Rashi speculates that Tachashim signifies "a species of animal that existed only for a [short] time, and it had many hues" (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 2:409a). According to Midrash Tanchuma (Shemos 25:5), a dispute arose between Rabbis Yehudah and Nechemyah. The former insisted, "There was a large kosher creature in the wilderness which had a single horn in the center of its forehead, and its skin had six different hues, which they [Israelites] took and made into drapes"; the latter retorted that the animal was miraculously "created for a short moment, and it was immediately hidden away" (Metsudah Midrash Tanchuma Shemos 2:115).

4 Bochart (col. 988) does not identify the source of the Latin passage, which is most likely derived from a similar explication in Midrash Tanchuma (see preceding note). The term תחש [tachash] is variously defined by R. Nathan ben Jehiel (1035–c. 1110), in his Baal Aruch, an etymological dictionary of the Talmud and Midrash, by the Italian R. Nathan ben Jehiel (1035–c. 1110). This work is also one of the sources of Sebastian Münster's oft-reprinted השורשים עם נגזרים [Sepher ha-Shorashim 'im Nigzarim] Dictionarium Hebraicum (1539). See also BA (1:791–92). At any rate, all-knowing Bochart, too, is stymied by the meaning of Tachas; a unicorn, perhaps? Even the "sages have not been able to explain whether Tachas, which was a special creature in the time of Moses, was a domestic animal or wild beast. Moreover, it had on its forehead a singular horn, and when it was offered to Moses, he made a tabernacle out of it, whereupon it [unicorn species] vanished."

5 Mather, via Bochart (col. 988), refers to De Mirabilibus sacrae scripturae libri tres (c. 655), lib. 1, cap. 7, col. 2158 [PL 035. 2158], composed by an unknown Irish monk, euphemistically called Augustinus Hibernicus. See also Johann Jacob Hofmann's Lexicon Universale, Historiam, Sacram et Profanam. Tomus Quartus (1698), p. 362: "Taxo, Taxus."

ancient Interpreters of the Scripture, took the Thachas, to be a Colour, and not a Creature. Very particularly, the LXX read it, δέρματα ὑακίνθινα, Purple Skins, or, Violet-Colour Skins. The Colour meant by the Ancients, under the Terms of, Sasgona, and, Hysginus, and, Hyacinthinus, is the very Thachas, now before us. Wherefore, after the Mention of Red Ram-skins for the Use of the Tabernacle, we must suppose Ram skins of a further Colour to be called for, when we read of Badgers skins; namely, of a Violet-Colour. And such Skins there were, so coloured, [50v] not only by the | Art of the Dier, but by Nature also, in those Oriental Parts of the World. Columella, and Pliny, speak of the Red Sheep among the Orientals; and so does Alcamus the Arabian. And Oppian speaks of the Purple ones; and so does Lampridius; and so does Constantinus Porphyrogeneta. —⁶

Q. Thou shalt make Two Cherubims of Gold. Why, no more than Two? v. 18.

A. Lest they should be thought, to repræsent the Trinity.⁷

⁶ To verify the historicity of the purple skins covering the Mosaic Tabernacle, Bochart (cols. 990, 991, 992) enlists evidence from Lucius Junius Moderatus Columella's De Re Rustica (8.2.7–8) and from Pliny (Historia Naturalis 8.78.191), who speaks of “the red fleeces [of Asia] that they call Erythrean.” Probably quoted at second hand from the Qāmūs al-muḥīṭ, sive, Thesaurus Linguae Arabicae (1632), a four-volume Arabic lexicon, by the Italian professor of Arabic at Milano, Antonio Giggeius, aka Giggèi (d. 1632), Samuel Bochart (Hieroicoicon, lib. 3, cap. 30, col. 991; and lib. 3, cap. 20, col. 903) cites from the celebrated Arabic lexicon Al-Qamūs al-Muḥīṭ (aka. Alcamus, Qamus), a compilation of several earlier Arabic dictionaries, by Muhammad al-Fayruzabadi (1329–1414), a distinguished Persian lexicography who settled in Mecca. See Pierre Ageron's “Dans le cabinet de travail du Pasteur Samuel Bochart L'érudit et ses sources arabes,” esp. “Annexe IV” (139–43) and BEIP (104–105). Bochart's magnificent Geographia Sacra (1646) and Hieroicoicon (1663) remained standard handbooks for more than two centuries. As in Mather's case, Bochart was the explanatory source for the darkish rubicund color of sheep's wool, which bedecked the Tabernacle. The Syro-Græco-Roman poet Oppianus Apamensis (2nd–3rd c. CE) mentions the purple-colored fleece in his poem on hunting, ΚΥΝΗΓΗΤΙΚΩΝ (lib. 2, lines 377–79), in Conrad Rittershusius's edition Oppiani Poëtæ Cilicis De Venatione Lib. IIII. (1597), pp. 60, 63; the same can be found in our modern edition of Oppian, Cynegetica (2.377–79). Aelius Lampridius (2nd–3rd c. CE), one of the “Scriptores Historiae Augustae,” in his Historia Augusta: Diadumenus Antoninus (4.5), mentions that “twelve purple sheep were born” on the estate of Diadumenus's father (Life of Diadumenianus 2:91). Finally, the Byzantine Emperor Constantinus VII Porphyrogenitus (905–959 CE), in his De Thematibus: Asia-Europe Asia (ch. 12, line 41), speaks of the purple-colored sheep of Phoenicia.

⁷ Mather's Trinitarian explanation, based on Patrick's commentary on Exod. 25:18 (Exodus 490), imposes a meaning that it could not have had in Moses' time. Even Mather's uncle Samuel, in Dublin, felt that this reading “being above their [Israelites'] comprehension” was “not included originally within the Law of their Creation” (Figures or Types [1705], p. 408; see also pp. 410–11). See also G. G. Stroumsa, “Le couple de l'Ange et de l'Esprit; traditions juives et chrétiennes,” RB 88 (1981): 42–61. Stroumsa demonstrates that in rabbinic literature, the two cherubim, signifying both the male and female, may also intent God's Son the Holy Spirit. For the ongoing debate on the shape, nature, and function of the cherubim, see R. Eichler, “Cherub: A History of Interpretation,” Biblica 96.1 (2015): 26–38. Also see “Cherubim” (ABD 1:897–98).

Q. The Cherubim? v. 18.

A. Lett us, with Monsr. Saurin, call them, Hieroglyphicks. This is the General Name for Figures, that represent Cœlestial or Angelical Qualities, or certain Mysteries of Religion and Morality. This Definition of Cherubim, is enough to explain, why we have them represented, sometimes under one Form, sometimes under another. When we read of, Hangings wrought with Cherubims, it means, Embroider'd with certain Sacred Emblems. But who can determine the Figures, upon such an Indefinite Expression as this; A Work upon which there were Hieroglyphicks?⁸

We have not much Light concerning the Cherubim, from very many Passages in the Sacred Scriptures that mention them.

What were the Cherubim that were placed, at the East of the Garden of Eden?

What were the Cherubim in the Visions of Ezekiel? It will still be a Quæstion, whether those Words, The Face of a Man, or, The Face of a Lion, are not Hebraisms, that only signified some Likeness to those Objects, and not the Visage of them. Nor is it more easy to discover, whether those Creatures had Four Heads, or but one, or even whether Four Half-Heads.⁹

And if wee could give the Figure of the Cherubim seen by Ezekiel, this would not settle the Figure of them on the Mercy-Seat. For, since the Cherubim were no more than Hieroglyphicks, their Form was different, according to the Several Mysteries, of which they were the Emblems.

The Description made by Ezekiel, is not like that of John, in the Revelations.¹⁰

We will not here transcribe what Buxtorf, and Bochart, and Villalpandus, and Spencer, have written, concerning the Cherubim.¹¹

Spencer has determined it, That they {had} mostly, something of a Bovine Figure belonging to them. What Ezekiel calls, The Face of an Oxe, in one Place, ¹¹ Joseph Mede, Works (1664), bk. 5, cap. 12, pp. 1121–22, argues that the polymorphous shape of the cherubim – lion, ox, eagle, and man – represent the ensigns of “three Tribes to a Standard” of the twelve tribes of Israel. Based on the signification of cherubim in Ezek. 1:10, 10:20, Johannes Buxtorf (filius) believes that the cherubim on the Ark of the Covenant had the shape of four animals each, in Historia Arcae Foederis (1659), cap. 9, p. 99. So, too, do Samuel Bochart, in Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 41, col. 412, lines 26–46; the Spanish Jesuit polymath Juan Bautista Villalpando (1552–1608), in his Postrema Ezechielis Prophetæ Visione (1604), tom. 2, pars 2, cap. 35: “De Interioris Templi Ornamentis, & Cherubinis,” on Ezek. ch. 41, pp. 310–12, and 326–38; and John Spencer, in his ominous discussion, which sparked the whole controversy, in his De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 3, diss. 5: “De Origine Arcae & Cherubinatorum,” caps. 3–10, fols. 763–816. See also Hermann Witsius, Ægyptiaca, et ΔΕΚΑΦΥΛΙΟΝ (1696), lib. 2, cap. 13, pp. 159–60, §§ xiv–vii.

he calls, A Cherub, in another. The Hebrew Word, Cherub, anciently signified, An Oxe; And the same Word in Arabic and Syriac, signifies, To Plough.¹²

Be the Figure what it will; it is evident, That the Cherubims which Moses made by the Order of GOD, were Emblems of ANGELS.¹³

ANGELS, who encompass the Throne of GOD; And are winged for Obedience to Him; And have their Faces towards each other, being united in One Will to serve their Lord; And have a great Reverence for the Mysteries of which the Ark exhibited a Type unto us.¹⁴

Maimonides observes, The Design of GOD in ordering of Cherubim, was to inculcate the Doctrine & Beleef of ANGELS.¹⁵ If there had been but one [51v] Cherub on the Ark, the | Israelites might have been too ready to take it for an Image of GOD. Or, they might have suspected, that there is no more than One Angel. But (he says) the Command for making Two Cherubim, joined with this Declaration, The Lord our GOD is the only GOD, putts all out of Doubt. It proves, that there be Angels, and that there is but One GOD.¹⁶

Q. The Cubit, often mention'd in the Measures of the Tabernacle? v. 22.¹⁷

12 Saurin, Dissertations (486, 487). Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 5, cap. 3, sec. 1, fol. 764.

13 R. Eichler has traced the evolving views on the shape and nature of the cherubim in "Cherub: A History of Interpretation." Biblica 96.1 (2015): 26–38.

14 Saurin (487). How unsettling the representation of the cherubim was can be seen in the Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:446–47): To Oleaster (relying on Ibn Ezra), they were "the universal name for every figure." Josephus in Lyra argued they were "certain birds" never previously seen; Junius, Ainsworth, Piscator, and Malvenda insist they were of a "human form, but more august"; Munster believes they were "boys," or rather "winged young men," according to Menochius, Estius, Junius, Piscator. Estius thinks they are "angels," but others, especially Oleaster, take exception to this conformist reading because their "arms" would have interfered with their extended wings; besides Ezek. 10:14 specifically distinguishes between "the face of the Cherub and the face of a man." Grotius imagines the cherub "in the form of calves," because they were μσσχόμορφοι; i. e., "bull-shaped". After all, Grotius knows, that what is called "ox" שׁוֹר [shor] in Ezek. 1:10 is called כְּרֻב cherub in Ezek. 10:14. Thus the bovine shape is its "principal form," Menochius points out, but it consists of "four species of animals." Yet this composite form (rejoins Grotius), with a man's face, eagle's wings, and lion's mane, and the cloven hoofs of oxen, may perhaps signify (as in Exod. 34:6) respectively, God's goodness (man), swiftness (eagle), vengefulness (lion), and slowness (oxen), when He metes out judgment on regenerate and unregenerate alike (Poole's Works 5: 207–08).

15 Maimonides similarly wrestles with this knotty subject, but finally cuts through this Gordian knot by deciding that the cherubim were angels (Guide of the Perplexed 3.45.577).

16 Saurin (488) cites Johannes Buxtorf's Latin translation Rabbi Mosi Majemonidis Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum: More Nebuchim (1629), pars 3, cap. 45, p. 476 (Guide 3.45.577). On the seventeenth-century debate about the polymorphous shape of the cherubim – face of a human, eagle, lion, and ox – see section 2 of my introduction.

17 Actually, v. 23. In his "Note Book of Authors and Texts" (Exod. 25:22), Mather lists as his source "MSS. no. 18. p. 58."

A. There are great Disputes among the Jewes, about a Cubit; which is commonly thought to be Half a Yard of our Measure; or XVIII Inches. But Dr. Cumberland ha's taken a great deal of Pains, about the Scripture-Measures; And he ha's given strong Reasons, to incline us, to think, That the Egyptian and Jewish Cubit, were about XXI Inches. If it had not been so, the Table here, would have been Inconvenient, being but XXVII Inches; which is too low for a Table; whereas, according to his Account, it was about Thirty two Inches; which is a very convenient Heighth for a Table.¹⁸

Q. A Remark upon the Use of the Ark? v. 22.

A. Tis Monsr. Jurieu's.¹⁹

The Ark was intended as a Repository for the Law, which was engraved by the Finger of GOD, on the Tables, delivered unto Moses upon Mount Sinai. Our Divines, he thinks, have not sufficiently observed, That unto this Prærogative of containing the Law, or Testimony, was owing all the Veneration, which the Ark had paid unto it. It was called, The Ark of the Covenant; because this Law was a Covenant; And, The Ark of the Testimony; because the Law was indeed the Testimony. GOD was considered as peculiarly manifesting Himself there: Because His Law was contained in it. And for this Cause did Men prostrate themselves before it.²⁰

Why did not the Jews contrive an Ark for the Second Temple, after the Model of the former? It was because they had lost the Tables of the Law, & had no further Occasion to make a Chest for them.²¹

Why did the Holy GOD impart His Oracles from the Midst of the Ark? The Law is the Spring of Light. If Men pay a due Respect unto it, they may hope, to be always under the Direction of GOD.

Why was the Covering of the Ark, styled, The Propitiatory, or, Mercy-Seat? It covered the Law; and therein it was a Figure of the Satisfaction made by our Saviour, which covers our Sins against the Law.²²

Q. On that, I will commune with thee from above the Mercy-Seat? v. 22.

A. GOD caused a Voice to be heard, from the Cloud, which was over the Mercy-Seat. But some Interpreters think the Cloud meant here, was only the 18 Bishop of Peterborough, Richard Cumberland (1632–1718), dedicated his bestselling work An Essay Towards the Recovery of the Jewish Measures and Weights (1686) to Samuel Pepys, then president of the Royal Society of London (ODNB). Mather's measurements appear in Cumberland's Essay (ch. 2, p. 34, 50, 56). See also Mather's Appendix: "III. Q. We expect, that when you come to Solomons Temple, you will then give us the Gospel of Moses's Tabernacle. Yett here, a few Glances upon it, may not be unseasonable, or unserviceable? v. 40.

A. The Tabernacle, and the whole Service belonging to it, was a Parable; The Interpretation whereof, is, The Lord Jesus Christ, and His Church.²⁵

The Apostle compares His Flesh, unto the Veil which hung between the Oracle and the Sanctuary; for it is both the Parting of the Medium of Communication, between the Deity and the Church.

The Tabernacle was not altogether figured, as the Temple; but like a Body, or Trunk without Arms, or with the Arms holding together. An Intimation, That the Church, then confined unto the Jewish Nation, was to continue so, for many Ages, until the Gentile-Branches were engrafted.

The Double Sockets, on which the Boards stood, with the Pillars, and Bars; foreshewed the Stability of the Church; against which, the Gates of Hell should not prevail.

And the Coupling of the Curtains, to make all but One Tabernacle; shewed the Unity of the Church, in all Points Essential unto it.

The better to shew, that this Body was Modell'd in Heaven, albeit the several Parts of the Furniture, the Ark, Altar, Table and Candlestick, had so many several sorts of Covers; yett they had all of them, one of a Sky-Colour; a Clothe wholly of Blue. (Num. 4.6.)

The Candlestick notably represented, the Seven cheef Cœlestial Bodies, of the System wherein we move. The Shaft in the Midst, answered unto the Sun; and so, unto Christ, who is called, The Sun of Righteousness. The Six Branches answered unto the Six greater Planets; that is, the Apostles, who were sent out by Six Pairs, and were called, The Lights of the World.²⁶

Or, the Six Branches, and Six lesser Lamps, represented the Twelve Apostles, who first preached unto the Jewes; and the biggest Lamp in the Middle, over against the Shaft, might be our Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles.

The Candlestick stood on the South-side of the Tabernacle; answerable to the Southern Scituation of the Ecliptic; with respect unto Judea, and the far greater Part of the World. And as the said Lights, alwayes do shine in the Heavens, thus these did alwayes in the Tabernacle; and they shall never be extinguished in the Church.

The Shew-bread might well be called, The Bread of Faces. The Death of our Lord Messiah, was already, & constantly before the Face of God.²⁷

This Bread, was, as it were, a Perpetual Meat-Offering;²⁸ with which a Drink-Offering | was often, if not alwayes, joined; the Priests drank Wine with it: [52v] the Bowls belonging to the Table, could be applied unto no other Use. Behold, the Sacraments of the Flesh and Blood of our Lord! The Priests did thus Eat and Drink every Sabbathday. Remarkably done by the Primitive Christians also!²⁹

The Mysteries of the Altars, are elsewhere observed.

Next to the Altar, stood the Laver. Our Lord Jesus Christ being sacrificed, Baptism was next preached unto all Nations. Upon receiving of which, we are to be received, (as the Priests after washing,) into the Tabernacle, the Church; where being first Illuminated, by the Candlestick, or Heavenly Doctrine of the Apostles, we are then to be Admitted unto the Shewbread, the Communion of Saints in the Lords-Supper. For all whom, the Altar of Incense, or Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ, makes continual Intercession. Until He comes at last, from the most Holy Place, attended with Cherubims, to Judge the World.³⁰

Q. The TABERNACLE erected in the Wilderness among the Israelites, for the Worship of God, is a Noble Subject; and it is well worthy to be more particularly Considered and Illustrated. We find in the Scripture, that pious Men desired & valued mightily the Privilege, to be conversant with the TABERNACLE; altho' they could not see all the Mysteries there, which we Christians are now better acquainted withal. The World of Grace, ha's in it no less Glories than the World of Nature. The Lord who took but Six Dayes to dispatch the former, took Forty Dayes, to describe the latter unto His Holy Servant. The Apostle Paul, having led us to a View of the Mysteries in a Part of the Tabernacle, concludes, there were many more, whereof, saies he, we cannot now speak particularly. We are invited now to enquire more particularly after them; for as Amyraldus well notes, Quod in eo genere Apostoli prastiterunt, est tanquam exemplar, ad cuius normam omnes alij Theologi Cogitationes et Meditationes suas in eo Studio conformare debent. v. 40.³¹

A. Our Incomparable WITSIUS, ha's entertained, me with a Dissertation, De Tabernaculi Levitici Mysterijs. And I will endeavour an Entertainment for my Friend, with select Matters fetched, like so many choice Dishes, from the Table wherewith he ha's feasted us.³²

But we must in the first Place consider a Treble Tabernacle mentioned in the Sacred Scriptures. There was a MOSAIC Tabernacle; A Mansion erected by Moses, without the Camp, after the wretched Business of the Calf. This was called, The Tabernacle of Meeting; because the Lord there mett with Moses, & exhibited His Glory also unto the Israelites. [Exod. 33.7.] There was also a DAVIDIC Tabernacle; A Mansion erected by David, in Zion, for the Reception of the Ark, after it was removed from the House of Obed-Edom. [2. Sam. 6.17. 1. Chron. 16.1.] But there was likewise the LEVITIC Tabernacle; which is now to be discoursed of.³³

The Fate of that famous Tabernacle was This. After it was erected by Moses, it was diverse Times taken down, & carried by the Levites, thro' the several Stages of their Journey in the Wilderness. When it arrived unto the Land of Canaan, it was first of all sett up in Gilgal. [Josh. 4.18.19.] It was then transported unto Shiloh. [Josh. 18.1. 1 Sam. 4.3, 4.] Here it continued 328 Years, or some say, 350. When the Ark was taken, Shiloh was Forsaken and Rejected of God. [Jer. 7.12. Psal. 78.60.] The Tabernacle was then transferred unto Nob. [1. Sam. 21.10.] In the Dayes of David and Solomon, we find it at Gibeon. [1. Chron. 1.3.] At last, it and all the Utinsels of it, were translated into the Temple. [2. Chron. 5.5.] The Fate of the Church in this World, until its arrival unto the State of the Blessed Chiliad, & the Rest which remains for the People of God, was admirably represented in this Fate of the Tabernacle.³⁴

The Materials of the Tabernacle, were brought in, partly by a Voluntary, Liberal, Generous Contribution of the Israelites; partly by a Tribute of Half a Shekel, which all the Men of the Nation above Twenty Years of Age, paid for their Expiation. The Shekel of the Sanctuary is mentioned, as the Standard of the Money paid on this Occasion. We do not imagine, as many have done, that the Shekel of the Sanctuary was as large again as the Common Shekel; but the Shekel of the Sanctuary means a true, just, fair Shekel, fairly answering the Standard, that was reserved in the Sanctuary; as the Emperour Justinian ordered the Standard of Weights and Measures, to be laid up in the Churches of every City.³⁵ [Consider, Lev. 27.25.³⁶ and Ezek. 45.12.] All the Ancient Shekels extant at this Day, are of the same Weight, and make near Half an Imperial. But shall we now a little cast up the Summ that was thus collected? The Number of the Israelites was, Six Hundred Thousand and Three Thousand and five Hundred and fifty. The Shekels then paid were 301775. which made One Hundred Talents, and 1775 Shekels. The Gold of the Voluntary Oblations, was, Twenty Nine Talents, and Seven Hundred & Thirty Shekels. [Exod. 38.24.] One Goeree, quoted by Witsius, brings the Summ thus under modern Denomination. The Silver amounted unto, 362130 Florins, or 60355 Flanders Pounds. The Gold amounted unto 219325 Flanders

Pounds; or 130 Tuns, and about 5950 Florins. In all, about 1,300,000 Pounds Sterling. But we will give another Account in our Illustrations on Exod. 38.25.³⁷

[53v] It may well be wondred, where the Israelites, under the cruel Oppressions of Egypt, could arrive | to so much Wealth, as was produced on this Occasion. But no doubt, many Israelites preserved much of the Riches, which their Ancestors had left unto them. And when they went out of Egypt, their Neighbours bestow'd some large Quantities of Riches upon them. And the Spoils of the Drowned Egyptians driven ashore, were probably very considerable. We need not fly to the Conjecture of Abarbanel, That the Neighbour Nations managed a Rich Trade, with the Camp of Israel; For it seems rather, that the Destruction of the Egyptians and the Amalekites, had utterly terrified the other Nations, from seeking any Communion with them.³⁸

Lett us make a Pause. The Materials of the Tabernacle, were of many Sorts, and not all alike precious. Tis thus in the Spiritual Building; The States, and Gifts of Men placed by God in it, are very various. And, Ex Tam diversis compactum, non ordinatius modò, sed et ornatus exurgit.³⁹ The Voluntariness of the Offerings to the Tabernacle, preaches to us, what the Lord expects in all our Offerings. [Psal. 110.3. and 2. Cor. 9.5, 7.] The Oblation to the Service of the Tabernacle, was called by the Name of תרומה/ An Exaltation. A Notable Hint! That Part of our Estates, which we devote unto the special Service of the most High God, is Honoured and Exalted, by such an Improvement of it. Finally; The People contributed, not only Materials to the building of the Tabernacle, but their Art and Skill also; The very Women did so. Truly, Not only our Estates, but also our 37 Witsius, Tabernaculi (§§ VIII–X, pp. 398–99, 399–400), does not identify “Goeree,” but he probably refers to the Dutch engraver Jan Goeree (1670–1731), famous for his artistic depictions of contemporary and classical architecture, biblical motifs, landscapes, coins and medallions. Witsius (p. 400) does not further identify Goeree’s specific work.

38 Witsius, Tabernaculi (§ X, pp. 400–01), refers to Ibn Ezra’s and Abarbanel’s commentary on Exod. 25:5 (JPS Migra’ot Gedolot 2:216–17). How the fleeing Israelites in the Sinai Desert could manage to carry along building materials – especially the beams of acacia wood for the Tabernacle – is debated by several of the medieval rabbis: Metsudah Midrash Tanchuma (4:132) for one ventures that Jacob “planted them when he went down to Egypt,” by commanding his sons that the Lord will require of them to build a Sanctuary upon their latter-day redemption from Egypt. Thus they should “prepare and plant cedars now [in Egypt], so that when the time comes ... the cedars will be ready” to be carried out of Egypt (Shemos II: Terumah, ch. 9, p. 132). Abarbanel, however, deems this explanation “a little farfetched that they simply carried these large tress with them when they left Egypt ... and crossed over the Red sea.” It is therefore more likely that “Many a tradesman, and many merchants from the surrounding areas came to sell their wares to the Israelites, and to trade with them, and it was from these merchants that they bought these planks of acacia wood.” Most likely, they also supplied precious oils and related items Moses needed for the Tabernacle (Selected Commentaries: Shemos/Exodus 2:300).

39 Witsius (§ XI, p. 401) uses the alternative spelling of “exurgit.” As Witsius has it, “constructed from such different things, it [Tabernacle] rises not only more composedly, but also more splendidly.”

Internal Faculties, and all the Witt and Strength and Art and Skill that we have, must be laid out for the Service of God.⁴⁰

The Form and Shape of the Tabernacle, was according to the Pattern that had been shown to Moses in the Mount. [Consider, Heb. 9.23.] And not, as it ha's been sinfully maintained by some learned Men, an Imitation of what Moses had seen among the Egyptians and other Pagans. In Religion, all things must be conformed entirely unto the Præscriptions of God. [Col. 2.22, 23. Deut. 5.6.]⁴¹

First, The Tabernacle had a COURT. [Exod. 27.9–19. & 38.9.] It was formed with Hangings, fastned unto Pillars, with Hooks. The Hangings were Fine Twined Linen; but so accommodated with Eylet-Holes, that they who stood abroad, might thro' them see what was done within.⁴²

Quære, whether there was no more than One Court? Moses indeed speaks of but One; which would scarce hold the Multitude that were to be entertained there. David speaks of Courts, in the Plural Number. [Psal. 65.5. and 84.3. and 96.8.] If the Plural Number were not used only as an Hebraism, to denote an Excellency, we may suppose, that in Moses's Time, there was but One; where, tis doubted by the Learned, whether any but the Priests & Select Levites, without any other Israelites were admitted; But when they were settled in Canaan, the Hebrew Masters tell us, that at Shiloh, the Tabernacle had also a Wall made about it; However, there was Probably added a Court for the People unto that of the Priests; and it is plain, that in David's Time, the People gave Attendance there. It is very sure, Solomons Temple had a Couple of Courts; One for the People; and there was, at least in Herods Time, a Third extant, that was called, The Court of the Gentiles.⁴³

Unto the Court belonged, THE BRAZEN ALTAR. [Exod. 27.1, 2, –] The Fire to be daily præserv'd and maintained on this Altar, first fell from Heaven. Here a Difficulty occurs. The Israelites Travelling thro' the Wilderness, were to sweep off the Ashes from the Altar, and spread a Purple Cloath upon it, & lay upon it the Vessels pertaining unto it. How could the Fire be preserved under the Purple Cloath? [Num. 4.13, 14.] The Jewes fly to Miracles in the Case.⁴⁴ But it is most probable, That the Fire taken off the Altar, was lodg'd in Potts convenient for the Purpose, and kept Alive with proper Fuel, till it could conveniently again be Restored unto the Altar. [Consider, Exod. 27.3.] The Fable, of the Holy Fire, sav'd and kept in a Cave, by the Prophet Jeremiah, after the Destruction of the Temple by the Babylonians, is learnedly refuted by Rainolds upon the Apocrypha.⁴⁵

Near it stood, A BRASEN LAVER. [Exod. 30.18–21.] Pious Women, who Devoutly kept watching and praying in their Turns, at the Tent, where the Lord gave His Visits unto Moses, [Exod. 38.8. & 33.7.] as afterwards, it was the Manner of Devout Women to do at the Levitic Tabernacle, [1. Sam. 2.22.] these brought their Looking-Glasses of burnished Brass, at which they did use to Dress themselves, & consecrated them unto the Service of the Sanctuary, for the making of this Laver. Probably, there were Spouts in it, which lett pure Water
[54r] down, into | the Receptacle where Men washed, as often as any New Occasion of washing Recurred. Fresh Water was every Morning supplied; and the Priests here washed their Hands and their Feet, as often as any New Services were to be performed by them.⁴⁶

From hence, we proceed unto the TENT of the Tabernacle. Here was first a COVERING of Red and Purple Ramskins, only over the Top. And then there was a TENT about the whole, consisting of Eleven Curtains, which were fastened with Loops and Taches, one unto another [Exod. 26.7–14.] Under this was the TABERNACLE itself, made of Shittim Wood, the Boards whereof, were fastned in Silver-Sockets, & overlaid with Gold. Here the HOLY PLACE, had at the Entrance of it, a VEIL of Incomparable TAPESTRY, with Figures of Cherubim upon it, sustained by Five Pillars, of Cedar, which were covered with Gold. Within it stood the GOLDEN TABLE with SHEW-BREAD upon it; at the North-Side; and the GOLDEN CANDLESTICK over against it, at the South-Side; and the GOLDEN ALTAR OF INCENSE, next unto the Most Holy Place. The MOST HOLY PLACE, was the most Sacred and Retir'd Recess of the Tabernacle; divided from the Holy Place, by a SECOND VEIL, not unlike the former, hung upon Four Pillars like unto the Former. Within this, there was the ARK, with the MERCY-SEAT and CHERUBIM: There were also the Tables of the Law, in the Ark; And the Golden Pott, with the Manna; And Aarons Rod. And the whole Volumn of the LAW of Moses, lodged in the Side of the Ark.⁴⁷

We have all possible Assurance, that under all these Things, there lay hid Illustrious Mysteries. [Heb. 8.5.] Even the Blind Jewes themselves [Isa. 29.10, 11, 12.] notwithstanding their Blindness, do acknowledge it. Abarbanel shall speak for the rest, who compares the Tabernacle, to, A Book of Sublime Wisdome, & of Glorious Matter, to which all things in it referred.⁴⁸ Nevertheless, they fall into Ridiculous Follies and Fables, when they come to make their Particular Commentaries. Tis near The Highest of their Flights, when they consider the Tabernacle as a Type of, The World; the Holy of Holies, a Type of the Third Heaven; the Holy Place, of the Starry Heaven; the Court, of the Earth; the Table with Twelve Loaves, of the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac; the Candlestick with Seven Lamps, of the Seven Planets; the Four Colours of the Curtains, of the Four Elements. This was Josephus's Opinion; That the Tabernacle was, προς μίμησιν τῆς τῶν ὀλων φύσεως. Ad Imitationem universitatis Naturæ.⁴⁹ But while they see nothing of the Messiah in the Tabernacle, they make it little better than a Tabernacle of Moloch. Those carry the Point a little further and better, who consider the Great GOD as the King of His People, and the Tabernacle as His Palace. The Lord said, Exod. 25.8. Lett them make me a Sanctuary, that I may dwell among them. Moses the Son of Nachman, thus paraphrases upon it; Facient Domum et Vasa quasi Sanctuarium Regis, et domum Regiam; et Ego in medio ipsorum habitabo, veluti in Domo et Solio Glorie, quod facient mihi ibi. And the Words of Abarbanel are worth repeating; In Palatio hoc fuere Mensa, et Candelabrum, et Ara Suffitus, tanquam res ad ministerium Regis mundi idoneæ. Non quòd illi, cui omnis laus, harum rerum ulla opus

⁴⁹ Witsius (§ XXII, p. 409) quotes Josephus Flavius's opinion (Antiquitates Judaicae, lib. 3, cap. 123, line 2) that τὴν μέντοι διαμέτρῃσιν τὴν τοιαύτην τῆς σκηνῆς καὶ μίμησιν τῆς τῶν ὀλων φύσεως συνέβαινε εἶναι i. e., “this proportion of the measures of the tabernacle proved to be an imitation of the system of the world” (Antiquities 3.6.4). Mather's second-hand Greek extract from Josephus is (as usual) without diacritics.

*sit: Absit ut ità arbitremur. Sed ut populi animo penitus insideret, in Medijs Israelitarum Castris versatum esse Dominum Deum ipsorum.*⁵⁰ After all, the Words of R. Schem Tob, are the most emphatical. Deus, cui laus, talem sibi domum condijussit, qualis esse solet Domus Regia. He proceeds to show, How in a Palace, there are some that stand as Guards; there are others that perform other Duties; they prepare the Banquets; & they have Rooms for that Purpose; by Singing or Playing, they carry on the Musick; there are Perfumes dispersed; there is a Royal Table; there are Chambers entred by none but the Kings Peculiar Ministers and Favourites; And the Lord would in His Tabernacle, exhibit the like Circumstances of Royal Majesty. He concludes; *Atque hæc omnia eò spectabant, ut intelligeret vulgus, Regem, nempe Dominum exercituùm, inter nos versatum esse. Est enim ille REX Magnus, omnibusque gentibus metuendus.*⁵¹

The Thoughts are Good. But we CHRISTIANS, have more to Think of.

And in the First Place; The COURT, was a Type of the Visible CHURCH.

[54v] [Com-]-pare, Rev. 11.1, 2.] The AMPLITUDE of the Court, signified, the Enlargement of the Church. [Compare, Isa. 54.2.] The CURTAINS, on the Pillars, that separated the Court from the rest of the World, signified the Separation of the People of God, from the rest of Mankind, who are Strangers to His Knowledge, & Worship, & Covenant. [Num. 23.9.] The VEIL hung at the DOOR, signified, That Admission into the Church is not allowed, unto all; but only to such as profess Faith and Repentance; and that we must approach God with Reverence, and search into His Mysteries with Sobriety. The HANGINGS, which were of such a NET-WORK, that one might Look in, where they might not Go in, signified, That some Knowledge of God is granted unto them who come not so near unto Him as others do; and that with the Eye of Faith, and Hope, and Meditation, we should endeavour to Behold such things as we may not yett come to Enjoy.⁵²

50 Witsius (§ XXIII, pp. 409–10) cites from Nachmanides's annotation on Exod. 25:8, "Let them make Me a house and vessels as a Royal Sanctuary and seat of Majesty, that I may dwell in the midst of them in the house and on the Throne of Glory which they will make for Me there" (Commentary: Exodus 445). Abarbanel (on Exod. 25:8) adds, "In this palace were a table and a lampstand, an altar of incense, so to speak, things fitting for the ministry of the king of the world. Not because he, to whom be all praise, has any need of these things: By no means may we think thus. But in order that he might settle deeply within the soul of the people, the Lord their God was situated in the middle of the camp of the Israelites."

51 Witsius (§ XXIV, pp. 410–11) most likely quotes from Sefer Moreh ha-Moreh, a commentary on Maimonides's Guide for the Perplexed, by the Sephardic philosopher poet and prolific author Shem Tov ben Joseph Ibn Palquera (1225–c. 1290). The Latin translation from this Hebrew commentary on the Guide (3.45), which Mather partially renders in English, reads, "God, to whom be praise, ordered such a house to be established for him as a royal palace to which he was accustomed." The concluding sentence signifies, "And all these things were regarding him, so that the people would understand that the king, assuredly the Lord of Armies, was situated among us. For he is the great KING, and to be feared by all peoples."

52 Witsius (§ XXV, pp. 411–12). On the mystical signification of the tabernacle, courts, and sacred instruments, see also John Edwards's ΠΟΛΥΠΟΙΚΙΛΟΣ ΣΟΦΙΑ. A Compleat History (1699), ch. 6, pp. 192–204.

All the Orthodox World, consent, That the BRASEN ALTAR, should be a Type of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, as He Sanctified the Offering which He made of Himself unto God, for the Sins of His Elect. Indeed none of the Mosaic Ceremonies, could singly exhibit the whole Mystery of Christ, but they must join all together. The Same CHRIST, is the Priest, Secundum Vim indissolubilis Vitae; the Sacrifice, Secundum Humanum Naturam quam obtulit; and the Altar, Secundum Vim Sanctificantem.⁵³ [Compare, Heb. 13.10.] The MATTER of this Altar, which was Wood, covered with no nobler a Metal than Brass, noted, the Humble State of our Lord, when He made Himself an Offering for us. The HORNS of the Altar, why might they not signify the Power of Him, in whom we come to a Reconciliation with God, & who is called, [2. Sam. 22.3. Luk. 1.69.] The Horn of Salvation? These Horns, were the Refuge of Criminals; and perhaps there was an Allusion to this Custome, in those Words, Isa. 27.5. Lett him take hold of my Strength, who would make Peace with me, and he shall make Peace. At least, these Horns were to signify, That our Lord is ready & willing to have those lay Hold on Him, who with a distressed Mind fly from the Wrath of God; and this meerly out of His own Goodness and Mer{c}y; as the Horns of the Altar, were of the Altar itself. [See Isa. 48.9, 11.] The PLACE of the Altar, in the Open Court, was a figure of the Public and Open Circumstances, wherewith our Lord was offered, in the View of all Men. The FIRE, which came down from Heaven on the Altar, was a Figure of that Spirit, with which our Lord offered Himself unto God; and without which indeed, all our most zealous Performances are unacceptable, & all they that kindle a Fire, & walk in the Light of their own Fire, shall but ly down in Sorrow.⁵⁴

The Rites of making Atonement for the Altar itself, [Exod. 29.37] are worthy to be considered. They were, The Slaying {of} a Bullock, The Sprinkling of his Blood, And, An Uncction with the Sacred Oyl. The Altar being made by Men, whose Hands and Minds were Sinful, God would have an Atonement made for it, before it should be applied unto Holy Uses. He would convince the Israelites, That a true Atonement was not to be expected, from that which itself wanted an Atonement, but that they must fly to the Son of God, that Holy Thing, conceived of the Holy Ghost, which needed no Expiation. Thus the Altar considered in itself, was proclaimed one of the Beggarly Elements; and tho' it was a Figure of our Lord, yett it was also opposed unto Him.⁵⁵

53 Witsius (§ XXVI, p. 412). Accordingly, "The Same CHRIST is the Priest, 'in accordance with the force of indissoluble life'; the Sacrifice 'in accordance with the nature that offered the human'; and the Altar 'in accordance with the sanctifying force.'" Again no rhyme or reason can be given why Mather chose to retain the Latin original here even though he paraphrastically translates most of the remainder of Witsius's § XXVI.

54 Witsius (§ XXVI, pp. 412–13).

55 Witsius (§ XXVII, pp. 413–14).

Who can doubt, that the LAVER must lead us, to the Purification, which we expect from the Spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ? [Zech. 13.1.] The Hands and the Feet, are Symbols of all our Actions, which the Lord would have to be washed, that we may escape Eternal Death; But Purity is especially to be endeavoured in the Worship of God. Nor is the Allegory of Gregory, to be despised. The Laver made of the Womens Looking-glasses, was to signify, Repentance. By the Looking-glass, the Law which discovers our Spotts and Sins, might be signified. [Jam. 1.23, 25.] By the Laver, and the Water in the Laver, the Tears of Compunction. Finally, The SCITUATION of the Laver near the Altar, may invite us, to think, how nearly the Justifying Blood, and the Sanctifying Spirit, of Christ, are conjoined in Christianity.⁵⁶

[55r] Lett us pass with all possible Reverence into the TABERNACLE; the most general Signification whereof was, as The Presence of God with His People; so the Dwelling of God, in His Messiah. Thus the Lord is for a Sanctuary, [Isa. 8.14.] when a Stone of Stumbling, a Rock of Offence, to both Houses of Israel. More particularly, The Tabernacle signified, the Humane Nature of our Saviour; in which there dwells the Fulness of the Godhead Bodily. It was mean without, but splendid, and glorious within; which is notably true of our Saviour. [Isa. 53.2, 3. Psal. 22.7. But Joh. 1.14. 2. Pet. 1.17.] Here also God spoke unto His People; which He now does in and by our Saviour. [Heb. 1.1. Joh. 1.18.] And, the Tabernacle being taken down, was again sett up, & at length carried into the Temple, where it rested forever; which befell the Body of our Saviour. [John. 2.19] | The Tabernacle might also signify, The Church of God; For that also is the House of God. [1. Tim. 3.15. 1. Pet. 2.5. 1. Cor. 3.16.] And as the Tabernacle consisted of its various Parts, not all of æqual Dignity, but neatly joined one unto another, by Loops and Rings; thus the Church ha's Persons of all Qualities in it, variously gifted, & placed, by the Holy Spirit of God. The Revelation of God is also in the Church, as it was in the Tabernacle. [Eph. 3.10.] It is likewise Mean for its External Aspect, but all Glorious Within. [1. Cor. 1.26. But Psal. 45.14.] And it is carried about, unto uncertain Seats, in this World, until it is at last laid up in Heaven. The Bodies of the Saints being taken down by Death, shall also be sett up again, in Eternal Glory.⁵⁷

The MATTER of the Tabernacle might instruct us in many Lessons. But I may say with our Witsius; Sed nos singula nondum assecuti sumus. We will only touch upon this; That the Covering which was made of the Skins of Animals that had been slain, might signify, The Præservaⁿ of the Church, by the Death of Him, whom those Animals resembled, when He made Himself a Sacrifice.⁵⁸

⁵⁶ Witsius (§ XXVIII, p. 414). Not one to despise a useful allegory, Mather paraphrases passages from Homiliarum in Evangelia Libri Duo, Homilia XVII (Lectio Evang. sec. Luc. X, 1–9), §§ 10–11 [PL 076. 1143–44], by Pope St. Gregory the Great (c. 540–604). No doubt, Mather would also have appreciated a similar explication of the symbolic significance of the Mosaic laver to the Christian church, in St. Gregory's The Book of Pastoral Rule, part 2, ch. 5 (NPNFii 12:13–14).

⁵⁷ Witsius (§§ XXIX, XXX, XXXI, pp. 414–16).

In the HOLY PLACE, we have a Picture of the Church Militant; which is Holy, [1. Cor. 3.17. 1. Pet. 2.5. Eph. 5.27.] But in Holiness not æqual to what is in Heaven. [Phil. 3.12.] It is also Separated from the World, by its pious Observation of the Divine Præcepts, as by a Veil of Gods appointing. And all that have clean Hands and pure Hearts, may come into it, as all the Priests did in their Order, into the Holy Place. [Psal. 24.4. 1. Pet. 2.5. Isa. 61.6.] Offerings are here likewise made unto God. And as in the Holy Place there was Light and Bread, so the Grace of God affords unto His Church, both Illumination and Satisfaction. As there was also no Way to the Holy of Holies, but thro' the Holy Place, thus we must pass thro' the State of Grace to the State of Glory. [Heb. 12.14.]⁵⁹

Here stood the GOLDEN TABLE, with the SHEW BREAD upon it. An Exhibition of the Messiah, who is the Bread of Life. But we may say more particularly; That the Table was a Figure of the Gospel, and of the Sacraments, wherein the Lord Jesus Christ is exhibited unto His People. As the Table was Gold covering Cedar, we may say, That the Lord Jesus Christ, and His Gospel, and Sacraments, are to be præferr'd unto all the Gold & all the Riches of this World. Incredible was the Cost of the ancient Romans, about their Tables; (whereof Pliny and Lipsius relate prodigious things.)⁶⁰ But the most admirable Provision there, was nothing, to the Spiritual and Heavenly Entertainment here, Cujus vel minima mica nullis Persarum gazis redimenda.⁶¹ The Emperour Justinian erected a Communion-Table, in the Church of S. Sophia, at Constantinople, which is by Cedrenus called, εργον αμμητον, An Inimitable Work.⁶² It was composed (he saies) of

58 Witsius (§ XXXII, p. 416). And Mather says with Witsius to back him up, "But we have not yet comprehended things that are separate."

59 Witsius (§ XXXIII, pp. 416–17).

60 Witsius (§§ XXXIV, XXXVI, p. 417). Mather (via Witsius, p. 417) probably has in mind the intriguing story about the insane "table-mania" among certain affluent Romans who, like Marcus Cicero, paid "half-a million sesterces" for a costly table made from the precious wood of citrus trees. Gallus Asinius even spent "a million" on such a table, whereas King Juba auctioned off two of his hanging citrus-wood tables, "of which one fetched 1,200,000 sesterces and the other a little less." The height of decadence and conspicuous consumption, Pliny relates with some Schadenfreude, was a citrus table (lost in a blaze), which "had changed hands at 1,300,000 sesterces – the price of a large estate" (Historia Naturalis 13.29.92). Similar stories of excess (including those mentioned by Pliny) are related in Admiranda, sive, Magnitudine Romana Libri Quatuor (1598), lib. 4, cap. 7: "Pariter contra Continentiam; & luxu Romano," esp. pp. 229–36, by the Walloon humanist and philologist Justus Lipsius, aka. Josse Lips (1547–1606), rector of the then newly established University of Leiden, and later historiographer to King Phillip II of Spain.

61 Mather cites Witsius (§ XXXVI, p. 417) to explain that the sumptuous feasts of the Romans was nothing when compared to Christ's "Spiritual and Heavenly Entertainment," "whose smallest grains assuredly cannot be redeemed by any Persian treasures."

62 Witsius (§ XXXVI, p. 418). In his Compendium historiarum (1:677, line 7), a chronicle of the world from the Creation to the eleventh century (CE), the Byzantine chronographer Georgius Cedrenus Constantinopolitanus (fl. 11th c. CE) praises Justinianus I's legendary "Holy

Gold, and Silver, and Jewels, and the most Exquisite Materials that the Earth & the Sea, & the whole World could afford. And, Quum ex omnibus collegisset, quæ quidem optima sunt et pretiosissima, largius, quæ verò minoris pretij, parcius; fusilibus fusis arida in hæc iniecit. Atque eam in typum infusam perfecit, undè tam varia apparuit, ut intuentes in stuporem conjiceret. About the Table, there was this Inscription; ΤΑ ΣΑ ΕΚ ΤΩΝ ΣΩΝ ΣΟΙ ΠΡΟΣΦΕΡΟΜΕΝ ΟΙ ΔΟΥΛΟΙ ΣΟΥ, ΧΡΙΣΤΕ, ΙΟΥΣΤΙΝΙΑΝΟΣ ΚΑΙ ΘΕΟΔΩΡΑ, Α ΕΥΜΕΝΩΣ ΠΡΟΣΔΕΞΑΙ, ΥΙΕ ΚΑΙ ΛΟΓΕ ΤΟΥ ΘΕΟΥ· *Tua ex Tuis Tibi Offerimus Servi tui, Christe, Justinianus et Theodora; Quæ benevolè accipe, Fili et Verbum Dei.*⁶³ Witsius does not blame, this Expression of Piety, and Pious Affection; But he adds, *Dubito tamen an tam pretiosa mensa satis consultum fuerit simplicitati rei Christianæ.*⁶⁴ Be sure, the Mosaic Table was a very Rich one. It had a Crown upon it, because it was a Royal Table. The Bread there, was Panis Potentum; [Psal. 78.25.]⁶⁵ The Provision made in our Lord Jesus Christ for our Spirits, was there figured. The Rings and Staves, by which the Table was carried from one Place to another, intimated, That the Lord Jesus Christ with His Gospel, is removed from one Place to another. The Twelve Loaves, answering to the Twelve Tribes, teach us, that in our Lord Jesus Christ, there is a Sufficient Food for all His People. [Col. 3.11.] They stood before the Face of the Lord, as does the Vertue of our Sacrificed Lord. [Heb. 9.24.] They were every Sabbath-Day Renewed. Representations of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the Preaching of the Gospel, should have such a Renewal of them. None but the Priests might eat of them; nor may any expect Communion with the Lord Jesus Christ, but such as do separate themselves from the World, that they may minister, unto the Lord. And as they might not be eaten in any but the Holy Place, even so, with none but an Holy Frame, are we to handle all the Table" or altar (set up in the Sancta Sophia in Constantinople) as ἔργον ἀμίμητον, "an inimitable work" of art.

63 Cedrenus's superlative description of Justinian's altar reads, "When he [Justinian] had gathered from them all more copiously, indeed, the things which are the best and most precious, while more sparingly the things of lesser value, he infused these dry things with poured liquids. And he finished it into this form, whence it appeared so varied that it threw into amazement those gazing on." The Greek inscription (in capital letters) on the costly table donated by Byzantian Emperor Justinian I (c. 482–565 CE) and his spouse Empress Theodora (c. 500–48 CE) are a memorial to their devotion: "τὰ σὰ ἐκ τῶν σῶν σοι προσφέρομεν οἱ δοῦλοί σου, Χριστέ, Ἰουστινιανὸς καὶ Θεοδώρα, ἃ εὐμενῶς πρόσδεξαι, υἱὲ καὶ λόγε τοῦ θεοῦ (Compendium historiarum, 1:677, lines 7, 14–15): These are "Your things from your things, we, your slaves, Justinian and Theodora, will bring forward, O Christ; kindly accept them, Son and Word of God." Mather's cumbersome Latin and Greek quotations are at second hand from Witsius (§ XXXVI, p. 418).

64 Witsius (§ XXXVI, p. 418) adds laconically, "I doubt, however, whether such a costly table was suitable for the simplicity of the Christian cause."

65 The showbread was a "mighty loaf of bread" (Witsius 418), in fact, "angels food" (Psal. 78:25), yet "too fine for Angells," as Mather's colleague, New England's own Edward Taylor (c. 1642–1729), cautioned his communicants in his "Meditation 8" (first series) on John 6:51.

Things of our Lord Jesus Christ.⁶⁶ | Over against the Table stood the GOLDEN [55v] CANDLESTICK, having Seven Lamps, maintained with pure Sallet-Oyl, and Snuff-ers and Snuff-dishes of Pure Gold. Symbols of Light and Food, have been several times joined by the Lord, in the Administration of the Covenant.⁶⁷ In Paradise, There was the Tree of Knowledge, and, the Tree of Life. In the Wilderness, there was the Fiery Pillar, and the Manna. In the New Testament, we have Baptism, which was called, Φωτισμὸς, by the Ancients;⁶⁸ and the Supper of the Lord. Thus here, we have a Candlestick, and a Table. We need both to be Instructed, and to be Nourished and Strengthened.⁶⁹ More particularly, The Candlestick might be a Figure of the Church enlighten'd by the Lord Jesus Christ, and affording Light unto others. [Rev. 1.20. & 2.5.] The Faithful are Illuminated, and Illuminators. [Eph. 5.8. Phil. 2.15, 16. Mat. 5.6.] But they have their Light no more from themselves, than a Candlestick; it all comes from the Lord Jesus Christ. [Joh. 1.8, 9. Luk. 1.78.]⁷⁰ The Gold whereof the Candlestick was composed, intimates the singular Excellency of the Faithful. [Lam. 4.2.] Of their Wisdom: [Job. 28.15. Prov. 3.14.] Of their Faith; [1. Pet. 1.7.] Of their Holiness; [1. Pet. 3.3, 4.] which are the Things that render them a Candlestick.⁷¹ The OYL, was a Figure of the Holy Spirit; [1. Joh. 2.27.] which is wanted by Foolish Professors, remaining in their Unregeneracy. His Light, not only Illuminates, but also Sanctifies.⁷² The Six Branches proceeding from one Shaft, and so, the Seven Lamps, may signify Particular Churches, & the Members thereof, united by the Holy Spirit. And then the Ornaments and Instruments about the Candlestick, may denote the various Ministries, whereby Service is done for the Church of God.⁷³ The Lamps were Lighted at the Evening; To signify, That Light will increase towards the Evening of the World. [Jer. 30.24. Dan. 12.4.] And whereas the Lamps did shine only in the Night, but were putt out in the Morning; it might intimate, as, that the Levitic Worship was to be laid aside, at the Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, so, that the Enlightening of the Church by the Word, is to continue no longer, than while we are in this World. [2. Pet. 1.19.]⁷⁴ Finally, It belonged unto the Priests, to Light the Lamps; It is done for us, firmly by the Rayes of our Lord Himself; [Luk. 2.32. Isa. 49.6.] And then, by the Ministry of the Gospel. We read concerning, The Sons of Oyl: [Zech. 4.3, 13.] Whereby Witsius thinks, the two Orders, of, The Prophets, and, The Apostles, may be intended.⁷⁵

We proceed unto the ALTAR OF INCENSE; which, in general, signified our Saviour; who was Himself an Offering of a grateful Odour unto God; [Heb. 13.10. Eph. 5.2.] and who Intercedes for us; [1. Joh. 2.1.] and by that Intercession makes our Prayers to be so. [Joh. 16.24.]⁷⁶ As the Brazen Altar figured; the Satisfaction which our Lord made for us, thus the Golden Altar figured; the Satisfaction which our Lord made for us, thus the Golden Altar, the Intercession, which He ever-lives to make. The Wood, in the Matter of this Altar, may note the Manhood of our Lord; but the Gold, His Godhead. Only Brass covered that; because while our Lord was making Expiation for us, He was yett in a State of Humiliation; but Gold covered this, to intimate that He makes His Intercession in a State of more Exalted Glory.⁷⁷ The Square Form of the Altar, notes, Christ always the same. [Heb. 13.8.] And His being accessible by His People, from the Four Quarters of the World. [Isa. 45.22.]⁷⁸ The Place of it, was the Inner Part of the Holy Place, to which none but the Priests might Retire; whereas the Place of the Brazen Altar, was, where All might look upon it. Our Saviour was crucified and offered in the Sight of all the People; but when He made His Prayers for His Church, He Retired where all the People saw Him not. [Mat. 14.23. Luk. 21.37.] And after His Oblation, He was not seen by the Common People, tho' He were among them. [Act. 10.41.]⁷⁹ The Odors here employ'd, were to signify the most Acceptable Intercession of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the Prayers of the Saints, made Acceptable by that Intercession. [Rev. 5.8. Psal. 141.2.] Which Prayers ought to be, Daily: [Psal. 55.18. Dan. 6.11. Col. 4.2.] And, According to the Will of God. [1. Joh. 5.14.] Inflamed with a Fire of Holy Zeal. [Rom. 12.11.] Not the Strange Fire of Humane Wrath. [Isa. 50.11.] And wholly Depending on the Merits of our Lord; for on the Golden Altar there were no Propitiatory Offerings. [Rev. 8.3.]⁸⁰

We arrive now to the INNER VEIL, at the Entrance of the most Holy Place. This Veil may signify the Visible Heaven, thro' which our Lord is passed into the Third Heaven; [Heb. 4.14.] Wither our Hope does follow Him. [Heb. 6.19.20.] That, like a | Veil, hides from us, the Glory, which the Lord ha's Placed above the Heavens. Except Heaven be Opened; we can't have a View of that Glory. [Rev. 4.1.] The Curious Work on the Veil, proclaimed something more curious and glorious Within: And so does the Visible Heaven. [Psal. 8.4. & 19.2.] And shall be Rolled up like a Garment, as the Veil here was, upon a Deportation and

Revolution befalling the Tabernacle. [Psal. 102.27.]⁸¹ This Veil did also signify, the Ceremonies of the Law, under which there Lay Hid, the Mysteries of the Gospel. [Compare, 2. Cor. 3.13.]⁸² But it lastly, & mainly, signified, The Flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ. [Heb. 10.19, 20.] This covers, & as it were conceals, the Glory of His Deity. [Phil. 2.6, 7.] And yett it was itself Precious and Glorious and Holy. [Heb. 7.26.] And Angels were very conversant, about it, as Cherubim were ever to be seen upon the Veil. By a Violence offered unto the Veil, there was an Entrance into the Holy of Holies; and by the like befalling the Flesh of our Lord, we gain our Entrance into the Third Heaven. [Heb. 2.9, 10. & 9.15.] Hence the Veil of the Temple, was Rent, at the Death of our Lord.⁸³

The HOLY OF HOLIES, This was a Type of that which the Scripture calls, The Third Heaven; [Heb. 9.24.] Where there is most Perfect Holiness; [Isa. 63.15.] The Throne of God; [Isa. 66.1.] Inconceivable Glory; [Psal. 8.1.] And, the Things that were signified, by the Ark, the Propitiatory, the Cherubim, & what else was in the Holy of Holies.⁸⁴

First, The ARK was here. A little Chest, of Shittim-Wood, covered with the Purest Gold; its Length two Cubits & an half, its Breadth a Cubit and an half; with a Golden Crown about it, and four Golden Rings in the Sides, accommodated with two Staves, by which it was to be carried on the Shoulders of the Levites. [Exod. 25.10.]⁸⁵

Herein was lodged the TESTIMONY. By this were meant, the Tables of the Covenant, or which were a Testimony of the Covenant which the Lord made with His People; The Tables of Stone, (made after those which were broken by Moses) whereon the Ten Commandments were Inscribed by the Finger of God. What became of the Fragments of those, which Moses broke, Haud inviti ignoramus.⁸⁶

On the Top of the Ark, was the MERCY-SEAT, at the Two Ends whereof there were two Cherubim, with their Wings extending to each other; the Shape of which Cherubim having been by Moses left wholly unmentioned, saies Witsius, Ideo fortassis omnium erit optimum, modestam hic profiteri in scitiam. In the Midst, between these Cherubim, was the Throne of God, from whence He uttered His Oracles unto those that Regularly waited upon Him for His Counsels. [Num. 7.89.]⁸⁷

⁸⁶ Witsius (§ LVII, pp. 425, 426). What became of the bread fragments, Mather wonders (perhaps alluding to John 6:12), “we have no knowledge.”

⁸⁷ Witsius (§ LVIII, pp. 426, 427) confesses that since we don’t know what Moses had in mind, “for that reason it will be perhaps best here to freely admit a modest ignorance.” The mysterious shape of the cherubim has engaged numerous theologians, past and present.

The ordinary Place of the Ark was in the Holy of Holies, within the Veil. While the Tabernacle was yett standing, the Ark was taken out from thence, and carried with the Israelitish Armies, for their Comfort, and the Terror of their Enemies. After it was lodg'd in the Temple, it was never taken out from thence, as long as the Temple stood. [Psal. 132.13, 14. 2. Chron. 5.9. 1. Chron. 28.2.]⁸⁸ The Jewes entertain us with wondrous Fables, about the Fate of the Ark, after the Destruction of the Temple. They tell us, That Solomon understanding by the Spirit of Prophecy, that the Babylonians would one Day Destroy the Temple, he præpared certain obscure Vaults, where the Ark might be rescued & præsaved from the Common Desolation; and that Josiah at length perceiving, that the Time for this Catastrophe drew near, did seasonably hide in them the Ark, and Aarons Rod, and the Urim & Thummim, and the Pott of Manna. So they expound the Text, 2. Chron. 35.3.⁸⁹ Putt the Holy Ark in the House which Solomon did build. Another Story we have in Epiphanius, (if it be indeed Epiphanius) who writes, De Vitis Prophetarum;⁹⁰ That Jeremiah the Prophet, buried these Holy Monuments, under a Rock, in the Wilderness where Moses and Aaron were buried; and that they are to ly Hid there, until the Lord come a Second Time unto Sinai, & that the Ark will be the First Thing which will appear, at the First Resurrection; Atque hoc Signum advenientis illius erit, quum videlicet gentes omnes adorabunt lignum.⁹¹ All these things are Apocryphal. Tis most likely, That the Ark was burnt in the Fire that consumed the Temple. And yett it is a little Strange, that the Chaldeans did not carry this, with the other Sacred Vessels of the Temple into Babylon.

R. Eichler has summarized this long-lasting debate in his article "Cherub: A History of Interpretation" (2015).

⁸⁹ Witsius (§ LX, p. 427). According to 2 Macc. 2:1–6 and Babylonian Talmud (Gemara) tractate Yoma (52b), Solomon and subsequently Josiah foresaw the Israelites' captivity in Babylon and made arrangements to hide the Ark when the time would come. However, the same tractate quotes evidence to the contrary: That according to the Mishnah the Ark was not "hidden away" but "had been taken away," for according to R. Eliezer, "The Ark went into exile to Babylonia" along "with the precious vessels of the house of the Lord." This opinion is confirmed by R. Simeon b. Yohai, who insists that "The Ark went into exile to Babylonia, as it was said: Nothing shall be left, saith the Lord." Alas, the debate flared up yet again with conflicting results. See tractates Yoma (53b, 54a), Horayoth (12a), and K'rioth (5b). Meanwhile, modern archeologist keep digging through the Temple mount.

Perhaps the Tradition of what befel the Philistines made them afraid, That they did not care to meddle with it.⁹²

We will not here spend any Time in giving an Account, how justly our Witsius does Refute, and Rebuke, | the profane Attempts of Spencer, to make the Ark, a meer Copy of an Egyptian Original. No Man that seriously Observes and Beleeves, the Inspired Writings of the Apostle Paul, & especially the Epistle to the Hebrewes, can without Horror & Abhorrence read the Spencerian Profanity.⁹³ [56v]

Without Controversy, we may go on to consider the true Mystery of the Ark, & its appurtenances. And what was the Ark, but a Type of our Lord Jesus Christ? The Wood and the Gold, in the Matter of it, leads us to the Two Natures in our Lord. The Wood sprang from the Earth; but such Wood as was not liable to Corruption. Such the Humane Nature of our Lord. The Strength, Purity, Fulgency, & Value of the Gold, was a fitt Emblem of His Divine Nature; with an Advice further, of the Value that we should sett upon Him. And whereas none of the Wood, nothing but the Gold, was to be seen, some think, there was this Mystery in it, That the Messiah was not yett exhibited in the Flesh; He was to be seen only in the Promises of God. The Form & End of the Ark, to contain Treasures in it, may mind us of the Treasures in our Lord. The Golden Crown on the Ark, may mind us of our Lords Crown & Kingdome. The Tables of the Covenant here, may signify, That our Lord had the Law of God in His Heart, & gloriously fulfilled it. The Staves in the Four Golden Rings carrying the Ark, may signify our Lords being in the Preaching of the Gospel, carried unto the Four Parts of the World. The Rest which the Ark had in the Holy of Holies, may signify what our Lord ha's in the Third Heaven. [Heb. 6.19, 20. Act. 3.21.]⁹⁴

92 Witsius (§ LXII, p. 428) – thus Mather – relies on Joannes Rainoldus's disquisitions on the whereabouts of the lost Ark, in his Censura Librorum Apocryphorum Vetus Testamentum (1611), Praelectio CXXXVI–XXXVII, esp. cols. 126–39. For the capture of the Ark of the Covenant and its return by the Philistines (along with their atoning emrods), see 1 Sam. 4:1–11; 5:1–12; 6:1–21.

93 Mather here skips the summary of “the Spencerian Profanity” as outlined in Witsius, De Tabernaculi Levitici Mysteriis (§§ LXIII–XXVIII), in Miscellaneorum Sacrorum Libri Quatuor (1692), lib. 2, dissertatio 1, pp. 429–41. For in his De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685), John Spencer postulated that the Mosaic Ark of the Covenant was derived from Egyptian precedent (lib. 3, diss. 5, cap. 1, secs. 4–8 and ch. 2, fols. 752–62), that the two cherubim on the Mosaic ark, like their Egyptian model, were tauromorphous representations of bulls (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 5, cap. 3, sec. 2 and cap. 4, secs. 2–4, pp. 767–85), and that the cherubim – like their Egyptian originals – had a mystical, polymorphous appearance like that in Ezekiel's vision (1:5–15, 10:8–22). Witsius's remaining sections (§§ LXVI–XXVIII, pp. 432–41), also skipped by Mather, are devoted to refuting Spencer's thesis with references to the Egyptian, Phoenician, Etruscan, and Dionysian examples of sacred arks – yet with the proviso that the Israelites did not borrow their religious symbols, objects, and accoutrements from their pagan neighbors, but that the pagans – envying the sacred cult of the Israelites – apishly imitated their rituals and cultic utensils.

94 Witsius (§ LXXIX, pp. 441–42).

The MERCY- SEAT, covering the Ark, what was it, but a Type of our Lord Jesus Christ, as Reconciling us to God? This Propitiatory was of Gold, as the Ark was of Wood; pointing us to the Deity of our Lord, which gave an infinite Value & Vertue, to the Satisfaction, that He made for us. The Tables of the Law were here covered; as are our Sins against the Law. As here was a Signal Presence of the Divine Majesty, graciously answering His People; Thus, there is a Throne of Grace erected in the Merits of our Lord, unto which we may repair with Hope of gracious Answers. Here was a Cloud filled with Bright Rayes of the Divine Majesty; the same that the Hebrewes call, The Shechinah. Intimating how there Dwells in our Lord, the Fulness of the Godhead Bodily.⁹⁵

The CHERUBIM were Emblems of Angels. They attend upon our Lord Jesus Christ, with a Perpetual Ministry. And He, by His Propitiation, ha's brought us to be in the same Society with them. The Bent with which the Faces of the Cherubim did look upon the Ark, may signify the Desire and Study of the Angels, to be acquainted with the Mysteries of Redemption. [2. Pet. 1.12.]⁹⁶

The GOLDEN POTT, was here, with an Homer of MANNA reserved in it. The Matter of the Urn is not mentioned, by Moses; and therefore the Jewes have had their Cold Conjectures about it; But our Apostle ha's determined the Matter.⁹⁷ The Precise Place where it was lodged, is not declared. It was, Before the Testimony; but whether that means the Two Tables of the Law, or the Ark which had the Two Tables in it, may be enquired. The Difficulty is increased by this; That the Old Testament saies, [1. King. 8.9.]⁹⁸ There was nothing in the Ark, besides the Tables of the Law; But the New Testament saies, [Heb. 9.4.] There was in the Ark also, the Golden Pott of Manna, and Aarons Rod Blossoming. Alting thinks, That while Moses was yett living, All these Three were deposited in the Ark; and Aarons Rod laid upon the Two Tables of the Law; and that on the Opening of the Ark, one should see each of the Three, in the Order wherein the Apostle proposes them. Nevertheless, when the Ark was to be carried up and down, as we know, it once fell into the Hands of the Philistines, tis thought, the Golden Pott, and Aarons Rod were taken out, that so the Inconveniency of their Knocking against

⁹⁷ Witsius (§ LXXXII, pp. 444). St. Paul speaks of “the golden pot (Heb. 9:4). R. Bechai, aka. Bachya ben Asher, in his commentary on Exod. 16:33 explains that “when G’d told Moses to take a צִנּוֹת, Moses did not know what material that bottle was to be made of. He arrived at the correct material by deducing it from the meaning of the word, i. e., it is something cold, i. e., צוֹנֵן, something that keeps it contents cool, preserves its contents indefinitely in earth. It must therefore be an earthen vessel” (Midrash Rabbeinu Bachya: Shemot-Yitro 3:1007). R. Abarbanel (on Exod. 16:33; Jer. 32:14) conjectures that the golden pot “de materia urnae” was fashioned “of glass, so that the manna could be seen inside” (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 2:130).

one another might be avoided.⁹⁹ Others, with Drusius, and Capellus, observe, That It, may signify in the same Sentence, both, Within, and, Anear; and so the Words of the Apostle are solved immediately.¹⁰⁰ Now, the Apostle himself calls Manna, by that Name, Spiritual Meat; that is, as Austin expounds it, Spirituale aliquid Significantem. And certainly, our Lord ha's at large instructed us, [Joh. 6.32.] That the Manna was a Type of Himself. The Analogy, we have elsewhere more largely insisted on.¹⁰¹ The Reservation of the Manna in the Holy of Holies, does advise us of our Lords Condition, since His Ascension into Heaven. Communion with the Lord Jesus Christ, in Glory, is called, An Eating of the Hidden Manna.¹⁰²

About AARONS ROD, some have been of the Opinion, that it was the | same [57r] with Moses's. The Jewes carry on the Fiction, and say, That it was taken from the Tree that sweetened the Waters of Marah; which, they add, was originally a Twig taken from the Tree of Life, by Seth, upon the Direction of an Angel, who planted it in this Wilderness; and hereupon hangs the Brazen Serpent, that is to Restore Health unto the World, in the Dayes of the Messiah. Perhaps, they intend a Parable. Indeed, many learned and solid Men, do think, That Aarons Rod, was the same with Moses's; it being expressly called, Moses's Rod. [Num. 20.11.] Dr. Owen particularly takes up this Apprehension, from R. Chaskouni, & others of the Hebrew Doctors, & finds Mysteries in it.¹⁰³ Yett, it may be doubted of.

99 Witsius (§ LXXXIV, pp. 445, 446) refers to the Dutch Hebraist Jacob Alting (1618–79), professor of theology and Hebrew at the University of Groningen. Alting discusses the issue in his analytical commentary on Exod. 16:33–34, in his Opera Omnia Theologica; Analytica, Exegetica, Practica, Problematica, & Philologica (1685–87), 1:50. On Jacob Alting's contribution to Dutch Hebraism, see Wout van Bekkum's "Die Hebraistik in den nördlichen Niederlanden" (447–69).

100 Witsius (§ LXXXV, pp. 446, 447). The Flemish Hebraist and Protestant theologian Joannes Drusius, aka. Jan van den Driesche (1550–1616), in his commentary on Exod. 16:34 (Critici Sacri, Sive Doctissimorum Virorum in S. S. Biblia Annotationes [1660], 1:535), and Jacobus Cappellus, aka. Jacques Cappel (1570–1624), in his commentary on Heb. 9:4 (Observationes in Novum Testamentum [1657], p. 192), believe that the golden urn ("urna aureum") and Aaron's flowering rod ("virga Aaronis, quae germinavit") were in or near the Ark of the Covenant.

101 See Mather's exposition of Exod. ch. 16. St. Augustine argues that Christ as the spiritual meat is typified in the Mosaic pot of manna, which is "something spiritual and significant."

102 Witsius, § sec. 86 (p. 447). See St. Augustine's In Evangelium Joannis Tractatus CXXIV: Tractatus XXV, on John 6:32 (sec. 12–15) [PL 035. 1601–04].

103 Witsius (§ LXXXVII, pp. 448, 449) – hence Mather – disagrees with John Owen's explication of Heb. 9:4, in Owen's A Continuation of the Exposition of the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Hebrews. Viz. On the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Chapters (1680), pp. 317–18 (§ 5). An English Puritan's puritan John Owen (1616–83), sometime vice-chancellor of the University of Oxford, had argued that Aaron's budding rod (Heb. 9:4; Numb. 17:6–10, 20:7–11) was the selfsame rod Moses had used when he herded the sheep of Jethro (his father-in-law), when Moses encountered God in the burning-bush episode, and when he struck the rock to extract water. This rod, Owen assures us, was the one that was placed in the Ark of the Covenant in perpetual remembrance. Perhaps unbeknownst to himself, Owen (according to Witsius, p. 449) had borrowed this interpretation from Sepher Chaskouni [Chiskuni], a Hebrew

It seems more likely, That Aarons Rod, was one of the very same Sort, with the Rods of the other Tribes. But it seems likely, That Moses's Rod, which had been employ'd in so many Miracles, was (at least, for some time,) laid up also among the Sacred Monuments, from whence the Lord ordered him to take it, for the Smiting of the Rock; An Action for which Aarons Rod, full of Blossoms, looks hardly so agreeable.¹⁰⁴ The Imposturous Roman Catholicks tell us, They have the Golden Pott of Manna, and Aarons Rod, still to show, at Rome, in the Church of S. Salvador. Not only Onuphrius Reports it, in his Book, De Urbis Ecclesijs; but also Pope Sixtus V. affirms it, in his Book entituled, Mirabilia Romæ. But the Mischief is, The French have the same to show, at Paris; the Spaniards have the same, at the Church of D. Salvador; and the People of Bourdeaux, at that of Severinus.¹⁰⁵ To have done with it; Aarons Rod confirming the Authority of his Priesthood, was, as well as Aaron and his Priesthood, a Type of our Lord, & of His Priesthood. [see Isa. 11.1. and Isa. 53.8.] The Verdure, the Vigor, the Efficacy of His Priesthood, is eternal. [Heb. 7.16.]¹⁰⁶

Near, and By the Ark, was laid up, THE BOOK OF THE LAW, written by the Hand of Moses; to be taken thence, & Read Publickly every seventh Year, at the Feast of the Tabernacles. It is probable, That Copies were still taken of it, & exactly compared with the Original, before it was laid up again. And by this Book, we have Cause to understand, no less than the whole Pentateuch. A Reverence to the Word of God, is hereby taught unto us; We are taught that Resolution; [Psal. 119.11.] To Hide the Word of God, in our Hearts, that so we may not Sin against Him.¹⁰⁷ commentary on the Pentateuch (published in Venice, in 1524), by R. Chizkiyahu ben Rabbi Manoch, aka. Chaskouni [Chiskuni, Chizkuni, Hizkuni] (fl. 1240–60), a learned French rabbi (CBTEL). R. Chizkiyahu insists that when God commanded Moses to “take the staff!” (Numb. 20:8), “G’d referred to Aaron’s staff,” the one that had blossomed (Numb. 17:6–10) and would serve Moses in good stead (Chizkuni 4:963).

¹⁰⁴ Witsius (§ LXXXVIII, pp. 449, 450).

¹⁰⁵ Witsius (§ LXXXIX, p. 450) scoffs at Onuphrius Panvinus, aka. Onofrio Panvinio (1529–68), a learned Italian historian, antiquarian, and librarian, whose De Praecipuis Urbis Romae Sanctoribusque Basilicis (1570), p. 148, lists among the holy relics in Rome the “arca foederis: in qua sunt duae tabulae Testamenti: Virga Moysi & Virga Aaron. Est ibi Candelabrum aureum, & Thuribulum aureum thymiamate plenum: Et urna aurea plena Manna. Item de panibus propositionum” (p. 148) or the “ark of the covenant, in which are the two tables of the Testament, the Rod of Moses and Rod of Aaron. Here is also the golden Candelabrum [Menorah], & the golden Censer filled with incense, and the golden urn filled with Manna, likewise the showbread.” For much (and more of) the same, see pp. 146–47. Finally, Pope Sixtus V (1521–90), was probably not the author but pontifical patron under whose auspices Mirabilia Romae (Wonders of Rome) was published, a Renaissance Baedeker to Roman antiquities. The above-mentioned holy relics are itemized in Mirabilia Romae. E Codicibus Vaticanis Emendata (1869), p. 31.

¹⁰⁶ Witsius (§ XC, p. 450).

Q. What is meant by, Cunning Work? v. 1.

A. There were (as Dr. Patrick observes,) Two Sorts of Work, more Artificial than Ordinary: The one called, Choscheb, which is here mentioned; The other called, Rokem, which we translate, Needle-Work. The Former, was the most excellent; For it was done by Weaving; and it had Figures on both Sides: Whereas, that by Needle-Work, had only on one side, as tis here noted by Jarchi; who saies, there was, suppose the Figure of a Lion on the one side, & of an Eagle on the other. Or, he should rather have said, The same Figure appeared on both sides, as Maimonides seems to take it, in his, Kele Hammikdah. c. 8. “Where soever any Work is called, Rokem, in Scripture, it is to be understood of Figures, which are made only on one Side of the Web; but the Work that is called Choscheb, had Figures on both Sides, before & behind.”¹

Q. The Veil? v. 31.

A. The Hebrew Word, Paroketh, which we translate, Vail, coming from a Perek, which signifies Hardness and Rigour; [Exod. I.13, 14.] it has made some conclude, That this Vail was of a great Thickness. The Hebrewes tells us, T’was Four Fingers Thick. This makes it the more wonderful, that it was torn in sunder at our Saviours Passion. Be sure, None could look thro’ it, into the Holy of Holies.²

¹ Patrick (Exodus 504–05). Jarchi, i. e., Rashi, distinguishes between מַעֲשֵׂה חֹשֶׁב a “work of craft” and מַעֲשֵׂה רוֹקֵם a “work of embroidery,” explaining that “each and every thread was made six-fold. Hence the four materials when woven together made each strand consist of 24 threads [Yoma 71a]. . . . Cherubim were formed in them (the drapes) through weaving, and not through embroidery which is done through needlework. But, rather, by weaving on two sides, one image on one side and another image on the other side, a lion on this side and an eagle on the other side, just as silken belts are woven [nowadays], which are called feises (woven images) in Old French [Yoma 72b]” (Chumash/Rashi: Shemos 2:388). See also R. Salomonis Jarchi, aka. Rashi (Commentarius Hebraicus [1710], p. 645). The explication of Rambam, i. e., Maimonides, appears in his Hilbot: K’lei HaMikdash (8.15), in Mishneh Torah (29:196).

² Patrick, on Exod. 26:31 (Exodus 514). Rashi clarifies that the word פָּרֹכֶת [parokhet] denotes “a dividing curtain. In the language of the Sages [it is called] פְּרָגוֹד (Chagligah) 15a [and 25a] something that separates between the king and the people” (Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus 2:441a). Gersonides, aka. Ralbag, insists that according to the sages, the curtain was “a full handbreadth thick” (JPS Migra’ot Gedolot 2:234), an estimate probably derived from the oral tradition of the Talmud, for R. Simeon b. Gamaliel explains that “the thickness of the veil was a handbreadth. It was formed of seventy-two strands, and each was made up of twenty-four threads” (tractate Tamid 29b). At the moment of Christ’s death, the curtain separating the Holy from the Most Holy of the Temple was “rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent” (Matth. 27:51).

Q. The Tabernacle, was doubtless, a Type of our Lord Jesus Christ; and particularly of His Body, wherein He Tabernacled among us. Perhaps, it were a Speculation worth our mentioning, how far the Proportion of an Humane Body was observed and answered in the Tabernacle? v. 37.

A. We will not insist upon the Opinion of the old Mathematicians, That 4 and 6 were the most perfect Numbers; and then show what a notable Regard unto these Numbers, there was in the Affayrs of the Tabernacle. But the Speculation that you call for, you must expect from some Physician; and you shall have it from an excellent one, even from Dr. Nehemiah Grew, who hath, in his Cosmologia Sacra, some Hints upon this curious Matter.³

Vitruvius tells us, Non potest Aedes ulla, (Sacram Puta) cum Symmetrià atque Proportione rationem habere compositionis; nisi uti Hominis benè figurati Membro- rum, exactam habuerit rationem. He took his Observation from the Greeks, as these might easily do from the Israelitish Tabernacle; whereof the principal Numbers and Measures answered unto those in the Body of Man, the most perfect of compounded Figures.⁴

The chief Parts, that serve to support the Body, namely, the Thighs, the Legs, and the Feet, are Six; and the Fingers and Toes, on which the Weight of the Body, may Hand or Stand, are Twenty. Thus, the Boards at the End of the Tabernacle were Six; on each side, they were Twenty.

The Four Pillars within the Vail, answered unto the Four Bones of the Cubiti;⁵ standing at much the same Distance from the West-End of the Tabernacle, as these do, when so placed on the Breast, as to make Right Angles, on each Side with the Brachium.⁶

The Five Pillars at the Door of the Tabernacle, answer to the Five Principal Commanders of the Body, the Arms, the Chine, and the Legs.

The Dimple in the Upper Lip, is Half an Inch; the First Joint of the middle Finger, an Inch. These two measure both the whole Body, and all its Parts. Nine Inches make a full Span; that is Half a Cubit; the least and common Measure of all the Parts of the Tabernacle. And if we take an Inch, for a Span, or half a Cubit, then the Breadth of a Board, that is a Cubit and half, or three Spans, answered unto the Breadth of the Foot, which is Three Inches; and the Length of a Board, which was Ten Cubits, or Twenty Spans, to the Length of the Leg, which is commonly about 20 Inches.

3 Nehemiah Grew, Cosmologia Sacra (1701), bk. 6, ch. 8, p. 253 §§ 79–86.

4 Grew (p. 253, § 79) underscores the analogical symmetry between classical temples and the human body, with a Latin citation from Vitruvius, De Architectura Libri Decem (1649), lib. 3, cap. 1, p. 38. The passage translates, “Without symmetry and proportion there can be no principles in the design of any temple; that is, if there is no precise relationship between its members, as in the case of those of a well-shaped man,” in The Ten Books of Architecture (3.1.1), p. 72.

Again, As the Breadth of the Foot, is to the Length of | the Foot (3 Inches [58v] to 10) so is the Breadth of the Body, to the Length of the Body; (3 times 6 Inches, to 10 times 6,) Unto which Measures, the Breadth and Length of the Tabernacle, were exactly proportioned; being as 3 times 6 Spans, or Half-Cubits, to 10 times 6.

It is further observable, That the Length or Heighth of the Pillars, was, as the Length of the Pillars of the Body, from the Sole of the Foot, to the Top of the Hip. And from the bottom of the Os Sacrum, to the Crown of the Head, is the same Measure; to which therefore, the Heighth of the Tabernacle was proportioned. That is to say, As the Length of the Tabernacle, was to a Man lying at his Full Length, so the Heighth of the Tabernacle, was to the Heighth of a Man sitting on the Ground⁷.

Nor were the Four Intrails of the Tabernacle (as they may be called) without their Analogy to our own. The Throne, the Incense-Altar, the Table, and, the Candlestick; not unaptly answering, in their Number, and Scituation, to the Brain, the Heart, the Stomach, and the Liver.

These Comparisons might be further prosecuted, by the Curious. But at present we desist.⁸

Q. On the Altar of Burnt-Offering, there is a very Difficult Quæstion; How was it possible to kindle great Fires, that should consume the Victims, upon an Altar made of Wood, without reducing the Wood unto Ashes? We will allow the Altar to be all covered with Brass. But would not the Fire make this Brass Red-hott? And would not such Brass communicate its Heat unto the Wood? v. 1.

A. It would require abundance of Time, to Relate & Refute, but a small Part of what has been offered by Commentators do solve the Difficulty.

To make short Work, Monsr. Saurin proposes that we seek for an Illustration in the Text itself. – There is in the Description, the Word, Compass, which occurs but once in the O. T. and there are almost as many Opinions of it, as there are Expositors. But here is the Hypothesis, which he thinks, best agrees with the Text of Moses. The Altar of Wood was concave; or perhaps entirely Hollow from Top to Bottom. It is enjoined, Hollow with Boards thou shalt make it. In this Cavity, there were placed a Couple of Instruments, or Vessels. One was the Grate of Nett-Work; T’other was that which the Hebrew calls, Carcob, and our Versions, The Compass. By this Carcob, we may understand a large Vessel, the Form whereof is not easy to be determined; on which they putt the Flesh of the Victims that were to be consumed. It was fastened unto the Altar above the Grate, by Four great Rings of Brass. By the Grate, we understand, that on which they made the Fire; and of which we may imagine a Figure most suitable to such a Purpose. It was no Part of the Altar, but it hung to it. Likewise, by Four great Brass Rings. It was a Network, full of Holes, that the Air might foment the Fire, and the more easily keep it alive. It went even to the Midst of the Altar; that is, to the Middle of the great Cavity we have spoken of; to the End there might be made a Fire big enough to consume the Sacrifice. These Two Vessels might easily be unfastened from the Altar, when it was to be carried any where, or when it was to be cleansed.¹

Q. Of what Fashion, and for what Purpose, were the Horns of the Altar? v. 2.

A. About the Shape of those Horns, there is a great Variety of Apprehension, among Interpreters; but most probably, they were certain Brazen Curvatures, like the Horns of a Bull, or a Ram; on the Corners of the Altar; they were, as Josephus tells us, κερατοειδεις;² and the Figures of Altars upon Old Coins, intimate as much unto us.

Tis a good Passage, uttered by Fortunatus Scacchius, *Expositio Sacrarum Litterarum, de Ritibus Antiquis Loquentium, difficilima est; quod Mores et Consuetudines quæ a Veteribus Judeis servabantur, tam in Sacris quàm in quotidianis Occasionibus, adeò sint Antiquate. Quamobrem ex Ethnicorum κακοζῳγία, Jure Optimo Veterum Mores explicare cogimur, et ex illis, veluti Sacrorum Institutorum prædonibus, Intelligentiam Divinorum Oraculorum, quantum conjectura concede, petere non est Incongruum.*³ And in this Way of Proceeding, wee not only find out with Sanctius, that all the Roman Altars, expressed on Coins, were Horned, after the Manner that wee have mentioned, but wee shall bee able to Dig out the Sense of more than a thousand other Scriptures.⁴

If wee now enquire, after the Use of These Horns; Tis very certain, They were not, for the Priests thereto to Tye, and Hold the unwilling Beasts, for Sacrifice: They were too weak for That. When tis said in Psal. 118.27. Bind the Sacrifice with Cords, Even unto the Horns of the Altar; it is no otherwise than so to bee paraphrased upon; and several Jewish Rabbis understand it so. Bind the Sacrifice, then slay it, so dispatch all, that belongs to it; and leave not off until you have laid it on the Altar, and sprinkled the Horns of the Altar, with the Blood thereof. There is an Ellipsis in the Words, which the Chaldee so supplies; *Ligate Sacrificium Catenis, donec Sacrificaveritis illud et effuderitis Sanguinem ejus, in Altaris Cornua.*⁵ Some other Uses of these Horns pretended unto, I shall not so much

2 Flavius Josephus, De bello Judaico (5.225, line 3), describes the square altar with horn-shaped (κερατοειδεις) corners.

3 Fortunatus Scacchus, Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacro-Prophanarum (1625; 1725), lib. 2, cap. 44, col. 509BC. Depictions of horned altars on Roman coins of Tiberius Caesar are supplied at the end of lib. 2, cap. 72, cols. 670–71. At any rate, the Latin citation from the learned Italian antiquarian and professor of theology at Verona, Padua, and Rome, Fortunatus Franciscus Scacchus (1573–1640), explains that the study of pagan religions and customs help comparatists to understand the obscure rites of the ancient Israelites: “Exposition of the sacred letters, speaking about the ancient rites, is very difficult, because the customs and habits which were observed by the ancient Jews, both in sacred and everyday occasions, are so antiquated. For this reason, from the unhealthy κακοζῳγία [i. e., imitation] of the heathens, we are most justly forced to explain the customs of the ancients; and from those (as it were) pirates of the sacred practices, it is not incongruous to seek an understanding of the holy oracles, granted only by guesswork.”

4 This paragraph (including the citation from Scacchus) and the next are extracted from John Spencer’s De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 4, secs. 1, 2, fol. 563. Spencer also enlists the affirmation of the horned altars of Rome from In Quatuor Libros Regum & Duos Paralipomenon, Commentarii (1623), p. 944, by the Spanish Jesuit theologian Gaspar Sanctius, aka. Sánchez (1554–1628). See also BA 1:984.

5 Mather (via Spencer 563) quotes from the Chaldee Paraphrast, aka. Targum Onkelos, on Ps. 118:27, in Walton’s Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (1655), 3:276: “Bind the sacrifice with chains onto the corners of the altar, until you have sacrificed it [animal] and shed its blood.” Rashi argues that these horns “must not be made separately and attached to it,” for they would not withstand the struggling sacrificial animal. Rashbam agrees with Rashi (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 2:235–36).

as mention; but instead thereof, observe, That in the Dayes of old, an Horn was an Hieroglyphic of Power: [Compare Deut. 33.17.] and the Sacred Oracles, do thereby often express Royal Power. Hence the Phœnicians putt an Horned Head, upon their Astarte; and the ancient Kings of Persia, are seen on their Coins to this day, with Horns upon their Heads. It was also an Hieroglyphic of Honour. [Compare Job. 16.15. Psal. 75.5. Lam. 2.3. where still the Targums read, Gloriam.] And hence, whatever the old Pagans had in Veneration, their Coins and their Paints, exhibited with Horns about it; Wee have even Horned Rivers of Theirs. It was likewise, an Hieroglyphic of Religion. They Dedicated Horns of old, unto their Gods & hung them upon Sacred Trees; Olaus Wormius will tell you Stories enough, of this Purport. Yea, they represented their Gods themselves, as wearing Horns; as Jupiter, Bacchus, Isis, and others: and as Lucan expresseth it, Stat tortis Cornibus Ammon; whom therefore they styled, Κριοπρωσωπος And Arnobius jeers them for it.⁶

[59v] Horns being indeed of such an | Hieroglyphical Intention, the Lord indeed would have His Altar beautified, with no more than Four of them; whereas, the Gentiles, in their Imitation, so outwent the Original, that they stuck their Altars as full of Horns, as ever they could. It was not only a, – Cornibus Ara frequens, as Martial speaks, that they affected, but also a Κερατινου βομος, An Altar of Horns, whereof you read in Plutarch and Laertius: Callimachus mentions one, all, or most, composed of Horns: In Opposition whereunto, the Horns of the Israelitish Altar, were to bee, Ex ipso of the Materials that the Altar itself was. Nor would the Lord allow any more Horns to His Altar, than might serve, to receive the Aspersions of the Sacrificed Blood, & bee touched by those that in their Prayers or Oathes, or Dangers fled thereunto.⁷

⁷ Apollo's famous altar, which Mather – but not Spencer (568) – believes imitated that in the Mosaic Tabernacle or Solomon's Temple, is by the Latin poet Marcus Valerius Martial's

After all, Monsr. Saurin, is of the Opinion, that nothing obliges us to believe, that there were any things on the Corners of the Altar, that had the Real Form of Horns; But that the Barrenness of the Hebrew Language has in this Case imposed on the Learned. There is no Word whereby for the Expressing of something that rose out from the Corners of the Altar, [And, I pray, whence the Word, Corners?] and stood upright; Perhaps then they bestow'd upon it, the Name of the most common & well-known thing, which came nearest unto it in Likeness; and therefore they called it, An Horn. Thus we call a certain Fortification, by the Name of, An Horn-Work. This Gentleman imagines, that the Prominences, or Points that were at the Angles of the Altar were called, Horns, by reason of some Resemblance to that Part, which rises out of the Heads of certain Animals. For the same Reason; the Rays of the Sun, are called Horns: being painted like Points coming out of all Parts of an Head.⁸

We may also here give yett a more certain Answer.

Q. What were the Fire-Pans? v. 3.

A. They are commonly taken for the Dishes or Censers, in which the Priest carried Burning Coals from the Brasen Altar into the Sanctuary, to offer Incense upon the Golden Altar.

But, Fortunatus Scacchus thinks, they did not minister in the Holy Place with Brasen Censers. He takes these Fire-Pans, for a larger Sort of Vessel, wherein the Sacred Fire which came down from Heaven, was kept Burning, while they cleansed the Altar & Grate, from the Coals and Ashes; and when this Altar was to be carried, from one Place to another, as it was often in the Wilderness.⁹

Q. The Lamps; Did they burn Day & Night continually? v. 20.

A. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, they did. But Monsr. Jurieu can't well Reconcile this, to, 1. Sam. III.3. and, 2. Chron. XIII.11.

If those Texts would admitt of this Interpretation, That they putt fresh Oil into the Lamps every Night, he would incline to Lightfoot. The Lamps burning without Intermission, would be a notable Type of the Light & Grace of the of Iberian Rome (40–c. 102 CE) described in his Liber De Spectaculorum (1.1.4) as an “altar wrought of many horns” superior to the one on Mycenaean Delos. Not far behind, Plutarch sings of the Κερατῶνα βωμόν, or “Horned altar” (Parallel Lives: Theseus 21.2.4) and Diogenes Laertius of κρατίνου, “the horned one” (Vita Philosophorum: Pythagoras 8.13.11), but Callimachus intones, Ἄρτεμις ἀγρώσσουσα καρήατα συνεχῆς αἰγῶν/ Κυνθιάδων φορέεσκεν, ὃ δ' ἐπλεκε βωμόν Ἀπόλλων, / δείματο μὲν κεράεσσιν ἐδέθλια, πῆξε δὲ βωμόν/ ἐκ κεράων, κεραοὺς δὲ περικεῖ ὑπεβάλλετο τοίχους, or, “Artemis hunted and brought continually the heads of Cynthian goats, and Phoebus plaited an altar. With horns builded he the foundations, and of horns framed he the altar, and of horns were the walls he built around” (In Apollinem, hymna 2.60–63).

⁹ Simon Patrick (Exodus 520) and Fortunatus Scacchus, Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacro-Prophanarum (1725), lib. 2, cap. 65, cols. 630–31; caps. 71–72, cols. 662–70.

Holy Spirit, which is inextinguishible. And possibly, the ever-burning Lamps in the Temples of the Pagans, might from hence fetch their Original. But how can this be reconciled unto that Passage, Ere the Lamp of GOD went out, Samuel was laid down to sleep; that is, In the Morning, before break of Day. Jerom saies upon it, The Lamps did not burn all the Day. And Kimchi here saies, The Lamps burnt only from Evening to Morning.

Always,] here is to be taken in the same Sense, with continual Sacrifices.¹⁰

¹⁰ Mather's primary source is Pierre Jurieu's Critical History of the Doctrines (1705), vol. 1, part 2, ch. 3, p. 343. Jurieu registers his disagreement with John Lightfoot's interpretation as mentioned in Lightfoot's An Handfull of Gleanings (1643), chs. 40, 41, pp. 48, 49 (and elsewhere), who maintained that the oil of the seven-pronged Menorah was lit day and night because its radiance typified God's spirit and the light of his grace. Among Jurieu's trusty sources are David Kimchi (in Johannes Buxtorf's Biblia Hebraica cum Paraphrasi Chaldaica et commentariis rabbinorum [1618–19], vol. 1, Exod. 27:20. vol. 1) and St. Jerome (Quaestiones in libri Regi), both of whom maintain that the most sacred candelabrum in the Temple was burning at night only; i.e., from sunset to sunrise. If Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:456) may be our guiding light here, the symbolic significance of the burning oil of the Temple's lampstand has cast a lot of shadows on the happiness of the ancient, medieval, and Post-Reformation scholars in more ways than one. Following such notables as Josephus (Antiquities 3.8.3), Hecataeus of Abdera, in Eusebius Pamphilus (Praeparatio evangelica 9.4.408c), and Philo Judaeus (De Vita Mosis 2.21.102–03; De Congressu Quaerendae 2.8) who argue that only three of the seven lamps burned during the day, the Lutheran professor of Greek and Hebrew at the University of Jena, Salomon Glassius (1593–1656), in his popular Philologiae Sacrae, Editio Tertia (1653), lib. 3, tract. 5, canon 6, p. 694 [p. 439], uses his hermeneutical snuffer to contend that the lights were not burning "continuously" but "continually," signifying that the lights were not burning day and night, but only from evening to morning. In this Glassius agreed with his peers Lyra, Oleaster, Tostatus, Lapide, Junius, Piscator, and Grotius. However, such a flickering luminosity was disagreeable to the likes of Cajetan, Simler, Ribera, Willet, and others – all of whom insisted that the lights burning "always" meant they were ablaze day and night. Still others tried to reconcile this hermeneutical sputter by agreeing to disagree: that all the lamps were alight throughout the night, but some were extinguished during the day. In this Bonfrerius joined Josephus, who (as a priest), Bonfrerius believed, must have known best what happened in the Temple. Piscator made short shrift with it all by insisting that the Menorah (like the burnt offerings of sacrificial lambs) was ablaze only at appointed times. And if R. Levi Barzelonita be allowed to shed more light on this issue, then there burned at least one lamp in honor of the Almighty, in Johannes Heinrich Hottinger's Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI (1655), sect. VIII, praecept XCVIII, pp. 125–26. And so it is; the argument is all aglow in Poole's brilliant vademecum Synopsis Criticorum (1:456) and Works (5:248–49).

Q. Lett us consider the Priest, and especially the High-Priest, as a Type; and hear something of the Gospel from him. v. 1.¹

A. The Priests were Types indeed of Ministers under the Gospel. [Mal. 3.3.] Tho' to call Ministers by the Name of Priests, for the same Cause that the Papists do it; namely, as Offerers of a Propitiatory Sacrifice, (in the Mass.) tis Erroneous & Abominable. Yea, because the Word, Priest, is for their Sakes justly become a Word of Reproach, it is fit now to bee laid aside; albeit it may come originally from the Saxon Word Preister, and the Greek, Presbyters; and so signifies no more than an Elder.²

Yea, wee may add That the Priests were Types of all *Beleever*s. [Compare, Rev. 1.6. and 1. Pet. 2.5, 9.]³

But they were eminently, Types of our Lord Jesus Christ; and most eminently, was the High-Priest so.

First, There were certain Personal Qualifications, wherein the Levitical Priesthood was Typical.

The Priest was to bee taken from among his Brethren, that is, of the Israelitish Nation. Thus was our Lord Jesus Christ; who had Hee not partook of our Nature, had not been a Fitt Mediator for us. [Heb. 2.16.]⁴

1 Mather's "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 28:1–4) identifies "Prideau [sic] XII. Lectiones" as his recommended source. Even though John Prideaux, D. D. (1578–1650), Bishop of Worcester, Vice-Chancellor, and Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford University, published several collections of his Lectiones (Oxford, 1625, 1626, 1648), Mather mistakenly refers to "Lectio XII. De Punctorum Hebraicorum origine," a lecture on the then raging dispute on the divine inspiration (or rabbinic invention) of the Hebrew cantillation marks and Masoretic pointing system. The topic was dear to Mather's heart, for it was the subject of his Harvard M. A. thesis (1681), in which he defended the divine-origin postulate but recanted many years later (BA 1:272–73, 440n 700–10). Be that as it may, what Mather was really thinking of was Prideaux's public "Oration" on Exod. 28:1–4, "Oratio Secunda Inauguralis in Promotione Doctorum," published in Prideaux's Orationes Novem Inaugurales, De Totidem Theologiae Apicibus (Oxoniae, 1626), pp. 25–48. Prideaux's "Oratio Secunda" holds forth on the subject of "De Vestibus Aaronis," on the vestments of Aaron as high priest, and was publicly delivered on the occasion of conferring the highest academic degree on eight of Prideaux's doctoral candidates at the University of Oxford, in 1617. This "Second Oration" was reprinted in XIII. Orationes Inaugurales (Oxoniae, 1642), pp. 12–22, and again in his Opera Theologica, Omnia (Tiguri, 1672), pp. 334–43.

3 Samuel Mather, Figures (1705), pp. 493, 494.

4 Samuel Mather (494, 495).

The Priest had the same Infirmities with his Brethren, and, like the Prophet Elijah, had the like Passions with them. This was fulfilled in the Sinless Infirmities whereto our Lord Jesus Christ was obnoxious. [Heb. 4.15.]

The Priest, tho' liable to Infirmities, must bee free from gross Deformities. [Lev. 21.17.] Thus, our Lord Jesus Christ had no moral Blemish, in Him. [Heb. 7.26.]

The Priest must bee called unto his Office, & not Intrude himself into it. The Apostle finds this in our Lord Jesus Christ, illustriously exemplified. [Heb. 5.4, 5.]

The Priest was to Abstain from the Use of Wine, and Strong Drink, when hee was to do the Service of God in the Sanctuary. [Lev. 10.9.] Was not the sober Wisdome of our Lord Jesus Christ, herein represented unto us? Hee was never Forgetful of, or, unready for, any Part of His Office.⁵

The Priest might marry none but a Virgin. [Lev. 21.13, 14.] The Spouse of the Lord Jesus Christ should have a Virgin-Purity & Holiness. [2. Cor. 11.2.]

Finally; The Priest might not Mourn for the Dead; no, not for his Father, nor Mother. [Lev. 21.10, 11, 12.] Natural Affections were not forbidden to him; no, but hee was to regard his Duty, before any Natural Affections. Our Lord Jesus Christ, was the greatest Exemple, of such a glorious Temper. No Earthly Relations, could stand in the Way of His Duty to His Heavenly Father. Nor did Hee contract any Pollution to Himself, in His Communion with the most Polluted Sinners.⁶

Secondly, The Holy Garments of the Priest, were of a Typical Importance. [They are enumerated, Lev. 8.7, 8, 9.] But there are elsewhere, no less than Two whole Chapters, the 28th & 39th of Exodus, employ'd upon them.]⁷

Tis said of them, in general, They were for Beauty and Glory: No doubt, because they aim'd at an higher Glory, than what was merely External and Visible.

In the Order of putting them on, the first of the Nine Particulars enumerated, is, The Embroidered Coat of Fine Linnen. This Diapered Coat, was a long Linnen Garment, that came down unto the Feet. Our Lord Jesus Christ, appeared unto John, in such an Habit. [Rev. 1.13.] The Mystical Signification of this Garment, may bee, the Righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, as well that of His own Person, as that wherewith Hee clothes Beleevers. Hence the Saints are also Represented in the like Habit. [Rev. 7.9, 13, 14. Rev. 19.8.]⁸

Then follow'd, A Girdle; which was of Fine Twined Linnen, & Blue, & Purple, & Scarlet, of Needle-Work. Our Lord Jesus Christ is thus exhibited. [Rev.

⁸ Samuel Mather (499, 500, 501).

1.13.] And so are Beleevers too. [Eph. 6.14.] It implies, Truth, sitting very close to the Heart. [Eph. 6.14.] And, Strength which wee enjoy thro' Christ. [Isa. 22.21.] And Readiness for Action, and Expedition, and Perseverance in it. [1. King. 18. ult. Act. 12.8. Luk. 17.8.]

Our Lord Jesus Christ is always in Procinctu, Ready for the Work of His Office. And so should Christians bee. [Luk. 12.35. and 1. Pet. 1.13.]⁹

Next ensued, The Robe of the Ephod. This was Blue, and Reached no farther than about the Knees. The Jewish Writers tell us, It had no Sleeves; but was divided into two Skirts only, which Joined only about the neck, but there very Strongly, with a Welt, called, a Lip. That which was most remarkable about it, was, The golden Bells & Pomegranates, that were upon the skirt thereof, at the bottom of it. The Bells of the Holy Robe, may intimate the Voice of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His Mediation, for us, now Hee is gone into the most Holy Place. [Heb. 5.7.] And the Voice of our Lord, in His Gospel, which is heard in His Church, [Rom. 10.18.] Thus also, the Ministry of the Gospel; should bee furnished, with Golden Bells, in the Voice of Prayer, & the Voice of Preaching. They Dye, if they neither Pray, nor Preach. The Pomegranates of the Holy Robe, may intimate the Sweet Fruits, and Effects, of the Voice of our Lord Jesus Christ; & the good Saviour thereof; which there ought also to bee, in the Holy Conversation of Ministers, & all Christians. There was likewise for the Holy Robe, an Hole, for the Head to bee putt in, like the Hole of an Habergeon. (An Habergeon, is a Coat of Maile, made of Twisted Wires;) Thus, Isa. 59.17.

Then came, fourthly, the Ephod itself: which was made of Gold, (first beaten into Plates, and then cutt | into Wires, & so woven into it,) and Blue, and Purple, and Scarlet, and Fine twined Linen. It seems to have been a short Coat, without Sleeves, putt upon the other Garments, to keep them close together, & reaching from the Shoulders to the Loins. There was indeed a Common Ephod; worn by all the Priests, [1. Sam. 22.18.] Yea, by some that were not Priests. [1. Sam. 2.18. and 2. Sam. 6.14.] But there was also a Sacred Ephod, which was peculiar to the High-Priest; And this was made not only of Linen, (as the former was,) but also of the Four other Materials: It had also a peculiar Ornament, of Onyx-Stones upon the Shoulder-Pieces of it: And none might make any thing like unto it, as Gideon did, unto the Ruine of his House [Judg. 8.27.23.] Now the Chief Mystery of this Garment, seems to bee This. There were Two Shoulder-Pieces belonging to it; in which were two Ouches, or Hollow Circles, wherein two Onyx-Stones, were fastened. On these two Stones, were engraved the Names of the Twelve Children of Israel; that the High-Priest might bear them, upon his Shoulders, for a Memorial before the Lord. These Things were to signify, our Lord Jesus Christ, supporting of His People; [see Isa. 9.6. and Luk. 15.5.] And presenting them unto the everlasting Remembrance of God. [See Mal. 3.16. and Eph. 5.27.] Yea, and their Appearing before God, in the (curious & costly Ephod, or the) glorious Righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ; not having their Names born before God, in an Ephod of their own Weaving.¹⁰

There succeeded, fifthly, The Curious Girdle of the Ephod. It is noted by Aynsworth, out of the Rabbins; “The Ephod had, as it were Two Hands, or Peeeces going out from it, in the Weaving of this Side, and on that, with the which they Girded it; and they are called [Cheseb] the Curious Girdle of the Ephod. This Curious Girdle of the Ephod, was tyed upon his Heart, under the Breast-Plate. This differeth from the other Girdle [Abnet] which is after spoken of, (Exod. 28.39.) and by reason of the Gold in this, which the other had not, it is called, The Golden Girdle.” For the Signification hereof, look back upon the former Girdle.¹¹

But then wee are, Sixthly, entertained with the cheef Thing of all; And that is, The Breast-Plate. Its Materials were the same with the Ephod. The Form of it, was Four-Square, a Span in Breadth & in Length. Twelve Stones, with the Names of the Twelve Tribes, were sett in it. It was fastned unto the Ephod, by four Golden Rings, in the four Corners of it. In the Two upper Rings, there were Two Chains of Gold, by which it was fastned above, unto two Golden Ouches, in the Shoulder-Peeeces of the Ephod; and in the Two lower Rings, there was a Blue Lace, by which it was Tyed unto two Gold Rings in the sides of the Ephod. [This helps to explain, 1. Sam. 23.9.] It was called, The Breast-Plate of Judgment, because the High-Priest, was to wear it upon his Breast, when hee gave forth a Sentence & Judgment from God, unto such as came to enquire after it. And it may bee called, The Judgment of the Children of Israel; because the Concernments of their Good, were there provided for. For Judgment is not alwayes putt for Punishment, but for a Wise, a Just, an accurate Administration of things: Tis a Rule; Sæpe per Nomen Mishpat, Scriptura Significat, quicquid benè et ritè ordinatum est.¹²

More particularly; The precious Stones, with the Names of the Children of Israel, do signify the whole People of God. [Gal. 6.16. and Joh. 1.47.] The Excellency of that People, may well compare them to Precious Stones. [Isa. 43.4. and Lam. 4.7.] There is an Insition of these into Christ; & there is a Comely Order among them. And as the High-Priest bore these in his Breast-Plate, for a Memorial before the Lord, so doth our Lord. [Isa. 49.15, 16. and Cant. 8.6.] The fastning of this Breast-Plate of Love, to the Shoulder-Peeeces of the Ephod, speaks the Inseparable Conjunction of the Love, and Power, and Righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the great Work of our Salvation.¹³

¹³ Samuel Mather (508, 509).

The Seventh Peece of the Sacerdotal Vestments, was, The Urim and Thummim. There is more of Difficulty and Controversy about this, than any other Peece of all the pontifical Attire. Tis evident, they were visible Materials. The Text speaks of them in the same Terms, [as] that of the rest. And the Loss of them in the Captivity of Babylon is intimated. But it is also to bee supposed, That these Materials were not Things præpared by the Workmen, as the rest of the Holy Garments were; but some Choice & Rare Monuments, given immediately to Moses, by God Himself. There is no Direction given for the making of these, as there is for the rest. The End of them was, To consult God by them, and so to receive Answers, about the Affayrs of His People. The Answers were given by an Audible Voice; perhaps, by Angels Possessing the Sacred Images. The Light and Grace in our Glorious Lord Jesus Christ was hereby represented unto us. Wee have it from Him; and this particularly for our Direction in all our weighty Concerns.¹⁴

The Eighth Peece of the pontifical Attire, was, The Mitre. This was one of the Lay Garments, that were putt on. [Zech. 3:5.] It was a Sort of a Bonnet, (somewhat like what was worn by all the Priests,) made of Linnen-Cloath, wrapped about the Head, in a round & an high Fashion. The Turbants of the East, are like it. It is an Ornament of Authority and Superiority. Hence tis translated, A Diadem. [Job. 29.14. and Ezek. 21.16.] It points us to the princely Dignity of our Lord Jesus Christ.¹⁵

| The Ninth and Last Peece of the Holy Priestly Attire, was, The Golden Plate. It is called, The Plate of the Holy Crown, and was made (say some) somewhat like unto a Crown. The Inscription was, Holiness to the Lord, or, The Holiness of Jehovah. The Royal, the Divine, the Absolute Holiness of the Lord Jesus Christ, is here exhibited: who therefore appears in the Revelation, with a Crown upon His Head. And the Cause of our Acceptance with God, is here also intimated: Hee sees nothing but Loathsomeness in us, but looking on the Face of our Lord, there Hee sees Perfect Holiness.¹⁶ [61r]

¹⁴ Samuel Mather (509, 510, 511, 512) here acknowledges the controversy that divided theologians into literalists who agreed that the Urim and Thummim (Exod. 28:30) were physical objects, separate from, or identical with, the High-Priest's breastplate; allegorists who believed they were symbols of the light and truth of the Mosaic doctrine; and agnostics who felt that the terms Urim and Thummim are of uncertain origin and indeterminate meaning. The seventeenth-century debate is neatly summarized in Poole's commentary on Exod. 28:30 (Synopsis Criticorum 1:463–65 and Works 5:276–83). See also Cotton Mather's long annotation on Exod. 28:30 (below).

Thirdly;¹⁷ Their Consecration to their Office, was a Third Thing, wherein the Priests were Types. Their solemn Investiture in their Office, was performed with sundry Sacred Mystical Rites; [Which see Exod. 29.] Tis true, there must needs bee a Disparity, between the Type & the Antitype. There were Purifications, which rather were to render the Priests, fitt for being Types, of our Lord, than to signify the doing of any Parallel Actions by Him. When our Lord saies, I sanctify myself; it is to bee understood, rather of the Effect, than of the Action, rather of the Thing itself, than of the Means of doing it. Such Expressions are used, partly in relation to the Type, wherein a Purified Priest was a Figure of a Pure Christ; and partly in relation to the Church, whereof Christ is the Head; they terminate not in His Person, which never had any Defect of Holiness; but as Calvin saies Meminerimus quæ de Consecratione dicuntur, non subsistere in ejus Personâ, sed referri ad totius Ecclesiæ utilitatem.¹⁸

Come wee to the Particular Cæremonies.

The first Part of their Consecration was, Washing with Water. This intimated the Perfect Purity, & Sanctity, of our Lord Jesus Christ. [Heb. 7.26.] And the Baptism of our Lord was herein also pointed at. Hee was thereby washed, at His Entrance upon His Public Ministry.

The Second Part of their Consecration, was, The Apparrelling of them with the Holy Garments. These betokened the Excellencies which our Lord Jesus Christ is adorned withal.

The Third Thing in it, was, The Anointing of them with the Holy Oyl. This was to signify, the Holy Spirit resting on our Lord Jesus Christ [Isa. 61.1. Act. 10.38. Joh. 3.34.] Hence Hee is called, The Christ, The Messias, The Anointed. And as this Holy Oyl, stay'd not upon Aarons Head, but ran down in the skirts of his Garment: [Psal. 133.2.] Thus the Holy Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, is defused unto all His Members. [1. Joh. 2.20, 27. Joh. 16] Moreover, The Tabernacle, and all the Holy Vessels, were at the same Time anointed with the same Oyl: To Teach us, That Ordinances and Performances profit not, unless the Spirit, with the Power and Presence of His Grace, bee in them. And, As This Holy Oyl might not bee putt unto any Common Use, thus Carnal Men have not the Spirit: nor may the Ordinances, nor Graces, of God, bee counterfeited, any more than that Holy Oyl.¹⁹

The Last Thing in it was, Their Sacrificing, & being Sanctified with the Blood of the Sacrifice. Accordingly, Our Lord Jesus Christ, was consecrated unto the full Execution of His Priestly Office, by His Death and Sufferings. Hee could proceed

17 From Samuel Mather's sermon "The Gospel of the Consecration of the Priests," preached on Feb. 21, 1668, in Figures or Types (1705), pp. 520–27.

18 Samuel Mather (521–22). The Latin citation from John Calvin's Commentary, on Exod. 29:16, reads, "But we must remember that what is said of the consecration [of Christ] does not apply to His own person, but refers to the profit of the whole Church" (Commentary 2:212).

19 Samuel Mather (522, 523).

unto that Part of His Priestly Office which Hee is now executing in Heaven, & save unto the uttermost them that come unto God by Him, till Hee had suffered the Pains of Death. Tis true, Hee was a Priest before His Death; but it was in a State of Abasement: Hee could not execute the Triumphant Part of His Priestly Office, till Hee was Consecrated thro' Sufferings. [See Heb. 2.10. And the Greek, τελειόω, thus employ'd by the LXX. Exod. 29. & Lev. 8.] But some further apply this to the Gospel-Ministry: That the Gospel-Ministry is consecrated by the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ.²⁰

Now the Sacrifices of Consecration, had Sundry Rites belonging to them, which were common to all the Sacrifices. These are elsewhere explained: and therefore, wee will here insist only on those that were more peculiar to these.

First, All sorts of Sacrifices were to bee offered; a Sin-Offering, a Burnt-Offering, and a Peace-Offering: To teach us, not only the Special Holiness, that should bee in such Persons, as were now concerned; but also the deepness of the Stain, & the Guilt of Sin, that required so many Expiations; and the compleat and perfect Cleansing that is afforded by the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Secondly, The Order & Method of the Sacrifices was observable; first the Sin-Offering, then the Burnt-Offering, then the Peace-Offering. Till Sin bee done away, all our Services are abominable; when wee have the Pardon of our Sin, then wee may offer up our whole Selves, as an Holocaust, fired by the Holy Spirit, unto the Service of God: Then will follow Thankfulness, in Assurance of our Peace with Heaven.

Thirdly; The Blood was to bee putt on the Tip of the Right Ear, the Thumb of the Right Hand, and the Great Toe of the Right Foot, of the Priests. To signify, that Sanctification must extend unto the whole Man. [1. Thess. 5.23.] There should bee in Spiritual Priests, a Sanctified Ear, to Abhor corrupt Communications, and Receive Holy Instructions; a Sanctified Hand, for Working, and Foot, for Walking, in the Wayes of God. It may bee also intimated, That the external Application of a Sacramental Sign, to some principal Part of the Body, is enough Significative of Universal Cleansing.

Lastly; Moses was to fill the Hand of the Priests, with certain Parts of the Sacrifices: which is the Reason why Consecration is called, A Filling of the Hand. Parts of the Sacrifices, were putt into their Hand, as a Symbol of their now being entrusted with the Work of Sacrificing. [Compare, Joh. 3.27, and 35.] Indeed no Man should undertake any Office, until the Lord fill his Hand with & committ it unto him.²¹

²¹ The preceding paragraphs are from Samuel Mather (525, 526).

Fourthly, The Last Thing, wherein the Priests were Types, was their Priestly Ministration. [Whereof see Num. 18.]²²

[61v] Their Work was, The Charge of the Sanctuary; and the Altar, with its Vessels, and the Services thereof. They were to Bear the Iniquity of the Sanctuary; that is, the Punishment of whatever should be done amiss therein. | Now, As the Holy Vessels were committed unto the Priests, thus the whole Church of God, with all the Graces, the Duties, the Comforts of it, are committed unto the Charge of the Lord Jesus Christ. [Joh. 3.35.]

As the Priest, was to order the Sacrifices; to Kill them, to Dress them, & Sprinkle the Blood of them; so did our Lord Jesus Christ, by the great Sacrifice of Himself. [Heb. 8.3.]²³

The Priests were to Light the Seven Sacred Lamps of the Golden Candlestick. Thus is the Church Enlightened by our Lord Jesus Christ. [Compare, Rev. 1.20.]

The Priest was to Burn Sweet Incense on the Golden Altar. This points us to the Intercession of our Lord Jesus Christ. [Compare, Rev. 8.3, 4.]

The Priest was to Set the Shew-bread on the Golden Table, before the Lord, every Sabbath. So does our Lord Jesus Christ, present the whole Number of His Elect before the Lord continually.

The Priest was to Bless the People in the Name of the Lord: And well hee might, when they had such Enjoyments. Thus does our Lord Jesus Christ Bless His People; [See Luk. 24.50. and Act. 3.26.]²⁴

Now there were Three Things, peculiar to the High-Priest above the rest.

Hee had a Superiority of Jurisdiction, over all the Ministers of the Sanctuary, Our Lord Jesus Christ, is in like Manner Ἀρχιποιμην, The Cheef Shepherd, unto the Church of God.²⁵

Hee was also cloathed with Peculiar Garments of Beauty and Glory. The Inferior Priests, had but Four Priestly Garments; Linnen-Drawers, and Coats, and Girdles, and Bonnets; But the High-Priest had a Breast-Plate, and an Ephod, a Robe, a Brodered Coat, a Mitre, and a Girdle, with the Urim & Thummim, and Precious Stones in his Breast-Plate, and on the Shoulders of his Ephod, and a Crown or Plate of Gold upon his Mitre. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ, is fairer than the Children of Men.

Hee had a Third Prærogative, in His glorious Ministration on the Great Day of Atonement; when hee went, which none but hee might, into the most

²⁵ 1 Pet. 5:4: Ἀρχιποιμην or "chief shepherd."

Holy Place. Our Lord Jesus Christ is accordingly entred into the Holiest of all. [See Heb. 9.12, 24.]²⁶

But wee are here to call unto Mind, That there was a Second Sort of Temple-Officers, namely, The Levites. The Lord sparing the First-born of Israel, when Hee slew the First-born of Egypt; Hee challenged the First-born to bee Sanctified unto Himself: but Hee afterwards took the Levites instead of the First-born. They became now Subordinate Ministers unto the Priests, in the Outer Administrations of the Temple; To the Inner Ones of the Sanctuary & the Altar, they were not Admitted; more particularly, They were to bear the Tabernacle, & all the Holy Vessels; (thus our Lord bears His Church:) But when the Tabernacle was changed into a Temple, that Service was at an End.²⁷

They were to Assist the Priests, in killing the Sacrifices, and what was præparatory to it.²⁸

In the Gospels of this, our Lord, who was the Sacrifice, was also Priest and Levite.

They were to Teach the People, in the Law of the Lord: & they were therefore dispersed among the Tribes. Our Lord still Teaches His People, by His Ministers.

They were to Judge Cause, & Determine Controversies. This points us to the Discipline, still to bee mentained in the Church.

They were to Sing the Songs of the Temple, and Manage the business of the Temple-musick. The Melody of the Grace & Joy of the Holy Spirit, answers it.

Some of them were Treasurers. [1. Chron. 26.20. –] Our Deacons are now our Levites.

Finally, others of them were Porters. They kept the Gates of the House of the Lord; They kept out the Unclean from Entring. As well guarded should bee the Gates of Gospel-Churches.²⁹

Lastly; A Third sort of Temple-Officers, were the Nethinims, or Gibeonites. [Whereof see Josh. 9.21, 23, 27.] They had Lodgings near the Temple, tho' their proper Dwellings were in their own Cities.

Their Work was to provide, & bring in Water, to the Lavers, and Molten Sea, and provide Wood, for the Fire of the Altar. The Time when they did it, seems to have been Early in the Morning, and Late at Night. And thus having Access into the Courts of the Temple, they came to see and know something of the Worship of the True God. Now, saies David, Psal. 84.10. Better bee a Door-keeper in the House of God, than to dwell in the Tents of Wickedness: Better bee but a Gibeonite in the Worship of the True God, than an High-Priest in the Temples of Baal.³⁰

But thus much for the Gospel of the Levitical Priest-hood. For which, and for that of the Sacrifices, I am very particularly indebted unto the Discourses, of my Uncle, Mr. Samuel Mather, on the Types of the Old Testament.³¹

Q. Had Levi a Stone with his Name on it, in the Breast-Plate, or no? v. 17.

A. Nay; who can tell?

If he had not, then Ephraim and Menasseh must be distinctly reckoned, as Jacob had said, they should be; And the High-Priest himself, being Head of the Tribe of Levi, sufficiently represented the Tribe. If there was a Stone for Levi, as tis intimated by That; They were Engraven according to their Birth; then Ephraim and Menasseh were one in Joseph.³²

Q. It is a Direction given in that Paragraph where the Illustrious Habiliments of the High-Priest, are directed; Thou shalt putt in the Breast-Plate of Judgment, the URIM, and the THUMMIM; and they shall be upon Aarons Heart, when he goes in before the Lord. Now the Question is, What is the URIM, and THUMMIM? v. 30.³³

³⁰ Samuel Mather (534).

³¹ Here ends the excerpt from Samuel Mather's The Figures or Types of the Old Testament (1705), pp. 493–534.

A. And a great Question it is; nor may wee be very confident about an Answer to the Question, when we see such a Jew as Kimchi confessing, Non Satis Expli-catum est apud nos, quid sint Urim & Thummim: and such a Christian as Munster confessing, Quales fuerint nemini mortalium constat.³⁴

It is very clear, That the Urim and Thummim, were a certain Oracle, by Di-rections from which, the Lord exercised His Government over the Church and State of the Israelitish Nation, in the better Times of their Theocracy.

It seems plain, That they who consulted this Oracle, must be none but Public Persons; or, as in the Talmud (Joma. c. 7 in Mischná,) it is well observed; Non consulebantur Urim et Thummim, nisi pro Rege, vel Patre Domus Judicij, vel alio quo Ecclesia opus habet.³⁵

Nor might any Man bring the Case unto this Oracle, but a Priest; nor might every Priest putt on the Vestment whereto it belong'd, but one, Super quo Spi-ritus Sanctus habitabat, as the Jewish Writers inform us; and R. Levi ben Gerson in particular. Nay, it seems to have been a Prærogative peculiar unto the High-Priest, who alone might go in before the Lord, in the Holy of Holies, which is Buxtorf's Argument for that Opinion.³⁶

34 Kimchi's Latin translation is extracted from John Spencer's Dissertatio de Urim & Thum-mim (1669), cap. 4, sec. 1, § 6, p. 36. Spencer subsequently incorporated this dissertation as Dissertatio Septima De Urim & Thummim, in his magisterial De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 3, fols. 851–988. Hereafter, all citation references to De Urim & Thummim are to his 1685 edition of this work. Thus Mather's extracted passage appears in Spencer's De Legibus Hebraeo-rum (1685), lib. 3, diss. 7, cap. 3, sec. 1, § 6, fol. 864. Spencer's own vademecum is R. David Kimchi ספר השרשים Sepher Haschoreschim, Liber Radicum (1552), voce אור. My reference is to Sepher Haschoreschim, Radicum Liber (1847), p. 7, voce אור (col. 1). R. David Kimchi con-fesses, "It is not sufficiently explained among us what Urim and Thummim may be." Mun-ster adds, "What they may have been is agreed by no one among mortals." Spencer's citation (864) – here quoted by Mather – originates in Sebastian Münster's Hebraica Biblia (1546), on Exod. 28, fol. 168, note (d).

35 The primary source text for this paragraph, as indeed for Mather's entire commentary on Exod. 28:30, is De Historia Urim et Thummim, in Johannes Buxtorf's Exercitationes Ad Historiam (1659), pars III, pp. 267–333. Mather's Latin quotation from the Talmud, tractate Yoma (71b) and the Mishna, tractate Yoma (7.5) originates in Buxtorf's Historia Urim et Thummim, cap. 3 (Exercitationes, p. 294) and reads, "The Urim and Thummim were not inquired of, but for the king, for the Court, or for one of whom the congregation had need" (The Mishnah 171). It is telling that Mather's Latin citation of Yoma (71b) is extracted from Buxtorf (p. 294) rather than from the variant Latin translation in John Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 7, cap. 1, sec. 2, fol. 857. See also Tractatus de Die Expiationis (7.5), in Surenhusius, סדר מועד [Seder Moed] sive Legum Mischnicarum Liber qui inscribitur Ordo Festorum, pars Altera (1699), fol. 248. On Christian Hebraism in the seventeenth-century, see S. G. Burnett, "Later Christian Hebraists" (785–801).

36 According to R. Levi Ben Gerson (Gersonides), as cited in Buxtorf's Historia Urim & Thummim, cap 3 (Exercitationes Ad Historiam, pars III, § 2, p. 295), only a priest "upon whom the Holy Spirit dwelled" could consult the oracle.

It is remarked by Abarbenel, Requiritur ut Interrogatio per Urim, sit consilium quod spectet negotium totius populi, et non queritur de re particulari et privata alicujus Hominis.³⁷

And this may a little help us to understand where the Emphasis of Abimelechs Purgation lies, when he pleads unto Saul, (1. Sam. 22.14, 15.) his Innocency from any Conspiracy with David against him. Would he have consulted the Urim for him, if he had not imagined him a Public Person, employ'd for & from the King? Or, would the Urim have answered him, if he had not been a Person, whom it was a Duty in the High-Priest, for to pay so much Respect unto, as to consult for him?³⁸

The Admirable Buxtorf, therefore lovingly corrects the Mistake of his dear Friend Cuneus; That it was David himself, who putt on the Ephod, and managed the Consultation for himself: tho' Cuneus be marvellously confident in it.³⁹

It was indeed upon all Accounts most agreeable, That it should be the Office and Honour of the High-Priest peculiarly, to Address this Heavenly Oracle. The Dignity of the Oracle, was thus præserted, & Men were kept from soliciting it, with such Curious, Trifling, Idle Quæstions, as those which the Impious Pagans did usually affront their Gods withal, and, (as Lucretius phrases it,) even Sortes fatigare.⁴⁰ This Tree of Knowledge, it was fitt should have a Reverend Keeper. And the Title of the High-Priest himself, was gloriously asserted and maintained, by the Confinement of the Oracle unto him. When Moses præferr'd his Kindred unto the Priesthood, we read in Philo, Id Moses factum non caruit calumniâ; the People Reproached him, ως τους μεν χρησµους επιψευσµενου, and as being too partial to his own Family. But the Grant of the Custody of this Oracle from Heaven unto them, was their Vindication, and Heavens Declaring on their

behalf.⁴¹ Hence Diodorus Siculus, mentions the Veneration, which the Jewes had, for their High-Priest, as under this Character; νομίζουνσιν αὐτον Ἀγγελον γίνεσθαι τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ προσταγμάτων, They look on him, as the Messenger of the Divine Oracles.⁴² And that which after all, might have the Principal Influence upon this Matter, was, The Design of God, that the High-Priest should be a Type of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, our Mediator, who brings the Will of God unto us, as well as our State unto God. I am glad therefore to find, the learned Spencer, in the Midst of a thousand indefensible Things advanced by him, to assign this good Reason, for this Privilege of the High-Priest, ut in eo Messiae imaginem saltem animae purgationes contemplari possent.⁴³ And more glad I am, to find this Acknowledgment made by the most learned Grotius; [in Mat. 1.22.] Deus in totâ priorum Temporum Oeconomîâ, Christum ejusque res gestas, ut pulcherrimam ac perfectissimam speciem perpetuò veluti ante oculos habens, cætera omnia ad illius instar effinxerit.⁴⁴

Nevertheless as there were few or none of the Mosaic Institutions, which did not at some time or other, on extraordinary Occasions & Necessities, admitt of some Dispensations; David with his Company ate of the Shew-bread, when Hunger pressed them; and Godly Israelites often worshipped God in the High Places, and erected Altars far enough Distant from the Tabernacle; tho it had been otherwise Instituted: So it seems, as if other Priests, of an high Character, next unto the High-Priest, were allow'd in some extraordinary Circumstances, to consult the Urim. Phinehas, while his Father was yett Living, [Num. 31.6.] | seems to do it: For the Holy Instruments which he there carries to the War, are by the Chaldee Paraphrase reckoned the Urim and Thummim. Whether the King might not also be allow'd sometimes, this Access to the Oracle in his own Person; or whether

so much may be gathered from Sauls not being Answered by the Urim, [1. Sam. 28.6.] I cannot say.⁴⁵

Indeed, tho' this Oracle might be granted unto the Israelitish Nation, for their Conduct in other Affayrs of Weight, yett the Affayrs of War do seem those, for which it was most eminently designed. You find this Observation confirmed, in the most Usual Application of this Oracle, mention'd in the Sacred Pages. This may be the Reason, why the Oracle of the Urim and Thummim was appointed, besides that which was heard, in Matters of Importance, from the Mercy-Seat upon the Ark, in the Tabernacle. The Tabernacle could not so well follow the Camp. And from this also may be suggested unto us a Reason, why we don't find Solomon so frequently consulting the Oracle of the Urim and Thummim, as we do his Father David. The Reign of Solomon was extremely Peaceable.

It is observable, that from the Dayes of Joshua, to the Dayes of Solomon, there was more frequent Recourse to the Urim for Direction, and less to the Prophets, mentioned. Yea, tis the Opinion, of Dr. Spencer, That in the Dayes of Solomon, this Oracle gave up the Ghost, and left the World. The Nation was more immediately under the Government of God, (who by this Oracle managed very much of His visible & glorious Government;) while God chose their Judges and their Princes. But when Solomon came to sitt upon the Throne, the Kingdome was become Hæreditary; and the Government which had been more immediately in the Hands of God, was now putt into the Hands of Men; and by the Votes of Men too, was it wrested into such Hands. Abiathar could hardly have been seduced into the Crime of High Treason, against Solomon, if the Oracle had not now been silent. And after this, if Hilkiah the High-Priest, want information about the State and Fate of the Kingdome, not the Oracle, but the Prophetess, must be his Adviser.⁴⁶

This is well-known; The Hebrew Doctors do generally agree, That the Urim were one of the Five Things wanting in the Second Temple. They, as well as Josephus, tell the Story, of the High-Priest confessing thus much unto Alexander, when he would have learnt by him, the Success of his Expedition into Persia.⁴⁷ Among other Passages in the Talmuds to this Purpose, This is one; Ex quo vastata est Domus Sanctuarij prioris, cessarunt civitates Refugij, Urim et Thummim, et Rex de Domo Davidis.⁴⁸ And Abarbenel gives this Reason for it; Because all the

⁴⁸ Mather's citation from the Talmud, tractate Sota (48b) appears in a Latin translation in Johannes Buxtorf's Historia Urim et Thummim, cap. 5, in Exercitationes (1659), pp. 321–22. It

Twelve Tribes of Israel were not in their own Land, all the Time of the Second Temple, but still detained in their Assyrian Captivity. Now, it is the Observation of a learned Man, That the Names of the Twelve Tribes written upon the Gems of the Ephod, intimated who they were, that had a Claim to the Benefit of this Renowned Oracle. And it is a good Note of Buxtorf, That the failing of this Oracle, was to signalize the Approach of the Time, when the Messiah, the Sun of Righteousness was to arise unto the World; and, I may add, perhaps to increase the Thirsty Desires of the Faithful after His Appearing.⁴⁹

But the main Difficulty before us, is, what were the Urim and Thummim?

Now, in the first Place, I do with much Distaste Reject the Opinion of Spencer, which is in the Main, the same with what was advanced by Christophorus à Castro, and which he has with a vast Variety of Reading and Learning Improved:⁵⁰ And because I Reject it, I will not so much as Translate it, but give it unto you in his own Words. As for the Urim, he saies; Urim Instrumentum concavum decorè fabricatum (simulacrum forsan parvulum ad humanam similitudinem formatum) Theraphim antiquitus appellatum, fuisse videtur; quod reconditum gestavit Sacerdos, intrà concavas Rationalis plicaturas, quo mediante, Deus, aut Angelus, illius vice et Nomine, ad Pontificis interrogata respondit, eumque quid ex usu esset agere, quid non agere, quid præsens, quid futurum, voce formata docuit. (c. 4. s. 2.) And again; *Facile in eam venio sententiam, veterem à Theraphim oracula petendi ritum, Deum in pectoralis Urim, penè invariaturum Israelitis reservasse, adeoque Judæorum Urim ejusdem cum Theraphim muneris et figuræ fuisse, sub diverso tamen nomine imagunculam.*⁵¹ reads, “When the first Temple was destroyed, [...] the Urim and Thummim ceased, there was no more a king from the House of David” (Soncino Talmud, tractate Sota 48b). However, Maimonides in Hilchot K’Lei Hamikdash Vibaovdim Bo (10.10) insists that “In the Second Temple, they made the Urim and the Tumim [sic] to complete the eight garments [of the High Priest] even though inquiry was not made of them.” Why not? “Because the Holy Spirit was not vested there. And whenever a priest does not speak with the Holy Spirit and the Divine Presence does not rest there, inquiry is not made” (Mishneh Torah 29:210).

⁵¹ Mather here quotes from the French theologian Philippus Riboudealdus Cabilonen-sis (fl. 1650–1700), whose Sacrum Dei Oraculum Urim & Thummim (1685), vociferously attacks Spencer’s Dissertatio De Urim & Thummim in Deuteron. v. 33. v. 8 (1669). [The revised version of Spencer’s 1669 Dissertatio was republished in Spencer’s De Legibus (1685), lib. 3,

As for the Thummim, (tho' the Bible sometimes mentioning Urim without Thummim, [Num. 27.21. & 1. Sam. 28.6.] implies that they were the same,) Spencer distinguishes it from the Urim; and because he finds in Ælian, and in Diodorus, That the High Priest among the Ægyptians wore a Sapphire, hanging at his Collar, which was called, Ἀληθεια; and he finds that Ἀληθεια is the Name [63r] which the LXX putt upon the Thummim, he therefore concludes, Probè norunt | eo Interpretes, imaginem Thummim dictam, de Pontificis Judaici cervice pendentem, à Pontificis Ægyptiaci simulachro Ἀληθεια dicto, originem accepisse. (c. 4. s. 12.)⁵²

This harsh, and hard, (and I may say, Horrid) Opinion of Spencers, is well confuted, by a learned Foreigner, one Philippus Riboudealdus, in a Book printed in Geneva, 1685.⁵³ unto whom I refer you, if you want further Satisfaction. But what needs it, when we shall find an Abundant Confutation of it, in the express Words of God unto Israel; *After the Doings of the Land of Egypt, wherein yee dwelt, shall yee not do: And after the Doings of the Land of Canaan, whither I bring you, yee shall not do; neither shall yee walk in their Ordinances:*⁵⁴ Whereas this unhappy Scholar employes a vast Learning, to make the Urim and Thummim, (that illustrious Oracle) with which the God of Heaven distinguished His ancient People, diss. 7, fols. 851–988]. In his Sacrum Dei Oraculum Urim & Thummim (1685), pp. 6–7 (here quoted by Mather), Riboudealdus loosely paraphrases, rather than quotes, from Spencer's Dissertatio (1669), cap. 4, sec. 2, pp. 40–41 (De Legibus Hebraeorum [1685], lib. 3, diss. 7, cap. 3, sec. 2, p. 866). At any rate, Mather's lengthy second-hand citation from Spencer, by way of Riboudealdus (pp. 6–7), signifies, "Called in ancient times Theraphim, the Urim seems to have been an hollowed instrument elegantly made (perhaps a very small effigy, shaped in a human likeness), which the priest wore hidden within the hollow folding of the oracular breastplate, with which mediating, God, or an angel, answered the questions of the High-Priest after His manner and name, and taught him with a composed voice what to do to best advantage, what not to do, what was the present, and what the future." And again, "I come easily into that opinion, regarding the ancient practice of seeking prophecies from the Theraphim, that God had reserved unto Urim of the breastplate almost without change for the Israelites, and so the Jews' Urim had been of the same function and figure as the Theraphim, a little copy yet under a different name."

⁵² Mather's references to the Roman rhetorician Claudius Aelianus (Varia historia 14.34.3–8) and to the Greek historian Diodorus Siculus (Bibliotheca historica 1.48.6.6–7; 1.75.4.4–6.1) appear in Spencer's Dissertatio De Urim & Thummim (1669), cap. 4, sec. 12, p. 205, and in De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 7, cap. 4, sec. 1, fols. 923, 924. The Greek noun ἀλήθεια (LXX, Ps. 56:11) generally signifies "truth, truthfulness," and "righteousness." Mather's second-hand Latin quote from Riboudealdus's Sacrum Dei Oraculum (pp. 164, 165) is adapted from Spencer's Dissertatio de Urim & Thummim (1669), cap. 4, sec. 12, p. 208. See also Spencer's De Legibus (1685), p. 925, cap. 4, sec. 2. Spencer concludes from the functional similarity between the Greek ἀλήθεια, the Egyptian Theraphim, and the Israelite Urim, "The interpreters rightly knew thereby that the figurine called Thummim, hanging from the neck of the Jewish High-Priests, had received it origin from the figure known as Ἀληθεια [Truth] belonging to the Egyptian high-priests."

to be Their Ordinances, or the Diabolical Ordinances of the Egyptians and Canaanites, Imitated and Continued by the Holy Angels of Heaven. Maimonides utters more Christianity, than this Gentleman, when he asserts, *That the Jewish Rites, præscribed that People by God, were not an imitation of the Pagan Rites, but were in absolute Opposition to them.*⁵⁵ And Riboudealdus makes it very sensible to his Readers, That the Teraphim (whereof he thinks, Terah might be the first Inventor,) were not the same with the Seraphim, or, with the Urim; and that it is much more likely, the Gentiles (and particularly the Egyptians, in the Case of Αληθεια, especially after the Translation of the LXX.) did imitate the Israelites in these Matters, than that the Israelites did imitate the Gentiles, or that (which – horresco referens,) Heaven did Ape the Divel.⁵⁶

We will pass to some further Conjectures.

And here, I will not insist upon that famous one, That the Urim and Thummim, were the Twelve Stones in the Breast-Plate of the High-Priest, great Numbers of learned Men, have subscribed unto this Doctrine of the Talmud.⁵⁷ But Moses evidently makes the Urim and Thummim distinct from the Stones. And tho' the Doctors go on with telling us, That a more than ordinary Shine of the Stones, was

⁵⁶ See Riboudealdus (39, 43–44, 101–02, 138, 144, 200–01, et passim). Mather and his peers are indeed appalled by Spencer's "dreadful proposition" that the Urim and Thummim were not bestowed upon Moses by God but were borrowed from analogical oracles of the Israelites' pagan neighbors – as if God aped the devil's devices, Mather remonstrates. In fact, a veritable cottage industry seemed to have sprung up in the seventeenth century to prove that the remarkable resemblances between pagan and Israelite rituals arose from the gentiles' envious practice of imitating Israel's glorious religion. Theophilus Gale's enormous Court of the Gentiles (1669–78), Gerardus Johannes Vossius's colossal De Theologia Gentili (1641), and Pierre-Daniel Huet's huge Demonstratio Evangelica Ad Serenissimum Delphinum (1679) – all asserting Mosaic primacy – are foremost examples of this type of anxiety of influence. The early theologian of the Alexandrian school, Clemens Alexandrinus, is the likely origin of such claims (Stromata 1.21–29; 2.5, 18, 22; 5.14; 6.3–5). See also A. J. Droge's Homer or Moses?

⁵⁷ See Appendix A. Exod. 28:30. Among those who insisted that the Urim and Thummim were identical to the twelve stones on the High-Priest's breastplate were Buxtorf, Fagius, Oleaster, Rivet, Osiander, Lippomanus, and Brentius, in Poole (Synopsis Criticorum 1:463) and Works (5:277) and R. Asariah ben Moses dei Rossi (c 1513–78), in Buxtorf's Historia Urim et Thummim, cap. 2 (Exercitationes 293–94) and in Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 7, cap. 2, fol. 861. The Talmud, tractate Yoma (21b) and Mishnah in Yoma (71b, 72b) do not clearly distinguish the breastplate from the Urim and Thummim. See also C. van Dam's Urim and Thummim (1997).

the Way of receiving Answers from this Oracle, (which is also intimated by Josephus, and Suidas quotes more particular Curiosities, about the Change of Colour in the Stones,) we find such Answers given sometimes, as could not be expressed this Way.⁵⁸ They proceed therefore, to tell us, That the Letters of the Names engraven in the Stones, did so distinguish themselves, in the Shine, upon Consultation, as being putt together to make up the Answers of the Questions proposed.⁵⁹ But because all the Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet, were not contained in those Names, they have a fancy, that, the Names of, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were added, and these words /שבטי יה/ The Tribes of the Lord; and so there was a full Alphabet.⁶⁰ But all this is Rabbinical Fagment! Nor is the Notion of Procopius among the Ancients, & Arias Montanus among the Moderns, about finding the Urim and Thummim in the Two Stones, distinct from the Twelve, any better.⁶¹

I will only offer you, as fairly, but as briefly as may be, the Opinions of Three Authors; from which you may take your Choice, as you please.

The First Author, that shall bespeak your Attention, shall be Dr. John Edwards, who has written, An Enquiry, upon this Matter.⁶²

⁵⁹ See Rabbi Asariah, in Meor Enajim (cap. 46 and 50), in Buxtorf’s Exercitationes (281–82).

⁶² Mather’s trusty vademecum is John Edwards’s conservative A Farther Enquiry into Several Remarkable Texts of the Old and New Testament (1692), “The Second Text enquired into, viz. Exod. 28.30,” pp. 45–80.

He supposes, That the Urim and Thummim, were No Things at all, but only Words; and particularly those Two Words, /אורים/ and /תמים/ engraved on the Breast-Plate of the High-Priest.⁶³ This, he thinks, is agreeable to the Expression, Thou shalt putt them in the Breast-Plate. In the Original tis, Thou shalt give in the Breast-Plate. Now, there are Instances enough, to show, Giving, a Phrase to signify Writing. [Ponder, Esth. 3.14. and Jer. 31.33. and Heb. 8.10, & 10.16.]⁶⁴ And we read of this very Thing done in the Pontifical Habiliments; when, HOLINESS TO THE LORD, was Written on the Plate, worn on the Forehead of the High-Priest. Why may not This on the Breast-Plate, be of the same Nature with that of the Head-Plate?⁶⁵ Since we have only the bare Names of the Urim and Thummim, and no Directions about Preparing them, when we see the Inspired Historian so punctual in all the other Ornaments of the High-Priest, he thinks, it is a broad Hint of their being but Bare Names; and he argues it further, from Josephus's not saying a Word of them, when he spends a whole Chapter, in his Antiquities, upon the Sacerdotal Garments.⁶⁶ He finds in old Cyril of Alexandria, a Shrow'd Hint, that the Urim and Thummim were only γραφή εν μικρῳ πινακίῳ An Inscription in a small Table; and he was a Man very sagacious in finding out the Mysteries of the Scripture;⁶⁷ And he finds this Opinion countenanced by something in Austin, in Procopius, in Philo, of old; and of late, in Salianus, in Bellarmino, in Haye, and especially in A Lapide.⁶⁸ But how the Answers were made by these Written Words, all he saies, is, I am not sollicitous to Resolve you. And tho' Edwards do not mention it himself, but seem fond of his Opinion as a Novelty very much his own, yett I will here mention it for him, That others have conjectured the Urim | and Thummim, to have been only the Words written [63v]

63 Edwards, Farther Enquiry (1692), p. 61. The two Hebrew words are Urim and Thummim.

64 Edwards (63).

65 Edwards (64).

66 Edwards (67, 68, 69). His reference is to Josephus's discussion (Antiquities 3.7.1–7) of the priest's garments.

67 Edwards (73) quotes Bishop Cyril of Alexandria's De Adoratione et Cultu in Spiritu et veritate, ἐν μικρῷ πινακίῳ γραφὴν [PG 068. 0741, line 30], which can be rendered, "An inscription in a small table."

68 Edwards (74) refers to St. Augustine, on Exod. 28:30, in Quaestiones in Heptateuchum Libri Septem (lib. 2, quaest. 117) [PL 034. 637]; Procopius Gazaecus, Descriptio imagines (17, lines 15–17); and Philo Judaeus, Legum Allegoriae III.40–42.119–124 (Works 63–64). The German Jesuit theologian Jacobus Salianus (1557–1640) reviews the nature of the Urim and Thummim in his Annalium Ecclesiasticorum Veteris Testamenti epitome (1664), "Moyses et Aaron" (237). The great Roman Cardinal Robert Bellarmine (1542–1621) has much to say on the meaning of this Mosaic oracle in his Disputationes de Controversiis Christianae Fidei Adversus huius temporis haereticos (1721) 1:452 (3.4.38). The Scottish Jesuit John Hay (1546–1618), professor of theology at Torun (Poland), authored several works, including his polemic against his Lutheran and Calvinist peers, in Disputationum Libri Duo (1584). The Flemish Jesuit theologian Cornelius à Lapide (1567–163), professor of exegesis at Leuven and Rome, covers the topic in great detail in his commentary on Exod. 28:30, in his Commentaria in Pentateuchum Mosis (1616), pp. 546–49.

somewhere about the Breast-Plate, for to signify, That the High-Priest having his Ephod on, was endued from on High, with a Clara Doctrina, and a Perfecta Veritas, about those things whereupon there was Council asked of the Lord. You'll find it in Jansenius, in Tirinus, and in Sherlog.⁶⁹

But saies my Riboudealdus, Hoc Frigidum et Parum Verisimile videtur. He shall therefore be the next Author that shall entertain you; and we will see whether he do any better.⁷⁰

He brings a Conjecture, which perhaps no Christian, hee saies, except Nic. Fuller has espoused;⁷¹ (I suppose, he forgot Vatablus, & Fagius, & Avenarius, who, at least, say pretty much of what he does;⁷²) but he finds it embraced by the very ancient Author of the Book Zohar, and several celebrated Jewes, who are also quoted by Buxtorf.⁷³ It is, That the Urim and Thummim, were the Four-Lettered Name יהוה putt within the Folds of the Breast-Plate, thro' the Influences 69 According to Riboudealdus (234), the high priest, upon wearing his Ephod, was endowed with "Pure Doctrine" and "Perfect Truth." To second this affirmation (Exod. 28:30), Mather (via Riboudealdus 234) enlists the authority of the RC bishop of Ypres Cornelius Jansenius (1585–1638), in his Pentateuchus, sive Commentarius in Quinque Libros Moyses (1641), pp. 332–33; of the Italian Jesuit Jacobus Tirinus (1580–1636), in his Commentarius in Vetus et Novi Testamenti (1632), tomus 1, lib. 1, p. 197; and of the Spanish Jesuit Paulus Sherlog [Sherlock] (1596–1646), whose discussion on the High-Priest's Ephod appears in Antiquitatum Hebraicarum Dioptra (1651), lib. 1, diss. 4, sec. 14, pp. 168–72.

70 Mather's citation from Riboudealdus (234) to express his displeasure: "This similarity seems cold and too unlikely."

71 Riboudealdus (240) here enlists Nicholas Fuller, Miscellaneorum Theologicorum (1617), lib. 2, cap. 4, p. 172.

72 Mather's parenthetical reference is to Franciscus Vatablus's commentary on Exod. 28:30 as extracted in John Pearson's Critici Sacri (1660), 1:646–48; to the Lutheran theologian and Hebraist Paulus Fagius (1504–49) at Strasbourg and Cambridge on the same chapter and verse in Critici Sacri (1660), 1:638–43; and to Johannes Avenarius, aka. Johann Habermann (1516–90), German Lutheran professor of Oriental languages at Wittenberg and subsequently Lutheran superintendent in Sachse-Anhalt. Among his numerous works is his esteemed ספר השרשים: hoc est, Liber radicum seu Lexicon Ebraicum (1589). His etymological derivation of Urim אורים is defined on fols. 13, 14 (voce אור).

73 Although Riboudealdus (240–41) does not specify any particular Zohar passage he has in mind, Buxtorf does so in his Historia Urim et Thummim, cap. 2 (Exercitationes 279–80), who quotes Zohar on (Exodus, fol. 105, col. 4) and a number of rabbinic commentators. According to the Soncino Zohar, Shemoth, sec. 2 (vol. 2:234*b*), on Exod. 28:30, "The term 'Urim' (lit. light, illumination) signifies the luminous speculum, which consisted of the engraving of the Divine Name composed of the forty-two letters by which the world was created; whereas the Thummim consists of the non-luminous speculum made of the Divine Names as manifested in the twenty-two letters. The combination of the two is thus called Urim and Thummim. Observe that by the power of these sunken letters were the other letters, namely, the raised letters forming the names of the tribes, now illumined, now darkened. The letters of the Divine Name [Tetragrammaton] embrace the mystery of the Torah, and all the worlds are a projection of the mystery of those letters" (Zohar, Shemoth 2, page 234*b*; see also pp. 230*a* and 230*b*; (bracketed insertions added). The foundational work of Jewish Kabbalah and mysticism, ספר הזוהר Sefer Ha-Zohar (Book of Splendor) was attributed to R. Shimon bar Yochai (2nd c. CE), but is now believed to be authored by the Sephardic Kabbalist Moshe ben Shem-Tov, aka. Moses de León (c. 1250–1305), and first printed in Mantua (1558). On the changing fortunes of the Zohar as whereof, the High-Priest had Secret and Future Matters Reveled unto him. And now, saies he, *Hæc Sententia meo Judicio propius vero consonat.*⁷⁴ He thinks indeed, That the Instrument on which this Name was written, is unknown, but that it was delivered unto Moses by the Hand of God, Himself, and the Name also written by the Hand of God. It was lodged, he thinks, in the Breast-Plate of the High-Priest; which the High-Priest putting on, with Humble Addresses to God for Light and for Truth, in important Concerns before him, and fixing his Eyes devoutly hereupon as a Sacrament, God Irradiated his Mind, with infallible Operations of His Holy Spirit, and Enabled him to Know and Speak the Will of Heaven.⁷⁵

I will not here bring you the Arguments which this Gentleman ha's to confirm his Opinion; because most, or chief of them, are coincident, with what I find in Samuel Mather, when he comes to handle this Matter, in his Book of The Types; (Many Years before him.)⁷⁶

He therefore shall be the Third Author, to whom we will Address ourselves. And he, tho' he treat the subject with a suitable Modesty, as being of more Difficulty and Controversy, than any other Peece of all the Pontifical Attire, yett he surprizes us in diverse Points, with what looks little short of Demonstration.⁷⁷

First, He thinks, Tis evident, That the Urim and Thummim were Visible and external Materials: (and not meer Allegories, as you know who would make them.)⁷⁸ The Tenor of Speech in the Text, is full of Evidence, for this; and so is the Intimation of the Loss of these Materials in the Babylonish Captivity. Nevertheless, He thinks, that they were not Things præpared by the Workmen, as the rest of the Holy Garments were; but some Sacred & Secret Monuments given a sacred book between the 13th and 17th centuries, see B. Huss, "Sefer ha-Zohar as a Canonical, Sacred and Holy Text" (257–307).

74 Riboudealdus (245) mentions the mystical signification of the Tetragrammaton (as does his source, Buxtorf's Historia Urim 284) and concludes, "This opinion is truly more in keeping with my judgment" (Riboudealdus 241).

75 Riboudealdus (241–42, 247–48), following Rashi (Chumash: Shemos 2:449), judges that the Hebrew letters of the Tetragrammaton were carved on the Urim and Thummim, not by craftsman – as in the case of the twelve stones on the breastplate, which bore the names of the twelve tribes – but by "a secret transmitted by the Almighty to Moses, and he wrote them in holiness." The Urim and Thummim "were thus of heavenly origin, and therefore they are referred to without any specification and with the definite article" (Nachmanides, on Exod. 28:30, in Commentary 2:481).

76 The first edition of Samuel Mather's Figures or Types was published in Dublin (Ireland), in 1683.

77 Cotton Mather refers to his uncle's sermon "Gospel of the Priest's Holy Garment" (preached Feb. 7, 11, 14, 1668), in Samuel Mather, Figures or Types (1705), pp. 509–11.

78 Samuel Mather may have in mind Philo Judæus (Legum Allegoriae, III.40.119–20), who interprets the Urim and Thummim as a "manifestation and truth . . . in the oracle of judgment," the high-priest's breastplate. However, this "oracle" means nothing more than "the organs of speech which exit in us, which is in fact the power of language." Thus Moses intended nothing more than "a well-judged and carefully examined oracle," a well approved language containing "two supreme virtues, namely, distinctness and truth" (Works 63–64).

immediately unto Moses by God Himself. This he infers, because there is no Direction at all given for the making of them, as there is for all the Garments. He thinks, That the Answer, which God gave herewithal, was (at least sometimes, 1. Sam. 23.11, 12.) by an Audible Voice; perhaps, by speaking with an Audible Voice, from the Mercy-Seat, unto the High-Priest appearing with the Urim and Thummim about him. Yett he grants, that God might sometimes answer, with immediate Inspirations and Irradiations upon the Spirit of the High-Priest, Rev-eling His Mind unto him upon his humble Enquiries after it. He thinks, That Urim, signifying, Illuminations, and Thummim signifying Perfections, may be ap-plied unto the Excellencies, which are to adorn the Evangelical Ministry; as also, that Faith and Holiness, which is essential to Christianity: But that all pointed unto the Lord Jesus Christ, our great High-Priest, in whom Light and Grace are at the Highest, and from whom we have the True Oracles of God. The True Urim and Thummim are in His Pectoral! And the Loss of the Urim and Thum-mim under the Second Temple, he thinks was to præpare the People of God, for the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.⁷⁹

Thus, tho' Dr. Gell writing on Leviticus, have seen cause to say, To define what the Urim and Thummim were, is none of my Business, nor indeed dare I at-tempt, that which hath puzzled all the learned Men in the World; yett we could not pass thro' Exodus, without this Illustration, which presents to your Choice, a Variety of Thoughts upon this Noble Subject.⁸⁰

It may be worth our while, to add a Touch of Dr. Mores, upon the Urim and Thummim? His Words are these, "Teraphim and Seraphim being the same Words, & signifying the same that Urim, viz. Ignes Splendentes;⁸¹ and the Tera-phem and Ephod, tho' at first used lawfully by the ancient Patriarchs, being after perverted into an Idolatrous Way of Divination by the Heathen, whereby these Names may seem to have contracted a Pollution as to this Use, therefore Urim was putt in lieu of Teraphim, or Seraphim, denoting Angels, who are of a Fiery Nature. But now, being several Bad Angels, as well as Good, are so, Thummim is added, to denote their Holiness. [Compare, Dan. 4.13, 17.] Urim and Thum-mim are the Holy Angels of God, of whom the Cherubim over the Ark, were the Symbolical Presence; & from betwixt them He gave His Answers, when He was consulted by Moses, whence that most Holy Place, was called, דביר/ Dabir, 79 Samuel Mather, Figures (1705), pp. 510, 511, agrees with Rashi's account that "During the era of the second Beis Hamikdosh [Second Temple] there was a breastplate ... but that Name [Tetragrammaton inscribed on the Urim and Thummim] was not within it" (Chumash/Sh-emos 2:449).

80 Robert Gell, on Lev. 8:8, in An Essay toward the Amendment (1659), p. 259(e).

81 The Hebrew noun אֹרִיִּם [Urim] signifies "lights" (Strong's # 0224); hence "Ignes Splen-dentes," a "glittering" or "bright fire." For Dr. Henry More's discussion of the Teraphim, see his A Modest Enquiry into the Mystery of Iniquity (bk. 1, ch. 6), in Theological Works (400–401).

which signifies Loquutorium;⁸² As the High-Priests Breast-Plate, is translated λογείον, from, λογος, Verbum, because the Answer, or Oracular Word, was heard from betwixt the Urim and Thummim in the Breast-Plate as well as from betwixt the Cherubim in the Sanctum Sanctorum. That was the larger Dabir, but Aarons Breast-Plate, the lesser Dabir. In all Likelihood, the Urim & Thummim, were no other Shapes, than those of the Cherubim; nor were they διττὰ ὑφάσματα, as Philo seems, to intimate, but One Cloth-Contexture, artificially wrought with Gold and Silk, representing Two Angelical Images over an Ark, in imitation of the greater Dabir, where the Work was Statuary.⁸³

“It was placed within the Breast-Plate, & remained Invisible; but a Voice was heard coming forth as from the Breast-Plate, & was the sure & true Oracle of God, uttered haply by the Ministry of some inspired good Angel.”⁸⁴

And yett after all these Illustrations of the Matter; I cannot but subjoin the Words of Dr. Humphrey Prideaux; which are these.⁸⁵

“It will be safest to hold, that the Words Urim and Thummim, meant only the Divine Vertue and Power, given to the Breast-Plate in its consecration, of

⁸⁵ The following quotation is extracted from his hugely popular The Old and New Testament connected in the History of the Jews (1716–18), vol. 1, part 1, bk. 3, pp. 152–53, by Dr. Humphrey Prideaux (1648–1724), dean of Norwich. Prideaux’s masterpiece went through at least fifteen editions and was republished until the end of the eighteenth century. Mather probably borrowed this copy from his Boston colleague Thomas Prince, for in an extant manuscript letter, dated 16 d. 2d. 1718, Mather acknowledges his great debt: “S^r. Many Pages would not be enough to express my Thanks I owe you, for y^e long Loan of your Prideaux. But I know you take Pleasure in enriching of your Friends; and will particularly do so, in my assuring you, that great Riches are added unto y^e Biblia Americana, by these your Communications. It was not until very lately, that I could command y^e Hours necessary for my digging & fetching & running of these Golden Matters; which I propose as my Apology for detaining the Book so long. A Trespass, which I believe, you will never find me again guilty of; particularly if you’ll favor me, by this Bearer, with a Book of, Poetry, you bought y^e last Week at your Booksellers. I wish you all y^e Blessings of Goodness; and am, S^r, Your Brother & Servant. Co. Mather.” (MHS Copy). Mather seems to give new meanings to Acts 20:35 that lending is better than returning books in a timely manner.

obtaining an Oraculous Answer from GOD, whenever Counsel was asked of Him, by the High-Priest with it on, in such Manner as His Word did direct; And that the Names of Urim and Thummim were given hereto, only to denote the Clearness and Perfection, which these Oracular Answers always carried with them. For Urim signifies Light, and Thummim signifies Perfection. For these Answers were not like the Heathen Oracles, Enigmatical, and Ambiguous; but always Clear and Manifest; not such as ever did fall short of Perfection, either of Fulness in the Answer, or Certainty in the Truth of it. And hence it is, that the LXX translate Urim and Thummim, by the Words, Δηλωσιν και Αληθειον i. e. Manifestation and Truth; Because all these Oracular Answers given by Urim and Thummim were always Clear and Manifest, & their Truth ever Certain & Infallible.”⁸⁶

Mr. Pyles does insist on the same Interpretation; That the Breast-Plate itself, is called, Light & Perfection; that is to say, most Perfect Light & Information.

Most probably, the Answers given to him that appeared before GOD with the Breast-Plate on him, were by an Audible Voice.⁸⁷

⁸⁶ Humphrey Prideaux, The Old and New Testament Connected (1719), 1:152–53. In his “Note Book of Authors and Texts” (Exod. 28:36), Mather recommends “Tuckneyes [sic] 40 Sermons. p. 427” to his readers. Anthony Tuckney, D.D. (1599–1670), a learned Puritan scholar, successively master of Emmanuel College and St. John’s College (Cambridge), and Regius Professor of Divinity (Cambridge), was also a member of the Westminster Assembly (1643). Early in his career, Tuckney was a friend and associate of John Cotton (Mather’s maternal grandfather) at St. Botolph’s (Boston, Lincolnshire) and succeeded him upon Cotton’s departure for New England (ODNB). Tuckney’s work in question is his Forty Sermons upon Several Occasions (London, 1676), posthumously published by Tuckney’s son. Mather refers to “Sermon XXIV” (Exod. 28:36), which elaborates on the topic of “Holiness to the Lord,” in Forty Sermons (1676), pp. 427–42.

⁸⁷ The extract is from A Paraphrase with Short and Useful Notes On the Books of the Old Testament. Part 1. In Two Volumes. Containing the Five Books of Moses (1717), vol. 1, pp. 158, 159, by Thomas Pyle (1674–1756), an Anglican clergyman and lecturer at Lyn-Regis (Norfolk). Mather also leaned on Pyle’s conservative Paraphrase, designed for “The Use of Families,” in his commentary on Genesis (BA 1:302–06, 300, 402, 517, 921, 1087, 1118, 1142). Mather’s various commentators on Exod. 28:30, then, reveal the extent to which Christian interpreters differed on the meaning of Urim and Thummim. This disagreement divided the Hebrew sages just as much. Neither Rashi, nor Ibn Ezra, nor Nachmanides, nor Rashbam, nor Abarbanel, nor Gersonides could see eye-to-eye on this mysterious instrument of divination (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot: Exodus 249–50). Perhaps the most radical of the group is Ibn Ezra, on Exod. 28:30 (Commentary 2:595–96), who thinks that the Urim and Thummim, when placed in the breastplate of the ephod, served as an astrological instrument to divine future events from the constellation of the celestial spheres. Significantly, Rashbam recognizes an analogical function of the ephod with that “of the oracles employed by the priests of idolatrous cults. If those had any value at all ... how much more influential would these urim vetumim in the sacred garments of the High Priest be in order to elicit answers to questions posed to G’d ...?” (Hachut Hameshulash 4:1142).

Q. Give us a Remarkable, about the High-Priest, in all his glorious Garments? v. 43.

A. The High-Priest in all his priestly and glorious Garments, was a Remarkable Repræsentation of the Tabernacle and its Utinsels.

His Breast-Plate answered unto the Ark; and the Shining Jewels on that, unto the Stony Tables in this; and as the Urim was there, so the Written Law was here.

His Ephod answered unto the Mercy-Seat; The Two Onyx-Stones on that, unto the two Cherubims on this.

The Golden Plate on his Forehead, with, HOLINESS TO THE LORD, written on it, answered unto the Glory of the Lord, which dwelt in the Holy of Holies.

His Undergarment answered unto the Veil, and Curtains of the Sacred Edifice.

And so the Matter may be carried on, as Munster thinks, with a very lively Comparison.⁸⁸

Q. In all the Habiliments of the High-Priest, there is no mention of Shoes. Did the Priests perform the Service of the Tabernacle Barefooted? v. 43.

A. This very Omission, is enough to argue, that they did so.

Be sure, 'Tis a Tradition of the Jews, That there were no Shoes worn in the Temple; the Priests, there stood Barefooted, even on a cold Pavement. The Talmuds tell us, That in the Second Temple there was an Apartment, the Floor whereof was heated, that the Feet of the Priests might be warmed there; which Apartment was called, The Stove, or, The Fire-room. And yett they tell us, This Provision was not enough to prevent the Distempers, contracted in the Temple, by their being Barefooted when they did their Offices.⁸⁹ It is thought by some Christians, that our SAVIOUR alluded here unto, when He said, Matth. X.9, 10. Provide neither Shoes, nor —

The Ablutions præscribed unto the Priests, do also imply, that they were without Shoes, in the Exercise of their Ministry.

Bynæus has given us a Treatise, De Calceis Hebræorum: On which I cannot forbear the Reflection of Monsr. Saurin.⁹⁰

“We are beholden to those who have the Patience to apply themselves unto such Dry Studies. A Dispute concerning any Custom of the Ancients, appears worthy the Attention of Great Men, how mean soever the Subject is. But where is the learned Man who would not blush, if he happened to be surprized in his Closet, examining all the different fashions of the Shoemakers of our own Age, and the Different Materials of which they made their Shoes and Slippers? Especially, where is that learned Man, who would seek to establish his Reputation, on the Discoveries he should make in the Shops of those that work at those Kinds of Trades? But the giving of some Light into the Shoes and Slippers of the Hebrews, is sufficient to gett a Name in the Commonwealth of Letters.”⁹¹

Q. Give us a General Observation of some Importance, about the Sacrifices? v. 43.

A. R. Menahem de Racanati, ha’s an entertaining Remark upon them. *Dominum potissimum exigere pro suo Sacrificio Animalia et Membra illa, quæ concupiscentijs subjiciuntur. Non Vult habere Animal infirmum; aut quod Testiculis sit privatum. Requirit Renes, qui concupiscentiæ prima sint Officina. Vult habere Epar; quod roborat Libidinem; et Adipes, qui effrænem faciunt concupiscentiam. Hæc omnia Dominus in suo vult habere Sacrificio, non quòd illum delectent Renes, aut Adipes pecudum, sed quòd mysticè significant, quòd homo mortificare debet membra sua super terram.*⁹²

⁹⁰ Saurin, Dissertations (1723), p. 504, refers to De Calceis Hebraeorum Libri Duo (Dordraci, 1682), lib. 2, cap. 2, pp. 252–60, by the Dutch Reformed preacher at Piershil, Naarden, and Deventer, Antonius Bynæus (1654–98) (BPVN). Bynæus’s intriguing study Of the Shoes of the Hebrews in Two Books (pp. 252–60) explains that the high priest and his attendants were required to go barefoot in the Temple and thus were subject to all kinds of illnesses and foot sores. As if to mitigate the pains of chilblains, Bynæus takes pains to provide depictions of shoes or sandals worn by the ancients (De Calceis, lib. 1, cap. 6, between pp. 140–41, and cap. 7, between pp. 164–165).

⁹² Mather excerpts a Latin translation from the Italian rabbi and cabbalist Menachem ben Benjamin Recanati, aka Racanati, “the Ricanti” (c. 1250–c. 1310), whose cabbalistic commentary on the Torah, Perush ‘Al ha-Torah (1523), was translated into Latin by the Italian humanist Pico della Mirandola (1463–94) and published in Venice, in 1523 (JE). For a useful appraisal of Recanati as a cabbalist, see M. Idel’s Kaballah in Italy (2011), pp. 106–38. Whatever Mather’s primary source for his Latin extract, Recanati’s entertaining remarks read, “that the most powerful Lord demands for his sacrifice those animals and organs, which are subject to concupiscent. He does not want to have a feeble animal, or one which has been deprived of its testicles. He requires the kidneys, which are the primary sources of desire. He wants to have the liver, which strengthens desire; and the fat, which makes unbridled desire. All these God wants to have in his sacrifice, not because he loves the kidneys or suet of animals, but because they have mystical significance, that man ought to mortify his limbs while on earth.”

Q. Lett us look back on the Mystery of the Gems, in the Breast-Plate of the High-Priest? v. 43.

A. As the View which the Holy Spirit ha's of things is most Extensive; and the Use & Reach of His Word, very Universal; so the Things occurring in the Ancient Church of Israel, had a Typical Importance upon them.

The CHURCH which God will establish on the Earth in the Latter Dayes, is called by the Name of Israel. The Division of the Twelve Tribes among that People, had no doubt, those Mysteries in it, which will not be fully comprehended until the Happy Day arrives, that All Israel shall be saved.⁹³

Our Saviour made choice of Twelve Apostles; who, tho' they were partly employ'd for the Conversion of the Gentiles, yett had it promised unto them, That they should sitt upon Thrones Judging the Tribes of Israel.

In the Description of the Heavenly Jerusalem, you have Twelve Gates, at which there sitt the Twelve Apostles. These Gates are of Precious Stones, and the Division of them, is like that of the Precious Stones here on the Breast-Plate. There the City ha's Four Sides; Here the Breast-Plate has Four Rows. There, as Here, on each of the Stones, is engraved the Name of a Tribe.

What we have now gain'd, is, That the Breast-Plate exhibited a Noble Figure of the CHURCH; especially, as it is to be circumstanced in the Dayes of the New Jerusalem.

God communicated His Will, of old, by the Way of the Breast-Plate. And in those Glorious Dayes, there shall be no Citizen of the Church, but what shall have the Will of God most intimately communicated unto them. They shall indeed, all have a Communion in the Priesthood of their Great Redeemer.

Moreover, The Church lies near to the Heart of our Saviour. He embraces it with unspeakable Affection. The Ointment also that is upon His Head, runs down upon it.

There will e're long be found further, & most shining Mysteries, in this Breast-Plate, which we may not be as yett acquainted with.

Who can tell, whether some Great Instruments, to be employ'd about the City of God, may not here find some Notable Representation of them?⁹⁴

Q. The Linen-Garments, which the Jewish Priests wore, was there any Imitation thereof among the Ancient Pagans? v. 43.

A. Yes; And what was among the Ancient Pagans was but an Imitation thereof. Philostratus testifies, that the Heathen Pontiffs, wore a Mitre on their Heads; and ⁹³ On this topic, see Increase Mather's Diatriba De signo Filii hominis (1682); The Mystery of Israel's Salvation (1669); A Dissertation Concerning the Future Conversion of the Jewish Nation (1709).

wee learn from Valerius Maximus & others, that a White Vest, or Linen Ephod, was the usual Apparel of their Priests, in their Holy Service. Tis more probable, that the Egyptians took their Cæremonies in this Matter, from the Jewes, than that the Jewes took theirs from the Egyptians. Photius intimates, that this was the Sense of the Ancients, *That the Worshippers of Idols, in Imitation of Gods Priests, clothed Theirs, with a peculiar suit of Garments, which were after the fashion of the Ephod.*⁹⁵ And the Incomparable Bochart agrees hereto; saying, *The Egyptians, being in many Things, Followers of the Jewes, permitted their Priests, to wear no other Vestments, but Linen ones; And hee there notes the Ignorance of Plutarch, about their true Original. Huetius also, to the like Purpose, acknowledges, The Priests of Isis, wore Linens & therein Imitated the Linen Garments of the Hebrew Priests.*⁹⁶

⁹⁵ Philostratus, Life of Apollonius of Tyana (2.26, 4.28); the Roman historian Valerius Maximus (fl. 30 CE) makes mention of the fine linen garment in his Factorum et Dictorum Memorabilium (1.1.7). Photius (c. 820–c. 892), the Byzantine patriarch of Constantinople, pulls the threads of his argument from Heliodorus, Aethiopica (Bibliotheca 73), in The Library of Photius (1:124), and weaves them into the vestments of his High Priest.

⁹⁶ Mather possibly has in mind Samuel Bochart's Geographia Sacra (1707), lib. 1, cap. 62, cols. 672–74, § 4. Plutarch relates that the Egyptian priests and “votaries of Isis” shaved their hair and wore “linen garments,” which are “least apt to breed lice” (De Iside et Osiride 352.3, 4). That the vestments of the Mosaic priests were made from linen and imitated those of the Egyptian priests is demonstrated at length in Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 5: “Exemplum tertium. Sacerdotum vestis lineæ,” fols. 570–83. Pierre-Daniel Huet, however, believed that pagan priests imitated the temple vestments of the Israelites (Demonstratio Evangelica, (1690), prop. IV, cap. 11, p. 155D – or as Mather put in his commentary on Numb. 10:36 (below), “The Figure, which wee call, The Cart before the Horse, runs thro’ the Writings of some learned Authors.”

Q. Aaron and his Sons, are washed with Water? v. 4.

A. Afterwards, they were to Repeat this Washing, every time, they went in, to minister unto God. But now, at their First Consecration, Water was brought, probably, from the Laver, to wash them at the Door of the Tabernacle, before they were permitted to enter into it. Probably, Their whole Bodies were now Washed; They were now to be look'd on, as wholly Unclean, and therefore to be Washed all over. Tho' being once Cleansed, they needed no more such an universal Washing; but only to wash their Hands and Feet, when they went in, to minister.

This is according to the Words of our Saviour, Joh. XIII.10. *He that is washed, needeth not, save to wash his Feet.*¹

Q. The Fatt that covereth the Inwards? v. 13.

A. 'Tis that Part of the Beast, which is called, the Omentum; wherein all the Bowels are wrapped; It is called, Lev. 9.19. simply, That which covereth. This ha's a great Deal of Fatt upon it, to keep the Bowels warm; & it was much used in the Ancient Sacrifices, both among the Greeks and Romans, who therein follow'd the Jewes. Nay, the Persians offered their Gods, nothing but the Omentum, or a Part of it; as Bochart observes out of Strabo. And from the Condition and Scituation of the Omentum, the Heathen Diviners made their Conjectures; insomuch that some think, it had the Name of Omentum, because they made their Good or Bad Omens from thence.²

Q. The Caul that is above the Liver? v. 13.

A. Our Interpreters take it for the Diaphragm or Midriff, on which the Liver hangs. But Bochart ha's demonstrated, that it signifies, the greatest Lobe of the Liver, on which lies the Bladder of Gall. The only Argument against it, is, That this Jothereth (as the Hebrewes call it,) is here said to be, Above the Liver, & therefore it must be the Diaphragm, on which the Liver depends. But the Particle, Al, signifies, Upon, as well as, Above. The Reason why this Lobe of the Liver was peculiar to the Altar, was because of the Fatt, that is upon it.³

² Patrick, on Exod. 29:13 (Exodus 577) and Bochart (Hieroicoicon, Pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 45, col. 503) quotes Strabo (Geographia 15.3.13.14–15) in affirmation that “according to some writers,” the worshippers of the Persian Mithras, “place a small portion of the caul [omentum] upon the fire.”

³ Patrick (Exodus 577); Bochart (Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 45, col. 498, line 61) renders Jothereth as יֹתֶרֶת. According to Lev. 3:4, Moses instructs that in the priestly sacrifice, “the caul above the liver, with the kidneys,” shall be taken away. In the applicable passage אֶת־הַיֹּתֶרֶת

Taurobolium, oder Weihung der Priester der Cybele unter Antonius Pius (Berlin, 1797)
(Radierung von Bernhard Rode, c. 1780)

Q. Part of the Sin-Offering was to be eaten by the Priest; [Lev. 10.17.] in token, that the Sin of the People, was taken away by the Priest. It may seem strange, that Moses (who was now in the Place of a Priest,) must here burn all the Sin-Offering, & not eat any of it? v. 14.

A. Dr. Patrick saies, The best Reason he ha's found, is, That it was to signify the Imperfection of the Legal Dispensation. The Sins of the Priests themselves, could not be taken away, by the Priests of the Law, or their Sacrifices. But (as Dr. Jackson ha's it,) they were to expect a better Sacrifice, or a better High-Priest.⁴

Q. The Blood putt on the Ear of Aaron, & his Hand, & Foot? v. 20.

A. Fortunatus Scacchus conjectures, That from hence the Pagans learnt their Taurobolia, and Criobolia. They Dug an Hole in the Ground; The Priest that was to be consecrated, was putt into it; They laid Planks over it, with many Holes in them; The Bullock or the Ram was kill'd over it. The Blood ran down; the Priest received it, on his Eyes; his Ears, his Nose, his Mouth; he besmeared his Body with it. This was accounted, the Highest Consecration: Thus filthily did the Divel pervert the Holy Rites of Moses.⁵

עַל־הַכֶּבֶד, the Hebrew particle preposition עַל [al], suggests, among other things, “upon,” “over,” and “beyond” (Strong’s # B7335).

⁵ Patrick (Exodus 581); in his Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacro-Prophanarum (1725), lib. 2, cap. 77, col. 702, Fortunatus Scacchus draws attention to the resemblance between the Mosaic rites of consecrating a priest of Cybele and those of the Israelites’ neighbors. The “Taurobolia” or “Criobolia” involve the sacrifice of a bull or ram to Cybele, the Great Mother of the Gods, who was revered in Greece and Rome. Prudentius (Peristephanon Liber 10.1008–50) describes this ritual at some length: When the blood gushes from the cut throat of the bull, “the priest in the pit below catches it, holding his filthy head to meet every drop and getting his robe and his whole body covered with corruption [blood]. Laying his head back he even puts his cheeks in the way, placing his ears under it, exposing lips and nostrils, bathing his very eyes in the stream [of blood], not even keeping his mouth from it but wetting his tongue, until the whole of him drinks in the dark gore. ... The pontiff comes forth from his place, a grisly sight, and displays his wet head, his matted beard, his dank fillets and soaking garments. Defiled as he is with such pollution, all unclean with the foul blood of the victim just slain, they all stand apart and give him salutation and do him reverence because the paltry blood of a dead ox has washed him while he was ensconced in a loathsome hole in the ground” (Prudentius, Crowns of Martyrdom 10.1030–50). See also R. Duthoy, The Taurobolium (1969). On ritual blood sacrifice among the ancients, see K. McClymond, Beyond Sacred Violence (2008), esp. 44–64, 131–51.

Q. The Tax of the Ransome-Money, in which the Rich & the Poor paid alike, because they were guilty alike; was it laid only on pressing Occasions, or, was it every Year paid by every one? v. 12.

A. Monsr. Saurin observes, one cannot avoid embracing the latter Opinion.

We have no History of the Jewish Nation circumstantial enough, to discover whether this Law were execute every Year. But it is evident enough, that it was in the Days of our Blessed JESUS Humbled among us.¹

Josephus expressly says, That the Jews paid every Year Two Attic Drachms for the Temple of Jerusalem. And we know, the Version which we ascribe to the LXX calls by the Name of Didrachma Sanctum, that is to say, Two Drachms, the said Half-Shekel, which was rated by the Order of God. [Exod. XXX.13. Neh. X.32.]²

When the Disciples of JESUS were asked by the Tax-gatherers, Does your Master pay Tribute? The Answer of our Lord supposes, the Tribute was gathered for the Service of the Temple. – Then are the Children free. Our Lord was to be excused from the Paiment of the Tax, that was laid for the Support of the House of His Father; It was from Condescension & for Edification, that He paid it.³

In the Mishnah, we find the First Day of the Month Adar, appointed in every Town of Judea, for the raising of this Impost: All paid it, except Women, & Slaves, & such as were under Twenty Years old. Those that had not wherewithal to pay it, were to sell their Cloathes for it. If any Man omitted it, he was to be expunged from the List of Israelites, & reckoned one who had no Share in the Atonement which was made in the Sacrifices. Philo celebrates this Lasting Stock for the Support of the Temple. He says, It produced a Treasury in all their Towns, in which these Offerings were preserved, until they were carried by some Trusty Persons to the Temple at Jerusalem.⁴

² Saurin (493, § 1). According to Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 3.8.2) Moses “ordained that they [Israelites] should offer half a shekel for every man, as an oblation to God; which shekel is a piece among the Hebrews, and is equal to four Athenian drachmae.” In Antiquities (18.9.1), Josephus reports that the Jews of Babylonia kept treasuries in the well-fortified cities of Neerda and Nisibis, “deposited in them that half shekel [Greek: ἡμιδραχμῶν; i.e., Didrachma] which every one, by the custom of our country, offers unto God,” from which places these donations were carried to Jerusalem by “many ten thousand men” (Works, pp. 76, 392).

⁴ Mather, via Saurin (493, § 3), refers to the Mishnah, tractate Shekalim (1.1), in The Mishnah (152). Saurin’s immediate source is John Selden’s De Jure Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 4, cap. 5, p. 492–94. See also Tractatus de Siclis (1.1), in Surenhusius, סדר מועד [Seder Moed] sive Legum Mischnicarum Liber qui inscribitur Ordo Festorum (1699), fol. 176. That neither rich nor poor Israelites were exempted from paying this sacerdotal half-shekel – except women, slaves, and children under the age of twenty-one – is asserted in R. Levi of Barcelona’s ספר התנוד Sefer

Cicero relates, that Flaccus forbade carrying to Jerusalem the Gold that was raised in Italy, & in all the Provinces from the Jews. Titus reproaching the Jews for their Ingratitude, minds them, that the Romans had shew'd them so much Favour, as to allow their Paying of this Tribute, instead of taking it unto themselves. Nor was it until the Jews became Slaves instead of Subjects, unto the Romans, that Vespasian appropriated unto his Treasury, what had hitherto belonged unto that of Jerusalem. There are still some of the Emperour Nerva's Medals to be seen, with this Inscription; Calumnia Fisci Judaici Sublata.⁵

Q. On the mention of the Shekel here with so much Exactness, may not here be a good Occasion, to discourse upon the Shekel, and the other Coins used among the Ancient Israelites? v. 13.

A. Yes; And I will make some Use of Mr. Samuel Clark's, Discourse (instead of many others) on that Subject.⁶

A Shekel, you know, is the first Measure for the Value of things, used in the Book of God. But there is no express mention at all, of a Shekel, in the New Ha-Chinnuk (1523), in Hottinger's Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI (1655), sec. 8, praecept. CV, p. 133. Philo Judaeus (De specialibus legibus 1.14.76), for one, is confident that the wealth of the Temple with its vast revenues in land and "other possession of much greater extent and importance ... will never be destroyed or diminished; for as long as the race of mankind shall last, the revenues likewise of the temple will always be preserved, being coeval in their duration with the universal world" (Works 541).

5 Saurin (493–94, § 4). Mather enlists Marcus Tullius Cicero (Oratio pro Lucius Flacco 66–69), who defends the edict of the Roman praetor Lucius Valerius Flaccus (d. 54 BCE) against the transference out of Asia of "auri illa invidia Iudaici" ("that charge about the Jewish Gold") intended for the Temple in Jerusalem. According to Josephus Flavius (De Bello Judaico 6.6.2), Titus Flavius (39–81 CE), the future Caesar Vespasianus Augustus (79–81 CE), reproached the people of Jerusalem for ingratitude and insubordination even though "we have given you leave to gather up that tribute which is paid to God" (Works 584). The Greco-Roman historian Cassius Dio Cocceianus (c. 150–235 CE), in his Historiarum Romanorum 66.7.2 tells that after the fall of Jerusalem under Titus Flavius (69) any Jew observing his ancestral religion must "pay an annual tribute of two denarii to Jupiter Capitolanus" (Roman History 8:271). In his Dissertationum De Praestantia et usu Numismatum Antiquorum (1717), vol. alt., diss. 13, pp. 570–71, the Swiss statesman, diplomat, and numismatist Ezekiel Spanheim (c. 1629–1710) depicts a coin of Roman Emperor Marcus Cocceius Nerva Caesar Augustus (96–98 CE), which shows a palm-tree with the initial S and C appearing underneath the branches on either side of the stem. The Latin inscription here cited by Mather appears on the outer rim of the coin and can be rendered, "The Sophistry of the Jewish Treasury Destroyed."

6 Mather extracts his annotations from "The Reduction of the Jewish Weights, Coins and Measures, to our English Standards," appended to The Holy Bible, Containing the Old Testament and the New: with Annotations (1690), by Samuel Clark (1626–1701), nonconformist minister, rector of Grendon-Underwood (Buckinghamshire), and biblical scholar. Mather's extract is from the final pages of the huge work (sign. P¹-P^{2v}). He also mines several of Clark's other works, in BA (1:269–277, 475).

Testament, which probably is, because Judæa was then a Roman Province, and therefore used the Roman Money.⁷

And now, first, for the Weight of the Shekel, wee have the Testimonies of the Ancients, that it was æqual to the Attic Tetradrachm. The Half-Shekel that was to be paid unto the Sanctuary, [Exod. 30.13.] is in the N. T. called, Διδραχμα, [Matt. 17.24.] And the LXX frequently render the Word, /לִשְׁכָּל/ by διδραχμον, meaning that of Alexandria, (where they then resided,) which was double to the Attic. But for our fuller Satisfaction, Villalpandus weigh'd several Shekels, and found them still to be just a Roman Half-Ounce. And yett, if there had been a difference of two or three Grains, it had not been worth Quarrelling about; for, even in our English milled Money, which is the most exact that ever was coined, there often occur two or three Grains of Difference in Pieces of all Sorts, even the Guinea's themselves. Now the Roman Ounce, as Mr. Greaves hath adjusted it, from the Standard, contains 438 Grains. And this also is the exact Number of Grains in the Ounce Avoirdupois, among ourselves; the Half whereof is 219. The Shekel then is just Half an Ounce of our Avoirdupois.⁸

But then, for the Worth of it. The Ounce Troy, which is used in our Nation to measure the Value of Gold and Silver is just Five Shillings in Silver. Tho' according to the Rules of the Mint, it be coin'd into Sixty twopence, or Five Shillings, twopence, yett the odd Twopence in the Ounce (or, Two shillings in the Pound,) is allow'd for Mintage. Now this Ounce contains Four hundred & Eighty Grains; which being divided by Sixty (the Number of Pence in an Ounce,) gives Eight; so that there are Eight Grains to a Penny: And therefore a Shekel, weighing Two hundred and Nineteen Grains, (as ha's been prov'd,) at the rate of Eight Grains to a Penny, it comes to Two shillings three Pence, farthing, half-farthing, of the English Coin.⁹

[66v] To determine the Value of a Shekel in Gold, we must consider the Proportion between Silver and Gold. Among the Jewes, it was commonly Reckoned as Ten-fold. David provided therefore Ten Times as much Silver as Gold, for the 7 Clark, "Reduction" (sign. Pr, § 3).

8 Clark, "Reduction" (I. § 4). The Spanish Jesuit mathematician and architect Juan Bautista Villalpandus (1552–1608), with his colleague Hieronymo del Prado, published his magnificent architectural study of Solomon's Temple, In Ezechielem Explanaciones et Apparatus Orbis ac Templi Hierosolymitani (1596–1605). Villalpando's huge work (three volumes, folio) triggered a major debate among the learned about the physical size and appearance of the Temple (Solomon's, Ezekiel's, Zerubbabel's, and Herod's) and generated several major works on the topic. Mather's third-hand reference via A Discourse of the Romane [sic] Foot, and Denarius (1647), p. 120, by the English orientalist and astronomer at Oxford, John Greaves (1602–52), is to Villalpando's In Ezechielem Explanaciones, tomus 3, pars 2, lib. 2, disputatio 2, cap. 11: "Num Certi Quippiam Statui Possit de Romanis ponderibus, quo eorum ratio habeatur," p. 352(D–E). The Anglo-French term avoirdupois, i. e., "goods of weight" is based on a system of measuring the weight of silver and gold coins in terms of ounces and grains. Thus a 16-ounce coin should weigh 7,000 grains, and the half-ounce in Mather's illustration roughly 219 grains.

9 Clark, "Reduction" (II. § 5).

Temple. And it appears by several Passages in Pollux, in Livy, in Polybius, in Hesychius, and others, that the Greeks & the Romans made the same Reckoning. Yett there was no standing Rule in this Case; it was varied according to the Plenty of the several Metals. Breerwood ha's demonstrated, That sometimes it was Ten-fold, sometimes Twelve-fold, sometimes Fourteen-fold. With the English Nation, at this time, it is about Sixteen-fold. An Ounce Troy of Silver is worth Five Shillings; an Ounce of Gold, of the Mint-alloy, is valued by the Goldsmiths, at Four Pounds. Gold, by this, comes to Two-Pence a Grain; and there being 219 Grains in a Shekel, that comes to One Pound, Sixteen Shillings, & Sixpence. Only we must here take it for granted, That their common Gold of old, was much of the same Fineness with our current Gold; which one may reasonably do, because ours is of a middling Fineness; to Eleven Parts of Pure Gold, almost a Twelfth of Alloy. Tho' of the Gold, prepared for the Temple, was Finer than ordinary. (1. Chron. 28.18. and 29.4.)¹⁰

But may there not seem to have been a Difference of Shekels? For, we read of, one After the Shekel of the Sanctuary; And we read of one, After the Kings Weight. Modern Authors have hence coined a Distinction, of a twofold Shekel; Sacred and Civil; and the Sacred as much again as the Civil. Wee answer, There is a deep Silence in all ancient Authors, of any more than one sort of Shekel: and the Inscription and Impression of all the Shekels yett extant, exhibits but one Sort unto us. But we may supersede all other Arguments, by one that is unanswerable. Tis taken from Two Scriptures compared. First, In Exod. 30.13. the Shekel of the Sanctuary is expressly spoken of, and it is defined there to be Twenty Gerah's. Now, In Ezek. 45.9–12. Rulers are called upon to do Justice, and see that there be Just Weights and Measures, by which tis plain that Civil Commerce is referr'd unto; and in order hereunto, the Shekel is defined for such Civil Commerce, to be Twenty Gerah's. The Shekel then was called, The Shekel of the Sanctuary, because the Standard thereof was kept in the Sanctuary. (1. Chron. 23.29.) And that Phrase, After the Kings Weight, which is used but once (2. Sam. 14.26.) might be, because no doubt, there was another Standard kept in the Kings Court; as with us, one Standard, is kept in the Exchequer.¹¹

It is easy from hence to gather, what a Talent amounts to. We find, (Exod. 38.25, 26.) Six hundred thousand, three thousand, five hundred, & fifty Men, paying each of them Half a Shekel. In the Reckoning the Summ arises to an Hundred Talents, and a thousand Seven hundred & Seventy five Shekels. For first, Six hundred Thousand Half-Shekels, make Three Hundred Thousand Shekels; there's the Hundred Talents: And then Three Thousand, five hundred, & fifty Half-Shekels, make one thousand, Seven hundred, & Seventy five Shekels, which is the Number that is reckon'd above the Hundred Talents. Now every Shekel, being Half an Ounce Averdupois, and there being Sixteen Ounces in every Pound Averdupois, the Three Thousand Shekels weigh Ninety Three Pounds, twelve Ounces. And then, the Value of a Shekel in Silver, being Two Shillings, Three Pence, farthing, half-farthing, the Talent after that rate amounts unto Three Hundred Forty two Pounds, three shillings and Nine Pence. And in Gold it is Sixteen times as much; viz. Five Thousand, Four hundred, Seventy Five Pounds.¹²

Mr. Clark now coming to cast up the Quantities of Gold and Silver, præpared by David for the Temple, chuses to do it, by Tuns or Cart-Loads. A Tun is twenty Hundred Weight; reckoning Five Score and twelve Pounds Averdupois to the Hundred; which amounts in the whole, to two Thousand, two Hundred, and Forty Pounds Weight. Now a Talent being Ninety three Pounds three Quarters, to make a Tun, there goes Twenty Four Talents: which amount unto Two Thousand, two hundred & fifty Pounds; which is Ten Pounds more than a Tun. Accordingly, one Hundred Talents, are Four Tun, and four hundred & fifteen Pounds over. And a Thousand Talents, are Forty two Tun, wanting three Hundred & thirty Pounds. And Ten Thousand Talents, are Four Hundred & Eighteen Tun, & an half, and Sixty Pounds over: And an Hundred Thousand Talents, are Four Thousand, One hundred, Eighty five Tun, and Six hundred Pounds over. This then was in Gold. And a Thousand Thousand Talents, are Forty One Thousand, Eight Hundred, Fifty two Tun, and an half, and four Hundred Pound over. So much there was in Silver (1. Chron. 22.14.) The whole amounts unto Forty Six thousand, thirty Eight Tun, or Cart-Loads, wanting but almost an Hundred Weight.¹³

But if any one would have the Reckoning, in Pounds, Shillings, & Pence, it stands thus; The Hundred Thousand Talents of Gold, amount unto Five Hundred, & forty Seven Millions, and an half. The Thousand Thousand Talents of Silver, amount unto Three Hundred, Forty two Millions, one hundred Eighty five Thousand, Seven hundred & fifty Pounds. In all, Eight Hundred Eighty Nine Millions, Six Hundred Eighty five Thousand, Seven hundred & fifty Pound Stirling.

| The Immensity of the Summ, hath made it appear unto many so Incredible, that they have suspected a Difference between the Talents in Moses's Time, and in Davids, as if the latter had been much less than the former. [67r]

To countenance This, a Passage is quoted out of Homer, showing that a Talent was of no great Value.¹⁴

But the Scripture gives us not the least Imaginable Hint of any Difference. And about Seven score Years after Davids time, such was the Weight of Two Talents (bestow'd by Naaman upon Gehazi,) that there was Need of Two Men to carry them. A Talent being then a Mans Burthen, it might well amount unto the Quantity we have assigned it; Ninety Three Pounds and Three Quarters. Moreover, we read (2. Chron. 25.6.) that Amaziah hired a Thousand Men for a Talent; which being in Moses's Time Three Thousand Shekels, comes to Three Shekels, or Six shillings & Ten Pence, a Man. Little enough in all Conscience! Finally, we find, that a Shekel was exactly the same, after the Captivity, that it was in Moses's Time. [Exod. 30.13. with, Ezek. 45.12.] Whence we may gather, that the Talent might be so too.¹⁵

Wherefore, As to the Immensity, & Incredibility of the Summ given by David, we may answer; First, we read Once, (tho' but once) in Humane Story, of a greater Treasure; Namely, That of Sardanapalus, which by Breerwoods Account, amounted, in Gold, unto Five thousand Six hundred twenty five Millions; in Silver, unto Four Thousand, Six hundred, Eighty Seven Millions, & five hundred thousand Pounds. Again, Is it not very Agreeable, That the glorious Lord of all the Gold and Silver in the World, should (for once at least) have the greatest Quantity thereof, employed in Serving Him, and Building an House for Him? That Significant Structure, some say, was the most Magnificent that ever was in the World.¹⁶

¹⁴ Clark, "Reduction" (V. §10). Neither Clark nor Mather identifies anyone who quotes Homer (whom they believed to be a near contemporary of Moses) to prove that the talent in the time of the Hebrew lawgiver was of no great value. However, in the Iliad (23.795), Homer has Achilles add to Antilochus's award for best runner "a half-talent of gold." See also Iliad (9.114–20) and Odyssey (4:125–30). Edward Breerewood (De Ponderibus, caps. 20–23, pp. 48–56) cites multiple Greek and Roman sources to demonstrate that the increasing admixture of silver and other inferior metals with gold devalued the talent and denarius over time. Both Jacques Cappe's De Ponderibus Nummis et Mensuris Libri V (1606) and Hermann Conringius's De Nummis Ebraeorum Paradoxa (1675) complement these treasures.

¹⁵ Clark, "Reduction" (VI. § 11.1–3).

But as for the Passage in Homer, The Talents of several Nations differed so much, (as might easily be proved) that no Proof at all can be fetch'd from it.¹⁷

But now, for the other Coins mention'd in the Scripture, this Account may be given of them.¹⁸

1. Maneh, (rendred, A Pound.) This in meer Weight, without Respect unto Coinage, contained, an hundred Shekels: [Compare 1. Kin. 10.17. with 2. Chron. 9.16.] But in Coin it contained no more than Sixty Shekels, [Ezek. 45.12.] which is Six Pounds Sixteen Shillings, & ten Pence half-penny.

2. Drachmon, or, Adarcon, (rendred, A Drachm, 1. Chron. 29.7. Ezr. 2.69. Neh. 7.70, 71.) It was a Persian Coin, in Value about two and twenty Shillings.

3. Stater, (rendred, A Piece of Money, Matth. 17.27.) This was equal to a Shekel. Jerom saith, Siclus, id est, Stater, quatuor habet Drachmas Atticas. And so it was in Value, Two Shillings and Three Pence, Farthing, Half-farthing.¹⁹

4. Denarius; (rendred, A Penny.) It weigh'd about Sixty Grains; that is, Seven Pence half-penny.

5. Assarius, (rendred, A Farthing, Mat. 10.29. Luk. 12.6.) It was in Value, A Farthing and Half.

6. Quadrans, (rendred also, A Farthing, Mat. 5.26.) It was in Value, but half the Assarius; namely, Three Quarters of a Farthing.²⁰

Now, to save the Trouble of answering upon every Text, where the Hebrew Coins are mentioned, we will insert a Couple of Tables, whereto you may have Recourse on all such Occasions.

¹⁸ Mather's subsequent paragraphs are extracted from Clark's "Reduction" (VII. § 12).

¹⁹ Adapted from St. Jerome's Commentariorum in Ezechielem Prophetam Libri Quatuordecim. Lib. 1, [PL 025. 0048A]: "Siclus autem, id est, stater, habet drachmas quatuor. Drachmae autem octo, Latinam unciam faciunt: ita ut unus panis decem uncias habere dicatur, quo. . . Sextam enim partem mensurae Hebraicae, quae appellatur HIN, jubetur per singulos dies bibere. Porro HIN duos χόας Atticos." Mather's Latin quote reads, "The Shekel, that is, the Stater, amounts to four Attic Drachmas."

Q. Wee have had your Account of the Hebrew Coins. But may we not employ a little further Consideration thereupon? v. 13.
A. Yes truly. And, first, Wee must know, that our Unacquaintedness with the true Sense of many Hebrew Words, may make many things to seem odd unto us.

Wherefore, I will, in the next Place, give you some Hints, from the most ingenious Dr. Nehemiah Grew upon this Matter.²³

No Stranger, tho' he ha's learn'd the English Tongue, yett, without being taught, can tell, what we English Men mean by, A Penny Weight. For, tho' a Penny weighs but Eight Grains, yett by a Pennyweight, we mean Twenty Four Grains. Thus tis said, 2. Sam. 14.26. That Absaloms Hair weigh'd two hundred Shekels, after the Kings Weight. By that Form of Speech, the Jewes might descend (as Dr. Grew thinks) as much below the reputed Weight of a Shekel, as we, when we say, A Penny Weight, ascend above the Weight of a Penny. For two hundred of these Shekels, as commonly reckoned, was fifty Ounces; whereas, there are seldome above Thirty Ounces, allowing three or four more for Waste, in the most monstrous Peruke. We are ignorant, it seems, of what is here meant, by a Shekel, or of the Phrase, After the Kings Weight.

And why not the Weight of a Shekel, (saies my Doctor,) as well as of a Talent? Of the several Kinds whereof, both among the Jewes, and in other Nations, we are still in the dark.

The Oracle, in the Temple, was an exact Cube, of Ten Yards, in Length, Breadth, and Heighth. [1. King. 6.20.] It was accordingly comprehended within 777 600 Square Inches. And both the Cieling, and the Floor, as well as the Sides, were all over-laid with Gold: [1. King. 6.20, 30. 2. Chron. 3.5.] Amounting to 600 Talents, [2. Chron. 3.8.] Should we then allow, what we need not to do, that the Gold where with it was overlaid, was, of that Thickness, for every Square Inch, to contain a whole Drachm, that is, One Eighth of an Ounce, yett it would have come, in all, but to 97 200 Ounces. Whereas in 600 Talents, according to the Received Account of a Talent, there are 900 000 Ounces; that is, above Nine Times the former Number; and it would have made the Gold, a quarter of an Inch Thick, to no Purpose.²⁴

Eupolemus, as we find him cited by Eusebius, Pr. Ev. 9.4. saies, That in reckoning the Charge for the Temple, a Talent signified but a Shekel. The Shekel, if it weigh'd, as we commonly suppose, Half an Ounce, there went then to overlay the Oracle, but Three Hundred Ounces. Now, an Ounce of Gold, answering in Quantity, to about 2 000 Leaves, Three Inches & one quarter Square, each Leaf containing a little more than Ten and an half Square Inches; such Leaf-Gold, as Gilders now use; Tis plain, That 21 000 Square Inches of Leaf-Gold, are equal to an Ounce of Gold; and 300 Ounces, to 6 300 000 of Square Inches. In which Number, the Measure of the Oracle is contained Eight Times, with a Fraction of near One Tenth. Should we then allow, that Eupolemus was not mistaken | in the Talent, nor we in the Shekel, what is called Overlaying, must have been Gilding, with a Sort of Leaf-Gold, having something more than Eight Times the

²⁴ Grew (190), § 30.

Substance of Leaf-Gold now in Use. But this is inconsistent, with what we read, 2. King, 18.16. That Hezekiah did cutt off the Gold, from the Doors of the Temple, and from the Pillars, which Hezekiah King of Judah had overlaid. Here the Over-laying must be something more than Gilding.²⁵

Yett from Eupolemus, thus much may be gathered; That the Jewes, besides the larger Talent, had one that was much less. Which being so, what we read [1. Chron. 22.14.] ought no longer to seem incredible: That David, even in the Time of his Trouble, provided One hundred thousand Talents of Gold, and One Thousand thousand Talents of Silver; where by Talent, if we understand the Greater, there was Gold and Silver enough not only for overlaying the Temple, and all the Vessels belonging to it, but well-nigh to fill it. But if the Less; it was no more than what was possible, and feasible, and necessary.²⁶

Q. The Laver having a Foot of Brass? v. 18.

A. Ludovicus de Dieu opposes the Torrent of the common Opinion, and instead of, a Foot, he translates it, a Cover.²⁷

Monsr. Saurin dares not Reject the Thought, tho' he does not espouse it. For, tis likely enough, there was a Cover belonging to the Laver. Without This, the Water contained in it, and consecrated, might have contracted some Foulness, or have had the Rain-Water mingled with it.²⁸

The Ablution here was commanded by Moses, on Pain of Death. Maimonides thus paraphrases upon it. *The Priest who officiates without Sanctifying himself; that is to say, without Washing in the Morning, is in danger of being Struck Dead by the GOD of Heaven; According as it is said, They shall wash their Hands & their Feet, that they dy not. And his Administration is contrary to the Law, whether it be the High-Priest, or any Inferiour one, that shall act so.*²⁹

²⁵ Grew (190–91), § 31, cites a passage from the early Jewish-Hellenist historian Eupolemus, whose work survives only in fragments in Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica, in Clement of Alexandria's Stromata, and in Alexander Polyhistor. Mather's second-hand citation of Eusebius's quote from Eupolemus (via Alexander Polyhistor) reads – as it appears in Praeparatio evangelica (9.34.451d) – “And Solomon sent away both the Egyptians and the Phoenicians each to their own country, having given to every man ten shekels of gold; now the shekel is a talent” (Preparation 1:480).

Q. What were the Spices, of the Holy Anointing Oil? v. 24.

A. 'Tis easier for me, to tell you what they were Not, than what they were.

We are left at great Uncertainties, about the Translation of the Hebrew Terms, for these Four Odoriferous Ingredients.³⁰

The Myrrh, by the Arabic Translator, is rendred Musk. But if it were a Gumm, as tis most likely, yett it seems not for to be That, unto which we have given the Name; The Scent whereof is wholesome indeed, but not Fragrant; whereas the Oil now before us, was intended for Perfume, and not for Physick.

The Calamus here notes a Stalk, and not a Root, such as is the Calamus in the Shops.³¹

The Cinamon, in the Hebrew, Chenemon, may be the same that is described by Dioscorides, [L. 1. c. 13.] But not the Bark we now call Cinamon, a Bark that growes not in Arabia, from whence, tis likely, the Jewes had all their Spices. Tho' this may so far agree in Taste, with the Cinamon of Dioscorides, as to be Biting, δριμύ καὶ δηκτικόν, yett of the Dulcitude, eminently mixed with the Acritude, and remaining in an Infusion, hereof in Water, when the Acritude is lost, he saies nothing at all.³²

The Cassia, cannot be the Cassia Fistularis, a Purge, and without any Scent; nor can it be the Bark, that is commonly called, Cassia Lignea, which is a Species of the modern Cinamon.³³

Thus anon, when we read, of Galbanum, (which is mentioned, Eccles. 24.15. as yeelding a pleasant Odor,) cannot be that fætid and filthy Gumm, which is now called Galbanum. Such a Gumm would never go into the Composition of so choice a Perfume.³⁴

³² Grew (p. 191, § 33). Dioscorides Pedanius, De materia medica (1.14.1, line 9), explains that cinnamon is both “sharp and bitter.”

³⁴ Grew (p. 191, § 34). Galbanum, aka. Ferula gummosa, is an aromatic resin used in the Temple service (Exod. 30:34). See also Poole (Synopsis Criticorum 1:476–77 and Works 5:335)

And now our Hand is in, we may, without being at the Pains, to look out the more proper Places to insert them, here take notice, of our Ignorance, concerning the true Translation of the Hebrew Names for Plants also.

We read of Solomon, (1. King. 4.33.) He spake of Plants, from the Cedar in Lebanon, to the Hyssop which springeth out of the Wall; That is to say, From the Greatest to the Least. Now, among the least, are the Ruta Muraria, Paronychia, and some others, which grow upon the Wall. But what we now call Hyssop, as it is far from being one of the least, so it is no Wall-Plant.³⁵

Our Translators have done well, where, being at a Loss for the true English, they have kept unto the Text. But sometimes, as Dr. Grew notes, where the Text is plain, they venture, tho' very learned Men, to guess themselves into no Sense at all. Thus, [Cant. 1.14.] the Spouse compares her Beloved, as in our English Bibles, to a Cluster of Camphire; yett the Hebrew is, A Cluster, or Bunch of Copher; with which the Syriac agrees, as to the Radical Letters; and so does the Septuagint, Βότρυς τῆς κύπρου; Now, of the Cyprus, we read in Pliny, (12.24.) Cyprus est Arbuscula, in Syria frequentissima, Coma odoratissima, ex qua sit Unguentum Cyprinum. And in Tirinus; Hujus flosculi, instar Uvarum, in Botros coeunt. But how great is the Difference, between a Bunch of Copher, or Cyprus, that is of most fragrant Flowers; and Camphire, a meer Juice, and of a Scurvy Scent?³⁶

A. Or, Ointment-Maker; of whose Art, we have an Account in Theophrastus and in Dioscorides.³⁷ and Pliny (Historia Naturalis 12.56.126).

35 Grew (p. 192, § 35). Ruta Muraria (genus: Asplenium) is a species of fern; Paronychia, existing in numerous varieties, is also known as nailwort or chickweed.

36 Grew, bk. 4, cap. 4, p. 192, § 36. In Brian Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (3:430, 431), the Hebrew phrase הַכְּפֹרִי הַזֶּה is rendered "Botrus Copher" and the Syriac, "Botrus est cypru patruus." Cant. 1:14 (LXX), which Mather here cites from Grew, is translated as "a cluster of camphor." Pliny's relates that "Cyprus is a shrub, very often found in Syria, with most perfumed foliage, from which comes the ointment cyprinum (cyprus-ointment)." Mather's third-hand quote (via Grew) originates in Tirinus (see below) and appears to be a summary of Pliny's description of the different types and medicinal qualities of the leaves of the cypress shrub (Historia Naturalis 13.2.5, 12; 24.10.15–24; 24.61.102 etc.). Finally, in his Commentarius in Vetus et Novi Testamenti Tomis Tribus Comprehensus (1632), tomus 2, p. 197, Cant. 1:13 (voce: Botrus Cypri), "Capitis I. Pars Quinta," the Flemish Jesuit and biblical scholar Jacobus Tirinus (1580–1636) maintains that "they [ancients] combine this little flower into clusters, after the fashion of grapes." It is Tirinus who provides the Latin quotation from, but erroneous citation reference to, Pliny's Naturalis Historia (12.24), which appears to be a paraphrase of Pliny's description of the unguent Cyprinum (Oil of Cyprus). See also Salmasius's annotation in Plinianae Exercitationes in Caij Julii Solini Polyhistora. Pars Altera (1629), pp. 466 and 1068 A–C.

37 Patrick, on Exod. 30:25 (Exodus 610); Theophrastus describes the process of making the fragrant oil of myrrh (Historia Plantarum 9.4. secs. 1–10) as does Dioscorides Pedanis (De materia medica 1.30.1, lines 3–4). Patrick (and Mather) would have had access to several editions

Maimonides thus describes the Manner, of making the Ointment here.³⁸

The Spices were beaten severally, [He should have excepted the Myrrh, which was, a Liquid:] They were mixed then together; and macerated in Pure Water, till all the Vertue of them was extracted. This being done, the Hin of Oyl was poured upon them; and all was boiled upon the Fire, till the Water was evaporated, and the Oyl alone remained. See Schickard, in his Mischpat Hamelek.³⁹

Q. A Little Paganism on this Occasion? v. 25.

A. Porphyrie has these Words, We ought to use Incense chiefly in the Worship of the Gods; They prefer it unto Hecatombs.⁴⁰

Lett us add one Passage out of Plutarch. He says, The Egyptians were the only People who offered Incense thrice a day to their Gods: The First, which consisted of Rosin, was offered when the Sun began to rise. The Second, which was of Myrrh, was at Noon. And the Third, composed of a Drug, called Kyphi, at Sun-sett.⁴¹

Q. How was this to be an Holy Oyl, throughout their Generations? v. 31.

A. The Jewes fancy, that this Individual Oyl, made by Moses, lasted unto the Captivity; or till the Time of Josiah, which may be as Fabulous a Fancy, as that of Josiah's hiding of it.⁴² of Theophrastus's works, including the dual-language edition Theophrasti Eresii Historia Plantarum Libri Decem Graecè & Latinè, edited by Julius Caesare Scaliger (Amstelodami, 1644).

⁴⁰ No matter what primary source Mather leaned on, he refers to De Abstinencia (2.17), by the Neoplatonic philosopher Porphyrius of Tyre (234–c. 305 CE). Porphyrius cites Antiphanes's Mystics as evidence that the gods prefer frankincense to hecatombs of meat offerings: “In simple offerings most the Gods delight:/ For though before them hecatombs are placed,/ Yet frankincense is burnt the last of all./ An indication this that all the rest,/ Preceding, was a vain expense, bestowed/ Through ostentation, for the sake of men;/ But a small offerings gratifies the Gods” (On Abstinence, p. 54). If that is so, then Eusebius Pamphilus (Demonstratio Evangelica 3.3.105 and Praeparatio evangelica 4.11.149*bd*) has it wrong, when he insists that God Almighty cannot be pleased by such offerings: “we must neither offer by fire nor dedicate any of the things of sense; for there is no material thing which is not at once impure to the immaterial” (Preparation 1:163). Perhaps the German polymath Johann Wolfgang von Goethe was on to something in his 1827 poem Three Palinodias (1): “Incense is but a tribute for the gods, – / To mortals 'tis but poison./ The smoke that from thine altar blows,/ Can it the gods offend?/ For I observe thou hold'st thy nose – / Pray what does this portend?/ Mankind deem incense to excel/ Each other earthly thing,/ So he that cannot bear its smell,/ No incense e'er should bring./ With unmoved face by thee at least/ To dolls is homage given;/ If not obstructed by the priest,/ The scent mounts up to heaven” (E. A. Bowring, translator. Poems of Goethe [1891]), p. 251.

There were so many Things to be anointed with it; and especially, the High-Priests, who had such a Plentiful Effusion of it, that it ran down to the very Skirts of their Garments; that this Oyl could not last so long; much less, could it, without a Miracle, retain the Scent, for so many Generations.⁴³

Tis true, there was near half an hundred Weight of the Spices, yett there was but Five or Six Quarts of Oyl; & therefore the Ointment could not be more; the Odors of the Spices, being only extracted by Infusion. And such a Quantity as this, one may well suppose, it was near spent, in the Anointing of so many Things & Persons, as are here mentioned. And therefore upon Occasion, it was to be made again, as was the following Perfume.

It ha's been an ancient Opinion among the Jewes, That in the Second Temple, there was no Holy Oyl. We know not how they came to fancy it unlawful to make it. But, as Dr. Patrick thinks, The Omission of this Unction after the Return from the Captivity, seems to foretel, that there should be another, & a better Unction, by the Holy Spirit of God, ere long to be received.⁴⁴

Q. Why might not this Ointment be imitated? v. 33.

A. Maimonides answers well; That this Odor, being smelt no where else, Men might be more in Love with it, in the Sanctuary. And that none, by being Anointed with the like, might fancy themselves better than others; from whence might have arose Dissentions, Envies & Mischiefs not a few.⁴⁵

Q. The Materials of the Sacred Perfume? v. 34.

A. Salmasius informs us, That the Stacte, is the Liquid Part of Myrrhe, which drops from it, when it is pressed out by Art. And so Fortunatus Scacchus observes

30:31 (Exodus 611–12). Based on the Talmud, tractate Horayoth (11b), Rashi believed that from the phrase “for all your generations” the Hebrew “Sages deduced that ... the entire [שָׁמֶן] [הַמְשָׁחָה] [(anointing oil made by Moses)] will be preserved for the time yet to come (i. e., after Moshiach comes). The numerical value [זֶה] [Zeh (i. e., This)] [ז=7, ה=5] corresponds to the twelve logs” of Moses’ anointing oil (Metsudah Chumash/Rashi 2:495–96). Through repeated miracles, this anointing oil lasted until the days of Josiah, who hid the oil along with the Ark of the Covenant, the jar of manna, and Aaron’s blossoming rod (Horayoth 12a).

43 Ibn Ezra is the most vociferous of the medieval rabbis to dismiss the miraculous replenishment of Moses’ anointing oil. The original quantity of twelve logs, Ibn Ezra argues, was insufficient to last for the anointments of all the furniture of the Tabernacle, the high priests, and of the Solomonic Temple; therefore, more oil had to be made as needed until Josiah’s time (Commentary 2:638) and Mikraoth Gedoloth: Exodus (2:509).

44 Simon Patrick, on Exod. 30:31 (Exodus 611–12). Tractate Makkot (2:6) of the Jerusalem Talmud explains that the anointing oil was one of the five things missing in the Second Temple. Maimonides, too, believed there was “no anointing oil [during] the Second Temple [era]”; the High Priest was therefore “installed in his office by putting on the garments of the High Priest alone,” in Hilchot K’lei HaMikdash ViHaOvdim Bo (1.8), in Mishneh Torah (29:138). See also Mather’s gloss on Ezra 1:11 (BA 4:88).

45 Patrick (Exodus 613); Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 45, p. 479, and Guide (3.45.580).

out of Dioscorides, who calls it, The most unctuous Part of fresh Myrrhe, press'd out with a little Water. This was used by the Heathens in the Perfumes of their Altars, as appears by Euripides.⁴⁶

The Galbanum sold in our Shops, is of an offensive Smell. But there was another in Syria, on Mount Amanus, of an excellent Scent. Here is a Word therefore added, Sweet Spices, which the vulgar Latin joins to Galbanum; & renders it, Galbanum boni Odoris; As if it had been said, by way of Distinction, Aromatic Galbanum.⁴⁷

⁴⁶ Patrick (Exodus 614–15); Salmasius, Pliniana Exercitationes (1629), pp. 544(E)–545(A) also cites Dioscorides Pedanius (De material medica 1.66.3, lines 7–8); Fortunatus Scacchus, Thesaurus Antiquitatem Sacro-Prophanarum (1725), lib. 2, cap. 8, col. 331(E), takes delight in the unctuous quality of the odoriferous myrrh, as described in Dioscorides Pedanius (De materia medica 1.60.1, lines 1–3). See also Scacchus (lib. 1, cap. 52, col. 262). In Euripides (Troiaides 1061–65), the chorus of Trojan women sings, “So then you have delivered into Achaea’s hand, O Zeus, your shrine in Ilium and your fragrant altar, the offerings of burnt sacrifices with smoke of myrrh to heaven uprising” (Trojan Women 1061–65).

Q. Who was Bezaleel, the Overseer of the skilful Workmen for the Tabernacle? v. 2.

A. His Father Hur, is thought the Husband of Miriam, the Sister of Moses.

Then (as Dr. Patrick observes,) the Observation of Abarbinel is not impertinent; God more particularly declared His Choice of Bezaleel, and Moses the more punctually remembers the Declaration, to take away all Exceptions from the Israelites, who might have been apt to think, that Moses had too much Regard unto his own kindred, if he had appointed his Nephew to be the Chief-Governour of this Work, without the Special Call of GOD unto it.¹

Q. Aholiab of the Tribe of Dan? v. 6.

A. It is observed by R. Bechai, That God chose one out of the lowest Tribe, (for so they accounted that of Dan,) as well as one out of the chief, which was Judah; That Bezaleel might not be lifted up, with Vain Conceit; For Great and Small, are æqual before GOD. It seems, one of the same Tribe, of Dan, by the Mothers side, was the most skilful Person that could be found, for the Building of the Temple, by Solomon. [2. Chron. 2.14.]²

Q. On that; The Sabbaths a Sign? v. 13.

A. The Original may be rendred, A Sign, to acknowledge, that I Jehovah, am your Sanctifier; that is to say, Your God: For as Mr. Mede observes, To be the Sanctifier of a People, and to be Their God, is all one. Compare, Ezek. XX.20 – read it so, To acknowledge, that I Jehovah am your God. The most ingenious Mr. Derham, in his Physico-Theology, observes upon it, that the Profanation of the Sabbath, carried in it therefore such an Affront unto God, as that the Punishment of it with Death, was a very equitable Penalty, and that altho' under Christianity, the Punishment be not made capital, yett we have not less Reasons, but rather much greater for the Observation of this Holy Day, than the Jews.³

² Mather, via Patrick (Exodus 621), refers to Bachya ben Asher (Bechai), Torah Commentary (4:1330).

³ Again, Mather's primary source is Patrick (Exodus 624). Joseph Mede, Works (1664), "Discourse XV," pp. 73, 74. The Derham extract is from Physico-Theology; or, a Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God, from his Work of Creation, 2nd ed. (1716 [1714]), bk. 11, ch. 6, pp. 452–53, by Dr. William Derham (1657–1735), English natural philosopher, fellow member of the Royal Society and Mather's longtime correspondent. Derham's Physico-Theology represents the substance of his Boyle lectures, which Derham presented at St. Mary-Le-Bow

To illustrate, the Notion of, A Sign, or A Mark, which is here insisted on, the same Industrious, and Accomplished Philosopher, as well as Religious Divine, observes; That as at this Day, it is customary for | Servants to wear the Liv- [70v]
 ery of their Masters, & others to bear Badges of their Profession; thus in former Ages, & in Diverse Countreys, it was usual to carry Signs, and Marks, and Badges, on many Occasions. In Ezek. IX.4. such a thing was putt upon the Forehead of those that lamented the Abominations of the City. Compare, Rev. VII.3. and IX.4. and Rev. XIII.16.⁴

Those Badges were very common. Servants and Souldiers had them on their Arms, or Forheads. Those that were matriculated in the Hateria, or Companies, had the Badges of their Societies. And whoever listed themselves into the Societies of the several Gods, received a Χαραγμα, in their Bodies (commonly made with Red-hott, Needles, or some sort of Burning in the Flesh,) of the God under which they listed themselves. To Badges on their Flesh, or perhaps on their Cloathes, they adjoined, a Dedication of Dayes; as we know how the several Dayes of the Week were dedicated by the ancient Romans, & afterwards by our Ancestors the Saxons.⁵

Behold, the Sign, the Mark, the Badge, to be worn, by them who would acknowledge the glorious JEHOVAH, to be Their God.

Q. Moses's Return, with the Two Tables, written with the Finger of God? v. 18.⁶

A. It was a thing so notorious, and so much beleaved by those who were not Jewes, That other Nations pretended unto the like Divine Writings, to procure unto their Lawes, the more of Reputation and Authority.

The Brachmans report in their Histories, That the Book of their Law, which they call Caster, was delivered by God unto Bremavius, upon a Mount, in a Cloud; and that God gave also another Book of Lawes to Brammon, in the First Age of the World.⁷

Church, London, in 1711–12. In his The Christian Philosopher (1720/21), Mather made much use of Derham's Physico-Theology (1713) and Astro-Theology (1714).

⁵ Derham (453, n. 5). The Greek noun χαραγμα signifies "any mark engraved, imprinted, or branded" (LSJ).

⁶ Master at explaining obscure passages to the perplexed, Maimonides insists that phrases like "the finger of God" or "the writing of God" are metaphors and must not be understood in a literal sense: "with regard to the coming into being of a thing, the texts figuratively use the terms saying and speaking and that it is one and the same thing of which it is said that it was made by speech and of which it is said that it is the work of a finger. Similarly the dictum written with the finger of God is equivalent to its saying by the word of God" (Guide 1.66.160).

⁷ Pierre-Daniel Huet devotes his Demonstratio Evangelica (1690), prop. IV, cap. 6, pp. 95–99 (and p. 205E), to substantiating that the ancient Brahmin patriarchs of India (as well as all the other pagans) imitated the Prisca theologia of Moses. The story about the law of the Brahmins given to Bremavius on a mountain appears to originate in The Discoverie of the Sect of the Bani-ans. Containing their History, Law, Liturgie, Casts, Customs, and Ceremonies (1630), by Henry Lord (b. 1563), preacher to the East-India Company and early ethnographer. According to

The Persians report the same, of those of Zoroaster; and the Getes of Xamolxis. Nay, the Brachmans have a Decalogue, like this of Moses; and accurate Interpretations of it; In which there is a Prophecy, *That one day, there shall be One Law alone, throughout the World.*⁸

This argues; how well the World was anciently acquainted with those Books of Moses, & what an high Esteem they had of them.

Lord's Discoverie (chs. 2, 8), Brammon, eldest son of Pourous and Barcoutee (the first human pair), populated the eastern hemisphere and received from god a book of precepts to instruct his people in the first age of the world. After the Flood, which ended the first age of the world, Bremaw, one of Brammon's descendants, received from god in the clouds of Mount Meropurbatee the ancient precepts of Brammon, their progenitor, instructing Bremaw to teach his people, the Banians, from this holy book they called "Shaster," which consisted of "three Tracts" (Discoverie, pp. 4, 40).

⁸ Mather's source is Patrick (Exodus 628), who leans on Pierre-Daniel Huet's Alnetanae Quaestiones (1690), lib. 2, cap. 12, pp. 214–15, n. 19: "De tabulis Legis Mosi à Deo traditis." The "Brachmans Decalogue" consists of eight (!) precepts and is excerpted in Henry Lord's Discoverie (1630), ch. 8, pp. 41–43). In a second work by Henry Lord, The Religion of the Persees. As it was compiled from a Booke of theirs ... by them called their Zundavestaw (1630), Lord describes the religion of the "Persee," the second "sect" he encountered in the East-Indian city Surratt. The Parsee lawgiver "Zertoost" received his holy book Zundavesta by revelation (ch. 6, p. 27), which consists of three parts with different precepts (ch. 7, pp. 30–39). Herodotus (4.93–96) relates that Xamolxis (aka. Zamolxis, or Salmoxis) was a demon or sky-god among the Getae, i. e., Dacian (Thracian) people, in the territories of modern Romania (see Diodorus Siculus 1.94.2). In the best manner of Euhemerus, Herodotus explains that before "Salmoxis" became a deity, he was a "slave to Pythagoras" in Samos and subsequently taught his people philosophy. Plato, too, in his Charmides (156d–158c) speaks of Zalmoxis, the god-king of the Thracians, whose devotees could even "make men immortal." Hugo Grotius's Historia Gothorum, Vandalorum, & Langobardorum (1655) may have served Mather and his peers as one of the best sources on the ancient Getae or Goths. See also Thomas Hyde's Historia veterum Persarum (1700), pp. 433–36. On the idea that the gods were deified humans, see T. S. Brown's "Euhemerus and the Historians" (359–74).

Q. Why in so much Haste? v. 1.

A. The People had as yett, received no Directions, about the Service of God, for which they were called out of Egypt; and they thought, it was Time to desire Aaron to sett about it, in such a Way, as other People served their Gods. Thus Dr. Patrick.

They cry, Make us Gods, or, rather, Make us a God. See Neh. 9.18.

Nyssen elegantly compares them to Schoolboyes, in the Absence of their Master, carried Ανοητοις ορμαις εις αταξίαν By senseless Motions, into Disorder.¹

Q. What might be in the Mind of Aaron, when he said, Break off the Golden Ear-rings etc.? v. 2.

A. The Jewes tell us, That Aaron used all the Delayes, he could think of, in hopes to putt the mad People off, until the Arrival of Moses; and he hoped, that they would not comply with some of his Proposals.

You'll find in Shemoth-Rabba this Particular and Remarkable Passage. Hur having been Massacred for his resisting of the People, Aaron just ready to succumb unto their Fury, lift up his Eyes to Heaven, and said, O Lord, I look up to thee, who knowest the Hearts of Men, and who dwellest in the Heavens: Thou art Witness, that I act against my Inclinations.²

Q. Aaron, tis said, Fashioned the Golden Calf, with a Graving Tool. Of what Fashion? v. 4.³

A. The Egyptians worshipped Apis, or Serapis; a Black Bull, with a White Streak, or List, along the Back; a White Mark, in Fashion of an Half Moon on his Right Shoulder; only Two Hairs growing on his Tail; with a fair Square Blaze on his Forehead; and a great Bunch, called Cantharus, under his Tongue.⁴

1 Patrick, on Exod. 32:1 (Exodus 630), cites a passage from De Vita Mosis (cap. 1, sec. 58, line 8), by the Cappadocian Father Gregorius Nyssenus (c. 335–c. 395), bishop of Nyssa. The Greek phrase, here translated by Patrick, reads in the original, ἀνέτοις ὀρμαῖς εἰς ἀταξίαν.

2 Midrash Rabba (Exodus 11:8).

3 In his "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 32:6), Mather lists "Taylors, Epicurisme described"; i. e., Thomas Taylor's sermon on Exod. 32:6, "Epicurisme Described and Disgraced" [sic], preached in 1630, and posthumously published as sermon No. 10, in The Principles of Christian Practice (1653), pp. 107–14, bound with the previously cited The Works of that Faithful Servant of Jesus Christ, Dr. Thomas Taylor (1653).

4 Herodotus (3.28) explains that Apis is completely black "but has a white triangle on his forehead and, on his back, the likeness of an eagle; on his tail the hairs are double, and there is a knot [i. e., κάνθαρος] under his tongue" (Herodotus 3.28). The "cantharus" [i. e., κάνθαρος] is a knot in the shape of a sacred scarab (dung beetle), which was associated with the rising sun-god

Besides this Natural and Living Bull, they also worshipped Βοῦν δίαχρυσον, a Golden Ox, the Pourtraiture of the former.⁵ Hence Aaron, and afterwards Jeroboam, who lived some Years with Shishak, the King of Egypt, had their Pattern of their Calves. If you object, That the Egyptian Idols were Bulls, these, Calves; I answer, Gradus non variat Speciem. Yea, Herodotus calls Apis himself μόσχον; and with Virgil, Vitula, Binos alit ubere fœtus. But, to putt all out of doubt; What, in Exodus is termed, A Calf, is in Psal. 106.20 termed, An Ox.⁶

But what saies Bochart upon it? Bochart saies, That here was no Use at all of a Graving Tool in the Case, and that its being mention'd, in the Hebrew, before the Melting of the Metal, is enough to make us lay aside the Thoughts of it. He therefore saies, That the Word by us rendred, A Graving Tool, signifies, A Purse, or, A Bag: and he reads the Clause, And receiving them at their Hand, he laid them up in a Bag & made thereof a molten Calf. He Illustrates it, from Judg. 8.24. 2. King. 5.23. and Isa. 46.6.⁸

However, Leclerc opposes him with Probable Reasons, that Saurin pleads for a Pyrrhonistical Criticism.⁹

Q. Whence gott the Israelites, the Name of, A Stiff-necked People? v. 9.

Khepri and thus signifying eternal renewal (R. H. Wilkinson, Complete Gods 230–33). According to ancient Egyptian beliefs, “the race of beetles has no female, but all the males eject their sperm into a round pellet of material [dung] which they roll up by pushing it from the opposite side, just as the sun seems to turn the heavens in the direction opposite to its own course, which is from west to east” (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 74.381a, lines 5–10). See also John Spencer’s De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 3, diss. 6, cap. 2, sec. 4, fol. 845 (1°).

5 Plutarch (De Iside et Osiride 366e, line 1) relates that the priests of Isis and Osiris perform their mourning rites by draping “the gilded image” of a cow with a black linen shroud.

6 Whether the Egyptian idols were images of bulls or calves, Mather feels, makes no difference, for this “gradation does not change the species.” Herodotus (3.28) tells that according to the Egyptians, “a lightning bolt from heaven has struck the cow and so from it the calf Apis is born.” And Virgil (Bucolica: Eclogue 3.30) has Damoetas exclaim, “the cow ... suckles two calves.”

7 Mather, via Simon Patrick (Exodus 632), enlists as his authorities John Selden’s De Diis Syris (1617), synt. 1, cap. 4, pp. 46–65, esp. p. 51; and Nicholas Fuller’s Miscellaneorum Sacrarum (1617), lib. 2, cap. 7, pp. 212–13, and lib. 4, cap. 10, pp. 522–29.

Jean Le Clerc, Mosis Prophetæ Libri Quatuor, Exodus (1696, 1733) and Commentarius In Exodi (Exod. 32:4), pp. 178–80, was decried as a skeptic of verbal inspiration of the Bible. See especially Le Clerc’s Sentimens de quelques Théologiens de Hollande (1685) and Twelve Dissertations out of Monsieur LeClerc’s Genesis (1696).

A. Wee know, t'was a Metaphor borrow'd from Young Bullocks, impatient of having a Yoke laid upon their Necks. But Israel never had this Name, till the Business of the Golden Calf had procured it for them; and there is a most Remarkable Allusion in it. The Indisposition of any Calf to bear a Yoke, makes all Men call it, a Stiff-necked Creature; the Addition of an Hard Metal in the Neck of the Molten Calf, here made it Stiffer yett.¹⁰ But the worst Stiff-neckedness of all, was in the People that made an Idol of this Creature; they show'd their own unspeakable Unwillingness to submitt unto the Yoke of that Law, which God had laid upon them. The Foolish People intended this Calf, as a Resemblance of God; but God would have them to know that it was a Resemblance of Themselves; and as Moses reduced this Calf to Powder, so God threatned that for this Calf-like Property, of their Stiff-neckedness Hee would consume them in a Moment.¹¹

Q. Are you sure, that the Calf made by Israel, was an Imitation of the Egyptian Apis?

A. Upon further Thoughts, I am not sure of it. Bochart, with his usual Acuteness, proves, That the Worship of Serapis in Egypt, was not of such Antiquity; nor indeed, known there before the Dayes of Alexander the Great; but that it was by Ptolomy brought out of Pontus into Egypt, the Story whereof we have in the Fourth Book of Tacitus. The same Incomparable Writer, confutes the Opinion advanced by Philo, That Typhus, or Typhon, worshipped in Egypt, was the Original of the Israelitish Calf.¹²

10 See Appendix A.

11 If Rashi's expertise is useful here, then the phrase "stiff-necked people" signifies that "they turn the napes of their necks stiffly toward those who try to reprove them and refuse to listen." And Ibn Ezra adds that this image is of a people "which does not listen to what is commanded. The image is that of a man walking down the road who, if someone calls him, will not turn his head" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 2:284).

12 Samuel Bochart, Hieroicoicon, pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 34, col. 338. Mather refers to Ptolemaeus Soter I, aka. Lagides (c. 367–283 BCE), who acceded to the throne of Egypt upon the death of Alexander the Great (d. 323). The Roman historian Tacitus (Historiarum 4.82–84) relates that according to some Egyptian priests a godlike youth appeared to Ptolemy I in a dream, who upon inquiry fetched the image of the Serapis bull from Pontus (a region in the SE corner of the Black Sea) to Alexandria, his new capital in Egypt. Others, Tacitus objects, believe that Serapis was brought from Seleucia (Syria) to Egypt during the reign of Ptolemy III; yet others insist that Serapis was brought from the Egyptian city Memphis and set in a newly built temple in Alexandria. Revered for his healing powers, Serapis became identified with Aesculapius, with Osiris (one of the most ancient Egyptian deities), with Jupiter, but mostly with Pluto, the Greco-Roman god of the underworld (Historia 4.84). Bochart (cols. 339–41) rejects the opinion of Philo Judaeus (De Ebrietate 24.95) that the Golden Calf was modelled after Typhon, monstrous offspring of Gaia and Tartarus, "the emblem of whom was the figure of a golden bull; around which his mad worshippers established dances, and sing, and prelude" with "melancholy and mournful lamentation" (Works 215). See also J. Tait, "The Wisdom of Egypt: Classical Views."

Nevertheless, he does grant, That Philo is very right so far, that Ox-worship was very ancient in Egypt; and that the Israelites might learn it from them.¹³

Tho' if you will turn to our Illustration upon the Shechinah, (in Act. 7.2.) you will find an Original for this Image, of the Calf, much more probable, than any that ha's been mentioned.

However, Dr. Patrick objects against it. He thinks, Aaron chose the Oxe, for the Symbol of the Divine Presence, in hope, the People would never be so sottish as to worship it.¹⁴

Q. Why is the Image called, A molten Calf?

A. It was no bigger than a Calf, tho' the Head was like an Oxe, & therefore the Psalmist called it so.

When it was cried, These are thy Gods, O Israel: Abulensis interprets it; His Divine Vertue resides in this Golden Body.

Some think, That Aaron made Choice of an Oxe to be the Symbol of the Divine Presence; in hopes, that the People would look on it as no more, and not be so stupid as to worship it. For the Head of an Oxe was anciently an Emblem of Strength, as Horns were a common Sign of Kingly Power. Hence, when the Christian Fathers mention this Idol, they usually speak of no more than an Head. Lactantius, Inst. L. 4. c. 10.] only says, They made themselves the Image of a Bullocks Head; Not because he imagined, Aaron made only an Head, but this was the principal Part, whereby God was represented.¹⁵

14 Patrick, on Exod. 32:4 (Exodus 634); his principal source is Dr. Thomas Tenison's Of Idolatry: A Discourse (1678), cap. 6, parts 4–5, pp. 112–25. See also Franciscus Moncaeus's controversial Aaron Purgatus: sive De Vitulo Aureo Libri Duo (1604), in Criticorum Sacrorum (1698), 1:85–192 (sep. pag.), sign F²–M⁶, in which the French antiquarian claimed that the winged cherubim on the ark of the covenant and Aaron's golden calf were effigies of the Egyptian Apis. These bovine creatures were no idols at all but legitimate objects through which prayers could be directed toward the Most High. On this topic, see Smolinski, "Eager Imitators" (310–20).

15 The Spanish bishop of Avila, Tostatus Abulensis, aka. Alonso Tostado (c. 1400–1455) imagines that the recalcitrant Israelites worshiped the Golden Calf (Apis), because like their Egyptian overlord they believed that the power of Apis resided in the body of the statue, in Commentaria in Secundam Partem Exodi (1728), Exod. 32; Questio XII, pp. 202–04: "Quaere, cum esset unus Deus metallinus, dixerunt Hebraei pluraliter, Hi sunt dii, &c?" (ref. is to p. 203, col. 1, middle). The early Christian author Lucius Caecilianus Firmianus Lactantius, in his Divine Institutes (4.10), relates that when Moses "tarried forty days" in the mountains, his wayward followers "made the head of an ox in gold, which they called Apis, that it might go before them as a standard" (ANF 7:108). Matthew Poole's summary of the Reformation and post-Reformation debate on the origin, nature, and function of the Aaronic Molten Calf (Exod. 32:4–6) is highly instructive (Synopsis Criticorum 1:481–86 and Works 5:352–64).

Q. What might be the Holy Design of Providence, in permitting it, that Aaron the High-Priest of Israel, should fall into the horrible Crime of Idolatry?

A. God would hereby give this Instruction to Israel; That Reconciliation to Heaven was not to be expected by Sinners, from the Levitical Priesthood. If the High-Priest himself, were so great a Sinner, how could he make Atonement for the Sins of other Men? It is a good Stroke that Ferus has upon it, *Quomodò unus captivus alium liberaret?*¹⁶

Q. Give us, if you please, a Devout Remark upon that; They Rose up to play?

A. Our Mr. Strong has one of this Importance. “Humane Inventions in Gods Worship are in Gods Account, no better than Playes, and Mimical Dances. They Rose up to play. It was that which they intended for a Religious Worship: but being in a way of their own Devising, the Lord calls it, Play. And so it is rendered, 1. Cor. 10.7. They were but Childish Carriages, antique Gestures, neither suitable to the Holiness of God, nor the Majesty of His Ordinances, only fitt to please Children & no more.”¹⁷

Q. How may that be understood, I will make of thee a great Nation? v. 10.

A. Dr. Patrick reads it, I will sett thee over a great Nation. I will make thee a Prince of a mightier Nation.

So the Word, Asah, signifies, 1. Sam. XII.6.

This is the Meaning; Because Moses urges the Promise to the Patriarchs, as failing, if the People were all destroy'd. Whereas, there would have been no Danger of that, if God had made a great Nation, to spring of Moses, who was of their Seed.¹⁸

¹⁷ With slight alterations, Mather quotes this paragraph from William Strong's 1639 sermon on Zach. 14:9, One Heart and One Way (sermon 20), pp. 481–82, collected in XXXI Select Sermons, Preached On Special Occasions (1656), by William Strong (d. 1654), Independent clergyman of Moor Crichel (Dorset), sometime fellow of Katherine Hall (Cambridge) and, toward the end of his life, notable preacher at Westminster Abbey (ODNB). Mather's quote is from the “Third Use” of Sermon 20, pp. 481–82. See also BA (1:922, n 48).

¹⁸ Patrick, on Exod. 32:10 (Exodus 642–43). Although apparently excised from the “Biblia Americana” holograph manuscript, Mather does identify in his “Note Book of Authors” on Exod. 32:12 “MSS. Pat. no. 16. p. 172” as a potential source for his gloss on this verse.

Q. What Remark is to be made, on the Different Sentiment, which Moses and Joshua, had of the Noise in the Camp which they heard, when they approach'd near unto it? v. 17, 18.

A. I think tis the Observation of Masius hereupon, That the Tempers of Men, do præpossess them, with Opinions. Joshua, being more of a Warriours Disposition, interprets the Noise in the Camp, to be the Noise of War: But Meek Moses, interprets it, as rather the Noise of Singing. As Mens Tempers are, so they usually are (and Err) in their Judgments.¹⁹

Q. What is it that the Jewes imagine was the true Occasion, of Moses's breaking the Two Tables? v. 19.

A. A sufficient Occasion being mentioned in the Text; What need we enquire any further?

But some of the Jewes tell us, That the Letters of the Tables vanished, when Moses brought them near to so provoking a People.²⁰

Others of the Jewes tell us, That Moses fainted at the Sight of their Provocation and Idolatry, and had not Strength left him to carry the Tables.²¹

A Third sort of the Jewes tell us, That Moses intended the Humiliation of the Israelites, & hoped that their Hard Hearts would break, when they saw these glorious Tables broken for their sakes before their Eyes.²²

Q. What might be the Intention of Moses, in casting the Powdered Calf into the Water? v. 20.

¹⁹ The unidentified passage from Andreas Masius (1514–73), a RC humanist and Orientalist, is probably deeply buried in his Iosuae Imperatoris Historia Illustrata Atq. Explicata ab Andrea Masio (1574).

²⁰ According to פירקי רבי אליעזר [Pirke de Rabbi Elieser]. Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. 45, p. 122, when Moses saw the Israelites dancing around the calf, “the writing fled from off the tables, and they became heavy in his hands, and Moses was not able to carry himself and the tables, and he cast them from his hand, and they were broken beneath the mount” Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer (45.355–56).

²¹ Rashbam, following Pirke (45), explains that when Moses saw the calf “his strength failed him. Though he no longer had any strength, he cast the tables a little bit away from him, so that they would not hurt his feet when they fell,” in JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot (2:286–87).

A. Some say, It had been a Rite superstitiously used in the Worship of Apis, that they plunged the whole Image of the Beast, into the River, and upon its Rising thence they worshipped it. Hence, Papinius;

— Aut quo se gurgite Nili

*Mergat adoratus trepidis pastoribus Apis.*²³

Now in Defiance of that Rite, Moses will have this new Apis, to be first pulverised, and then cast into the Water, beyond Possibility of Rising in a Figure to be worshipped.

If the Worship of Apis were so Ancient! —²⁴

Q. How was the Calf powdered?

A. Most probably, (as Dr. Patrick, and others,) with a File. Bochart observes, That with such Dust, some of old powdered their own Hair, & the Mains of their Horses; which made them glitter, when the Sun shone upon them.²⁵ 1084.

Q. What was the Meaning of Moses making the Israelites to Drink Water, with the Powder of their Calf, sprinkled upon it? v. 20.

A. Israel could not bee so long without Moses, as Moses without Meat. Tho' the Fire was yett burning on the Top of Sinai, from whence they had lately Received the Law, the People suddenly, extremely, horribly, break the greatest Commandment of that Law. Of their Egyptian Jewels, they made an Egyptian Idol.

So Grievous a Transgression must expect a Grievous Punishment. Wherefore, First, The Cloud of Glory, their Divine Leader, departed from the Camp, which was now profane and unclean. Secondly, Moses breaks the Tables before their face, declaring them to bee most unworthy of the Covenant. Thirdly, The Building of the Tabernacle, the Evidence & Instrument of the Lords Dwelling among them, is Adjourned. Fourthly, God gives them up after this, to worship the Host of Heaven. Fifthly, Moses pulverising of the Calf makes the People to drink the Water, wherein hee had cast the Powder. Here, Spiritual Adultery comes under the same Trial, that was afterwards appointed for Carnal. [Num. 5.24.] They that were guilty of this Idolatry, had their Bellies now swelling, as a Visible Token of their Guilt. The Levites are commanded hereupon, to slay every one, whose Bellies they found so swelled: which they did, with so sincere a Zeal, that they spared neither Father, nor Brother of their own, in the Action. About

²³ The lines from Papinius are extracted at second hand from Hugo Grotius's Annotationes (Exod. 32:20), in Opera Omnia Theologica (1679), 1:57. Grotius's source is Sylvarum (lib. 3, cap. 2, lines 115–16), by the Roman poet Publius Papinius Statius (c. 45–c. 96 CE), in Publii Papinii Statii Sylvarum Lib. V. Thebaidos Lib. XII. Achilleidos Lib. II. (1671), p. 148. The poet wonders if the Israelites baptized the golden calf “or in what flood of Nile he [Apis] bathes, worshipped by trembling herdsmen” (Silvae 3.2.115–16). John Selden puts the same Papinius quotation to good use in his De Diis Syris (1617), synt. 1, cap. 4, p. 50, and may well be the original source for both Grotius and Bochart.

 [72v] three Thousand fell, in | this first Slaughter, who had been, it seems, the Ring-leaders in this Abomination, & therefore were made Exemples in this Extermination: And upon the rest of the People, God sent a Plague.²⁶

Q. How did Moses make them drink of it? v. 20.

A. He did not constrain them (as Dr. Patrick observes,) but they had no other Water; and so, they would not avoid, when Thirsty, to Drink of this.

The Design of Moses, might be, to make them sensible, how Vile a thing this Idol was; which was gone into their Draught, & mixed with their Dung & their Urine.²⁷

Q. Aaron said, The People are sett on Mischief? v. 22.

A. The Words in the Hebrew are, more emphatical; They are in Wickedness, or, In Idolatry.²⁸

Tis not improbable, That the Apostle John may allude unto this Passage; when he saies, 1. Joh. 5.19. The whole World lieth in Wickedness.

Q. How do you understand those Words of Moses, If thou wilt, Forgive their Sin; and if not, Blot mee, I pray thee, out of thy Book, which thou hast written? v. 33.

A. This is clear; No Man, having his Name once Written in the Book of Life, ever shall, or can, have it Blotted out again. The Eternal Choice which our God ha's made of certain Persons Ordained unto Eternal Life, is Eternally Unalterable. The Pagans, feigned their Graces to bee all of them, linked unto each other by an Indissoluble Chain; but the Connexions between the Graces of our God, are still more Inseparable. You have them, in Rom. 8.30. If any Name could really bee Blotted out from the Book of Life, it must bee, either because God knowes not certainly who will come unto Life Eternal at the last, or because God could Drinking the Waters of Separation – just like making a woman suspected of adultery drink a mixture of water and dust from the floor of the Temple to establish her innocence or guilt – are related in John Selden, De Diis Syris (1617), synt. 1, cap. 4, pp. 46–64; and Johann Christoph Wagenseil, *Sota. not confer the Grace, which is necessary to bring them unto that Life. But how monstrous are the Blasphemies of such Assertions!

As for the Words of Moses, I insist not on that which many, & especially Jewish Interpreters, assign as the Meaning of those Words; That they refer to the Book of the Law, or the Pentateuch, where the Name of Moses does live Renowned unto all Generations; q.d. I am willing it should never bee Read, or Known, that there was a Man of my Name, in the World. But it is possible, That the Man of God, might refer unto the Book of Life Temporal, not the Book of Life Eternal. There is a Book of Providence, which ha's in it the Names of such as are to out-live the Wasting Plagues, that are to come upon their Neighbours: Now, saies Moses, Lett mee rather now Dy myself, than that thy Name should bee Dishonoured in thy Blotting out the Names of all this People, from the Number of the Living.²⁹ This was the Sense, by Jerom, & others of the Ancients, putt upon those Words of Moses; and it is a Sense, which the Context smiles very much upon.³⁰ But suppose that the Book of Election was intended in the Words of Moses, the Heroic Love & Zeal of that Saint, for the People of God, might passionately propound an Impossible Thing, in the Pursuance of a Possible. Our Lord Himself, in His Agonies, mentioned such a thing; and added If it bee possible! What if in the Efforts of his Ardors, Moses might say, Lord, Rather than this People should perish, I could bee content, if that were possible, to lose the Happiness, provided I may not also lose the Holiness, of my own Eternal Salvation. Tis but like the Carriage of a charitable Brother, who beseeching his Father to bee Reconciled unto an 29 Rashi believes that if God did not pardon their sins, Moses wanted his name erased “from the entire Torah,” because “I [Moses] do not want it said of me that I am not worthy of gaining Your mercy for them.” Ibn Ezra, however, thinks that “the ‘record’ is literally that which was written ‘with the finger of God’ [31:18]. . . . “God’s ‘record’ is written in the stars, which even determine how many children one will have and how long (and how well) one will live.” Ramban strongly disagrees with Ibn Ezra’s astrological fatalism, but cannot reconcile himself to Rashi’s position either. Ramban holds that Moses intends the following: “If you will not forgive them, then erase me from the Book of Life instead of them, and I will bear their punishment.” This is like the idea expressed in Isa. 53:5, ‘He was wounded because of our sins, crushed because of our iniquities. He bore the chastisement that made us whole, and by his bruises we were healed.’ But the Holy One told him, ‘I will erase the sinner from My record, and not you, who have not sinned.’” R. Chizkiyahu seconds Ramban, proposing that “the record” from which Moses asks God to erase him “is not a reference to the Torah which had not yet been committed to writing,” but “to the ‘Book of Life’ in which every human being is inscribed on Rosh Hashanah if he was found deserving on the basis of his past record” (Chizkuni 3:628). Finally, Gersonides sets the record straight, insisting that “Moses uses the metaphor of the ‘Book of Life’ because a book mimics the reality of the world of the senses, from which it draws its existence, in just the same way as that world mimics the world of the divine intellect, from which it draws its existence” (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 2:291). Well, there it is.

30 Mather may have in mind St. Jerome’s “Epistola XCVI. Sive Theophili Alexandrini Episcopi Paschalis Anni 401,” in Quarta Classis Complectens Epistolas Ab Inuente Anno 401. Epistola XCVI [PL 022. 0788].

undutiful Son, should plead, Syr, Either Pardon this my faulty Brother, or else Run Mee thorough with your Sword! a Thing which hee knowes will never bee done.³¹

Tis true, There is a Negative Deletion, out of Gods Book, sometimes mentioned in the Oracles of God; but not a Positive. When wee read such Places as Psal. 69.28. and Rev. 22. 19. about Mens being, Blotted out of Gods Book the Meaning of it is, That God will make it appear they have never been at all Written there.

Lett us recite the Words of Mr. De la Placette on this Occasion. [In his Dissertations on Morality, ch. xv.] “ – One might suspect, that he desired to sacrifice his Salvation to Theirs. But quite contrary, he desires to be Blotted out of Gods Book, in Case his Prayer should be rejected; FORGIVE THEIR SIN, OR BLOTT ME OUT OF THY BOOK. Now, who does not see, that as much as that would be unsupportable, if it were to be understood of Eternal Damnation, so much is it worthy of Praise, when explained unto an Untimely Death. What could be more Impious, than for a Man to say, I will be Damned forever, if thou dost not grant me the Favour I ask? And on the Contrary; what could be more pious, and laudable, than to say, If thou be determined to Destroy this Nation, spare me the Grief of Surviving, and of hearing the Insults and Blasphemies of our Enemies. Take me out of this World, where I shall only lead a Life full of Bitterness; and less tolerable than Death itself? Compare, Num. XI.11, 12.³²

After all; The Book, here, is only the Scrol wherein the Names of the Israelites, that were to enter into the Land of Canaan, were to be Registered. Such a Register we find in the Book of Numbers.

Q. On that Passage; In the Day that I visit, I will visit their Sin upon them? v. 34.

A. In Sanhedrin, fol. 102.1. there is recited a Speech of R. Isaac. Non est ulla ultio, [Seu, Pæna,] quæ venit in mundum, in quâ non sit Vigesima pars, in Depressione Libræ de Vitulo Primo. But Nachmanides in his Commentary on the Law, so recites the Speech of the Rabbi's; Non est pæna, in quâ non est uncia de Iniquitate Vituli.³³

³¹ The Reformation and post-Reformation divines also debated the issue and offer variants of the rabbinic positions (see above). See Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:491–92) and Works (5:383–85).

³² Extracted from Jacques Saurin's Dissertations (1723), Diss. LIII, pp. 451, 452, based on Dissertations sur Diverse Sujets de Morale et de Theologie (1704), Diss. 1, cap. 15, pp. 105–06, by Jean La Placette (1639–1718), Huguenot pastor of a French church in Copenhagen.

Q. By the Mount Horeb.] v. 6.

A. Rather, as Dr. Patrick notes, the Hebrew Mehar imports, From the Mount: A great Way off the Place where God appeared: As unworthy to come into His Presence.¹

Dr. Gell grows Mystical upon it. From the Mount Horeb, or, the Law, the People stript themselves of their Ornament; [the Word is of the Singular Number:] So, From the Work of the Law upon Men, they begin to putt off their own Ornament, their own Righteousness.²

Q. Wee read, Moses took the Tabernacle, & pitched it without the Camp. How can that bee? The Tabernacle was not yett Built? v. 7.

A. This Tabernacle was Moses's his own Tent; quod vice fuit (as Grotius notes upon it) Sacri Tentorij nondum facti.³

We need not suppose it; the Tent where he lived with his Family; But a Tent sett apart for his Interviews with Heaven; The Angels of GOD meeting him there.⁴

Q. Why was that; His Servant Joshua departed not out of the Tabernacle? v. 11.

A. Dr. Patrick argues; It seems not decent, that Moses should return alone, without his Servant attending upon him. They that say, He staid to guard the Tabernacle, have no Foundation for what they say; And they have not much, who say, he stayed to give Judgment in small Causes, which needed not Moses's Resolution. We read not, that Joshua was a Judge; but a constant Attendent on Moses's Person. The Words may therefore, be better translated, as they plainly

² Robert Gell's "mystical" interpretation that they [Israelites] "stripped themselves of their ornaments" (Exod. 33:6), in Gell's Essay toward the Amendment (1659), pp. 233b–c, appears to echo that of the Italian Rabbi Obadiah ben Jacob Sforno (c. 1475–c. 1550), who declares that God's command to "take off your ornaments from yourself" (Exod. 33:5b) is the removal of "that spiritual preparation given to you at that honored (glorious) station (i. e., when you received the Torah) ..." (Sforno, Commentary 460).

run in the Hebrew. He turned again to the Camp, and his Servant Joshua, the Son of Nun, a Young Man. Here we have a Stop in the Hebrew, over the Word, Naar, or, Young Man; which distinguishes these from the following Words; He departed not out of the Tabernacle; That is, The Lord departed not from thence; but His Presence remained there; & would not come into the Camp, as Moses did. And this Interpretation is the more likely; because the last Words in the Hebrew are, Out of the Midst of the Tabernacle. This can't refer to Joshua; because he did not go thither; but only Moses, who conversed Alone with the Divine Majesty.⁵

Q. Why is Joshua called, A Young Man; when he was near Sixty Years old? v. 11.
A. Perhaps, it signifies, a Valiant Man; for so he was. Or, He had waited on Moses from his Youth.

Maimonides tells us, 'Tis the Phrase of the Hebrew Nation, who call all Men Young, till they begin to Decay; as Joseph is called, when he was Thirty Years old. [Gen. 42.2.]⁶

Q. What Singular & Special Reason, might bee given, for the Request of Moses, I beseech thee, Shew mee thy Glory? v. 18.⁷

A. Why not This? It might bee, That hee might Recover himself out of the Affliction, which the Sight of the Golden Calf had given him. Moses had beheld, that horrid & hideous Object, which was an Affront unto the Deity: This Object had given him such Terrible Transports of Soul, as broke forth into Expressions, beyond any that hee had undergone, on any other Occasion: The Provocation putt him upon Effusions of Words, of Wrath, of Blood. At last, the Golden Calf was reduced into Powder, and scattered into an eternal Invisibilitie: hee should

5 Patrick (Exodus 661–62). In his “Note Book of Authors,” Mather lists “MSS. no. XII. p. 62” as a useful manuscript source on Exod. 32:15.

7 Mather refers to “Shepards Sincere Convert. p. 1” (“Note Book of Authors”) as a useful resource on Exod. 33:18. New England’s own Thomas Shepard (1605–1649), minister of Cambridge, Massachusetts, and principal founder of Harvard College, published his Sincere Convert, Discovering the Paucity of True Beleevers And the great difficulty of Saving Conversion (London, 1640). By the end of the 17th century, this popular work on Puritan soteriology had gone through at least 23 imprints and editions. In the present context, Mather identifies Shepard’s sermon on Exod. 33:18, which constitutes chapter 1 in The Sincere Convert (1640), pp. 1–24. In this chapter, the Cambridge minister addresses God’s existence, essence, providence, the Trinity, and His evidence in nature. Along with John Cotton, Thomas Hooker, and Richard Mather, Shepard shaped what became the New England Way. See also Cotton Mather’s biography of Thomas Shepard, in Magnalia Christi Americana (1702), bk. 3, ch. 5, fol. 84–93; and more recently, A. Whyte’s still useful Thomas Shepard. Pilgrim Father and Founder of Harvard (1909).

see That no more. Nevertheless, the Man of God, might find his Imagination still Disturbed, with the Impressions, which that Monster had made upon him: hee wanted to have his Holy Soul entirely delivered from those Troublesome Images, which yett haunted it. Now, for the effectual Defacing of those Images, hee petitions for some Illustrious, & Powerful Manifestations of the Divine Glory to bee made unto him; that so his Quieted Spirit, might bee in a fitter Temper for further Conversations with the Majesty of Heaven.⁸

Q. But what was it, that Moses desired the Sight of? v. 18.⁹

A. Dr. Patrick thus expresses it; He desired to see that Glorious Presence (or, Face of God, as it is called,) what He promised should go with them; not veiled in a Cloud, but in its full Splendor and Majesty. For, hearing Him Speak, from the SHECHINAH, he supposed, perhaps, that God appeared therein, in some Visible Shape, which he desired to be acquainted withal. It is observable, that God Himself, in his Answer to Moses, calls this Glory His Face. And thus R. Jehudah, in the Book Cosri, seems to understand it.¹⁰

God said unto Moses, v. 20. Thou canst not See my Face. That is, Thou art not capable of Seeing my Glory, in the full Splendor of it.

Dr. Patrick thinks, none ha's explained this whole Matter, better than R. Jehudah; in Cosri, p. IV. Sect. 3. "For the Glory mentioned in Scripture, there is one of such a Nature, that the Eyes of the Prophets could sustain it; Another all the Israelites saw, (as the Cloud, and the Consuming Fire,) but another so pure & bright, to such an high Degree, that no Prophet is able to apprehend it; but if he venture to look upon it, his Composition is dissolved; i. e. he dies."¹¹ Such was the Glory here spoken of; a Splendor so great & piercing, that none could behold it.

⁸ The classic rabbinic commentators don't agree on the meaning of Moses' request. Perhaps the most persuasive explication is offered by Rashbam, who wonders how the heart of Moses "could become so full as to desire to enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah," when in Exod. 3:6 he seemed terrified to look at God in the burning bush. Instead, "Moses meant only to make a covenant with Him" in confirmation of God's two promises: "the radiance of [H]is face and the fact that He would go with the Israelites" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 2:299).

⁹ Mather's "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 33:19) refers to Wolfgangius Franzius's previously cited Tractatus Theologicus Novus & Perspicuus, De Interpretatione de Sacrarum Scripturarum Maxime Legitima (1619), p. 450; i. e., "Oraculum XXIX. Sacrum. Exodi 33.19," Franz's disquisition on God's mercy (450–74).

¹⁰ Patrick, on Exod. 33:18 (Exodus 666) enlists as his source the apologia for Judaism against Moslem and Christian incursions, in Buxtorf's bilingual translation of כוזרי Liber Cosri Continens Colloquium seu Disputationem De Religione (1660), pars 4, sec. 3, pp. 259–64, by the Sephardic R. Judah ha-Levi of Tudela (c. 1075–1141). On Liber Cosri, see especially A. Shear's The Kuzari (2008), pp. 55–133.

No Man shall See me & Live.] Accordingly, when the SHECHINAH, or Divine Glory, fill'd the Tabernacle, Moses was not able to enter into it; that is, He could not, with Safety to his Life, look upon it.¹²

Q. What meant, I will cover thee with my Hand? v. 22.

A. The Lord show'd unto Moses, perhaps one of the Clefts made in the Rock, when He brought Water out of it. This was, Putting him into it.

Hereupon, the Lord cast a Cloud about him, that he might not bee struck Dead, by the Inconceivable Brightness & Force of those Rayes, which came from the Face of the Divine Majesty.¹³

As soon as the Face of the Divine Majesty was pass'd by, the Cloud which covered him, was to be removed, and he might see the Glory shining with a lower Degree of Light. And yett such was the Brightness thereof, that it left Particles of Light upon him.¹⁴

It is observable, That this Opinion prevail'd among the Ancient Pagans; That such was the Majesty of the GODs, that they could not bee seen Face to Face by Men. Thus in Homer, – Short as he turn'd I saw the Power appear. – Spondanus thinks, Homer learnt this of Moses.¹⁵

¹² Patrick (Exodus 668). See Appendix B. Following the last line of this paragraph, Mather inserts at this point three carets in his holograph manuscript to position an addition to the existing text. However, neither the insertion nor separate addendum seems extant.

¹⁴ Patrick, on Exod. 33:23 (Exodus 669).

¹⁵ Mather alludes to Jean de Sponde (1557–95), French Huguenot humanist of Mauléon (France), who published his bilingual Greek-Latin translation in parallel columns along with a commentary, titled Homeri quae extant omnia Ilias, Odyssea, Batrachomyomachia, Hymni, Poematia (1583). The italicized citation probably refers to the pale fear which seized Odysseus in Hades, when he awaits the appearance of Teiresias, the ruler of Erebus, surrounded by the shades of the dead thronging toward the pit of sacrificial blood (Odyssey 11.36–50).

Q. The Two Tables of Stone, whereon the Law was written; How long did they continue in the World? v. 4.¹

A. Till the Ruine of the Temple, which was a Space of above Nine hundred Years. But some Chronologers, do more præcisely fix upon the Space of just Nine hundred & Thirty.²

1 See Johannes Buxtorf's "Arcae Foederis," cap. 21, in Exercitationes (1659), pp. 181–86.

2 The English chronologer and antiquarian Sir John Marsham (1602–85) spoke for many of his peers who raised their hands in despair about ever harmonizing the vastly diverging chronologies of the Egyptians, Persians, Greeks, and Romans, with those of the Hebrews, in his famous Chronicus Canon Aegyptiacus Ebraicus Graecus & Disquisitiones (London, 1672), p. 291: "Frustrà sunt, qui contra tam expressa contendunt" ("They who so much as expand [the chronology between the Exodus and the foundation of Solomon's Temple] cannot but be frustrated"). Competing chronologies of ancient histories were a common phenomenon in Mather's time. For better or worse, they all responded to Joseph Justus Scaliger's massive Opus de Emendatione Temporum (1583) and Dionysius Petavius's De Doctrina Temporum Divisum in Partes Duas (1627). The nearly total unavailability of archaeological evidence greatly complicated matters and forced chronologers to rely on contradictory, if not incomprehensible, manuscript materials of ancient civilizations – each with its own system of dating its calendars (see A.T. Grafton's "Joseph Scaliger"). In Mather's time, the primate of Ireland, James Ussher (1581–1656), had nearly settled the debate to the satisfaction of most Protestant theologians in the English-speaking world, in his Annales Veteris Testamenti (1650) and his Chronologia Sacra (1660). Yet his own work followed that of his predecessors who backtracked the lifespans of their biblical heroes to arrive at the date of the Almighty's fiat. However, efforts to fine-tune the data with astronomical evidence continued to prosper as empirical observations began to flourish. Sir Isaac Newton's posthumous The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms Amended (1728) is, perhaps, the most famous, albeit controversial, case in point. That all was not well seems clear from the London Polyglot of Brian Walton, whose editorial committee elected to append the Chronologia Sacra A Conditio Mundo (1655) of the Huguenot professor of Hebrew and theology at Saumur, Ludovicus Cap[p]ellus (1585–1658), rather than that of Ussher, in Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (1657), 6:1–44. In his commentary on Genesis (BA 1:277–301), Mather lavishly excerpts A Short View of the Chronology of the Old Testament (1702), by his erstwhile friend and correspondent William Whiston (1669–1752), an English theologian, mathematician, and Isaac Newton's successor to the Lucasian chair of mathematics at Cambridge. According to Whiston, 480 years and 1 month elapsed from the time of the exodus to the foundation of the first Temple, and 424 years and 3 months from Solomon's Temple to its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar (totaling 904 years and 4 months) (BA 1:286, 290 and Whiston's Short View [1702], pp. 42, 69, 75, 83). In this calculation, Whiston revises in several instances Ussher's famed Chronologia Sacra (1660), cap. 2, p. 44, and Annals of the World (1658), p. 39. See also Herodotus (2.142–46). F.E. Manuel's Eighteenth Century (1959), ch. 3, provides a charming, albeit somewhat dated, précis of the raging debate. Perceptive discussions of the topic include C.A. Patrides's "Renaissance Estimates," J. Barr's "Why the World Was Created in 4004 B.C.," J.D. North's "Chronology," K. Killeen, Biblical Scholarship (90–101), and A. Grafton, "Scaliger's Chronology" (104–44).

Now this was the Age of Adam, the First Man. The First Man, by Breaking the Law, written upon the Tables of {the} Heart, looses the Priviledge of living out that one Day. A Thousand Years; And behold, the same Fate for the Sin of Man attends the Writing of the Law itself upon the Stony Tables. However, The Law endures forever!³

Q. That Clause in the Name of GOD, And that will by no means clear the Guilty? v. 7.

A. According to Maimonides, this Clause also belongs to the Goodness of God; signifying, That when he does punish, He will not utterly Destroy, and make Desolate. He thinks the Hebrew Words are to be literally rendred, In Extirpating He will not Extirpate. So the Word, Nahah, is used; Isa. III.26. unto the same Sense, tis expounded by many modern Interpreters: by L. de Dieu particularly.⁴

Dr. Patrick adds; we find Moses urging these very Words among other, why God should not Destroy the Israelites as One Man: Num. XIV.18. which had hardly been so proper, if God would, by no means clear the Guilty.⁵

Q. In the Name of GOD, here proclaimed unto Moses, wee have, as it were, the Magna Charta of the Old Testament. Can you give any Remarkable Instances, of the Faithful having Recourse unto it, in After-Ages? v. 6, 7.

A. Many Remarkable Instances! The Faith of the most eminent Christians in the Old Testament, still had Recourse unto this Proclamation, as the Asylum, in all their Distresses.

Moses himself, in after-times, does fly to it. See Num. 14.17, 18, 19.

David ha's it up Twice in one Psalm. See Psal. 86.5, 15.

See again, Psal. 145.7, 8. All the Saints with their Mouths full of it.

Moreover, tis very notable, in Psal. 103.7. Hee made known His Wayes to Moses, His Acts to the Children of Israel. By His Wayes & Acts, wee are to understand, Qualiter se gerat erga suos.⁶ Well, what were the Dispositions, which the Lord made known to Moses, & the Children of Israel? Why, the Psalmist in the 3 Ussher, who had happily lit upon the beginning of God's first day of creation (Gen. 1:1) as falling on "the entrance of the night preceding the twenty third day of Octob. in the year of the Julian Calendar, 710 [i. e., 4004 BCE]" Annals (1658), p. 1, calculated 930 years for Adam's lifespan (Annals [1658], pp. 1, 2, and Chronologia Sacra, cap. 2, p. 46), and the year of his death in 1640 (Julian Calendar) or 3074 before the birth of Christ. Usher dates the giving of the Law to Anno Mundi 2513/14 or 1491/90 BCE, and the loss of the Mosaic Tables in the destruction of Solomon's Temple to A. M. 3409 or 595 BCE (Annals, pp. 87–88). Whiston dates the latter event to A. M. 3416 (Short View, p. 58, § 3). For the loss of the Tables, see Mather's commentary on Exod. 25:22 (above).

4 Maimonides (Guide 1.54.127) and Ludovicus De Dieu, Animadversiones in Veteris Testamenti (1648), pp. 80–81.

5 Patrick (Exodus 675).

6 Lat.: "Just as he conducts himself towards his own people."

next Verse repeats this very Proclamation: The Lord is merciful, & gracious, slow to Anger, & plenteous in Mercy; In which there is not only, a, Videtur alludere ad illud Moses, (as Calvin speaks;) but it is a plain citing of the Words, as being spoken to Moses by Name.⁷

Jeremiah again Quotes it. Jer. 32.18.

Joel again Quotes it. Joel. 2.12, 13.

Micah ha's it up. Mic. 7.18.

Nehemiah, almost a thousand Years after Moses, ha's it. Neh. 9.17.

Jonah saies, ch. 4.2. I knew that thou art a Gracious God, & merciful, slow to Anger, & of great Kindness, & repentest of the Evil.

How did hee know it? It was from this very Declaration made unto Moses. And it seems, hee knew, that wee Gentiles also were concerned in it; which is a very comfortable Consideration.

Q. Lett us resume the Consideration of that Article, in the Name of our Good God; He will by no means clear the Guilty, &c.? v. 8.

A. There are those, whereof Mr. Aynsworth is one, who look upon the whole Text, as having that Scope, To proclame the Goodness of God. But his Words are; "This His Justice upon the Wicked is a Part of His Goodness towards His People; as it is said, The Just shall rejoyce, when he sees the Vengeance." This Gloss might receive some Confirmation from the CXXXVI Psalm; where Famous Kings, & Enemies of the Church are slain, Because the Mercy of God endureth forever. Compare, Nah. I.7, 8.⁸

But Ludovico de Dieu, considers, that in other Places, particularly Zech.V. 3. the Word, Nakah, signifies, to Cutt off; & he therefore alters the Translation of the Words, and putts them into a Posture of looking yett more Directly at the Goodness of God. He renders them, Succidendo non Succidet; and makes this the sense of them; "So Great is the Goodness of God, that even when He is Angry, & punisheth, yett He will not utterly overthrow. He Visits indeed the Sins of the Fathers upon the Children, but it is to the Third & Fourth Generation only; not forever."⁹

⁹ Mather's quotation from Ludovicus De Dieu's commentary on Exod. 34:8, in Animadversiones in Veteris Testamenti (1648), pp. 81, 82, is extracted at second hand from Henry

We have here then, as Dr. Arrowsmith supposes may be allowed, an Eighth Branch of the Divine Goodness; to witt, Clemency in Correcting. It is here first in general declared, That Destroying He will not destroy; that is, He will not utterly Destroy, or, [Jer. XLVI.28.] make a full End, of His People, however He may for some time correct & chasten them. Compare, Amos. IX.8. And [verso] Jer. XXX.11. And thus, in the XIV of Numbers, we find Moses taking hold on this Discovery of God, in the XXXIV of Exodus; and pleading it for the Præserva-tion of Israel from total Ruine, q.d. “Lord, If thou Resolve to punish this Peo-ple, yett remember what thou hast said, Destroying He will not Destroy. If their Iniquities must be visited upon their Children, Lord, Lett it not be forever, but only to the Third & Fourth Generation.”¹⁰ If the Clause be read in the Sense commonly received, He will by no means clear the Guilty, what could be the In-ference, but that all Israel now under a deadly Guilt, must avoidably perish? But then more particularly, He will visit the Iniquities of the Fathers on the Children. Children are to their Parents a Part of their Goods. When God said concerning Job. All that he hath is in thy Power, Satan, by Vertue of that Commission, slew his Children as well as his Cattle. [See Josh. V. 15, 24, 25.] But here is Clem-ency, as well as Equity. Tis only to the Third & Fourth Generation. The Anger is not drawn out to all Generations. Compare, Psal. LXXXV.5. and, Neh. IX.31.¹¹ And they are not all sorts of Sinners that are thus punished; It belongs chiefly to Idolaters, who are indeed Adulterers; and therefore peculiarly called, The Haters of God. Deum odisse in Sacris Literis peculiariter illi dicuntur, qui falsos Deos colunt, as Grotius observes; And, Maimonides denies, that the Term is ever used for any others. And it is rarely done, but when Children tread in the Steps of their Pro-genitors. Compare, Isa. LXV.6, 7. But it is ever done with merciful Intentions. Tis to restrain Men from Sin, by their Affections to their Children. Chrysostom observes, There is no Penalty more grievous, than for a Man to see Misery for his own sake brought on his Offspring.¹²

Arrowsmith's Armilla Catechetica (1659), p. 225, § 2. De Dieu believes that God in His goodness “castigates, but will not destroy,” or more literally, “cutting off, he will not cut off.”

¹¹ Arrowsmith, pp. 229, 230, 231.

¹² Mather's Latin citation is from Arrowsmith's Armilla Catechetica (1659), Exercitation 5, p. 231 (marginalia), and p. 233 (mispaginated 231). Arrowsmith's quotes Grotius's Annotatio-nes, on Exod. 20:5, in Opera Omnia (1679), 1:43, lines 39–40, stating that “In the Holy Scrip-tures, they who especially hate God are those who worship false gods.” Here, Grotius (1:43, line 40) relies on Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 1, cap. 54, p. 90; and in (1:43, lines 33–34), Grotius refers to Joannes Chrysostom's Ho-milia 29 (on Gen. 9). Alas, this manner of quoting at second-, third-, or even fourth remove was all too common in Mather's time.

Q. What Remarkable Discovery ha's there been, of, JEALOUS, being peculiarly the Name of GOD; Inasmuch as it is said, Thou shalt worship no other God; for JEHOVAH, whose Name is JEALOUS, is a Jealous GOD? v. 14.

A. The Scripture calls the Dæmons of the Gentiles, by the Name of Gods; but never by the Name of Jealous ones. They had no Zelotypie, or, Impatience of Partnership, in the Worship that wretched Mortals have paid unto them; or, as Dr. Spencer ha's well worded the Observation, *Nunquam Legimus Dæmonem aliquem Idolorum aut Numinem Multitudinem Oraculo prohibuisse, vel Iratum fuisse quòd eodem Templo et Altari, cum Dæmone aliquo socio coheretur.*¹³

Q. A Covenant with Idolaters, is forbidden, What Covenant? v. 15.

A. A Covenant of Marriage. For Covenants in general, were forbidden before. v. 12.

Marriage might not be contracted, with any Idolatrous People. Consider the Ninth & the Tenth Chapters of Ezra; and the Thirteenth of Nehemiah.¹⁴

The Jewes will have this to be as old, as the Law of Circumcision. And hence, Mahomet forbids any of his Religion, to marry any one that is not a Beleever.¹⁵

Q. How long did the Shining of Moses's Face, continue? v. 29.

A. None can Resolve it. Our Patrick thinks, That it vanished not, until he had sett up the Tabernacle, and consecrated Aaron and his Sons, and delivered all the Lawes he had received about the Service of God: which are Recorded in the Book of Leviticus; That is, all the Time they staid near Mount Sinai: from whence they removed, a little more than Half a Year after this.¹⁶

Q. The Text which reports the Shining of Moses's Face, is, you know, in some Translations (as the Vulgar Latin) rendred, as if it were Horned? v. 29.

A. You know the Original of this Translation, & Opinion; tis the double Signification of the Word /קַרְנִי/ in the Original: And yett it is not so double neither, but that Rayes and Horns have a considerable Agreement.

The Apostle Paul mentioning what befel the Face of Moses, intimates, that the Text in Exodus, is to be understood (as the LXX also understand it,) of a Glory upon it. And yett there is Cause to think, that the Rayes of that Glory rose in the Shape of Horns. Mneves who was adored in Egypt, with Horns upon his Image, is by Aben Ezra supposed no other than Moses.¹⁷ And Justin Martyr (or, the Author of the Admonition to the Greeks) where Diodorus Siculus writes of Μνεύην, puttts Moses for it. If the Image of Joseph, had Horns upon it among the Egyptians, well might that of Moses, who was another Joseph.¹⁸

But Grotius thinks, That in the Illustrious Horns, which Glorified the Face of Moses, the Lord had Respect unto the Idolatry of the Golden Calf, lately committed; As if Hee had bestow'd this Rebuke upon them, You will needs have a God with Horns upon him; see, whether you are able to stand before a Man that hath Horns of a Divine Lustre to adorn him.¹⁹

I will add, methinks, the Holy & Faithful Zeal of Moses against the Golden Calf, may have a Sensible Reward in the Glory thus vouchsafed him. Hee destroy'd an Idol that had Brutal Horns; God Rewards him with Divine ones.²⁰

According to the Greco-Roman historian Diodorus Siculus, Μνεύην, the mythical god-king of Egypt, received the laws from Hermes, and the Jewish lawgiver from Iao: Μωυσῆν τὸν Ἰαῶ (Bibliotheca Historica 1.94.1–2; see also 1.21.10; 1.84.4–8; 1.88.4).

19 Hugo Grotius, Annotationes, Exod. 34:29 (Opera Omnia 1:58–59). The Reformation and post-Reformation commentators, too, were intrigued by the story of the “horned” Moses and found analogies not only in the fables of Bacchus but also in other stories such as that of the “two-horned” Alexander the Great, ruler of the East and West, in Poole’s Synopsis Criticorum (1:502–03) and Works (5:429–32); in Bochart’s Geographia Sacra (1.18.485B) and in Gerardus Vossius’s De Theologia Gentili (1641), lib. 2, cap. 14, pp. 374–80; lib. 3, cap. 71, pp. 1111–12.

20 Mather’s primary source for the commentary on Exod. 34:29 is Grotius’s Annotationes (Opera 1:58–59). See also Patrick, on Exod. 34:29 (Exodus 686–97), John Selden’s De Juri Naturali & Gentium (1640), lib. 2, cap. 6, pp. 191–92, and De Morbis Biblicis Miscellanea Medica (1672), cap. 5, pp. 10–25, by the Danish anatomist and physician Thomas Bartholinus (1616–80). Mather owned several of Bartholin’s esteemed medical works (BA 1:427–28, 535, 1054). The story of the “horned” Moses is well known and (perhaps) humorously depicted in Michelangelo’s famous statue of the Hebrew lawgiver in the Vatican.

Q. What might bee the true Meaning of that Order, Yee shall kindle no Fire, throughout your Habitations upon the Sabbath-Day? v. 3.

A. It must needs undergo some Restriction; For, the Priests were to offer up the Sacrifice of the Sabbath, which could not bee done without the Kindling of Fire. Altho' the Fire which came down from Heaven, was constantly upon the Altar, and so continued; until it came /לְבֵית עֶזְלָמִים/ into the House of Eternity, or the Temple, where it was Renewed: [Compare 2. Cor. 5.1.] Yett it is plain, That it was daily maintained by a Supply of New Fuel. The Priest was to lay Wood every Morning on it; And so soon as the Old Fire, disjoined the Particles, & putt them into Motion, a New Fire must necessarily bee kindled. The Jewes as Munster notes, think this Precept is to bee observed in the Letter, & therefore they hire Christians to kindle their Fire on the Sabbath, not considering, it was lawful for the Priests, to make a Fire on the Sabbath for the daily Sacrifice.¹

Dr. Templar therefore Judges, That the Text under Consideration, must not bee taken in that Latitude, which at the first View it seems to have. And if it must have some Limitation, it cannot better bee Restrained, than to what is expressed in the Context. The Thing treated of, is the Work of the Tabernacle.

¹ Mather's second-hand reference to Sebastian Münster's annotation, on Exod. 35:3, Hebraica Biblia (1546), fol. 184, note (a), originates in A Treatise relating to the Worship of God (1694), sec. VI, pp. 393–94, by John Templer, D.D. (d. 1693), an English nonconformist clergyman at Balsham, Cambridgeshire, probably ejected after the Restoration. The principal rabbis extracted in the Rabbinical Bible seem to disagree as to the extent of the proscription against kindling fire on the Sabbath, specifically whether it also applied to the lighting of the fire in the Temple: Although Rashi does not settle the question definitively when he says that the Sages disagree on whether lighting fire on the Sabbath constitutes one of the 39 proscriptions against any form of labor (melachah) and thus is subject to the death penalty or a mere misdemeanor deserving lashes (malkos), only Ibn Ezra and Chizkiyahu ben R. Manoach explicitly state the Mosaic Tabernacle and the Temple were exempt from this restriction (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 2:313–14; Chizkuni 3:645–46). Tractate Shabbata (ch. 2) on Exod. 35:3 tries to forestall any false inference by supplying a specific illustration: "If the Temple service, which can be carried out only by means of preparations, sets aside the laws of the Sabbath, is it not logical that the preparations for the service, without which no service is possible, should set aside the laws of the Sabbath? I might therefore think that if the horn of the altar has broken off or if the knife became defective, it is permissible to repair these on the Sabbath." Yet "Scripture teaches that even such work is to be done only on week-days but not the Sabbath. . . . This includes the laws about the thirty-nine categories of work prohibited on the Sabbath which Moses gave orally." However, according to Lev. 6:9, 13, Moses decreed that "fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually" – and that on all seven days of the week – "you may kindle it in the Sanctuary" (Mekhilta de-Rabbi Ishmael 2:499, 501). For the 39 categories of labor, see Mishnah, tractate Shabbath (7.1–2), in The Mishnah (106) and Babylonian Talmud, tractate Shabbath (97b).

Tho' many Cautions had been given concerning the Forbearance of servile Work on the Sabbath, upon any private Account, yett some would bee ready to think, that Work tending to the Preparing of Materials for the Composing of that Sacred Thing, the Tabernacle, might bee lawful. For the Prevention of such Thoughts, before the Description of what was Requisite is entred upon, this Precept is laid down, That in order to any such Work, whether the Melting of Silver, Gold, or any other Metal, which might bee necessary about the Sanctuary, not so much as a Fire should bee kindled.²

Q. On the Prohibition of any more Offerings, for the Sanctuary? v. 6.

A. Monsr. Saurin has this Remark upon it. “Probably this Fitt of Zeal proceeded less from true Piety, than the Genius of the People, which attach’d them to Sensible Objects. The Notion of a Material Temple, and of a God who should dwell in the Midst of them Visibly, & with Splendor, soothed their Imaginations. Nothing was therefore thought too Good by them, towards such a Design. Whereas an Order purely spiritual, and disengaged from Matter, would not, tis likely, have been pursued with so much ardour.”¹

Q. Some Gleanings of Curiosities, about, The Golden Candlestick? v. 17.

A. Maimonides thus describes the Offices of the Priests about the Lamps of the Candlestick.

“The Priest takes away the Match from each of the Lamps, the Oil whereof is almost consumed, and the rest of it that remains: He cleanses the Lamp, he putts in another Match, and half a Log, [that is, Half a Pint,] of fresh Oil, and throws into the Place where the Ashes are putt near the Altar, that which he takes out. When the Lamp in the Middle is extinguished, he kindles it again with some Fire taken from the Altar in the Court. But the rest are lighted by the neighbouring Lamps. He lights all the Lamps at once; He begins with Five, and then he stops; He performs the rest of the Service, then returns, & lights the other Two. The Priest, whose it is to light up the Candlestick, carries in his hand a little Golden Vessel, called Cuz, in which he collects the useless Fragments of the Oil and Matches. After having lighted five Lamps, he leaves the little Vessel before the Candlestick, & goes his Way. He then returns, kindles the Two other Lamps, takes the Vessel again, kneels to worship, & then goes away.”¹

It is a little surprising, to see how much the Egyptians conformed unto the Israelites, in their Worship of their Gods. Clemens Alexandrinus tells us, The Egyptians were the first, who introduced the | Use of Lamps, into Religious Worship. There is a memorable Passage in Herodotus, to this Purpose. “When they meet in the City of Says, to sacrifice and celebrate the Festival, they light up at night, all round the Houses, Lamps filled with Salt and Oil; the Cotton or Match whereof swims a top, and burns all the Night. This is called, The Feast of Lighted Lamps. The Egyptians, who can’t be present at this Meeting, don’t forbear to keep the Feast, and to light Lamps round their Houses; and by this Means they are not only light up at Says, but generally throughout the whole Countrey.”²

As to the Antitype of the Candlestick, I refer you to what I have offered in the Illustrations, on Exod. XXV.40.

And yett as a Mantissa, I will here add; That the Word of GOD, by which His Church is enlightened, has been by some considered in this Candlestick.

¹ The second-hand paraphrase of Maimonides, Hilchot Temidim UMusafim (3.17), in Mishneh Torah (29:550), appears in Saurin, Dissertations (1723), Diss. LIV, p. 472.

² Mather’s second-hand reference to Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromata (1.16), in ANF 2: 317, originates in Saurin’s Dissertations (1723), Diss. LIV, p. 473, including the here quoted narrative of the festival of light, celebrated in the Egyptian city of Saïs (Herodotus 2.62).

Indeed all the Revelation we enjoy in This World, is but Candlelight, compared with the Daylight we shall enjoy in the World to come. However, The Bible is a Candlestick, of a Matter more to be desired than Gold, than much fine Gold; from whence Light is convey'd unto the House of GOD, for them who are the Holy Priesthood there, to see from thence how to discharge all the Duties of the Sanctuary. This Word is beautified with many Knops and Flowers, which we are sure were added for Good Purpose, tho' we don't see always into the Reason for them.³

Q. The Looking-Glasses? v. 8.

A. The Use of Brazen-Looking-Glasses, is very Ancient. Callimachus and Pliny will satisfy you for This. Doughty has in his Analecta Sacra, made a copious Collection on the Subject.¹

Cyril of Alexandria, tells us, That it was a Custom in Egypt, and particularly of the Women there, when they went unto the Temple, to wear a Linen-Garment, carrying a Looking-Glass in their Right Hand, and a Timbrel in their Left.²

Q. We read of, the Oblations of the Women, which assembled, at the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation? v. 8.

A. The Hebrew Word, Hattzobeoth, signifies, That they came by Troops, to make this Present unto the Lord. The LXX and Chaldee understand it, of such Women as come together, to serve God, by Fasting and Prayer.³ [Compare, 1. Sam. II.28.] Most Interpreters think, They that made this Oblation, were very Devout Women, who were wont to spend much Time at the Tabernacle, where the Presence of God, was to be enjoy'd. Moses's Tent was the Tabernacle, till this was built.

Aben Ezra observes upon the Words, That these Women, making a Free-Will-Offering of their Looking-Glasses, wherein they did use to behold the Beauty of their Faces, and adorn their Heads, it seems to argue a very Religious Mind; that they despised the Vanities of this World, and delighted far more in the Service of God.⁴

Q. What was the Tabernacle, at the Door of which they assembled? v. 8.

1 Callimachus Cyrenaicus, in his In lavacrum Palladis (hymn. 5, lines 21–22), sings of fair Pallas Athena, attended by her Achaean maidens, taking her bath. Although the goddess dislikes mirrors and mixed unguents, her companion could not resist embellishing her own beauty in the looking glass: Κύπρις δὲ διαυγέα χαλκὸν ἐλοῖσα / πολλαὶ τὰν αὐτὰν δῖς μετέθηκε κόμαν, “Kupris took the shining bronze [speculum] and often altered and again altered the same look.” Likewise, Pliny testifies to the existence of mirrors among the ancients: At Brindisi copper utensils were coated with stagnum (an alloy of silver and lead) to make mirrors, which became so popular that even maid-servants fancied them (Natural History 34.48.160). Examples of this nature can be found in Analecta Sacra, sive, Excursus Philologici breves (1658), Excursus 44, pp. 123–25, by John Doughty, D. D. (c. 1598–1672), an Anglican divine, sometime lecturer at St. Edmunds, Salisbury, and subsequently prebendary at Westminster Abbey at his death. (ODNB).

A. There was a Tent which bore the Name that was afterwards given to the Real Tabernacle. This was the Tent of Moses; Not that in which he dwelt with his Family: But that which was destined for the Conferences between GOD and this Law-giver. This Tent was called, The Tabernacle of the Congregation; or it may be rendred, The Tabernacle of Assignment: or, of Meeting. There Moses did meet with GOD; and there the People did Meet with Moses, when there was Occasion of Consulting the Oracle. GOD at such times gave sensible Tokens of His Presence; we read Exod. XXXIII.10. All the People saw the Cloudy Pillar stand at the Tabernacle Door. A Tent sett up in the Camp of the Israelites, before the Idolatry of the Golden Calf. The Devout Women came hither now, to consult GOD, and be inform'd, of what might concern them in the Revelations, wherewith Moses was favoured.⁵

Q. The Summ of Gold and the Silver employ'd for the Tabernacle, invites us to some enquiry, into the Value of the Hebrew Money? v. 25, 26.

A. In brief, 20 Geruhs make a Shekel.

60 Shekels make a Maneh, or Pound.

50 Manehs (3000 Shekels) make a Talent.

One hundred Drams, or Adarconims, are æquivalent unto Sixty Shekels, or one Maneh: [Compare, 1. King. 10.17. and 2. Chron. 9.16.]

The Shekel, exactly weigh'd by Dr. Usher and Mr. Greaves, is according to the English Standard, two Shillings and five Pence. Accordingly, One Maneh of Silver, will be 7^{lb}. 5^s. of the English Money. One Talent will be 362^{lb}. 10^s. which is 50 Manehs, or 3000 Shekels.⁶

Accordingly here, If 603550 Men be rated, to pay half a Shekel a Peece, then they paid, 301775 Shekels; which is recounted to bee 100 Talents, and 1775 Shekels. Thus 300000 Shekels which the 600000 Men paid, is æqual to 100 Talents, whereof each Talent contains 3000 Shekels. Which Number of Shekels, contained in one Talent, seems also probable, by the Brass here mentioned: whereof there not being found fully 71 Talents. Moses declares there were 70 Talents, and 2400 Shekels; whereas if there had been full 3000, it would have filled the Quantity of another Talent.⁷

The Proportion of Gold unto Silver, according to Plato, Julius Pollux, Bodinus, Bornitius, Villalpandus, Brerewood, and generally all learned Authors, is accounted to be Duodecupla. Tis twelve times as much in Value, as the like quantity of Silver. It may bee here and there for several Reasons a little varied; but the Twelfth-fold Proportion is generally allowed.⁸

According to Dr. Cumberland, a Talent of Silver amounts, to Three hundred fifty three Pound, Eleven Shillings, and some odd Pence, in our Money. A Talent of Gold, (which he reckons to be about Fourteen times the Value,) to Five Thousand Seventy six Pound, three Shillings, & ten Pence.

According to Dr. Cumberland, the Summ of Gold here amounts unto 147, 204 Pounds, 10 Shillings. According to Dr. Bernard, the 29 Talents of Gold, amount unto 156, 600 Pounds, Sterling. The Silver amounts to 37, 721 Pound, 17 Shillings, and Sixpence, Sterling.⁹

Q. How did they work the Gold, in the Blue, & the Purple, & the rest? v. 2.

A. Maimonides tells us, the Manner of it, was thus.

“They took One Threed of Wire of Gold, and joined it with Six Threeds of Blue; & they twisted all Seven into One. And so they mingled the like Threed of Gold, with Six of Purple; and another with Six of Fine Linen; so that there were Twenty Eight Threeds in all.”¹

R. Solomon Jarchi thus expresses it. These Five Kinds, (Blue, Purple, Scarlet, Fine-linnen, and Gold,) were twisted into One Threed. The Gold being stretched into a Thin Plate, and Threeds cutt out of it, they weaved a Threed of Gold, with Six Threeds of Blue; and so they did with the rest, after which they twisted all these Threeds into One. Q. The Plate of the Holy Crown? v. 30.

A. Patrick observes on this Occasion, That the Priests, both Men & Women among the Gentiles, had ordinarily the Epithite of, στεφανοφόροι, from the Crowns they wore on their Heads; which were sometimes of Gold, sometimes of Lawrel. See Cuperus, in his Harpocrates.³

Q. How long were they in building the Tabernacle? v. 31.

A. It may be demonstrated, from the Two Months, that were spent between the Departure of Israel from Egypt, & the Desert; and the twice Forty Days that were spent by Moses in the Mount, and some other lesser Intervals, which we find intermixed; That the People could not begin the Work of the Tabernacle, till about Six Months after the Coming up out of Egypt. But it is positively said, That in the First Month, in the Second Year, on the first Day of the Month, the Tabernacle was reared up. Consequently, It was about Six Months in Building. This Time, as Monsr. Saurin observes, will not appear too short, if we consider, what a Numberless Multitude of People are capable of doing, when animated with either a False or a True Zeal of Religion.⁴

Q. Behold, they had done it, as the Lord commanded.] v. 43.

A. This the Tenth Time that Moses repeats this, in this one Chapter; To show, not only how exact they were in their Obedience, but also, that nothing was done according to his own Reason, but all according to the Divine Præcept. They are the Words, of the Sepher Cosri.⁵

Q. In the Book of Exodus, we often find the Jewish Measures mentioned. It may not be amiss, in this Place, once for all, to enquire what they were? v. 38.

A. As for the Measures of Content, we are very much to seek, what was the Just Capacity of them.

The Rabbinical Account thereof, by Eggshells, gives a very uncertain Sound. A Quadrant, or Quarter, they say, is, an Egg and an Half.

A Log is Four Quadrants, or Six Eggs.

A Kab, is four Logs, or twenty four Eggs.

An Hin, is twelve Logs, or Seventy two Eggs.

A Seah, is Six Kabs, twenty four Logs, Two Hins, or an hundred forty four Eggs.

An Ephab, is Three Seahs, Eighteen Kabs, Six Hins, Seventy two Logs, or four hundred thirty two Eggs.¹

But for all these, we have only the bare Words of the Rabbins, which are not of the greatest Value in the World.

Wherefore Dr. Cumberland, in his late ingenious, Essay, for the Recovery of the Jewish Weights and Measures, ha's, with the greatest Satisfaction that we have yett seen, adjusted these Measures. The Measures for Dry Things, as by him adjusted, we will reduce to our Corn-Measure; but those of Liquid Things, we will reduce to our Wine-Measure.

The Measures for Dry Things, are

1. The Cor, or Homer; which contains Eight Bushels, and almost an Half, of Winchester-Measure.

2. The Ephab; which is Six Gallons, or Three Pecks, & three Pints, and something more.

3. The Seah; which is One Peck, and a Pint.

4. The Omer; which is Five Pints, and a little more.

5. The Kab; which is almost Three Pints.

Then for Liquid Things.

1. The Homer, or, Cor; contains Seventy Five Wine-Gallons, five Pints, and a little more.

2. The Bath; contains Seven Gallons, two Quarts, & half a Pint.

3. The Hin; contains One Gallon, and a Quart, or Five Quarts.

4. The Log; about Three Quarters of a Pint.

¹ Richard Cumberland, Essay toward the Recovery of the Jewish Measures and Weights (1686), ch. 3, pp. 64, 81, 84.

As for the Measures of Extent, lett us only consider the Cubit.

Dr. Cumberland gathers the Length of it, by comparing it, with the Egyptian Cubit, which hath continued the same, from the most ancient Times until this present; as appears by the Cubits on the Nilo-metrium,² which was first erected by Joseph, as tis affirmed by diverse Arabian Writers. He thinks, that all the Eastern Nations, received this Cubit, from their Ancestors, the Sons of Noah, as being the same that was used in Building the Ark. The Jewes also living two Hundred Years in Egypt, it is extremely probable, they used the same Cubit with the Egyptians; nor is there any Reason to think, they altered it upon Removing from thence. Moses gives not the least Intimation of any Distinction in Cubits; And Abulfeda, an Arabian King, who was highly curious in the Doctrine of the Measures of the East, affirms, That the Jewish legal Cubit, was æqual to the Egyptian.³

Well, To state the Matter exactly; An Egyptian Cubit, (stated by Mr. Greaves, in his Table of the English Foot) contains, 1824 such Parts, as the English Foot contains a Thousand; That is, Twenty two Inches, wanting only a Tenth Part.⁴

2 Egyptian history gives proof of several Nilometers, the most ancient being the one located on the island of Elephantis, in the Nile River, in upper Egypt, in which the ancients measured the annual precipitation rate and subsequent floodwaters responsible for the fertility of Egypt's agricultural areas. Tradition has it that Joseph's interpretation of Pharaoh's dream of the seven fat and lean cows (Gen. 41:17–21) is based on Joseph's knowledge of the relationship between the Nile's annual flood levels and Egypt's agrarian output. See Strabo (17.1.3–5), Pliny (5.10.55–59), and Mather's discussion in BA (1:1032–33, 1090).

Q. Some Remarks on the Work thus finished by Moses? v. 33.

A. Moses at his coming down from the Mountain, told Israel, what a Work of the Tabernacle, was now to be proceeded on. From this they concluded, It must be along while before they removed from Sinai. And therefore on the Fifteenth of Tisri, they began to make themselves Mansions, and Booths to lodge in, until the intended Removal. For this, was appointed, the Feast of Tabernacles, to Posterity.

They begin to fall in hand with the Work, in the very Month when the World began.

And in it are Six Special Works like those of the Creation.

For Six Months are they very busy; and against the First Month of the Next Year, all is Ready.

So on the first of, Nisan, they begin to sett up the Tabernacle; And they were Six-Days in doing of it.

When it is finished, the Cloud makes a Descent upon it.

Thus ends Exodus in a Cloud; under which (as Dr. Lightfoot notes) we are to look for a more glorious Tabernacle: In which there dwells the Fulness of the Godhead Bodily.⁵

675.

Q. The Tabernacle thus finished; what became of it? v. 38.⁶

A. The Tabernacle travelled with the Israelites thro' the Wilderness.

When they came into the Land of Promise, it was placed at Gilgal; where, according to the Computation of the Jews, it remained Fourteen Years.⁷

From thence, it was transplanted unto Shiloh, where it continued Three Hundred & Sixty nine Years.⁸

It was afterwards kept Thirteen Years at Nob; from the Death of Eli to the Death of Samuel.⁹

After that, it was Fifty Years at Gibeon. Thus the Jews reckon; but it will not be easy to Justify all the Calculations, from the Scripture; which speaks very concisely about the several Stations of the Tabernacle.¹⁰

After the Building of the Temple, the Ark was lodg'd in the Most Holy Place. And the Tabernacle was laid by (as the Jews probably enough conjecture,) in some suitable Apartments of the Temple.¹¹

After the Destruction of the Temple by the Chaldeans, we can hear no more of it. Buxtorf the Younger has collected all that the Rabbins have said of it; wherein, what have we but Fabulous Narrations?¹²

Q. Beholding the Tabernacle Erected and Finished, Now tell mee, whether Pagan Antiquitie had any Imitation of it? v. 38.¹³

5 Mather oblique reference is to John Lightfoot, A Handfull of Gleanings (1643), ch. 30, p. 37, ch. 31, p. 38, and Lightfoot's Chronicle of the Times, and the Order of the Texts of the Old Testament, Exodus, in Works (1684) 1:29.

10 1 Chron. 16:39, 21:29. The Tabernacle's waystations and their duration are calculated in the Babylonian Talmud, tractate Zevachim (118b): 39 years in the Sinai, 14 years at Gilgal, 57 years combined at Nob and Gibeon, and 369 at Shiloh.

11 1 Kings 8:4.

12 Mather leans on Johannes Buxtorf's "Arcae Foederis," cap. 20, in Exercitationes (1659), pp. 178–80.

13 Mather's subsequent answer to his rhetorical question is extracted from John Edwards's trusty Discourse Concerning the Authority, Stile, and Perfection (1693), ch. 5, p. 170.

A. It had. Minutius Felix tells us, That the Heathen had their Consecrated Places, whereof Quædam Fana, semel Annò adire permittunt, quædam ex Toto nefas visere.¹⁴

Pausanias instances, in particular Temples, which were opened but one Day in a Year, and of Orcus's hee saith, None was permitted to enter into it, but the Priest.¹⁵

Any Man may now see, whence this was borrowed.

Wee may add, That the Adyta, and the Penetralia, among the Pagans, were taken from the, Holy of Holies, among the Jewes.¹⁶

Those Places (which were the same also with their Delubra) are described by Servius; to bee Secret Recesses in their Temples; Hidden and Remote Apartments, that were Inaccessible, to all but the Priests. Whence wee have this account of them, given by Cæsar, – *In Occultis et Reconditis*¹⁷ Templi, quò præter Sacerdotes Adire fas non est, quæ Græcè ἄδντα appellant. De Bell. Civ. L. 3.¹⁸

810.

Q. Lett mee ask you one Thing more; That is, Why is the Signification of many Material Terms about the affayrs of the Tabernacle, utterly lost. The true Colour of what wee translate, the Purple Hangings, the true Names of the Gems in the Pectoral of the High-Priest, the true Forms of the Musical Instruments used 14 One of the earliest Christian apologists among the Romans, Minutius Felix Octavius (c. 2nd–3rd c. CE) has Octavius Januarius debate the virtues of the Christian religion with his pagan opponent Caecilius Natalis, in Dialogi Christiani Octavius sive Dialogus Christiani et Ethnici Disputantium (cap. 24.5), in Minucii Felicis Octavius, et Caecilii Cypriani De Vanitate Idolorum Liber (1699), cap. 24.5, pp. 88–89. The Latin citation reads, “Some fanes it is permitted to approach once a year, some it is forbidden to visit at all” (ANF 4:187).

15 According to Pausanias (Græciæ descriptio 6.25.2, lines 2–3), the Eleans take great care to safeguard the sacred precinct of Hades and his temple, which ἀνοίγνυται μὲν ἅπαξ κατὰ ἔτος ἕκαστον, ἐσελθεῖν δὲ οὐδὲ τότε ἐφεῖται πέρα γε τοῦ ἱερωμένου, “are opened once every year, but not even on this occasion is anybody permitted to enter except the priest” (Description of Greece 6.25.2). The Eleans revere Hades (Orcus, i.e., Pluto), god of the underworld, because he had supported the Eleans in their battle against Hercules at Pylus. That they were not the only ones to worship Orcus-Hades can be seen in the temple Orcus Quietalis, at Rome (LCD). See also Pausanias (2.10.2, 7.24.3).

16 “Holy of Holies” and “Innermost Chambers.”

17 The MS erroneously reads “Remotis” i.e., “distant” or “remote.”

18 In Vergilii Aenidos Commentarii (2.225, 4.56), the Roman grammarian commentator Marcus Servius Honoratus (4th–5th c. CE) comments on the “Delubra” of Vergil’s Aeneid (2.225 and 4.56), best rendered as “shrines” and “temples” of the ancient Greeks (In Vergilii carmina commentarii 1:256 on Aeneid 2:225). Mather’s second-hand Latin citation (via Edwards’s Discourse [1693], p. 170) from Commentariorum Libri III De Bello Civili (3.105.4), by the Roman Emperor Caius Julius Caesar (100–44 BCE), tells of the mysterious sounds issuing from the holy of holies of the temple of Pergamos upon Caesar’s victory: “Pergami in occultis ac reconditis templi, quo præter sacerdotes adire fas non est, quæ Græci ἄδντα appellant, tympana sonuerunt.” Or “At Pergamos, in the private and retired parts of the temple, into which none but the priests are allowed admission, and which the Greeks call Adyta (the inaccessible), a sound of drums too was heard” (Caesar’s Commentaries 3.105).

in Divine Service, the true Ingredients of the Ointment wherewith the High-Priests were anointed; These, and many more such Matters, wee have the Terms for them in the Hebrew, but not one Jew this Day in the World, can determine the Signification of them. Tis utterly Lost; and, why so? v. 38.

A. Behold, the adorable Wisdome of Heaven. The God of Heaven, will have the Ceremonies of the Mosaic Worship abolished: and now, that it may never bee Re-established, God in His Holy Providence hath ordered, that the True Meaning of many things essential to that Worship, is buried in Eternal Oblivion. If the Jewes now should under all other Imaginable Advantage go to Restore the Law of Moses, yett this one Peece of Invincible Ignorance, which they are now fallen into, would render it Impracticable & Impossible.¹⁹

19 Mather's Whiggish interpretation of OT history is typified by his belief in teleological inevitability. In his "Note Book of Authors" (Exod. 40: 38), he provides a summary list of important sources to be consulted on Exodus: Targum Jonathan Ben Uzziel and Targum Hierosolymitana (both in Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta); John Pearson's Critici Sacri; St. Athanasius Alexandrinus's Synopsis Scripturae Sacrae [PG 028. 0283–0436]; St. Augustinus's Quaestiones Super Exodum [PL 034. 0547–0824]; Nicolaus Lyranus's Postilla Super Totam Bibliam cum Glossâ Ordinariâ; John Calvin's Opera Omnia; Henry Ainsworth's Annotations upon the Five Books of Moses (1626–1627); John Jackson's Index Biblicus (1668); Matthew Henry's An Exposition Of the Five Books of Moses (1707); André Rivet's Commentarii, In Librum secundum Mosi (1634); Andrew Willet's Hexapla in Exodum (1608); Manasseh ben Israel's Conciliator, sive De convenientia (1633); Wolfgangus Franzius, Interpretationes (1688), cap. 12, p. 822. Martin Luther's "In Decalogum," Tomus Septimus Omnium Operum (1577), fols. 120^v–123^v; Petrus Ramus's Commentariorum de Religione Christiana Libri Quatuor (1594), p. 100; William Perkins's The Workes of that Famous and Worthy Minister of Christ. The First Volume (1612–13) 1:459; Johannes Maccovius's Loci Communes Theologici (1650), cap. 9; Wolfgangus Musculus, Loci Communes in Usus Sacrae Theologiae Candidatorum Parati (1560).

Q. What think you, of the Assertion advanced by some learned Men, That all, or most, of the Religious Rites among the Jewes, were fetched from the Gentiles? v. 1.²

A. In Truth, I look upon it, as a Monstrous Assertion; I can by no means consent unto it.³

It was indeed, the Assertion of the Pagan Celsus; but I am sorry to see some Christian and learned Writers, of late so fond of it.⁴

² See Appendix A. Mather takes exception to John Spencer's claim (De Legibus Hebraeorum [1685], lib. 3, diss. 1–8) that the similarities between the cultic rites of the Israelites and those of their Egyptian neighbors reveal that Moses borrowed his ceremonial rites from his former overlord. In this, Spencer leans – among others – on Athanasius Kircher's stupendous Oedipus Aegyptiacus (1652–54), who more than insists on this premise by supplying graphic depictions. Mather's friend and correspondent, the English Presbyterian clergyman John Edwards (Discourse Concerning the Authority [1693], ch. 5, pp. 164–92 and ch. 8, pp. 268–97) was one among many who opposed Spencer's audacious thesis. Although known for historicizing the history behind the Scriptures, Hugo Grotius (Lev. 1:9) cautiously asserts to the contrary that the cultic rites among pagan nations were either stolen from Moses or by him restored to their pristine original (Prisca theologia) as they were handed down via Adam and Noah's sons and survived in corrupted form among the Syrians and Egyptians (Annotationes ad Leviticum [1644], in Opera [1679], 1:60). See A. J. Droge, Homer or Moses? (1989), R. Smolinski, "Eager Imitators" (2010), D. Levitin, "John Spencer's De Legibus" (2013), and Levitin's Ancient Wisdom (2017), ch. 3.

³ John Edwards, Discourse Concerning the Authority (1693), ch. 9, pp. 307–13, is Mather's primary source for the following extracts. See also John Tilotson's Of Idolatry: A Discourse (1678), esp. 97–143.

⁴ Edwards (Discourse, ch. 9, pp. 307–08). One of the earliest surviving polemics against emerging Christianity, On the True Doctrine (c. 178 CE) was written by the Greek philosopher Celsus (2nd c. CE), who contended that many of the Judeo-Christian doctrines and rites were completely unoriginal and were derived from the religion of Egypt and that of other countries (On the True Doctrine, esp. ch. 2 and 6). Most of Celsus's polemic survives in Contra Celsus, by Origenes Alexandrinus, who vehemently opposes the Egyptian origin thesis (Against Celsus 3.16–19; 4.11, 20, 34, 36, 42). Interest in Celsus's ancient thesis was revived in Mather's time. Among its major proponents were (to different degrees) the following RC and Protestant divines: Franciscus Moncaeus, in Aaron purgatus, sive de vitulo aureo libri duo (1606); Jacques Gaffarel, in Curiositez inouyes sur la sculpture talismanique des Persans (1629); Athanasius Kircher, Oedipus Aegyptiacus (1652–54); Lord Herbert of Cherbury, De Religione Gentilium (1663); John Spencer, in Dissertatio De Urim & Thummim (1669) and De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685); Antonius van Dale, in De Oraculis Ethnicorum (1683); Thomas Burnet, in Archaeologiae Philosophica (1692); John Toland, Adeisidaemon et Origines Judaicae (1709), and many others. Among the most prominent opponents of the Egyptian origin thesis are Theophilus Gale, in The Court of the Gentiles (1669–78); Pierre-Daniel Huet, in Demonstratio Evangelica (1679);

All the Demonstrations or Probabilities, which the Patrons of this Opinion, pretend for it, from Antiquitie, are very feeble ones.

And if wee go to Authoritie, Wee shall in all Ages, find the greatest Authors exploding it.

Among the Jewes, you have Josephus, with several Rabbies beside him, such as R. Himman, & R. Solomon, proving that the Jewes borrow'd nothing Sacred from the Gentiles, but the Gentiles almost every thing from the Jewes.⁵

Among the Fathers, you have Justin Martyr, and Tertullian, and others, maintaining, that the Worship of the Gentiles did Ape, that of the Jewes.⁶

Among the Papists, you have such Expositors as Estius (upon Deut. 12.30.) saying, manifestum est, Ceremonias Judaicas non esse Petitas ex Gentilitate.⁷

Among the Protestants, Lett a Fagius tell you, All the Consent, which is between the Jewish & Gentile Rites, ariseth from the Divels Study, to deprave many things which are in the Jewish Worship of God, and Transfer them to his own. [In Num. 7.89.]⁸

Lett a Calvin tell you, It is a Wicked, & a Detestable Thing, to Imagine, that the Rites commanded in the Mosaic Law were as it were Play-games & Sports only, in Imitation of the Pagans. [In Ex. 25.8.]⁹

Herman Witsius, Aegyptiaca, et ΔΕΚΑΦΥΛΙΟΝ (1683); Philippus Riboudealdus, in Sacrum Dei Oraculum Urim et Thummim (1685); Pierre Jurieu, A Critical History (1705), and many others.

5 John Edwards (Discourse, ch. 9, p. 309); Josephus Flavius, Contra Apionem (2.280–83), i. e., Against Apion (2:40). Though listed in Edwards (p. 309, note b), R. Himman has not yet been identified. R. Solomon is R. Solomon Jarchi, aka. Rashi, whose Commentary on the Pentateuch Mather quotes throughout. See also Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.21–29; 2.5, 18, 22; 5.14; 6.3–5) on the argument for the Mosaic origin pagan philosophy.

6 Edwards (Discourse, ch. 9, p. 310); Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho (16, 69–70); Tertullian, in his De praescriptione haereticorum (40.1–4) [PL 002. 054–055], is most explicit in blaming the devil: "The question will arise, By whom is to be interpreted [reversed] the sense of the passages which make for heresies? By the devil, of course, to whom pertain those wiles which pervert the truth, and who, by the mystic rites of his idols, vies even with the essential portions of the sacraments of God. He, too, baptizes some – that is, his believers and faithful followers; he promises the putting away of sins by a laver (of his own); and if my memory still serves me, Mithra there, (in the kingdom of Satan,) sets his marks on the foreheads of his soldiers; celebrates also the oblation of bread, and introduces an image of a resurrection, and before a sword wreathes a crown" (Prescription against Heretics 40.1–4; in ANF 3:262–63).

7 In his Annotationes Aurae in Praecipua ac Difficiliora Sacrae Scripturae Loca (1622), p. 132, Guilielmus Estius (1542–1613), professor of theology at Douai, glosses on Deut. 12:30, "Hinc ergo manifestum est, ceremonias Judaicas non esse petitas ex gentilitate, sed ab ipso Deo institutas." Or "From thence it is manifest that the Jewish Ceremonies were not taken from Gentilism, but Instituted by God himself" (Edwards, Discourse, ch. 9, p. 310).

8 Via Edwards (310), Mather quotes Paulus Fagius's gloss on Numb. 7:89. Paulus Fagius (1504–49), a renowned Lutheran professor of OT theology at Strasbourg, was a lecturer of Hebrew at Cambridge and published his highly regarded translation of Targum Onkelos (Chaldee paraphrast). Edwards borrows his robes from Pearson's omnium gatherum Critici Sacri (1660), 1:946–47.

9 The translation of Calvin's commentary on Exod. 25:8 (Commentaries on the Four Last Books 1:153) is at second hand from Edwards (ch. 9, p. 311).

Lett a Cocceius tell you, *I admitt not, that the Jewish Law, is an Imitation of the Gentile Ceremonies; For, on the Contrary tis certain, that it was made to draw off the Israelites, from many of the Pagan Rites, by those several Lawes which were in it, contrary to those Rites. So it became an Hedge, or Partition-Wall, between the Jewes & Gentiles, that they might not come near one another, as to their Ceremonies; for, from a Likeness in these, there would have followed, a mutual Converse & Communion, & consequently a Depravation.*¹⁰

And then, for the particular Ceremonies, the Testimonies of the greatest Authors, on our Side, are Innumerable. But waving all other Quotations, I'll produce one, that shall bee unanswerable. With one Text, I'll confute & confound mighty Volumns, which have with much pompous Ostentation of Literature, been address'd unto the World. It is that in Deut. 12.30, 31, 32. *Take heed to thyself; that thou bee not snared, by following THEM [i. e. the Heathen,] and that thou enquire not after Their Gods, saying How did these Nations Serve their Gods? Even so will I do Likewise. Thou shalt not do so unto the Lord thy God, for every Abomination to the Lord, which Hee hates, have they done unto their Gods.*¹¹

3274. But This Matter may be a little further pursued?¹²

Between Ceremonies which are Natural, there might be some Similitude. In Egypt, and all hott Countreyes, Bathing is necessary. God might apply this to a Religious Use, as well as the Egyptians. What can be more suitable unto a Thank-Offering than to Rejoice? Wherein therefore God would have the Jewes to use Wine, tho' the Zabians did the like. He did not think fitt to forego His own Law of Nature, because Hee saw it observed by Pagans. But that these, or any of the rest were borrowed, can never be proved. For they who give us an Account of the Egyptian Ceremonies, as, Ælian, and Apaleius, and Diodorus, and Berosus, and Manetho and Herodotus, lived (as Dr. Grew notes) from 600. to 1100 Years after Solomons Reign, which began above 250 before the first Olympiad, the Epocha of all such prophane History, as hath any thing of Certainty in it. And Solomon, having built the Temple, enriched Judæa, and married Pharaohs Daughter, the Jewes thereupon were highly honoured by the Egyptians and other Nations, far and near. So Ezekiel tells us, (ch. 13. 14.) Thy Renown went forth among the Heathen for thy Beauty. The wiser Part of the Heathen World, had a mighty Regard, unto the Jewish History & Government, and now especially, began to imitate the Religious Rites of that People. Where we meet with a Resemblance, we

Q. Well; but on the other Side, may not wee advance this Assertion, *That the Gentiles derived from the Jewes, the Most of the Names and Things used in Religion among them?*¹⁴

A. 'Tis, an Assertion, which may, with a vast Variety of Reading and Learning, bee mentained.

I will particularly at this Time entertain you, with a few Roman Antiquities, which one Mr. Turner, hath shown to bee of an Hebrew Original.¹⁵

As for the City of Rome itself, it is from Rom, To bee High: and it may signify any High Place whatsoever, as Ramah, and Gibeon might also have done. And Romulus is, The God of that High Place, by the Addition of, El, unto it. Hee was also called, Quirinus; not for any of the Reasons assigned by Ovid, in the Second, of his Fasti, but Quirinus, is Κοίρανος, from the Hebrew Koren, an Horn, which was with the Orientals, an Emblem of Dominion.¹⁶ | The First Place, [2v] where any Roman Temple was built, & where the ancient Romans preserved the 13 The preceding paragraph is from Nehemiah Grew, Cosmologia Sacra (1701), ch. 8, pp. 275–76, § 169. Grew may have in mind the following discussions of Egyptian customs and religious believes among the ancients: Aelian (De natura animalium 11.10), Apuleius (Metamorphoses, bk. 11), Diodorus Siculus (1.11.5–12, 13.1–5, 15.6–7, 17.1–20, 20.5–6, 21.1–22, etc.), Berosus (F1, F3, F4a, F5, etc.), Manetho (F3a, F5, F18–30), Herodotus (1.140, 182, 193, 198; 2.4, 35–38, 123; 4.168, 180, 186). Surprisingly, Grew forgot Plutarch's invaluable discussion of the rites of Isis and Osiris (Moralia 351–84).

14 Efforts to associate the names of the ancient Roman, Greek, Egyptian, and Babylonian kings and deities with the patriarchal figures of the Hebrew Scriptures were common enough in Mather's time, for they were based on the unified belief that the knowledge of the ancient theology (Prisca theologia) gradually degenerated as the descendants of Noah's dispersed throughout the different continents of the postdiluvian earth (Gen. ch. 10) and deified their ancestors (Euhemerism). See f.e., Mather's discussion of Noah's deification in BA (1:678–85) and T. S. Brown's "Euhemerus and the Historians," J. Seznec's Survival of the Pagan Gods (1953), and H. C. Maddux's "Euhemerism and Ancient Theology."

15 Little is known about John Turner (b. 1649), "Hospitaller of St. Thomas Southwark, and late fellow of Christ's-College in Cambridge," except what we can glean from the title pages of his publications. Mather here excerpts Turner's book-length treatise Boaz and Ruth. A Disquisition upon Deut. 25.5. (1685).

16 Turner (Boaz and Ruth 319) cites Ovid's Fasti (2.477–80), but only to dismiss his association of Romulus, mythical king of the Romans, with the early Roman god Quirinus: "but the third [day of the ancient Roman calendar] is dedicated to Quirinus. He who owns this name was Romulus before, whether because the ancient Sabines called a pear curis, and by his weapon the warlike god won his place among the stars; or because the Quirites gave their own name to their king; or because he united Cures to Rome" (Fasti 2.475–80). Believing that all languages devolved from ancient Hebrew guides Turner as much as it does Mather and his peers. Turner's philological derivation of the Greek noun κοίρανος (Homer's Iliad 7.234), suggesting "ruler, leader, commander" (LSJ), from the Hebrew-Aramaic term קָרֵן [qeren] (Strong's ## 7161, 7162), is based on their phonetic similarity and the metaphoric identification of animal

Images of all their Gods, & where the Capitol itself was afterwards erected, was called, Mons Tarpeius; not from Tarpeius, the supposed Governour of the Citadel, or from his Daughter Tarpeia, whom, for Want of a more likely Tale, they slander for betraying of it: but because the Idols, which the Romans worshipped, & which were called by the Hebrewes Teraphim, and in Construction, Tarphei, were kept in that Mountain. And Rhea, whom they pretend, his Mother, properly signifies, A Priestess, from Rhaah, to See, as the Priests & Prophets are often called, Rhoim, or, Seers.¹⁷

Numa succeeded him; and being a Lawgiver, had his Name accordingly. For this is the very Word, whereby God Himself in Scripture expresses His legislative Authority, Neoum Jehovah, or, Thus saith the Lord. And this is a better Derivation of Νόμος, and of, Nomisma, or, Numisma, derived from it, than the usual Etymology of the Grammarians.¹⁸ Neither can any thing bee a greater Confirmation of this, than that wee find Recorded in the History of Rome, that Numa Received all his Lawes from the Nymph Egeria; for this Egeria is Hagar, which the Apostle Paul tells us, in the Cabalistical Language signified, Mount Sinai in Arabia;¹⁹ From thence did Numa derive his Institutions. Among other 17 John Turner, Boaz and Ruth (319–320, 321). The “Mons Tarpeius,” or rather the Tarpeian Rock, served as the ancient foundation of a Sabine temple situated on a high cliff (part of the Capitoline Hill), one of the seven hills of the city of Rome, overlooking the Forum. The Rock was used for executions until Sulla's time (1st c. BCE). See Livy's Ab Urbe Condita (6.17, 20), Lucan's Pharsalia (8.863), Virgil's Aeneid (8.347, 652), and Mather's commentary on Exod. 19:13 (above). Plutarch offers several tales about the origin of the eponymous place-name. The most popular one has Tarpeia, the daughter of Romulus's captain Tarpeius, betray the ancient citadel to the Sabines, for which treason she was executed and buried on the rock. King Tarquin, Plutarch relates, subsequently had her bones removed and a temple to Jupiter erected in its place. (Parallel Lives: Romulus 17.2–5, 18.1). Just as in the previous case, Turner links the name of Tarpeia with the Hebrew noun תְּרָפִים [teraphim] (Strong's # 8655), the family idols or images mentioned in Judg. 17:5, 18:14, 17, 18, 20. Rhea, connubial offspring of the titans Uranus and Gaia (Hesiod, Theogonia 467–76), wedded Kronos and became the mother of Zeus and those of his siblings. Hence, Turner's phonetic and Euhemeristic association of Rhea with the Hebrew terms רֵאָה [ra'ah] (Strong's # 7200), signifying “seers” (1 Sam. 9:9; Isa. 30:10).

18 The Greek noun νόμος (Hesiod's Theogonia 66, 417; Herodotus 1.61; LXX, Ps. 1:2, Deut. 33:4) signifies both “usage, custom” and “law of God” (LSJ). In Plutarch's version of the life of legendary Numa Pompilius, second king of Rome, Numa consulted the deities in the Sabine temple located on the Tarpeian Rock of the Capitoline Hill, married the goddess Egeria, who bestowed wisdom and divine laws upon him, and became the lawgiver of his people, in Parallel Lives: Numa Pompilius (1.3, 4.1–2, 7.2, 9.1–2, 10.1, 13.1, 15.1–5).

19 Gal. 4:22–26: “For it is written, that Abraham had two sonnes, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a free woman. But he who was of the bondwoman was borne after the flesh: but he of the freewoman, was by promise. Which things are an Allegorie; for these are the two Covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Ierusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Ierusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.”

things, Introduced by Numa, were the Salij, the Ancilia, and the Luperci.²⁰ The Salij were the Twelve Priests of Mars, with Targetts called Ancilia. They had their Name from El, or Al, which the Latines, call, Sol, as much as to say, Solij, the Priests in general, of God, or more particularly of the Sun, to which all the Heathen Deities have been reduced by Macrobius; who also tells us, that in his Time, the Salij did not understand their own Sacred Hymns; because no doubt of the Oriental Strokes that were in them. Their Ancilia, were so called, because the Salij in their Dances, did use in certain Measures to beat or play upon their Shields, ingeminating these Words, in Honour of their God, Een Ca-El, Een Ca-El, There is none like God, or, There is none like our God. The Luperci, the Priests of Pan, of the Plastick Nature of the Universe, whose Business t'was to run naked thro' the Streets, Mulierum palmas uterosque caprinà, pelle ferientes, quà re fecunditatem, et facilem partum fieri putabant, might have their Name from the Words which they pronounced, in the Performance of that Superstitious Office, lu-parothk, i. e. utinam parias.²¹

Whence, the Capitol, and the, Mons Palatinus, and the, Mons Vaticanus, had their Names, wee mention in our Illustrations, on Deut. 23.19.²²

At present, I content myself with Noting, That the Esquilæ, or, the Mons Esquilinus, had its Name from the Groves that grew upon it; For that is the Signification of Eshel in Hebrew, whence was the Latin Asilum; and as the Name, so the Thing itself, was derived from the Cities of Refuge among the Jewes: the Pomaria whereof, or Suburbs, (imitated by the Latines,) at the furthest Boundary of which the Jus Asylorum took its Beginning, were ever plough'd, (as were not the Suburbs of any other Cities of the Levites,) but were full of Shady Groves and Meadows. And thus, from Ethel, which is the same in Chaldee, that Eshel

²⁰ Plutarch (Numa Pompilius 12.3, 13.1–7, 19.5) relates that Numa established the priesthood of the Salii (priests of Mars Gradivus) in Rome, after Numa had been able to avert a plague in the eighth year of his reign. He was able to stop the scourge with the help of “a bronze buckler,” which miraculously “fell from heaven.” Numa had eleven identical copies made of this buckler, which (Plutarch explains) was called “ancilia” because of its curved shape (Greek ἀγκύλια [ancylia], i. e., “curved”), and thus protected Rome from calamity. Likewise, Plutarch explains that Numa set aside the month of February for “the festival of the Lupercalia” (purification) in honor of the dead. Macrobius says much the same in his Saturnalia (1.4.12–13, 1.13.3, 1.15.14; 2.12.1–7).

²² Turner (Boaz and Ruth, p. 308). The Mons Palatinus and Mons Vaticanus are two of the seven hills surrounding the ancient Roman capital.

is in Hebrew, is the Latin Italia, by reason of its Fruitfulness and pleasant Scituation: which is a much better Derivation, than the Idle one from ἰταλος.²³

Lett us only Reflect upon the Names of the Two Months, added by Numa, to the Year of Romulus, and wee will have done.²⁴

Why may not Janus, and, Januarius, bee from the Hebrew, Shanah, that signifies, A Year? The Year does in this Month Return into itself. Janus therefore hath Two Faces. And hee was therefore called, Clusius, because hee shutt up the Old Year, and Patulcius, because hee opened the New.²⁵

As for February; you know, that the Rite of, Passing thro, the Fire, or, in the Lustrations of the Orient, was expressed by the Hebrew Term, Yabar; whence, the Hajin, being turned into the Æolic Digamma, as it is in many Instances, the Latin, Februa, is derived; by which Word, all things that were used in Lustrations, were signified: & not only Februa, but Febris also.²⁶

Wee will at present add no more of our Orientalisms; These may suffice for a Tast!

²⁶ John Turner (Boaz and Ruth, p. 340). The Hebrew term עָבַר [‘abar] (Strong’s # 5674) suggests “to pass through” (Ps. 84:6). The silent letter פ (ayin), Turner argues, is turned into the letter Y, because its shape resembles the letter Y; hence “Yabar” instead of “abar.” This linguistic transformation is based on the same principle, Turner argues, which governs the “Æolic Digamma” (“twice” the letter Γ [gamma]) in ancient Greek, because the Greek Γ, when transcribed into Latin, resembles the latter F. According to the OED, gamma was “the sixth letter of the original Greek alphabet, corresponding to the Semitic waw or vau, which was afterwards disused, the sound expressed by it having been gradually lost from the literary language. It was a consonant, probably equivalent to English w; in the Italian alphabets derived from Greek, it appears to have passed through the power of consonantal v, to that of f; its value in the Roman alphabet: see F. It was lost in Ionic and Attic before the date of the earliest known monuments, but it occurs in inscriptions in all the other dialects down to late times, and it was also retained in the literary remains of Æolic, whence the appellation Æolic digamma or letter.”

Q. Perhaps, it will bee an Entertainment not ungrateful, if you will draw up, and cast up, a Scheme, of the Stated Offerings, constantly brought unto the Lord (besides the Numberless occasional ones) every Year in the Temple?

A. Wee will then count 365 days, 52 Sabbaths, 13 New Moons, in the Year. For, tho' the Julian Year differs from the Judaical Calender, yett, by reason of the Jewish Intercalations, the difference will bee insensible.

Now the Scheme is This.

	Kids.	Bullocks.	Rams.	Lambs.	Flour. Epals Homers	Oyl. Baths. Hins. Logs	Wine. Baths. Hins. Logs
The Daily Sacrifice for 365 days, 2 Lambs, per day.	0	0	0	730	73 0	30 2 6	30 2 6
Fifty two Sabbaths	0	0	0	104	10 4	4 2 0	4 2 0
Thirteen New Moons.	13	26	13	91	19 5	8 0 9	6 3 0
Passeover 7 days.	7	14	7	49	8 5	4 1 3	3 1 3
First Fruits.	1	2	1	2 7 1	1 5 0 2	0 3 9 0 0 6	0 3 0 0 0 3
First Day of the Seventh Month.	1	1	1	7	1 2	0 3 0	0 2 6
Tenth Day of the Seventh Month.	1	1	1	7	1 2	0 3 0	0 2 6
The Eight Days of the Feast of Tabernacles.	8	71	15	105	34 8	15 2 6	10 5 6
Summ Total	31	115	38	1 103	150 3	64 2 0	56 4 6

It arrives you see, unto One Hundred and Fifteen Young Bullocks, Thirty Eight Rams, One Thousand One Hundred & Three Lambs, and Thirty One Kids, all smoaking on the Altar of God. Unto which was added, for Bread and Drink, One hundred and fifty Ephahs, and Three Omers, of fine Flour; Sixty Four Baths, and One Hin, of pure beaten Oyl; and fifty six Baths, four Hins, and Six Logs, of excellent Wine. This was the constant yearly Sacrifice.

Now, Ten Omers make an Ephah. A Tenth deal of Flour, so often mentioned in the Levitical Sacrifices, means an Omer. An Omer is in our English Measure, about; One Pottle, One Pint, and Three Ounces. An Ephah is about Six Gallons, One Pottle, and half a Pint. Ten Ephah's make an Homer.

A Bath (in Liquid Measures, the same with an Ephah in Dry) is Six Gallons, One Pottle, and half a Pint. An Hin (which is the Sixth Part of a Bath) is One Gallon, & three quarters of a Pint. A Log (which is the Twelfth Part of an Hin,) is Three quarters of a Pint, wanting but the Fourth Part of an Ounce; or, Eight Ounces, & three Fourths of an Ounce.²⁷

Q. What Remark may one make, on, The Lords calling unto Moses? v. 1.

A. What Procopius Gazæus hath well remark'd; That Moses appointed no Service of God, without His Order, in the House he had lately erected for Him.

We may add, That the Time, when Moses received Order from God, about His Worship, was, no doubt, immediately after the Consecration of the Tabernacle, as soon as the Glory of the Lord entred into it; which Hesychius gathers from the Conjunction, And, with which this Book begins.²⁸

²⁷ See Richard Cumberland, An Essay towards the Recovery of Jewish Weights and Measurements (1686), pp. 86, 137.

²⁸ Patrick (Leviticus 2). Several of the works of the Christian rhetorician Procopius of Gaza (c. 465–528 CE) are extant, but Mather's specific reference could not be determined. The Presbyter Hesychius of Jerusalem (fl. 5th c. CE) believes that the coordinating conjunction And, which opens Lev. 1:1, implies that Moses received his divine instructions immediately after he had consecrated the Tabernacle (Commentarius in Leviticum, lib. 1, cap. 1, v. 1, 2), in [PG 083. 791–793]. Similarly, the medieval French exegete R. Joseph ben Isaac Bekhor Shor (12th c.) explains that the particle conjunction And, Hebrew וַ [vaw], in the opening phrase וַיִּקְרָא [vayikra], i.e., “And He called” (Lev. 1:1), yokes the third book of the Torah to the last verse of Exod. 40:35 (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:4). In his commentary on Ezra 1:1, Mather adds a different thought. He stresses that “the direct Note of Connection, AND” at the opening of a number of OT books (from Exodus to Ezra) – although “concealed from the English Reader under the Word, NOW” – demonstrates that “several prophetic Scribes” updated earlier books and added new material. Yet “Tis all along one Body of History; connected by several prophetic Scribes that wrote it; with such proper Additions, for Explanation, as could not be originally in the Ancient Books themselves” (BA 4:83). See also Robert Jenkin's Reasonableness and Certainty of the Christian Religion (1700), vol. 1, pt. 2, ch. 9, pp. 232–33. Good old Father Richard Simon's heretical “publick Writers” hypothesis was finally gaining traction (BA 1:127–44).

Q. Why is it said in the Plural Number, Yee shall bring? v. 2.

A. The Hebrew Doctors, who have accurately considered these things, tell us, 'Tis to show, that Two Men might join together, to offer One Thing.²⁹ 3508.

Q. What was the Matter præscribed for all the Levitical Offerings? v. 2.

A. The Herd, and, The Flock; That is to say, Bullocks, and, Sheep, and Goats. Doves and, Pigeons, were indeed allow'd, when People were not able to bring the other; But they were never allowed in Publick Sacrifices.

These Three Sorts of Four-footed Beasts which were chosen, were (as Abarbanel observes) the most excellent of all Bruit Creatures; and easily procured; for which Cause also, Doves & Pigeons only among Birds, were called for.³⁰

It is also likely, that the Israelites might be restrained peculiarly unto these, to præserve them from the Customes of the Gentiles. For tho' we find in Homer, the mention of Hecatombs (a Sacrifice of an Hundred Oxen), and of perfect Lambs and Goats, whereby Achilles hoped, that Apollo might be appeased; yett, there was no more ancient Sacrifice among the Heathen, if we may beleieve themselves, than that of Swine. Hence that learned Roman Varro derives the Word $\zeta\varsigma$ a Swine, from $\theta\upsilon\varsigma$, A Sacrifice; because it was most anciently offered unto their Gods; there not being (as, Petrus Castellanus de Esu Carnium tells us,) a more delicious Food, at their own Tables, than Swines-flesh. Afterwards they sacrificed, Harts to Diana, Horses to the Sun, Asses to Priapus, Wolves to Mars, nay, Dogs to Hecate; whereby they destroy'd the very Nature of Sacrific[i]al Feasts, in which People had Communion with the Gods whom they worshipped, by partaking at their Table.³¹

29 Patrick, on Lev. 1:2 (Leviticus 4). Rashi, Nachmanides, and Abarbanel are among those who agree that "any of you" (Lev. 1:2) may suggest that it makes no difference to God whether the sacrifice is offered (as Nachmanides puts it) "by a single person, by two, by ten, or by a thousand" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedoloth 3:5).

30 Abarbanel, Commentarius Pentateuchum Mosis (1710) argues that "none other than a domestic animal" must be sacrificed, such as "cattle, sheep, and goats," because they "possess the finest characters of all animals in the entire animal kingdom," are docile, and herbivores. As for fowls, only two qualify: "the young pigeons and the turtledoves." Nonetheless, "the choicest sacrifices" are from the four-footed species mentioned above; they are reserved for "communal offerings," but "pigeons" or "young doves" are not suitable for "a single communal offering" (Selected Commentaries. Vayikra/Leviticus 3:19, 20).

31 Simon Patrick (Leviticus 5, 6). His primary source is $\kappa\rho\epsilon\omega\phi\alpha\gamma\iota\alpha$ sive De Esu Carnium libri IV (1626), lib. 2, cap. 1, pp. 59–63, by Petrus Castellanus (1585–1632), professor of medicine and Greek literature at Louvain. Castellanus also supplies the derivation of the Greek word for "swine" (sow) from De re rustica (2.4.9), by the Roman historian and Latin scholar Marcus Terrentius Varro (116–27 BCE) (OCD). Homer's gods delight in the sacrifice of hecatombs of oxen, lambs, and goats (Iliad 1.53–67, 312–24, Odyssey 1.25). Fleet-footed Diana, Greek goddess of the hunt, is pleased with the sacrifice of deer; Xenophon (Anabasis 4.5.24, 35; Cyropædia 8.3.12) tells of the Parthian custom of devoting hecatombs of horses to Helios, god of the

Q. A Male without Blemish? v. 3.

A. The Hebrew Word, signifies, Perfect; having all inward & outward Accomplishments, Μωμος, whence Αμωμος, from מום/ a Spott, or Blemish.³² Such an one in the Skin, did not render a Sacrifice unacceptable; but some other Deficiency or Redundancy. Our Saviours Perfection is here also typified. The Translations therefore might have well had it, A Male of Perfection.

What is rendred, Of his own voluntary Will, may be rendred, For his Favour, or, his Favourable Acceptance. Compare, v. 4. and Jer. VI.20. This is the most ancient Version of this Text, & a very frequent one.³³

Q. How and why was performed the Rite of Putting the Hand on the Head of the Burnt-Offering? v. 4.

A. Some (gathering it from Lev. 16.21.) suppose, That both the Hands of the Offerer were imposed; Maimonides adds, It was to be done with all his Might. This was not only, to Transfer, and to Devote unto the Lord, his whole Interest in the Sacrifice; as the Romans laid their Hands on their Servants, when they sett them at Liberty, and abdicated their own Right in them, with Saying, Hunc Hominem Liberum esse vollo: (which was call'd, Manumission;) but also to express the Leaning of a True Faith, on the Sacrifice of the Messiah. [Compare, Heb. 6.2.]³⁴

And it must be observed, That Laying on of Hands, was always accompanied with Prayer. [see Gen. 48.14, 16, 20. and Lev. 16.21.] Yea, sometimes the sun, and so does Herodotus (1.216) of the Scythians. Calmet (1:653). Priapus, Greek patron god of fertility, is into asses (go figure); bellicose Mars, god of war, is partial to wolves; and good old Hecate, goddess of witchcraft and necromancy, to canines – all of which four-footed oblations are neatly categorized and documented in Bochart's Hierozoicon (1663), pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 33, col. 321, lines 14–68.

³² Lev. 24:19, Exod. 29:1: (LXX) μῶμος (momos) signifies “blemish,” and ἀμωμος (amomos) “unblemished, perfect.” Mather's Hebrew spelling of מום should be מאום [m'uw] (Strong's # 3971), suggesting “blemish, spot, defect” (Numb. 19:2).

Laying on of Hands in the N.T. signifies, To pray. [see Matth. 19.15. and Mar. 5.23.]³⁵

Q. How was the Flaying of the Burnt-Offering performed? v. 6.

A. The Jewes tell us, That not the Priest, but the Man himself, who brought the Sacrifice, was to do this. Abarbinel notes, that each of them had Five Things to do. The Man that brought the Sacrifice, 1. Laid his Hand upon it. 2. Kill'd it. 3. Flayed it. 4. Cutt it up. 5. Wash'd the Inwards. And then the Priest, 1. Received the Blood in a Vessel. 2. Sprinkled the Blood. 3. Putt Fire on the Altar. 4. Ordered the Wood on the Fire. 5. Ordered the Peeces of the Sacrifice on the Wood.

That the Beast might be the more easily flayed, there were Eight Stone Pillars, (as the Jewes tell us in Middoth,) and Beams laid over them; In each of which, there were Three Iron Hooks fixed; that the Greater Beasts might hang on the highest, the Lesser on the Middlemost, the Least on the Lowest, & so be the more commodiously stript of their Skins.³⁶

Q. What was the Fat which the Priests were to lay, with the Parts, and the Head, of the Sacrifice, on the Wood? v. 8.

A. The Hebrew Word, Peder, doth not simply signify, Fat, (for which they have another Word, Cheleb;) but that Fat which is by itself separated from the rest of the Flesh. [So, Lev. 3.9. and 4.35.] This being thus gathered together, & thrown into the Fire, fed the Flame, and made it burn very fiercely, by which Means the Sacrifice was the easier, and quicklier consumed. Jerom takes it particularly for the Fat which adhæred unto the Liver. And both Solomon Jarchi, and David Kimchi observe, that this Peder was thrown upon the Head of the Sacrifice (when it was cast into the Fire) just in the Place where the Head was cutt Talmudis Babylonici Codex Middoth sive De Mensuris Templi* (1630), cap. 3, sec. 5, pp. 118–19. This esteemed bilingual edition and translation, by Constantine L'Empereur de Oppyck (1591–1648), a Dutch professor of theology, Hebrew, and Chaldean at Leiden, explicates the architecture, courts, and maintenance rooms of the Temple.

off from the Body; because otherwise the Gore which issued from it might have extinguished the Flame. The Order, wherein the Parts of the Sacrifice were to ly on the Wood, was the same as to answer the Scituation thereof in the Creature when it was alive. So Maimonides informeth us.³⁷

Q. What was the Place, where the Inwards and the Legs of the Sacrifice were washed with Water v. 9.

A. There was a Private Room in the Court of the Temple, (as now tis likely there was in the Tabernacle) called, The Washing-Room; as we find in the Mid-doth; where, having privately washed these Parts, they brought them into the Court, & laid them upon Marble Tables, between the Pillars above-mentioned; and again more exactly washed them. Const. L'Empereur observes out of R. Hobadiah, the reason why they used to lay the Flesh upon such Tables, was because Marble made it cold and stiff, & præserv'd it from Stinking, in very Hott Weather.³⁸

Q. The Greater Sacrifices, which the Jewes called, The most Holy Things, had that peculiar Place assign'd them to be killed in, The North Side of the Altar. But the Lesser Holy Things, (as the Peace-Offerings, of particular Men; the

³⁸ Patrick (Leviticus 15) paraphrases L'Empereur's Latin annotations on R. Paschal-Lamb; etc) might be killed in any Part of the Court, where the Altar stood. What Conveniences were there to accomplish the Slaughtering? v. 11.

A. There were certain Rings fixed, unto which the Head, or, some say, the Feet of the Beast, was tied, in order to the Killing of it. But they were not Perfect Rings, as L'Empereur observes; being rather Half-Segments of Rings, one Part of which was fastened unto the Pavement, & by the other, the Neck of the Beast was tied unto it.³⁹

Q. It is not amiss now and then, to take notice of a Rabbinic Fancy, tho' there should happen to be no great Weight in it. If it be only, that the Fancies come to us, from afar, and, of old, this may be enough to make amends for your inserting them. I pray give us one, upon that; He shall bring his Offering of Turtle-doves, or of Young Pigeons? v. 14.

A. I find this Observation of the Rabbins upon it. The Lord will admitt of Turtles for a Sacrifice, at any Age; but of Pigeons tis expressly required, that they be Young. And they give this Reason; Because Turtles are Savoury Meat at any Age; but Pigeons, when they grow old, they grow Tough, and have no good Relish in them.⁴⁰

And I find one of our Practical Writers, thus Improving this Observation.

“Truly (saies he) we are not born Turtles; none but the Sanctified are such. (Ps. 74.19.) We are Pigeons. Lett us Remember, That there is no acceptable Relish in Old Pigeons. See 2. Tim. 3.15. and Prov. 8.17.”⁴¹

Q. Give us a Moral Document of Maimonides's if you please, upon this Offering of Turtle-Doves, and Young Pigeons? v. 14.

A. Maimonides observes, That this little Sacrifice of Birds, was one of the Difficuldest Works in the Sanctuary. The Mind of the Priest, was kept as Intent upon the Poorest Sacrifice, as upon the Splendidest.⁴²

Q. The Gospel of the Ancient Sacrifices, would bee a very pleasant and useful Entertainment, for a Reader of the Scripture: And here will bee a very proper Place to bring it in? v. 17.⁴³

A. Tis very sure, The Offerings presented unto the Lord, according to His Commandment, in the Days of the Old Testament, were Typical of Evangelical Mysteries.⁴⁴

Of the Offerings, there were some offered at the Brazen Altar; which represented the Sufferings of our Lord. Some were offered, more near to the Holy of Holies; as the Shewbread & the Incense; which had respect unto the Intercession of our Lord. And some were offered in the Holy of Holies; which pointed at the full Attainment of the Ends of both the former.

At the Brasen Altar, were offered, Sacrifices [Ιλαστικά and Ευχαριστικά] Propitiatory and Eucharistical; Sacrifices of Expiation, & Sacrifices of Thanksgiving.⁴⁵

The Propitiatory Sacrifices were Holy of Holinesses, or most Holy Offerings unto the Lord, for the appeasing of His Wrath, by the Destruction of the Sacrifices, to represent the true Expiation of Sin, by the Death of our Lord Jesus Christ. The other Sacrifices were but Holy; For the more Immediate Relation they had unto the Messiah, and His Person, and Actions, and Sufferings, the more Holy were any of the Levitical Objects. Now some of the very Pagans themselves, were sensible of this, That the Blood of Bulls & of Goats could not take away Sin; and Satan therefore triumphing over their Guilty Consciences, made them seek to ease the Distress and Horror of their Consciences, with Humane Sacrifices; upon the Principle of the Druids, mentioned by Cæsar; Quòd pro Vita Hominis nisi Vita Hominis reddatur, non posse aliter Deorum Immortalium Numen placari arbitrantur. Our Lord Jesus Christ therefore is become our Sacrifice.⁴⁶

The first Institution of Sacrifices, was doubtless presently after the Sin and Fall of Man. Our First Parents had their First Garments of Skins; and there is no doubt, that the Beasts, from whom the Skins were taken, had been slain for Sacrifices. Now, as tis said, in Gen. 3.21. The Lord God made Coats of Skins, & clothed them; so tis plain, that the Lord God approved, and therefore Hee appointed, ⁴³ The following paragraphs are all extracted from Mather's uncle, Samuel Mather, whose sermon "The Gospel of the Sacrifices," was preached on June 14, 1668, and published in Figures or Types of the Old Testament (Dublin, 1683) and republished three times. My references are to the second London imprint of Figures or Types (1705), pp. 184–94.

⁴⁵ Samuel Mather (186). The Greek terms ἰλαστικούς and εὐχαριστικά suggest, respectively, signify "atonement" and "gratitude."

the Sacrificing of the Things thus despoiled of their Skins.⁴⁷ And among all the Sons of these our First Parents, the rite of Sacrificing hath been maintained every where, but where the Preaching of the Gospel hath abolished it. Had it been a Dictate of the Law of Nature, the Gospel would not have Abolished it, but Continued it, but Confirmed it, but Enforced it. No, It was God Himself, who appointed the Sacrifices, which Repenting Sinners then brought unto Him. Tis said of Abel, in Heb. 11.4. By Faith hee offered unto God, a more Acceptable Sacrifice. Had Sacrifices been only Humane Inventions, they could not have been offered in Faith, nor would God have called them, Excellent. Tis said of Noah, in Gen. 8.20. Hee took of every clean Beast, & of every clean Fowl, and offered Burnt-Offerings unto the Lord; and the Lord smelled a sweet Savour. Gods Accepting the Sacrifices, is a Proof of His Commanding them. And the Distinction between clean Creatures and unclean, could then refer only to such Uses for them. How unsafely soever many of the Fathers have expressed themselves on this Point, Eusebius of Cæsarea seems to have better determined it, That the Ancient Sacrifices were not Humanely Invented, but, κατὰ θεῖαν ἐπινοίαν.⁴⁸ According to the Divine Precept. Accordingly, when God was now Recovering the Nation of Israel, from the Degeneracy, wherein the other Nations of the World had wofully depraved themselves, Hee Renewed the Command of Sacrificing, with Supernumerary, and Innumerable Ceremonies. Indeed, by the Edicts of God, unto the Nation of Israel, Corporal Death was to ensue upon every Act of Disobedience. Now, the Lord, who was the Law-giver of Israel, Relaxed that Extremity as to many Offences, and for the Corporal Death of the Offendor, Hee admitted the Death of the Sacrifice. But of what Account were the Sacrifices, thus Instituted? Alas, Tho' they were thus Instituted, they were all Insufficient. [see Heb. 10. beg.] The exact Righteousness, the spotless Purity, the infinite Grace of God, are to bee manifested in a Sacrifice for our Sin. Was the Blood of an Abject Bull of Goat any agreeable Manifestation of the Infinite Perfections of God? God published His Will in Thunders and Lightnings and Earthquakes, and with Millions of Angels, which attended the giving of His Fiery Law. Shall the Death of a sorry Brute, bee enough to make amends, for the Rebellion of the Soul of Man, against that Sovereign Will? No Man in his Wits, can think so despicably of the Divine Majesty. What Proportion is there, between the Sin of a Rational Soul, and the Blood of an Irrational MACHIN? How can the Butchering of contemptible Cattel, bee a Compensation for the Disparagement, that Sin ha's done to the Almighty

God, who created all the Cattel upon a thousand Hills? [Consider, Isa. 1.11. and Psal. 40.6.] What then were the Sacrifices for? Our Great Lord-Redeemer was to bee made a Sacrifice; And all the Sacrifices were Nothing, any further than they were Figures of that Great Sacrifice. In the ancient Sacrifices, God would have a Representation of the Sacrifice, wherewith our Lord-Redeemer would, in Fullness of Time, Reconcile Him unto us. This was the Use and the Scope of the Sacrifices: They were, but Christ in a Cloud, when the Smoke of them went up, in a Cloud before the Lord. —⁴⁹

Various were the Occasions, whereupon Sacrifices were offered. They were offered, by Persons under the Guilt of Sin, for the Obtaining of Reconciliation. They were offered for the Obtaining of any Needful Mercy, or the Preventing [5v] of Threatened | and Impending Evils. The neglect thereof in great Enterprises, caused a Good Cause to miscarry. The Tribes of Israel engaging against Benjamin, committed this neglect until their Third Attempt, and prospered accordingly. Once more, They were offered in Token of Joyfulness and Thankfulness for Mercies Received; And, finally, they were offered in the Particular Instituted Seasons of them.

Lett us now consider;

I. The Burnt-Offering.⁵⁰

This (whereof all but the Skin, was wholly Burned,) was offered, not only on Providential, and Incidental Occasions, but also constantly, Every Day, Morning and Evening; the, Juge Sacrificium.⁵¹

The Lawes of the Burnt-Offering, were either concerning the Matter of it, or the Actions to bee performed about it.

No Wild Beasts or Fowls, none that were Carnivorous, Prædatory, & Ravenous, were allow'd for Sacrifices: No Furious Animals, were fitt for Sacrifices, but such as were more Innocent, Serviceable, and Profitable. These were Mans more peculiar Propriety & Possession; and these were the fittest of all, to express the Vertues of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of His People. The Degenerate Pagans, transgress'd in this Point; but their Transgression was Abominable. [see Isa. 66.3. & 65.4.]⁵²

There was,

1. The Burnt-Offering of the Herd.

This was, a Bullock, a Male without Blemish: The most perfect Offering was fittest for so great a God! Wee should serve Him, with the best wee have. Our Lord Jesus Christ was a Sacrifice, unblemished, and of absolute Purity and Perfection. [1. Pet. 1.19.]⁵³

The Offerer was to bring the Sacrifice unto the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, before the Face of the Lord. Here was a Voluntary Act of the Offerer.⁵⁴ Hee brought, but was not Himself brought. It expressed the Voluntariness of our Lord Jesus Christ, in coming to offer a Sacrifice for us. [Eph. 5.2. Joh. 10.18.] And what Voluntariness is to attend all our Services. [2. Cor. 9.7.] Moreover, wee are taught, that all our Acceptance with God, is on the Account of the Lord Jesus Christ. If our Offerings are not brought unto Him, as unto the Door of the Tabernacle; [Joh. 10.7. Heb. 8.2. & 9.11.] And as the Altar, which sanctifies our Gift: [Heb. 13.10.] wee shall bee cutt off. But, as this was to bee done before the Face of the Lord, or, before the most Holy Place, where was a Special Presence of God, so wee are to eye God in all our Services, and act as in His Presence.⁵⁵

Again; The Offerer was to lay his Hand upon the Head of the Sacrifice:⁵⁶ (when the Sacrifice was only of Beasts; not of Birds.) The Priest was to lay on both his Hands; that is, both for his own Sins, and the Peoples too: but the Sinner laid on, only one, and as it should seem, the Left. This intimated, the Translation of the Guilt of the confessed Sin, unto the Sacrifice. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ, hath Born our Sins, [Isa. 53.4, 5.] And Sin confessed with Faith in Him, is thro' His Blood Forgiven. [1. Joh. 1.7, 9.]⁵⁷

Moreover; The Sacrifice was to bee kill'd and slain on the North-Side of the Altar. The Priest was to do This; but the Levites were added unto them, for their Assistance in doing it. Thus, the Messiah, was to bee slain. [Dan. 9.26. Isa. 53.10.] And this on Mount-Calvary, which was on the North-West Side of Jerusalem; as the Jewes have a Tradition, that the Morning-Sacrifice was killed, at the North-West Horn of the Altar. Quere, whether the Prevailing of the Gospel of Christ crucified, most in the Northern Hemisphere of the World, may bee at all here pointed at?⁵⁸

Furthermore; The Blood of the Sacrifice must bee poured forth at the foot of the Altar, and spinkled upon it round about.⁵⁹ Almost all things in the Law, were cleansed by Blood. [Heb. 9.22.] Thus, the Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, was poured forth, for the Satisfaction of Divine Justice. [Isa. 53.12. Math. 26.28.] And this Blood is then sprinkled, in the Application of the Holy Spirit. [Heb. 12.24.] The Altar typed out unto us, the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Sprinkling of the Blood upon the Altar, leads us to consider the Conjunction of the Manhood unto the Godhead of our Saviour, in His Bloody Sufferings for us, and the Influence of that Conjunction into the Vertue of the Sufferings. Were not the Blood so near unto the Altar, it could have no Soul-Redeeming Efficacy. [Act. 20.28.] The Blood was also Sprinkled upon the Book. The Scripture, and Ordinances, must bee Sprinkled with the Blood of the Lord, if ever they bee made effectual to us for our Good. And the Blood was in like Manner Sprinkled upon the People. This intimated, that the Blood of the Lord must bee brought home unto our Souls and Consciences.⁶⁰

In the Next Place; The Priest was to flay the Sacrifice, & cutt it into its Peeeces.⁶¹ The Skin was the Priests Portion; the Body was not meerly chop't in Peeeces, but cutt asunder at the several joints, in Order. The great Sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ, were thus Hinted unto us. [Compare Mic. 3.2, 3. Psal. 22.15, 16.]⁶²

And where shall wee have our Spiritual Cloathing? Our Lord Jesus Christ, having Died for us, hath left us a Garment of Righteousness. [Rom. 13.14.] And as the Inward Parts of the Sacrifice, were now discovered unto open View, so is our Lord Jesus Christ openly discovered in the Preaching of the Gospel. [Gal. 3.1.] And God sees the Inwards of Every Sacrifice, that wee worship Him withal. [Heb. 4.12, 13.] But whereas, there was hardly any Sacrifice under the Law, whereof the Priest had not a Part, wee are thence taught the Maintainance of the Ministry. [1. Cor. 9.13, 14.]⁶³

Farther still; The Peeeces of the Sacrifice were to bee salted.⁶⁴ This Rule was general, to every Sacrifice. The Perpetuity of the Covenant of Grace, may herein bee intimated. [Compare Lev. 2.13. Numb. 18.19. 2. Chron. 13.5.]

[6r] And wee have an Instruction, to | beware of Corruptions, in our Devotions. [Weigh Col. 4.6. and Eph. 4.29.]⁶⁵

To proceed; The Leggs and Inwards of the Sacrifice, must bee washed.⁶⁶ These were the Fowlest Parts of the Beast. Our Spiritual Washing was herein taught unto us. [Heb. 10.22.]

To pass on; The several Parts of the Sacrifice, must bee laid upon the Altar, and burnt with Fire, till it bee consumed, & burnt to Ashes.⁶⁷ The Fire that once fell from Heaven, was continually preserved upon the Altar for that Purpose. The Wrath of God is the Fire, and Sin is the Wood that feeds it. Every Part of our Lord Jesus Christ, suffered affliction from that Fire.

Finally; *The Ashes of the Sacrifice, must bee carried out of the Camp, into a clean Place.*⁶⁸ Thus, the crucified Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, was not buried within the City, but carried into a clean Place, even, into a New Sepulchre, where never any Man lay before. [Joh. 19.41. Heb. 13.11, 12, 13.]⁶⁹

There were indeed some other Actions about the Burnt-Offering. There was that of Binding the Sacrifice with Cords, to the Horns of the Altar. [Psal. 118.27.] But that seems an Action rather of Natural Necessity, than of any Special Mystery.⁷⁰

2. The Burnt-Offering of the Flock.

The Lord appointed lesser Sacrifices; namely Sheep, and Goats, and Birds, as Turtle-Doves, and Young Pigeons. Hee did it, that so none might plead Excuse to bee exempted from Serving Him; even that none may think themselves excused by their Poverty; and that the Meanest may not bee discouraged, by the Meanness of their Capacities and Abilities.

About the Offering of the Lesser Cattel, there are præscribed no Peculiar Ceremonies.⁷¹

About the Birds to bee offered, wee may note, That they were such as Doves, not Ravens and Vultures. The Harmlessness, and Innocence, that was in our Lord Jesus Christ, and should bee in all Beleevers on our Lord Jesus Christ, is here taught unto us.

There were Three Ceremonies more particularly belonging to Them.⁷²

First, The Priest was to wring off the Head of the Bird.⁷³ But this aimed at the same general Scope, with the Killing of the Cattel: To represent the Suffering of the Lord Jesus Christ for our Sins, and the Violence therein done unto Him.

Again; The Priest was to pluck away his Crop, with his Feathers, & cast it beside the Altar, on the East Part, by the Place of the Ashes.⁷⁴ Why to the East? There they had a Place to carry the Ashes. This was the furthest from the Holy of Holies. The Temple stood West; And in reverence of the Divine Majesty, the Filth of the Sacrifices was carried as far from the Ark of the Testimony, as might bee. Wee must abandon all Filthiness, when we come into the Special Presence of God. [Psal. 26.6.]⁷⁵

Thirdly; The Priest was to cleave it, with the Wings, but not divide it asunder.⁷⁶ Cleave it; that is, long wayes, leaving a Wing on each Side. Thus also, the Head and the Body, were not altogether Disjoined, but only the Neck pinched with the Nail of the Priest. The Ceremony was very ancient. [Gen. 15.10.]

Thus, Not a Bone of our Lord Jesus Christ, was to bee Broken.⁷⁷ Moreover, The Divine and Humane Nature in our Lord, were never totally separated, tho His Soul were separated from His Body. His Deity, as the Head, or principal Part, was never Divided from His Humanity. Nor was Hee who is the Head of His Church, Divided from His Mystical Body, in His Afflictions.⁷⁸

II. The Meat-Offering.⁷⁹

All Propitiatory Sacrifices being referr'd unto Zebach, and Mincha, [Psal. 40.6.] which the Apostle reads, θύσια, and, πρόσφορα, [Heb. 10.5.] the Mincha, or, Meat-Offering was of Things that could not bee slain; Meats or Drinks, to bee offered only with Ignition, and Effusion.⁸⁰

Wee will consider,

1. The Materials of the Meat-Offering.

First, There was Corn; either Wheat, or Barley. The Wheat, was either ground and sifted into Flower, without any further Præparation; or, Dressed and Cooked into Cakes and Wafers; or, Baked; or, Fried in a Frying Pan.⁸¹ The Barley was not so much as ground into Meal or Flower, only Dried and Beaten; and the First Fruits were of that Species, because Barley was the First-ripe in Palestine. The First Month was called, Abib, q. mensis spicarum, the Month of Ears of Corn.⁸²

These Things are to bee Remark'd upon it. The Corn Meat-Offering, was to bee Fine Flower, purged from the Bran. This intimated the Pure Estate of our Lord Jesus Christ. And it instructs us, to have all our Services, as much as may bee, purged from the Bran of Corruption.

Again, The First-fruits were to bee a Meat-Offering. But our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, ha's the Character of the First Fruits upon Him. [1. Cor. 15.20.]

Moreover, The Meat-Offering must undergo a various Contusion; Grinding, Sifting, Baking, Frying, Beating, and the like. Thus did our Lord Jesus Christ, ⁷⁹ Samuel Mather, "The Gospel of the Meat-Offering," preached July 5th, 12th, 19th, 1668, in Figures or Types (1705), pp. 210–26.

⁸⁰ Samuel Mather (210–11). "Zebach" and "Mincha" suggest, respectively, "meat-offering" and "meal-offering." In the Greek NT, the Apostle Paul speaks of "sacrifice" and "offering" (Heb. 10:5). John Edwards (1637–1716), Cotton Mather's oft-quoted English Calvinist divine, begs to differ on this account. He insists that Mincha – a collective term for burnt offerings – "should rather be rendered a meal or flower [flour] Offering. ... [T]he Mincab [sic] was a Cake made of fine Meal, Oil, and Frankincense, and baked" (ΠΟΛΥΠΟΙΚΙΛΟΣ ΣΟΦΙΑ. A Compleat History [1699], cap. 5, p. 156).

⁸¹ Lev. 2:7; Luke 22:31.

⁸² Samuel Mather (211, 212). The month of "Abib" (signifying "Barley") roughly corresponds to the month of April.

for our Sins. [Isa. 53.5.] And His Members also, must expect like Ignatius, to bee ground, as a Meat-Offering, for the Entertainment of Heaven.⁸³

Secondly, There was Oyl. This was to bee mingled with the Flower. The Quantity is not expressed; but it was expected, there should bee a, Quantum sufficit.⁸⁴ This, in general, signified the Graces & Comforts of the Holy Spirit, which our Lord Jesus Christ Received without Measure. And something of this Oyl there should bee in all our Services.⁸⁵

| Thirdly, There was Frankincense. The Use of this was, to make a Sweet Perfume in the Air; when an Ill Savour might have arisen from some other Things. It figured the Acceptableness of Beleevers, & of their Services to God, thro' the Mediation & Intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ. [See Cant. 3.6. and Jer. 6.20.] There was no Frankincense, in the Sin-Offering, or in the Jealousy-Offering, because it was a Memorial for Sins, & not for Services. [6v]

Fourthly, Salt was another Ingredient. This was to teach, the Perpetuity of the New Covenant; and the Savoury Carriage & Walking, of those that converse with God in it.

The Summ is, Our Good Works, Anointed with the Spirit & Perfumed with the Intercession of our Lord, are accepted of God, thro' His unchangeable Faithfulness in His Covenant.⁸⁶

2. The Actions about the Meat-Offering. They were these.

The Meat-Offering must bee brought unto the Priests. It imports, That wee must make Use of Christ, in all our Services and Approaches unto God, & bee altogether voluntary in them.⁸⁷

Again, The Priest was to burn the Memorial of it upon the Altar, before the Lord.⁸⁸ Thus Heaven is putt in Remembrance of the Covenant with us, thro' our Lord. [Consider, Psal. 20.3. and Act. 10.4. and, Neh. 13.14, 22.]

Lastly, The Remnant was to bee the Priests; and to bee Eaten in the Sanctuary. Only the Meat-Offering of the Priests, might not bee Eaten, but was to bee all Burnt, for a whole Burnt-Offering. This pointed out unto us, a Participation of Christ, for all His Faithful People; For they are all an Holy, & a Royal Priesthood. [1. Pet.2.5, 9.] And they Feed on the Lord Jesus Christ, who is our Meat-Offering. [Joh. 6.33.] As the Meat-Offering was partly Burnt on the Altar, partly Eaten by the Priests: Thus our Lord, having offered up Himself, once for all, doth alwayes continue a Food, for the Faith of His People. The Maintenance of the Ministry also, is here again taught unto us: The Priests had something out of Every Offering.⁸⁹

3. The Ends of the Meat-Offering.

It was to bee an Offering made by Fire, of a Sweet Savour unto the Lord.⁹⁰

First, It figured the Expiation of Sin, both by the Active, and Passive Obedience of our Lord Jesus Christ. [See 1. Sam. 3.14.] Hence, when our Lord came, Hee caused, both Zebach, and Mincha, to cease; [Dan. 9.27.] both the Slain-Sacrifices, and the Meat-Offerings. It is said of the poor Mans Meat-Offering, [Lev. 5.11.] He shall make Atonement. And this may bee intended in the Apostles Limitation, [Heb. 9.22.] under the Law, almost all things were purged by Blood: For it was not alwayes done by Slain-Sacrifices, but sometimes by Meat-Offerings. In the Meat-Offerings there was an Adumbration of our Lords Active Obedience; For, It was His Meat to do the will of Him that sent Him.⁹¹ And then, of His Passive Obedience; For there was a destroying of Part of the Meat-Offering by Fire, & pouring it forth.

Secondly; It signified also the Persons of Beleevers; who thro' Christ are sanctified, for to bee a Pure Meat-Offering unto God. [Compare Isa. 66.20. with Rom. 15.16. And consider, Phil. 2.17. and 2. Tim. 4.6.]

Thirdly, And their Services, as well as their Persons. The Services of the Faithful are called, Fruits; [Phil. 1.6. & 4.17.] which were sometimes the Meat-Offering. Prayer is particularly a Mincha. [Psal. 141.2. and Mal. 1.10, 11.] And so is Praise. [Joel. 2.14.] Yea, And some Analogy to the Lords Supper appeareth in the Meat-Offering. It consisted of Bread and Wine; and the Priests eat of it. But then the Lords Supper is not a Sacrifice. Finally, Alms are an Evangelical Meat-Offering. [Heb. 13.16. and Phil. 4.17.]

Fourthly, The Acceptation both of our Persons and of our Services, was here also signified. [Phil. 4.17, 18.] Frankincense was therefore an Ingredient of the Meat-Offering. [See Hos. 9.4.]

4. The Additions forbidden unto the Meat-Offering.

In Fire-Offerings at the Brazen-Altar, both Leaven and Honey were forbidden. Leaven was indeed permitted in Thank-Offerings, and in the Offerings of the First-Fruits. Honey also is Numbred among the First-Fruits. But neither of these might come upon the Altar. Amos. 4.5. Offer by burning a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving with Leaven: But it is a Reproof and a Sarcasm upon the People, for doing so.⁹²

⁸⁹ Samuel Mather (214).

⁹⁰ Gen. 8:21; Exod. 29:18; Lev. 26:27, 31; Numb. 28:2, 6, 8, 13, 24, 27; Eph. 5:2.

⁹¹ John 4:34.

⁹² Samuel Mather (217, 218).

First, for Leaven, The Sowing, and Swelling and Spreading Property of it, is known to all the World. [Math. 13.33. Gal. 5.9.] A. Gellius tells us, The Roman Priest, must not, by their Canons, touch any Leavened Meal; and Plutarch assigns the Reason, Because Leaven comes from Corruption, & also causes Corruption where it comes.⁹³ The Prohibition of Leaven, teacheth us,

Orthodoxy in Faith. [Math. 16.6, 11.]

Sanctity of Life. [1. Cor. 5.6, 7, 8. A Discontented Mind, is called, A Leavened one. Psal. 73.21. A Malicious Man, is called, A Leavened one. Psal. 71.4.]

Sincerity of Heart. [Luk. 12.1, 2.]

Purity of Church-Communion. [1. Cor. 5.6]

Secondly, for Honey; from the Prohibition of it, wee may learn,

That God will bee worshipped according to His own Will. Inventions of our own, tho' sweet like Honey, are loathsome to Him.

That wee should maintain an Holy Equability of Spirit, in all Conditions and Vicissitudes. Neither too much of Sowreness nor too much of Pleasure.

That in our Lord Jesus Christ, our Meat-Offering, there is, tho' an inexpressible Sweetness, yett none such as you may bee taking too much of, none such as will Turn unto Loathing.⁹⁴

| 5. The Drink-Offering, which was an Appurtenance to the Meat-Offering. [7r]

This is not mentioned, as a Distinct Species in the Enumeration of the Offerings under the Law. [Lev. 7.37.] And altho' before the Law, wee read of Drink-Offerings alone; [Gen. 35.14.] yett after the Regulation & Reformation of the Offerings by Moses, wee read of no Drink-Offerings, but alwayes in Conjunction with the slain Sacrifices, to compleat the Meat-Offerings belonging unto them. [2. Chron. 29.35.]⁹⁵

The Matter of the Drink-Offering was Wine. Even Strong Wine. [Hos. 9.4.] Hence in Jothams Parable, Wine cheereth God; namely, in the Sacrifices. The Pagans fell into the horrible Corruption, of mingling Blood, in their Drink-Offerings. [Psal. 16.4.]

The Manner of the Drink-Offering, was by Pouring of it forth, before the Lord. [Num. 28.7.] Where? Probably, beside the Altar, where the Blood of the Slaughtered Sacrifices was poured forth. God permitted not their Drinking of it, lest it might have been an Occasion of Intemperance. Tis observable, There was no Piece of the Worship under the Law, wherein the People were commanded ⁹³ Both Aulus Gellius (Noctes Atticae 10.15.19) and Plutarch (Aetia Romana et Graeca (289, sec e, line 7 to sec. f, line 6) explain that the priest of Jupiter, "Flamen Dialis," is prohibited from touching "either flour or yeast," because when yeast is mixed into the dough, "the process of leavening seems to be a form of putrefaction" (Roman Questions, N° 109). (CBTEL: "Leaven").

⁹⁴ Samuel Mather (218, 219, 220).

⁹⁵ Samuel Mather (220, 221).

the Drinking of Wine: But it was indeed expressly prohibited unto them that went into the Sanctuary.⁹⁶

The Mystery of the Drink-Offering was doubtless considerable. Else the Psalmist would not have called it, [Psal. 116.13.] The Cup of Salvation.

Wine signified sometimes the Joyes of the Holy Spirit. [Consider, Psal. 104.15. with Eph. 5.18.]

Again, The Blood of the Saints, poured out, in the Cause of the Lord Jesus Christ, is compared unto a Drink-Offering. [Phil. 2.27. 2. Tim. 4.6.] And so in a much higher Sense as the Blood of our Lord Himself. The Meat and the Wine in the Meat-Offering, may therefore bee a Type of His Flesh and Blood.⁹⁷

6. The Occasions of the Meat-Offering.

Hereabouts, there hath been much Controversy or Inadvertency, among the Readers.

Wee are to note, That some Offerings, which were Meat-Offerings as to the Matter of them, yett came not under the Rule of the Meat-Offerings. There bee Three Instances.

The Wave-Sheaf.

The Two Wave-Loaves.

These were of the Fruits of the Earth, and there is agreed with the Meat-Offering. But they were not Offerings to bee Burnt, nor were they most Holy, to bee eaten by the Priest alone, in the Holy Place; and they were to bee made with Leaven. In all these things, they differed from the Meat-Offering.

And, The Jealousy-Offering.

This was not Fine Flower, but the Bran of Barley; the coarsest sort of Bread: And no Oyl, nor Frankincense, was in it. Nor was it for Expiation, but for Exploration.

But of the True Meat-Offerings, there were two Sorts.

There were Separate Meat-Offerings.

Of these there were Two signal Instances.⁹⁸

There was the Poor Mans Trespass-Offering; wherein the Demand of Cattel, was Dispensed withal, because of his Poverty. It was, The Tenth Part of an Ephah of fine Flower.

And, there was the Shew-bread; whereof an Handful of the Flower, was burnt, for the whole.

And, There were Meat-Offerings conjoined with other Offerings.⁹⁹

⁹⁶ Samuel Mather (221).

⁹⁷ Samuel Mather (222).

⁹⁸ Samuel Mather (223).

⁹⁹ 1 Pet. 2:21–23.

The Rule was; That they were conjoined with Burnt-Offerings of Cattel; and with Peace-Offerings; But not with, Burnt-Offerings of Fowle; nor with Sin-Offerings, nor with Trespass-Offerings.

Hence, as there was a Daily Burnt-Offering, so there was a Daily Meat-Offering. And sometimes, the Lord gave signal Testimonies of His Accepting it. [2. King. 3.9, 10, 20.]

It was also annexed unto the Wave-Offering, of the Sheaf of the First-Fruits.

And there was a Meat-Offering with the Feast of the Passeover, tho' not with the Paschal-Lamb. And in the Peculiar Case of the Cleansing of the Leper, there seems to bee a Meat-Offering annexed unto the Sin-Offering.¹⁰⁰

III. The Peace-Offering.¹⁰¹

This was a Sacrifice of Peace among all Parties. God, and the Priests, and the People, were all Partakers of it, as being all Agreed. It was Hilastical, and Eucharistical, and Euctical.¹⁰²

One End of it was, The Retribution of Peace enjoyed. [See Psal. 107.22.] Another End was, The Impetration of Peace Desired. [see Judg. 20.26.]¹⁰³

This was the Offering, whereof the People of God, often made Vowes in their Distress. [Psal. 56.12. Jon. 2.9.] The Tenth vow'd by Jacob unto God, was to bee a Peace-Offering. The Difference between a Vow, and a Free-Will-Offering was only This; In the Free-Will-Offering they did present the Thing itself unto the Lord, but in a Vow, they did only Promise it, not being yett in a Capacity to Perform it.

The Sacrifice of Peace-Offering, was often added under the Law, to other Sacrifices. Because, beside the Expiation of Sin, by the Sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ, there must bee an effectual Application of the Atonement, in a way of Actual Communion with God, and Grace and Peace thro' our Lord Jesus Christ.

Besides the Occasional Peace-Offering, there were more stated Seasons for this Offering, at the Consecration of the Priests, at the Expiration of a Nazaritical Vow, and in the Feast {of} the First-Fruits. It was very | particularly employ'd, [7v] at the Dedication of the Tabernacle, & of the Temple. As for the Passeover, it was a Peculiar Sacrifice by itself; and so was the Sacrifice for the Purification of the Leper.¹⁰⁴

The Matter of the Peace-Offering, was either of the Herd, or of the Flock. There was no Peace-Offering of Fowles; probably, because it was to bee Divided among so many; which a small Bird could not easily bee. It might bee either Male or Female: whereas, the Burnt-Offering was limited only to the Male.

Thus in the Spiritual State of the Church, there is neither Male nor Female. [Gal. 3.28.] Women are accepted in the Service of the Lord Jesus Christ; As one saies, *They are not excluded from His Love, and should not count themselves exempted from His Law.*¹⁰⁵

The Rites of the Peace-Offering, which were common with other Offerings, have been already Interpreted.

It must bee brought unto the Door of the Tabernacle. The Owner must lay his Hands on it. It must bee killed. The Blood must bee shed, & sprinkled, round about the Altar. And It must bee burnt upon the Altar.¹⁰⁶

But then, there were some Sacred Rites, peculiar to the Peace-Offering. Lett us here note.

First, The Peace-Offering was to bee Divided. All the Suett, and the Fatt of the Inwards, the Two Kidneyes, the Cawl upon the Liver, or the Midriff and all their Fatt; were to bee Burnt before the Lord. And in the Peace-Offering of Lambs, the whole Rump was added; which Pliny tells us, in the Sheep of those Countreyes was very Fatt and Great. Tho' some take it, as an Instruction, That there is not the meanest Part of the Creature, but God hath a Right unto it. This was Offered, (as tis read by some,) upon the Burnt-Offering; as being superadded, (with other Offerings) unto it. Wee learn from it, That wee are first for to bee Reconciled unto God, by the Death of His Son, Applied and Received by Faith, before any Oblation of ours, can bee Acceptable unto Him. This Part of the Peace-Offering, so sacrificed, is called, The Bread of God, and of the Altar; because the Fire of the Altar consumed it; As that of Divine Justice will do the Sinner.¹⁰⁷

Well; God and the Altar, being thus first Satisfied, the Rest of the Peace-Offering was Divided between the Priest and the Owner that brought it. The Priest was to have the Breast, and the Right Shoulder; the Owner was to have all the rest. The Priests Part, again teaches us, The Maintainance of the Evangelical Ministry.¹⁰⁸ But some have accommodated it a little more particularly. The Priests are to bee Breasts and Shoulders; that is to say, Counsellors and Supporters to the People. Or, the Breast was allow'd them, to note their Compassion, their Tenderness, their Bowels towards the People, and their Bearing them on their Hearts in their Prayers before the Lord: And the Shoulder, because of their Bearing the People, and Carrying them and their Sacrifices unto God.¹⁰⁹

¹⁰⁶ Samuel Mather (230).

¹⁰⁷ Samuel Mather (230, 231) refers to Pliny (8.72.187–190).

¹⁰⁸ On the topic of clerical maintenance, see Cotton Mather's Ratio Disciplinae Fratrum Nov-Anglorum (1726), pp. 19–22, and S. S. Green's Use of the Voluntary System in the Maintenance of the Ministers (1886).

¹⁰⁹ Samuel Mather (231, 232).

The Owners Part, his Friends partook with him in it. This was an Exercise of Communion, [1. Cor. 10.21.] wherein they Rejoiced before the Lord. [See Deut. 12.6, 7.] Wee should learn to enjoy all that wee have, in and for the Lord; and Rejoice also in Communion with Him, at His Table. Eating, the Peace-Off-fering, is Feeding upon the Lord Jesus Christ by Faith, and Holy Rejoicing in Him. The Benefits of the Lord Jesus Christ, are not communicated unto the Priests alone; they are for the People also. But the Unclean were very strictly excluded, from Eating the Peace-Off-fering, or so much as Touching it. It is a dangerous Thing for unworthy Persons, to participate in the Feasts of the Lord; they do it in their Uncleanness. [1. Cor. 11.27, 28, 29.] And as no Peace-Off-fering belonged unto the Unclean, so, There is no Peace, saith my God, unto the Wicked.¹¹⁰

You will here mind, That the Peace-Off-fering is not called, Most Holy, as the other Five Sorts are. The Reason may bee, Because Part of them were Eaten by the People.

Secondly. The Time, for Eating the Peace-Off-fering was limited. The Parts belonging to the Priest, & the Offerer, must be Eaten the Same Day, or the Next, at farthest; but if any were left unto the Third Day, it must bee Burnt with Fire. If it were a Peace-Off-fering, for Thanksgiving, it must bee Eaten the Same Day that it was offered: but if it were for a Vow, the Next might serve. To eat any of it afterwards, was abominable, and incurr'd Extermination.¹¹¹

This teaches us, That wee should make Hast, and use no Sinful Delays, in our beleiving on Christ, & our Obeying of God, & our Communion, with Him. [Heb. 3.12, 13, 15. Psal. 119.60.] Such a Rule there was about Eating the Passeover; Teaching us, to lay Hold on the Present Opportunities, and make a good Use of the Day of Peace, which when expired, Peace-Off-ferings will not bee accepted.

Moreover, why may it not have Respect unto the Day of our Lords Resurrection? This was the Third Day. On this Day, His Work and State of Humiliation, for the Redemption of Man, was Finished. Hee had now no more to do in a Way of Sacrifice and Peace-Off-fering for the Sins of Men. Memorable Things occur still, on the Third Day, in the Oracles of God. Isaac is then offered. [Gen. 22.4.] The Law is then Received. [Exod. 19.10, 11.] The Motion of the Ark is then Terminated. [Num. 10.33. and Josh. 1.11.] The Unclean is then Purified. [Num. 19.12.] Hezekiah then is Recove{re}d. [2. King. 29.5.] Compare Hos. 6.2. But the greatest of all the Dispensations on this Day, was the Resurrection of our Lord.¹¹²

Thirdly; With the Peace-Off-fering there was Leavened Bread also to bee offered. By this wee may see, Tis meerly the Will | of God, that renders any thing [8r]

110 Samuel Mather (232).

111 Samuel Mather (233).

112 Samuel Mather (234, 235).

to bee Good or Evil, in His Worship. Leaven in any other Offering, rendered it odious unto God; but if Hee required Leaven in the Peace-Offering, there it was pleasing unto Him. Honey forbidden in the other Sacrifices, was in the First-Fruits commanded.

Leaven sometimes is taken in a Good Sense; namely, for the spreading Efficacy of the Gospel and Spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ, on the Souls of Men. The joining of Leaven to the Peace-Offering, may thus intimate, the Leaven of Grace, wherewith our Services are to bee seasoned.

But Leaven sometimes is taken in an Evil Sense; namely, for Sinful Corruption. The Peace-Offering accepted with Leaven, thus intimates, That God accepts the Sincere Services of His People, tho' there bee a Mixture of Sinful Corruptions in them.

Or, if wee take Leaven for Sorrow; Sowre Leaven in the Feasts, may teach us, That in all worldly Joy, there will bee some Sorrow; there is no Prosperity so entire, but it hath some Affliction with it. Yea, Spiritual Joy, is accompanied with Godly Sorrow; and there should bee some of That in all our Thanksgiving.¹¹³

Fourthly; They might not Eat the Fat, but must give it wholly to the Lord. The Fat thus forbidden, was only the Fat that was to bee sacrificed; namely, the Suet, and the Fat of the Kidneyes. Of the other Fat, that was diffused thro' the rest of the Flesh, there was no Restriction. [See Neh. 8.10.] And it was meant only concerning the Three Kinds of Beasts, that were appointed for Sacrifice; for they were permitted the Fat of other Clean Beasts. [See Lev. 7.23, 25.]¹¹⁴

Now, as a Similitude, is Typus Arbitrarius, thus a Ceremony is, Typus Destinatus: The only Difference of a Ceremony, from a common Similitude, is the Destination of it by God, unto such an Use. Lett us go then, to the Allegorical Sense, that Fat ha's in the Scripture. There wee find Fat in a Good Sense; Namely, for the Best Things. [Psal. 63.5. Isa. 25.6. Gen. 45.18. Num. 18.12. Gen. 4.4.] Wee are here therefore Instructed, by the Lords Calling for the Fat, That wee must serve God with the Best wee have, the Best of our Time, of our Strength, of our Endeavours. And yet, when wee have brought our Best, it is not accepted for our own Sakes, but thro' the Lord Jesus Christ; The Fat of the Peace-Offering, was Burnt on the Altar, & on the Burnt-Offering, for a Sweet Savour unto the Lord. Wee find Fat in a Bad Sense also; Namely, for an Hard, Stupid, Senseless Heart. [Psal. 119.70. Deut. 32.15. Isa. 6.10.] Now the Fat being burnt on 113 Samuel Mather (235, 236). New England's Tenth Muse, the poet Anne Bradstreet (1612–1672), dwells on the same theme in her “Meditations Divine and Moral” (38): “Some children are hardly weaned; although the teat be rubbed with wormwood or mustard, they will either wipe it off, or else suck down sweet and bitter together. So it is with some Christians: let God embitter all the sweets of this life, that so they might feed upon more substantial food, yet they are so childishly sottish that they are still hugging and sucking their empty breasts, that God is forced to hedge up their way with thorns, or lay affliction on their loins, that so they might shake hands with the world before it bid them farewell” (Works 279).

114 Samuel Mather (236, 237).

the Altar, teaches us, That our Corruptions must bee Burnt up, by the Spirit of God; Even the Fat of the Inwards, the Liver, & the Kidneyes, which are the Seat of Concupiscence. Not only open Sins, but Inward Lusts, must bee mortified, and Burnt before the Lord. God searches the Heart, & the Reins.¹¹⁵

Fifthly; All Manner of Blood was forbidden. The Prohibition of Blood, unto Noah, seems to have been of Living Blood. But the Prohibition unto Moses, extends unto all Manner of Blood. Here are two Reasons [Lev. 17.11.] expressed for the Prohibition.

1. Because the Blood is the Life of the Beast. It is the Vehicle of the Spirits, the Chariot of the Soul. Cruelty is here forbidden. It renders Men Savage and Cruel, to drink Blood. Cruelty is abominable at all Times; especially when wee come with our Peace-Offerings before the Lord. Wee are then especially to Beware of Harshness towards our Bretheren. How can Men ready to Drink the Blood of their Brethren, expect Peace from God? A persecuting Spirit, is an abominable Spirit; Violence offered unto Conscience, is Drinking of Blood.

2. Because I have given you the Blood upon the Altar, to make Atonement for your Souls;¹¹⁶ That is Typically, as Representing the Blood of the Messiah, so that here is a Mystical Intimation of Reverence to that precious Blood, for to keep Men in a reverent Expectation of it. And as Drinking signifies Communion, so the Forbidding of Blood, may figuratively further Forbid, all ascribing & assuming to ourselves the Work of Redemption, which is only by the Blood of the Messiah. To take this unto ourselves, is as it were to Drink the Blood, which the Lord will not endure. Moreover, In the Prohibition of Blood, the Lord aimed at præserving His People from the Customes of the Heathen Idolatries.¹¹⁷

IV. The Sin-Offering.¹¹⁸

The Matter of this, was the same with the former Sacrifices; and the general End & Use the same, namely for Expiation; as tis at least Four Times mentioned in the Fourth Chapter of Leviticus. The Sacred Rites about it also were many of them, the same with those of the Burnt-Offering, & the Peace-Offering. It must bee brought unto the Door of the Tabernacle, the Offerer must lay his Hand upon it, it must bee Kill'd, and Burnt (at least Part of it) on the Altar. The Mysteries in these things have already been Illustrated. Wee are now therefore to touch upon only the more peculiar Points of the Sin-Offering.¹¹⁹

¹¹⁶ Lev. 17:11.

¹¹⁷ Samuel Mather (239, 240).

¹¹⁹ Samuel Mather, Figures or Types (244).

First. What was the Special Intention of it? Writers do not write clearly about it. But, the Sin-Offering may bee taken, either in a larger Sense as including the Trespass-Offering; or in a straiter Sense, as distinguisht from it. In the [8v] Larger Sense, the Sin-Offering extended unto any Sin | whatsoever, that was Pardonable; any Sinning but the Prasumptuous, for which the Law provided not a Sacrifice. But in the Straiter Sense, the Sin-Offering differed from the Trespass-Offering. The Sin-Offering was for Sins of Ignorance, of Infirmity, of greater Surprisal by Temptation. The Trespass-Offering was for Sins against Knowledge, and Crimes of a more grievous & heinous Nature; there being Sins against Knowledge, which yett are committed thro' such Inadvertency, & thro' such Violence of Temptation, that they do not amount unto Prasumptuous ones.¹²⁰

Secondly. The Matter of the Sin-Offering, was various, for Four Sorts of Persons.

The Sin-Offering for the Anointed Priest, was a Young Bullock. Probably, all the Priests are included under this Title, & the Word, Anointed, intends no more than Dedicated, or, Consecrated. What else would have become of the Inferiour Priests?

The Sin-Offering for the whole Congregation was a Young Bullock. The same that was appointed for the Priest. Tho' in that, the Priest, but in This, the Elders, as in the Name of the People, were to lay their Hands on the Head of the Sacrifice.

The Sin-Offering for the Ruler, was a Kid, a Male. All Civil Rulers were concerned in it.

For any of the Common People, the Sin-Offering was, a Kid, a Female, or, a Lamb, a Female.¹²¹

Behold here; The Anointed Priest may Err. And therefore, why not the Pope? A Sinful Creature, whose Leprosy is written in his forehead & who by the Noise of his Nephewes in all Gazets declares his Sin, like Sodom.¹²²

Wee see likewise, That there are Degrees of Sin. It was a Mistake of the Stoicks, That Peccata sunt equalia.¹²³

The Blood of the Sin-Offering for the Priest and the Congregation, was to bee sprinkled before the Vail, & upon the Altar of Incense. That for the Ruler, & for Private Persons, was only sprinkled upon the Altar of Burnt-Offering. The former Sins were more heinous, & required a more solemn Atonement. And ¹²⁰ Samuel Mather (244–45).

¹²¹ Samuel Mather (247, 248).

it is here particularly observable, That the Priest must have as great a Sacrifice for a Sin-Offering, as the whole Congregation. The Sins of a Minister, are greater than the Sins of other Men. If the Minister fall into filthy Wantonness, or beastly Drunkenness, or scandalous Coveteousness, wee are on those doleful Occasions, to Humble ourselves, as if the whole Congregation were become thus abominable before the Lord. But how much then ought they themselves, that have brought the Congregation Low, ly very Low, & call upon the Congregation, Calcate me insipidum falsum calcite me.¹²⁴

Wee see again, That the whole Church may Err. The Church of the Jewes did so, when they crucified the Churches Lord. And the Church of Rome, is become an Harlot, a Babel.

Wee see further, That Elders, and Publick Persons, are to act for the People. The Elders were to lay their Hands upon the Peoples Offering. Their Acts involves the People. And therein wee see a Reason, why God sends Calamities on a People, for the Sins of the Rulers.¹²⁵

Thirdly, The Blood of the Sin-Offering was to bee, in a Threefold Manner disposed of.

The Priest was to dip his Finger in the Blood, and Sprinkle it seven Times before the Lord; that is, before the Vail of the Sanctuary towards the Holy of Holies. Indeed, on the Great Day of Expiation, hee was to sprinkle it Within the Vail; but at other Times only Towards the Vail. This might bee to Teach us, That there is no Entrance into Heaven, but by the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ effectually applied. [Heb. 9.11, 12, 24, 25, 26. Heb. 10.19, 20. Eph. 1.14.] And that there is a Perfect Cleansing obtained by the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ; for Seven is a Number of Perfection, & often therefore used in the Divine Mysteries. [Heb. 9.13, 14. Heb. 10.14.] And this further, That the Action of Sprinkling may bee significative enough, of the Vertue in the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ.¹²⁶

Another Part of the Blood, was to bee putt upon the Horns, of the Golden Altar of Incense. This was used only in the Sin-Offering of Bullocks; In that of Lambs or Kids, it was only poured & sprinkled on the Brazen Altar. The Instruction herein was this; That the Intercession of our Lord Jesus Christ, is founded in the Satisfaction of His Blood. Our Lord, above with Incense of His Intercession concern'd for us, hath carried Mention and Merit of His of His Blood thither with Him.¹²⁷

The rest of the Blood was to bee poured forth as the Bottom of the Altar of Burnt-Offering. Truly, The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, hath been poured forth; Tis said, Hee hath poured out His Soul unto Death, when Circumcised,

¹²⁴ The Latin citation (not included in Figures and Types) is supplied by Cotton Mather and can be Englished, "Trample me, foolish and false, under foot, tread on my deceit."

¹²⁷ Samuel Mather (253).

when Buffeted in His Agony, when Scourged with Thongs, when Crowned with Thorns, when Fastned with Iron unto a Tree, when Pierced with a Spear, in all these, His precious Blood was Poured forth. But the Efficacy of this Blood, that which renders it so precious, is Its nearness to the Altar. Our Lords Deity is that Altar, from which the Vertue of His Blood arises. Were not the Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, at the Bottom of that Altar, it would have no Vertue, & small Value in it.¹²⁸

- [9r] | Fourthly, The Sin-Offering was to bee Burned; the Inwards of it, on the Altar; all the whole Carcase beside, in a clean Place without the Camp, or, without the City-Gates. Only the Burning of the Sin-Offering of the Sheep or Goat, thus abroad, was not Required; It was required only for the Bullock, whose Blood was carried into the Tabernacle for Atonement. Thus The Wrath of God, like a Formidable Fire, siezed on our Lord Jesus Christ; It was a Fiery Trial that came upon Him: His very Inwards were all on a Light Fire under the Wrath of the Most High. This horrid Fire cast all His Inwards into such an Anguish, as caused a Bloody Sweat upon Him. Then was our Lord carried forth, without the Gates of the City: Tis said, They carried Him out of Jerusalem, to Golgotha. [See the Apostle at large explaining this Matter, in Heb. 13.11, 12, 13, 14.] And as the Carrying of our Lord forth, was a Part of the Reproach cast upon Him; even so, wee should bee willing to undergo Reproach with Him, and for Him. If wee cannot bear to bee Reproached, as Hereticks, and Fanaticks, and Schismaticks, and Enemies to Cesar, wee refuse to go forth unto our Lord, without the Camp, bearing His Reproach. But whereas, hee that performed this Ministration about the Sin-Offering, was to bee unclean until the Evening, it show'd the Imperfection of the Levitical Services; the Priests themselves, that præpared the Means of Sanctification for the Church, were themselves polluted in præparing of them. This also teaches us, That there is an Iniquity even in our most Holy Things; our best Services have Defilements in them. Lava meas Lachrymas, Domine.¹²⁹

Fifthly, The Sin-Offering, (for the Ruler, & the Private Person,) had these Rules about it.

The Priests were to Eat it in the Holy Place. [Compare, Lev. 10.19, 20.] The Priest thus Typically bore the Iniquity of the Sinner, and abolished it. It intimated our Communion with the Lord Jesus Christ, our Sin-Offering, whom wee by Faith feed upon.

Again, whoever touch'd the Flesh thereof was to bee Holy. This Teaches us, the Holiness that should bee in them, who have any thing to do with the Lord Jesus Christ.

¹²⁸ Samuel Mather (254).

¹²⁹ Samuel Mather (254, 255, 256). The Latin passage, which in Samuel Mather's original reads "Lava lachrymas meas, Domine" (p. 457) suggests, "Wash away my tears, O Lord."

Finally, The Vessel wherein it was boiled was to bee cleansed, by Rinsing it with Water, or by Breaking it in Peeces. The Earthen Vessels were to bee Broken, for they were not costly. The more Costly Vessels were to bee Rinsed. Out of this, wee may spell the Deep Defilement & Contagion of Sin.

Wee find Men, both Bad and Good, compared unto Earthen Vessels. The former shall bee Broken, that is to say, Destroy'd, by the Vengeance of God. [Jer. 19.11. Psal. 2.9. Jer. 48.38.] The latter, are Broken, into a Contrition of Heart, thro' Godly Sorrow for Sin; and when Broken by Death, shall have their Sin all extinguished.¹³⁰

V. The Trespass-Offering.¹³¹

This points at our Lord Jesus Christ, who is expressly called, Isa. 53.10. the Trespass-Offering.

It was in Diverse Manners præscribed for Diverse Cases.

First. There was the Case, of a Mans concealing his Knowledge, when called to bear his Testimony: This teaches us, That a Man may bring upon himself the Guilt, of other Mens Sins, by concealing them.¹³²

And, There was the Case of Ceremonial Uncleaness; when a Man knew it not, & much more when hee did know it. This teaches us, that wee are to seek Pardon for Secret Sins; And that as soon as ever God convinces the Conscience of any Defilement contracted by Sin, a Man must make Hast, in a more explicit Repentance.

And, There was the Case of Swearing to do an unlawful Thing; like Dauids Vow, and Jephthahs, and Herods.¹³³

The Remedy in these Cases, was, The Confession of the Sin, with a Trespass-Offering. The Trespass-Offering must bee, A Lamb or a Kid, a Female. But if a Man were not able to compass these, it was to bee Two Turtle-Doves, or, Two Young Pigeons: the one a Sin-Offering, for the peculiar Sin that burdened his Conscience; the other a Burnt-Offering, for all his Sins in general. Thus the Lord graciously condescends unto the necessities of His poor People. For, Lastly, if a ¹³⁰ Samuel Mather (256, 257). See also Maimonides, Hilchot Ma'aseh HaKorbanot (8.11), in Mishneh Torah (29:418).

¹³¹ The following paragraphs are extracted from Samuel Mather's "The Gospel of the Trespass-Offering," a sermon preached on Aug. 27th and Sept. 6th, 1668, in Figures or Types (1705), pp. 259–70.

¹³² Samuel Mather, Figures or Types (259).

¹³³ Samuel Mather (260). David vowed to "finde out a place of the Lord: an habitation for the mightie God of Jacob," i. e., to build God a permanent Temple (Psal. 132:2–6). According to Judg. 11:30–39, Jephthah vowed that in exchange for giving the Ammonites into his hands, he would offer up as a burned offering whatever would come out of his house to meet him. It turned out to be his own daughter. Charmed by the alluring gyrations of Salome, Herodias's daughter, Herod Antipas vowed to grant Salome "Whatsoever thou shalt aske of me, I will give it thee, unto the halfe of my kingdome." She required the Baptist's head (Mark 6:21–28).

Man were not able to compass this then hee was to bring, the Tenth Part of an Ephah of Fine Flower.¹³⁴

Secondly, There was the Case of Trespassing Ignorantly against the Holy Things of the Lord; or the Thins Dedicated unto the Lord, e. g. They might not Eat within their private Gates, the Tythe of their Corn, Wine, Oyl; They were to Sanctify all the Firstling Males.¹³⁵

The Remedy in this Case, was, A Ram for a Trespass-Offering; and Restitution with the Addition of a Fifth Part.¹³⁶

Thirdly. There was the Case of Sins that never came to bee certainly known. The Remedy in this Case, was, Hee shall bring a Ram.

Fourthly, There was the Case of horrible Scandals; In Injustice and Robbery; In Violence and Oppression; In lying Deceit; And, In Perjury.

The Remedy in this Case was, Restitution. For, Non remittitur peccatum, nisi restituitur Ablatum.¹³⁷ And, The Addition of a Fifth Part, which the Sinner was himself to render of his own Accord, from his own Conscience; The Magistrate being able to demand no more than Fourfold. And finally, A Ram for a Trespass-Offering.¹³⁸

[9v] | Behold Encouragement for the greatest Sinners, to come unto the Lord Jesus Christ!

Thus wee have Illustrated, the Five Sorts of Sacrifices, described and prescribed, in the Beginning of Leviticus.

There was a Sixth; namely, The Offering of Consecrations: whereof there is mention in another Place.

But were there no Offerings besides those of Atonement? Yes; The Offerings at the Brasen Altar, were of Two Sorts; Holiness of Holiness, and, Holiness of Praises; or, Sacrifices of Atonement, and of Thanksgiving.

The Latter, were not made by Fire, as the others were. And there were Two Sorts of them; The Heave-Offering, and the Wave-Offering.

In the Offering of Consecrations, wee find, the Shoulder, and Heave-Offering, and the Breast, a Wave-Offering. [Exod. 29.24, 26, 27. See also, Lev. 7.34.] Wee also read of a Wave-sheaf of the First-fruits of the Harvest, on the Morrow after the Sabbath of the Passeover; And fifty dayes after, at the Feast of Pentecost, they were to offer Two Wave-Loaves.

¹³⁴ Lev. 5:11.

¹³⁵ Exod. 13:2, 12; Deut. 15:19.

¹³⁶ Samuel Mather (261, 262).

¹³⁷ Lat. "The sin is not forgiven, unless restitution is made." Samuel Mather (262) offers a slightly different version from the one supplied by his Boston nephew: "non remittitur furtum, nisi restituatur ablatum: The Theft is not forgiven, without Restitution."

¹³⁸ Samuel Mather (262).

Waving, was Moving to and fro round about, unto the Four Points of the Compass.

Heaving, was Lifting up towards Heaven. The Design of these Actions, was to express the Dedication of the Objects unto the Lord. [Num. 8.11.]

The Original Word for Waving, sometimes is used, for Sifting in a Sieve. [Isa. 30.28.] It may signify Afflictions. [Luk. 22.31. See also, Isa. 10.32. and 13.2. and 30.28.] And so, some think, tis here intimated, That Christians, and especially Ministers, are Priests consecrated unto the Lord, thro' Sufferings. [Heb. 2.10. and 2. Cor. 6.4, 10.]

But the great Meaning of the Heave-Offering, and the Wave-Offering, was, that with a Thankful Spirit, wee should give up ourselves, with all that wee have, unto the Lord.¹³⁹

Q. Lett us have the Sense of Antiquity, upon the ancient Sacrifices?

A. Munster, a Gentleman singularly well acquainted with Hebrew Antiquity, ha's this notable Passage;

*Finis præcipuus Sacrificiorum fuit, ut homines grati essent Deo Misericordi pro proximo illo Beneficio, quod expectabatur per Christum exhibendum, in Quem omnia Sacrificia Legis respiciebant. Et parentes Spiritu Sancto pleni et illuminati cognitione Venturi Christi, hanc ipsam spem Liberationis filijs suis proponebant, et hortabantur eos ad gratitudinem Deo præstandam, fungentes Officio Sacerdotum, non tantum scilicet alentes liberos suos, et instituentes ad presentem Vitam, sed et solliciti existentes de salute animarum ipsorum, monentes ut à peccato caverent, in Timore Dei ut Viverent, et ejus benignitate se consolarentur, futurum ut post hanc vitam longè meliorem inveniant.*¹⁴⁰

I will add,

Another Passage of Munster, if you please, on this Occasion?

¹³⁹ Samuel Mather, "The Gospel of the Offerings and Sacrifices," preached on Sept. 10th, 1668, in Figures or Types (1705), pp. 271, 274, 275,

In his Notes on the first Chapter of Leviticus, he has these memorable Words; *Fuit apud veteres, oblatio Holocausti, concio quædam de morte Christi, quâ nos a peccatis, per Fidem, purgati sumus.*¹⁴¹

¹⁴¹ Münster's Hebraica Biblia (1546), fol. 197 [misnumbered as 297], annot. (c): "There was among the ancients an oblation of the whole burnt offering, which foreshadowed the death of Christ, by which we have been purged of our sins, by faith."

Q. What Remark to be made upon, the Meat-Offering, being of a sweet Savour unto the Lord? v. 2.

A. There being the very same said of this that had been said of the foregoing, which were vastly more chargeable. [ch. 1.9, 13, 17.] Procopius Gazæus made this Observation; True Piety is not demonstrated by Greatness of its Presents. The Way of Piety is open & easy unto all; For Gods Commandment is exceeding Broad. And he that makes the *smallest Signification of it, if it be Sincere, differs nothing from him, who shoves it by the largest Gifts.*¹

Q. We read of, A Meat-Offering baken in a Pan. What sort of a Pan? v. 5.

A. A Flatt Plate. Maimonides tell us, This was the Difference, between Maccabath (which is the Hebrew Word in this Place,) and Marchesheth; that the former was a Pan or Plate, without any Rim about; and the other had one, as our Frying-Pans have. And Abarbinel observes, out of Jarchi, That there was a Vessel in the Temple, which was only flat and broad, but had no Rising on the Sides of it; so that the Oil being poured upon it, when it was sett on the Fire, did run down and increase the Flame, and harden the Cake.²

Q. Both Leven and Honey, excluded from the Offering? v. 11.

A. Leven, {I} suppose, for its excessive Soureness; Honey, for its excessive Sweetness.

Our Aynsworth saies, Tis to shew, that in the Saints, there should neither be Extremity of Grief, nor of Pleasure, but a Mediocrity.³

1 Simon Patrick (Leviticus 23–24) paraphrases Procopius Gazæus's commentary on Exod. 1:9–17 [PG 087. 699–700].

2 Patrick, on Lev. 2:5 (Leviticus 25); In Hilchot Ma'aseh HaKorbanot (13.7), in Mishneh Torah (29:466–68), Maimonides distinguishes between the two types of frying-pans. Abarbanel on Rashi in Commentarius in Pentateuchum Mosis, and Rashi on Lev. 2:5, 7. See also JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot (3:15).

Q. Why no Leaven to be in any Meat-Offering, Part whereof was offered on the Altar of God? For No Part of the Leavened Bread offered in Eucharistical Sacrifices, [Lev. 7.13.] nor the Two Loaves offered in the Feast of Pentecost [which are mistaken by some, to be an Exception unto this Præcept,] were offered on the Altar, but given entirely to the Priests, as their Portion? v. 11.

A. Both Jewish and Christian Writers, give many moral Reasons for it. Unto all which may be added, what Maimonides gives; That God would thus root out the Idolatrous Customes of the Zabians; who offered unto their Gods, no Bread, but what was Leavened. And then, what Abarbinel adds; who thinks, Leaven was forbidden, because it would have made a Delay, if they had waited at the Tabernacle, until the Fermentation was perfected.⁵

Q. The Reason of that Prohibition, No Honey, in any Offering of the Lord, made by Fire? v. 11.⁶

A. It was not, as old Plutarch saies, in his Symposiacs; Because the Jewes worshipped Bacchus, & the Joining of Honey to the Wine accompanying their Sacrifices, would, by its hard Qualities, have offended him.⁷ For Ovid, & Horace rather tell us,

– Baccho mella reperta ferunt

and,

*Forti miscebat mella Falerno.*⁸

⁴ Mather mistakenly uses the same numeral twice (see Lev. 2:5, above) to indicate the sequential order of his entries.

⁶ The following paragraphs – including the references to, and citations from, classical sources – are adapted from John Spencer’s De Legibus (1685), lib 2, cap. 9, sec. 1, fols. 309–10.

⁸ Spencer (309) has Ovid chime in that “honey was discovered by Bacchus” (Fasti 3.736) and Horace confirm that unwisely “[Aufidius] used to mix his honey with strong Falernian [wine]” (Satires 2.4.24).

Nor will we produce the Allegorizers of this Law, who, after Theodoret, inform us, διὰ τοῦ μέλιτος, τὴν ἡδονὴν ἀπαγορεύεσθαι, That Pleasure is under the Name of Honey here forbidden; and after Jerom, Quia nihil voluptuosum, nihil tantum suave, apud Deum placet; nihil nisi quod in se habet mordacis aliquid Veritatis.⁹

But the true Reason, may be fetch'd from these Considerations.

The Ancient Idolaters, in their Sacrifices, had Respect unto the Palates of their Gods; & for that Cause Maimonides tells us, Victimas suas melle inungebant. Thus, none of their Idols went without Sacrificed Honey. [Ezek. 16.18, 19.] Pausanias finds the whole Fifty Altars in the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, thus furnished. And the Author of the Hymn to Mercury, calls Honey, Θεῶν ἡδείαν ἔδωδῆν, the Sweet-meat of the Gods. And the Mouse in the Batrachomyomachia brings of his Honey, – τὸ καὶ μάκαρες ποθέουσιν, The Gods desire it. Now to confute such a mean Opinion of the Deitie, the Lord will have μελισπονδα, Mellite Matters, banished from His Altars.¹⁰

Moreover, Among many of the Pagans, Honey was an Offering peculiar, to their Dii Inferi, their Dead Hero's; they had a Mixture of Honey, Milk, & Wine, which they called, Χοῆ, described in Euripides, and Æschylus, for these inferiour sort of Gods.¹¹ It would be too long, to recite the Testimonies of Antiquitie to this Purpose; but these, μελίγματα, were the Placations Dedicated unto Orpheus; the Infernal Gods were μελίχιοι θεοί: the souls of the Dead, were μέλισσαι: and 9 Mather provides his own translation from Theodoret of Cyrus's Quaestiones in Octateuchum (Questiones in Leviticum, Qu. I, p. 157, line 21; Questions on the Octateuch 2:13) and enlists St. Jerome seemingly to confirm the proscription against honey (Lev. 2:11), in his "Epistola XXXI. Ad Eustochium. De Munusculis" (1) [PL 022. 0445] on the grounds that "nothing that is simply pleasurable or merely sweet can please God. Everything must have in it a sharp seasoning of truth" ("Letter XXXI," in NPNFii 6:45). If Philo Judaeus is trustworthy on this account (De specialibus legibus 1.291, 292), then honey is to be excluded because the honey bee is considered unclean, "inasmuch as it derives its birth, as the story goes, from the putrefaction and corruption of dead oxen, just as wasps spring from the bodies of horses. Or else this may be forbidden as a figurative declaration that all superfluous pleasure is unholy, making, indeed, the things which are eaten sweet to the taste, but inflicting bitter pains difficult to be cured at a subsequent period, by which the soul must of necessity be agitated and thrown into confusion, not being able to settle on any sure resting place" (Works 562).

10 Samuel Bochart, Hierozaicon (1663), pars 2, lib. 4, cap. 12, cols. 517–33; Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 2, cap. 9, sec. 2, fol. 310. Patrick, on Lev. 2:11 (Leviticus 28). Maimonides, More Nebuchim (1628), pars 3, cap. 46, p. 481, tells us that the Zabian idolaters "seasoned their sacrifices with honey" (Guide 3.46.582); Pausanias (Graeciae descriptio 5.15.10, lines 2–3) has none of the gods miss out on their mellifluous treats; the singer of the Hymni Homerici, In Mercurium (line 562), chants, Θεῶν ἡδείαν ἔδωδῆν, that "the gods' sweet food" inspires their imagination. Engaged in a mock-battle with frogs the Batrachomyomachia mouse tweets, "and the happy gods crave it [honey]" (Batrachomyomachia, line 39). But unlike Plutarch's bibulous deities who are hooked on "drink-offerings of honey" and a concoction of "honey, wine, [and] raisins" with a pinch of thirteen other ingredients (Quaestiones convivales 2.464c, 672b, line 10; Iside et Osiride 383e, lines 1–2), the Lord God of Moses will have none of it, i. e., take nothing sweetened with honey.

Q. Why is it said, Neither shalt thou suffer the Salt of the Covenant of thy God, to be lacking from thy Meat-Offerings? v. 13.

A. As Men of old, made their Covenants by Eating & by Drinking together; (and Salt was never wanting at their Tables;) Thus God, by the Sacrifices, and the Feasts upon them, did ratify His Covenant, with those who partook therein. Salt itself, being a concomitant of all Feasts, the ancients counted it, A Symbol of Friendship, and used the proverbial Expression accordingly. The Salt used in Offerings to God, is therefore called, The Salt of the Covenant. And this explains the Passages, whereabout some have more vainly laboured, in which the Words are inverted [Num. 18.19. & 2. Chron. 13.5.] A Covenant of Salt.¹⁴

The Heathen did not use any Salt in their Sacrifices. Therefore, saies Maimonides, God commanded us with great Seriousness, to use Salt in all our Sacrifices; That is, as R. Levi of Barcelona explains it, The Flesh of all Sacrifices was to be Salted, and the Meal of all Mincha's. Abarbinel as well as he, gives two Reason; First, because nothing is grateful to the Palate without Salt, it was of importance that the Sacrifice should be so to God. And then Salt præserves things from Corruption, as the Sacrifices did their Souls from Destruction.¹⁵ The Heathen, in after Ages, did learn of Moses, to have Salt, in all their Sacrifices; as Ovid and Pliny have informed us. No Sacrifices were offered, Sine molâ salsa, or those which the Greeks called οὐλᾶς and οὐλοχύτας. The Salt among the Jewes, was not brought by him who offered the Sacrifice, but was provided at the Publick Charge; there being a Chamber in the Court of the Temple, called, The Chamber of Salt: (one of the Three Rooms on the North Side of the Court:) where the Flesh of the Sacrifices was powdered, as the Meal of the Minchas was at the Altar. If the Priest neglected it, he was Beaten, for his Neglect.¹⁶ covenant of expiation. Once a man has brought an offering, knowing that he is clean, he makes sure not to soil himself with sin again, just as one who puts on freshly laundered clothes is careful not to dirt them" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:16–17).

¹⁶ Ovid (Fasti 1.128, 335) and Pliny (Naturalis historia 31.41.89) testify to the proof of the pudding that no sacrifices be offered "without salted meal." To be sure, Homer adds to the recipe a generous sprinkling of οὐλᾶς and οὐλοχύτας, i. e., "barley grains" (Odyssey 3.441, 3.445, 447; Iliad 2.410, 421). The rabbis of מסכת מידות [Masseket Middoth]. Hoc est. Talmudis Babylonici Codex Middoth sive De Mensuris Templi (1630), cap. 5, sec. 2, p. 173, and L'Empereur (pp. 173–77), mention the chamber of salt in the Temple. Finally, the learned John Selden devotes a whole chapter to the penalties for various infractions and allots a sound flagellation for offering propitiation without salt (De Synedriis [1653], lib. 2, cap. 13, sec. 8, § 45, p. 549). See also Lev. 2:13 and Maimonides (Guide 3.46.582).

Q. Why were the Peace-Offerings called so? v. 1.

A. Abarbinel saies, Because they made (or, say rather, They show'd, and seal'd,) Peace, between the Altar, the Priest, & the Owner. But Patrick thinks, the best Account given of it, is, Because, Peace in their Language, signifyes Happiness, and Prosperity, and these were thankful Acknowledgments of what Prosperity they had received from the Bounty of God. And the Laying on of the Hands, by the Owner, (or by the Heir of him who had vow'd it, and died before he had performed his Vow,) was, with an Acknowledging of the Mercies, that were the Occasion of it. Thus Conradus Pellicanus glosses upon it: Laying on of Hands, signifies Devotion and Faith, with Acknowledgment of the Divine Benefits. In this action every Man was bound alwayes to turn his Face towards the Sanctuary; making his Acknowledgments to the Divine Majesty in that Posture.¹

Q. Why no Birds allow'd for Peace-Offerings? [v. 6.]

A. Because Peace-Offerings being to be divided between, God, the Priest, & him that brought them, the Portion of each would have been so small, that it would have made the Feast upon it so very Meagre and Jejune, that it would have been contemptible.²

¹ Patrick on Lev. 3:4 (Leviticus 34–36); Abarbanel's exordium on the "Zebach shelamim" (peace offering) appears in the preface to Leviticus, in his Commentarius in Pentateuchum Mosis: Vayikra (1710). Rashbam is most explicit: "More accurately, this is 'a sacrifice of fulfillment.' This is not a burnt offering, so it is not entirely consumed on the altar. It is simply an otherwise unspecified offering, falling under the category of 'He vowed and must fulfill his vow.' In such cases, the procedure to be followed is as described in this chapter. ... For everyone's well-being is increased by such a sacrifice: the sacrificial parts go to the One on high, the breast and thigh to the priest, and the rest of the meat is eaten by the one who brought the sacrifice" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:18). Conradus Pellicanus (1478–1556), professor of Greek, Hebrew, and the Old Testament at the University of Zürich, glosses in his commentary on Lev. 1:4, in Commentaria Bibliorum, id est XXIII. Canonorum Veteris Testamenti librorum (1536), 1:120, "Impositio manuum devotionem significat & fidem, cum agnitione beneficij divini, quo non de suo quicquam offerre potest, sed referre potius & reddere accepta, ut gratiarum actionem intelligamus esse maximam hostiarum nostrarum, & insuper agnitionem nostrorum peccatorum, pro quibus satisfacere per nosipsos non possumus, sed alium de iustificationem aucupari, nempe per sacrificium crucifixi Christi domini, per hoc legis sacrificia significati. Non enim quaecunque sacrificia offerentium placant sine fide & devotione mentis in dominum." Mather provides the gist of Pellican's gloss (above).

Q. Was not the Prohibition hard upon the Jewes, To Eat no Fat? v. 17.

A. The Jewes were forbidden to Eat Fat. But what Fat? Not the Fat, which is mingled with the Body of the Flesh. The Prohibition reached only to that Fat, which is called, The Lords. As here, The Fat which is upon the Two Kidneyes, the Caul, & all the Fat of the Inwards, the Priest shall Burn upon the Altar; All that Fat is the Lords. And it seems as if it chiefly, if not only meant, the Fat of such Beasts, as were used in Sacrifice. Elsewhere in Leviticus, the Prohibition seems limited, unto the Fat of Beasts that were torn to Peeeces, or dyed of themselves, or were offered in Sacrifice.³

Q. What were the more notable Qualifications of, The Sins of Ignorance, for which a Sacrifice was appointed? v. 2.

A. Besides its being Ignorantly committed, it was (as the Jewes note) a Sin against a Negative Præcept; or, [Concerning those things which ought not to be done.] As for the things that ought to be done, they might be performed some other Time, when Men had better bethought themselves; which was more acceptable to God, than offering a Sacrifice for the Omission. It was also, a Fact committed; not a meer Word or Thought. [And shall do against any of them.] As for the Sins which Men might imprudently committ in Word and Thought, they were so many, that no Flocks or Herds could have sufficed for their Expiation, & no Altars could have contained the Sacrifices.¹

Q. What may be intended in that Expression, If the Priest that is anointed, do Sin according to the Sin of the People? v. 3.²

A. The Chapter treats only about Sins of Ignorance; And what we have translated, If the Priest Sin according to the Sin of the People, should be translated, If the Priest Sin to the Sin, (or Guilt) of the People; That is to say, To make them Sinful or Guilty; (or, to Cause them to Sin, as tis well rendred by the LXX) by giving them a Matter of Offence, either by Doctrine or Exemple, as Tremelius explains it. This, tho' it be done out of Ignorance, requires a greater Offering, than is ordered for the People, or for the Ruler. Even Ignorance in a Priest, is more culpable, than in all the World beside.³

Because it runs, If he Sin to the Guilt of the People (or, to the making them guilty,) R. Solomon interprets it, If he hide any thing from the People, whereby they may err. Jerom gives the Words this Version, Delinquere faciens populum.⁴ To this Purpose, Vatablus, and Piscator, and the Tigurin Version, & others, more than there is any need of now repeting. Castellio reads it, Si deliquerit in noxiam Populi. – And explains it, By whose Fault the People may be made Guilty: as the Disease of the Head may reach the Body.⁵

1 Patrick (Leviticus 34–35). In Hilchot Ma'aseh HaKorbanot, in Mishneh Torah (29:352 ff), Maimonides lists ten positive and thirteen negative mitzvot, which regulate the dos and don'ts of the sacrificial procedures.

The Lord often complains of the Priests & Prophets, as undoing the People by their Sin. Their Sin, as Dr. Gell observes, is, peccatum pecans, a Brooding Sin.⁶

Q. A further Stroke, if you please, about, Laying the Hand on the Head of the Sacrifice? v. 4.

A. There is a Good Gloss upon it, in that very Ill Book, entituled, Nitzachon; – *When a Man sacrificed a Beast, he was to think in his Mind, I am more a Beast, than this here present. For I have Sinned, and for the Sins I have committed, I offer this. But it were more just, that he who hath Sinned, should suffer Death, than this Beast. Therefore thus a Man, by the help of this Sacrifice, began to Repent.*⁷

5 Franciscus Vatablus, though listing Jerome's translation as one of several possibilities in a parallel column of his Biblia Sacra, cum Duplici Translatione (1584), fol. 63^r, renders it, "Si sacerdos qui unctus est peccaverit, delinquere faciens populum" or "if the priest who anoints the sacrifice makes a mistake he harms the people." Similarly, the distinguished French theologian Sebastian Castellio, aka. Castalionis (1515–63) offers, "Si pontifex unctus deliquerit in noxiam populi," or "if the high priest fails in his duty to add oil [it is] unto the injury of the people," in Biblia Interprete Sebastiano Castalione (1556), col. 106. Mather's source – Robert Gell's Essay – rephrases the excerpt from Vatablus and Castellio in summary fashion: "in delicto populi" ("in accordance with the people's fault"). Johannes Piscator, in his Commentariorum in Omnes Libros Veteris Testamenti Tomus Primus (1646), fol. 257, tenders the equivalent of "unto the guilt of the people" (Scholia in cap. IV). The "Tigurin Version," aka. Biblia Sacrosancta Testamenti Veteris & Novi (Tiguri, 1543), a Latin translation by the Swiss Reformer Leo Jud (1482–1542), and continued upon his death by the Reformed theologians Theodor Bibliander (1509–64), Rudolf Gwalther (1519–86), and Konrad Pellikan (1478–1556), was the first "Reformed" Bible. It became known as the Tigurin Bible or Tigurin Version because it was published in Tiguri, the Latin place name for Zurich (CBTEL, BBK). At any rate, the Tigurin Version on Lev. 4:3 reads, "ad delictum populi" (fol. 45^v), "to the fault of the people." See also Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:520) and Works (6:63–64), and John Selden's De Synedriis (1653), lib. 2, cap. 16, sec. 14, pp. 652–54.

6 Gell (247).

7 Patrick (Leviticus 37) supplies Mather with the translated excerpt from the ספר נצחון ישן נושן [Sepher Nizzachon Yashan] Liber Nizzachon Vetus, an anonymous Jewish polemic (13th c.) often misattributed to Yom-Tov Ben Solomon Lipmann-Mühlhausen (d. post-1420). A medieval philosopher and Talmudist, R. Lipmann wrote a book with the same title ספר נצחון [Sefer Nizzachon], which like its anonymous predecessor is a polemic against Christianity and Karaism to countermand the tide of conversion to Christianity (JE). The German Hebraist at the University of Altdorf, Johann Christoph Wagenseil (1633–1705), provides a Latin translation of ספר נצחון ישן נושן [Liber Nizzachon Vetus, sec. 10 [לך לך], in Tela Ignea Satanae (1681) 2:1–260 (sep. pag.). Mather's English translation reads in his Latin source, "Hunc in finem Deus Sacrificia imperavit: Quando homo pecudem sacrificat, in animo suo secum cogitate, ego magis bestia sum, quam haec praesens. Etenim ego peccavi, & ob peccatum quo ego commisi, hanc offero. Scilicet, magis aequum erat, ut homo qui peccaverat, quam ut bestia mactaretur: Sic igitur homo ope sacrificii poenitere occipit" (Tela Ignea Satanae 2:11). All references to the

Q. It was a Rite peculiar to the Sacrifice for the Sin of the Priest, & that for the Sin of the whole Congregation, To sprinkle the Blood Seven times before the Lord? v. 6.

A. To signify, perhaps, (as Dr. Patrick notes,) That their Offences were more heinous, and could not be so easily expiated, as those of other Men. The Number Seven, every one knowes, was of great Account in Religious Actions. As Elisha bad Naaman go wash Seven times in Jordan, for the Cure of his Leprosie; so Apuleius mentions dipping the Head Seven Times in the Sea, for Purification; and he gives the Reason, Quod eum Numerum præcipuè Religioni aptissimum Divinus ille Pythagoras prodidit. Q. The Blood poured at the Bottom of the Altar, what became of it? v. 7.

A. After the Building of the Temple, there were two Holes, one on the West Side of the Altar, another on the South-Side, (as the Jewes tell us in Middoth,) by which it was convey'd into a Canal under Ground, thro' which it ran into Kidron. Only the Blood of the Sin-Offering, they tell us, was poured only into that one the West-Side of the Altar. The Jewes also affirm; That the Gardeners bought this Blood, of those that were the Treasurers, of the Temple, to enrich their Ground with it; as L'Empereur ha's informed us. But all the while, they had only a moveable Tabernacle, it is most likely, they had Receptacles made under ⁸ Patrick (Leviticus 38, 39). Naaman's story is related in 2 Kings 5:1–19. The Roman writer Lucius Apuleius (c. 125–c. 180 CE) believes that the reason for dipping the head seven times into the sea is that “this special number is agreeable to religion and divine things, as Pythagoras has stated” (Metamorphoses 11.1). In Mather's day, the Latin edition L. Apuleii Madaurensis, Metamorphoseos Libri XI (1650), edited by John Price and subtitled “De Asino Aureo,” was in wide use. Mather's second-hand Latin citation appears on p. 238 of this edition. The Greek philosopher, mathematician, and founder of a religious sect, Pythagoras of Samos (c. 570–c. 495 BCE), is believed to have traveled widely in his youth, but little is known about his actual life or his philosophy except what was written down in distorted accounts centuries later. That Pythagoras and all the other ancient philosophers and lawgivers received their wisdom from Moses was still widely held in Mather's time by those who insisted on the dispersion of the Prisca theologia (BA 1:357–68). Theophilus Gale's massive Court of the Gentiles (1669–70) is one of its best examples in the English language, but his thesis is indebted (like all others who came before and after him) to Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 1.21–29; 2.5, 18, 22; 5.14; 6.3–5) who was the first to posit this claim. Q. We find a very laborious Proceeding about the Sacrifice now before us. What is to be learn'd from it? v. 11.

A. So laborious a Sacrifice, wrought a greater Detestation of Sin.

And Nachmanides ha's an Observation; "All a Man doeth, being performed in Works, in Words, or in Thoughts, God commanded them, when they brought an Offering for Sin, That they should lay their Hand on it, which had respect unto the Works they had done; and make Confession over it, which had Respect unto their Words; and burn the Inwards and Kidneyes, which are the Organs of Thoughts and Desires; The Legs also, had a Respect unto a Mans Hands and Feet, by which he does all his Works, & the Blood sprinkled on the Altar signifies his own Blood. While a Man did these things, he was putt in Mind, how he had sinned with Body and Soul, & deserved to have his Blood shed, & Body burnt; unless the Mercy of the Creator had accepted a Price of Redemption for him, namely, a Sacrifice."¹⁰

Q. What was the Iniquity, of Not uttering, when one hears the Voice of Swearing? v. 1.

A. The Judges had Power, to use Adjurations upon such as were before them, either to draw a proper Confession, or to force a faithful Testimony. [Of the Former, see 1. King. 22.16. and 2. Chron. 18.15. Of the Latter, see 1. King. 17.31. Prov. 29.24.] In these Cases, a Man was bound as much to answer the Truth, as if they were under a solemn Oath to do so. To suppress the Truth, was a great Iniquity; and a Sacrifice is here appointed for it.¹

Selden observes, That the Jewes make Four sorts of Oaths. Rash Oathes, and, Vain Oathes, and, Oathes of Trusts, and this, which they called, The Oath of Testimony; & which, they say, every Man was bound for to give before the Sanhedrim, when the was required; and this, with this Distinction: In pecuniary Causes, a Man was not bound for to come & testify, except the Plaintiff or Court should cite him. In Capital Causes, & in such things as the Law prohibited, a Man must come of his own Accord, without any Summons.²

Plato, L. IV. de Legibus, saies, That he who knew of a Fact, or had certain Information of it, και μὴ ἐπεξιών, & doth not prosecute the Person who did it, ἐν αὐτοῖς ἐνεχέσθω νόμοις, Lett him be liable to the same Punishment.³

Q. It is here said, If a Soul swear to do any of the things, that are comprehended under the general Name of Good, or, Evil; And it be Hid from him? what means, its being Hid from him? v. 4.

A. He did not rightly understand or consider the thing, about which he sware; as, whether it was in his Power to do it, or, whether he might lawfully do it.⁴

1 Patrick (Leviticus 59–60). Among his sources are Hugo Grotius, on Matth. 26:63 (Operum Theologicorum 2.1:260), and A Paraphrase and Annotations Upon all the Books of the New Testament (1659), fol. 134, by the renowned Anglican divine Henry Hammond, D. D. (1605–60).

2 John Selden, De Synedriis (1653), lib. 2, cap. 11, § 8, pp. 503–07.

3 Plato's counsel (Leges 6.9.762d, line 4) is actually much harsher than Mather's citation makes it out to be: "and fails to bring a case, the same laws should be invoked against him," and he must be punished with greater severity than his juniors" (Works 1437). The erroneous citation reference to "Plato, L. IV," which Mather extracts via Patrick (Leviticus 60), actually appears in book VI of Leges. It does come as a surprise that Mather copies the Greek diacritics as well, although he generally omits them. See his Manuductio ad Ministerium (1726), pp. 29–30.

Q. It is added, He shall confess, that he hath Sinned in that thing? v. 5.

A. And Abarbinel adds, (to which all the Hebrew Doctors agree,) That Confession was necessary to be added unto every Sacrifice for Sin.

Indeed, it was a Notion among the Heathens themselves, That an Offering without a Prayer, was to no Purpose. Quippe victimas cædi, sine precatone, non videtur referre, nec Deos ritè consuli; saies Pliny. [Nat. Hist. L. 28. c. 2.]⁵

Q. Where lay the Nice Difference between Asham, a Trespass-Offering, and Chattah, a Sin-Offering, and the Offences (called by the same Names also) which were the Occasions of them? For learned Men have exceedingly differed hereabout? v. 15.

A. We will omit the Conjectures of the most learned Men hereupon, which have been generally liable to Exceptions: and only propose the Opinion of the learned Outram, who had much & long considered the Matter. He saies, An Offence was peculiarly called, Asham, (as well as the Offering) about which either a Man was dubious, or which did a manifest Damage to other Men. There was no Asham commanded by the Law, but for such Offences as were so committed against God, that their Neighbours also were injured by them. The Case indeed of the Defiled Nazarite, & Leper, which called for a Sin-Offering as well as a Trespass-Offering, it comes not so plainly under that Consideration.

It is by some carried thus,

A Sin-Offering was for a thing done indeed Ignorantly against one of the Negative Præcepts, and now known to be certainly done. But a Trespass-Offering was for a Thing done indeed, but it remained still Doubtful whether a Præcept was violated by the Action, and the Party was not yett certain whether he Trespass'd or not; and yett he was to bring a Trespass-Offering, that he might be secured against the Penalty of Cutting Off, which he was otherwise expos'd unto. If once he came to know, that he did offend against a Commandment in the Action, then he was to Atone by a Sin-Offering.

Different Ceremonies attended these Two Offerings.

Moreover, Sin-Offerings were offered for the whole Congregation. Trespass-Offerings were only for private Persons.⁶

5 Patrick (Leviticus 62–63) and Abarbanel on Lev. cap. 16, in Commentarius in Pentateuchum Mosis: Vayikra (1710). Pliny (Naturalis Historia 28.3.10) believes, “In fact the sacrifice of victims without a prayer is supposed to be of no effect.” Patrick’s second-hand Pliny citation originates in Dr. William Owtram’s De Sacrificiis Libri Duo (1677), lib. 1, cap. 15: “De Ritibus quibusdam sacrificialibus,” sec. 9, pp. 167–68.

6 Simon Patrick (Leviticus 69–70) and Owtram’s De Sacrificiis Judæorum (1677), lib. 1, cap. 13: “De Sacrificiis piacularibus,” sec. 8, pp. 143–45. Bochart’s Hieroicoicon (pars 1, lib. 2,

Q. What is the Meaning of that Passage; He hath certainly trespassed against the Lord? v. 19.

A. Dr. Patrick thinks, it should be translated; A Trespass-Offering certainly unto the Lord. Q. D. In this Doubtful Case, Lett him take a sure Course, by offering the Sacrifice here præscribed. The very Suspicion of Guilt, required a Sacrifice. As for all those Offences which might be committed by Men, who had no Suspicion of them, they were expiated, by the stated Sacrifices, which were offered for the whole Congregation.⁷

cap. 33, col. 319) was the likely muse for both Patrick and Owtram. Maimonides (Guide 3.46.588) also distinguishes between the offence of “a guilt-offering” אֲשָׁם [‘asham] (Strong’s # 0817) and a “sin-offering” חַטָּאת [chatta’ah] (Strong’s # 2403). Nonetheless, the required sacrifices for the one as for the other offense are “be-goats [se’irim].” See also Abarbanel (on Lev. 5:14, 15) in JPS Miqra’ot Gedoloth (3:30).

⁷ Patrick (Leviticus 72). Mather’s “Q. D.” (also “Q. E. D.”) is an abbreviation for “Quod erat demonstrandum” (“which was to be proven”).

Q. What might be the Meaning of, The Fellowship, in which it may be supposed that a Man may lie unto his Neighbour? v. 2.

A. The Hebrew Expression is, Putting of the Hand; by which Action they commonly made a Contract. The Case then is, The Denying of a Bargain, and Contract. There is reason to think, That the Case here, is much of the same Nature, with what goes just before it; The Denying of a Trust: Because, when the Restitution is presently spoken of, This is not Repeated. What was deposited with another, if it were Money, t'was called, Pikkadon; if it were any other Goods, t'was Tesumah Jad.¹

Q. What {is} meant by, Deceiving a Neighbour? v. 2.

A. The Hebrew Word imports, The Wronging of him, with a False Accusation. Jerom always translates the Word Calumny.²

I'll here insert a Passage from one of the pious Fathers. Absit hoc ab Ecclesiâ Dei; and again, Absit, Absit inquam, ut hæc ego de aliquo Fidelium Sentiam; He would not imagine, that such a Crime could be committed in the Church of God. He supposed these Enormities could not in the Letter concern the Church of Christ. So the Depositum delivered to be kept, is what every one ha's; the Soul, and Body, & the Image of God imprinted on it. This Depositum is to be rendered unto God. It is embezzel'd, what the Image of God is lost, & that of Satan brought in the room of it.³

Q. How do you take that Clause, And is Guilty? v. 4.

1 Patrick (Leviticus 75); Constantinus L'Empereur's bilingual בְּבֵא קָמָא [Baba Kama] De Legibus Ebraeorum Forensibus Liber Singularis. Ex Ebraeorum Pandectis Versus & Commentariis Illustratus (1637), cap. 9, § 7, pp. 244–53, offers a lengthy discussion on the Hebrew pandects of the Mishnaic tractate Baba Kamma (The Mishnah 9.7.345), which stipulates additional fines for breach of contract. The Hebrew terms פִּקְדוֹן [pikkadon] and תְּסוּמַת יָד [tesumah yad] are rendered by L'Empereur (p. 246) as “depositum” (“money placed for safe keeping”) and “positio manus” (“placed in the hand”).

2 St. Jerome, Divina Bibliotheca 03. Liber Vajecra Qui Dicitur Leviticus [PL 028. 0342b], renders it aut calumniam fecerit, i.e., “or commit oppression.”

3 In his Homiliae in Leviticum (4.2) [PG 012. 0436a], Origenes exclaims, “God forbid, [let this be absent] from the Church of God,” and “God forbid, God forbid, I say, that I should think these things of someone of the faithful” (Homilies on Leviticus, p. 71).

A. And owns himself Guilty. Otherwise the Expression would be superfluous; For, who can doubt the Guilt of one that hath sinned so grievously?

And this Reconciles a Contradiction, which there would else be between this Law, and that in the Twenty second of Exodus. There the Thief was to Restore Double; Here only a simple Restitution is exacted, with the Addition of a Fifth Part. Why? In Exodus the Thief was one convicted by Witnesses in the Course of Law; But here, he is one touched with a Remorse of his Theft, and acknowledging a Crime, whereof no one had convicted him; for him a lesser Punishment therefore is ordered, & an Expiation by Sacrifice; for he might not think (by the way) that the Restitution made Expiation.⁴

Q. For a Trespass-Offering, why so small an Offering, as, A Ram without Blemish? v. 6.

A. Bochart answers, Contrariie contrariis esse curanda. A Trespass was a Sin committed thro' Froward Pride. A Sheep is a Meek, a Mild, an Humble Creature. The Offering of such a Creature, at the same time admonished the Sinner, to conform himself unto the Creature that was offered.

Q. The Burning upon the Altar all Night unto the Morning, how and why was it carried on? v. 9.

A. The Priests watched all Night, and putt the Sacrifice upon the Altar, Peece by Peece; that it might be consumed by a slow and gentle Fire: This for the Evening Sacrifice. CE Roman grammarian Sextus Pompeius Festus of Narbo (Gaul), confirms that “they used to say that the greatest sacrificial victim was the sheep, not from the size of the body, but from its more peaceful spirit.” Festus, De Verborum is an abridgment of De Significatu Verborum, a collection of quotations preserved by the grammarian Marcus Verrius Flaccus (c. 55 BCE–20 CE), survives in yet another abridgement of Festus's word hord by the Italian historian and biblical commentator Paulus Diaconus (c. 720–c. 799). The Wood for the Altar, is here called, Woods, in the Plural Number. R. Levi of Barcelona, saies, There were Three Bundles brought in every Day.⁷ The Misna speaks of Seven Gates belonging to the Great Court of the Sanctuary; Three on the North, and Three on the South, and One on the East. The First, on the South Side was called, The Gate of Burning; because at that Gate, they brought in the Wood, which was to præserve the Fire perpetually on the Altar.⁸ Yea, there was, it seems, a certain sett Time, when the People were obliged, for to carry Wood thither; which made a Kind of a Festival, called by Josephus, τῶν ξυλοφορίων ἑορτῆς, The Feast | of Wood-Carrying.⁹

Q. What have wee to Illustrate, the Linen-Garment appointed for the Priest? v. 10.¹²

A. The Imitation of this Garment among the Gentiles, may bee some Illustration of it. Now, Cluverius, and Bulenger, and Saubertus have so abundantly proved that the Priests in all the Four Parts of the World, Europe, Asia, Africa, & America, have accustomed themselves to perform their Sacred Rites, in white Garments, that I need only refer you to those Authors, for the full Account hereof.¹³ other procedures in the Temple due to physical blemishes, may perform this procedure" (Chizkuni 3:682).

¹² This whole discussion (below) is extracted from John Spencer's De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 1, cap. 5, sec. 1–2, fols. 571–75.

¹⁴ Spencer (571). Suetonius (Vita Othonis, cap. 12) describes the "sacred linen vestments" of the priests of Isis; the Roman statesman and poet Tiberius Catius Asconius Silius Italicus (c. 28–c. 103 CE) sings of Ammon's priests, whose "bodies are veiled in linen" (Punica 3.24); Lucan (Pharsalia 9.159) tells of the "linen draped" busts of Isis and Osiris; and Ovid (Fasti 4.619–20) prods his fashionable Romans: "put on white robes at Ceres's festival; now no one wears dun-coloured wool." But sometimes, as Johannes Buxtorf, the younger, reminds us in his Lexicon Chaldaicum Talmudicum, et Rabbinicum (1639), cols. 1051–52, voce קָמֵר, certain priests sport atrabilious vestments in black.

The Egyptian Priests, are by Juvenal, called, Grege Liniger; by Ovid, called, Linigera Turba; by Martial, called, Linigeri Calvi; by Seneca, called, Linteati Senes: And their Goddess Isis, is, by the Poets called, Linigerous. Thus, Our Lord putting on a Linen Cloath, to wash the Feet of His Disciples, Tertullian calls it, Propriam Osiridis Vestem. And Suidas mentioning Heraiscus, buried in Linen, calls it, Ὀσίριδος ἐπὶ τῷ σώματι περιβόλας.¹⁵

The Linen Garment of the Priest, in Israel, was, Talaris, or, as both Josephus, & the Apocryphal Author, of the Book of Wisdom expresses it, Χιτῶν ποδῆρης, A Coat reaching down to his Feet. Maimonides affirms, Longitudo Tunicae erat usque ad superiorem calcanei partem. Compare John's Vision of our Lord, the High-Priest of the Church. Rev. 1.13.¹⁶

Now, such also was the Garment worn by the Egyptian Priest. Hee was covered, saith Apuleius, Candido Linteamine, ad usque Vestigia demisso. And the Sacrificers in other Nations, had the like; as there is mentioned, you know, in Virgil, – Longa cum Veste Sacerdos.¹⁷

Again, The Linen Garment of the Priest in Israel, was, Textilis, or, as it is expressed in Exodus, Of Woven Work. Yea, Josephus tells us, It was not ἐξ δυοῖν περιτμημάτων Of Two Pieces, nor had it any Sutures on the Shoulders, & Sides; but it was, unica Tela in Longum Contexta. Thus the Garment of the Egyptian Priest also, was ἀρραφόν. Compare 2. King. 23.7. Pausanias mentions Women, whose Business t'was, to weave such Vestments, for the Idols.¹⁸

Once more, The Linen-Garment of the Priest in Israel, was a Strait Garment; It was to have no Foldings in it.

Antonius Millieus has given us a Description of it, worth Reciting.

Tunc Tunicam duplici è bysso, tortâque nitentem,

15 Spencer (572, 573). Juvenal (Satire 6.533) mocks the “linen-wearing horde” of priests, Ovid (Metamorphoses 1.747) “the linen-robed throng,” Martial (Epigrammaton 12.28.19) the “linen-draped bareheaded” priests of Isis, Seneca (De Vita Beata 26.4.8) the “old men clothed in linen”; the poets, including Ovid (Ex Ponto 1.1.51), “linen-wearing Isis,” Tertullian (De Corona, cap. 8 [PL 02. 0088A]) “Isis’ very own vestment,” and finally, the venerable lexicon Suidas (Suda, alphab. letter eta, entry 450, line 18) speaks of the corpse of faithful Heraiscus, the Alexandrian neoplatonic philosopher (5th c. CE): Ὀσίριδος ἐπὶ τῷ σώματι περιβόλας “whom someone wrapped like that of Osiris.”

16 Spencer (574). The Greek description of the priest’s tunic Χιτῶν ποδῆρης, appears in Josephus (Antiquitates 3.159, line 3) and in LXX (Wisd. Sol. 18:24). So, too, Maimonides mentions “the long garment [tunic] reaching down to the feet.” Perhaps, Maimonides (Hilchot K’Lei Hamikdash ViHaOvdim Bo (9.3), says it best: “The length of the garment reached down to the upper part of the heel.”

17 Spencer (574). Mather’s adapted citation from Apuleius (Metamorphoseon 11.10) relates that the priests of Egypt were clothed “with white surplices hanging down to the ground”; and Virgil (Aeneid 6.645) knows of the Thracian “priests clothed in long robes.”

18 Spencer (574–75). Josephus (Antiquitates 3.161, line 1) tells us that the priest’s vestment was not ἐκ δυοῖν περιτμημάτων “composed of two pieces,” nor was it sowed together upon the shoulders and the sides, but it was “one long continuously woven vestment” (Antiquities 3.7.4). Pausanias (Graeciae descriptio 6.24.9–10).

*Inductam collo, ad Talos, à Vertice fundit.
Non Rugis, non illa Sinu, non follibus undat;
Sed Manicis habiles artus ad Munia stringens

Seu campestre sagum, tegitur quo miles in Armis.*¹⁹

Wherein the Poet may refer to the Words of Jerom, who saies of this Garment, Hæc adhæret corpori, et tam Arcta est, et Strictis manicis, ut nulla omnino in Veste sit Ruga, et usque, ad crura descendat. Solent Militantes habere Vestes Lineas, quas Camisias vocant, sic aptas Membris, et astrictas Corporibus, ut expediti sint, vel ad cursum, vel ad prælia. – Ergò et Sacerdotes Parati, in Ministerium Dei, utuntur hâc Tunicâ, ut habentes pulchritudinem vestimentorum, Nudorum celeritatem discurrant. And herein Jerom was instructed by Josephus, who saies of this Garment, It was περιγεγραμμένος τῷ σώματι, close to the Body: and κολπoutai μὲν οὐδαμόθεν, It was no where Folded.²⁰

In such a Garment likewise did the Priest of Egypt, perform his Ministry. Corpori Arctè et Sine Rugis adhærebat, saies Beroaldus upon Apulejus. As the Richer People among the old Germans, according to Tacitus, For the like Reason, of Expedition in their Business, Veste, non fluitante, sed Strictâ, ac Singulos Artus Exprimente, distinguebantur.²¹

19 Mather (via Spencer 575) quotes from Moyses Viator: seu, Imago Militantis Ecclesiae Moisaicis (1636), lib. XIII, sec. 16, p. 465, by the French Jesuit Antoine Millieu of Lyon. Mather also copies Spencer's spelling (line 1) "Tunc," rather than "Tum," and (line 6), "Seu," rather than "Ceu," as they appear in Millieu's epic poem, but also adds his own customary capitalizations. At any rate, Millieu's recitation reads, "Then he extends from the head a garment of doubled linen, resting upon a twist, worn from the neck to the ankles. It does not billow with wrinkles, nor any fold, nor puffs; but it is stretched from the sleeves, binding the nimble limbs to their official duties, and the tunic hangs fittingly with the moving of the limbs, rather than like the coarse apron mantle with which a soldier in arms is covered."

20 St. Jerome composed his "Epistola LXIV. Ad Fabiolam. 'De Veste Sacerdotali'" for the Roman patrician convert Fabiola (d. c. 399), in 386, who visited a monastery in Bethlehem. Via Spencer (575), Mather here focuses on the mystical significance of the priest's vestment as related by Jerome [PL 22. 0614]: "This [tunic] clings to the body and is so confined, and with sleeves constrained, that there is no wrinkle at all in the clothing, and it goes right down to the feet. Soldiers are accustomed to have linen clothes, which they call shirts, so fitted to their limbs, and bound up to their bodies that they are unimpeded either to running or to battles. – Therefore, priests also, prepared for the service of God, wear this tunic so that they may run about, having beauty of clothing [and] the speed of the unclothed." And Josephus Flavius explains in his indispensable Antiquities of the Jews that the vestment was worn "περιγεγραμμένος τῷ σώματι (Antiquitates 3.153, line 4) "close to the body" but κολπoutai μὲν οὐδαμόθεν (Antiquitates 3.156, line 4) "was nowhere folded."

21 Spencer (575–76). Says the Italian humanist Philippus Beroaldus of Bologna (1453–1505) on Apuleius's Metamorphoseos (11.10), in Apuleius cum commento Beroaldi. Et figuris noviter additis (1510), fol. CCXXII, "It was fitting tightly to the body, and without wrinkles." And the adapted passage from Publius Cornelius Tacitus's De origine et situ Germanorum (17) explains that the wealthier among the ancient Germans "are distinguished by a vest, not flowing loose, but girt close, and exhibiting the shape of every limb" (Germany and The Agricola 17).

Moreover, Tis not unlikely, that the Sacerdotal Garment, in Israel, might have Ornamental Flowers and Figures inwrought into it, albeit, so, as that the Native Colour of the Linen was not thereby extinguished. Hence, the Chaldee understanding the Forty fifth Psalm, concerning the Garments of the Sanctuary, thus explains the fourteenth & fifteenth Verses of it; Omne pulchrum et Desiderabile – offerent Sacerdotibus, quorum Vestes intertextæ sunt Auro Optimo; in Vestibus Acu-pictis, offerent oblationes suas, coram Rege Orbis. Nor was the Egyptian Garment, without affectation of such Ornament.²²

But there was a Difference between them in Two Things. The Egyptian Priest wore his Linen every Day; as Jerom observes; And, when hee came to worship, hee was, as Juvenal speaks, of the, Grege Calvo; hee shaved himself all over. But when God præscribed the Holy Garment unto the Priest of Israel. [See Ezek. 44.17, 18, 19, 20.] Hee made express Provision against both of these Usages.²³

Q. Why is it said of the Meat-Offering, With unleavened Bread it shall be Eaten? v. 16.

A. There is no, With, in the Hebrew; It is to be taken so, Unleavened it shall be Eaten.²⁴

Q. Why is it said of the Offerings, Every one that toucheth them shall be Holy? v. 18.

A. It was not sufficient for the Eaters, to be descended of Priests, but they must also be free from all Defilement. But these very Words, which we here translate, Every One, we translate, v. 27. Whatsoever. And then the Meaning is, Every thing that toucheth them, shall be made Holy by them. The very Dishes and Spoons and Knives, were never to be employed unto any other Use.²⁵

22 Spencer (576). The Latin citation is from the Chaldaean Paraphrase of Ps. 45:14–15, in Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (3:156), according to which "Everything is beautiful and desirable – they will present to the priests, whose garment are woven with finest gold, in embroidered clothes, their offering in the presence of the King of the world."

23 Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, cap. 5, diss. 1, sec. 2, fol. 577, invokes St. Jerome's Commentariorum in Ezechielem (44:17), who contrasts the linen-clad priests of Egypt and their shaven heads with the habit of God's high priest: "Vestibus lineis utuntur Ægyptii sacerdotes non solum intrinsecus, sed ei extrinsecus. Porro religio divina [Christiana] alterum habitum habet in ministerio, alterum in usu vitæque communi" [PL 025. 0437c]. At last, Juvenal (Saturæ 6.533) pokes fun at the "shaven heads" of Anubis's linen-clad crew, who mutter incantations to assuage the wrath of Osiris.

Q. Why must the Meat-Offering for the Priest, be wholly Burnt? v. 23.

A. Abarbinel thinks, That the High-Priest only, was bound every Day to offer this Meat-Offering; (Josephus tells us, He did it Twice a Day, and at his own Charges.) And every other Priest was to offer it once in his Life; namely, when he began his Ministry.

Now, t'was fitt it should be wholly Burnt. Maimonides observes, T'was unseemly for him to offer it unto God, & yett eat of it as if it were his own. R. Levi Barcelon{a} adds, The Scope of the Sacrifice, being to Raise the Mind of him that offered it unto God, it was not fitt, he should think of Eating any Part of his own Offering; which would have taken his Mind off from God.²⁶

Q. Garments that happened for to be Sprinkled with the Blood of a Sacrifice, were to be washed in the Holy Place? v. 27.

A. Where there was a Room (after the Temple was built,) which was called, Lischath Hagullah, The Chamber of the Spring, or, Well; out of which Water was drawn for the Use of the Court of the Sanctuary. Probably, these Garments were washed there.²⁷

Q. The Earthen Vessel wherein the Sin-Offering was Sodden, [By the way, it appears, that nothing was Roasted in the Sanctuary, all was Boiled there,] was to be Broken: Why, and How? v. 28.

A. It being very porous, it might so deeply imbibe a Tincture from the Flesh, that it could not be washed out, but the Smell might remain a long Time. And it being a thing of small Value, it was no great Loss to have it broken, rather than any thing that was Holy remaining in it, might be profaned. What became of the Broken Shreds of those Earthen Vessels, is a Doubt among the Hebrew Doctors; for it was not fitt to throw them into a profane Place, nor to heap them up in the Sanctuary: & they therefore fancy, that the Earth opened & swallowed them up. Why may n't we say, They were thrown abroad into a clean Place, after ²⁶ Patrick, on Lev. 6:20–23 (Leviticus 88–91). Abarbanel suggests as much in his gloss on Lev. 10:1, while commenting on the death of Nadab and Abihu: “The problem was that, though the High Priest may offer incense whenever he wishes, ordinary priests only do so when chosen for it by lot; and no priest does so twice in his lifetime” (JPS Miqra'ot Gedoloth 3:61); see also Abarbanel's Selected Commentaries: Vayikra (3:62, 63). Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 3.10.3); Maimonides Hilchot Ma'aseh HaKorbanot (13.4b), in Mishneh Torah (29:466), and Guide (3.46.584). Q. Has your Friend Munster no Good Hint of Jewish Divinity about the Sacrifices here commanded? v. 30.

A. I will quote you from him, a Good Hint of Christian Divinity, if you please. He saies, That the faithful Patriarchs, when they offered Sacrifices, had the Faith of their Souls Relying upon a Sacrificed Messiah, who was in the Fulness of Time to be expected. He saies, That the Gentiles, preserved the external Tradition, from Noah, and his Sons; but that applying the Sacrifices to Idolatry, they lost the Right Use of them. He saies, They fell at length upon Humane Sacrifices; which tho' it were a most cruel Instigation of the Divel, yett it was occasioned by the broken Remembrance of what the Fathers had preached, That a Man should come, & by the Sacrifice of Himself make Expiation for the Sins of Men.

It is Remarkable, That since our Lord-Messiah ha's been actually made a Sacrifice, by the Providence of God, it is come to pass, that the Use of Sacrifices has been generally laid aside not only by the Jewes, but almost every where by the Gentiles also; Ut hoc tempore (saies Munster) *ne Reliquiæ quidem Corum Sacrificiorum in ullâ publicâ Gente in toto orbis, supersint; Id quod maximum Argumentum A Christum venisse et Sacrificium suum, in quod omnia alia respexerint peregrisse.*²⁹

²⁹ Sebastian Münster, in Hebraica Biblia (1546), fol. 206, annot. (d), comments on Lev. cap. 6, that the use of sacrifices has been discontinued since the death of Christ, as at this time only a few remnants of their sacrifices survive in any public race in the whole of the world; [this is] the greatest evidence that Christ has come and has accomplished his sacrifice to which all other things have referred."

Q. The Blood of the Burnt-Offerings, was to be Sprinkled round about upon the Altar; and so was the Blood of the other Offerings. But with any Difference? v. 2.

A. Yes. There was a Scarlet Threed, or Line, which went round about the Altar exactly in the Middle; The Blood of the whole Burnt-Offerings was sprinkled round about, Above the Line; The Blood of the Sin-Offerings, the Trespass-Offerings, and the Peace-Offerings was Below the Line. Thus we are informed by the Middoth, and by L'Empereurs Annotations.¹

Q. As the Sin-Offering, so the Trespass-Offering; what {is} the Difference between a Sin, and a Trespass? v. 7.

A. In another Place we may speak further to it. I will here only observe, That it is very plain, there is a Difference. But it is not as plain, what is the Difference. One of the Ancients, makes /חטאה/ Peccatum, to be the committing of Evil, and /אשם/ Delictum, to be the Forsaking of Good. And indeed we find this Distinction; Jer. II.13. Another makes /חטאה/ A Sin against Knowledge; and /אשם/ A Trespass of Ignorance. The Ancients have given us diverse other Distinctions. Dr. Gell gives us one more; That /חטאה/ may be a Sin whereinto a Man falls of himself; and /אשם/ a Trespass whereinto a Man falls being drawn by Another.²

But see what we say on Lev. 5.15.

Q. Why must the Skin of the Burnt-Offering, fall to the Priest? v. 8.

A. This was all that was left.

Probably, t'was (as Dr. Patrick thinks) in Conformity to the Condition of Adam, to whom God gave the Skin of the first Sacrifices, to make him a Garment.

This Custome of the Jewes was imitated by the Gentiles; Among whom the Priests, employ'd the Skins thus falling unto them, unto very superstitious Purposes. They lay upon them in their Temples, hoping thereby to obtain Divinatory, & Oracular Dreams. This is observed by Dilheirus, upon those Words in Virgil;

And he observes, (Dissert. De Cacozelia Gentililum. C. 9.) from Suidas, That in the Eleusinia, the Didachus putt on the skin of the Beasts, which had been Sacrificed unto Jupiter; which were called, Διὸς κώδια, The Fleece of Jupiter.³

3545.

Q. Why must the Flesh of the Sacrifice of the Peace-Offering for Thanksgiving, be Eaten the same Day that it is offered? v. 15.

A. Lett old Philo (in his Book of Sacrifices) answer the Quæstion.

“It was not fitt, that these Holy Things should be putt into their Cupboards, but immediately sett before those, who were in Need; For they were no longer his, that offered them, but his to whom they were offered; who being himself most Liberal and Bountiful, would have Guests invited unto His Table, to partake with those that offered the Sacrifice: whom He would not have to look upon themselves as Masters of the Feast, ἐπίτροποι γὰρ εὐωχίας εἰσὶν, οὐκ ἐστιάτορες, For they are but the Ministers of the Feast, not the Masters, or Entertainers. That belongs to God Himself, whose Bounty ought not to be concealed, by præferring sordid Parsimony before generous Humanity.”⁴

The Sum is; All the Sacrifice was Gods, who graciously granted unto him that offered it, a Part of it, wherewith to | entertain his Friends, and the Poor; whom He would have to be forthwith invited, that no Part of it might be converted unto any other Use, but that which God, who made the Feast, appointed.

But then, the Peace-Offerings, which had more of the Nature of Prayers in them, as being Vowes to obtain Mercies; These were not so Holy as the former, & therefore might be Eaten on the Morrow, as well as on the same Day they were offered; tho’ they must begin immediately to Feast upon the Sacrifice.

3 Patrick (Leviticus 97–98) quotes Johannes Michael Dilherr’s “Dissertationis, De Cacozelia Gentilium, Pars Specialis,” in Disputationum Academicarum, præcipuè Philologicarum. Tomus Novus (1652), cap. 9, pp. 255–56 (sec. series of pag.). Mather’s third-hand citation from Virgil (Aeneid 7.86–91) illustrates the ancient rite of offering fleeces to the gods – ostensibly in imitation of the Levitical rites turned upside down: “hither the priestess brings the offerings, and as she lies under the silent night on the outspread fleeces of slaughtered sheep and woos slumber, she sees many phantoms flitting in wondrous wise, hears voices manifold, holds converse with the gods.” And the Suidas lexicon (alphab. letter delta, entry 1210, line 2) speaks of the initiation into the Eleusinian mysteries of Demeter and her daughter Persephone, as the torch-bearing Daduchus, priest of Ceres, modeled the fleeces of rams Διὸς κώδια for Jupiter (Zeus). Mather’s “Didachus” reads “Daduchus” in Patrick (98).

4 Patrick (Leviticus 101–02) cites at length from Philo Judæus (De specialibus legibus 1.40.221, lines 6–7) and Works (555).

Philo notes, That pure Acknowledgments for Mercies already received, must make Men have their Hearts more Enlarged and Quickened in their Bounty to others.⁵

Q. It is said of the Peace-Offering, All that be clean shall Eat thereof? v. 19.

A. The Priest had the Right Shoulder, and the Breast; And he that brought the Sacrifice, had the rest. Of the former, the whole Family of the Priest might Eat; not only his Sons, but his Wife, & his Daughters who were not married; or being Widowes, were come back to their Father again, if they had no Children; or if those they had, were begotten by Priests; Yea, his Servants, born in his house, or bought with his Money. And the rest, he that offered, it might Eat it, with all his Family, and his Friends, excepting those who had any Unclean-ness upon them.

There is frequent mention of these Feasts, in the Sacred Scriptures. [1. Sam. 1.4. and 1. Sam. 9.13, 24. and 1. Sam. 11.15. and 1. Sam. 16.3, 5. and 1. Chron. 16.3. and, 1. King. 8.65. and Neh. 8.19.]⁶

Q. How far might extend the Prohibition against Eating any Manner of Blood? v. 27.

A. The Jewes distinguished between, The Blood of the Soul, and, The Blood of the Member. The former, which ran out freely, when the Beast was killed, is the Blood prohibited. The other, which remained in the several Parts of the Beast, they look'd upon, as belonging to the Flesh, & therefore might be Eaten with it.⁷

Q. What is the Import of that Passage; He that offereth the Sacrifice of his Peace-Offerings unto the Lord, shall bring his Oblation unto the Lord, of the Sacrifice of his Peace-Offerings? V. 29.

A. The Meaning may be this; That before he, and his Friends, Feasted together, he was to take due Care, to bring his Oblation to the Lord, or, see, that the Lord had His Part of the Peace-Offering; for, till that was offered, none might meddle with the rest.

But, as Dr. Patrick notes, If the Import of the Hebrew Words be well observed, they seem to have further Meaning; which is, That whensoever any Man brought the Sacrifice (which in the Hebrew is here called, Zebach) of his Peace-Offerings, he should also bring his Oblation (which in Distinction from the other is called, Korban,) that is, a Mincha, or, Meat-Offering together with it; That the Feast which was to be made, might be compleatly furnished with Bread and Wine, as well as the Flesh of the Sacrifice.⁸

Q. The Lustrations, Purgations, and Purifications used among the Jewes; were there any Imitations thereof, among the Pagans? v. 1.

A. Yes; When the Practice of the Jewes came to bee known abroad in the World, the Pagans presently, were by the Apishness of the Divil, sett upon imitating of it.

The Priests were to wash their Hands & Feet, before they touched the Holy Things, among the Jewes; and they had Lavers in the Temple, for that Purpose; and the Purification of others, was by Ablution or Aspersion, likewise to bee performed.

Hence wee read of the Washings and Sprinklings among the Pagans.

Hence, it became a Rule among them, τα ἱερά καθαρώ ὕδατι περιαγνίζεν; as Dionysius Halicarnassæus ha's it, That all Sacred Things must bee sprinkled with pure Water; And they had Vessels, which contained the consecrated Element, for this Purpose. Moreover, For the most Part, they sprinkled, the Worshippers, as they went into their Temples.¹

I perfectly concur, with my learned Edwards, and many more, in holding, That it is no Wayes probable, that in the Religion, which God instituted among the Jewes, Hee would make the Rites of the Pagans their Exemple; This Imagination, were unworthy of the Holy & Jealous God, and of His Religion. The Cæremonious Observances commanded unto the Jewes were not originally practised by the Pagans; but by the Pagans derived from the Jewes.² Particularly, As for the Purifications now before us, emphatical are the Words of Justin Martyr, who commenting on that Passage, Isa. 1.16. Wash yee, make yee clean; saies, “When the Divels heard of this Washing, spoken of, by the Prophet, they caused this, to bee the Effect of it; namely, whenever they go into their Temples, or approach near them, or, are about to bee employed in their Sacrifices, & Offerings, they sprinkle Water on themselves.”³

Q. In what Manner, and with what Action, was the Anointing of the Tabernacle, and its Vessels, performed? v. 10.

A. There being several Wayes of Anointing an Object; either by Pouring Oyl upon it, or by Putting it upon them with the Finger, or by Sprinkling; it is not an improbable Conjecture of Fortunatus Scacchus, [Myrothec. 2. Sacr. Elaeochrism. c. 70.] That Moses anointed the Tabernacle & its Utinsels, by Dipping his Finger in the Oyl, & Putting it upon them. Q. About the Order of the Sacrifices used in the Consecration of the Priests, what Remark is there made in the Jewish Writings? v. 23.

A. R. Levi ben Gersom remarks, That it was a very Rational Order. For, first there was a Sacrifice for Sin offered, before they could be worthy to have any Present, which they made unto God, received by Him. Upon their Expiation, a whole Burnt-Offering was accepted; and after that followed a Peace-Offering,

Q. What is there observable in that Passage; Moses took of the Anointing Oyl, and of the Blood which was upon the Altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and his Sons? v. 30.

[Psal. 133.2.] But the other Priests were only sprinkled with this Anointing Oyl. This was to Type out our Saviour, who was Anointed with the Oyl of Gladness, above His Fellowes. Q. Seven Dayes must be spent, in the Consecration of the Priest unto his Office. How was it in the Antitype? v. 34.

A. Behold, a wonderful Harmony! Our Great High Priest, the Lord Jesus CHRIST, who was perfected by One Sacrifice of Himself, spent Seven Dayes in his Consecration to His Office. As Aaron is commanded to attend at the Tabernacle so many Dayes together, in like Manner our Lord, (as Dr. Jackson observes, upon the Creed;) attended the Temple, five Dayes one after another before His Death; and having purged it, on the first or second of those Dayes, from the Profaneness that was exercised in it by Merchandizing, and afterwards hallowed it by His Doctrine, and by His Divine Presence, which appeared in several miraculous Cures, He went the Sixth Day into His Heavenly Sanctuary, into Paradise itself, to Purify it, & Sanctify it, with His own Blood, as Moses at Aarons Consecration did the material Sanctuary, & Altar, with the Blood of the Sacrifices. And having Rested the Seventh Day, He finished all, by His Resurrection early the next Day in the Morning.⁸

Q. What Remark to be made, upon Taking a Kid of the Goats, for a Sin-Offering? v. 3.

A. The Hebrew Word signifies, An He-Goat. Maimonides delivers this, as his Opinion hereupon. All Sacrifices for Sin, whether of Private Persons, or of the whole Congregation at the Three Principal Feasts, the New Moons, and the Day of Expiation were He-Goats; For this Reason, (he saies) because the greatest Rebellion of those Times was, Their Sacrificing to Dæmons, which appeared in that Form. He quotes, Lev. 17.7. They shall no more offer their Sacrifices unto Divels; where the Hebrew Word is, unto He-Goats.

He adds, That the Sin of the whole Congregation, was therefore expiated by the Kid of a Goat, (as their Wise Men think) because all the Family of Israel sinned about a Kid, when they sold Joseph into Egypt.

He saies, That such things must not be look'd upon as Trifles; for the End & Scope of them, was, to imprint and ingrave on the Mind of Sinners, the Offences they had committed, that they might never forgett them: According to that of David; Ps. 51.5. My Sin is ever before me.¹

Q. Some Remarks upon, The Fire coming out from before the Lord? v. 24.

A. The Sacrifices for the Initiation of the Aaronical Priesthood probably were offered after the Morning Sacrifice, & they took up a considerable deal of Time. Whereupon Moses went with Aaron into the Sanctuary, to instruct him in such things, as were to be performed there. Doubtless they staid there, until the Time of the Evening Sacrifice, when they came out, and after the Offering of that Sacrifice dismissed the People with a Blessing.²

The Glory of the Lord, which had before this, filled the Tabernacle, now appeared openly upon it, in the Sight of all the People, as Moses had foretold, that it would.

Fire now proceeded, probably in Flashes from that excellent Glory; (if not from the Holy of Holies;) which testified an Approbation of the Aaronical Ministry, by consuming the Burnt-Offering of the Sacrifice upon the Altar.

² The following paragraphs are extracted from Patrick (Leviticus 135–37).

That Sacrifice was in all Probability, the Evening-Sacrifice. The Place that God chose for His Worship & Service, in the Days of David, was designed after this very Manner. And it was at the Time of the Evening-Sacrifice too.

When Solomon built the Temple in that Place, it was consecrated after this very Manner; and that also appears to have been at the Time of the Evening-Sacrifice.

The Authority of Elijah to restore the True Religion of God, was Justified after this very Manner; and that likewise we know was at the Time of the Evening-Sacrifice. [Compare, Psal. 141.2.]

So notorious were these things, that Julian himself acknowledges, that Fire came down from Heaven, in the Days of Moses, and of Elijah, Τὰς θυσίας ἀναλίσκον· Consuming the Sacrifices.³

This gave such Authority to the Jewish Religion, that it is no Wonder if the Pagans endeavoured some Reputation to theirs, by the like Reports, of a Fire, from an Invisible Power, consuming their Sacrifices: which Dr. Patrick thinks, might sometimes really be done, by the Prince of the Power of the Air. There are several Instances of this, in Pausanias, in Dionysius Halicarnassæus, in Valerius Maximus, & in Pliny.⁴ But Servius may serve instead of all; who upon that in Virgil, Æn. 12.

– Fœdera Fulmine Sancit, saies, That anciently they did not kindle Fires upon their Altars, sed Ignem divinum precibus eliciebant; they procured by their Prayers a Divine Fire, which inflamed their Altars. And Solinus tells us, That the Flame sprung out of the Wood, by a Divine Power; Si Deus adest, Si Sacrum probatur, sarmenta, licet viridia, ignem sponte concipiunt; – the Faggots, tho' Green, kindled of themselves, and a Flame was raised by the Deity, to whom the Sacrifice was offered;⁵

[Compare, Judg. 6.21.]

⁵ With his right hand outstretched and eyes raised toward heaven, Aeneas invokes the name of Jupiter, who “sanctions treaties with his thunderbolt.” On this line from Vergil’s Aeneid (12.200), Maurus Servius Honoratus (In Vergilii carmina commentarii 12.200) comments that in ancient times, they did not kindle fire on their altars, but “drew down sacred flames through their prayers.” The Latin grammarian Gaius Julius Solinus knowingly adds in his De mirabilibus mundi (cap. 5, line 23), “if god be present, if the sacrifice be accepted, the brushwood (though green) catches fire on its own accord.”

J. Delherrus; and especially Huetius, will give us more of these things.⁶

It cannot be determined (as Dr. Patrick thinks) whether this Fire which now came from the Lord, Instantly consumed the Sacrifice of Aaron, or only sett it into a Flame that consumed it liesurely in the Sight of all the People. The Jewes do suppose the latter. They suppose, that the Heavenly Fire was now kindled, which continued ever after, by constant Supply of the Fuel, which kept it continually burning.

It is to be observed, That this Law of keeping alive the Fire perpetually, is ordered to be putt in Execution, at the Evening-Sacrifice; which may incline one to think, That the Cœlestial Fire now came, at the Evening-Sacrifice, and consumed the Burnt-Offering.⁷

⁷ Patrick (Leviticus 127–28).

Q. What was there occurring Remarkable, in the Time of Nadab and Abihu's Death? v. 1.¹

A. There were several Intimations, accompanying the first Promulgations of the Ceremonial Law, That without the Messiah to come, all that Law would bee of none Effect.²

I will not insist upon, the first Oracle, which was uttered from the Mercy-Seat, & which was about Sacrifices: That there the Letter /א/ in the first Word of the Book, is written less than all the rest; which is to hint, that tho' this were a glorious Oracle, yett it was a very small One, in Comparison, of what was to come, when God would speak to His People, by His own Son, whom the Mercy-Seat then represented.³

But I will invite you to consider the Death of Nadab & Abihu.⁴

The Tabernacle being sett up, there followed Seven Dayes of Consecration for the Priests. And the Death of Nadab & Abihu, fell out on the very first Day that the Service of the Altar began; even on the Eighth Day after the Seven of the Consecration; when the Priests offered Sacrifices for themselves & the People. Thus, the Service of the Sanctuary, began with a Terrible Death; a Sad Intimation, that Life was not to bee obtained or expected from that Service; no, tis our Lord Jesus Christ alone, who is the Truth, & the Life.⁵

1 In his "Note Book of Authors and Texts Throughout the Bible" (Lev. 10:1, 2), Mather recommends "Arndt. Vol. 1. Pay. 120"; i.e., Johann Arndt's De Vero Christianismo libri quatuor (1708), cap. 21, p. 120, on the true worship of God.

2 Much the same conclusion is offered by Junius and Piscator, in Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:534) and Works (6:141).

3 Mather may have in mind the tradition of R. ben Mari, who in debating whether a sin offering precedes a burnt offering, insists that "Because an Aleph is wanting in the Hattath [חטאת] for idolatry, the written form being le-Hatth [לחטאת]" (Numb. 15:24), the sacrifice for a sin offering has precedents over the one for a burnt offering, in Soncino Talmud, tractate Horayoth (13a).

4 Sons of Aaron, Nadab & Abihu ignited the censers by themselves without waiting for God to do so and offered unsanctified incense on the altar. In essence, they disregarded God's prerogative (Lev. 10:1–2).

5 The explanations for why the two brothers were consumed by God's fire on this inaugural day differ as widely as the oscillations of the hermeneutical compass which guides the sages in this matter. Henry Ainsworth for one adds in his esteemed Annotations Upon the Five Bookes of Moses: Leviticus (1626), p. 49, "This transgression of the priests, in the beginning of their administration, sheweth the weakness and imperfection of that priesthood; and for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof, it was afterwards disannulled; and a better priesthood of Christ (who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners,) is come in place thereof: for the law made nothing perfect, Heb. 7.18.19.26. So in the practice of the moral law, the people, even at the first, fell into open impiety, Exod. 32." Gersonides offers that "what made their fire they 'took' alien was that it was not taken from the right place on the outer altar, but from

Q. What were the Errors of Nadab, and Abihu?

A. Abarbanel supposes the Calamity now before us, to have hap'ned on the last Day of their Consecration, when Fire came down from Heaven.⁶

He reckons it, as one Error in them, That without any Order from God, they would adventure to go & burn Incense, in the Sanctuary. For, tho' this did not belong unto the High-Priest alone, yett upon this Day, Aaron only was commanded to perform the whole Service, as he was, upon the Day of Expiation. Bochart gives the same Accounts of their Offence, That Sine vocatione Thus obtulerunt.⁷

He reckons it another Error, That Both of them went about this Work; whereas the Incense was to be offered only by One, and not by Two at a Time. And Procopius Gazæus, adds, That they took a wrong Season too; and attempted it neither, in the Morning, nor in the Evening, which were the only Season.⁸

But the main Error was, They offered Strange Fire before the Lord. Here Abarbanel finds Two Sins more. One was, That they brought Fire from another Place, without the Sanctuary; & they took it not from off the Altar. Another was, That they attempted to go into the most Holy Place, which may be {interpreted} by these Words, Before the Lord. The Latter is not so probable; for Aaron himself had not yett gone in the Holy of Holies. The Former is the Opinion also of Aben-Ezra, & other Learned Men among the Jewes; who by Strange Fire, understand, Fire which did not go out from before the Lord; [Lev. 9.24.] that is, which was not taken from the Altar of Burnt-Offering, where Fire from Heaven lately consumed their Offerings. And thus R. Bechai adds; They imagined that the Fire on the Altar of Burnt-Offerings, was only for the Consuming of Sacrifices, & therefore they fetched some from without, for the Burning of Incense.⁹

elsewhere." Abarbanel thinks that in burning incense both Nadab and Abihu arrogated unto themselves what belonged unto the High Priest only, for "ordinary priests only do so when chosen for it by lot. ... On this inaugural day of all days, the High Priest was supposed to perform each part of the ritual, and especially the incense ritual, which was the most spiritual. ... [I]t was a criminal offense for two priests to offer incense simultaneously" (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:61).

6 The following paragraphs are extracted from Patrick, on Lev. 10:1 (Leviticus 139–41). Abarbanel here agrees with the Sages (Chazal) that the "inauguration of the Mishkan [Tabernacle] began seven days before the new moon, [on] Rosh Chodesh – the first of Nissan." On this auspicious day (the 8th day of the ceremony), "Aaron and his sons were initiated in the service of the holy Mishkan" (Selected Commentaries Vayikra/Leviticus 3:87–88). Ibn Ezra concurs that this mishap occurred on the last (or eighth) day of the ceremony, in JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot (3:61).

7 Abarbanel agrees with the Sages that at the climax of the dedication ceremony, Moses ordered "that the entire service of this day should be performed by Aaron exclusively" (Selected Commentaries Vayikra/Leviticus 3:88). Samuel Bochart, Hierozycon (1663), pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 49, p. 537, line 30, spells out their offense: "without calling they offered frankincense."

9 Abarbanel, JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot (3:61). R. Bechai, aka. R. Bachya ben Asher, on Lev. 10:1, in Midrash Rabbeinu Bachya Torah Commentary (5:1589).

The Jewes do some of them say, The Controversy of Heaven with them was, because they would not marry Wives. The Scripture indeed saies nothing of their Children.¹⁰ 3557.

Q. It is very strange, that the Error about Strange Fire, should be committed, by Two such excellent Men, who had received the Honour to be called up unto God, when He appeared on Mount-Sinai, and have a Sight of Him, and Eat and Drink in His Presence; and now sustained a very great Figure among the People of God?

A. It is highly probable, That at the Feast upon the Peace-Offerings, they did Eat and Drink too liberally; which made them forgett themselves, & fall into this gross Mistake.

Hence tis, that the Prohibition of Drinking, when the Priests were to go into the Sanctuary, immediately follows the Sad Story of this Matter.¹¹

Q. Nadab and Abihu, how were they Devoured? v. 2.

A. Not reduced unto Ashes, nor so much as their Cloathes burnt; but kill'd as Men sometimes are, with Lightning; their Vital Parts were penetrated, and their Breath was taken away in a Moment.¹²

Q. Why was this Order given unto Aaron, and his Sons in their Affliction, ye shall not go out from the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation? v. 7.

¹⁰ Abba Hanin, in Midrash Rabba (Leviticus XX:9), opines that Nadab and Abihu were struck dead “because they had no wives, for it is written, And [he shall] make atonement for himself, and for his house (Lev. XVI,6) and ‘his house’ signifies his wife.” And R. Levi adds, the brace of perpetrators was “arrogant” about their distinguished pedigree. “Many women remained unmarried waiting for them,” in Midrash Rabbah (Leviticus XX.10). Be that as it may, whatever the reason – their drunkenness, forwardness, presumption, or violation of the Holy of Holies – R. Abarbanel’s response seems best: “Since the Sages have propounded so many contradictory and unsatisfactory explanations, there is nothing improper in our questioning them,” in JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot (3:62). See also Abarbanel’s Selected Commentary Vayikra/Leviticus (3:84–88).

¹² Patrick (Leviticus 141). Rashbam, Chizkuni, and Gersonides – all agree (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 3:62). R. Bachya ben Asher adds that the body and soul of Nadab and Abihu “underwent a ‘surgical’ separation, the fire entering their bodies through their nostrils separating soul from body.” Yet only their body – not their soul (i. e., “their claim to the hereafter”) – was burned (Midrash Rabbeinu Bachya Torah Commentary 5:1591).

A. Either the Dayes of their Consecration were not quite ended, or they had begun some other Ministration in the Sanctuary.

The Hebrew's think, This Law, did not only bind Aaron, and his Sons, at this Time, but their Posterity forever; That if they heard of the Death of any of their Kindred, when they were ministering in the Sanctuary, they should not stir from their Duty; for that would have been to show a greater Affection unto a Dead Friend, than unto the Living God.¹³

Q. What Remark is to be made upon That; the Lord spake unto Aaron? v. 8.

A. So pleased the Lord was, with Aarons Obedience and Submission unto Him, that He Himself now spake unto Aaron, whereas He had formerly unto him only by Moses.¹⁴

Q. Do not Drink Wine, nor Strong Drink. What is meant by Strong Drink? v. 9.

A. By Wine, every one knowes is meant, that Liquor which is pressed out of Grapes. And by Strong Drink [Schechar,] is meant such Liquors, as were made in imitation of Wine, of Dates, and Figs, and many other sorts of Fruits; and that which was made of Honey, by us called, Mead, and Metheglin.¹⁵ There are many sorts of such Liquors mention'd by Pliny, which he calls, Vina factitia.¹⁶

The Jewes tell us, T'was no Offence against this Præcept, if before they went into the Sanctuary, the Priests drank no more than the Fourth Part of a Log, which contained an Egg-shel and an half. If they exceeded this Measure, their Ministry (they say,) was profaned; & they were liable to Death by the Hand of Heaven.¹⁷

13 Patrick (Leviticus 148). Nachmanides offers several explanations, the most forceful being that "it was an ongoing command, that they not leave the Tent in the middle of the priestly ritual." Nonetheless, Nachmanides's alternative interpretation is, "this really might have been a command for that day alone – that, like their father [Aaron], they [his sons Eleazar and Ithamar] stay inside out of respect for the celebration – in which case the ongoing commandment for all priest through the ages is that given in [Lev.] 21:12": anointed priests are to attend to God's sanctuary before all else (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:65).

14 Patrick (Leviticus 149).

15 Ibn Ezra offers the same explanation (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:65). The Hebrew noun שֶׁכָּר [shekar] signifies "strong drink, intoxicating drink, fermented or intoxicating liquor" (Strong's # 7941).

16 Patrick (Leviticus 149). Lat. "artificial wine" or "aromatic wine." Pliny (Naturalis Historia 14.19.107–21.115) provides a goodly number of intriguing recipes which, no doubt, cheered the hearts of the bibulous among the ancients.

17 Patrick (Leviticus 149–50). R. Levi Barzelonitae (Juris Hebraeorum Leges CCLXI [1655], sec. XII, praecept. CLVIII, pp. 217–18. In Hilchot K'Lei HaMikdash ViHaOvdim Bo (1.17, note 51), Maimonides explains "seven containers of liquid measures" – including the one for "a fourth of a log," which is a halachic measure of "approximately 86 cc or 150 cc" (Mishneh

There was a Law, in some Heathen Countreyes, That no Magistrate, all the Year he was in Office, nor any Judge, while he was in Action and Employment, should Οἶνου γεύεσθαι τὸ παράπαν. So much as Taste a Drop of Wine. So much Plato tells us; and Eusebius compares this Law of Moses with it. And Charemon the Stoick, describing the Diet of the Egyptian Priests, tell us, That some of them drunk no Wine at all, & others very little. They looked on the Drinking of Wine, to be, *An Impediment unto the finding out of the Truth.*¹⁸

Q. Moses, upon Inquisition found, That the Priests had burnt upon the Altar those Parts of the Sin-Offering; which they should have eaten themselves. Whence came this Mistake? v. 16.

A. It was the easier for them to mistake the Directions of Moses; because the Sin-Offering which had been offered for Aaron himself, was just before, wholly burnt without the Camp. And all the Sin-Offerings for the High-Priest, and for the whole Congregation, were ordered so to be. If their Blood was carried into the Holy Place, nothing of them was to be eaten. [Lev. 6.30.] Otherwise, their Flesh was to be eaten, in the Court of the Tabernacle, as it is expressly commanded. [Lev. 6.26.] This Distinction they did not well observe, when it was delivered; or being oppressed with Sorrow, for the Loss of Nadab and Abihu, they did not think it fitt, to Feast at this Time, upon the Flesh of this Offering.¹⁹

Q. Moses rebukes Eleazar and Ithamar, & would say nothing to their Father, as being lothe to add unto his Grief, (or, because the Neglect was chiefly on their Part:) But their Father (as perhaps being more able to do it,) makes their Excuse for them. What was the Excuse? v. 19.

A. He pleads, That they had not wholly violated the Command of God; but performed the Substance of it, tho' they had failed in a Circumstance. For they had not only offered the Sin-Offering for the People (which is here meant, by Their Sin-Offering;) but also their Burnt-Offering; and that in the Place, where the Lord ordered them to be offered. After this was done, there followed the Finally, Porphyrius of Tyre (De Abstinencia 4.6 lines 43–44) cites a history of Egypt, composed by the Stoic philosopher-historian Chaeremon of Alexandria (fl. 1st c. CE), librarian at the famous library of Alexandria: οἶνου γὰρ οἱ μὲν οὐδ' ὅλως, οἱ δὲ ὀλίγιστα ἐγεύοντο, "some of them drank no wine at all; and others, very little." And belying the ancient truism of "in vino veritas," Chaeremon explains that the Egyptian priests viewed imbibing wine as ἐμπόδιον εἰς εὑρεσιν "an obstacle to the discovery" of truth (De Abstinencia 4.6 lines 46–47).

Q. Of all the Creatures forbidden to the Tables of the Jewes, there was none so abominable to them, as the Swine.¹ They cannot bear so much as to speak the Name of that Beast; but call it, דְּבַר אָחֵר, Rem Aliam, sive, Nefandam. The Story of the Maccabees has exemplified unto us, what miserable, and unspeakable Torments, they have undergone rather than Tast one Bitt of it. After the Dayes of Antiochus it became a severe Law among them, Ne quis vel alat Porcum.² Their Adversaries, have noted this Jewish Disposition, with both Mockage & Wonder. Caligula with his Courtiers, derided it into the Jewes of Alexandria; and Plutarch will produce you other Scoffers at it; and their Persecutors would still bring a Dish of Pork, as the cheef Temptation, with which they still fell upon that Nation.³ When the Pagans have reflected upon this Jewish Abstinence from Swines-Flesh, they have argued strange Things upon it. Tacitus ridiculously tells us, Sue abstinent Judei, memoria cladis, quòd eos scabies quondam Turpaverat; cui id Animal obnoxium. Porphyrius foolishly saies, T'was, ὅτι οὐδ' ὧλως ἐν τοῖς τόποις ἐφύετο, because those Regions bred not those Animals. Petronius profanely saies T'was this,

2 Spencer's source (115) is Wilhelm Schickard's מִשְׁפַּט הַמֶּלֶךְ [Mishpat Hamelech] Jus Regium Hebraeorum e Tenebris Rabbinicis erutum & luci donatum (1625), cap. 5: "De Bello," pp. 148, 149. The Latin rendition of the Hebrew quote from Schickard (p. 148) translates "Another thing which is nefarious." The story of the Maccabean revolt against the Seleucid Antiochus IV Epiphanes (c. 215–164 BCE) is well known; it can be found in Josephus Flavius's Antiquities (12.6–11) and in the apocryphal 1–4 Maccabees. Setting up statues of pagan gods in the Temple of Jerusalem, outlawing upon pain of death the possession of Torah scrolls, circumcision, and traditional sacrifices, Antiochus set up his own high priests in the Temple and imposed Hellenic customs on the Jewish population. Mattathias (d. 165 BCE) and his sons ultimately lead a successful revolt against their Seleucid overlord and established the Hasmonaeen dynasty which fitfully governed Judea for a century until 63 BCE when Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus (106–48 BCE) and his Roman armies captured Jerusalem and turned Palestine into a Roman province. The Hasmonaeans came to an end in 37 BCE when Rome set up Herod the Great (73 BCE–4 BCE) as king over Judea and Palestine (AB). At any rate, the law established by the sons of Mattathias threatened severe punishment "lest anyone raise hogs."

3 Spencer's source (117) is Petrus Cunaeus, De Republica Hebraeorum Libri III (1617), lib. 2, cap. 24, pp. 332–51. The hatred for the Jews, which Roman Emperor Gaius Julius Caesar Augustus Germanicus, aka. Caligula (37–41 CE), and his courtiers incited, along with their many atrocities, are remembered in Philo Judaeus, De Virtutibus et Legatione ad Caium (1640), p. 1042. See also De Legatio ad Caium (sec. 361, lines 2ff) and On the Embassy to Gaius (16.–18.114–126), in Works (767–68). Plutarch tells his story in his Quaestiones Conviviales 4.5 (669, sec. c, lines 11–13; sec. e, line 9 – sec. f lines 1–6).

*Judeus, licet et porcinum Numen adoret.*⁴

And when the Christians have Reflected on the same thing, they have as much miss'd the Mark. Some, with Cunæus, have given a physical Account of it; As if they were afraid of contracting Leprous Affects, by meddling with such a Diet. Others, with Novatian, and Lactantius, have gone to mystical Reason; as if Uncleanesses were hereby significantly avoided!⁵

But will you please to assign, the True Cause of the Thing? v. 7.

A. My Doctor Spencer, shall for mee. First, the Swine evidently fails, in one great Article, belonging to the Character of a Clean Creature, by the Appointment of the Law. [Lev. 11.7.] Again, The Swine is a Beast, which naturally converses more with Sordid & Filthy Matters, than any other Creature. [See 2. Pet. 2.22.] And the Cæremonial Part of the Law, given to the Israelites, a People whose Education had been, in the Mud of Egypt, had oftentimes a special Respect unto the Documents of Cleanliness and Neatness, among the People.⁶

⁶ Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 1, cap. 5, sec. 4, fol. 119.

Thirdly, There were many Oriental Nations, enumerated by Bochart, whose Antipathy to the lothesome Swine, might well inflame the like Hatred thereof among the Jewes. Both Ælian, and Herodotus, do particularly report this Disposition, in the old Egyptians.⁷

Fourthly, T^h was very significantly done of the Jewes, to single out the Dislike of the Dirty Swine, as the Ceremony, whereby they would peculiarly signalize, their Addictedness unto Judaism. This Juvenal noted as the Special Distinction of that Nation,

*Et Vetus indulget Senibus Clementia Porcis.*⁸

Lastly, That which of all things, might render Swine, the most abominable to the People of God, was, the Use, which the Pagans made thereof, in their Lustrations, their Sacrifices, their Magical Mysteries, and their Festivities.

For their Lustrations, consider what you have, in Isa. 66.17.⁹

For their Sacrifices, Lett Varro tell you, that, Sus, or ŷς, was of old, θύς, from the Word θύειν, to Sacrifice, and that among other Customes, one was, for, a New Married Couple to Sacrifice a Swine. Athenæus ha's the like Intimations; and Ovid sings,

Prima Ceres avida gavisa est Sanguine Porcæ, Ultra suas Meritâ cede nocentis opes.

And Horace ha's it,

— Immolet æquis

Hic porcum Laribus. —

Indeed some Nations did offer Swine in Sacrifices, particularly to obtain a sound Mind. Antiochus, Syrnamed — ἐπιμανής, or, The Furious, chose this Kind of Sacrifices very much, by Piacular Swine, to expiate his Madnesses.¹⁰

For their Magical Mysteries, consider, that Passage, in Isa. 65.4. They lodge in the Monuments, eat Swines Flesh, & Broth of Abominable Things, is in their

7 Bochart, Hierozoicon, De Animalibus (1663), pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 57, col. 702, 703, supplies Spencer (119–20) and Mather with pertinent discussions in Claudius Aelianus (De natura animalium 10.16, lines 1–5) and in Herodotus (2.47) — both describing the Egyptians' antipathy for pigs.

8 Spencer (120); Juvenal (Satire 6.160) pokes fun at Agrippa's "incestuous sister," who wore a huge agate stone as an ornament in Judea, where "their traditional mercy is kind to elderly pigs" (proscription against eating pork).

9 See Mather's gloss on Isa. 66:17 (BA 5:857).

10 Varro (De Re Rustica 2.4.9) tells us that "the Greek name for pig is ŷς, once called θύς, from the verb θύειν, that is, to sacrifice," for sacrificing a pig at the nuptials of eminent Etruscans (Etruscans) was a customary rite. Much the same is told by Athenæus (Deipnosophistae 9.64, lines 14–17). Ovid (Fasti 1.349–40) sings, "The first to joy in blood of [a] greedy sow was Ceres, who avenged her crops by the just slaughter of the guilty beast." Horace (Satires 2.3.164–65) laughs at wealthy misers like Opimius who, in spite of his hoard of gold and silver, lives like a pauper. To cure himself of his insane miserliness, "Let him slay a hog to the kind Lares," guardians of home, domestic property, and fertility. The Seleucid Antiochus IV Epiphanes received the moniker "the furious" or "the madman" for his Drakonian efforts to Hellenize Judea, in Athanaeus of Naucratis's Deipnosophistae (5.21). See also Diodorus Siculus (34/35.1.1–5).

Vessels. It seems that Swines Flesh, or Swines Broth, eaten, was a Sacrament, whereby the Wretches Dedicated themselves unto the Dive; and so they became Δαιμονολήπτοι.¹¹

For their Festivities; In their Sacred ones, you find Athenæus mentioning a Swine, employ'd on the Holiday to Venus; In their Civil ones, you find Juvenal crying up a Swine for a Dainty,

Moris erat quondam, Festis Servare Diebus,

Sicci Terga Suis. —

Yea, Their Covenants often had this Rite belonging to them;

— Casa Jungebant Fœdera porcâ:

saies Virgil.¹²

And a Swine carried in the Roman Banners, was made a Token of Peace.

| Now Idolatries, were, both as to Name and Thing, Abominations, among [21v]
the People of God.

And, if you'l say, that a long Tradition & Opinion of Ancestors, made the Swine to become yett more Abominable, I beleeve, you will not say amiss.

Briefly, As Doctor Spencer expresses it:

*Odium illud, quo Judæi porcum olim Hodièque prosequabantur, Lex quidem plantavit, Nativa porci Fœditas rigavit, eique Præjudicium, Traditione et Usu confirmatum, dedit Incrementum.*¹³

Q. But can't you give a shorter Account, why Swines-flesh was forbidden to the Israelites?

A. What the Egyptians did use to Eat, the Israelites might not Eat; that so they might be effectually cured of, & secured from, the Manners of that Countrey, wherinto they had in their Captivity been so much Degenerated.

Thus, God enjoined the Israelites to Eat no Swines-flesh, because there were no Four-footed Animals on whose Flesh the Egyptians fed, but This; reckoning other Creatures to be sacred, as Herodotus, and Diodorus, and others testify; and as tis intimated in Gen. 43.32. and 46.34. which Places are carried this Way

not only by the chief ancient & modern Expositors, but also by the famous Onkelos and Jonathan.¹⁴

Q. How far ha's the Abhorrency of Swines-flesh been propagated?

A. Unto far distant Countreyes & Ages. The Mahometans have it; and particularly as far off as Mindanao, among the Philippine Islands; where, Dampier in his Relation of a late Voyage round the World, informs us, if any one have touched one of these Creatures, he is not permitted to come into any Bodies House, for many Dayes after. He also relates, That the Sultans Brother, having a Pair of Shooes made him, (which they seldome wear there) by one of their Ships Crew, he fell into a great Passion, when he was told, the Threed with which the Shooes were sewed, was pointed with Hogs-Bristles, and would not wear them.¹⁵

Q. There were some Things, that whatsoever touched them, when they were Dead, was unclean; it might not be used, until cleansed?

A. R. Levi tells us, The Jewes called these things, The Fathers of Pollutions; because, by their Contact, they defiled other things.

The Reason, why these Creatures made things unclean more than others, he acknowledges, is not manifest; but he gives us, a Pious Admonition thereupon;

"If by our Reason (saies he) we be able to discern the Usefulness of some Præcepts, Lett us be very Thankful for it; but if we cannot find, how they, are

¹⁵ Patrick, on Lev. 11:8 (Leviticus 166). William Dampier, A New Voyage round the World (1697), ch. 12, describes his 1686 visit to Mindanao, the capital of the second-largest island of the same name in the E Philippines. His anthropologically interesting description of Muslim customs (pp. 324–44) and the Sultan's abhorrence of a pair of leather shoes spoiled by the touch of "Hogs bristles" (p. 344) serve Mather to test the extent to which the antipathy for hogs has spread throughout the world. However, the case is different in America. That reasons other than religious proscriptions are responsible for the Algonquians' hatred for New English hogs is explained in Mather's Life of John Eliot. Commenting on Eliot's endeavor to discover any link between the Lost Tribes of Israel and New England's Native Americans, Mather explains, "They [Indians] have too a great unkindness for our Swine; but I suppose that is because our Hogs devour the Clams which are a Dainty with them [Indians]," in Magnalia Christi Americana (1702), bk. 3, part III, p. 193.

any Way profitable to us, Lett us beleeve, that God, in His infinite Wisdome, saw the Benefit, we should receive by it, & therefore commanded it.”¹⁶

Q. What was the True Reason, for the, Difference of Meats, assigned by the Law of Moses? v. 8.

A. When wee consider, on the one Side, with what Religion, even to Martyr-dome, the ancient Saints of God among the Jewes, would abstain from all Meats, by the Law pronounced unclean; and on the other Side, with what Contempt that Law is mentioned by the ancient Writers that were Strangers to the Commonwealth of Israel; wee cannot but count this Matter, worthy of an Enquiry;

Now, in answer to this Enquiry.¹⁷

Shall wee say, That purely out of Respect unto the Health of His People, the Lord ordered a Distinction of Meats for them? and that the Ruminating Animals were particularly allowed because things were better Digested in them? Indeed, Grotius do's herein seek for Natural Causes, Ex Bono vel Malo Nutrimento: and Anastasius Sinaita, sais, the Forbidden Creatures, were πλείονα τὸν ἰὸν ἐχόντα, Such as had in them, the most of Poison. But surely, our God is as much concerned, for the Health of us Christians, who are also a Chosen Generation, a Royal Priesthood, an Holy Nation, as ever Hee was for the Jewes? Besides, among the Forbidden Creatures, wee shall find some, which all Antiquity, ha's justly pronounced, as Wholesome, as Toothsome. Cyril tells us, that the Primitive Beleevers, in that Opinion, fed on all sorts of Things. And Plutarch wonders, that the Rab-bet should bee disallowed, when all Mankind agreed it, so fine a Nourishment. Artemidorus makes a Dream of a Swine, an happy Præsaige, because Ἀριστα πᾶσι τὰ χοίρεια, Optimæ Omnibus carnes porcinæ. Athenæus will scarce ever lett a Swan bee wanting at the Table of the Deipnosophists. Aristotle reckons young Hawks, among his Delicacies.¹⁸

¹⁷ Mather's answer in the following paragraphs is extracted from John Spencer's De Legibus (1685), lib. 1, cap. 5, secs. 1–2, fols. 97–104.

¹⁸ Spencer (97). In his Annotaciones ad Leviticum, Lev. 11:3, in Opera Omnia Theologica (1679), 1:63, the famous Dutch jurist Hugo Grotius looks for natural causes why animals provide “good or bad sustenance” for human consumption. The passage, for which Mather provides his translation, appears to be adapted from Questiones et Responsiones (Question 26, sec. 2), by the Greek theologian and abbot of Mt. Sinai monastery Anastasius Sinaita (fl. 7th c.), aka. “the new Moses” (CA). Cyril Alexandrinus (Contra Julian 9); Plutarch (Symposiacs 4.5.3). The Greek diviner of dreams, Artemidorus Daldianus (fl. 2nd c. CE), opines in his dreamy Oneirocriticon (1.70, line 11) that “of all things, the meat of a hog is the most pleasant.” Athenæus (Deipnosophistae 3.49, 9.64) deems it fit for the gods. And Aristotle (Historia animalium

Or, shall wee say, Secondly, That some Sorts of Meat were determined Unclean, because they Imparted some Uncleanness unto the Minds of the Eaters? That their gross Juices contributed unto grosser Vices in the Souls of Men? Either more Mediately, by infecting of their Bodies, or more Immediately, by polluting the Spirits themselves? The Pythagoreans thought the former, & the Pharisees the latter; but with Reason little enough. For the Allowed Creatures left the Devourers, as Internally Vitious, as the Forbidden. Besides, Eating of them once in a way, or so, might still have been permitted, without the Danger of such an Effect. Good Reason then was there, for the Saying of the Christians, who are by Porphyrius, when hee quotes it call'd Barbarians; Non inquinant nos cibi, uti neque mare Fluminum Sordes.¹⁹

Or shall wee say, Thirdly, That the Egyptians worshipped some Animals as Numinous, and consulted other Animals, as Oraculous; and for this Cause God ordered some of them for the Tables of His People, but others of them Hee Banished thence? Thus Basil, thus Theodoret, thus Origen, have elegantly discoursed; tho' wee may not stand now to quote the Passage. But it will enfeeble this Ingenious Conjecture, to consider, that the Patriarchs had their Distinction of Sacrificeable Creatures from others, before the Egyptian Superstitions and Idolatries, were so far come in Play. And a Dog was venerated by the Egyptians, as well as an Ox or a Ram; and yett they come not into the same rank in the divine Prohibitions. And, Moses determines Cleanness & Uncleanness, according to but one general Rule for it.²⁰

Or, shall wee say, Fourthly, That the Distinction of Eateables, was made upon Symbolical Accounts; and that in the Hare, was forbidden Cowardise, in the Swine, Filthiness, in the Owl, Ignorance, in the Hawk, Rapacitie, and in the Camel, as Novatian speaks, Vitam Enervem, et Criminibus Tortuosam. A Thousand Witty Sentences, might bee cited from the Ancients, to show how they Indulged themselves, in such Allegories. But what shall wee say, when wee see it 564a, lines 3–5) appears to fancy young hawks because they “also get palatable and fat” (History of Animals 6.7.564a, 4).

19 Spencer (99). Porphyrius of Tyre (De Abstinencia 1.42) disparages the Christian barbarians who say “we are not defiled by food, neither is the sea by the filth of rivers” (On Abstinence 1.42.34).

20 The Greek Bishop Basilus Seleuciensis (d. c. 458–460) discusses clean and unclean animals in his Sermones XLI. [PG 085. 0093, lines 9–19]; Theodoretus Cyrensis (Questiones in Octateuchum, p. 154, lines 5–6) mentions several of the species of animals revered and deified in Egypt; and Origen (Contra Celsum 4.93, lines 1–8) admires Moses’ acumen, “having observed the varying natures of animals, and having either learned from God what was peculiar to them, and to the demons which are kindred to each of the animals, or having himself ascertained these things by his own wisdom, has, in arranging the different kinds of animals, pronounced all those which are supposed by the Egyptians and the rest of mankind to possess the power of divination to be unclean, and, as a general rule, all that are not of that class to be clean” (ANF 4:538). The Egyptians revered Anubis, the dog-like jackal, god of the underworld; Apis, the bull-deity revered in Memphis; and Khnum, the ram-headed creator god.

impossible to brand some of the prohibited Creatures, with any Scandalous Resemblances? Nor were so dull Capacities, as the Hebrew ones, to bee thus mystically warned against Miscarriages. And luxuriant Fancies here take Occasion, to debase the august Edict of Heaven, with a World of Trifling Mysteries.²¹

Or shall wee say, Fifthly, That God Revived the Usages of Elder Ages, and of Other Nations, in Distinguishing of Meats for His People? So indeed saith Grotius. But it will not do. For no other People had These Distinctions, before or after; and God made them, on Purpose to separate His own, from All other People.²²

Or shall wee say, Sixthly, That God required His People to Distinguish their Meats, on Purpose, to furnish them with daily Provocations unto the Remembrance & Obedience of their great Lawgiver? Justin Martyr does indeed apprehend so, in His Dialogue with Tryphon. But, the People had other Admonitions enough to have minded them of their God, if they would have taken due Notice thereof. And the Authority of God, was more needful to bee minded, for the Obliging of this Distinction, than the Practicing of this Distinction to mind them of that Authority.²³

Or, shall wee say, Seventhly, That the Sovereign Will & Pleasure of God, was all the Cause of the Commandment for the Distinguishing of Meats, to bee enquired after; the thing being Arbitrarily Imposed, according to Spanhemius, Gentis rudiocis coercere Libertatem, et exercere Obsequium. So indeed Cunæus founds all, in Incertâ Numinis Voluntate. But wee may give this Honour unto the Wisdome and Goodness of God, as to suppose, that no large Number of Arbitrary Lawes enacted by Him, for His People. And some other Lawes would have been more agreeable to the meer Design of Tying and Curbing the Hebrew Nation.²⁴

| Or, shall I say, Eighthly, That all the Distinction of Meats commanded, was only to Teach a luxurious Generation of Men, Temperance & Abstinence? Tertullian ha's this Notion of it. But methinks, there would have been some of the [22v]

21 Spencer (100). Novatian, in his Epistola de Cibus Judaicis (ch. 3), allegorizes the proscription against eating a camel, because the exempla of this animal “condemns a life nerveless and crooked with crimes” (ANF 5:647).

22 Spencer (100); Grotius, on Lev. 11:3, in Annotationes (1.1:63).

23 Spencer (101); Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho (20), in ANF 1:204.

24 Spencer (101) cites from Dubiorum Evangelicorum. Pars Tertia (1639), Dubium CXVII, p. 588, by Frederic Spanheim, the Elder (1600–49), professor of philosophy and theology at Geneva, and father of two distinguished scions who followed in his steps. In his chapter (CXVII) on the abrogation of the distinction between clean and unclean foods, Spanheim wonders if the institution of the dietary laws of Moses God intended “to curb and cultivate the rude people's liberty and obedience.” Petrus Cunaeus, De Republica Hebraeorum Libri III (1617), lib. 2, cap. 24, p. 341, founds all on the “uncertainty of the divine will and purpose.”

Pleasanter Meats then Inhibited, & some of the Loathsomer would have been Recommended.²⁵

It seems none of all These things may bee said. But what shall wee say then?

Say, That God had Separated the Nation of Israel to bee a Peculiar People unto Himself: and that, as an Intimation of such a Separation, Hee would forbid unto their Tables diverse things that were used by all other People. Consider exactly, Lev. 20.24, 25, 26. and you'l Say This. By this Rite as Davenant expresses it, they were to Recognize it that they were a People peculiarly sanctified unto God from the uncleanner Nations of the World.²⁶

Say again; That the singular Dignity & Excellence, whereto God had Raised the Israelitish Nation required, in the Singularity of their Diet, some Token of it. Ponder Exod. 22.31. and Deut. 14.2, 3. with v. 21. and you'l Say This also. And in a Commemoration hereof, Agobardus tells us, that in his Time, All Flesh not laudable was by the proud Jewes rejected, under the Title of, Christiana Pecora.²⁷

Say further; That God, by a Special Distinction of Meats, taught his People many Lessons of Holiness. Hee taught that they served an Holier God than the Pagans did. [Weigh, Lev. 11.44, 45.] Yea, that they served Him, on the Score of His being so, The Holy One of Israel, would not lett His People Touch many things, which were even offered on the Altars of the Gentiles.²⁸

Such Lessons of Holiness, this Way insinuated suited well enough with the puerile State of the Church, under the *Mosaic Pædago*gy.

25 Spencer (102); In his Adversus Marcionem (2.18), Tertullian maintains, “et si Lex aliquid cibis detrahit, & immunda pronunciat animalia quae aliquando benedicta sunt; consilium exercendae continentiae intellige, & fraenos impositos illi gulae agnosce, quae cū panem ederet Angelorum, cucumeres & pepones Ægyptiorum desiderabat. Agnosce simul & comitibus gulae, libidini scilicet atque luxuriae, prospectum, quae ferè ventris castigatione frigescent. Manducaverat enim populus, & biberat, & surrexerat ludere” [PL 002. 0306A]. I.e., “When, again, the law took somewhat away from man’s food, by pronouncing unclean certain animals which were once blessed, you should understand this to be a measure for encouraging continence, and recognize in it a bridle imposed on that appetite which, while eating angels’ food, craved after the cucumbers and melons of the Egyptians. Recognize also therein a precaution against those companions of the appetite, even lust and luxury, which are usually chilled by the chastening of the appetite. For ‘the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play’ [Exod. 23:6]” (ANF 3:311).

26 Spencer (lib. 1, cap. 5, sec. 2, fol. 103) quotes from Expositio Epistolae D. Pauli, ad Colossenses (1627), p. 292, on Col. 2:17, by John Davenant (c. 1572–1641), Lady Margaret professor of divinity and subsequently bishop of Salisbury.

27 Spencer (104). Agobardus Lugdunensis (c. 779–840), archbishop of Lyon and vociferous opponent of the Jews, claims in his “De Insolentia Iudaeorum,” in Opera (1605), p. 59, that Jews rejected non-kosher meat under the title of “the Christian herd” [PL 104. 0073B].

28 Spencer (104).

And, wee know well, that even among the Gentiles themselves, there were Pretences to Purity. Sometimes, in this very Way, instructed. An Egyptian would not use the Knife, Spitt, or Pott, of a Græcian.²⁹

Say, That as the Cleanness of the Israelites, thus the Uncleanness of the rest, of the untaught, & misled World, was in this Distinction testified unto. [See Lev. 20.24, 25, 26.] By the same Token, when Peter saw all sorts of Meats tendered him, to bee Eaten, hee made this Use of it, God hath shewed mee, that I should not call any Man, common or unclean.³⁰

Yea, Say, That God would hereby render His People unsociable, to those, whose Evil Communications might else quickly have corrupted their Good Manners. Hence wee find the rest sometimes objecting to the Jewes their, τὸ ἄμικτον, τὸ ἀσύμφυλον, τῆς διαίτης ἀμειξίαν, Insociabilem vivendi rationem.

Thus to Say, my Doctor Spencer ha's Instructed mee.³¹

Q. For that Rule, Whatsoever parteth the Hoof, and is Cloven-footed, & cheweth the Cud, among the Beasts, that yee shall eat: And that Rule, Whatsoever hath Fins & Scales in the Waters, them shall yee Eat.³² What Reason?

A. If you hear what the Tribe of Allegorizers have to say of it, you'l hear Fancies enough to tire you.³³

But waving all pretended Reasons for this Rule, the true Account that is to be given of it, is; That God so ordered the Rule for the Distinction of Meats, as to bee an Effectual Partition-Wall between His own People and other Nations. Had meer Salubritie been considered as the Reason why this was Allowed, and that was Forbidden, others had been more likely to have come unto some Agreement with the Israelites, in the Regulation of their Tables. And already, among the Egyptians, the Student of Purity abstained from all Fish whatsoever; as to Beasts, they conformed their Abstinence according to some Circumstances of their Horns & Hoofs; as to Birds, their Abstinence was only from the Carnivorous; Now the Rule of Abstinence among the Jewes, was contrived with such a Contradiction to the Egyptians as to Rescue them from all the superstitious Conceits in Egypt, wherein the Abstinence of the Fanaticks there had been founded.

²⁹ Spencer (106).

³⁰ Spencer (107).

³¹ Spencer (107). The Greek quote appears to be an adaptation of Josephus Flavius, Antiquitates (11.212, line 3; 13.246, line 1) and describes how Jews survive by a relentless method of self-segregation: "the incompatible, unsuitable, abstinence of a way of life"; hence their "unsociable way of life."

³² Lev. 11:4, 10.

And the erroneous Whimseys of the other Gentiles who also had their Abstineneces, among them, were in this Manner likewise Anticipated; Lucian, Ælian, Plutarch, tell you enough of them, to make you weary; but especially, I wonder at what Cæsar tells of our Ancestors, Leporem, Gallinam, et Anserem gustare, fas non putant.³⁴

If any Man will further urge, that the Creatures permitted unto the Israeli-tish Diet, had Naturally in them some Dignity, or Mundity above others, I will consent, that it may bee generally True.³⁵

But now, Manum de Tabulâ.³⁶

Q. I perceive, you are not fond of being too curious, about the Lessons of Mys-tical Divinity, in the Lawes about Clean and Unclean Meats. However, methinks, there may some Lessons bee afforded from them?

A. Perhaps, I have been less Fond, than I should have been, of this Matter. For, I am very sensible, That the Ancient and Eastern People were very much given to have their Doctrines delivered in such Hieroglyphicks and the Hieroglyphicks, of Egypt, from which Countrey the Israelites came, were a famous Way of Teach-ing whereof the Memory is yett preserved.

However, the most obstinate Refuser of Hieroglyphical Reasons, for the Dis-tinction of Meats imposed upon the Jewes, cannot but acknowledge, that there are some good Lessons to bee learnt from the Prohibitions. Among those, I'll give you one at this Time:

It is, methinks, a very good Note, made more than Four hundred Years ago, by old Raymund Martini in his famous, Pugio Fidei.

Hee is going to oppose his Adversaries, the Philosophers; and hee thus makes his Introduction.

³⁴ Lucian, De Syria Dea (54, lines 1–4), shakes his head in disbelief: The Gauls “sacrifice bulls and cows and goats and sheep. Swine alone they neither sacrifice nor eat because they consider them unclean. But other men deem them not unclean but holy”; Aelianus, De natura animalium (9.65, 10.23), observes that the initiates in the Eleusinian mysteries of Demeter and Persephone “will not touch Dog-fish, for (they say) it is no clean food, since it gives birth through its mouth”; however, those better informed know that the dog-fish merely hides its hatchlings in its mouth when danger approaches; yet these more enlightened adepts will “not taste of a Red Mullet,” for they are sacred to Hera at Argos (9.65). Alas, the Egyptian women of Coptos, when in mourning, “worship and deify the female gazelle, though they sacrifice the male,” because (they say) “the females are the pets of Isis” (10.23). Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride (354a, lines 1–5), relates that the “only sacrifice and eating of a pig [occurs] at the time of the full moon” for Typhon, Osiris’s nemesis. Julius Caesar, De Bello Gallico (5.12), smiles, “they [Britons] do not regard it lawful to eat hare, and the cock, and the goose.”

³⁵ Spencer, De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 1, cap. 5, sec. 3, fol. 112.

³⁶ “Take your hands off the table.”

*Cùm in lege, [Deuter. 14. Vers.7] Dominus vellet ostendere Immundiciam Cameli, et Leporis, et Cuniculi, et Porci, quod erat in eis laudabile præmisit, quod autem vituperabile subjunxit. Camelus, ruquet, et Lepus, et Cuniculus, quia ruminant, sed ungulam non findunt, immunda sunt tibi. Porcus verò, quia ungulam quidem findit, sed non ruminat, immundus erit tibi. Nos ergò exemplo ipsius Domini, quæ in Philosophis fuerint commendabilia, præmittamus; quæ verò digna vituperio, evaginato pugione Deo Juvante, jugulemus.*³⁷

Q. But why may we not suppose, That the Lord præscribed and provided for the Health of His People, in His Prohibitions of Meats unto them?

A. I am now willing to grant it; especially since my Reading Dr. Grewes excellent Cosmologia Sacra. He thinks, That the Earth and Air, & so the Vegetable Diet, being in a worse Condition, after the Flood, Animals were therefore allow'd then to be eaten; and the rather with respect unto the Colder Climates, which probably was not so much inhabited before the Flood, & wherein there is a less Variety of Delicious Plants, and Flesh is more Necessary & Desireable. He thinks likewise, that Gods Intent of reducing the Life of Man to a shorter Measure, was herein answered; but withal, to give more Vigour to the Minds of Men, | tho' that of their Bodies were abated. For, of Land-Animals, the Carnivorous, we know, are the most sagacious. However, the Eating of Raw-Flesh was then forbidden; & much more the Eating of Blood alone. Partly because Raw-Flesh would have been insuperable to the Stomach in most Countreyes; especially those which are very Hott; as in Persia, where they roast it, until it fall from the Bone. Partly, because it would have yielded an Ill sort of Nourishment; infecting the Mind, with melancholy, cruel, and savage Conceits; & causing an unequal Growth of the Body; for, besides Man, there is no Creature ha's the Rickets, but a Butchers Dog, that lives much upon Blood.³⁸ [23v]

And now, the Law about Meats, comes under a further Digestion, as delivered by Moses; who is the first Dietetic Writer in the World. Even the Author, who denies, that God had regard unto the Health of His People, in forbidding certain Meats unto them, in the next Page allowes, that some were præferred, propter Salubrem Succum. Why might not the Almighty make Lawes for the Health of His People, as well as work Miracles for it. Why not Lawes for their Health, as well as for their Goods?³⁹

³⁷ Mather cites from the anti-Semitic polemic, Pugio Fidei Adversus Mauros, et Judæos (1651), pars 1, cap. 5: "De secta philosophorum" (p. 166), by old Raimundo Martini (fl. 13th-c.), a Spanish Dominican. Martini's Dagger of Faith (c. 1270) aimed to convert Jews and Muslims. Mather's citation reads, "Since in the law [Deut. 14:7] God wanted to show the impurity of the camel, and of the rabbit, and of the pig, he sent ahead something which was praiseworthy among them and also added something blameworthy: the camel, the hyrax, the hare and rabbit, because they ruminate, but do not have a split hoof, will be unclean to you. The pig, indeed, because it assuredly has the cloven hoof but does not ruminate, will be unclean to you. Let us therefore, by the example of the Lord himself, allow things that have been commended among the philosophers; things truly deserving of blame, let us destroy with dagger unsheathed, with God's help." A useful study of Martini is R. Harvey's Raymundus Martini and the Pugio Fidei (2008).

³⁸ Nehemiah Grew, Cosmologia Sacra (1701), bk. 4, ch. 7, p. 233, § 25.

Indeed there were Spiritual Reasons for these Lawes; That must not be denyed; but there was one Temporal End of them, & that was the Health of the People. The Fat not mixed with the Flesh might not be eaten; It is injurious to the Stomach. Blood especially in Hott Countreyes, yeelds an Atrabilarious Chyle. On the Feast of Tabernacles, one Bullock was to be deducted, every day, the better to beware of a Surfet. The Birds, the Beasts, the Fishes, here permitted, are supposed by all Civilized Nations, to be the most wholesome.⁴⁰

Swines-flesh was indeed a Dainty among the Romans; but they lived further from the Line than Judea, in a more Temperate Climate. Nor was Italy ever so full of Diseases, as after they grew luxurious in Diet, especially in Swines-flesh. This Flesh is very apt to breed the Leprosy, & other Diseases, in Hott Countreyes. It was therefore, as Herodotus tells us, abominable to the Egyptians also. Plutarch notes, that the Milk of the Swine drunk, produces the Scab. Hippocrates observes, That if the Flesh be not well-roasted, it produces Choleric Disorders. If it be not well-salted, as well as Roasted, even in England itself, it produces many a Diarrhæa, yea, and many a Feavour too. Had the Jewes used it with Salt, it would have caused a Scab. And it would have tempted them to Salt other Meats; which is little used, (as not wholesome) in those Parts of the World. Salt was therefore præscribed, for the Seasoning of none but Meat-Offerings (which consisted of none but Vegetables,) in the Mosaic Law.⁴¹

Wee will add one Hint more. The Jewes were, as Tacitus expresses it of them, Projectissima ad Libidinem Gens. God therefore lessened their Variety of Meats, which is an Incentive to Venery; and he especially forbad those that stimulate, as all shelled and flying Insects, which in {a} hott Countrey, partake more or less, of the fiery and provoking Nature of the Cantharides. Thus they were fitted, for begetting an Healthier and Stronger Breed, & so for becoming more populous.⁴²

39 Grew (bk. 4, ch. 8, pp. 239–40, § 18) tells us that some meats were preferred “on account of their wholesome juice.” Who that contrarian is I have not been able to determine.

40 Grew (bk. 4, ch. 8, p. 240, § 19). “Atrabilarious” or rather “Atrabiliarious Chyle” is, according to good old Claudius Galen, a “black-biled” “fluid or humor, concocted and already elaborated, but still needing its concoction to be completed” (Galen, Usefulness 1:205), or, in plain English, a milky predigestive juice formed in the stomach and intestines.

41 Grew (bk. 4, ch. 8, p. 240, § 20). Herodotus (2.47); Plutarch, Iside et Osiride (354a, lines 1–3). Hippocrates, De morbis popularibus (5.1.10).

42 Nehemia Grew, Cosmologia Sacra (1701), bk. 4, ch. 8, p. 241, § 22, quotes Cornelius Tacitus (Historia 5.5), who claims that “although as a race, they [Jews] are prone to lust, they ‘abstain from intercourse with foreign women.’” The fashionable aphrodisiac that aroused the passions in Mather’s time, says Grew, was “Cantharides” or “Spanish fly.”

Q. The learned Bochart hath acquitted himself so well, & with so much Demonstration of Learning & Reading, in rectifying our Translation of the Names of the Quadrupeds, and Reptiles, in the Bible, that we may now readily accept his Opinion and Correction of the Names of the Volatils, without your being at the Pains, to transcribe his Reasons. Give us therefore, if you please, his Translation of the Names of the Unclean Fowle, as they ly, in Leviticus and in Deuteronomy? v. 13.

A. It shall be done.

1. /נֶשֶׁר/ Neser, is by general Consent, The Eagle, the King of the winged People: The Etymology of whose Name, carries in it, (as Bochart proves, having rejected other Conjectures,) A Tearing of his Prey with his Bill.⁴³

2. /פֶּרֶס/ Peres, which we render the Ossifrage, is not rendred amiss. The Etymology countenances it. Or, we may rather with Bochart call it, The Osspray.⁴⁴

3. /עֹזְנִיָּה/ Oznijah, which we render the Osspray, is by Bochart proved sufficiently to be the Melanæetus, the Aquila valeria, (so called from its wonderful Strength;) or, The Black Eagle.⁴⁵

4. /דָּאָה/ or, /רָאָה/ Daah, or, Raah, is truly, The Kite; we render it, The Glade. The former Name, it has from the Strength of its Flight, the latter from the Strength of its Sight.⁴⁶

5. /אֵיָּה/ Ajah, which we render, the Kite, is with Bochart, The Smirle, or Merlin Hawk.⁴⁷

6. /דָּיָה/ Dajah, which we render, The Vulture, is by Bochart referr'd unto a special kind, which he calls, The Black Vulture.⁴⁸

7. /עֹרֶבֶת/ Gnorab, all the World agrees to be, The Raven. That Name, (and, Crow,) as well as the Latin Corvus, is plainly derived from the Hebrew.⁴⁹

8. /בַּת־יַעֲנָה/ Bath-Jaanah, which we render, The Owl, is by Bochart proved for to be the Shee-Ostrich; against all the Attempts of the learned Fuller, to secure the Name for the Bird of Athens.⁵⁰

⁴⁷ Bochart (cap. 8, col. 192).

⁴⁸ Bochart (cap. 9, col. 195).

⁴⁹ Bochart (cap. 13, col. 214) has /עֹרֶבִים/ Orebim. Mather's transliteration does not match his Hebrew orthography here.

⁵⁰ Bochart (cap. 14, cols. 217, 220). And Nicholas Fuller, Miscellaneorum Theologicorum (1650), lib. 6, cap. 7, pp. 1712–16.

9. /תחמס/ Thachmas, which we render, The Night-Hawk, our Bochart will have to be the Male-Ostrich.⁵¹

10. /שחף/ Sacaph, which we render, The Cuckow, is with Bochart, the Sea-Gull.⁵²

11. /נץ/ Nets, which we render, The Hawk, is generally agreed unto; as coming from the Swiftness of that Bird in its flying. The Name Nisus, derived from hence, more particularly determines what Bird it is.⁵³

12. /כוס/ Chos, which we render, The Little Owl, is with Bochart, The Bittern; The Name seems to come from the Cup, or large Vessel, which it ha's under its Bill.⁵⁴

13. /שלך/ Salach, which we render, The Cormorant; He showes to be, The Catarrhacta. I think, we may keep our English Name.⁵⁵

[24v] | 14. /ינשוף/ Jansuph, which we render, The Great-Owl; may be still so rendered; for it is the Bubo, which is also called, The Eagle-Owl.⁵⁶

15. /תנשמת/ Thinsemeth, which we render, The Swan, must by no means be allowed so to be rendered; The Swan must not be thought an Unclean Bird. It is the Nochna, or the Little Owl. It has its Name, from the Obstupefaction of the other Fowles at the Sight of it; for as Dio Chrysostom, (and others,) notes, Θαυμάζει την γλαυκα τα ορνεα: Noctuam Mirantur Aves.⁵⁷

16. /קאת/ Kaath, which we render, The Pelican, Bochart will call the Bit-aur; but it seems Dr. Gell, will have it to be The Cuckow; and Mr. Lee thinks this last the most probable.⁵⁸

17. /רחם/ Recham, which we render, The Grer-Eagel, is by Bochart proved with abundance of Curiosity, to be, The Bald-head Vulture.⁵⁹

18. /חסידה/ Chasida, is agreed for to be, The Stork; tho' there ha's been a Variety of Translations upon it. The Piety of the Bird, (from whence it ha's its Name) does not secure it, from the Character of Unclean, because it feeds upon Serpents, & other venomous Creatures.⁶⁰

58 Bochart (cap. 24, col. 292); Robert Gell, on Lev. 11:18, in An Essay toward the Amendment (1659), pp. 273e–274c. Mather probably refers to Orbis Miraculum, Or the Temple of Solomon (1659) by the Rev. Samuel Lee (1625–91), the father of Lydia Lee George, Mather's third wife. The Mathers purchased numerous books from Lee's library when it was offered for sale in Boston after Lee's death. See The Library of The Late Reverend and Learned Mr. Samuel Lee (1693) – among them such treasures as Samuel Bochart's Geographia Sacra (1646) and Hierozoicon Animalibus (1663).

59 Bochart (cap. 25, col. 297).

60 Bochart (cap. 28, col. 321).

19. /אנפה/ Anapha, which we render, The Hern, Bochart will have to be that Sort of Eagle, which is called Zummug by the Arabians, and ἀνόπαια by the Gracians. It is a Bird prodigious for the Passion of Anger, (which its Name intimates;) perhaps it may be the Falco Montanus, which is of so Touchy and Angry an Humour, as to Fly upon his Feeder with a strange Fury, at the least Provocation; & if the Provocation proceed, hee'll fall down Dead in his Fury.⁶¹

20. /דוכיפת/ Dukiphath, is the Lapwing.⁶²

21. /עטלף/ Gnataleph, is the Bat. Our Translation of these two, remains uncontested.⁶³

3643.

Q. But why were these Birds forbidden to the Israelites?

A. Why not (in Part, at least,) for Mystical Reasons?

The Ancients are very Ingenious in their Descants upon these Reasons: only that they sometimes mistake the Names of the Birds.

Barnabas in his Epistle, saies, Οὐδε μὴ φάγῃς κλ· *He saies, Thou shalt not Eat the Eagle, the Hawk, or the Crow; that is, οὐ μὴ κολληθῇς ἀνθρώποι τοιοῦτοις, — Thou shalt not adjoin thyself to those Men, who do not live by the Sweat of their own Labour, but rapaciously by Iniquity sieze upon the Possessions of other Men.*⁶⁴

Origen ha's many Strokes this way. The Men who pretend Acquaintance with Heaven, but abandon themselves, to Dead Works, he compares to Eagles and Vultures, Quæ de excelsis ad Carnes Mortuas et fætidas delabuntur. And he adds, Quedam non tam Rapacitatem quàm obscuritatem et Tenebras amant. Omnis enim qui male adagit odit Lucem. Novatianus writing, De Cibis Judaicis, flourishes this Matter with good Ingenuity.⁶⁵ So does Clemens Alexandrinus; and so Cyril. Nor does any of them come behind Aquinas; who following the Version of Jerom, ha's these among other Passages. In Aquila, quæ altè volitat, prohibetur superbia. In 61 Bochart (cap. 30, col. 335, 337). Homer, Odyssey (1.320) has Athene fly away "unseen," "unnoticed." According to Aristarchus, ἀνόπαια is a type of "eagle" or "heron" (LSJ).

62 Bochart (cap. 31, col. 343).

63 Bochart, Hierozoicon: Animalibus (1663), pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 32, col. 349, transliterates the Hebrew phrase as "atalleph, rather than Mather's "Gnataleph."

64 Bochart, Hierozoicon: Animalibus, pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 33, col. 355. Barnabae Epistula (10.3b, lines 1–2): Οὐδε μὴ φάγῃς οὐ μὴ κολληθῇς ἀνθρώποι τοιοῦτοις. Mather supplies his own translation.

65 Bochart (cap. 33, col. 356). Origen's "Homilia septima in Leviticum" (7.7) [PG 012. 0492A–B] allegorizes evildoers, insisting that they are like eagles and vultures, "which sink down from the heights to dead and stinking flesh. ... Some are [characterized] not such by greed as by love of obscurity and darkness. 'For everyone who does evil hates the light.'" (Homilies on Leviticus 7.7.2, p. 152). Discussing the allegorical meaning of unclean animals which must not be eaten, Novatian asks in his Epistola De Cibus Judaicis, Who would eat "the raven? But it holds accused crafty wills. Moreover, when it forbids the sparrow, it condemns intemperance; when the owl, it hates those who fly from the light of truth; when the swan, the proud with high neck; when the sea-mew, too talkative an intemperance of tongue; when the bat those who seek the darkness of night as well as of error" (On the Jewish Meats, ch. 3, in ANF 5:647).

*Halæeto, qui posutur minuti Avibus, significantur illi qui Pauperibus sunt molesti. In Milvo, qui maxime Infidijs utitur, significantur Fraudulenti. In Vulture, qui sequitur exercitum, expectans comedere Cadavera Mortuorum, significantur illi, qui mortes et sitiones Hominum affectant, ut inde lucrentur.*⁶⁶

See more, Thom. 1.2.9. 102. art. 6.⁶⁷

So elsewhere, I have read this Thought. The Swan is a Bird Fair to look upon; but the Flesh is Black and Hard. An Emblem of those whose Works appear fair to Men, but their Hearts are naught.⁶⁸

[▽] [▽ Attachment recto]

Why the Eagle should be forbidden, Origen ha's given a notable Account.⁶⁹

The Wisdom of GOD in Moses understood what Creatures were look'd on as Prophetical by the Egyptians, and other Nations; and these were therefore forbidden to the Jews. Among these he expressly mentions, the Eagle and the Hawk. Diodorus Siculus relates, That the People of Thebes, worship the Eagle, esteeming it a Royal Bird, & worthy of Jupiter. And Julian in his Oration, on the Mother of the Gods, intimates, That there were Sacred Birds, which might not be fed upon.⁷⁰

The Stork, notwithstanding its Piety, so much celebrated, and which is the very Import of the Name in the Original, might be prohibited, because it feeds

⁶⁶ Bochart (cap. 33, cols. 355, 356); Clemens Alexandrinus (Stromata 5.5, 7, in ANF 2:450–52, 454); Cyrillus Alexandrinus (Adversus Julianum, lib. 9. [PG 076. 0983c–991b]); St. Thomas Aquinas, who follows St. Jerome's Vulgate, interprets Moses' proscription against certain unclean birds as allegories of specific sins: "In the eagle which flies at a great height, pride is forbidden. The osprey, which feeds on very small birds, signifies those who oppress the poor. The kite, which is full of cunning, denotes those who are fraudulent in their dealings. The vulture, which follows an army, expecting to feed on the carcasses [sic] of the slain, signifies those who like others are to die or to fight among themselves that they may gain thereby" (Summa Theologica 2:1078, pt. 1–2. Q.102, A6, Reply Obj. 1).

⁶⁸ Other explications of the swan are offered in Poole's Synopsis (1:546) and Works (6:184).

⁷⁰ Diodorus Siculus (1.87.9, lines 1–2) confirms that the eagle was honored by the people of Thebes (Egypt) as a regal bird, probably the zoomorphic Horus falcon (R. Wilkinson 202). Mather (via Patrick 169) refers to Ezekiel Spanheim's edition of Juliani Imperator. Opera quae supersunt omnia (1696), Oratio V, p. 177b–c. Emperor Flavius Claudius Augustus (the Apostate) charges that St. Peter (Acts 10:11–16; 11:5–10) violated the dietary laws established by Moses (Lev. 11:3ff). The same can be found in our modern edition of Flavius Claudius Imperator, Eis tήν μητέρα τῶν θεῶν (sec. 17, lines 30–32).

upon Serpents; Tho' on this account it was had in Honour by the Egyptians, and the People of Thessaly.⁷¹

Q. Among the unclean Reptiles, wee read of /חלד/ Choled, which we render, The Weasel; should it be rendred so? v. 29.⁷³

A. No; The Learned Bochart proves, That Choled should be translated, not, The Wesel, but, The Mole. He brings the Syriac and Arabic Languages to confirm his Interpretation. And its being here joined with the Mouse he takes to be some Confirmation of it. He shoves, that the Verb /חלד/ Chalad, from whence the Name is derived, signifies, To Dig, & by Digging to Penetrate into dark Places: which is the very business of the Mole. The Syriac Paraphrase, on that of the Apostle, 2. Tim. 3.6. They creep into Houses; uses a Phrase alluding hereunto. Perhaps the /חלדי/ Chaldii, or Chaldeans, (not those of Babylon, but the Chalybes) that are thought the first, who Dug Iron out of the Earth, may be therefore called so. That the Talmuds call a Wesel, by the Name of Choled, is nothing with Bochart, who saies, Talmudici sæpè falluntur et fallunt. But then, the Thinsemeth, in the next Verse, which we translate, The Mole; what shall that be? I'll tell you another time.⁷⁴

⁷¹ Patrick, on Lev. 11:19 (Leviticus 173–74), refers to Bochart's disquisition on the stork חסידה [chaside], in Hierozoicon: Animalibus (1663), pars 2, lib. 2, cap. 29, cols. 326, 328, lines 53–74.

⁷³ Bochart (pars 1, lib. 3, cap. 34, col. 1021) has חולד.

⁷⁴ In his preface to the reader, Bochart (De Animalibus [1663], pars 1, “Praefatio ad Lectorem,” p. 33, last line) warns that the “Talmuds, because they slip up, are disappointing.” For “Thinsemeth,” see Mather's annotation on Lev. 11:30 (below).

Q. Among the unclean Reptiles is also mentioned, The Tortoise, after its Kind? v. 29.

A. But Bochart proves by many Arguments, and by the Authority of Antiquity, That /צב/ Tsab, is no other, than the Land-Crocodile; a Creature, about which he brings many Curiosities, from Arabian Monuments. It is a Creature of the Lizard-kind. Its Tail ha's one & twenty knotts. Its Teeth are joined. It lives in the driest Places, and abhors Water. It feeds on Vine-roots, and the Fruits of Thorny Shrubs. It lodges in rocky Places, or near some Tree, by which it may recover its Lodging, which else it easily forgetts.

It layes fourscore Eggs at a Time, which being hatched (in forty dayes time,) it horribly devours many of them. It is very long-lived, and at last not easily killed. Many more such things, does that Author fetch concerning this Creature, from the Writings of the Arabians; and he saies, much Use must be made of those Writers, in describing the Oviparous Quadrupeds mention'd in the Sacred Oracles; *Quia pleraque hæpestes, à nobis nè de Nomine quidem cognitæ, in eorum solo nascuntur.*⁷⁵

Q. Since Bochart ha's laboured so exquisitely & successfully to give us a true Account, De Animalibus S. Scripturæ, I pray, Lett us have some more of him; and particularly upon the Reptiles, that we find here together, The Ferret, and the Chameleon, and the Lizard, and the Snail, and the Mole? v. 30.

A. My Bochart shall correct our Translation, in every one of them.

First, for the /אנקה/ Anaka, (which we render, The Ferret;) Bochart shewes, That it is a Sort of Lizard, not so well known among us, as in the Countreyes about Arabia. The Name is given from the Bitter Noise, like that of Mourning, which is made by the Animal. More particularly, Tis a Sort of Stellio, or Evet; the same that in the Proverbs is called Semamith, & by us corruptly rendred, The Spider.⁷⁶

Secondly, for the /כח/ Coach, (which we render, The Chameleon;) Bochart shewes, That this is another sort of a Lizard; and the very same, that is in the Orient known by the Name of, The Guaril. The Name intimates, That it is the strongest of its Kind: And accordingly, the Arabians note of the Guaril peculiarly,

⁷⁶ Bochart, Hieroicoicon (1663), pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 2, cols. 1063–72.

Neque ullum est Animal eo fortius, ad Serpentes occidendos. If we have any Name for it, in our Language, we must call it, The Green Lizard.⁷⁷

Thirdly, for the /לִטְאוֹה/ Letaa, (which we render, The Lizard,) Bochart shows, That it is the Sort of Lizard, which the Arabians call, Wachara; a Creature something resembling the Stellio, and envenoming all the Meats, which it sett's its Claws upon. And indeed the /ל/ Lamed greater than ordinary, in the Name of it here inserted, Buxtorf saies, Litera majuscula denotat, inter reliqua Reptilia vel maximè ab hoc Reptili esse cavendum. We may venture to call it, The Salamander.⁷⁸

Fourthly, for the /חֹמוֹט/ Chomet, (which we render, The Snail,) Bochart shows, that it means quite another thing; and that it is that sort of Lizard, which is called, The Sand-Lizard; and the same, that is called Chulacu by the Arabians: A little Animal, whereof they say, Tis, Animalculum in arenà degens, ut piscis (in Aqua); quod, cum sentit Hominem, in Arenà volvitur, atque in eà immergitur.⁷⁹

Finally; for the /תִּנְשֵׁמֶת/ Thinsemeth, (which we render, The Mole,) It is demonstrated by Bochart, for to be no other than the Chameleon. The very Name of it, (from /נָשַׁם/ To Breathe,) carries it unto this Creature, above any; which, as Pliny expresses it, is, Hianti semper ore; and according to Solinus, Hia-tus ejus æternus; and Ovid, Id quoque, quod ventis animal nutritur et aura.

And so Tertullian saies, of this Creature, De vento Cibus.⁸⁰

⁷⁸ Bochart (pars 1, lib. 4, cap. 4, col. 1073). Mather’s second-hand Latin quotation (via Bochart col. 1075, lines 3–5) is from Tiberias Sive Commentarius Masoreticus (1620), cap. 14, p. 158 (voce /הִלְטָאוֹה/ Lev. 11:30), by the distinguished Hebraist at the University of Basel, Johannes Buxtorf, the elder (1564–1629). The Latin explanation of the linguistic derivation from the Hebrew phrase /וְהִלְטָאוֹה/ [veha-leta’ah] (Strong’s # 3911) warns that Hebrew “capital letters [such as ל lamed] signify that one should beware of this reptile to the utmost degree among other reptiles.”

⁷⁹ Bochart (cap. 5, cols. 1075, 1076). The Latin translation, which Bochart’s derives from the Qāmūs al-muḥit, sive, Thesaurus Linguae Arabicae (1632), a celebrated four-volume Arabic lexicon, by the Italian professor of Arabic at Milano, Antonio Giggeius, aka Giggèi (d. 1632), is based on the Arabic lexicon Al-Qamus al-Muḥit (aka. Alcamus, Qamus), a compilation of several earlier Arabic dictionaries, by Muhammad al-Fayruzabadi, aka. al-Firuzabadi (1329–1414), a distinguished Persian lexicography who settled in Mecca. At any rate, Bochart’s Latin extract from the lexicon Qamus explains, that “the little animal spending time in the sand, like a fish [in the water], burrows in the sand in which it is immersed, when it senses a person.”

⁸⁰ Bochart (cap. 6, cols. 1078, 1080) believes that the Hebrew designation /תִּנְשֵׁמֶת/ has its root in /נָשַׁם/ (to breathe) and therefore properly signifies the “chameleon” because, as Pliny argues in

Q. Tho' Dr. Spencer have perswaded you, not to insist on Origins Account of the Reason for the Prohibition of Unclean Meats, yett it may not be amiss to give us Dr. Patrick's Opinion about it?

A. He thinks, That it is not amiss, to take in this Consideration, That the Creatures, which are here pronounced Unclean, were most of them such as were esteemed Sacred among the Heathen; As, the Swine to Venus, the Owl to Minerva, the Hawk to Apollo, the Eagle to Jupiter, and even the Dog to Hecate. Origen therefore falls into a just & high Admiration of Moses's Wisdome, who so perfectly understood all Animals, and what Relation they had unto Demons, that he pronounced all those to be Unclean, τὰ νομιζόμενα παρ' Αἰγυπτίοις καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων μαντικά· which were esteemed by the Egyptians, and other Nations, to be the Instruments of Divination, & those to be clean which were not so. And if in Moses's Time, such Creatures were not sacred unto Demons, it is yett a greater Wonder, that he should mark out those for Unclean, that proved so Sacred in the After-Ages; As a great Number of Birds, mentioned by Porphyrie, who saies, the Gods used them as Κήρυκες, to declare their Mind unto Men; & several other Creatures, mention'd by other Authors, as peculiarly appropriated unto other Deities.⁸¹

Q. Won't that Change you have made, in the Translation of the Names of the Unclean Creatures afford a Matter of some Reflection?

his Naturalis historia 8.51.122), this creature "always has its mouth wide open," for it derives its nourishment from the air. Solinus (De Mirabilibus Mundi 40.22) confirms that its mouth is "eternally gaping." Ovid (Metamorphoses 15.411) adds that this strange creature not only changes its gender and coloration at will, but "it also gets its nourishment from wind and air." Finally, Tertullianus, in De Pallio Liber, cap. 3, [PL 2. 1038A], clinches the argument, saying that the chameleon's "food is wind" (air). Basta!

⁸¹ John Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 1, cap. 5, sec. 1, fol. 99, rejects Origen's argument (Contra Celsum 4.93) that Moses outlawed the consumption of certain species of animals because they were believed to have certain numinous and divinatory qualities. Simon Patrick, on Lev. 11:2 (Leviticus 160), however, likes Origen's justification, which Mather quotes here. (Patrick spells νομιζόμενα with an omega instead of omicron). At any rate, the Greek citation from Origen's Contra Celsum (4.93, lines 6–8) explains that Moses pronounced all those animals as unclean "which are supposed by the Egyptians and the rest of mankind to possess the power of divination" (ANF 4:538). Porphyrius thinks the gods used these numinous animals as "messengers" (De Abstinencia 3.5, line 26). An interesting organic argument is added by R. Levi Barcelonitae, who observes that certain meats are designated unlawful because God, who knows that the soul draws on the nourishment consumed by the body, did not want the soul to be unfitted by ill blood and contrary desires which are caused by the natural qualities of unclean animals, in R. Levi's סֵפֶר הַחֲנוּךְ Sefer Ha-Chinnuk, in Hottinger, Juris Hebraeorum (1685), sec. VII, praeept. LXXIX, pp. 100–01. On this rationalization, see especially Maimonides, Guide (3.48.598–601).

A. Yes. Aben-Ezra confesses, Neither the Eight Sorts of creeping things, nor the Birds here mentioned, are known to us, but by Tradition. Which is as much as to say, They are not known at all. For the Talmuds acknowledge, there is no Tradition at all about them; No, they send us, to be informed, by those that are Masters in the Art of Fowling.⁸²

This might convince the Jewes, That the Difference of Meats is now ceased; because they know not what is forbidden, & what not, in many Cases. Consequently, the Messiah must be come; to whom there must be the Gathering of the People, and no longer a Separation. All Nations, Gathered in One Body, must now converse together, at one Table, without Hazard, of being defiled. Idolatry being abolished, there is not such need, of keeping up a Discrimination between Jewes and Gentiles; wherefore, some of the Ancient Jewes have said, that in the Dayes of the Messiah, it should not be unlawful to eat Swines-Flesh any more than there was, while they were subduing the Land of Canaan.

Abarbanel himself owns it in his Rosch Amanah.⁸³

| I will take Notice of one Curiosity more.

[26r]

The Hare, is mentioned among the Creatures that Chew the Cud. The Illustrious Bartholinus, in his Dissection of an Hare, found but one Stomach; which at first made him to wonder, at Moses's enumerating This among the Creatures that Ruminant. But anon, he found that what was wanting in the simple Stomach, was abundantly supplied, by the Largeness of the Intestinum Cæcum; in one Part of which he found a white Liquor, like to Chyle, as if it were another Stomach; while the other Part leading towards the Ileon, was full of blacker Excrements.⁸⁴

⁸⁴ This curiosity appears, via Patrick, on Lev. 11:6 (Leviticus 163), in Historiarum Anatomiarum Centuria I et II (1654), cent. 2, cap. 86: “Leporis Anatome,” pp. 193–95, by the renowned Danish physician and anatomist Thomas Bartholin (1616–80). Mather owned several of his medical works and quotes them in his medical compendium Angel of Bethesda (1972) and in Biblia Americana (BA 1:427–28, 535, 1054).

Q. A General Remark, upon the Eatables among the Hebrews? v. 40.

A. Lewis has one. To exercise the Office of a Butcher with Dexterity, was among the Jews, of more considerable Reputation, than to understand any of the Liberal Sciences; And this Art was to be attained by much Reading & long Experience. They have a Book of Shamble-Constitutions: And in Cases of Difficulty, they apply to some learned Rabbi for Advice: Nor was the Practice of this Art allow'd unto any, without a License in Form, which gave the Man upon Evidence of his Abilities, a Power to kill Meat, and others to eat what he kill'd; provided, he carefully Read over the Book of Shamble-Constitutions, every Week for one Year, and every Month for the next Year, and once a Quarter during his Life.

Many Particularities relating hereto, might be offered; About the Figure of their Knives, and the Method of their whole Proceedings; But it is not worth our while, to croud them in, among our more Instructive & more Important Illustrations.⁸⁵

⁸⁵ Origines Hebraeae: The Antiquities of the Hebrew Republick (1725), vol. 3, bk. 6, ch. 20, p. 216, by Thomas Lewis, M.A. (1689–post 1737), religious controversialist and vociferous participant in the Bangorian controversy (1716–20) over church governance and the divine right of kings (ODNB). Whatever “Book of Shamble-Constitutions” Lewis has in mind, it probably deals with the rules governing cosher meats. Mather, in his “Note Book of Authors” (Lev. 11:49), lists “Esprit Flechier Sermon. 1” as a potential source. The reference is to Esprit Fléchier (1632–1710), a French preacher and pulpit orator, by Louis XIV appointed bishop of Lavaux and subsequently of Nîmes. In addition to several collections of sermons, orations, and letters, his publications include Histoire de Théodose le Grand (1679), Histoire du Cardinal Ximènes (1692), and his popular two-volume collection of his sermons and orations Panegyriques et autres Sermons (1696). Mather here refers to Fléchier’s “Sermon pour le jour de la Tous-Saints” (on Lev. ch. 11), in Panegyriques (1696), 1:1–37, a sermon preached in 1682 in the Chapelle de Fontaine-Bleau, in the presence of Louis XIV. For biographical background on Fléchier, see Recueil des Oraisons Funebres Prononcées Par Messire Esprit Flechier; Evêque de Mismes. Nouvelle Édition. Paris, 1744.

Q. There were Seven sorts of Cæremonial Uncleanesses, from which the Lord of old required, the Purification of His People.

I. Immundities Puerperæ. II. Immundities Menstruatæ. III. Immundities Concubitus. IV. Immundities Lepreæ. V. Immundities Funeris. VI. Immundities Somnii. VII. Immundities Contactus. What might bee the true Reason, why the Lawes, about all these Uncleanesses, were Imposed? v. 1.¹

A. First, A Greater Desire to, and Reverence of, the Sanctuary, was doubtless hereby enkindled in the Minds of the People. If Gods House had been as Accessible by the People, as Their own, probably their Zeal for the Enjoyments of it, would have been cold enough. Now saies old Maimonides, Si quis liber sit à contactu Cadaveris, vix tamen effugere poterit, ne contactu alicujus ex Immundis octo Reptilibus, quæ subindè in Domos, Vias, Cibos, et Potum incidunt, contaminetur. Et si hoc effugiat, fortè non evadet à cantactu Mulieris menstruatae, vel Sanguinis profluvio laborantis, aut Leprosi, vel ad minimum cubilis aut lecti ipsorum. At licet ab istis quoque conservetur, non tamen evitabit forsitan Amplexum Uxoris suæ, vel casum et pollutionem Nocturnam. Quamvis autem Mundus sit ab istis etiam pollutionibus, tamen non Permissum est ei ingredi Sanctuarium, donec occubuit Sol ejus; neque etiam Nocte postquam Sol ipsius occubuit. Illà autem Nocte, quam facile fieri potuit, ut vel cum Uxore suâ se commisceat, vel nova aliqua Immunditiei causa ipsi contingat, ità ut manè in eâdem surgat Pollutione, ut Die præcedente. Hæc enim omnia efficiunt, ut Homo à Sanctuario abesse cogatur; nec quovis Tempore illud Calcare vel Intrare possit. All these Difficulties, in coming at it, might render the Sanctuary more precious to the People of God.²

¹ In his De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 1, cap. 8, sec. 1, pp. 161–62, John Spencer itemizes the seven types of ceremonial uncleanness: 1. from childbirth, 2. menstruation, 3. sexual intercourse, 4. leprosy, 5. burial, 6. dreams, and 7. uncleanness from contact (with unclean objects).

² Mather, via Spencer (lib. 1, cap. 8, sec. 2, fols. 162–63), extracts this passage (with slight changes) from Johannes Buxtorf's Latin translation of Maimonides Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 47, p. 491, which translates as follows: "For even if one were preserved from touching a carcass of a beast, one might not be preserved from touching one of the eight creeping animals, which often fall into dwellings and into food and drink upon which a man often stumbles in walking. And if one were preserved from that, one might not be preserved from contact with a menstruating woman or a woman or a man having a running issue or a leper or their bed. And if one were preserved from that, one might not be preserved from sexual intercourse with one's wife or from nocturnal pollution. And even if one were cleansed from these kinds of uncleanness, one would not be allowed to enter the Sanctuary till after sunset. Nor was one allowed to enter the Sanctuary at night, and on that night in most cases the man in question would have intercourse with his wife or one of the other courses of uncleanness would befall him, and he would find himself on the following day

Secondly, Pellican sais truly, Format hæc Lex homines ad Munditiam et Humanitatem, Barbaros Mores, Feralesque componit. A People, brought up, among the Dirty Brick-kilns of Egypt, were hereby Raised up unto that Neatness, Humanity, Civilitie, which they had lost, in their barbarous Education.³

Thirdly, Why might not the Lord punish the Idolatrous Dispositions of the People in the Wilderness, by laying such Heavy Burdens upon them? [Consider, Ezek. 20.24, 25, 26.] Hence, when they were once gotten out of the Wilderness, into the Promised Land, they might live in their Pollutions, from one Week to another, except they were to visit the Sanctuary, or celebrate a Festival.⁴

Fourthly, By this Discipline, the People, were taught the Lessons of all Moral Purity; Yea, they were taught hereby to consider themselves as a Nation of Nazarites devoted unto God.⁵

Fifthly, Tis not unlikely, that the Uncleannesses observed among the Ancient Gentiles, might bee corrected, in those of the Israelites. There were the Zabian, & the Egyptian Usages, about Uncleannesses, elder, as it seems, than the Dayes of Moses; But they were altogether Arbitrary, and Superstitious. Whereas, in Moses, the Number and the Nature of Uncleannesses is determined, & the Notion of them Rectified. Thus for the Uncleannesses of Men.⁶

Hence, About the Law for the Uncleannesses of Things, also the Words of Maimonides are, Lex hæc nullà alià de causâ venit, quàm ut minuat Cultus et Labores circa Res Sacras; et si quid sit, quod Molestiam et Defatigationem aliquam habere videtur, id non aliundè provenit, quàm ex eo, quod nos Ignoremus Ritus, et consuetudines in illis Temporibus, usitatas.⁷

Indeed, the Lawes about the Uncleannesses of Things, were some of them, given in Opposition to the Fond Conceits of the Pagans. Wee'l Instance in one. T'was the Law, [Num. 19.15.] Every open Vessel, which hath no Covering bound upon it, is unclean.⁸

in the same position as on the day before. Thus all of this was a reason for keeping away from the Sanctuary and for not entering it at every moment" (Guide 3.47.593–94; italics omitted).

3 Spencer (163) cites from Commentaria in Bibliorum (1536), 1:133', on Lev. 11:31, by the German Reformed theologian and Christian Hebraist Conradus Pellicanus, aka. Konrad Pellikan, aka. Kürsner (1478–1556). (ADB). According to Pellicanus, "this law [Lev. 11:31] leads men toward cleanliness and humanity, and settles wild and barbarous behavior."

4 Spencer (164).

5 Spencer (164).

6 Spencer (164–65).

7 Spencer (lib. 1, cap. 8, sec. 4, § 2, fols. 174–75) adapts the passage from Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (pars 3, cap. 47, p. 490): "This Law was given for no other reason than to facilitate the actions of worship and to lighten the burden; and all the things in it that you may perhaps imagine to involve unpleasantness or heavy burden appear so to you only because you do not know the usages and teachings that existed in those days" (adapted from Guide 3.47.592).

8 Spencer (fol. 175, § 3).

Hear now the Words of Aquinas upon it. Erat hoc præceptum (sais hee) *ad Declinandam Idololatram; crediderunt enim Idololatræ, quòd si Mures et Lacertæ, vel aliquid hujusmodi quæ dicabant Idolis, caderent in Vasa, vel in Aquas, quòd essent Dijs gratiosa. Adhuc etiam aliquæ Mulieres Vasa dimittunt discooperta, in obsequium Nocturnorum Numinum, quæ Janas, vocant.*⁹

Moreover; By these Lawes, the God of Heaven made an Effectual Separation, between His own People, and the Nation of the World. All Intimate Commerce between them, was thus Interdicted, by the Fear of Pollution. And probably the Apostle alludes to this Matter, [2. Cor. 6.17.] when hee so translates the Words of the Prophet [Isa. 52.11.] *Bee yee Separate saith the Lord, & Touch not the unclean Thing.*¹⁰

Q. A Bearing Woman, was to continue Separate, for some Dayes, from all Company. The Lawes about this Matter, might be Illustrated a little?

A. Such a Separation, was necessary to prevent the Alienation of her Husbands affections from her. For the Purgations, are very Ill-scented; most of all, about the Beginning, by reason of that Humour, which may be called, Fluor Viridis. Especially, in those, who are of a swarthy Complexion, as the Jewish Women; and most of all, in hott Countreyes. But while the Husband absents, no Harm can follow; for the Women are the better for it.

It is observed by Hippocrates, That Coition in the Time of these Purgations, is in Greece, very mischievous; causing a Prolapsus Uteri. And why not also in Judæa? And impressing some Impurity on the Conception, it is æqually injurious to Posterity.¹¹

9 Spencer (fol. 175, § 3) cites from the 1614 Duaci, folio edition of Thomas Aquinas's Summa Theologica (1a, 2. Q.102, Art. 5, p. 331). Aquinas's (adapted) words are, "this command [Lev. 19:15] aimed at the prevention of idolatry. For idolaters believed that if mice, lizards, or the like, which they used to sacrifice to the idols, fell into the vessels or into the water, these became more pleasing to the gods. Even now some women let down uncovered vessels in honor of the nocturnal deities which they call Janæ" (2:1071, pt. 1–2, Q.102, A5, Reply Obj. 4).

10 Spencer (176, § 7).

11 The ancients among the Fathers of Medicine were widely available in numerous translations, extracts, and medical handbooks of the period. Here Mather refers to Liber De Natura Puerperio. Hippocrates Coi, Medicorum Principis, Liber prior De morbis mulierum. Mauricio Cordæ Rhemo Interprete et Explicatore (1585), by the celebrated "Father of Medicine," Hippocrates of Cos (c. BCE 460–c. BCE 375). The medical condition of the "collapsed uterus," which extrudes from the womb, is described in Liber prior de morbis mulierum, lib. 1, comment. 2, p. 67 (bottom) of the above edition. A modern translation appears in "Nature of Women," in Hippocrates (10.4–7, 316–22). See also J. Delaney et al. The Curse. A Cultural History of Menstruation (1988), esp. pp. 37–53. Mather also alludes to the famous Persian physician-philosopher Avicenna, aka. Ibn Sīnā, aka. Abū 'Alī al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Abd Allāh ibn Sīnā (980–1037), whose encyclopedic Al-Qānūn fī al-ṭibb was translated from Arabic into Latin by the Italian scholar Gerard of Cremona (c. 1113–1187), published in Venice (1493–95), and republished in many

The Time for the Separation of a Bearing Woman is very fittly sett; upon the Birth of a Female, double to that of a Male. The Climate there made such a Difference; & in both, required more Time, than in Countreyes remoter from the Line, & from the Influences of the Sun and Moon. In Greenland, the Women have no menstruous Purgations. In England, they continue, at the most, but a Week; and the Bearing Purgations, are seldome any more than Fourteen Days. In Greece, they compleat Thirty Days for a Male, and Forty two for a Female, as is noted by Hippocrates. And why not a longer Time in Judea, & other more Southern Countreyes? Avicen seems to affirm as much.¹²

Q. A Puerperous Woman, must be unclean Seven Dayes? v. 2.

A. For the first Seven Dayes after the Birth of the Child, she was neither to partake of any Holy Thing, nor to have common Conversation with others; Her Husband himself was not permitted to Eat or Drink with her, all this Time; and they that attended her, became unclean also.¹³

Dilherrus observes out of Plautus, That among the Heathen too, they that assisted at a Labour, solemnly washed their Hands, and had a Sacrifice offered for them, on the Fifth Day after Delivery.¹⁴

Here was one Reason for not Circumcising the Child, until the Eighth Day; the Child was all this while unclean also.¹⁵ subsequent editions (EB). Avicenna's disquisitions on conception, pregnancy, the uterus, and female diseases, are covered in *Avicennae Arabum Medicorum Principis, Canon Medicinae. McGinnis, Avicenna (2010), esp. 3–26.

¹⁴ Patrick (Leviticus 191) cites from Dissertationis De Cacozeria Gentilium, Pars Specialis (cap. 3), In Disputationum Academicarum. Tomus Novus (1652), p. 216, by the Lutheran professor of theology at Jena and Nuremberg, Johannes Michael Dilherr (1604–1669) (DNB). Dilherr here quotes from the Latin playwright Titus Maccius Plautus (c. 254–184 BCE), who in his comedy Truculentus (2.4.424) has the harlot Phronesium declare that at the festival of Amphidromia she will celebrate the birth of a newborn, “[Quin] dis hodie sacrificare pro puero volo / Quinto die quod fieri oportet” or “Today I want to sacrifice to the gods for the boy, which ought to be done on the fifth day” (Plautus 5.312–13). Much the same advice about female sequestration after childbirth is given in De Puerperio Syntagma [1604] (1785), chs. 6–7, pp. 21–28, by the Dutch classical scholar and polymath Johannes Meursius, aka. Jan van Meurs (1579–1639), who extracted his antiquarian knowledge about the treatment of pregnant and menstruating women from the works of classical antiquity.

Monsr. Jurieu observes, That the Seven Days appointed for the Purification of the Woman in Child-bed, must not be reckoned from the Moment of her Delivery, but from the Time that the Flood ceased.¹⁶

Q. When the Dayes of Purification were over, a Sacrifice was to be offered? v. 6.

A. It was in Gratitude unto God, for making her the living Mother of a living Infant, and Restoring her Strength, to come abroad unto the Sanctuary. By this Offering also, she recommended herself & her Child, (as Dr. Patrick notes) unto the Blessing of God, & implored His Assistance in its Education. There was indeed nothing that the People of God, could more desire, on such Occasions, than that He would mercifully take their little ones, in His Tuition; & give His Angels the Charge over them that can take so little Care of themselves. This is an Hint of, Conradus Pellicanus upon this Place; who thence infers, how necessary tis, that People should be admonished frequently to commend their Children unto God, by both private and publick Prayers, and be careful of their Instruction, lest they become like the Horse & the Mule, that have no Understanding.¹⁷

It may likewise be conceived, That Persons, from whom a Sacrifice of Purification was expected, had some way offended God, before or under their State of Separation; and therefore a Sin-Offering was demanded from them.

R. Bechai gives yett another probable Account of it; That this Sacrifice was offered, not so much for her own Sin, as for the Sin of her First Parent, the Mother of all the Living, who brought Sin, & Sorrow into the World. We have our Share in that Sin; and God might require such a Sacrifice, to mind us of the Expiation, which that called for.¹⁸

This woman who gave birth now may be perceived as the branch of a contaminated root, daughter of a corrupted mother and as such some of the mother’s contamination was transmitted to her.”

Q. Some Thoughts, if you please, upon, The Plague of Leprosy? v. 2.

A. We will be beholden to Dr. Patricks Notes upon this Matter.¹

If we may beleeve Pliny, this Disease was peculiar to Egypt, which is by him called, Genetrix talium vitiorum. And if we may beleeve Artapanus in Eusebius, the Pharaoh who sought to kill Moses, was the first that ever felt this Disease, and he died of it. This may be as true, as the Story of Manetho, who, to hide the true Cause of the Israelites Departure out of Egypt, saies, That they were a Company of Leprous People chased out of Egypt, under their Captain Moses. Out of Egypt, it is likely, the Distemper spred into Syria, which is noted likewise to have been infested with Eruptions in the Skin, whereof the Names are very various, as Cuneus observes; but all comprehended under that of, The Leprosy.²

But Moses here distinguishes the true Leprosy, & seems to instruct the Israelites, that the Leprosy which he speaks of, was no common Disease, but inflicted by the Hand of Heaven.

Thus the Hebrew Doctors understand it. R. Levi Barcelonita saies, A leprous Man ought not to look upon his Disease as a casual Thing; but seriously Consider and Acknowledge, that some grievous Sin is the Cause of it. The Book Cosri therefore magnifies the Knowledge of the Priests, in being able to distinguish what was Divine in the Leprosy, and what was meerly Natural. The Story of Naaman confirms us, that there was in it, something Divine; for [2. King. 5.7.] the King

1 Mather's commentary on Lev. 13:2 is derived from his muse, in Patrick (Leviticus 198–99).

2 Pliny (26.3.4) believes “the parent of such diseases” (leprosy) came from Egypt. The Jewish historian of Alexandria, Artapanus (fl. 3rd–2nd c. CE), is remembered for his romanticized Concerning the Jews, extant only in extracts by Eusebius Pamphilus, Alexander Polyhistor, and Clement of Alexandria. According to Eusebius's Praeparatio evangelica (9.27.434b), Pharaoh Chenophres, who sought after Moses' life, was the “very first person attacked by elephantiasis [!]; and he is said to have incurred this misfortune because he ordered the Jews to wear linen garments and not to wear woollen clothing, in order that they might be conspicuous, and be punished by him” (Preparation 2:464). Several versions of Manetho's story, extracted from his Aegyptiaca, survive. Mather here refers to Aegyptiaca (fragm. 54), extant in Flavius Josephus's Contra Apionem (1.26–31). Josephus relates that Manethon, the Egyptian priest who translated the sacred books of the Egyptians into Greek, claimed that the Jews were expelled from Egypt because of leprosy. Josephus, however, wants to clear the record, arguing that Manethon tried to hide the true cause of the Israelite exodus, by “interpolating improbable tales in his desire to confuse with us a crowd of Egyptians, who for leprosy and other maladies had been condemned ... to banishment from Egypt” (Manetho, fragm. 54, p. 121). In his De Republica Hebraeorum Libri III (1617), lib. 2, cap. 24, esp. p. 347, Petrus Cunaeus speaks of “Vituligines enim, psorasque, & tetra ulcera jam olim illis gentibus, velut proprias pestes, adscripsere summi medicorum,” or, “according to the greatest medical authorities, these nations had boils, mange, and disgusting sores, their own personal plagues as it were” (Hebrew Republic 149).

of Israel plainly declares, That none but God could cure a Leper. They therefore look'd on the Leper, as one Smitten of God. They called it, The Plague, and beleev'd an extraordinary Hand of God in it.³

It is observed by Rabbi Menachem, that the Jews allow'd not the Use of Medicines in the Leprosy, but left the Cure to GOD alone. An Intimation that GOD alone, by His peculiar Grace, cleanses it from the Leprosy of Sin.⁴

Q. Which of the Priests, were to Judge of the Leprosy?

A. Mr. Selden observes, out of the Talmud, That the Leper might resort unto any Priest whatsoever, tho' he were a Maimed one, & unfit for Service at the Altar, provided his Eyes did but still continue good. And the Inspection might be made on any Day of the Week, but the Sabbaths, and the Festivals; yett not in the Night, nor in any Hour of the Day, but the IVth, Vth, VIIIth, and IXth.⁵

Q. It is but a Scab. What sort of a Scab? v. 6.

A. A Scurf short of the Leprosy. Such (Dr. Patrick thinks) as is now in Guam and Mindanao, described by Dampier, to be, A Dry Scurf all over the Body, which causes great Itching, and raises the outer skin in small white Flakes, like the Scales of little Fish, when they are raised on End, with a Knife. But he did not perceive, that they made any great Matter of it; for they did not refrain any Company for it.⁶

In his Angel of Bethesda (1722), Trip Paradise (1995), pp. 122–26, and Angel of Bethesda (1972), pp. 28–38, Mather explains how – in spite of Descartes's mind-body dualism – a spiritual sin affects the physical body via the Nishmath-Chajim.

Menachem ben-Zerach of Estella, Spain (1306–74), principal of the Yeshiva at Alcala, and author of Provision for the Way (Ferrara, 1554), a book on Jewish rites and ceremonies in 327 chapters; or (2) R. Menachem of Merseburg, Germany (fl. 1360), a revered medieval scholar and author of נְמוּקֵי מַתְנֵי commentary on rabbinical decisions, published in Venice (1549) and Hanau (1610). (CBTEL).

Maimonides, in Hilchot Tum'at Tzara'at (9.2–12), in Mishneh Torah (24.1:358–64), has much to say on the priest's necessary qualifications and the circumstances under which he must examine the physical blemishes of an infected person.

6 Patrick, on Lev. 13:6 (Leviticus 202). William Dampier (1652–1715) describes his observations of the Muslim inhabitants of Mindanao, a large island in the eastern Philippines. His account of the local lepers appears in his oft-reprinted A New Voyages round the World (1697), ch. 12, p. 334. Mather's point is to trace the spread of a disease believed to have originated in Egypt at the time of the Exodus.

Q. He shall be seen by the Priest again. But what if he were so profane, as carelessly to neglect going to the Priest? {v. 7.}

A. Maimonides tells us, His Punishment was to have his Leprosy cleave to him forever.⁷

Q. What is the Meaning of that strange Præcept, If the Leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the Leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the Plague, from his Head, even to his Foot, – He shall pronounce him clean? v. 12, 13.

A. He calls that the Leprosy, which was not really so, but was by some Thought so, because of a Likeness to it.

This Breaking out, from Top to Toe, was not to be look'd upon, as the Leprosy; It was rather a Releef to the Body, than a Disease. There was no Danger in this Eruption. It was only Nature discharging those putrid Salt Humours, which are in the Blood. As among us, when the Measels and Small-Pox come out well, the Patient is like to do well.⁸

Q. We read of a bright Spott White, and somewhat Reddish? v. 19.

A. The Hebrew Word, (which we translate, Reddish,) is Adamdameth. Bochart makes it evident, That such a Doubling of the Radicals in any Word, increases the Sense. If therefore there be, Redness, in the Signification of this Word, it must signify, very Red: Which how a White thing should be, is not easily conceivable. It should then be rendred, very glistering; for the Word, Adam, also implies, to Glister, as well as to be Red. Accordingly, we read in the Scripture, of Leprous Persons being, As white as Snow. [Exod. 4.6. Num. 12.10. 2. King. 5.27.]⁹

8 Patrick (Leviticus 204). Measles and smallpox were no uncommon visitors in Mather's Boston, and Mather did his best to serve as a physician of body and soul during such epidemics. On the measles epidemic of 1713–14, which devastated his own family, see his Diary (2:248–60, 291), Letter About a Good Management (1713), Wholesome Words (1713), and Perfect Recovery (1714). His publications on how to combat the smallpox epidemic of 1721–22 include An Account (1722), Some Account (1722), and his "XX. Variolae triumphatae," in his Angel of Bethesda (93–116), and Diary (2:618–62).

9 Patrick (Leviticus 206). For Bochart's etymological explication of the Hebrew phrase (Lev. 13:19) אֲדָמַת לְבָנָה לְבָנָה [baheh'reth lebanah adamdameth] (Strong's ## 0125, B4824, 0934), see his Hieroicoicon (1663), pars 2, lib. 5, cap. 6, col. 688, line 59 ff. The Halachic parameters are given in Mishnah Tohoroth: tractate Nega'im ("Leprosy-Signs"), The Mishnah (676–97). In his "Note Book of Authors" (Lev. 13:23), Mather recommends "T. Fullers. 1. Reconciler"; i. e., "The First Reconciler," a sermon on Lev. 13:3, explicating a priest's power to pronounce a

Q. What is the Meaning of that, If there be any Flesh in the Skin, whereof there is an hot Burning? v. 24.

A. The Hebrew runs thus; or the Flesh, when it shall be in the Skin, a burning Fire. That is, when there is an Inflammation made in the Skin & the Flesh, by an hott burning Coal, or some such thing falling upon it. In the foregoing Paragraph, he speaks of Ulcers, which arose of themselves, from bad Humours in the Body; And here, of such as were made by Fire.

Here, if the Spott were bright, very shining, or white, it was a Sign of the Leprosy broken forth in that burnt Place, which otherwise would have looked black.¹⁰

Q. What was the Plague upon the Head or Beard? v. 29.

A. Such a Disease, Pliny saies, came into Italy, in the Middle of the Reign of Tiberius Cæsar, which they called, Mentagra, because it commonly began in the Chin; and so Filthy it was, ut quacunque mors præferenda esset. [Nat. Hist. L.XXVI. c. 1.]¹¹

Q. A Few Touches upon the Gospel of the Ceremonial Uncleanesses under the Law, may bee useful to Illustrate the Holy Oracles? v. 1.¹²

A. See the Summ of that Gospel, in Heb. 9. 13, 14. –

There were Ceremonial Uncleanesses under the Law, which figured out the Moral Uncleanesses of Sin against the Law.

I. There were unclean Touchings. There were certain Animals, which might not bee Touched or Tasted. Such as parted the Hoof, were clean; which may intimate leper “unclean.” This sermon is the first item in A Triple Reconciler, Stating the Controversies [1.] Whether Ministers have an Exclusive power of Communicants from the Sacrament. [2.] Any persons Unordained may lawfully Preach. [3.] The Lords Prayer ought not to be used by all Christians (1654), pp. 1–56, by Thomas Fuller, D. D. (1608–1661), a English Reformed theologian and historian who of the first order. Fuller’s Pisgah-Sight of Palestine (1650), his popular biographies, The Historie of the Worthies of England (1662), and his oft-reprinted Historie of the Holy Warre (1632), a history of the crusades, were well received. (EB).

¹⁰ Patrick (Leviticus 207).

that God requires a Distinguishment of Things in His People. [see Phil. 1.9, 10.] And such as chewed the Cud, were also clean; By which a Ruminat[i]on and Meditation on the Things of God, is commended unto us. [See Psal. 1.2.] There were some Creatures likewise unclean, that had Ill-Properties in them, affording of good Documents to those that considered them [See 2. Pet. 2.22.] God, by instituting this Difference of Meats, did erect a Partition-Wall between His People, and the other Nations of the World. But the Uncleanness of certain Animals moreover taught these Two Things. First that there is a Difference of Persons; there are Men, clean and unclean. Wicked Men are compared in the Scripture unto unclean Beasts. Weigh Peters Vision; and Daniels Representation of the Four Monarchies. And then, Secondly, that there are Persons, with whom wee must forbear Communion. A Not Eating is a Restraint of Communion. Our Communion with our Lord Jesus Christ, is expressed by, Eating His Flesh. Men of unclean Lives, wee must abstain from Communion with them. Saies the Lord, They shall teach my People the Difference between the Holy & Profane.¹³

II. There were unclean Issues. As a Man contract, Uncleanness from without, so hee also suffers Uncleanness from within.

III. There was the peculiar Uncleanness of the Leprosy.

Behold, our wonderful Pollution by Sin! An ungodly Man, defiles all that hee meddles with. To the Unclean, every thing is unclean. And one wicked Man horribly infects another. Yea, our Original Sin, is a fountain of Corruption, continually flowing in the Issues of Actual Abominations. [Isa. 1.5, 6.] And every Man ha's a Leprosy within him. [1. King. 8.38.] Such therefore are incapable of Conversing with Holy Things, or Drawing near to God, in Special Ordinances, until their Uncleanness bee taken away. How is this done? But by the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, apply'd by Faith?¹⁴

The Purifications for these Uncleannesses, were several.

For the Uncleanness by Touchings, the Purification, was by a Sacrifice of a Red Heifer, whereof wee speak elsewhere.¹⁵

For the Uncleanness by Issues, the Purification was by Two Doves or Pigeons, one a Sin-Offering, t'other a Burnt-Offering; or, a Lamb, and a Young Pigeon. The Rites thereof are handled in our Discourses on those Offerings.

The Leprosy deserves a particular Consideration.¹⁶

Q. The Gospel of the Leprosy?¹⁷

13 Ps. 58:3–4, Acts 10:11–15, Dan. 2:31–35, Ezek. 44:23.

14 Samuel Mather, Figures or Types (1705), p. 283.

15 See Lev. 27:34 and Numb. 7:89, 19:2 (below).

16 Samuel Mather, Figures (313).

17 This is the title of Samuel Mather's sermon preached on April 12th, 1665, in Figures or Types (1705), pp. 291ff.

A. The Leprosy is a very horrible Distemper. Tis indeed among Diseases, as the Elephant among the Beasts, for the Magnitude of it; and therefore fitly called, The Elephantiasis on That, as well as other Accounts. It is almost a Cancer of the whole Body: The several Parts of the Body are Spotted, and Swelled with it: the Skin growes Rough; the Flesh growes Lean; the Face growes Ugly; the Mouth, and Legs, and Feet, are Tumified; the Voice is hoarse; their Breath becomes unsavoury; the very Bones are vitiated in it; and the Animal Spirits have a melancholy Cloud upon them. An Inexpressible Malignity in the Humours of the Body, is the Cause of all these dismal Symptoms.

Now, Original Sin, scandalously discovered, is that Leprosy, which must not bee endured in the Church of God. Indeed all Sin, may bee fitly compared unto a Leprosy; the Lothesomeness, and Painfulness, and Infectiousness of a Leprosy is in every Sin. Hence one who had been a Sinner, cried out like a Leper, Psal. 51.2. Cleanse mee from my Sin. But that Original Sin, which is the Cursed and Hellish Fountain of all our other Sin, this is by way of Eminency, to be esteemed a Leprosy. That Sin which is elsewhere called, The Plague of the Heart, is a Plague of Leprosy. Original Sin hath rendred the Sinner, Isa. 1.6. From the sole of the Foot, even unto the Head, having no Soundness, but Wounds, and Bruises, & putrifying Sores.¹⁸

But the Leprosy that must not bee endured in the Church of God, notes, not merely Original Sin yett existing; where that Leprosy is complained and combated, and every day under a fair Prospect of Cure, the Person must not for That bee shutt out of the Camp. No, Tis Original Sin, scandalously discovered, that calls for so severe a Proceeding with it; when one hath upon him, the Spott, which is not the Spott of the Children of God; when one does those things, under which a Man that Lives and Dies Impænitent, cannot Inherit the Kingdome of God; Then, There is that Leprosy that must bee shutt out of the Camp. The Rule was, The Leper shall dwell alone, without the Camp. The Lesson of it is, That the Church of | God must Reject and Expel, ungodly Sinners, from Communion in Special Ordinances. The Shutting of the Leper out of the Camp, was a Figure of an Holy Action, to bee done in the Churches of the Lord Jesus Christ; an Action for which wee have an Institution of our Lord; even the Action of an Excommunication. This, what is it? But, A solemn Rejection from the Communion of the Church in Special Ordinances, and this, by a Sentence passed in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, as a dreadful Token & Emblem, of a more dreadful Sentence, to bee passed by the Lord Himself, in the Day when Hee shall Judge the World. The Ancients well call it, Futuri Judicij prejudicium; and the Institution for it, is That; 1. Cor. 5.13. Putt away from among yourselves, that wicked Person.¹⁹

¹⁹ Samuel Mather, Figures (292, 314). Tertullian, Apologeticus Adversus Gentes Pro Christianis, cap. 39 [PL 001. 0469A], speaks of an "Anticipation of the judgment to come" (Apology 39, in ANF 3:46).

When wee thus go to shutt a Leper out of the Camp, wee should seriously & thoroughly examine, whether sufficient Convictions of a Leprosy bee found upon them. Excommunication, is a Thing of such a Terrible Consequence, that it should not bee used for meer Infirmities, which will not shutt Men out from Heaven at the Last; nor should it bee used for any Disputable or Indifferent Matters. To use it on these accounts, is but a Prostitution of a Tremendous Institution. It must bee used only for such Things, as Illuminated Christians generally agree to bee scandalous, & for those things, from whence hee who Turns not, shall not Enter into the Kingdome of God. There is a Leprosy in the Head, which renders a Man utterly unclean. This lies in Fundamental Heresies. [Consider Tit. 3.10.] And there is a Leprosy in the Hand. This lies in Abominable Practices. [Consider 2. Thess. 3.6.] Now the Circumstances of either Leprosy should bee well-examined.

There were Five Rules, for Judging of a Leprosy.²⁰

First; If it bee but Skin-deep, it is not Leprosy, hee is clean; but if deeper, hee is unclean. There are Faults, in a Mans Walk, like Spotts in the Skin; but if his Heart appear untainted, & the Spirits, & Vitals of the Sinner bee not deeply infected, it is comfortable.

Secondly; If it stand at a Stay, hee is clean; if it spread, hee is a Leper. If a Mans Corruption don't spread, and if God bee mortifying of it, and instead of proceeding further, tis decaying every day, this is a Good Sign, that God intends Good unto him.

Thirdly. If there bee Proud, Raw Flesh, in the Rising, the Leprosy is evident, there is no Suspense about it. Præsumption in Evil, and Impatience of Reproof, is proud Raw Flesh rising in the Leprosy. To take Reproof well, is well; but it is bad, when a Sinner won't bear to bee Touch'd, but is high, and can't bee told of his Miscarriages, without flying out into Invectives against the Reprovers.

Fourthly; If all bee Turned white, a Man is clean. Possibly, the Meaning might bee, that the Strength of Nature, having expelled the Disease into the outward Parts, the Breath was no longer so infectious as before. But wee may carry it unto this mystical Sense; If a Sinner do not see himself all over vile, hee is yett under the Power of his Leprosy. Hee must see his own overspreading Vileness, & fly to the Lord Jesus Christ, in Conviction of it, that in his Flesh, there dwells no Good Thing.²¹

Fifthly, If the Leprosy bee in the Head, hee is doubly unclean. Men of Corrupt Judgments are of all the most hopeless Lepers; They that will Justify themselves in their Impieties, have a very confirmed Leprosy.²²

²⁰ Samuel Mather, Figures (293–95).

²¹ Samuel Mather, Figures (294).

²² Samuel Mather, Figures (295).

Now, the Methods of shutting a Leper out of the Camp, are to bee slower or swifter, according to the Degrees of the Leprosy. In some Cases, & ordinarily, there is to bee a more Gradual Procedure; The Sinner is to bee only suspended with an Admonition; until it appear, that the Sinner does not Hear the Church. A Sinner is not Ripe for an Excommunication, until it appear that hee Rebel presumptuously. But there are more Atrocious and Flagitious Crimes; Crimes that wast the Conscience, & cry to Heaven for Vengeance. The Church cannot Rationally Beleeve, That a Sinner does Repent of these Crimes, till they see some Remarkable Fruits of Repentance in his Conversation, which cannot presently bee seen. What shall bee done, until a Sinner can make it credible, that hee hath truly Repented? And what shall bee done, for the Honour of the Lord, & His Church; Yea, and for the Welfare of the Sinner himself? Wee are to Admonish him, in the Censure that is pass'd upon him; nevertheless, Lett the Censure go on, with an wholesome Severity, to an awful Extremity. [See Lev. 13.46. with 1. Cor. 5.13.]²³

But now, what must bee done, in and for the Cleansing of the Leper?

The detected Leper, was to Rend his Cloaths, and Bare his Head, and Cover all his Lip, (all Actions betokening both Grief and Shame) and hee was to cry, Unclean, Unclean; giving Warning unto others to shun him; and finally, hee was to dwell alone, or bee excluded [from] fellowship with the People of God. [2.Chron. 26.20.]²⁴

Now for his Cleansing.²⁵

1. Hee must bee brought unto the Priest. [See Math. 8.4.] Now the True Priest, is our Lord Jesus Christ. Hee healed many *Leper*s in the dayes of His Flesh; and our Souls must bee still brought, with the Leprosy of Sin upon them, for Him to Heal them.

2. The Priest must go forth, out of the Camp, to the Leper. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ goes forth unto Sinners, when in their Distance from Him; His Office is, to Seek, & to Save, the Lost. [Compare Luk. 15.20.]

3. The Priest was to pass a Judgment on the Leprosy, whether it were Healed or no. It will one day bee done, by the Lord Jesus Christ, who is our Judge.

And then, for the Purification of the Leper, there followed;²⁶

1. A Sacrifice of two Birds, (thought to bee Sparrowes,) together with Cedar, Scarlet, & Hyssop; By the two Birds, both the Natures of our Lord, were intimated: The Living Bird, of His eternal Deity, the Dying Bird, of His mortal Humanity. And our Lords twofold State, of Death first, and then Life, may bee also intimated. As for the Killing of the Bird over Living Water, it seems to represent, the Sanctification, which accompanies our Justification, by the Blood of our Lord. [Compare, 1. Joh. 5.6.] This was to bee in an Earthen Vessel. Soul-cleansing Blood and Water, issue from the Blessed Body of our Lord Jesus Christ. His Body, was a Brittle Earthen Vessel, and Broken by Death.

²³ See Samuel Mather, Figures (296).

²⁶ Samuel Mather, Figures (314–15).

[31r] | As for the Living Bird, This was to bee dipt in the Blood of the Slain Bird. The Union of the Divine Nature, to the Humane, in our Lord Jesus Christ, & the influence of that Union, on the Concernments of our Peace, is here excellently represented. The Dipping of the one into the other, ha's made the Sufferings of our Lord, for to bee called, The Blood of God.²⁷

But the Cedar, Scarlett, & Hyssop, were also to bee dipped with it. All the Concernments of our Salvation, receive a Tincture, from the Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. [Of these things, wee speak more particularly, where wee Discourse on the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer.]²⁸

At last, the Living Bird was to bee lett loose into the open Field. This represents, not only our Lords escaping from Death to Life, after Hee had Humbled Himself to Death; but also the open Publication thereof, in the Open Firmament, & the View of all Men. [Rev. 14.6.] And the Setting of the Leper free, from his Restraint, was likewise attended with This, as an Hieroglyphic of it.²⁹

Finally, For the Leper himself; The Priest was to sprinkle him Seven Times, & pronounce him clean. The Application of the Blood of our Lord, is herein taught unto us; without This, all is nothing. And this must bee particularly made, frequently, & perfectly, & over & over again.

Again, Hee was to wash his Cloathes, & himself, & shave his Hair, & then come into the Camp; yett not into his Tent. The Parting with Corruptions, & bathing in the Spirit of Grace, & bathing even the Garment spotted by the Flesh, is here pointed at. And yett there did remain some danger of Infection still.

Wherefore, After Seven Dayes, hee must use the same Ceremonies again. Cleansing Work must bee Renewed from Time to Time. Our Mortification is a Gradual Work. And it is especially to bee performed on the Seventh day, or the Sabbath.³⁰

2. A Sacrifice of Three Lambs; namely, Two Hee-Lambs, the one for a Burnt-Offering, the other for a Trespass-Offering; and an Ew-Lamb, for a Sin-Offering, and a Log of Oyl.³¹

The Sacrifices were to bee slain, & offered according to Institution. The Rites of that, are elsewhere explained.

³¹ Samuel Mather, Figures (320).

But then, the Priest, must putt some of the Blood of the Sacrifices on the Tip of the Right Ear, of him that is cleansed, & some on the Thumb of his Right Hand, and on the Great Toe of his Right Foot. The Sprinkling of these Parts, was to represent the Sprinkling of the whole Body. And by that, the universal Cleansing of the whole Person was also represented. Thus in Baptism, wee use a Sacramental Synecdoche.

Here, some Gloss it, the Ear is to bee sanctified, for Holy Hearing, the Hand for Working, & the Foot for Walking.³²

Finally. The Priest was to take the Oyl, and Sprinkle Part of it before the Lord, and with Part Anoint the Leper, his Ear, Thumb, & Foot, where the Blood had been putt before; and Pour the rest upon his Head. The mystical Oyl, in continual Use under the Law, typified the Holy Spirit. [Isa. 61.1. and, Act. 10.38.] Therefore, the putting of the Oyl on these Parts, was to signify the Graces of the | Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, whereby those are Sanctified, that have been Justified by His Blood. And whereas, Blood must bee first applied, and then Oyl, this teaches us, that our Sanctification flows from our Justification.³³ [31v]

Upon the whole; what if a Leper could not gett all the Sacrifices, and Requisites, for his Purification? The Answer is: The Lord made a gracious Provision for the Necessities of His People, by lesser Sacrifices. Instead of Three Lambs, Hee allowed, One Lamb & two Turtle-doves, or else two Young Pigeons, which were most easy to bee gotten. Instead of Three Omers of fine flowre for a Meat-Offering, Hee accepted of One Omer, (about a Pottle,) and a Log of Oyl, which was about half a Pint. Behold, the Condescension of God! see 2. Cor. 8.12.³⁴

Q. We read concerning, The Plague of Leprosy in a Garment. What should it be? v. 47.

A. This is a Matter, which (as Dr. Patrick saies,) we do not now understand. The Leprosy appearing thus, in Insensible Things, the Syrians and Egyptians might perhaps then understand (as Cunæus expresses his Opinion of it,) but we are now Ignorant.³⁵

³⁵ The following paragraphs are from Patrick (Leviticus 213–14); Petrus Cunæus, De Republica Hebræorum (1617), lib. 2, cap. 24, p. 348: “Cujusmodi autem id vitium in rebus fuerit inanimatis, Syri fortasse & Ægyptij tunc intellexerunt; nos hercle ignoramus”; or “Though the Syrians and Egyptians of that time may have understood what sort of disease it was that could infest inanimate objects, I most certainly do not” (Hebrew Republic 149).

Indeed, it seems to have been a Divine Stroke; as Moses himself signifies: [Lev. 14.32. Compare 2. King. 5.7, 27. and 15.5.] And so the Jewes have alwayes understood it. Maimonides particularly saies, That this Change in Garments and Houses, did not proceed from Natural Causes, but was a Sign & Miracle in Israel; That is, An extraordinary Punishment inflicted by God, as a Token of His High Displeasure.³⁶ And it is not at all incredible, that such a strange Plague should infest them, which is not now known in the World. There have been Diseases, unknown to former Times, and those Diseases have also vanished, so that they are now to be found only in Books. Pliny mentions diverse New Diseases, Omni priori ævo incognitos; concerning which, he did not know what he should say, but only This; What shall we call this? or, from what Anger of the Gods doth it proceed, that the Diseases which already certainly infest Mens Bodies, (and that are in Number above Three hundred) should not be sufficient, but New ones are still to be feared? [Nat. Hist. L. 26. c. 1.]³⁷ The last Century was famous for such an extraordinary Plague (as Johannes Wierus, who then lived, often calls it,) when the Scurvy, which was confined before, unto some Northern Regions near the Sea, over-ran the Low-Countreyes; being at that time unknown in Germany, Italy, France, and Spain, which were intirely free from it.³⁸

Q. It is said, If the Plague be Greenish, or Reddish? v. 49.

A. Maimonides, with much Reason, saies, That the Hebrew Word, Jerakrak, (doubling the Radicals,) should be interpreted, A most intense Green; such as is in the Wings of a Peacock, or the Leaves of a Palm-tree. As the Word, Adamdam (of the like Form) signifies, a Redness as deep as that of Scarlet.³⁹

Q. Some General Remark, on the Law of Cleansing the Leper? v. 1.

A. Mankind excluded from the Paradise of God, is a Leper.

Our Great High-Priest has condescended so far, as to go forth, for the Visiting & Releiving of the Leper.

The Period of Seven used in the Cleansing of the Leper, leads us to the Great Sabbatism, at the coming of our Saviour, when Mankind shall be restored unto Paradise.

But what is most surprising is, That even after the Leper is returned into the Camp, he must wait yett Seven Dayes, before his Purification is Finished. Here is a Mystery, that ha's not been yett considered. The Saints in the Paradise of the Millennium, are still in a State of Progress towards Perfection. They will have something still remaining to be done by them & on them, ere they pass into those Full Fruitions of that Heavenly & Eternal World, wherein God will be All in All unto them. Of this Mystery, I give you the Sense of Christian Antiquity, in our Illustrations on the V Chapter of Matthew.¹

Q. For the Cleansing of the Leper, there were to be taken, Two Birds alive, that were clean. What Birds? v. 4.

A. The Margin of our Bibles, reads, Two Sparrowes. And some have their pretty Conceits thereupon; particularly, That it signifies him, who had lately satt alone, like a Solitary Sparrow on the House-top, (as the Psalmist speaks,) to be now admitted into the Society of others again.

But Origen takes these Birds to have been Hens, (and so Scaliger shows out of Nicaner, that the Greek Word Στρουθος, anciently signified;) And the LXX read only, δύο ὀρνίθια, Two little Birds, of any Sort whatsoever, provided they were Clean, or Lawful to be Eaten, as the Vulgar truly interprets it. For to restrain it unto Sparrowes may seem absurd; because it had been in vain to say, Two Sparrowes that were clean, when the whole Species were so, by the Law.²

¹ See Mather's commentary on Matt., ch. 5, in BA, vol. 7, and his discussion of the Raised and Changed Saints, in "The New Heavens" and "The New Earth," in "Trip Paradise" (Three-fold Paradise 244–94).

BCE), the Greek physician-poet and grammarian, but ultimately consults Aristotle to confirm his interpretation. LXX (Lev. 14:4, 49). Rashi, Nachmanides, Ibn Ezra, and Chizkuni – all agree that the term "tzippor" merely signifies "bird" in general, but one that is clean and can be eaten. The Reformation and post-Reformation theologians abstracted

Q. But why must the Purification of the Leper be made with Cedar-Wood, and Scarlet, and Hyssop? v. 4.

A. Maimonides professes, he could never understand the Reason. But Abarbanel adventures to guess at the Reason; and he imagines, That these Four Things, the Living Birds, the Cedar, the Scarlet, and the Hyssop, signified, the Leper to be cured of the Four Evils under which he had laboured; in his Flesh, his Humours, his Colour, and his Smell, which were now represented by those Four Things, & were now all become Sound & Good. The Living Birds, he thinks, were a Sign, that his Dead Flesh was restored unto Life, and Health, and Vigour. The Cedar Wood, which is not liable to Corruption, denoted the Cure of the Putrefaction, which the Leprosie had made in the Humours of his Body. The Scarlet Threed or Wool, was an indication of the good Complexion restored unto him: for this is a vivid and grateful Colour, as that of the Leprosy was livid and loathsome. And lastly, the Hyssop, which in that Countrey, was a very odoriferous Plant, signified, that the nasty Stench of the Disease was gone.³

Be these things how they will, the Jewes were possessed with so great a Detestation of the Filthy Leprosy, that it was necessary they should be very strongly perswaded (as Pellicanus observes) of a Mans Purification from it, by great many prolix, public, & laborious Ceremonies, e're they could count him fitt for their Society.⁴

in Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (1:562) and Works (6:248–49) are divided on the particular kind of bird intended here.

³ Patrick (Leviticus 220–21); Maimonides (Guide 3.47.597) argues that “the reason why purification from it [leprosy] was effected by means of cedar wood, hyssop, scarlet thread, and two birds, is given in the Midrashim; ... and up to now I do not know the reason for any of these things.” Abarbanel offers the following answer: the four symbolic offerings represent “one of the four aspects of leprosy: the birds, that his flesh is no longer dead but once again alive; the cedar, which (as experience confirms) does not decay, that his infection is gone; the crimson, that his blood is once again healthy; and the hyssop, that his foul smell is gone” (JPS Migra'ot Gedolot 3:101 and Selected Commentaries Vayikra/Leviticus 126). Midrash Rabbah (Leviticus VII) offers several reasons why God singled out these precepts for the purification of a leper: (1) since God created everything for his glory, he has determined these items for his own purpose; (2) “The hyssop, for instance, appears to be of no worth, yet its power is great in the eyes of God, who put it on a level with cedar in numerous cases. ... [1 Kings 5:13 is] to teach you that the small and the great are equal in the sight of God. He performeth miracles with the smallest things, and through the hyssop which is the most lowly of trees, did He redeemed Israel”; (3) the bunch of hyssop dipped in blood is to remind the Israelites that through Abraham's circumcision, the Passover sacrifice, and the blood on the lintel, they were united into a brotherhood unto God and through the shedding of this blood He saved them from slavery (Leviticus Rabbah VII.2, 3).

Q. A Further Touch, if you please, upon the Cedar-Wood, and Scarlet, & Hyssop, employ'd, in Cleansing of the Leper? {Lev. 14:4}

A. Wee find Leprosy to have been in a special Manner, the Punishment of Pride. Miriam, and Gehazi, and Uzziah, are Instances of its being so.

Now, saies Grotius, *Hanc superbiam cedrus significat; Vermiculus, sive coccinum, peccatum; et Hyssopus oppositam Virtutem ταπεινοφροσύνην; Humi enim nascitur, et Virtutem habet purgatricem.*⁵

In short, the lofty Cedar might mind the Leper of his Pride. The Worm-dyed Scarlet might mind him, of the Sin in it, & of the State it had brought him to, & in which {midst ?} he alwayes really was. The Lowly Hyssop was to teach him the Humility, & Lowliness of Mind, whereto he was now called, in his Recovery.⁶

Q. What is the Meaning of it, that One of the Birds must be killed, in an Earthen Vessel, over running Water? v. 5.

A. There seems to be a Transposition (as is very usual) in these Words. The Sense is, over an Earthen Vessel, that hath running Water (i. e. Spring Water) in it. Thus R. Levi Barcelonita describes the Cæremony. The Priest takes a New Earthen Vessel, & pours into it Living Water, until it be a Quarter-full. This was the Measure of the Water, according to the Tradition of the Scribes: who add, That the bigger and fatter of the Two Birds, was killed over the Water, & the Blood pressed out so long, that the Water was discoloured with it; and then he digged an Hole, and buried the Dead Bird, before the Leper.⁷

Q. It followes, As for the Living Bird, he shall take it, and the Cedar-Wood, & the Scarlett Wool – v. 6.

A. R. Levi Barcelonita, and Maimonides thus describe the Rite.

⁶ See Appendix A. Samuel Bochart's Hieroicon (1663), pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 22, cols. 150–57, offers a number of mystical explanations.

⁷ Patrick (Leviticus 221–22); R. Levi Barcelonitae, סֵפֶר הַחִיּוֹט Sefer Ha-Chinnuk (1523), in Hottinger, Juris Hebraeorum, sec. XIV, praecept. CLXXIII, pp. 250–51.

Hee took a Stick of Cedar-Wood, which was a Cubit long, and tying the Bird unto it, with its Tail uppermost, together with a Bunch of Hyssop, of an handful long, and as much Scarlet Wool as weighed a Shekel. He then dipt the Birds Tail and Wings, with the Hyssop and Scarlet-Wool, in the Water tinctured with the Blood of the other Bird.

[33v] The Manner of the Priests letting the Living Bird loose, was this, (as R. Levi relates:) The Priest going into the City, threw the Bird over the Walls, towards the Wilderness. It show'd, that the Leper was restored unto a free Conversation among his Neighbours, as the Bird was with the rest of its Kind. | Hascuni alledges an Ingenious Reason, for the Ceremony of letting the Bird fly. The Leper, after having lived solitarily & separately, did now return to the Society of Mankind, as the Released Bird returned into the Air, among the Birds of its own kind, with which it formerly associated.⁸

Q. He shall be clean.] what was he until he became so? v. 9.

A. He was called, Mechussar Kapparah; one that needed Expiation.⁹

Q. The Priest was to putt the Blood of the Trespass-Offering, on the Tip of the Right Ear, of him that was cleansed; and, on the thumb of his Right Hand; and, on the Great Toe of his Right Foot. How was this performed? v. 14.

A. The Priest standing within the Court, at the Entrance of it, and the Man standing still without; the Man thrust his Head within the Gate, and the Priest putt some of the Blood; which he held in his Hand; upon the Tip of his Right Ear. After this, the Man stretch'd out his Right Arm, and the Priest putt some of the Blood, upon the Thumb of his Right Hand; And, next, his Right Leg; On the Great Toe of which he likewise putt more of the Blood. Maimonides adds yett more particularly, That the Blood was putt upon Half of the Flap of the Mans Ear; upon the whole Breadth of the Top of his Thumb, and Great Toe.

Abarbanel thinks, That here was an Intimation, that the Leprosy began in those Parts of the Body (which are less Fleшы and Fatt,) and these were now therefore particularly declared clean.¹⁰

Q. The Lord saies, I putt the Plague of Leprosie upon an House? v. 34.

A. Dr. Patrick thinks, These Words may be a good Ground to think, that this Plague was a supernatural Stroke; not like the Contagion, which now adheres to the Houses and Garments of those that have the Pestilence. Abarbanel so understands it. “When He saies, I putt the Plague, it shewes, the Thing was not Natural; but proceeded from the Special Providence and Pleasure of the Blessed God.¹² And the Author of Sepher Cosri saies, God inflicted the Plague of Leprosy, on Houses and Garments, as a Punishment for lesser Sins, and when Men continued still to multiply Transgressions, then it invaded their Bodies.¹³ Maimonides will have this Plague, to have been most particularly, the Punishment of an Evil Tongue, (i. e. of Destruction and Calumny,) which began in the Walls of the House, and went no further, but vanished, if he Repented of his Sin: But if he persisted, it proceeded unto his Household-Stuff; If he still persisted, it invaded his Garments; And at last, his Body.¹⁴ Abarbanel adds, That the Intention of this Miracle, was to be a Caution from God, that the Man might be converted from his Sins; as if the Stone of the Wall had cried out, & the Beam out of the Timber answered it, unto the Master of the House, saying, Turn unto the Lord thy God, O Israel; Behold, the Plague is come into thy House, and if thou wilt not be converted, it shall abide upon thee & thy Children. This, he saies, is the Opinion of their Rabbis.¹⁵ extremities and thus have less access to the body's immune system. The immune system which is normally carried by the blood as it circulates through the body, works best in those areas where the circulation is best which is closer to the heart. ¹⁵ Abarbanel adds, “One should not think this is a natural phenomenon; a ‘plague,’ caused by infection of the blood, cannot naturally occur in a house, which has no blood. This is something that God does to urge people to repent of their sins. As Hab. 2:11 puts it, ‘For a stone shall cry out from the wall, and a rafter shall answer it from the woodwork’” (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:106).

Q. The Pulling down of the Leprous House, what signified it? v. 45.

A. Abarbanel ha's a notable Fancy, That this Plague in their Houses, was an Emblem of the Idolatry, they would practise there, when they came into Canaan; And the Pulling down of their Houses, was a Sign of the Destruction to come on the Sanctuary itself, because of their Iniquities. At least, we may suppose, the Proceedings of God against the Sinful Jewish Nation, until He ha's utterly carried them forth into an unclean Place, is here admirably represented.¹⁶

Q. The Lord saies, I will appear in the Cloud upon the Mercy-Seat; what Cloud? v. 2.

A. One would think, the Cloud intended, were the Cloud wherein the Divine Glory resided. But the most understand it of the Smoke of the Incense, which the High Priest burnt, when he went into the most Holy Place. And there is Reason for this Opinion. For, if there had been a Cloud in the most Holy Place, over the Mercy-Seat, before the High-Priest entred, what need had there been, to make a New Cloud of Smoke, when the Divine Glory was already sufficiently obscured. The Cloud belonging to the Shechinah, was now without the Tabernacle; only the Glory was within. Indeed, when it is said, That, God will dwell in Thick Darkness, it seems to import, that the Divine Glory was wrapt up in a Cloud. But be that Matter how it will; what we here translate, I will appear in the Cloud upon the Mercy-Seat; may very well be translated, I will be approached in a Cloud; [i. e. of Incense.] For as Vitringa hath observed, the Word which we render, Appear, is used [Exod. 23.15.] not for Gods Appearing unto us, but for our Appearing before Him.²

Q. How do the Jewish Traditions describe the Coming of the High-Priest into the Holy Place? v. 3.

A. They tell us, He was for no less than Seven Dayes before, separated from his own House and Family, dwelling apart from them, in a Chamber of the Temple; that he might be the better præpared for the Offices of this Day, by Sprinkling the Blood of the Daily Sacrifice, and Burning of Incense, and the like. And lest he should be ignorant of his Duty, or forgettful, the Sanhedrim sent some to Read before him the Rites of this Day; who adjured him also to perform every thing according to the Command of God. The Night before, they lett him eat but little, that no Accident in the Night, might make him unfitt for to officiate, in the Day following; and that he might Awake the Sooner, and Begin the Service of the Day betimes, as they did upon all great Solemnities. All this is Related in

1 In his “Note Book of Authors” on Lev. ch. 16, Mather lists “Irwin. Advers. Sacr.” as a vademecum.

2 Simon Patrick, on Lev. 16:2 (Leviticus 258–59) relies on Sacrarum Observationum (1689), lib. 1, cap. 11, pp. 157–58, by the Dutch Reformed theologian at Franeker, Campegius Vitringa (1659–1722). On Vitringa’s exegetical method, see C. Telfer, Wrestling with Isaiah (2016).

And Mr. Selden hath observed, out of Sepher Schebat Jehuda, with what a magnificent Pomp, the High-Priest was conducted from his own House, when he went unto the Temple, Seven Dayes before The Day of Atonement, accompanied by the King, & the whole Sanhedrim, the Royal Family, and the whole Quire of Priests, and the rest. Thus our Lord Jesus Christ, our Blessed High-Priest, was in Triumph conducted unto Jerusalem, five Dayes before He offered Himself there, for the Sins of the World.³

Q. When the High-Priest, offered his Bullock of the Sin-Offering, which was for himself, & for his House, how did he proceed in it? v. 6.

A. It was not now killed; That was done anon. (v. 11.) He now only presented it before the Lord, for to be anon Sacrificed. This was done with a Solemn Prayer, wherein He besought the Lord, that He would be propitious unto him and his. We read of it in Massechet Joma. c. 3. s. 8. He laid his Hand upon the Head of the Bullock, & said, *I have done amiss, and have been Rebellious, & have Sinned before thee, I and my House. I beseech thee now, O Lord, remitt my Rebellion, and my Sin, which I have committed, & my House.*⁴

Q. What was the Presenting of the two Goats? v. 7.

A. This was the same, with the Offering of the Bullock, in the Verse præceding; or, a solemn Consecration to be Sacrificed. According to this Pattern (as Dr. Patrick observes,) our blessed Saviour, a little before His making Himself a Sacrifice on the Cross, voluntarily offered Himself to Dy for our Sins. This is the Meaning of that Passage, Joh. 17.19. For their Sakes I Sanctify myself; that is, Offer myself to Dy as an Expiatory Sacrifice for them. For that ἀγιάζειν signifies as much as προσφέρειν, Dr. Outram has demonstrated. And accordingly, Chrysostom so

Q. The Law, about That which wee call, The Scape-Goat; Bestow some Illustration upon it? v. 7.

A. The learned Spencer, shall supply us, with Notes, to Illustrate that Law, whereof the Wise Men among the Jewes, as Maimonides tells us, Judge, Quod causam quidem et usum habeat, nobis tamen, vel propter Imbecillitatem Mentis nostræ, vel propter Imperfectionem Sapientie, incognitum; and which is by Cyrillus Alexandrinus reckoned among the δυσπρόσιτα και δυσχερῆ πρὸς διασάφησιν, Perplexa et Explicatu difficilia, of the Mosaic Institutions.⁶

Now, In the first Place, wee find here Two Goats, coming under Two Lots: One for the Lord, and the other for Azazel. And wee are therefore in the First Place, to enquire, what is meant, by that Azazel? Of this wee say; Tis not probable, that Azazel, should bee the Name of the Mountain whereto the Goat was

⁶ See Appendix A. Mather, via Spencer’s De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 3, diss. 8, “præfatio,” fol. 989, raises a fascinating issue about the rational foundation for the Mosaic Law. Maimonides, for one, believed that the dual intent and utility of the ceremonial laws was to purify the morals of the people and to lead them to the true faith by preventing their regression into paganism. In his famous More Nebuchim (Guide 3.31–33.523–34), he focuses on those ceremonial rites that appear to be without rhyme or reason. He objects to those among the zealots who insist that man should not enquire into the utility of God’s laws because God is beyond human comprehension and the incomprehensibility of his laws is therefore positive proof of their divine origin. If man can penetrate their mystery, so they argue, these laws would only lose their divine status and diminish our reverence because they could then have been devised by man. Maimonides’s explanation takes the opposite stance: The rational benefit of the laws is the only possible proof that they are of supernatural origin. Why else would believers take pride in their wisdom? Mather’s adapted citation from Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), lib. 3, cap. 26, p. 414, explains that the majority among the Hebrew sages judge “that there indubitably is a cause and useful end for them but that it is hidden from us either because of the incapacity of our intellect or the deficiency of our knowledge” (adapted from Guide 3.26.507). Although Mather (via Spencer) attributes the Greek passage to St. Cyril, Patriarch of Alexandria, it is actually adapted from the Acta conciliorum oecumenicorum (tom. 1, vol. 1, pt. 4, pag. 40, lines 14–15) of the Concilium universale Ephesenum anno 431 (Concilium Oecumenica), the First Council of Ephesus in 431 CE, which anathematized Nestorianism. Advocated by Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, the doctrine questioned the unity of Christ’s dual nature, human and divine. In his dispute with Nestorius, Cyril of Alexandria gained the support of the RC Pope Celestine I, but the ecumenical council, which convened in Ephesus, did anything but save the unity of the Church (CE). Be that as it may, the phrase reads, “the intricate and hard-to-explain interpretations” of the Mosaic Law.

to be carried; which is the Opinion, both of the Arabian, and Hebrew, Writers, and occurring in the Talmuds. No such Mountain, is found in Palestine, and Moses could as easily have said, Mount Azazel, as Mount Ebal. Nor is it probable, That Azazel is the Name of the Goat itself, and so to be rendred, as in our Translation, The Scape-Goat: or as by Symmachus, Τράγος ἀπερχόμενος, or as by Aquila, Τράγος ἀπολελυμένος: or, as by the LXX, ἀποπομπαίος: who are herein generally followed by the Ancients. Why should there be a Compound Word used in this Matter, /עז/ and, /אזל/ when there are hardly seven more in all the Old Testament? Besides, the former of these is of the Feminine Gender, & the latter of the Masculine. And the Word occurs, in the Præscription, before any Order for the Emission of the Animal, is yett once hinted. And /שעראזל/ would have been a fairer Word, fetched from the very Context for it, than /עזאזל/. Nor does the Sense run clear, in giving two Senses to the Præfix, /ל/ if the Goat be one of the Objects, for whom the Lot is intended.⁷

Wherefore, Azazel is most certainly, the Name of no other than, The Divel.⁸ Jonathan, Onkelos, the Samaritan, and many other Interpreters, leave the Name wholly uninterpreted; which intimates that they took it for a Proper Name of such

7 See also Mather's linkage of Azazel with demonology in his Magnalia Christi Americana (1702), bk. 6, ch. 7, fols. 66–67. Spencer, De Legibus (lib. 3, diss. 8, cap. 1, sec. 1, fols. 990, 991), leans on Bochart, Hieroicoicon: Animalibus (1663), pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 54: “De Hirco Azazel, qui vulgò emissarius dicitur” (cols. 650–61). The London polyglot renders the Arabic translation of “Azazel” (Lev. 16:8, 10) as “monte Azaz,” i. e., Mt. Azaz. The Talmud has the ancient rabbis associate Azazel, the second of the two goats, with “a Zok” (mountain peak) from which the he-goat was to be cast down. R. Baraitha taught that “Azazel” signifies “the hardest of mountains” (Yoma 67b). Ibn Ezra, drawing on Saadia Gaon, offers much the same: The term denotes “the mighty mountain” (Ps. 36:7) or, literally, “mountains of El,” which some located “near Mt. Sinai” (JPS Miqra’ot Gedolot 3:120). Significantly, whereas the Hebrew original retains the designation עֲזָאזֵל [‘aza’zel] (Strong’s # 5799), Symmachus (fl. late 2nd-c. CE), the Ebionite (or Samaritan), and Aquila of Synope (fl. early 2nd-c. CE), both of whose Greek translations of the OT (here: Lev. 16:8) were incorporated in Origen’s Hexapla [PG. 015. 0624–0625], gloss the term “Azazel” as “he-goat [which is] sent-off” (Symmachus), as “he-goat [which is] released into the desert” (Aquila), and as he-goat which “carries away evil,” i. e., “scapegoat” (LXX). The composite /עֲזָאזֵל/ [‘aza’zel] is derived from /עז/ (she-goat) and /אזל/ (to depart). This is the explanation offered by Paulus Fagius, on Lev. 16:8, in Critici Sacri (1:808) and by Johannes Buxtorf, in Lexicon Chaldaicum Talmudicum, et Rabbinicum (1639), col. 1592, on which Spencer relies. With Spencer at his elbow, Mather argues that /שעראזל/ [sa’ir’azel] or rather /שְׁעִיר/ [sa’iyr], a variant of /שְׁעִיר/ [sa’ir], signifies “he-goat (hairy one)” even “satyr, demon (with he-goat’s form or feet)” (Strong’s # B9788, B9791). Mather correctly points to the problematic prefix /ל/ “el,” which can function as an adjective and signify “mighty” and as a preposition, suggesting “to, for,” denoting a direction. (CBTEL, ABD).

8 Spencer (sec. 2, fols. 992, 993, 994, 995). That “Azazel” may indeed signify an evil spirit, demon, or the devil, no less, involves an age-old debate, which Spencer revives in his De Legibus (lib. 3, diss. 8, fols. 990–1044). R. Eliezer, in his פְּרָקִי רִבִּי אֱלִיעֶזֶר Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. 46, p. 125, associates “Azazel” with “Sammael,” an arch-demon (Pirkê de R. Eliezer, ch. 46, p. 363).

a Signification.⁹ Yea, the Ancient Jewes, in that Fragment of Writing, which is carried about under the Name of Enoch, do reckon Azalzel, (the Corruption of Azazel) among the Princes of the Fallen Angels.¹⁰ And from these, the Cabalists, talk much of, Azazel, as the Name of those Dæmons, which haunt the Sepulchres of the Dead.¹¹ Among the Ancient Christians also, Origen, to prove that they had Notions of the Divel in the Age of Moses, writes, That which in Leviticus is called, ἀποπομπάιος, but by the Hebrew Scripture Azazel, οὐδείς ἕτερος ἦν was no other than the Divel.¹² And Epiphanius, quotes out of Ireneus, the Verses of a Christian Poet, against Mark the Valentinian, which tell him, that hee did his Miracles,

Δι' Ἀγγελικῆς δυνάμεως Ἀζαζήλ ποιεῖν.¹³

by the Help of Satan, or Azazel.

Azazel, for the Etymology of the Name, is from /עז/ Fortis, and /אזל/ Abiens, Recedens, Fugiens. The Piacular Goat, having all the Sins of the People now laid upon him, did become so Filthy, that hee was fitt for nothing, but to bee sent into a Desert, whither that Fugitive Spirit, the Divel does most resort, and there to bee Company for the Dæmons, which for their affecting to appear in an Hircine Form, used to bee called /שעירים/.¹⁴

10 Spencer (1992) refers to the apocryphal 1 Enoch, published for the first time in Georgii Syncelli Chronographica. Ab Adamo usque Diocletianum (1652). My reference is to the Venice 1729 edition (pp. 10, 19, 20), where Azazel is spelled "Aza'el." See also the Ethiopic Book of Enoch: 1 Enoch 6:7, 8:1, 9:6, 10:4, 13:1 (Old Testament Pseudepigrapha 1:15, 16, 17, 19), where the name "Azazel" is used.

11 Mather (via Spencer 1992) refers to In Genesin Primum Mosis Librum, sic a Graecis Appellatum, Commentarius (1598), "Praelectiones," p. 88 (C), by the French RC theologian Johannes Mercerus, aka. Jean Mercier (c. 1510–70), professor of Hebrew at the prestigious Collège Royal, in Paris. According to Mercier, "Cabalici hoc exponunt quò Satan, de quo postea in sensu mystico agemus, non posthac sic habiturus potestatem in animam, sed in corpus tantum quod pulvis est. Unde iniqui daemones et malignos spiritus in sepulchris maximè, ubi sunt cadavera, versari, id quod verum est, & hujusmodi daemonem azazelum appellant" (p. 88 C).

12 Origen, Contra Celsum (bk. 6, sec. 43, lines 14, 15), argues that the ancients in Lev. 16:8 (LXX) yoked Azazel (i. e., "carrying away evil") with the devil.

13 St. Epiphanius of Salamis (Panarion 2.23, line 14) cites lines from an obscure Christian poet (probably Pothinus), preserved in St. Irenaeus's Adversus haereses (1.15.6) against Marcus (2nd c.), a Christian missionary and disciple of the Gnostic theologian Valentinus of Alexandria (c. 100–c. 160 CE), who came in conflict with Irenaeus, bishop of Lyon (CE). The derisive ditty reads, "Marcus, thou former of idols, inspector of portents,/ Skill'd in consulting the stars, and deep in the black arts of magic,/ Furnishing signs unto those involved by thee in deception,/ Wonders of power that is utterly severed from God and apostate,/ Which Satan, thy true father, enables thee still to accomplish,/ By means of Azazel, that fallen and yet mighty angel, – / Thus making thee the precursor of his own impious actions" (ANF 1:340). The second to the last sentence (before the dash) translates Mather's Greek quotation.

14 Spencer (1994) consults Johannes Avenarius's Sefer Hashborashim: ספר השבששים hoc est, Liber radicum seu Lexicon Ebraicum (1589), p. 15, voce אָזֵל. The terms /עז/ Fortis, and /אזל/ Abiens, Recedens, Fugiens, signify, "strong, powerful" and "depart, move away, go into exile."

That the Divel, may bee called, A Potent One, according to the first Part of this compound Word, was the Opinion of his Worshippers, to whom hee was [Dan. 11.38.] /אֱלֹהֵי מַעְיָדִים/ Deus Fortitudinum. As the God of Heaven is called, /עֶזְזוֹ/ thus the Divel was, among the Phœnicians called, Ἀζίζος, i. e. Fortis. Yea, in the Scripture of Truth itself, the Divel is called, Ἰσχυρὸς, [Luk. 11.21.] and his Angels are called, ἀρχαὶ and ἐξουσίαι. [Eph. 6.12.]¹⁵

That the Divel is a Fugitive, there is enough to bee said. His early Departure and Defection from God, renders him worthy to bee called so. By the Rabbins, hee is therefore styled, /מְרוֹדֵד/ The Apostate.¹⁶ And as the Good Angels are, /עֲזִימִים/ Fortes Stantes, [Zech. 6.5.] thus the Evil Ones, are /עֲזִימִים אֲזִלִּים/ Fortes Abeuntes: for, as wee read, They left their own Habitation. Moreover, They Fly much into Desarts, and Places remote from the Conversation of more civilized Mankind. For which Cause, they are called, /שְׂדֵימִים/ Solitarij, Agrestes; They are ἀφρητορες, Insociable. [Consider also, Job. 2.2. and Math. 12.43. and 1. Pet. 5.8. and Jam. 4.7.]¹⁷

Thus, in Job. 26.13. The Divel is called /נָחָשׁ בְּרִיחַ/ The Fugitive Serpent. It may bee translated, His Hand hath slain, the Apostate Serpent. Even the same, that Ignatius calls, τὸν δράκοντα τὸν ἀποστάτην. Compare the LXX. To this Passage alludes the Prophet Isaiah, in chap. 51.9. Thou hast wounded the Dragon. But much more, in chap. 27.1. Leviathan, that Fugitive Serpent. LXX. δράκοντα ὄφιν φεύγοντα.¹⁸

The Jewes, instead of Azazel, use the Name of Samael; which according to [34v] Cocceius, is /סַר מַאֵל/ Recedens à Deo Forti, or ὁ ἀποστάτης. | Moreover, you find Ἀζαήλ, in the Sibylline Verses.¹⁹ Is Uziel, mentioned by the Chaldee Paraphrast, 15 Dan. 11:38: "God of strongholds" (JPS); the devil was called /עֶזְזוֹ/ [ˈizzuwz] (Ps. 24:8) "powerful, mighty" (Strong's # 5808) and Ἀζίζος, i. e., Fortis ("strong"). Mather's "divel" is called Ἰσχυρὸς (Luk. 11:21) "strong, mighty" (Strong's # 2478), and his angels ἀρχαὶ and ἐξουσίαι (Eph. 6:12), "principalities" and "powers" (Strong's ## 746, 1849).

16 Spencer (1994) employs Valentin Schindler's Lexicon Pentaglotton, Hebraicum, Chaldaicum, Syriacum, Talmudico-Rabbinicum, & Arabicum (1612), p. 1036 (C), voce: מְרוֹדֵד apostata, daemon, qui à Deo defecit.

17 Spencer (1994–95). As the "Good Angels" are "powerfully steadfast," the "Evil Ones" are "greatly restless." For haunting the lonely deserts, these demons are called, "solitary, savage."

18 Spencer (sec. 3, fols. 995–96). Ignatius, Epistolae interpolatae et epistolae suppositiciae (re-censio longior) (Epistle 6, ch. 6, sec. 4, line 4), condemns those who believe that Jesus Christ is a mere mortal. Such an infidel, Ignatius insists, has "the apostate dragon dwelling within him" (Epistle to the Philadelphians, ch. 6, in ANF1:83). The Greek passage from Isa. 27:1 (LXX), suggests, "the dragon, even the serpent that flees."

19 Spencer (1996) cites from Johannes Cocceius's "Explicatio Epistolae ad Hebraeos," cap. IX, p. 564, § 24, in Opera Omnia Theologica (1689), tom. 5, p. 564. With Ibn Ezra as a backup, Cocceius associates Azazel with סַמְאֵל, i. e., Samael [Sam(m)ael] (a fallen angel), whose name is supposed to be derived from סַר מַאֵל [sar ma'el], which Spencer renders "Recedens à Deo Forti," i. e., one who is "departed from Almighty God," and Cocceius translates as ὁ ἀποστάτης, i. e., "an apostate." The Oracula Sibyllina (2.215) lists "Azazel" among the archangels Βαρακιήλ (Barakiel), Ραμιήλ (Ramiel), Οὐριήλ (Uriel), and Σαμιήλ (Samiel). Barakiel, Ramiel, Azazel, and esp. Sammael, are among the host of fallen angels in the apocryphal 1 Enoch 6:7–8 (OT

(on Gen. 6.4.) nothing akin to it? The Book Zohar, treating of the Fallen Angel, writes, Deus eos ad inferiora præcipites egit, concatenatos; Illi autem fuerunt, Aza et Azael. And in an Old Book, De morte Mosis, wee read, Angeli, Aza et Azael, cælo descendentes, viam suam corruperunt.²⁰

But now, Let us in the next Place enquire, Why this Goat, is thus for Aza-zel? And, first, Wee must by no means imagine it, intended as an Oblation to the Divel; or, as R. Elieser thought it, a Present unto Samael, on the Day of Propitiation, that hee might not render their Oblation unto God, ineffectual.²¹ Thus wee read, in the Book entituled, Caphthor; That the Jewes, on the Day of Expiation, presented a Gift unto Satan, ut illius oculos præstringerent, nè ab illo accusarentur; quia scriptum est, Munus excæcat oculos videntis.²² The Error of those, who thought this Goat, an Offering, ἀποποιῶν τινι καὶ πονηρῷ, καὶ ἀκαθάρτῳ δαίμονι, Ad Avertendum aliquem, et malum, ac impurum Dæmonem, is rebuked well by Cyril of Alexandria. And Procopius afterward writes upon it, Hæc opinio superstitione haud vacat.²³ However, Postellus in the former Age, undertook the Patronage of it: which wee need not wonder at, when wee call to Mind, That

On Mather's view of the Sibylline Oracles, see his Threefold Paradise (194–99) and his annotations on the NT (BA 7, Matth. 1): Q. What were the Oracles of the Sibyls, concerning the Lord Jesus Christ?

²¹ Spencer (De Legibus, lib. 3, diss. 8, cap. 2, fol. 998); Bochart, Hierozyicon (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 56, col. 652, lines 39–59); פרקי רבי אליעזר Capitula R. Elieser (1644), cap. 46, p. 125 – all expound on Sam(m)ael-Satan's exploits. See also BA 1:487.

²³ The Greek citation from Cyrillus Alexandrinus is adapted from his Glaphyra in Pentateuchum [PG 069, 0585, lines 42–43]. Cyril rebukes “the Error of those, who thought this Goat, an Offering ‘to some spirit, escorting away and oppressed and impure to some averting deity, evil, and impure.’” And Procopius Gazaeus (Commentarius in Leviticum 16:12 [PG 87.1.0748]) insists that “this opinion is by no means free from superstition.”

Origen himself was in this Error, that the Goat was, ἀποτροπιάζεσθαι, for the Appeasing of the Divel.²⁴ No, wee must not imagine, that thus

*Imperium Divisum cum Jove Satan habet.*²⁵

The Holy God, who every where Forbad unto His People, any Sacrificing unto Dæmons, would not now Command it. Julian had no Reason from hence to Brag, That Moses favored the Rites of Paganism, & wrote ὑπὲρ {δὲ} ἀποτροπαίων, pro Avertuncis.²⁶ Both of the Goats, were to bee presented before the Lord, as an Intimation, that they were both offered unto Him Alone, tho' they were in Two Several Wayes disposed of. Nor would Azazel, that Roaring Lion, have been content with One of the Goats; hee would still have been as fierce against Mankind as ever. Wee may rather Judge, That God ordered the Goat, laden with all the Sins, of the People, & become cursed and loathsome, to bee carried unto Azazel, that, as tis well said, by Guil. Parisiensis, Eos Immundoes esse ostenderet, adeoque populum à Coloquio et Familiaritate ipsorum elongaret.²⁷

But after all, I suppose, this Action had these Two Intentions.

One was, To signify unto the People, what would bee the miserable Condition of Them, who did not by Faith, in the Messiah, gett the Guilt of their Sins Removed. They that have their Sins lying upon them, and are led forth with the Workers of Iniquity, must become a Prey to Azazel, even to Satan, unto whose Temptations, they did in their Sinning, yeeld Obedience: Ungodly Souls, that carry their Sins upon them, when they go out of this World, shall, as the Psalmist speaks, (it may bee with some Ey, to the Hircus Emissarius) bee, a Portion for Foxes, yea, for Divels. And it is doubtless, with some Allusion, to this Levitical Goat, that our Lord Jesus Christ, in the Day of Judgment, [Math. 25.33, 41.] sends the Goats, that have their Sins upon them, to bee with the Divel and his Angels.

But Another, and a Greater, might bee, (what, I wish Dr. Spencer had considered) To repræsent a main Article in the dreadful Sufferings, which were to ²⁵ A parody on the well-known line “Divisum imperium cum Jove Caesar habet,” Mather’s adapted citation (frequently attributed to Virgil) reads, “Satan divides the world with Jove [Jupiter].” See also Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 14, sec. 5, fol. 367).

befall our Lord Messiah, when Hee should come to suffer for our Sins.²⁸ I am far from saying with Cyril, that the Sacrificed Goat was a Prophecy of Jesus crucified; but the Dismissed Goat, a Prophecy of Barabas Released.²⁹ I rather choose to say; when our Lord Jesus Christ, underwent His Humiliation for us, this Point was very considerable in it; Hee was carried into the Wilderness, and there Hee was exposed unto the Buffetings and Outrages of Azazel. The Assaults that Satan, then and afterwards made on our Lord Jesus Christ, producing a most horrible Anguish in His Mind, made so great a Figure in His Conflicts for us, that they were well worthy of a most particular Prefiguration.

The next Thing that occurs to our Notice is, That the Goat for Azazel, must bee sent into the Desart. Lett us a little enquire, into the Reason of That.³⁰

Now, wee must know, That in the Dayes of Moses, Desarts, were counted very much an Habitation of Divels. This is one Cause, why the Israelites were commanded so strictly, to bring every Creature that they killed, unto the Door of the Tabernacle. [Lev. 17.3.] even, lest they should sacrifice unto Divels, the Blood, of what they killed. This Command obliged them only in the Wilderness; not after they came into Canaan. And hence also, the Phrases of sending the Goat, unto Azazel, or, into the Wilderness, are here used promiscuously; as if in the Wilderness, an Azazel could not bee missed of. Yea, Desarts really were, what they were counted. For which Cause tis, that the Divels, are called /שְׂדִים/ [Deut. 32.17.] either from /שָׂדֵד/ Vastavit, because they choose Desolate Places; or, from /שָׂדֵה/ Ager, because the Champaign Fields, are affected by them. They are also called, /צִיִּים/ [Isa. 34.14.] which is derived from /צִיָּה/ Siccitas.³¹ Because they prefer Dry Places, which for the Drought of them, are Forsaken of all other Inhabitants. Compare, what you find in Math. 12.43. of the Evil Spirit, seeking Dry Places, hee walks, δι' ἀνύδρων τόπων.³² Tis not said, ξηρῶν, but ἀνύδρων, i. e. Aquis Carentium, as Erasmus notes, nam hujusmodi loca ferè sterilia sunt, | et ob id Desolata.³³ And Maimonides mentions it, as the Opinion of the ancient 28 Mather is unhappy with Spencer's exclusive concern in De Legibus Hebraeorum et Ritualibus with the historical origin and context of ancient Israelite sacrificial rituals rather than with the typological and allegorical application of OT ceremonies to the NT Christ. Barabbas (Matth. 27:15–26, Mark 15:6–15, Luke 23:13–25, John 17:38–19:16) is the individual whom Pontius Pilate released instead of Christ.

[35f]

29 See Cyrilus Alexandrinus (Glaphyra in Pentateuchum, Lev., cap. 16) [PG 069. 587–590].

30 The following paragraphs are synopsized from Spencer (lib. 3, diss. 8, cap. 3, fols. 1000–03).

31 The Hebrew noun /שְׂדִים/ [shed'im] (Deut. 32:17), signifying “demon” (Strong's # 7700), is either from /שָׂדֵד/ Vastavit (“lay waste”) or from /שָׂדֵה/ Ager (“field”). The Hebrew noun /צִיִּים/ [tsiyiy] (Isa. 34:14), denoting “wild beast, desert-dweller” (Strong's ## 6728, B8391), is derived from /צִיָּה/, which Mather renders Siccitas, “dryness, drought.”

32 Matth. 12:43: “through waterless places.”

33 Spencer (1001). Mather consults the famous Dutch humanist Desiderius Erasmus of Rotterdam (c. 1469–1536), editor of the Greek NT, which became part of the Complutensian Polyglot. My reference is to Erasmus's annotation on Matth. 12:43, as preserved in Pearson's Critici Sacri (1660), tom. 6, p. 362. At any rate, Erasmus's commentary reads, “Non est ξηρῶν,

*Zabians, Quòd Deserta loca, careant Aquis, et Dæmones horrendi loca illa incolant.*³⁴ The Scriptures, therefore foretelling Desolations to these and those Places, do still make the Divels to bee their Inhabitants. [See Isa. 13.21. and Isa. 34.13, 14. and Jer. 50.39. with the Translation of the LXX. and Rev. 18.2.] Hence, Magicians, to obtain the Conversation of Divels, did frequent Forsaken Places. Wee read, Isa. 65.4. They lodge in the Monuments; /בְּצִוְרִים/ tis by Schindler, thus explained; Manent in Locis Desertis, noctu, ut videant Dæmones. The Hebrew Word, elsewhere is taken for, Desarts.³⁵

Had my learned Friend, Dr. Spencer, still been living, It might have been suggested unto him, why Desarts may bee so agreeable to Divels. It was not, and is not every Countrey, before which the Divels do præfer the Desarts. Regions, in which the Divels are much served, by those Usages either in Worship or Manners, which are pleasing to them, are by those doleful Creatures enough Resorted unto: Yea, if Sin much abound any where, at the Divels entreat, that they may not bee sent from thence into the Wilderness.³⁶ But Regions, like the Land of Israel, where the True God is continually prayed unto, and where the Word of God is continually Sounding, are filled with such Things as are very uneasy to the Divels: the Divels often retire much from thence into the Wilderness; as in the Haunted House of Mr. Perreaud, the Divel of Mascon, would say, while you go to Prayer, I'll go take a turn in the Street.³⁷

ἀνὴρ ἄνυδρος, i.[e.] aquis carentia, & siticulosa. Nam hujusmodi loca ferè sterilia sunt, & ob id Desolata: "Not 'dry, [but] 'waterless,' & 'parched.' For these places are generally barren, & on account of their desolateness."

34 Mather's condensed quote from Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 30, p. 428, is to confirm that Mars, the god of war (as the books of the Zabian idolaters write), had been furious with "the desert places, which [therefore] lacked water, and these places were [therefore] inhabited by dreadful demons" (see Guide 3.30.522).

35 Mather's second-hand citation from Valentin Schindler's Lexicon Heptaglotton (1612), col. 1154(D), which is adapted from the original "Esa. 65. v. 4. Qui sedent in sepulchris וְבְצִוְרִים & in destructis pernctant: in locis desertis. Noctu, ut videant dæmones Lxx," translates as follows: "they abide in desert places, [and] appear as demons at night."

36 Master of Corpus Christi College (Cambridge), John Spencer died at the age of 63, on May 27, 1693 (ODNB). That devils and demons may be more adept in one place than another is also suggested in Mather's Memorable Providence (1689): "Some Devils may keep more constantly to one country, and some to another. Hence we read of some in Marc. 5.10. They besought our Lord much, that He would not send them away out of the Countrey. But still the High-places of our air be the Receptacles of the wicked Spirits" (p. 3, sec. ser. of pag.).

37 The references is to The Devill of Mascon. Or, A true Relation of the chiefe things which an unclean Spirit did, and said at Mascon in Burgundy (1658), p. 24, by François Perrault (1577–1657), French Reformed minister of Mascon. According to the introduction by the translator Pierre du Moulin, the uncanny event was recorded in 1612 but not published until 1653 – perhaps just in time to repudiate the materialism of Thomas Hobbes's Leviathan (1651). Perrault's popular Devill went through at least five English editions in the seventeenth century and was excerpted and commented on numerous times in Joseph Glanvill's Saducismus Triumphatus (1681), Cotton Mather's Late Memorable Providences (1691), Richard Baxter's The Certainty of the Worlds of Spirits (1691), and in many other places.

Hence an Uninhabited Land is here assigned unto the Goat, who being laden with all the Sins of the People, they sent him away, as far as they could send him. And indeed, by the Terra Abscissa, some do more particularly understand some Island. Saith Lucretius,

*Hæc loca capripedes Satyros Nymphasque tenere,
Finitimi fingunt, et Faunos esse loquuntur;
Quorum Noctivago strepitu, ludoque jocanti,
Affermant vulgò taciturna silentia rumpi.*³⁸

And Alexander Hales reports, *Magus quidam, in Libro suo de Magicis, dicit, se transisse causâ philosophandi, ad loca destituta omnio habitatore; habitasseque ibi cum inhabitantibus lucem sex lustris Annorum, et ab eisdem didicisse, quæ in eodem libro conscripsit.*³⁹ And in Lucian, the famous Magician, Mithrobarzanes, with his Companions, betook themselves εἰς τι χωρίον ἔρημον, καὶ ὕλῳδες, καὶ ἀνήλιον, into a Desart, woody, shady Region, for a Conversation with Spirits.⁴⁰

But why was this Goat left Alive, after this Action? Even for the Reason, that is mentioned by Abulensis; Non Immolabatur Hircus iste Azazeli, id est, Dæmoni. The Lord would not have his People entertain the least Imagination, That this Goat, was intended as a Sacrifice unto the Divel.⁴¹

And by the way, I know not, but the Law about the Two Sparrowes, one kill'd the other lett Fly, at the Purification of the Leper, (whereof Maimonides confesses, Purificationis Lepre duobus passeribus factæ, mihi ne in Hodiernum

³⁸ Spencer (1002). A place like the “Terra Abscissa,” i. e., אֶרֶץ אֲבִיסָסָה, a “land which is cut off” (Lev. 17:22); Mather hopes to illustrate such a locale with his citation from Lucretius, De Rerum Natura (4.580–83): “Such places the neighbours imagine to be haunted by goatfoot satyrs and nymphs, and they say there are fauns, by whose night-wandering noise and jocund play they commonly declare the voiceless silence to be broken.”

⁴⁰ In Lucianus’s Menippus sive necyomatia (sec. 9, lines 11–12), Menippus implores the magician Mithrobarzanes, a white-haired, long-bearded Chaldean, to show him the way to the underworld. Like Odysseus in Hades waiting for Teiresias, Menippus encounters the shades of the dead at the meadow of Asphodel flitting about him as Menippus and the magician wend their way to the court of Minos.

Diem vera constat Ratio;) may receive a notable Illustration, from the Law about the Two Goats now before us.⁴²

It should seem indeed, by some old Jewish Writers, that in the Latter Times of Judaism, their Custome was, to break the Neck of the Goat, by throwing him over a Precipice: tho' Jonathan saies, This was done by Whirlwind and Thunder.⁴³ If it were so, perhaps, t'was the Want of Breadth of Land, or, it may bee, a worse Cause, that inclined them to an Action, for which they had no Institution. The Pagans dealt so, by their καθάρματα. Yea, Strabo and others, will tell you, of the Devoted Men so handled among them.⁴⁴

The Sense of the Remaining Rites, about this Goat, is obvious. And indeed, wee have the like occurring in the other Sacrifices. As for the Rites Invented by the Jewes, I know, no Occasion, that wee have to Trouble ourselves with them. They Ty'd a Woollen Scarlet String, to the Head of this Goat. Thus Tertullian, enumerates Hircum Coccino Circumdatum,⁴⁵ among the Figures of our Lord Jesus Christ: And the Talmuds report, Alligabat Sacerdos Linguam Coccineam ad Caput Hirci Emissarij: Which Lingua is described by Maimonides to bee, Lanei staminis instar, rubro Aucta.⁴⁶ In this they had an Eye, to that in Isa. 1.18. Your

42 The conflated citation from Maimonides is adapted from his Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 47, p. 494, has Maimonides confess that "the true reason for the purification of leprosy with two birds is not clear to me even now."

43 See the Babylonian Talmud, tractate Yoma (37a and 67b). Targum Jonathan ben Uzziel (Lev. 16:22), in Walton's Biblica Sacra Polyglotta (4:210), reveals that the goat bearing the sins of the people is taken into the desert of "Beth-hadurey," and as it climbs the mountains, "a tempestuous wind from the presence of the Lord will carry him away, and he [the goat] will die" (Etheridge 2:198).

44 Mather's pagans dealt with their καθάρματα, or "refuse of a sacrifice," by discarding it. Strabo (Geographia 8.3.19, lines 20–25) relates that the waters of the Anigrus river had special curative powers, because (so the ancients believed) the Centaurs there cleansed themselves off the Hydra's poison. Melampus, the ancient healer of Argos, used these medicinal waters for "the purification of the Proetides," the daughters of King Proetus of Argolis, when in their madness (perhaps like that of Nebuchadnezzar in Dan. 4) they deemed themselves bovines and roamed through the plains and wastelands of Arcadia.

45 Spencer (cap. 5, fol. 1006); Tertullian identifies the "he-goat begirt with scarlet" (Answer to the Jews, ch. 14, in ANF 3:173) and Adversus Judaeos (cap. 14) [PL 002. 0640B–C] and Adversus Marcionem Libri Quinque (3.7) [PL 002. 0331A] as a figure of Christ, the typological scapegoat.

46 Spencer (1009) quotes from Joma. Codex Talmudicus. [Mishna Seder Moed]. In quo agitur de sacrificiis, caeterisque ministeriis diei expiationis (1648), cap. 4, p. 78, § 2, and annotations (pp. 81, 83) translated by Robert Sheringham (1602–78), an English royalist, Christian Hebraist, and proctor at Cambridge University. Sheringham's translation of the Mishnah, tractate Yoma, was superseded by that of Edward Pococke (ODNB), but Surenhusius integrated Sheringham's translation in his edition of the Mischna (1698–1703). Here, see Surenhusius, סדר מועד [Seder Moed] sive Legum Mischnicarum (1699), pars altera (De Die Expiationis 227). At any rate, the Latin translation in Sheringham's Joma (cap. 4, pp. 78, 81, 83) reads, "the priest tied a purple string to the head of the he-goat that is to be sent away." According to Sheringham's Latin translation, Maimonides describes the string as "a thread of crimson wool." See tractate Yoma (4.2, and 6.6), in The Mishnah (pp. 166, 170); and Maimonides, Hilchot Shekalim (4.1), in Mishneh Torah (9.2.400). See also Babylonian Talmud, tractates Rosh HaShana (31b) and Yoma (39a)

Sins like Scarlett, shall become as Wool. And they have a Fiction, that the Scarlet Threed, upon the Dismission of the Goat, instantly turned White. I doubt, that herein they too much aimed, at imitating the Manners of the Pagans, among whom, saith Virgil,

Medio Stans Hostia ad Aras,

Lanea dum niveâ circumdatur Infula Vittâ.⁴⁷

Alexander ab Alexandro tells us, That for a smaller Creature to be sacrificed, *Infulâ Laneâ et Candidâ Vittâ Circumdata, ante Aras sistebatur.*⁴⁸ Wee have a thousand Intimations of this Usage, in Antiquity. The Infule were, as Varro tells us, *Velamenta è Lanâ, intrâ hostiarum Cornua:*⁴⁹ and Ravisius, in his Epithetes, will satisfy you, from the Poets, how much a Vitta Purpurea, was used on this Occasion.⁵⁰ The Testimonies, in Bernart, in Paschalius, in Sheringham, to this Purpose, are Numberless.⁵¹ Moreover, T'was their Manner to load this Goat with all the Curses they could throw upon him. Hee was, as Tertullian saies, Maledictus, et Consputus, et Convulsus, et Compunctus, and so, à *Populo extrâ Civitatem abjiciebatur in perditionem.*⁵² Jerom also speaks of him, as, *Consputus et maledictus.*⁵³ And the Talmuds affirm, Quòd ei crines vellicarent. Yea, St. Barnabas, reciting of the Appointment in Leviticus, makes this a Part of it; ἐ[μ]πτύσατε 47 The third-hand lines from Virgil's Georgics (3.486–87), which read, “the victim, standing by the altar, even as the woollen fillet’s snowy band was passed round its brow,” are by Spencer extracted from Alexander ab Alexandro's Genialium Dierum Libri Sex (1673), lib. 4, cap. 17, p. 1076 (note 2), as is the adapted citation from Varro's De lingua Latina 7.3.1 (below).

48 The quotation is adapted from Genialium Dierum Libri Sex (1673), lib. 4, cap. 17, p. 1076, by the renowned Neapolitan jurist and classicist Alexander ab Alexandro (c. 1461–1523). According to the renowned Neapolitan, the smaller animal, “surrounded by a woollen fillet and bright ribbon, was presented before the altars.”

49 The modified citation from Varro's De lingua Latina (7.3.1) is a third-hand thing from Alexander ab Alexandro's Genialium Dierum (1673), p. 1076 (note 2), who explains that “coverings of wool [decorated] the horns of the victims.”

50 Mather refers to Epithetorum Ioannis Ravisii textoris Epitome (1553), p. 397, entry “Vitta,” a popular thesaurus of synonyms, by Joannes Ravisius, aka. Jean Tixier de Ravisi (c. 1480–1524), a French humanist and rector of the University of Paris. Mather's quote reads, “purple fillet.”

51 Bernart, probably the medieval French troubadour Barnart de Ventadour (c. 1135–1194), is believed to have originated the popular genre of the canson, or song in three parts. The French historian and biographer Caroli Paschalius, aka. Carlos Pasquale (1547–1625), discusses hircine sacrifices in his Coronae. Opus quod nunc primum in lucem editor X. libris (1610), lib. 4, cap. 17, p. 256; lib. 6, cap. 28, p. 444. And Robert Sheringham does much the same in his translation and annotations in Joma. Codex Talmudicus (1648), pp. 136, 140, 145, 148.

52 In his Adversus Marcionem (3.7), Tertullian likens Christ to the scapegoat, which was expelled amid “cursing, and spitting, and pulling, and piercing,” and so “driven by the people out of the camp into the wilderness [perdition]” (ANF 3:327). See also Adversus Judaeos, cap. 14 [PL 002. 640B–C].

53 In the sermon “De Resurrectione Domini Sermo” (p. 201), attributed to St. Jerome, the great Latin Church Father likens Christ to the scapegoat spat upon, cursed, and driven into the wilderness: “Ad extremum noster hircus ante domini immolator altare; illorum hircus antichristus consputus & maledictus projicitur [sic] in solitudinem,” in St. Jerome's Tomus Quartus in Cuius Prima parte reperis erudita quaedam, sed hactenus falso inscripta Hieronymo (1530), p. 201.

[35v] πάντες κλ. *Conspuite | Illum omnes, ac Lancinate, et Imponite Lanam Coccineam circa Caput ejus, et sic in Desertum emittatur.*⁵⁴ One would guess by this, that there was more in the Ancient Greek Pentateuch, than in the Modern. However, tis very sure, the old Pagans thus treated their Piacula Publica; whereto Budæus thinks, the Apostle alludes, in 1. Cor. 4.13. Wee are made as the περικαθήματα of the World. q.d. Wee are Despised, Reproached, Abhorred, Hated, and Cursed, as much as those miserable Creatures, which the People drove out of their Cities as Piacular, under public Execrations.⁵⁵ But, I hope, this brings to your Mind, the Sorrowes endured by our Lord Jesus Christ: as it brought the same unto Tertullians, who saies, that this Goat, was herein, *Manifestis indè notatus insignibus Dominice passionis.*⁵⁶

But now at last, Behold, how notably the Law of the Two Goats, was contrived, for the Eradication of the Idolatry, into which the Israelites were fallen, by their Conversation among the Egyptians. The Egyptians had Hircine Statues for their Idols, in their Temples. Their God, Pan, they called Mendes, which signifies a Goat, as you'll find in Herodotus; and they thought it honourable, to bee from thence called, Mendesians.⁵⁷ And that the Israelites did worship, Dæmons appearing in Hircine figures, called therefore /שְׂעִירִים/ is evident from that Passage, in Lev. 17.7. They shall NO MORE offer their Sacrifices, to such Divels: which Passage is improved unto this Purpose, by Maimonides.⁵⁸ All Antiquity reports

54 The Talmud, tractate Yoma (6.4), affirms “because they condemn every hair.” In Sheringham’s Latin edition Joma. Codex Talmudicus (1648), cap. 6, sec. 4, p. 132. St. Barnabas is believed to have been a companion of St. Paul and one of the earliest Jewish Christians. The Greek citation from Barnabae epistula, ch. 7, sec. 8a (line 2), emphasizes that Christ was “spat upon from every side, etc.” The Latin translation, which continues the Greek original from the Epistle of St. Barnabas (7:8), exhorts, “And all of you spit upon it, and pierce it, and encircle its head with scarlet wool, and thus let it be driven into the wilderness” (ANF 1:141).

55 Mather and his peers believed that the ancient pagans who sacrificed their “public sin offerings” were imitating the Mosaic atonement rituals. Guilielmus Budaes, aka. Guillaume Bude (1467–1540), French classical scholar, librarian of King Francis I, and “secret adherent of the Reformation” (CBTEL), says in his Annotationes Reliquae in Pandectas Altera Aeditio (1562), p. 124, that in 1 Cor. 4:13, St. Paul alludes to the ancient pagan practice of casting their sins upon the piacular victim, when the Apostle declares, “we are made as the περικαθήματα [i. e., sacrificial filth] of the world.”

56 Spencer (1011). Finally, Mather’s densely crowded paragraph is punctuated with a quote from Tertullian’s Adversus Marcionem, lib. 3, cap. 7 [PL 002. 0330B], which establishes the typological link between the OT prophetic type and its larger antitype abrogated in the NT: the goat was “thus marked with all the signs of the Lord’s own passion” (ANF 3:327).

57 Spencer (lib. 3, diss. 8, cap. 7, fol. 1014). Herodotus (2.46) explains that goats are sacred to the Mendesians, citizens of Mendes in upper Egypt. They depict the god Pan, “with a goat face and he-goat’s legs.” In the language of the Egyptians, so Herodotus, “the he-goat and Pan are both called Mendes.”

58 The Hebrew noun /שְׂעִירִים/ [sa’yirim] suggests “he-goats,” “satyrs, demons (with he-goat’s form, or feet)” [Strong’s # B9788, B9791] and is thus linked to the Greek Pan and to the horned, goat-footed devil in medieval Christianity. Tellingly, the KJV translates the term as “devils” (Lev. 17:7). In his Liber מורה נבוכים Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 46, p. 480, Maimonides asserts that “certain sects of the Sabians [Zabians] worshipped the jinn [demons]

the Most Frequent Appearance of Dæmons, with some Hircine Members, about them. And Selden further tells us, Qui Solemnia Sagarum Conciliabula aperiant, ii Dæmonem Principem, qui præsidet, Hirci Figuram præ se ferre tradunt.⁵⁹ Which Report you will find abundantly confirmed, in Remigius, and others that have written of such Matters.⁶⁰ Yea, the Tragolatri, upon which the Egyptians were so mad, that not only as Diodorus relates, τὸν {δε} τράγον ἀποθέωσαν, but also their Priests were first of all Initiated unto this God, had so diffused itself thro' the World, that it was very common, even in Spain itself, as Torquemadus, a Spanish Author testifies.⁶¹

Now, what a Contradiction to this Tragolatri, was there, in the Institution of God? That which was the God of other Nations, must bee made a Curse with Israel; and an Object for all possible Contempt and Outrage. The other Nations, thought that the Divel was a Sort of an Evil, but a Mighty, God, who was the Author of all their Calamities, & must therefore bee appeased: but Israel must bee taught, that their Sins confessed over the Head of the Goat, were the cheef Cause of their Calamities, without which the Divel could not come from the Wilderness to do them any Damage.

And if they were Kids rather than Goats, as indeed the Word is to bee understood, one of them now being to bee slain, with the old Zabians in the other Nations, it was, as Juvenal saies and believed that they assumed the outward forms of goats and therefore called the jinn goats. This teaching was very widespread in the days of Moses our Master: And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto the goats [שְׁעִירִים], and so on. [Lev. 17:7]. Hence these sects also used to prohibit the eating of goats" (Guide 3.46.581). See also Bochart's Hieroicoicon: Animalium (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 53, cols. 640–46; pars 2, lib. 6, cap. 7, cols. 828–29).

Now Israel must go do that, which they took to be the Highest Crime that could be.⁶²

And wee may carry on the Illustration of this Matter, with an Observation of Maimonides, *Cùm Aaron præcipuè Lapsus est circà Vitulum, oblatio tum ipsius, tum omnium è semine ipsius exurgentium, fuit Juvencus et Vitulus: cùm autem ab Ecclesiâ peccatum esset circà Hircum, præceptum est ut Hirci pro toto cætu offerantur.*⁶³

However, if the least Inclination, to those Bloody Sacrifices of Men, (called by the Græcians, Ἀποτρόπαιοι, κατάρτικοι, ἀποπομπάιοι, ἀναθέματα, περὶ ψήματα, καθάρματα, by the Romans, Victimæ Piacularæ, Vicarij, Sacri,) used by the Pagans, arose among the Israelites, this Law of the Emissary Goat, was enough to take them off.⁶⁴

In fine, from these Things, there seems a Rise given, to an Usage, and a Proverb, among the Pagans. It was a Proverbial Speech, κατ' αἶγας ἀγρίας, In Capras Sylvestres, – or, Lett it fall upon the Wild Goats.⁶⁵ Erasmus proves out of Athenæus, that it is, *Abominantis sermo et malum deprecantis, inque Sylvestres capras avertentis.*⁶⁶ In Bochart, you'll find more of this. And thus, when the Plague infested the Grecians, Palamedes advises, Ulysses, to supplicate Apollo, (you have it in, Philostratus,) τῇν νόσον {δὲ} ἐς αἶγας τρέψαι, *To Turn the Plague upon the Wild Goats.*⁶⁷

62 Spencer (1017); Juvenal (Satire 15.12) pokes fun at the Thebans, where “it’s a sin to slaughter a goat’s young,” but human flesh is quite acceptable – so he laughs.

63 In Liber מורה נבוכים Doctor Perplexorum (1629), lib. 3, cap. 46, p. 487, Maimonides adds, “in Aaron’s case, for when he went astray in the action of the [golden] calf, it was prescribed that he and those of his descendants who would replace him, should sacrifice a bullock and a calf. When the act of disobedience ‘against the Church’ concerned a kid of goats, ‘it was ordered that a goat be offered on behalf of the whole community’” (adapted from Guide 3.46.589). The passages in single ‘quotation marks’ are not part of the Latin translation of Maimonides’s Doctor Perplexorum (1629) or of the English translation in the Guide.

64 Spencer (1020). The Greek words suggest, “sacrifice averting evil,” “break in pieces,” “[scapegoat] carrying off evil,” “votive offering set aside,” “wiping clean [of sins],” “purification.” The Romans call them “atoning sacrifice,” “substitute,” and “sacrifice.”

65 The Greek version of the proverb can be found in a number of places, including Pausanias’s Ἀττικῶν ὀνομάτων συναγωγῇ (alphab. letter kappa entry 16, line 1) and Hesychius’s Lexicon (A–O), alphab. letter kappa entry 1123, line 1; and in Suda, Lexicon (alphab. letter kappa entry 888, lines 1 and 2).

66 Samuel Bochart (Hieroicoicon: Animalibus, pars. 1, lib. 2, cap. 54, col. 661) supplies Mather (via Spencer 1025) with the proverb collected in Erasmus’s Adagia (1540), chiliades 3, centuria 3, adagio 2178. My reference is to Les Adages D’Érasme (2178. III.ii, 78, p. 1583). Erasmus proves out of Athenæus’s Deipnosophistae (epitome), vol. 2.1, p. 8, line 25 (Brill ed., 1939) that this proverbial speech “is the discourse of one detesting and pleading against evil, and turning goats away into the woods.”

67 Spencer (1025); Perhaps inspired by Sophocles’s Oedipus Rex, the Athenian sophist Flavius Philostratus (c. 170–250 CE) has Palamedes, a hero of the Trojan War, tell Odysseus (Ulysses) to supplicate Apollo, the bringer of health and sickness, to remove the pestilence from the people and to cast the plague on the wild goats, in Heroicus (Olearius, page 711, line 1).

Quære, whether the Ninety First Psalm, had no Relation to this Action on the Day of Expiation, or, were not Judged proper to bee sung on that Occasion?⁶⁸

Q. His Hands full of Sweet Incense, beaten small. How much Incense? v. 12.

A. With his left Hand, he took as much of the Incense, [mentioned, Exod. 30.34, 36.] as his Hand would hold; (besides the Incense which he burnt every Morning & Evening, which was a whole Pound;) and putt it into a Cup.⁶⁹

Q. And his Putting the Incense upon the Fire before the Lord, how was it managed? v. 13.

A. He entred, as the Misna tells us, with his Face towards the South; and so he went Side-Wayes, (for he might not look upon the Ark, where the Divine Glory was) till he came to the Staves of the Ark. There he sett down the Censer, and putt on the Incense; and having filled the House with a Cloud of Smoke, he went out backward, out of Reverence to the Divine Majesty, into the Holy Place, without the Vail. Where, when he was come, he made a short Prayer of this Importance; May it please thee, O Lord God, that this Year may be Hott and also Wett; that the Scepter may not depart from the Family of Judah, nor thy People Israel want Food; and that the Prayer of the Wicked may not be heard. Then he presently went out of the Sanctuary, and showed himself unto the People; that they might not suspect, he had miscarried in his Office. For, they say, that sometimes the High-Priest, having violated the Rites appointed by God, was immediately struck Dead, at the Holy Place.⁷⁰

Q. We read, The Blood he shall sprinkle upon the Mercy-Seat. How was it? v. 14.

A. The Maxim of the Jewes, is, The very Root (or Essence) of a Sacrifice, lies in the Sprinkling of the Blood. And one would think, by this Translation, that the High-Priest sprinkled the Mercy-Seat itself, with some of the Blood. But all the Jewes understand it quite otherwise.⁷¹ And indeed the Hebrew is, Al pene, over against the Face; that is, as they interpret it in the Misnah Towards the Mercy-Seat.⁷² And so it followes, in the next Words, And before the Mercy-Seat shall he sprinkle. Only this Difference there was in the Sprinkling; that this Particle, Al, they think, imported, that he was to make the First Sprinkling, toward the Top of the Mercy-Seat. Then followed Seven more Sprinklings;⁷³ But the Gemara on this Place, and Maimonides, and Obadiah Bartenoca, tell us, The Drops of Blood came not upon the Mercy-Seat, but fell upon the Ground.⁷⁴

Q. What Occasion to make an Atonement for the Holy Place? v. 16.

A. The Clauses that follow, do intimate; That the many Sins in which the People had been transgressing the Holy Lawes of God, the Year before, had made them so unclean, that it provoked Him to leave them, & count the most Holy Place unfit for His Habitation among them, except He should be Reconciled.

The whole Tabernacle of the Congregation must therefore have the Blood of the Sacrifices, to be sprinkled before the Vail of it; for being surrounded by a Sinful People, which were full of Impurities; and as Maimonides observes, it could scarce be avoided, that some Ignorantly, and others Præsumptuously, would offend against the Lawes of the Sanctuary; God for this reason commanded the Expiation to be made for the Pollution of the Sanctuary, and its Utensils.⁷⁵

Q. How did the High-Priest spend his Time, when he went in to make Atonement, in the Holy Place? v. 17.

A. Some of the Time he spent in Prayer to God, for himself, & his house, & his whole People. In Conformity hereto, our Lord Jesus Christ, when He consecrated Himself to be a Sacrifice for us, He first commended Himself to God, ⁷² This is Rashi's position (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:122).

⁷⁴ Patrick (Leviticus 274–75); his principal source here is William Outram's Sacrificiis Judaeorum (1677), lib. 1, cap. 16, § 4, pp. 178–80. Via Patrick, Mather refers to the oral tradition of the Gemara, the commentary on the Mishnah, tractate Yoma (5.3–7); the Sages of the Talmud (Yoma 55a) debate the issue of whether the blood is sprinkled “before” or “upon” the ark-cover, but appear to settle that “before” here means “on the ground.” See also Maimonides, Hilchot Ma'aseh HaKorbanot (5.12–16) and Hilchot Avodat Yom HaKippurim (3.5), in Mishneh Torah (29:392–94, 808–10); and R. Obadiah ben Abraham of Bertinoro, Italy (c. 1455–c. 1517), who wrote a popular commentary on the Mishnah, commonly referred to as “The Bartenura” (Venice, 1549) (JE). Mather's (mis)spelling of “Bartenoca” (rather than “Bartenora”) is copied from Patrick. See also Sheringham's Joma. Codex Talmudicus (1648), cap. 5, secs. 3–6, pp. 107–24.

Q. The Confession made over the Head of the Goat? v. 21.

A. A Confession must have been understood here, if it had not been expressed. Imposition of Hands was always accompanied with Prayer, of one sort or other, according to the Occasion of it. The Jewes have a Saying, as Dr. Outram notes; where there is no Confession of Sins, there is no Imposition of Hands.⁷⁷

It is observable, That the High-Priest made Confession, Three several Times on this Day; First, for himself; and then for his Brethren, the Priests; and now, for the whole Congregation. We read, in Joma, he pray'd unto this Purpose; I beseech thee, O Lord; This People, the House of Israel have done wickedly, & been Rebellious, & Sinned before thee. I beseech thee, now O LORD, expiate the Iniquities, the Rebellions, & the Sins, which thy People the House of Israel have done wickedly, transgressed & sinned before thee: According as it is written in the Law of Moses thy Servant, On that Day he shall make an Atonement for you, to cleanse you, that you may be clean from all your Sins before the LORD. This last Word, LORD, as soon as all the Priests & People heard it pronounced by the High-Priest, they bowed, & fell down flatt upon their Faces, & worshipped; saying, Blessed be the LORD, Lett the Glory of His Kingdome be forever.⁷⁸

Q. The Scape-Goat, was evidently a Sin-Offering. Is there any notable Circumstance not commonly observed, wherein he was a Type of our Saviour? v. 22.

A. It was a notable Circumstance that (as Dr. Jackson thinks, with some good Chronologers,) That our Saviour entred upon the Execution of His Office, to make Atonement for us, upon this Great Day of Atonement. On this very Day, was our Lord Baptised. Even Jansenius and others of the Roman Communion, don't follow the Roman Tradition, of its being on the Sixth of January; but Judge it more probable to have been on the Tenth of September. In the Beginning of which Month, when they celebrated the Feast of Blowing of Trumpetts, even then John Baptist began to Lift up his Voice like a Trumpett, & call the Jewes

Aaron ben Chajim (16th–17th c.), president of a synagogue in Fez (Marocco). (CBTEL). Our Saviour being Baptised by him, on the Day of Atonement, He was immediately driven by the Spirit into the Wilderness: A manifest Indication unto John Baptist, That He was the Redeemer of the World, præfigured by the Scape-Goat, who went into the Wilderness on the Day of Atonement. And whereas Aaron on this Day, had his Body washed in the Holy Place, Behold, how our Lords Baptism on this Day, had a Præfiguration very remarkable.⁷⁹

Q. Of the Bullock for the Sin-Offering, & of the Goat, we read, One shall carry them forth: How could One do it? v. 27.

A. They were first ripped up, and the Jumrim, as they call them [Lev. 4.8, 9,] taken out to be burnt on the Altar. And then the Priest dissected them, not into Pieces, as was wont to be done in Burnt-Offerings; but made only deep Incisions, letting the Parts hang still together. Which being done, Four Men (saies R. Solomon) carried them forth upon two Staves or Bars. It was too much for One to do it. Accordingly the LXX read the Words, ἐξείσουσι, They shall carry forth; but One Person, tis likely the principal Care to see them burnt; which is the Reason, that he only is mentioned.⁸⁰

Q. The High-Priest washing so often, did it not expose his Health? v. 28.

A. When his Dayes Work was done, he entertained his Friends with a Feast, for Joy of his own Welfare, Safety, and Health. For by Shifting his Garments, & Washing so often, he was in danger to catch Cold; and as Cuneus observes out of Maimonides, they did fall into various Diseases on this Occasion; (and some died in the Holy Place, for not having duely performed the Service.)⁸¹

⁷⁹ Patrick (Leviticus 286); Dr. Thomas Jackson, A Treatise of the Consecration of the Son of God, To His Everlasting Priesthood (1672), bk. 9, in Works (1673), tom. 2, bk. 9, ch. 24, sec. 4, pp. 1019–20 (§ 3), 1021–22 (§§ 5, 6). Cornelius Jansenius, aka. Corneille Janssens (1585–1638), a RC bishop of Ypres in Flanders, was the father of Jansenism, a Christian movement (mostly in France) with emphasis on doctrines that had much in common with Calvinism: original sin, depravity, predestination, and grace (CE). Luke 3:21–22, 4:1–3; Lev. 8:6; Rev. 1:5.

⁸¹ Patrick (Leviticus 298). Petrus Cunaeus, De Republica Hebraeorum (1617), lib. 2, cap. 14, p. 260: Cunaeus comments on Maimonides's Hilchoi K'lei HaMikdash ViHaOvdim Bo (7.14), in Mishneh Torah (29:186): "Maimonides says that the priests fell victim to many illnesses. They ate mostly meat, and they performed their sacred duties dressed only in linen clothes which they had to put on and take off whenever they set aside their jobs or went back to them. Besides, they were always standing on the pavement, and they were forbidden to sit anywhere in the courtyard where they performed the rites. All of this led to weakness, and swelling of the veins and a thousand other problems" (Hebrew Republic 114).

Q. What is the true Reason, that in those two Chapters, the Seventeenth of Leviticus, and the Twelfth of Deuteronomy, where the Lord requires all Sacrifices to bee offered, In the Place, which Hee shall choose, Hee does also give so many Charges, about Blood; that Blood should not bee Eat or Drank,¹ but poured out on the Earth, & covered? v. 1.

A. The Appointing of a Tabernacle, a Temple, a Determinate Place, for the Offering of Sacrifices, was intended as many Wayes a Prevention of Idolatry. It cutt off, Communion with the Idols, & the Altars of the Pagans; & it extinguished the Pagan Errors, of Prayers being more audible in High Places, than in Low ones; and that, as Libanius urged in his Oration, ὑπὲρ τῶν ἱερῶν: *Anima Agrorum, O Imperator, Templata sunt: και τοῖς γεωργοῦσιν ἐν αὐτοῖς αἱ ἐλπίδες, et Agricolarum in ipsis Spes omnis, de Viris, Uxoribus, Liberis, Bobus, et Satis Plantatis.*²

But there was one special Rite of Idolatry and of Divel-Worship, which was this way Anticipated. The old Idolaters, that they might Recommend themselves unto their Dæmons, did use to Receive the Blood of the Sacrificed Animal, into a Dish or a Pitt, about which they satt eating the Flesh of the Sacrifice. They imagined that Blood, thus was the repast of the Dæmons, with whom they now show'd their Fellowship, in eating the Flesh whereto it belonged. Thus, they supposed, a Friendship to, bee contracted between their Gods, and themselves.³

² Patrick, on Lev. 17:5 (Leviticus 310). Mather cites from Orationes 30 (title, lines 1–2, and 30.10, lines 1–2), by Libanius (c. 314–c. 394), the Hellenic rhetorician of Constantinople, friend of Julian the Apostate, and teacher of John Chrysostom. In the passage from his Orationes (30.10), Libanius touts the value of pagan temples: “The soul of the country, O Emperor, are the temples. In them are all the husbandman’s hopes, concerning men, and women, and children, and oxen, and the seeds and the plants of the ground” (Oration 30: Pro templis, pp. 77–78).

⁴ John Spencer, De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 2, Diss. in Act. 15:20, cap. 3, sec. 4, fol. 504. Lev. 19:26: “Eat not [anything] with the blood.” The Hebrew phrase עַל־הַדָּם

Well, The Command now given, for all Sacrifices to be offered, In the Place which the Lord should choose, was to prevent these Bloody Divellisms; and the frequent Practise of these Diabolisms, was one Reason, both of this Command, and of the Command about Blood so frequently accompanying of it.⁵

Q. Did not other Nations besides the Israelites come to see the Necessity of having public Places for Worship? {v. 4.}

A. Yes. In future Times, the Pagans came to enact the very same Law, that is here enacted. Plato in the Latter End of his Tenth Book of Lawes, ha's these memorable Words: "Ἐστω νόμος κλ· Lett this be a Law imposed absolutely upon all, that no Man whatsoever have a Sacred Place in a Private House; but when he hath a Mind to offer Sacrifice, Lett him go to the Public Temples, & deliver his Sacrifice to the Priests, whether Men or Women, whose business it is to take care that these things be performed in an holy Manner."⁶

Q. It seems, t'was the Custome of old, for the People, to offer their Sacrifices in the open field? v. 5.

A. Yes. The Pagans here erected their Altars, to procure the Fruitfulness of their Fields. How old this Idolatry was, we cannot certainly tell; but it continued a long Time among the Israelites, as we learn from the Prophets, [Jer. 13.27. and Hos. 14.11.] who tell us, Their Altars were as Heaps in the Furrowes of the Field. Among the Gentiles, Festus tells us, They offered Sacrifices to the Terrestrial

[al-hadd'am] addresses the proscription against eating anything "with the blood."

5 See Appendix A. Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 46, p. 484, well explains the rationale of Sabian blood rituals and how, by turning pagan rites upside down, Moses could wean his mixed multitude from idolatry even as his Chosen held on to the same ceremonies – yet in the name of God Almighty: The Sabians (Zabians) deemed blood "the food of the devils," Maimonides avers. Thus slaughtering an animal, these idolaters collected "its blood in a vessel or in a ditch," ate the flesh of their oblation "close by its blood," and "imagined that the jinn [demon] partook of this blood, this being their food, whereas they [idolaters] themselves ate the flesh." In this manner, they fraternized with demons by eating at the same table. Yet when HaShem gave His Law to Moses and "prohibited the eating of blood" as an idolatrous ritual, El Shaddai "pronounced the blood to be pure and turned it into a means of purification for those who come near it: And sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments . . . and he and his garments shall be hallowed [Exod. 29:21]." In this way, Scripture requires "the sprinkling of blood upon the altar and causes the whole act of worship to consist in pouring it out there, not in gathering it together: And I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement [Lev. 17:11]" (Guide 3.46.585, 586). As Maimonides adds elsewhere, the Lord God accommodated His people's infirmities through a "gracious ruse" by suffering such worship rituals "to remain, but transferred them from created or imaginary and unreal things to His own name, may He be exalted, commanding us to practice them with regard to Him" alone (Guide 3.32.526).

Gods, In Terrâ, on the very Ground; (or, as the Hebrew Phrase here is, On the Face of the Fields) But to the Infernal Gods, In Terrâ Essossâ, in Holes or Pitts, dug in the Earth; And to the *Cæstia*l Gods, In ædificijs à Terrâ Exaltatis, in Buildings exalted above the Earth; namely, upon Altars, which according to Servius also, had their Name, Ab Altitudine.⁷

Q. Why are only Peace-Offerings here mentioned? v. 5.

A. All other Sacrifices are also intended. But only these are mentioned; because these were of all the most common; being offered, not only for the Mercies they had already received, but for those which they still desired; as tis observed by Abarbanel. Men were more forward also to bring those Offerings than any other, because they were to have their Share of them, and Feast upon them.⁸

Q. The Eating of what was torn of Wild-beasts, is here forbidden, even to a Stranger? v. 15.

A. That is, a Stranger that had embraced the Jewish Religion; for other Gentiles might eat such things. Nay, the Israelites themselves (as Maimonides observes,) when they went to War, entred the Countreyes of the Gentiles & subdued those Countreyes, might Eat that which died of itself, or was torn of Beasts; Nay, Swines-flesh, and such like Food, when they were hungry, & could find no other Meat.

Q. The Prohibitions of Incestuous Conjunctions, run in those Terms, None of you shall fall into them? v. 6.

A. The Hebrew Words of this Clause are, Isch, Isch; or, Man, Man. That is to say, No Man. The Talmudists carry it, as if it had been said, Neither Jew nor Gentile; For all Mankind, (they say) are, comprehended under the Lawes against Incest. The very Karaites, who adhære only to the Scripture, & reject all Talmudical Expositions, are of this Mind, as tis observed by our Selden, in his Uxor Hebraica.¹

Q. Who are meant by, Any that are near of Kin unto a Man? v. 6.

A. These Words do not sufficiently express (as Dr. Patrick notes) the full Sense of the Hebrew Phrase; which is, One who is the Remainder of his Flesh; That is to say, So near of Kin to the Man, that nothing comes between them. This is properly the Nearest of Flesh here spoken of. She that is immediately born of the same Flesh that a Man is, or she out of whose Flesh he is born, or she that is born out of his Flesh; or, in plainer Words, a Mans own Sister, Mother, or Daughter. These are a Mans own Immediate Relations, which the Karaites call, as Mr. Selden saies, The Foundation and Root of all that is here forbidden; or, for the Sake of whom, the rest here mention'd are Forbidden.²

The Degrees forbidden are in these Verses. Nata, Soror, Neptis, Matertera, Fratrís et Uxor, et Patrus Conjux, Mater, Privigna, Noverca, Uxorisque Soror, Privigni nata, Nurusque, Atque Soror Patris, Conjungi Lege vetantur.³

The Mishnah, tractates Yebamoth (3.1–10), Sanhedrin (7.4), Makkoth (3.1), in The Mishnah (221–23, 391, 405), like the Talmud, tractate Sanhedrin (51a–b, 53ab, 54a, 55a, 57b, 69b, 74a, 75ab, 76ab, 81a, 87b), are explicit about what constitutes incest and its punishment. Karaism is a sectarian movement within post-exilic Judaism (c. 9th c. CE) which subscribes only to the Torah (Pentateuch) as divinely inspired and rejects the oral tradition (Talmud) of Rabbinic Judaism (EB). Selden's Uxor Ebraica (1646), lib. 1, caps 3–4, pp. 10–27, focuses on the Karaite views on incest.

Q. Besides the General and Righteous Reasons, for the Prohibitions here before us, what more special one may we think of?

A. Maimonides gives this as one Reason; for the forbidding of all these Marriages; Because the Persons here Forbidden to be so joined together, are all, in a Manner, such as are wont to live together in the Same House, & who might the more easily be Tempted unto Lewdness one with another, if even thus marrying together were not severely forbidden.⁴ Thus, that Passage, Near of Kin, the LXX translate, πρὸς οἰκείαν σαρκός, or, as other Copies, πρὸς οἰκεῖαν σαρκός, To those who are so near akin, that they usually dwell in the same House; as Parents and Children; Brothers and Sisters; and the Brothers and Sisters of our Parents. Mahomet, as lewd a Fellow as he was, had not the Impudence to controul these Lawes; but in the Fourth Chapter of his Alcoran, expressly forbids to his Followers, a great many of the Marriages, that are here forbidden.⁵

Ahmed Ali's modern English translation of the Arabic original reads, "Unlawful are your mothers and daughters and your sisters to you, and the sisters of your fathers and your mothers, and the daughters of your brothers and sisters, and foster mothers, foster sisters, and the mothers of your wives, and the daughters of the wives you have slept with who are under your charge; but in case you have not slept with them there is no offence (if you marry their daughters); and the wives of your own begotten sons; and marrying two sisters is unlawful. Q. That Law, The Nakedness of thy Fathers Wifes Daughter, begotten of thy Father (she is thy Sister) thou shalt not uncover her Nakedness? This Prohibition seems to be the same with that in the Ninth Verse. And therefore the Hebrewes expound it, concerning the Daughter of a Mother-in-Law, begott by another Father. And Selden observes, the Words may be thus translated; The Nakedness of the Daughter of thy Fathers Wife, (for she that is born of thy Father, is thy Sister) thou shalt not discover. With this the Greek, and several other Versions agree; and it is the Sense of the Principal Men among the Karaites? v. 11.⁷

A. But, as Dr. Patrick observes, This is against the constant Sense of the Hebrew Doctors, who say, Tis Lawful to marry the Daughter of a Mother-in-Law, which she had by another Husband; for there is no Nearness of Flesh at all, between these two. Wherefore, as in the Ninth Verse, the Marriages of all Brothers and Sisters in general are forbidden, so here more particularly, the Marriage with a Sister by the same Father, tho' not the same Mother. This express Prohibition was necessary, because, as Buxtorf tells us, The Sons of Noah thought it lawful to marry an Half-Sister by the Fathers Side. And this was the ancient Law of Solon among the Athenians; That they might marry ὁμοπατρῖους, their Sisters by the same Father, but not ὁμομητρῖους, their Sisters by the same Mother; as we are informed by Joh. Meursius, in his Themis Attica. If the one of these had not been in so many Words prohibited, as well as the other, the Jewes might have been in Danger of continuing in the Practice.⁸

Q. The Marriage of a Man with his Aunt, or of an Uncle with his Neece, what thought the Pagans of it? v. 12.

A. Tho' among the Romans it was practised, after Claudius married Agrippina, till the Time of Constantine; yett it was a New Thing, as Claudius himself acknowledges in Tacitus; Nova nobis in Fratrum Filias Conjugia. All he could say for it, was, That it was common in other Nations, Nec Lege ellâ prohibita. The Newness of it so frighted Domitian, he would not meddle with it.⁹

Here the Roman historian relates that in Rome, “marriage with a brother's child ... was a novelty.” It was common elsewhere, and “prohibited by no law.” Indeed, marriage between cousins and second cousins over time became a regular occurrence. Q. What means, the Taking a Wife to her Sister, to vex her, in her Life time? v. 18.

A. Tho' two Wives at a Time, were permitted in those Dayes, (and the best King, who studied the Law, Day and Night, did not otherwise understand this Law,) yett they might not be Sisters. Nor might a Man make a Wife of one Sister, & a Concubine of the other; (so the Vulgar Latin does understand this Text,) which could not but beget horrible Discords.¹⁰

Nor may we, with the Talmudists, infer from this Clause, In her Life-time, that a Man might marry another Sister, after the Death of the First. The Karaites conclude it utterly unlawful, as being directly against the Scope of all these Holy Lawes; and especially that which we have two Verses before. The Words, In her Life-time, do not refer unto, Take, but unto, Vex. And Chaskuni, according to the Targum, gives this as the sense of it; Lest they should both be afflicted Widowes as long as they live. No body would marry either of them, after they had been defiled with such an Incestuous Conjunction, for which God cutt off their Husband.¹¹

Among the ancient Christians, if a Man married the Sister, of his Dead Wife, he was, by the Tenth Canon of the Council of Eliberis, to be kept from the Communion Five Years.¹²

Emperor Tiberius Claudius Caesar Augustus Germanicus (BCE 10–54 CE) married his niece Julia Agrippina II (15–59 CE), who became his fourth wife. Flavius Valerius Aurelius Constantinus Augustus, aka. Constantine the Great (272–337 CE), who governed the Eastern Roman Empire for the last thirty years of his life, was allegedly converted to Christianity on his death-bed. Roman Emperor Titus Flavius Caesar Domitianus Augustus (51–96 CE) – his bad reputation as a bloody persecutor of Jews and Christians notwithstanding – evidently had misgivings about such consanguinity in marriage.

¹⁰ This and the two following paragraphs are extracted from Patrick (Leviticus 338, 339). Patrick's own source is Petrus Cunaeus, De Republica Hebraeorum (1617), lib. 2, cap. 23, pp. 328–31.

It is observable, How severely the Holy GOD, forbids to the Children of Jacob, such a Marriage as there had been in their Fathers Family!¹³

Q. A Remark upon the Forbidden Marriages? v. 18.

A. The Jews look'd upon the Prohibition of the Forbidden Degrees, as proceeding from a Positive Law.¹⁴ And Monsr. Jurieu, thinks, That the Christians, who hold these Degrees forbidden by the Law of Nature, entangle themselves in no small Difficulties.¹⁵

But it is observable, That the Eastern Nations, have all along had less of Scruple about these Incestuous Marriages, than the Western. The Marriages of Brothers to their Sisters, were frequent in the East; in the West they have been a Rarity. The Magians boasted of their being born from Incestuous Marriages; and they married not only their Sisters, but their very Mothers. Patricides, an Arabian Author, tell us; "From the time of Nimrod, the Magians began to worship the Fire: And the Name of him that was appointed by Nimrod, to attend this Fire, was Andicham. When this Priest sacrificed, the Dæmon spoke from the Flames, and told him; No body is qualified to attend my Altars, & to perform my Sacrifices, except he who lies with his Mother, his Daughter, & his Sister. Andicham did as he had been commanded by the Divil; And ever since that time, such among the Magians, as officiate as Priests, took up a Custome of lying with their Mothers, their Daughters, and their Sisters."¹⁶ refers, governs cases of divorce – not the five-year abstinence from consummating a man's marriage to his deceased wife's sister stipulated in Canon LXI.

The Custome horribly prevailed at the Time, when the pretended Clemens Romanus, wrote his Recognitions.¹⁷

13 According to Gen. 20:12, Abraham married his half-sister Sarah, the daughter of his father Terah. In marrying his nieces Leah and Rachel, even Jacob would have violated the Levitical proscription against marrying the two sisters (Gen. 29:15–30).

16 Mather translates the passage from Edward Pococke's bilingual Arabic-Latin edition of Eutychius's Nazām al-jawhar, i. e., Annales (1656), vol. 1, pp. 63–64, by Eutychius, Patriarch of Alexandria (877–940), also known by his Graeco-Arabic name Saidus Patricides (Sa'id ibn Batriq), who wrote his history in Arabic. (CE). Pococke's edition reads "Andeshan" rather than "Andicham," the alleged name of this high priest of the Magians, or Zoroastrian fire worshippers of Medo-Persia. On the Magians, see also Mather's Appendix V. Antiqua: Sabians and Magians, appended to Mather's commentary on Revelation, in vol. 10 of Biblia Americana.

17 Pope Clement I (fl. late 1st c. CE), also known as Clemens Romanus, is believed to be one of the first Apostolic Fathers and earliest bishops of Rome. Clementine Recognitions, a religious romance with Clemens as the principal hero, is extant in two versions: the Clementine Homilies (20 books) and the Clementine Recognitions, both addressed to the bishop of Jerusalem, James the Just (d. c. 62 CE), one of the siblings of Jesus Christ. (CE, JE). Mather may have in

The Greeks observed a greater Decorum in their Marriages, and the Romans a yett greater in theirs. It is observable, That the Remoter any Countrey was from the East, the Remoter they were from these Impure Copulations. When the Emperour Claudius, was resolved upon espousing his Nice Agrippina, he did by Vitellius make an Excuse to the Senate; And because the thing was a Novelty, he would not bring home his espoused Lady; But tho' he gave great Encouragements unto others, to follow his Footsteps, that the Exemple of others might authorise his Crime, he could not meet with any that would imitate him; except one miserable Wretch, a Roman Knight whose Name is not worth Remembring.¹⁸ Plutarch tells us, The Ancient Romans were so over-nice in this Point, that they would not allow a Marriage, in any Degree of Consanguinity, tho' it were as Remote as could be. He saies, [Quæst. Rom. 6. and, 108.] *It was very long, before they would allow Cousins to marry one another.*¹⁹ The First who did it, was a Man of Quality, much beloved, & one who espoused a | very Rich [40v] Heiress; However he was accused before the People for the Crime.²⁰ mind the various forms of superstitions and immorality alluded to in Recognitions of Clement (4.27–31), in ANF (8:140–41).

18 Mather refers to this old chestnut of a story. Roman Emperor Claudius (BCE 10–54 CE) married his niece Agrippina II (15–59), who became his fourth wife. Lucius Vitellius the Elder (c. BCE 5–51 CE), father of the future Emperor of the same name, served as Roman Censor at the time of Agrippina's marriage to Claudius, and was in charge of maintaining the census, public morality, and state finances. It would have been the task of Vitellius's office to defend what his contemporaries regarded as an incestuous marriage between Agrippina and her uncle, the emperor.

19 Plutarch, Roman and Greek Questions (6 and 108), in Moralia (4:17, 161).

20 See "Consanguinity (in Canon Law)" (CE). Mather cancels the following passage for unknown reasons. It appears significant to retain it in this footnote to draw attention to Mather's emerging views on this issue:

Q. The Prohibition of, Taking a Wife to her Sister, to vex her? v. 18.

A. Many Eminent Writers, following the marginal Reading, [one Wife to another,] conceive, That a Plurality of Wives is expressly forbidden by this Law. And so the Karaites interpret it.]

But it is well known, that as Polygamy was indulged before the Law, so it was after it. And Moses himself supposes it, when he provides, that a Man should not prefer a Child he had by a Beloved Wife, before one by her whom he less esteemed, if he were the Eldest Son. We find expressly, That the Hebrew Kings might have Many Wives, tho' not a Multitude. [Deut. XVII.27.] And the best of their Princes, who readd the Divine Law Day & Night, and could not but understand its Meaning, took many Wives without any Reproof. So far from That, we find God giving more Wives to him than he had before. [2. Sam. XII.9.]

The Meaning therefore is, That tho' Two Wives, or more, at a time, were permitted in those days, yett it was not permitted unto any Man, to take Two Sisters, (as Jacob had formerly done,) whether Legitimates or Illegitimates.

There use to be great Jealousies in Emulations between Wives, which between Two Sisters would have been more Intolerable than between Two other Women; who (as Cunæus remarks) not being of the same Consanguinity, might live more quietly together under the same Husband. Besides, no one would afterwards marry either of the Sisters, being Widows, because they were defiled with such an Impious Conjunction, for which the Husband might by the Law have been cutt off.

Q. The Punishment for these Incestuous Mixtures? v. 18.

A. It was Death.

The Kind of Death is expressed but in one Place; and that is, when a Man Takes a Wife and her Mother; [Lev. XX.14.] All three were to be Burnt with Fire.²¹ And this probably was the Punishment, in the other Cases of Incest.

If a Man lay with his Uncles or Brothers Wife, besides the Punishment of Death, it is added by the Law, They shalt Dy Childless. This may mean, that whatever Issue proceeds from such Incestuous Converse, was to be esteemed spurious, & be deprived of succeeding to the Fathers Inheritance.²²

Q. The Law, which forbad Mens Passing their Seed thro' the Fire unto Moloch, may with some Curiosity doubtless, bee enquired into. I would therefore, in the first Place ask you, What was Moloch? That famous Divel, who was hee? v. 21.²³

A. I will not, with Selden, and Grotius, & others, urge, that Moloch was the same with Saturn; the Dæmon whom the Phœnicians chiefly served with their horrible Teknothysies: Because, in Act. 7.43. hee seems distinguished, from Chiun, whom wee take for Saturn.²⁴

²⁴ Selden's De Diis Syris Syntagma II (1617), synt. I, cap. 6, p. 90; and Grotius, on Deut. 18:10, in his Annotationes (Opera 1:92–93), are Spencer's sources (314) here and provide the most detailed information. Because Saturn (Cronos) swallowed his own children the moment they issued from the womb of his own mother Rhea, Hesiod (Theogony 453–73), Cicero (De Natura Deorum 2.25), and Lactantius (Divine Institutes, 1.20–21) link the Phœnician Moloch, to whom human sacrifice was offered, with the ancient Greek story (in ANF 7:34–37). Mather's "Teknothysies" (i. e., "child-sacrifice") is a transliteration of St. Athanasius's τεκνοθυσίαις (Contra Gentes 25.23), where the same story is rehearsed (NPNFII 4:17).

And, I will not say, with Arias Montanus, that hee was the same with Mercury: tho' Malach do signify, what they made Mercury, a Messenger.²⁶

Nor will I say, with Cyril, that Lucifer, or, Venus, was, by the Ancients, worshipped under the Name of Moloch: nor, with Sanctius, that Moloch was an Idol peculiar to the Ammonites; nor, with some others, that some certain King, who might, by way of Eminency bee called, A King, which Moloch signifies, was hereby intended; tho' the particular Name of the Gentleman bee now forgotten.²⁷

Wee will rather think, with our most learned Spencer, that Moloch, was a Name common to all the Gods (especially the Sun) worshipped in the Images of the Ancient Pagans.²⁸

The Prophet, speaking to the Idolatrous Israelites, uses the Term [Amos. 5.26.] of, your Moloch: as if there were other Molochs else where, and all the Idols abroad in the World were Molochs.

Moreover, Baal, which was a Name common to the False Gods, is promiscuously used, for Moloch. Compare Jer. 19.5. with Jer. 32.35. and, if I don't mistake, you'll find it so. And an Ancient Inscription, at this Day, in the Farnesian Garden at Rome, which was brought unto Rome, A. C. 236. ha's ΜΑΛΑΧ ΒΗΛΩ in it, both Names brought into one. Monsieur Petit, maintains this Opinion, That as Baal, or Bel, was a general Name, for the Gods, who were further distinguished by Annexed Epithites, thus was Moloch, Molech, & Melech.²⁹

There is indeed a double Original of this Name. For it signifies a King, and imports Government, Majesty, whereof tis no Wonder, that the Divil is Kronos and the Roman Saturn, hence with the fiery Μολόχ (Moloch). A tall order this! The same association is made in Lingua Aegyptiaca Restituta Opus Tripartitum (1643), sec. 2, Scala Magna, porta 2, cap. 3, p. 49, where Kircher identifies the Egyptian-Coptic PHΦAN with the Latin Saturnus and Arabic ڤن. On this intellectual somersault, see also H. A. W. Meyer's notation on Acts 7:43, in his Handbook to the Acts of the Apostles (1889), pp. 152–53.

26 Mather refers to the Spanish Orientalist Arias Benito Montanus, whose Commentaria in Duodecim Prophetas (1671), “Amos Prophetam Commentaria,” cap. 1, pp. 304–05, is the mediate source in question. The Roman deity Mercurius, like the Greek Hermes, wore two hats: messenger of the gods and patron of commerce.

27 Cyrillus Alexandrinus, in his commentary on Amos 5:25 (Commentarius in xii prophetas minores 1:476, lines 4–5), associates shining Lucifer and lusty Venus with Moloch. The Spanish Jesuit Gaspar Sanctius (aka. Sánchez) identifies Moloch as an Ammonite idol, which he links with Saturn and Rephan (Remphan), in his gloss on Acts 7:43, in Commentarii in Actus Apostolorum (1616), p. 167, § 86. The Hebrew-Aramaic מֶלֶךְ [melek] (Strong's # 4428), signifying “king” is associated with the idol Chiun (Amos 5:26).

28 Spencer (315).

29 Spencer (315–16) derives the ancient inscription from John Selden's De Diis Syris (1617), synt. II, cap. 1, p. 136; the Farnesian Gardens in Rome (Orti Farnesiani sul Palatino) were established by Cardinal Alessandro Farnese (c. 1550) as a private botanical garden, the first of its kind in Europe. The Greek inscription reads, MALACH BELO. Samuel Petit, Variarum Lectionum Libri IIII (1633), libri 1, cap. 1, pp. 3–7, interprets the designation moloch מֶלֶךְ [melek] (Amos 5:26) as a title signifying “king” (Strong's # 4428) and anciently used as a suffix in “Hammelech.”

From Athanasius Kircher, Oedipus Aegyptiacus (1652–54), vol. 1, synt. 4, cap. 15, p. 334.

Ambitious. But more than so; 'Tis likely, that /מֹלֵךְ/ the Root of this Name, did of old signify, not only, To Reign, but also, to Worship, to Adore, to Reckon as a God. Indeed the Lexicons take no Notice hereof; but it is very certain, that the Ethiopic Language, which is near enough akin to the Hebrew, does yett Apply the Name to such a Signification. There, the Word, /מֹלֵךְ/ in Hiphil, is, as L. De Dieu tells us, the same with Σεβεσθαι. Non Dubito (saies hee) quin inde Hebrais quoque Rex /מֹלֵךְ/ dicatur, quasi qui à subditis, veluti Terrenum aliquod Numen, colitur et servitur. Thus, the Kings of Hamath, and Arphad, [Isa. 37.13.] are called, the Gods of Hamath and Arphad. [Isa. 36.19.] So, the Gods of Sepharvaim, are called [2. King. 17.31.] Adramelek, and, Anamelek. Adramelech, is interpreted in that Phrase, of the Philistines, The Mighty Gods. And Anamelech, is, Deus Respondens, or, Jupiter Oracularis. Hercules was called Μελικαρθος, or Melicerta, by the Sidonians; that is, /מֹלֵךְ קרתא/ The God [Tutelar] of the City. [See also 2. King. 19.13. with 2. King. 18.34.] Hence, the old Gentiles, called, a God, Moloch, because it was their σέβασμα, they Worshipped & Adored it.³⁰

³⁰ Spencer (316) draws on Ludovicus De Dieu's gloss on Exod. 7:1, which appears (along with the Latin citation) in his Animadversiones in Veteris Testamenti (1648), p. 55; on Johann Heinrich Hottinger's "Dissertatio IV. De nominibus Dei Orientalium," in Dissertationum Theologico-Philologicarum Fasciculus (1660), diss. IV, sec. 22, pp. 297–98; and on Nicholas Fuller's Miscellaneorum Theologicorum (1650), lib. 3, cap. 17, pp. 372–76 – all of which are woven into Mather's excerpt from Spencer's paragraph. Anyway, Le Dieu opines, "I doubt not (saies hee)

And Moloch, did belong to many Gods; else the Name had not been so frequent, either in itself, or in such as were but Flexions of it.³¹

Well; And what was, Passing thro' the Fire to this Moloch?³²

Tis very certain, That some of the Pagans, especially when certain Distresses were upon them, did use an Immolation of their Children unto Moloch. If you consider the Words of the Prophet Ezekiel, in chap. 16.20, 21. And compare Jer. 7.31. with Jer. 32.35. you'll find that Signification of, Passing thro' the Fire. And, as we read of the Sepharvites [2. King, 17.31.] That they Burnt their Children unto Adramelech and Anamelech: So, there are other Historians, who relate such horrid Practices to have been usual among the Canaanites. Josephus tells us, that such bloody Holocausts were, κατὰ τὰ Χαναναίων ἔθη, According to the Canaanitish Customs. And the Author of, the Book of Wisdom, therefore calls the Canaanites, τέκνων φονέας ἀνελεήμονας, Unmerciful Murderers of their Children; and objects against them, their τεκνοφόνους τελεταίς, or Puericidal Ceremonies.³³ The Ambiguity of the Diabolical Oracle, that required the Rite, may have been one thing that betray'd the woful People into it. As when Apollo demanded of the Pelasgians, τῷ πατρὶ πέμπετε φῶτα, because φῶτα might signify, either a Man or a Torch, there was a Dispute, which must bee intended.³⁴ Thus difficult it was to understand /העביר באש/. The Israelites learn't of these Canaanites. [Ps. 106.37. Jer. 19.5. 2. King. 23.10.]³⁵ | But it is also certain, That the Februation of their Children to Moloch, was more frequently used among the

but that from this [word] /מֶלֶךְ/ [melek] "king" is derived by the Hebrews, as if one who is honored and served by subjects, just like some earthly deity." The same is true for the name Σεβεδαι (Zebedee). The Latin designations "Deus Respondens" and "Jupiter Oracularis" respectively signify "god's answer" and "Jupiter's oracle." Hercules was dubbed Melicerta, the name given to the son of Athamus and Ino, King of Thebes (KP). Finally, σέβασμα suggests "an object of awe or worship" as in Dionysius Halicarnassus's Antiquitates Romanae (1.30.3, line 5) and in Acts 17:23 (LSJ)

31 Here, Flexions are inflections (variants) of Moloch's name.

32 The following paragraphs are from Spencer's De Legibus, lib. 2, cap. 10, sec. 2, fols. 317–18.

33 Josephus Flavius (Antiquities 9.12) relates how Ahaz emulated his predecessors and sacrificed 'his own son as a burnt-offering,' "according to the practices of the Canaanites" (Works 209). Mather refers to the infanticidal sacrifices mentioned in the apocryphal ΣΟΦΙΑ ΣΑΛΩΜΩΝ (Wisdom of Solomon), in LXX (Wisd. Sol. 12:5, 14:23).

34 Spencer (sec. 3, fol. 319); Dionysius Halicarnassus (Antiquitates Romanae 1.19.3, line 9) relates that according to the inscription on the tripods in the temple of Zeus, Apollo's demand of the Pelasgians was "to send to the sire [Saturn] a man" in exchange for protection. The Greek φῶτα [phota] variously signifies "light" (candle light) and "man," and could thus imply human sacrifice – if so interpreted. See also Macrobius (1.7.28).

35 Spencer (317, 318). The Hebrew phrase העביר באש ("to pass through the fire") is derived from Deut. 18:10: בְּנוֹ זִבְחוֹ בָּאֵשׁ בְּמַעְבְּרִי בְּנוֹ זִבְחוֹ בָּאֵשׁ to make "his son or daughter pass through the fire." On the oracle of Apollo in general, see Antonius van Dale's De Oraculis Ethnorum (1683), diss. prima, pp. 59–63. See also F. E. Manuel's discussion of the debunking of the oracles, in Eighteenth Century (esp. pp. 41–53).

Pagans.³⁶ Two Pyles were kindled, and Persons that were carried thro' them, in Token of their Consecration to Moloch, had a Sort of Lustration in their being so. And hence, the LXX [as in Deut. 18.10.] render /מַעֲבִיר/ by, περικαθαίρων.³⁷ It is likely, that the Hard Word, which the elder Ages had understood, in the Harder Sense, of a, Combustion, the later Ages, in the Dayes of Moses, had found out, a softer Sense of Purgation, for it; and they began to think, that Moloch, would bee content, as Tertullian speaks, Traducto corpore flammâ.³⁸ And thus, tho' tis said of Ahaz, 2. King. 16.3. hee caused his Son to pass thro' the Fire: yett wee find the Son, surviving this Traduction; It was Hezekiah, who afterwards proved so notable a Destroyer of these Idolatries. Make a Pause here, Sir, upon the Sovereign Grace of Heaven! — Briefly, There can bee nothing more to this Purpose, than the Words of Theodore: “Josephus tells us, (quoth hee) that Ahaz made one of his Sons, a Burnt-Offering to Baal; But I beleieve, what is here spoken, signifies but that Sort of Error, which is continued, even unto our Time. Εἶδον γὰρ ἐν τισὶ πόλεσιν, For, (saies hee,) I have seen it, in some Cities, that once in a Year, they kindle Bonfires in the Streets, and not only Boyes but Men do leap thro' those Fires; and Children are by their Mothers carried through them. It seem'd a sort of Expiation, or Purgation; And this, I conceive, was the Sin of Ahaz.”³⁹

I pray, bestow now, some of your own Thoughts, upon the Rites of Bonfires, in our Dayes: Especially, when you also think of what Varro saies, Palilia, tam privata, quàm publica, sunt apud Rusticos, ut, cum Fæno coniectis stipulis, Ignem Magnum transiliant, his Palilibus se expiari credentes: And of what Ovid saies,

Moxque per Ardentis stipulæ crepitantis Acervos,
Trajicias celeri strenua Membra Pede.⁴⁰

³⁷ Deut. 18:10 (LXX) “one who purges” or “performs purification rites” (with fire).

³⁸ Spencer (318). Tertullian is quoted as saying that in later ages, pagans were content to “pass body over the fire.”

⁴⁰ Spencer (lib 2, cap. 10, sec. 3, fol. 320) cites at second hand from Grotius (Annotaciones on Deut. 18:10; Opera 1:93) one of the scholiasts’ explanatory commentaries on Horace in which Varro is cited as an illustration for the Palilia festival celebrated in ancient Rome on April 21. Peasants built a bonfire and passed through the flames, believing their sins would thus be expiated. Much the same appears in Pierre Jurieu’s Critical History of the Doctrines (1705), vol. 2, part 4, treat. 2, ch. 2, pp. 23–24. At any rate, the scholiasts’ Latin commentary on Horace explains how Pales, the protectress of herds and shepherds, is celebrated: “The feast of Palilia, both private and public, is held among the countryfolk, with the grass-stubble thrown together with hay; they leap over a great fire, believing that with these rites they are being purified.” (Varro apud Scholiasten Horatii). Ovid adds in his Fasti (4.781–82) that the celebrants “anon leap with nimble foot and straining thews across the burning heaps of crackling straw.”

And when you think, how the Trullan Synod, and Chrysostom on the Nativity of John, have Damned the Rite, now discoursed of.⁴¹

[973-]

Well, And why did the God of Heaven forbid this, Passing thro' the Fire?⁴²

Why, First, For the Burning of Children in the Fire, to Moloch, it was an Inhumane Business, altogether contrary to the Law, the Light, the Love of Nature; & Ruinous to Mankind. Hence Pliny applauds the civilized Romans for this Thing; Non satis aestimari potest, quantum Romanis debeatur, quòd sustulere monstra, in quibus Hominem occidere, Religiosissimum erat. And Euripides, in one of his Tragedies, declaring, that Men should not ἀνθρωποκτονεῖν, but βουθυτεῖν, shoves how abominable it was to the civilized Græcians. Moreover, There was an horrid Sacrilege in it, for the Israelites thus to sacrifice the Children, which were peculiarly claimed by the God of Israel. Consider, Ezek. 23.37. and *Lev. 20.2.*⁴³

You may add, That this Damnable Practice was a Magical one; it was a Peece of Consultation with Dæmons, to obtain from them the Knowledge of Secret and Future Things. Hence, tis joined with Divinations; Deut. 18.10. 2. King. 17.17. 2. King. 21.6. Lev. 20.4, 5, 6. Thus Tacitus reports of the Druids, *Excisi luci sevis Superstitionibus Sacri; Nam cruore captivo adolere Aras, et Hominum Fibris consulere Deos, fas habebant.*⁴⁴ It was likewise a Propitiatory Sort of a

⁴² The following paragraphs are extracted from Spencer, lib. 2, cap. 10, sec. 4, fols. 321–26.

⁴³ Pliny (Naturalis Historia 30.4.13) applauds the accomplishments of Roman civilization for having wiped out the more heinous rites of the ancients: “It is beyond calculation how great is the debt owed to the Romans, who swept away the monstrous rites, in which to kill a man was the highest religious duty [and for him to be eaten a passport to health].” Both Spencer and Mather omit the bracketed phrase in Pliny’s account. In his tragedy Hecuba (260–61), Euripides has Hecuba wonder whether it was Fate who encouraged man to offer “human sacrifice” (ἀνθρωποσφείν rather than ἀνθρωποκτονεῖν) at a funeral where “bull sacrifice” (βουθυτεῖν) was more appropriate. Spencer’s citation, however, is not from Euripides’s tragedy but from one of the scholia. My reference is to the modern Scholia in Euripidem (Sec. Sch hyp-scholion 260, line 4–5).

⁴⁴ Spencer (322). Tacitus (Annales 14.30) relates how during the reign of Nero Roman forces established a beachhead on the shores of Britain. After building a garrison among the Druids of Britain, the next step was “to demolish their groves consecrated to their savage cults; for Business; intended for the Averruncation of the Wrath of the offended Gods, & the Averting of grievous Calamities. The most excellent Creatures, were by the Gentiles, then thought proper for their Altars; even, Humane Infants. Thus, the Carthaginians in their Distresses, from Agathocles, offered up the Sons of their Nobles.⁴⁵ And Philobiblius, tells us, out of Sanchoniathon, Ἔθος ἦν τοῖς παλαιοῖς κλ. It was the Manner of the Ancients, in their terriblest Calamities, for the cheef Commanders, to sacrifice the dearest of their Children, ut exitium publicum Domestico Redimerent, & averterent. Eusebius has a Passage to this Purpose, in his Praises of Constantine. Compare, Mic. 6.7. Finally, T'was Divellish all over; & full of Cruelty: such Cruelty; that by the Beat of Drum, the Yells of the Tormented Infants, must bee drowned.⁴⁶

But then, for the Dragging of Children thro' the Fire to Moloch; It was done as a Lustration, Purgation, Expiation of them, that they might not bee obnoxious to the Strokes of any Demon, or any Ill Eye, by their Native Impurities. This is what Maimonides mentions, as an Opinion introduced by the Fire-Worshippers.⁴⁷ Indeed Fire was the main Thing used in the Februations of the Heathen: πυρῶν, was, to Purge; and Sulphur much used therein, was therefore called Θεῖον; and Ovid sings, they [Druids] considered it a duty to consult their deities by means of human entrails." On the Druids, see also MCA (1702), bk. 4, p. 129(b) and BA (1:884–85).

45 Mather (via Spencer) refers to Agathocles (361–289 BCE), the Greek tyrant of Syracuse (Sicily). During Agathocles's campaign in N Africa, the Carthaginians, remorseful for having neglected their human sacrifices to Cronos (Moloch), "resolved to take two hundred children of the highest rank and offer them; while another three hundred, who were suspected of having escaped unduly, came forward, by their own will or their fathers', and gave themselves up to death" (History of Agathocles, ch. 4, pp. 116–17). Spencer's source for the Carthaginians' child-sacrifices is the summary account in Lactantius (Divine Institute 1.21), in ANF (7:35).

46 Spencer's third-hand citation of Philo Byblos's extract from the pre-Homeric Sanchuniathon (a Phoenician priest) is extant in Eusebius Pamphilus's Praeparatio evangelica (4.16.11, line 3; see also 1.10.44, line 2). The Greek extract, which Mather (via Spencer) continues in Latin, can be rendered as follows: "It was a custom of the ancients" in utmost crises to sacrifice their own children "as a ransom" to assuage vengeful demons "as a means to avert the destruction of their state or household" (cf. Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica 4.16.156d). In his De laudibus Constantini (cap. 13, sec. 7, lines 4–7), Eusebius deplores the cruel madness of pagan worshippers who "sacrifice the dearest objects of their affection to their gods, regardless of all natural ties, and urged by frenzied feeling to slay their only and best beloved children" (Oration in Praise of Constantine 13.7), in NPNFii (1:601).

47 In his Liber מורה נבוכים Doctor Perplexorum (1629), pars 3, cap. 37, pp. 448–49, Maimonides explains, "Now it is known that it is the nature of men in general to be most afraid and most wary of losing their property and their children. Therefore the worshippers of fire spread abroad the opinion in those times that the children of everyone who would not make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire [Deut. 18:10] would die" (Guide 3.37.546).

48 Spencer (324). Θεῖον (brimstone) was used to πυρῶν (purge) or purify. Ovid's Fasti (4.785) sings, "devouring fire purges all things."

And Theodorus Balsamon tells us, of the old Græcians, They kindled Great Fires before their Shops, and Houses, & Leaped over them, imagining, δια; τοῦτο τὰ προσυμβαίνοντα ἴσως αὐτοῖς δωσχερῇ κατακαίεσθαι, That the Mischiefs impending over them were hereby consumed. But you may read more, concerning the Flamma Piacularis, in, Sanctius's Commentary on the Book of Kings. Furthermore, The old Idolaters, made this Passing thro' the Fire, a Rite of Initiation; whereby their Children were Dedicated unto Moloch. Hence, wee still find, they were Children, yett in the Power of their Parents, which this Rite was chiefly employ'd upon.⁴⁹

This Fire was much used among them, in their Initiations. And so Suidas tells us, That the Initiated of Mithra, did, διὰ πυρὸς παρελθεῖν καὶ διὰ κρύους, per Ignem transire et per Frigus; before they were Admitted among the ἐποπταῖ. ⁵¹ Quære, Whether it were not in a Sort of Opposition hereunto, that our Lord would have His Apostles, by a Baptism, as well Fire as Water, Initiated unto the Mysteries of His Kingdome. [Math. 3.11. Act. 3.4.] The Parents were the Administrators of this Rite, under the Direction of the Chemarim; & thereby Resigned unto Moloch, the Right which they had in their Children. To bee, wholly Addicted unto the Service of the Idol, was doubtless the primitive Signification of the Word, /העביר/ here made use of; as, προσέρχεσθαι τῷ Θεῷ [Heb. 11.6.] signifies, To bee a Proselyte, or, a Man devoted unto the Worship of God.⁵²

To conclude; The Old Zabians, by this Rite, of a Diabolical Præscription, expressed their Worship, first of the Fire, & then of the Sun, as a God. What Veneration the first Idolaters had for the Fire, is intimated in the Name of the most ancient Instruments of Idolatry, [Lev. 26.30. 2. Chron. 34.4.] חמנים/ Πυρεῖα, Ignis Fana. This Fire-Worship, is to this Day retained among the Persians, who have their Πναθεῖα, or Πυρεῖ, Temples in Honour of the Fire. And Benjamin, in

⁵⁰ The entire paragraph is written on a slip of paper and attached with four wax waivers (now loose) at the bottom of [42v], column 2.

⁵² The Hebrew nouns חמנים (Lev. 26:30) and חמנים (2 Chron. 34:4) are associated with the idolatrous worship of the “sun-pillar” חמן (Strong's # 2553). Hence Mather's Greek and Latin translation suggest “fire-worship” among the Zoroastrians.

The Heathen, who called the Moon the /מלכות/ Malcuth, or Queen of Heaven, [Jer. 7.18.]⁵⁴ called the Sun, by the Name of Moloch, or, The King. And the Distance of the Sun from them, caused them to take the Fire, for a Symbol of him. Hence that Passage of Isidore, Nimroth gigas Persas Ignem colere docuit, nam omnes in Illis Partibus Solem colunt.⁵⁵ Compare 2. King. 17.16, 17.

⁵³ The Sephardic traveler R. Benjamin of Tudela (1130–1173) mentions the Zoroastrian fire-worshippers of Taprobana, or “Insulas Chenerag” (Sri Lanka) in his famous Itinerary של מסעות רבי בנימין Itinerarium D. Beniaminis (1633), pp. 108–09, and in L’Empereur’s note, p. 216. See also Pliny (Naturalis Historia 6.24.89) and R. Q. That Command, Thou shalt not wholly Reap the Corners of thy Field, etc. How was it understood, and how observed? v. 9, 10.¹

A. They left about a Sixtieth Part, and that in some obvious Corner of the Field, that so the Poor might know where to come at it. Tho' Selden also shoves, from the Talmudists, that they added something more, according to the Largeness of the Field, the Greatness of the Crop, or the Multitude of the Poor.²

Nor might they gather the Gleanings of the Harvest. That is to say, (as R. Levi Barcelonita saies,) If an Ear of Corn or two fell, out of the Sheaves, as they were cutting of it, or binding of it, or from under the Sickle, they might not gather them up from the Ground, but leave them for the Poor, as oft as they fell; But not if there fell Three Ears at a Time, as the Talmudists determine it.³

And then, for the Vineyard; when they had cutt off the Great Bunches, they might not examine the Vine over again for the Small Clusters. Nor might they take up such as fell to the Ground, if they were no more than One or Two Clusters. The Corners of the Vineyard also they left uncut.⁴

Q. What is meant by putting a Stumbling-block before the Blind? v. 14.

A. A thing of so great Malice, that the Hebrew Doctors think Men incapable of it. They therefore expound it, of giving bad Counsil to Simple People, and advising them to their Damage. So. R. Levi. Tho' this is rather a greater Sin, (as

Q. That Præcept, Yee shall do no Unrighteousness in Judgment; How do the Jewes understand it? v. 15.⁶

A. As an Admonition unto the Judges, to have an æqual Regard unto Plaintiff and Defendant. The Words are thus explained in their Siphra. *Thou shalt Judge thy Neighbours justly, not letting one Party stand, and bidding the other sitt; nor suffering one to speak as much as he pleases, and bidding the other be short.*⁷

But Maimonides is very large in Explaining it; in his whole XXI Chapter of the Sanhedrim. He descends to many Particulars; whereof it may be worth our while, to mention some; inasmuch as t'wil Illustrate the Words of the Apostle James. [ch. 2.2, 3, 4.] *If two Parties appear in a Cause, one of which is clothed in precious Garments, the other is Ragged, or in a Poor Habit; Lett it be said unto him that is the more Honourable, "Either do you bestow upon your Adversary, as Good Apparel, as you have on yourself, or else putt on such as he wears, that you may be both alike, & then appear before the Court of Judgment." By no means lett the one sitt, & the other stand: but lett them both be commanded to stand: or, if it please the Judges to give them both Leave to sitt, lett not one of them sitt in an High Place, the other in a Low; but both on the same Bench, one by the Side of the other.*⁸

It is the Observation of R. Levi Barcelonita, That Mankind are præserted by Righteous Judgment; & therefore, if a Judge was found to have given an unjust Sentence, he is as condemned to make Restitution unto him, whose Cause he had perverted.⁹

Q. It is prohibited, Thou shalt not go up & down as a Talebearer among thy People. What signifies the Word used for Talebearer? v. 16.

A. It properly signifies a Pedler, or petty Chapman, that buyes Goods, (it may be stolen ones,) at one Place, & sells them at another, taking care to make his own Marketts of them. So a Talebearer, he makes his visits, to pick up at one Place, & utter at another, that which he thinks, may lessen his Neighbours Reputation, that he might build his own upon the Ruine of it. Q. That Passage, Thou shalt in any wise Rebuke thy Neighbour, and not suffer Sin upon him: how else may it bee Advantageously Translated? v. 17.

Q. How do the Jewes interpret that Prohibition; Thou shalt not Avenge, nor bear any Grudge, against the Children of thy People? v. 18.¹²

A. The Jewes give us a Notable, and an Exquisite Exposition of it. To Avenge, is to Deny a Benefit unto a Petitioner, who formerly Deny'd a Benefit unto us. To bear a Grudge, is to Do a Kindness unto one who formerly Deny'd a Kindness unto us, but to do it with Exprobation.

Simeon denies his Ax to Reuben, who would have borrow'd it. Simeon afterwards would borrow an Ax of Reuben; who saies, Ne expectes à me, id quod mihi negasti. This is /נָקִימָה/ Ultio. But if Reuben do now send his Ax to Simeon;

¹⁰ A Sermon concerning the Right Management of Friendly Visits (London, 1704), p. 28, is a homily by the English Presbyterian Matthew Henry (1662–1714), Mather's erstwhile correspondent, best known for his vastly popular commentary on the Bible. See also Mather's BA (1:475, 779, 948) and Patrick (Leviticus 360).

Q. Much is Commanded, & much is Forbidden, relating to our Neighbour; It remains a Quæstion; who is meant by the Neighbour? For the Israelites would Restrain it unto themselves, and not allow to a Stranger, the Regards which are demanded in the Lawes of God, for a Neighbour?

A. But, O uncharitable Israelites; Have you forgotten the express Words of your Law-giver, Moses; [Here, v. 34.] The Stranger who dwells with you, shall be unto you, as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself? And what say you to the Tenth Commandment, which when it forbids you to covet the Wife of a Neighbour, certainly does not allow you to covet the Wife of a Gentile? A Neighbour is every other Man. An Egyptian was a Neighbour. [Deut. 22.16. and Exod. 11.2.] D. Kimchi very honestly saies, upon Psal. 15.3. A Neighbour is every one, with whom we have any Dealing or Conversation. This Justifies our Saviours making the Command of Loving a Neighbour, to reach unto all Men with whom we are concerned. [Luk. 10.27, 28.]¹⁴

13 Reuben says to his brother Simeon, “Don’t expect from me that which you have denied me. [This is] revenge.” But if Reuben now sends his ax to Simeon and says, “Come on, accept; I shall not deal with you in the same way you did with me. [This is] the observance of rancor.” Mather’s Latin extract is from Goodwin’s popular work Moses and Aaron, which the German Lutheran theologian Johann Heinrich Reitzius translated into Latin and published in Bremen with the title of Moses et Aaron seu Civiles & Ecclesiastici Ritus, Usitati Antiquis Hebraeis (1679). Although this Latin translation supplies the Hebrew diacritics (missing in all English editions), why Mather subsequently elected to cancel in the “Biblia Americana” manuscript his near verbatim extract from the English edition and replaced it by the Latin translation (1679) seems curious, all the more so because Mather retranslated his Latin extract back into English, retaining only the Latin phrases put into the mouths of Simeon and Reuben, along with the Hebrew diacritics. Thus Mather’s annotation of Lev. 19:18 is based on Reitzius’s Latin translation Moses et Aaron (1679), lib. 5, cap. 3, pp. 409–10. For ease of comparison, Mather’s canceled English version is here reproduced in brackets:

[Q. Thou shalt not Avenge, nor bear any Grudge, [or thus, Nor be mindful of Wrong]. How do the Hebrewes explain these, & the Difference between them? v. 18.

A. They say, To Avenge, is to Deny a good Turn unto one who formerly denied Him. To be mindful of Wrong, is, to Do a good Turn unto one, who formerly would not do so much for him, but at the doing thereof, to upbraid him with his former Unkindness. They thus illustrate it; when Reuben said unto Simeon, lend me thy Hatchet, he answereth, I will not lend it. Afterward, Simeon upon Occasion saith unto Reuben, lend me thy Hatchet: Reuben saith unto him, I will not lend it, Thou wouldest not lend me thine: This is /נְקִימָה/ Nekima, or, Avenge-ment. Again, Reuben saith unto Simeon, lend me thy Hatchet; he answereth, I will not lend it. Afterward Simeon saith upon Occasion unto Reuben, lend me thy Hatchet; Reuben saith, Lo, I will lend it thee, I will not deal with thee, as thou dealedest with me. This is /נְטִירָה/ Netira, or, Mindfulness. Both of these were sinful; but not liable to Mans Judgment.] See also Appendix A.

Q. The Meaning of that Law, Neither shall a Garment mingled of Linen & Woolen come upon thee? v. 19.¹⁵

A. Wee will not concern ourselves, with the Account hereof, given by Philo, That such a Mixture in the Garment, would have been a Damage to the Strength of it, & have caused ῥήξιν μάλλον ἢ ἔνωσιν, a Fraction rather than an Union: Or, by Josephus, That such a Garment was peculiar to the Priesthood; who indeed never wore such mixt Clothes, unless, as Mr. Selden saies, Ministerij sui Tempore;¹⁶ Or, by Isidore Pelusiota, That God would thus eliminate Curiosity, and Effæminacy of Ornament, from the Minds of the People, & introduce an Honest Gravity among them: or, by Calvin, That it was Ne paulatim ad Majorem licentiam delapsi, Gentium moribus, et Justitutis [tandem] se addicerent.¹⁷ Or, by Theodoret, That herein was a mystical Instruction, πράξεις ἐναντίας μηδαμῶς ἐπιτηδεύειν. Non esse dandam operam contrarijs Actionibus: To which Purpose is that of Bochart, Veteribus assentior, qui Deum volunt suos hoc ritu vocasse, ad morum simplicitatem: Or, lastly, by Maimonides, who saies, Hæc est ratio præcepti quòd videlicet Temporis illius Sacrificuli Idololatrarum ità sole- rent incedere.¹⁸

¹⁷ St. Isidore of Pelusium (d. c. 449–50) was an Alexandrian monk and voluminous author (CE). Mather (via Spencer 433) paraphrastically translates a passage from Isidore Pelusiota, De Interpretatione Divinae Scripturae Epistolarum Libri V (1638), lib. 3, epist. 84: ad Agatho Presbyterio, p. 289; John Calvin is represented with his commentary on Deut. 22:11, in Opera Omnia in Novem Tomos Digesta (1671), Primum praeceptum, Ex Deut. XIV, p. 384, lines 19–21. He comments that God would not permit such mixtures “lest, sinking by degrees to greater license, they [His people] should at length addict themselves to the practice and customs of the heathen” (Commentaries on the Four Last Books of Moses, vol. 2, part 2, p. 49).

Wee will rather assert, That the Ancient Zabians, wore linsey woolsey Garments, as a Mark of their Superstition & Idolatry; & as a Way particularly to promote the Growth of Wool, and Flax among them; and that they especially officiated in these Garments, when the Ceremonies of their Nocturnal Devotions were to bee performed. Maimonides intimates their magical Designs, in having both a Vegetable [Flax.] and an Animal [Wool] united in the same Garment. And wee are by Dr. Pocock informed, from some Arabian Writings, That the ancient Zabians, on the first Hour of the Day assigned unto Saturn, his Votaries invested with Garments peculiar unto him, and a Seal of his Figure, did with agreeable Forms of Prayer, imagine that they obtained what they pleased of him.¹⁹

Tis very certain from Herodotus, as well as Moses (and from Ezek. 44.1.) that Linen and Woollen Garments, were still distinctly used among the Nations. But these Mixt Garments, being here joined with other Confusions, excogitated for the Use of Divel-Worship, tis likely that they were all of a Piece.²⁰

A Conformity unto the Pagans in their Clothes, was, by the Hebrewes alwayes apprehended, as a Step towards Conformity unto them in their Minds also. The Word, /מִדּוֹת/ signifies both Garments and Manners. Hence, when the Lord threatens in Zeph. 1.8. to visit those that wore Strange Apparel, it was not the meer Levity of often changing their Fashions, that was threatned; but the bringing in of Strange Gods, and Strange Rites, with their Apparel. Wherefore Jerom interprets, the, Clothed with Strange Apparel, thus, Qui pro Dei cultu Venerati sunt Idola; and Jonathan the Chaldee, thus turns it, Animadvertam in omnes Magnates, in eos denique qui perstrepunt ad Cultum Idolorum.²¹ And the Version of the LXX, intimates, that the Crime of the ἐνδύματα ἀλλότρια, lay in the Service Θεοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις, therewith Intoduced and accompanied. It is indeed an Observation among Politicians, That there is an Omen of some fatal Mischief at hand, 19 Spencer (lib. 2, cap. 21, sec. 3, fols. 434–35) here summarizes Maimonides's notion that the popular practices of Zabian idolaters were targeted by the Levitical laws (Guide 3.37.544). Edward Pococke's Notae In Quibus Aliquam-Multa Quae ad Historiam Orientalium (1648), p. 140, appended to his Specimen Historiae Arabum (1650), supplies supportive evidence from Arab histories on the Zabians and their worship of Saturn.

20 Herodotus (1.195) describes the clothing of the Armenian merchants in Babylon: They wear long linen tunics above which they display a woollen one, but "wrap themselves up in a small white cloak." With their long hair and "peacked cap or turban," they dowse themselves with myrrh and carry "a carved staff" with images of apples, roses, lilies, or "of an eagle" carved on it.

21 Spencer (436). According to St. Jerome (Hieronymus), those who are "clothed with strange apparel" (Zeph. 1:8) are "those who have venerated idols instead of worshiping God," in Operum Divi Hieronymi, Commentarios in Duodecim Prophetas (1533), Sextus Tomus, "Commentarii in Sophoniam" (cap. 1), p. 93^r (H); or more accessible, in Commentariorum in Sophoniam Prophetam Liber Unus [PL 025. 1346B]. The Chaldean Targum Jonathan (Sophon. 1:8), in Brian Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta (3:96, sep. pag.) renders it, "I shall blame all the powerful ones, those finally who make much noise at the worship of idols."

and an alteration of Lawes, Tempers, & Customes, threatned, in the Alteration of long-used Habits. It was therefore a Law among the Switzers, *Ut, qui avitum vestimentorum Habitum mutârît, peregrinumque assumpserit, à Publicis Honoribus, Muneribus, et Magistratibus, excluderetur, et exsors viveret.*²²

But now, for the Conjunction of Linen & Woollen, tis likely that there was therein also a Respect had, unto a Conjunction of Stars (as well as of Gods) in the Heavens, thus Implored for their Benign Influences upon their Husbandry. Thomas Aquinas has a notable Hint this Way; *Omnes illæ commixtiones, in Agriculturâ sunt prohibite ad literam, in Detestationem Idololatriæ; quia Egyptij, in venerationem Stellarum, diversas commixtiones faciebant, et in Seminibus, et in Animalibus, et in Vestibus, representantes diversas conjunctiones Stellarum.*²³ And Gulielmus Parisiensis hath another; *Idololatræ volebant insinuari, per hujusmodi commixtiones et conjunctiones, Agricolas et Pastores ad Stellarum Servitium obligatos, quia Stellarum Favore et Beneficio, putabant, et Lanæ copiam in Animalibus, et Lini in Agris, provenire. Propter hoc ergò Lanam et Linum simil in Vestibus conjungebant, ut ipso Habitu hanc superstitionem profiterentur, et utramque copiam à Stellis provenire confiterentur. Utrumque autem istorum erant Stellarum Servitium, videlicet tam professio, quam confessio antedicta: Eoque magis, quia hujusmodi conjunctiones Lanæ et Lini in Vestimentis, faciebant cum observatione conjunctionis Stellarum.*²⁴

For this Reason, when the Jewes beheld any one wearing these Mixt Garments, they would fly upon him, like Dragons, & pour out their Zeal upon him, as [* torn] | such a Man, saies Maimonides, Etiamsi in plateâ incederet, insilibat [44v]

22 The LXX (Sophon. 1:8) also speaks of “strange apparel” in the service of “strange gods” (Zeph. 1:8). Finally, the sumptuary laws of the Helvetians, as quoted in Philip Camerarius (1537–1624), German jurist and counselor to the Republic of Noricae, in Operæ Horarum Subcisivarum ... Centuria Tertia (1658), cap. 76, p. 284, stipulate that “he who has laid aside the ancestral style of their clothes and has adopted a strange one should be excluded from public honors, duties, and live deprived of them.”

23 In his magisterial Summa Theologica in qua Ecclesiae Catholicae Doctrina Universa ... Explicatur (1614), 1a, 2. Q.102, art. 6, Aquinas’s reply to objection 9, reads, “All these minglings were forbidden in agriculture; literally, in detestation of idolatry. For the Egyptians in worshipping the stars employed various combinations of seeds, animals and garments, in order to represent the various conjunctions of the stars” (Summa Theologica, Pt. 1–2, Q.102, Art. 6, Reply Obj. 9, p. 1081).

24 In his “De Legibus liber unus, cap. 13, p. 43 (C–), in Opera Omnia (1591), tom. 1, p. 43 (C–), the French Dominican Guilielmus Alverni Parisiensis, aka. William of Auvergne (1437–1485), claims that “Through jumbings and comminglings of this type, the idolaters desired to initiate peasants and shepherds into serving the stars, because they [idolaters] believed that abundance of both wool in the animals and of linen in the fields are bestowed by the favor and benefit of the stars. Consequently, they therefore joined wool and linen together in their clothes at the same time, so that by their very apparel they might declare this superstition and might avow that every bounty comes from the stars. Moreover, everyone of the men were bound to serve the stars and stick to their previously stated declaration and avowal. See also C. Burnett, “Images of Ancient Egypt in the Latin Middle Ages.”

Q. The Meaning of that Law, Thou shalt not sow thy Field, with a mingled Seed? v. 19.

A. From the Repetition of this Law, in Deut. 22.9. you must note, that the Field, in which this Action was interdicted, was no other than a Vineyard. And accordingly, the LXX render the Word here ἀμπελώνα, which they do not any where else, tho' the Word occur in the Scripture, an hundred Times over.²⁶

Now, if Theodoret inform us, that the Design of this Law, was to Retrench τὴν ἀπληστίαν, the Insatiable Avarice of the People; and if Philo inform us, that it was, to prevent the Seeds Hurting one another, τῶν ἐτέρων τὴν τροφὴν παρασπώμενα: Subtracting of Nourishment from one another; and if Josephus tell us, that it was to forbid the Cruelty, of exacting from the Earth, too rich a Tribute, καὶ τῶν ἐξ ἀράτρου πόνων ἀπηλλάχθαι and vexing it with the Labours of the Plough, when it yeelded them enough otherwise: Every Husbandman, will bee able to show you the Insufficiency of all these Accounts. And as for Josephus, it is too True and Just a Character, that the great Bochart gives of Him, *Josephus, utut Sacerdos, Judaicarum tamen Legum, Interpres quandoque pessimus.*²⁷

Wee will rather beleeeve a Peece of Idolatry forbidden, in this Law. For tho' Bonfrerius do object, That the Permixtion of Seeds, in Honour to some Dæmon, or Star, can bee proved by no Author, to have been among the Ancient Idolaters, you shall rather hear Maimonides, affirming, that hee had Read this Usage to have been among the old Zabians, They sowed Barley and Raisins together, in their Vineyards, to make them Fortunate.²⁸ And R. Joseph, an old Wizzard, ²⁵ Maimonides, Hilchot Kilayim (10.29) insists that when someone sees his friend wear kilayim (forbidden mixtures) “even if [his friend] is walking in the market place, he should jump up and rip the garment off him immediately; [this applies] even to his teacher from whom he has learned wisdom” (Mishneh Torah 28:96).

²⁸ Spencer (417) cites Jacobus Bonfrerius’s Pentateuchus Moysis commentario illustratus (1625), p. 664 (on Lev. 19:19). Bonfrerius questions the rationale that the Mosaic proscription against the mixing of seeds was instituted to combat pagan idolatrous practices. Although Bonfrerius does not specifically single out Maimonides’s Liber More Nebuchim (3.29.425; 3.37.444–52)

by him quoted, instructs Men how to sow Wheat, Barley, & Raisins, with one Cast of the Hand, for such superstitious Purposes; and hee adds, Nullum mihi Dubium est, quin illud hauserit ex vijs Amoræorum.²⁹ And Mr. Selden proves a thing almost like it, among the Athenians, who, πᾶν σπέρμα εἰς χύτρον ἐψήσαντες: Boiling all sorts of Seeds together in a Pott, sacrificed them to Bacchus & Mercury.³⁰

Briefly, T'was the Usage of the Old Idolaters, to join together a Male God, and a Female, in their Acknowledgments. The Greeks worshipped Jupiter and Juno, Saturn and Rhea: The Sidonians worshipped Baalim and Ashtaroth; The Egyptians worshipped Osiris and Isis; The Arabians, worshipped Lucifer and Venus: The Romans worshipped Mars, and Ilythia, Neptune and Thetis; and, to approach nearer yett, the Syrians worshipped Bacchus and Ceres. {Demosthenes} therefore begins his Orations, with calling upon Gods and Goddesses together. And Varro writing De Re Rustica, saies, that the most prosperous Way of Tillage, is To Invoke solemnly Twelve Deities, whereof six Male, & six Female, who were especially Agricolarum Duces.³¹ as the source for this rationalist claim, the great rabbi does identify the Arab author Abū Bakr Ahmad Ibn Ali Ibn Wahshiyya, who is to have translated the Zabian book al-Filāḥa an-Nabaṭiyya, i.e., The Book of Nabatean Agriculture (c. 904), from Chaldean/Syriac into Arabic (Guide 3.29.518, note 25). According to this book, the mixing of seeds was an ancient fertility rite of the Zabians. It is this spurious work upon which Maimonides bases his claim. See also R. Smolinski's "Eager Imitators" (302–03) and Jaakko Hämeen-Anttila's The Last Pagans of Iraq (2006).

29 Spencer (415) quotes Maimonides (Liber More Nebuchim [1629], pars 3, cap. 37, p. 452), who expresses his surprise at R. Josiah's legally binding dictum that sowing "a vineyard with diverse seeds" does not constitute an infraction "unless one sows together, in one throw of the hand [a mixture of], wheat, barley, and pips of grapes" (Guide 3.37.549). R. Josiah (Mather has "R. Joseph") seems unaware that his fellow sages in the Babylonian Talmud anathematize any mixture of seeds as an idolatrous practice, in tractates Berachoth (22a), Kiddushin (39a), and Chullin (82b, 136b). Accordingly, Maimonides is taken aback by R. Josiah's mistaken claim, adding, "Doubtless he [R. Josiah] had learned that this custom had its origin in the Amorite usages" (Guide 3.37.549).

30 Mather (via Spencer 417) quotes from John Selden's De Synedriis (1655), lib. 3, cap. 13, p. 266. Selden, in turn, leans on his contemporary equivalents to our modern Scholia in Aristophanem (Scholia in Acharnenses) (Hypothesis-epigram-scholion sch ach [sic] verse 1076a, line 7) and Suda (Lexicon), alphab. letter chi, entry 622, line 2.

31 The lost manuscript passage in braces { } is reconstructed from Spencer (418). If for good reason Demosthenes calls upon the gods and goddesses in tandem, Plato (Timaeus, Stephanus p. 27c, line 6) has Timaeus remind Socrates that any reasonable person who dares to probe the origin of the universe "must needs invoke Gods and Goddesses" alike to crave their approval. Not far behind, Varro (De re rustica 1.1) knows that calling upon all of the Twelve Olympians combined (Zeus, Hera, Demeter, Athena, Poseidon, Apollo, Artemis, Ares, Hephaestus, Aphrodite, Hermes, Dionysus) is especially propitious, because they are the particular "patrons of husbandmen." No doubt, the ancient philosophers would have applauded Blaise Pascal's "Wager" (Pensées # 233, p. 67), when the great French poet-philosopher reasoned – tongue-in-cheek – that worshipping God one way or the other makes good sense: For if God does exist you may have a chance at life eternal; if not, you haven't lost anything. Thus adoring your God (whichever you choose) is always propitious.

Doubtless, then, the old Idolaters conceiving the God of the Vine to be a Male, and the God of the Grain to be a Female, would by the Rites of mixt Seeds thrown into their Vineyards, unite them; that so they might have an happy Vintage.³²

Q. What is apprehended by the Jewish Rabbi's to be the Meaning of this Law, against the Mixture of Seeds in the Fields? v. 19.

A. They say, There is a Mystery in it; And that it signified, Quòd in populo Dei non debeat esse / ערבוב / Mixture, sed / אחדות שלמה / unitas et concordia perfecta.³³

[45v]

Q. The Meaning of that Law, Thou shalt not lett thy Cattle gender, with a diverse kind? v. 19.³⁴

A. It is Judged, that no other Cattel, but the Beef and the Ass, are nextly and strictly intended in this Prohibition. It is a Law, very nearly Related unto that which forbad the Joining of these two Creatures together, in the Yoke. [Deut. 22.10.]

For tis very certain, that Mules, procreated of an Ass and a Mare, were in very common Use among the Israelites; especially about the Dayes of David and Solomon. [See 1. King. 1.33. and 2. Sam. 13.29. and 1. King. 10.25.] If the Ancient Israelites had understood the Law, as forbidding the Propagation of Mules, there had never been such Multitudes, or such Improvements thereof among them. Now Philo tells us, That they præferr'd Mules above all Cattel, for their Compact & Nervous Bodies; & that they kept great Asses, which they called, κήλωνας, ad Gignendam ijs sobolem.³⁵

Wee say then, that the Divel extremely Delighting in those Confusions, wherein the Order of Nature is Inverted, imposed on miserable Mankind, the confounded Conjunction of a Bull, and an Ass,³⁶ as a Sacrament, whereby they might obtain the Prosperity of their Tillage. It was a Zabian Rite, and it required so much Filthy, Odious, and Immodest Labour in them who observed it, that it agreed well with such an Impure & Absurd Spirit as the Divel. The Divines

³⁴ Spencer (428) is the muse for the following paragraphs and secondary sources.

³⁵ In his De specialibus legibus (3.47.4), Philo Judaeus specifically mentions that this cross-breeding of species violated Mosaic law, yet acknowledges that the Israelites preferred the stout and strong “celones, in order that they may breed with the mares” (Works 599). The Latin passage “ad Gignendam ijs sobolem” (“breed them as offspring”), is from John Christophersen’s translation Philonis Iudaei, Summi Philosophi (1561), tomus alter, p. 147.

³⁶ See Appendix A.

of the Synagogue among the Jewes, made a Decree, Vapulat quispiam non solum cum Manu suâ intromisit, ut stylum in Calamum, sed si duntaxat marem provocavit ad conscendendum, in Fæminam, aut Voce suâ incitavit, percutitur percussione Rebellionis, i. e. Fustigatione. *Licet tamen in uno stabulo claudere duo Animalia, et qui videt concumbere non tenetur ea separare.*³⁷

Now, what but an Instinct of a Divel, could make Men bee at such Nasty Pains, as would bee necessary to procure the Conjunction forbidden in the Law before us? The Thing was Possible to be accomplished; Hence Philo saies, the Shepherds of Israel were punished, if they permitted βούν ἰππῶ ἐπιβαίνειν.³⁸ Nevertheless t'was doubtless very Troublesome. Wherefore, the Idolaters, perhaps used the Rite of Conjugation, upon these Creatures, mentioned in Deuteronomy, to express the like Devotion to the Divel. Where, if any cavil, that the Words in Deut. 22.10. /שור/ and /חמור/ are both of the Masculine Gender, Lett him turn to Exod. 34.10. and hee will find /שור/ to bee sometimes of the Feminine; and at Exod. 13.13. hee will find /חמור/ also to bee an Epicæne.³⁹ These Detestable Actions, the Lord forbids unto His People, because Hee would have not the least Appearance of Unholiness among them. [^{} torn] the Worship of Priapus and Venus hee thus also Damned. Particularly, Hee would not have them to go to plough, in the Divels Name; and there were further Divellisms herein likewise inhibited, if Guilielmus Parisiensis may bee credited; The Idolaters, hee saies, *Istas conjunctiones Animalium Diversorum Generum, in operibus suis facerent, juxtâ conjunctiones planetarum, et quasdam alias constellationes: credentes ex hoc opera prosperari. Ideoque voluit Deus remove vanitatem credulitatis ipsius à cordibus eorum, tanquam Radicem Idololatriæ, nè per eam, Creatore Relicto, ad Stellarum Servitia traherentur.*⁴⁰

37 Spencer (427) appears to lean on Bochart's Hieroicoicon: Animalibus (pars 1, lib. 2, cap. 22, col. 245, lines 19–25). Maimonides, Hilchot Kilayim (9.1, 2), glosses that a person is not subject to whipping, “until he actually inserts one animals organ into the other’s. If, however, he merely placed one on top of the other or encouraged them verbally, he is given stripes for rebellious conduct; i. e., Punishment. It is permitted to place two species of animals in one corral. If one sees them mating, he is not obligated to separate them” (adapted from Mishneh Torah 28:78).

38 Philo Judæus (De specialibus legibus 3.46.4, 5) warns that Jewish shepherds were punished if they endeavored “to cross a cow with a horse.”

39 Deut. 22:10: שור [showr] and חמור [chamowr] signify “ox” and “(he)ass” (Strong’s ## 7794, 2543). Mather’s erroneous reference to Exod. 34.10 should be Exod. 34.19. The error also occurs in Spencer (429). Indeed, Exod. 13.13 חמור [chamowr] is an epicene word which is the same for both a male and female ass. That’s asinine.

40 Spencer (430); Guilielmus Alverni Parisiensis (William of Auvergne), De Legibus liber unus, cap. 12, p. 42 (F–G), in Opera Omnia (1591), tom. 1, p. 42: The idolaters “made those conjunctions of different types of animals in their own works, in accordance with the conjunctions of the planets and certain other constellations, trusting by this effort to prosper. Consequently, God wanted to remove the vanity of their credulity (the root of their idolatry) from their hearts, so that after leaving God they would not be enticed to the service of the stars.

Q. That Law, That when Trees for Food were planted, the Fruit thereof was to be counted uncircumcised, for Three Years; Lett us have some Illustration upon it? v. 23.

A. Sir Tho. Brown observes, That the Vulgar expresses it⁴¹, To take away the Prepukes from such Trees, during that time.

Now, if Auferre præputia, be taken, as many learned Men have thought, to pluck away the Bearing Buds, before they proceed unto Flowers or Fruit, you will readily apprehend the Metaphor, from the Analogy and Similitude of those Sprouts and Buds, that resemble the præputial Part, by shutting up the Fruitful Particle.

You may also find herein a Peece of Husbandry, not mentioned in Theophrastus and Columella. For, by taking away the Buds, and hindring Fructification, the Trees were made more vigorous, both in Growth, and in future Production.

By such a Way, King Pyrrhus gott a lusty Race of Beeves, and such as were desired all over Greece, by keeping them from Generation, until the Ninth Year.

And, you may also discover a physical Advantage of the Goodness of the Fruit, which becomes less Crude, and more Holesome, on the Fourth or Fifth Years Production.⁴²

Q. Neither shall Yee use Enchantment: what may be meant by Enchantment? v. 26.⁴³

A. The Hebrew Word, signifies a superstitious Observation, whereby Men made Omens, and guessed what should happen to them; either from their Sneezing; or from their breaking of a Shoe-latchet; or, from the Name of a Man they mett withal; or from some Creature crossing their Way, or passing on their Right Hand, or their Left. The LXX, & those who follow them, think that here is a special Respect unto Divination by Birds; But Bochart shewes that it refers rather to the ancient ὀφιομαντεία, or, Divination by Serpents, than to their ὀρνιθομαντεία, or Divination by Birds.⁴⁴ And that this was frequent, may be gathered, from the VIIth Iliad of Homer, where Chalcas beholding a Serpent swallow Eight Sparrowes

⁴¹ By "Vulgar," Mather designates the Latin Vulgate translation of the Bible.

⁴² Sir Thomas Browne, "Observations Upon several Plants mention'd in Scripture" (Tract 1), in Certain Miscellany Tracts (1684), sec. 40, in Works (3:263). The Latin phrase "auferre præputia" means, "to remove the foreskin." Theophrastus's De historia plantarum (4th–3rd c. BCE) and Lucius Junius Moderatus Columella's De arboribus (1st c. CE) were among the most significant ancient treatises on agricultural plants, shrubs, and trees. King of the Greek Molossians, Pyrrhus (c. 319–272 BCE) acquired the scepter of Epirus and Macedonia and waged war against early Roman hegemony in the Adriatic. See Plutarch's Parallel Lives: Pyrrhus.

⁴³ The following extract is from Patrick (Leviticus 373–75).

⁴⁴ Samuel Bochart, Hierozaicon: Animalibus (pars 1, lib. 1, cap. 3, col. 19, line 35).

with their Dam, divined how long the Trojan War should last.⁴⁵ R. Levi Barcelonita refers it unto any Kind of Divination; as by the Staff falling out of the Right Hand, by a Serpent creeping on the Right Hand, or, a Fox going by the Left, which made Men forbear any Work they were then about. But, he thinks, it may also signify, as we translate it, Enchantment. For instance, To cure Wounds by Reading a Verse of the Law; or, Laying the Book of the Law or a Phylactery, upon a Childs Head, to procure Sleep;⁴⁶ such Superstitions as are in use with Christians also, who hang the First Verse of Johns Gospel, about Peoples Necks, to cure an Ague. Yett methinks, tis a little too early to suppose these things intended by Moses, who had not yett given a Copy of the Law unto the People.⁴⁷

Maimonides gives many Instances of superstitious Observations, used among the Heathen; some of which are mentioned by Theophrastus, in his Characters of Superstition; and by Plutarch, in his Book on the same Subject; and are derided by Terence, in his Phormio.⁴⁸ Even the greatest Persons were anciently much infected with them; and (as Dr. Patrick notes) they were so settled in Mens Minds, that when they became Christians, they could not presently shake them off, as appears by the frequent Reprehensions, which Chrysostom gives unto them. We find particularly, in his VIIIth Homily upon the Colossians, he chides his People severely for calling in old drunken Women, with their Salt and Ashes and Soot, to free those that were bewitch'd. And more especially, in his VIth Homily against the Jewes, he rebukes those that used ἐπωδαί, και περιπτα, Charms, 45 Chalcas, the Argive seer, was foremost in divining the will of the gods by interpreting the flight of birds. When Cronos sent a sign of a red-backed serpent swallowing eight sparrow nestlings and their wailing mother on the top of a tree, Chalcas augured that the Achaeans would battle the Trojans for nine years, but Priam's fortress would fall in the tenth. The story is sung in Homer's Iliad (2:303–32), not in the VIIth book of Homer's epic.

46 R. Levi Barcelona's ספר ההגנות Sefer Ha-Chinnuk (1523), in Hottinger's Juris Hebraeorum (sec. XVI, praecept, CCLIII, pp. 386–88).

47 John 1:1 contains the famous passage of the Word's incarnation: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." The therapeutic intent of hanging a scroll with this verse around a person's neck bespeaks a superstitious belief in magic, Mather argues, one that Moses could not have had in mind because the Torah had not yet been written at this stage of the chronology.

48 Mather (via Patrick 374) refers to Dionysius Vossius's bilingual edition of Maimonides's De Idololatria Liber (1641), cap. 11, secs. 4–18, pp. 145–66. See also Maimonides's Hilchot Avodat Kochavim V'Chukkoteibem (11.4–16), Mishneh Torah (3:200–15). Among the superstitious practices Maimonides mentions are soothsaying, studying omens, divining or consulting a diviner, telling fortunes or consulting with a fortuneteller, casting spells, using incantations, inquiring from the dead or a sorcerer. The Greek philosopher Theophrastus of Eresos (c. 371–287 BCE), perhaps better known for his History of Plants than for his book on human character types, details the obsessive-compulsive behavior of a superstitious man in his Characters (16.79–83). Plutarch's Superstitione (secs. 1–14) is filled with illustrations of superstitious practices, which (Plutarch argues) are the result of "our great ignorance of the Divine Beings" (Superstitione 1.1). The Roman comic playwright Publius Terentius Afer (c. 195–159 BCE) has Antipho and Geta banter about such prodigies as a black dog entering the house, a snake coming through the sky-light, crowing hens, and diviners and soothsayers giving advice (Phormio 4.4).

and things hung about the Neck, to cure Agues, whereby they gott a worse Disease in their Souls, & wounded their Consciences. And in other Places [Tom. VI. p. 610, 611. Edit. Savil.] he reprehends their Using of Omens, Good and Bad, whereof some were very strange ones.⁴⁹

Q. Nor observe Times: what might be the Observation of Times here forbidden?⁵⁰

A. Why may it not be, To take Notice of Dayes, according to the Præcepts of Astrologers, who made some to be Lucky, & others to be Unlucky. The Hebrew Word here used, the Jewes, (as R. Levi particularly,) do generally look on it, as derived from Onah, which signifies Time. Superstitious People thought some certain Time to be most fitt for Business; another Not. This Opinion should have been extinguished in the People, by Gods Appointing the Sabbath, as the only Day of the Week, wherein Business is to be laid aside.⁵¹

Others rather derive Teonenu, from Anan, a Cloud; imagining Moses to forbid their marking of the Clouds or their making Observations from the Motion thereof, which was a thing usual among the Gentiles.

But Maimonides mentions another Notion of this Word, from Ajin, an Eye; and saies, That Juglers, who delude the Sight of Men in playing their Tricks, are comprehended under the Name of Meonim.

And some derive the Word, from Anak, which signifies, To Answer; thinking, that intends Fortune-tellers.⁵²

It is very certain, The Superstition of Astrology was very ancient. The Genethliacal Sort of it, was much in Use among the old Chaldeans. However Strabo tells us, The best Astronomers in that Countrey rejected them; and so did the best Philosophers in other Countreyes, as we learn from Tully, who calls their Pretences, Chaldaeorum Monstra. No wonder that God caution'd His People against them. [Compare, Jer. 10.2, 3.]⁵³

Q. That Law, Yee shall not eat with the Blood, you know, tis in the Original / עַל־הַדָּם / Supra, vel Juxta Sanguinem;⁵⁴ I suppose, it means not the bare Eating of Blood, which is in other Terms elsewhere forbidden. [Deut. 12.16. & 15.23.] Nor does it mean merely κρέας ἐν αἵματι, Flesh reeking hot with its Blood: [As the LXX, in Gen. 9.3.] Nor Suffocated Things, wherein the Blood ha's been stagnated; as our English Translation seems to take it.⁵⁵ Tho' there is this to bee said, That Strangled Meats are directly prohibited no where in the Law, if not here; yett there is this to bee said, That they are sufficiently implied, in those other Texts, where Blood, & things Dead of themselves, or Torn by wild beasts, come under an Inhibition. Wherefore I look for a further Meaning; Will you please to give it mee? v. 26.⁵⁶

A. Furnished, from the learned Spencer, I shall endeavor it:⁵⁷

First then; You must know, That according to the very credible Account of Maimonides, Tho' the Ancient Zabians, did reckon Blood, an unclean Thing, yett, reckoning it the Food of Demons, they did sometimes eat it, in Pursuance of a Communion with their Demons; & obtain from them the Communication of Secret and Future Things. But some of them, having so much Humanitie, as to abhor this Eating of Blood, yett killing a Beast, & pouring the Blood of it, either into a Dish or a Pitt, they would sitt about it, & there Eat the Beast, which they had killed; imagining that the Demons fed upon that Blood, while they themselves fed upon the Flesh. Hereby, they contracted & mentained a cursed Friendship, Fraternity, Familiarity, with Demons; they feasted with them, & now hoped for many Sorts of Services from them.⁵⁸ And the Author of the Book

Divination (2.42.87), Tully Cicero speaks of the “Chaldaeorum monstra” or “Chaldean manifestations”; i. e., Chaldean astrology, against which Plato's disciple Eudoxus specifically warned that “No reliance whatever is to be placed in Chaldean astrologers when they profess to forecast a man's future from the position of the stars on the day of his birth.”

Adding, that, [according to Lev. 17.7.] the Israelites learn't these divellish Practices of the Egyptians; and that when they were doing them, *Congregabantur isti Spiritus maligni, et apparebant ipsis, instar Hircorum hirsutorum, et notum faciebant illis quicquid quærent.*⁵⁹ And unto the like Purpose, wee have an Account from Josephus Albo, who telling us, why the Slaying of any thing, but before the Tabernacle, was Interdicted unto the Israelites coming out of Egypt, saies, It was, *propterea quod tunc immersi, essent in cultu Dæmonum, et comederent super Sanguinem, et comederent Adipem, et Sanguinem.*⁶⁰

That, and What, these Hellish Customes, of, Eating upon Blood, were, wee have several Scriptures, Declaring to us. Lett us a little Touch upon Two or Three of them, with some Curiositie of Illustration.

Wee read in Ezek. 33.25, 26. Yee eat with the Blood, /עַל־הַדָּם/ and lift up your Eyes toward your Idols, & shed Blood, and shall yee possess the Land? Yee stand upon your Sword, yee work Abomination. The Particle עַל signifies, By, or, At, or, On, rather than, With. And Vatablus, ha's this proper Gloss hereupon, *post-eaquam, vos Sacrificastis Idolis, vos comeditis carnes Sacrificiorum, juxta Sanguinem Victimarum illis immolatarum.*⁶¹ The Idolaters eating thus, by the Blood which they shed [compare Lev. 17.4.] did lift up their Eyes unto their Idols, with a Confidence, that the Dæmons whom they had thus Invited, Invoked, & Entertained, would bee propitious to them. And in doing thus, they stood upon their Sword. What was the Sense of That? Why, It was a Received Opinion among Homer's Odyssey (11.23–50); and Jurieu's Critical History (1705), vol. 1, part I, ch. 25, pp. 244–51; vol. 2, part IV, ch. 11, pp. 298–300.

⁵⁹ Spencer (328). The Latin translation from ספר הזוהר Sefer Ha-Zohar (Book of Splendor) warns that “those evil spirits were swarming together, and they were appearing to them in the guise of hairy goats, and they revealed to them whatever they asked.” See Shemoth (sec. 2) and Vayikra (sec. 3), in Soncino Zohar (2.237a; 3.63a). In Mather's time, scholars still believed in R. Shimon bar Yochai (2nd c. CE) as the author of the Zohar. It is now widely attributed to the Sephardic Kabbalist Moshe ben Shem-Tov, aka. Moses de León of Guadalajara (c. 1250–1305). On the proscription against ingesting blood as a means to commune with demons (Lev. 17:5–7 and 19:26), see also Rashi, Nachmanides, Rashbam, Ibn Ezra, Radak, Gersonides, and Abarbanel (JPS Miqra'ot Gedolot 3:128–29, 154).

⁶¹ Franciscus Vatablus's gloss, excerpted in Matthew Poole's Synopsis Criticorum (2.2:1277), explains the forbidden rite: “After you have sacrificed to the idols, you eat the meats of the sacrifices [and] in like manner [ingest] the blood of the victims sacrificed to them.”

them, that the brandishing of a Drawn Sword, would give a Fright & Flight unto the Dæmons, or Spirits, that were about them. Wherefore, when the Magicians called forth, the Souls of the Dead, with the Rites of Eating by Blood, they armed themselves with a Sword, that they might behave themselves with more Courage in their Putting of Questions unto them, as well as that they might chase away the Souls that had not been called for. You have this whole Matter, notably described, in the Eleventh Book of Homers Odyssees, where you find Ulysses consulting with the Ghost of Tiresias. Ulysses then stood ξίφος οξυ ερυσσάμενος παρα μηρου with a Sharp Sword, upon his Thigh, to keep off any others of the Dead, from touching of the Sacrificed Blood, until Tiresias had first been consulted with.⁶² Anon, sais hee, ἐφ' αἵματι φάσγανον ἰσχων

I held a Sword over the Blood; namely, to keep off Intruders;⁶³ And when Tiresias comes, hee prays Ulysses, To stand away from the Pitt, & to take away the Sword,

Αἵματος ὄφρα πῶ, καὶ τοὶ νημερτέα εἴπω,

That so (sais hee) I may drink the Blood, & speak the Truth.⁶⁴ And Silius Italicus ha's a remarkable Passage of this Import,

— contende Tueri,

Eductumque tene Vaginâ interritus ensem,

Quæcunque autè Animæ tendunt potare cruorem,

Disjice. —⁶⁵

Well therefore, might the Prophet add, That this was, To work Abomination. It was not a murderous, but this Magical, Shedding of Blood, that is here intended.⁶⁶

Again, Wee read in Lev. 17.4, 5, 7. Whosoever kills a Creature, & brings it not unto the Door of the Tabernacle, — hee hath shed Blood, — that Man shall bee cutt off. — And they shall no more offer their Sacrifices unto Dives. The Creatures

⁶³ Homer (Odyssey 11.83): [ἐγὼ μὲν ἀνευθεν] ἐφ' αἵματι φάσγανον ἰσχων, "[I on one side] holding my sword over the blood."

⁶⁵ The Latin epic poet Tiberius Catius Asconius Silius Italicus (c. 26–102 CE) in his epic on the Second Punic War (218–201 BCE), echoes the Homeric original: As Scipio is surrounded by the shades of the dead in Erebus, Proserpina commands, "Fix your gaze firmly upon them all [ghosts in Erebus], and grasp your sword undaunted. If any spirits press forward to drink of the blood ... hew them to pieces" (Punica 13.441–43).

⁶⁶ Ezek. 33:25, 26.

they killed, for their daily Food, must bee killed, like Peace-Offerings, before the Tabernacle. It was, as Maimonides very truly tells us, Quia in Rebellione et Contumaciâ suâ perrexerunt Israelitæ, et in eo, in quo educati fuerunt, continuè progressi sunt, sociosque se Dæmonibus præbuerunt, circa Sanguinem comedendo, —⁶⁷ It was to prevent the Diabolism, which they had been used unto of serving Dæmons by pouring out the Blood of Animals unto them. And therefore, this Præcept, continued in Force no longer than the Israelites continued in the Wilderness | and had their Egyptian Tang upon them. Indeed, it is justly beleaved, That those Desart-Places, were peculiarly Inhabited by Dæmons, who chose to make, even visible Apparitions there, more then in Places that were better peopled with Humane Inhabitants.⁶⁸ There was therefore, a singular Occasion, for the Lord, thus to putt a Timely Stop, unto the Magical Idolatries of the Israelites. Methinks, Abarbinel speaks well upon it; Vir ille, qui sic mactat, in causâ est, ut Homines Accedant, et comedant ibi, super Sanguinem effusum in Agris, ex illâ mactatione, quod est è cultu Dæmonum: eratque mactator ille, ac si mortem et excisionem attulisset omnibus, qui Sacrificabant in eo Die.⁶⁹

Hence also, t'was required, in Lev. 17.13. Whosoever catcheth any Beast, or Fowl, hee shall poure out the Blood thereof, & cover it with Dust. [See Deut. 12.16, 24. & 15.23.] Orders that seem so Trivial, why were they so much Inculcated? It was to obviate the Oriental Superstitions, who thought, the Blood of Beasts or Birds, repositied in fitt Receptacles, to bee an Entertainment for Dæmons. Alluding to this Perswasion of the Gentiles, is that in Psal. 50.12, 13. If I were Hungry, I would not tell thee; — will I eat the Flesh of Bulls, or Drink the Blood of Goats?

67 Spencer (330) cites Maimonides, Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (3.46.485). The great philosopher explains that this rule was instituted “because they [recalcitrant Israelites] continued in their disobedience and in following the generally accepted usage in which they had been brought up of fraternizing with the jinn [demons] through eating around the blood” (Guide 3.46.586).

68 See also Spencer, De Legibus (1685), lib. 3, diss. 8, cap. 6 and 9, fols. 1012–14, 1023–25; and John Selden's De Synedriis (1653), lib. 2, cap. 4, sec. 12, pp. 197–202.

69 Spencer (330). Abarbanel explains that the proscription (Lev. 19:26), “You shall not eat anything with its blood,” was intended to keep the Israelites from adopting the idolatrous fertility rites of the Canaanites. For to increase and speed up the fruitfulness of newly planted trees, the Canaanites “used to pour blood on the roots of the tree,” planted “new trees according to the [propitious] position of the heavenly constellations,” and cut their hair dedicated to their idol and bury it with the seeds, lacerate their own bodies until blood ran to the ground, and “when grafting a branch from one tree onto another,” have a beautiful young maiden perform sexual acts under the tree” (Selected Commentaries Vayikra/Leviticus 3:186, 187, 188, 189). These idolatrous rituals were practiced by the ancient Sabians in Chaldea, Maimonides claims, and recorded in the ancient book on “The Nabatean Agriculture” and translated by Abū Bakr Ahmad Ibn Ali Ibn Wahshiyya (Guide 3.29.516–18). More specifically, Abarbanel holds violators of this proscription accountable: “That man who thus sacrifices is responsible for enticing others to draw near and to eat there over the blood poured out on the fields by that slaughter. [This idolatrous practice] is from the worship of devils; and that man was a killer, as if he had brought death and destruction to all who were sacrificing on that day.” See also Babylonian Talmud, tractate Sanhedrin (63a).

Briefly, The Lord would not have His People court the favour of Dæmons: And as R. Moses, well expresses it, *Præcepit Deus, ut omnium Ferarum et Volucrum licitarum Sanguis, ubi mactata fuerint, Pulvere operiatur, ita ut non possint Homines circa illum convenire et commessari; atque ita irrita reddatur Fraternitas inter illos, quos in Rei Veritate Dæmon possidet.*⁷⁰ Out of him, I suppose it was, that Thomas Aquinas, gives the very same Account of this Matter. [Prim. 2. Qu. 102. Art. 6.]⁷¹

Tis many Wayes evident, that Almighty God, had a Respect unto this Diabolical Usage, in the Law, that is now before us. Hence tis, that the LXX render it, *Yee shall not Eat ἐπὶ τῶν ὄρεων, upon the Mountains.*⁷² It is an immodest Thing, in any Criticks, to say, that they read /הרים/ for /הדם/ as ha's been asserted by some, who, as Dr. Spencer saies well, *nescio que menda suspicari solent, ne quid ipsi nescire videantur.*⁷³ Compare Ezek. 33.25. with Ezek. 18.5, 6. and you may gather that the Rite of, Eating over Blood, was a Sort of Idolatry, at least akin to, Eating upon Mountains: as indeed the Book Zohar tells us, they mostly chose There to do It.⁷⁴ It is a Passage of *Isidore, Apud Majores, potentes aut in Montibus [in domibus], aut sub Montibus, sepeliebantur. Indè tractum est, ut postea super Cadavera, aut Pyramides fierent, aut ingentes columnæ collocarentur.*⁷⁵ And thus Lucan writes, 70 Spencer (331) cites Maimonides's Liber מורה נבוכים [More Nebuchim] Doctor Perplexorum (3.46.485): "God commanded that when any of the wild beasts or birds whose flesh it is permitted to eat has been slaughtered, its blood should be covered up with dust so that people should not gather to eat around it. Thus the aim was achieved and the purpose realized: namely, to break the brotherhood between those truly possessed and their jinn" (Guide 3.46.587). See also Jurieu (History of the Doctrines, vol. 1, ch. 13, pp. 125–27).

71 Thomas Aquinas, leaning on Maimonides's More Nebuchim, says much the same in his Summa Theologica: "Blood was forbidden ... in order to shun the idolatrous rite whereby it was customary for men to collect the blood and to gather together around it for a banquet in honor of the idols, to whom they held the blood to be most acceptable. Hence the Lord commanded the blood to be poured out and to be covered with earth (Lev. xvii.13)," in Summa Theologica (2:1078, pt. 1–2, Q.102, A6, Reply Obj. 1).

72 Lev. 19:26, line 1 (LXX).

73 Spencer (332) criticizes those who misread /הרים/ for /הדם/ as follows: "I do not know what faults they are accustomed to mistrust; they themselves don't even seem to know that."

74 Zohar Vayikra (sec. 3) relates that "When the Egyptians desired to consort with the demons, they used to go out to certain mountains and offer sacrifices and make trenches in the ground and pour some of the blood around the trenches and the rest into them and put flesh over it, and bring offerings to the demons. Then the demons used to collect and consort with them on the mountain. Israel, being subject to the Egyptians, learnt their ways and went astray after them; hence God said to them, 'After the doings of the land of Egypt in which ye have dwelt shall ye not do', and also, 'And they shall no more sacrifice their sacrifices unto the satyrs after whom they go a-whoring', since, as we have learnt, the demons used to appear to them in the form of the he-goats," in Soncino Zohar (3:70a),

75 The oft-cited Latin passage is adapted from Etymologiarum sive Originum (15.11.4): "De Aedificiis et Agris" [PL 082. 0552], by the Spanish archbishop of Seville, St. Isidori Hispalensis Episcopi (c. 560–636). It also appears in Maurus Honoratius Servius's In Vergilii Aeneidos Commentarius (11:849), Servius's annotation on Virgil's Aeneid (11:849), "monte sub alto"; i. e.,

*Et Regnum cineres extructo monte quiescunt.*⁷⁶

It seems it was the Ancient Custome, to bury Hero's upon Mountains; As you know, Moses, and Aaron, and Joshua, were so Buried.⁷⁷ Now the Idolaters, Beleaving the Souls of their Hero's, to hover much about their Graves, did usually repair to such Mountains, that by Eating over Blood there, they might receive Oracles from the Dead. Hence tis, that, Eating upon Mountains, is often branded for a very great Impiety. [Ezek. 18.6, 11, 15. chap. 22.9. and chap. 33.25.] Again, Aquila renders, Yee shall not Eat, ἐπὶ τοῦ δώματος, Upon the House-top: And Interpreters do miserably vex themselves about that Version: Drusius after all, cutting the Knot which hee can't untie, & saying, that the Scribes, mistook δώματος for αἵματος. But Aquila, wee conceive, had an Eye to the same thing that wee have in the Septuagint.⁷⁸ The Idolaters, performed their Ceremonies upon the Tops of Houses, as well as upon the Tops of Mountains. [Consider 2. King. 23.12. and Jer. 19.13. and 39.29. and Zeph. 1.5.]⁷⁹ And Witches took the like Places, for their Witchery's: for which Cause, in the Glossary, counted Isidores, you find, Witches,

"Under the mountain height." St. Isidore explains, "Among the ancestors, distinguished ancestors were buried either in the mountains [in houses] or under the mountains. It followed from this that later either pyramids might be built over their corpses or massive columns placed there."

⁷⁶ In his Roman epic De Bello Civili, Marcus Annaeus Lucanus tells the woe-betide Pharaoh-Ptolemy (last of Lagus's line) that although he preserves the ashes of many "Pharaohs [who] rest beneath a mountain of masonry [pyramids]" (De Bello Civili 8.695), he will lose his crown to his sister in Pompey's struggle with Caesar.

⁷⁸ Spencer (333). Mather is here interested in the more literal rendition of the Hebrew phrase אֶל-הָרִים לֹא אָכַל "not eaten upon the mountain" (Ezek. 18:6, KJV), which phrase the LXX renders ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρέων οὐ φάγεται "shall not eat upon the mountain." St. Aquila of Sinope (fl. 2nd c. CE), a convert to Christianity and subsequently to Judaism, translated the Hebrew Scripture into Greek. Intended to replace the Septuagint (3rd c. BCE), Aquila's more literal rendition of the Hebrew original served Origen and St. Jerome as an invaluable commentary on opaque Hebrew passages they sought to explicate. The most user-friendly version of Aquila's rendition is preserved in Origenis Hexaplorum qua supersunt [PG 015–016, pt. 1–3]. In his Veterum Interpretum Graecorum In Totum Vetus Testamentum Fragmenta (1622), p. 642 (on Ezek. 33:25), Johannes Drusius (1550–1616), Dutch Reformed theologian and professor of Hebrew at Franeker, turns to the Hebrew original and renders the phrase עַל-הַדָּם "with [upon] the blood" as τοῦ αἵματος (Ezek. 33:25, KJV). Significantly, Ezek. 33:25 does not exist in the LXX. Since Aquila's Greek translation renders the Hebrew original (Ezek. 33:25) as ἐπὶ τοῦ δώματος "upon the housetop" instead of ἐπὶ τοῦ αἵματος ("over the black-pudding"), Drusius attributes this contradiction to a scribal error since αἵματος ("blood-broth") and δώματος ("housetop") allegedly look alike. See also Critici Sacri (4:5961).

⁷⁹ Mather here refers to 4 Kings 23:12 (LXX), which speaks of the "roof of the upper chamber." His reference to Jer. 39.29 erroneously reads 32.29 in the holograph manuscript, an error which Mather copies from Spencer's text (333), but here silently corrected.

called by the Name of Tegularia.⁸⁰ Jerom describes to us, the Houses of the Orient, after this fashion; Orientales non habent in Tectis Culmina; sed ijs Domata, quæ apud nos Tecta, Romæ Solaria, vocantur.⁸¹

You may add, That besides what wee have in Maimonides,⁸² it is a memorable Remark that wee have in Fagius, upon this Law. Sunt, qui scribunt, Israelitas obtulisse in Egypto, Sacrificia Dæmonibus, quos Schedim vocant, et postea, juxta Effusum Sanguinem, quo Magis Dæmones placarent, comedisse Reliquias, Sacrificiorum; et hunc Ritum Idololatriam hîc vetare Deum.⁸³ And it is well-known, that the Hebrew Particle /עַל/ does most accept such a Signification, as wee have now putt upon it. For which Cause, tis not Improbable, that this was the Provocation, which King Saul, did so much Rebuke and Resent, and Prevent, when, in 1. Sam. 14.33. – It was told Saul, Behold the People Sin against the Lord, in that they Eat with the Blood. Tho' wee do not altogether so much contend for this Exposition of it. But, when this Law is given, there is not assigned a Reason for it, as there is for the Law of not Eating Blood at all. The Reason of that Silence, may bee, because this magical Idolatry, was then well-known to all the World. And therefore you find the Law given here, in the Midst of Lawes referring to other Zabian Superstitions; & the Rites of Divination. Why, Maimonides truly advises us, That the Idolaters in this very Rite, proposed unto themselves, a Divination; even, that the Dæmons fed by this Blood, would in their Sleep at least, appear unto them; and serve them, in many Instances. Yea, there was a Necromancy in it, and an Evocation of Departed Ghosts.⁸⁴ Thus Austin tells us, of this Necromancy among the Persians, Quo, adhibito Sanguine, etiam Inferi suscitantur.

⁸⁰ In his Glossarium, St. Isidore of Seville speaks of the “Tegullaria maleficia, eo quod supra tegulas sacrificient” or “roof-top sorcerers, who offer their sacrifices on roof-tops.” Spencer’s source for witches who perform their sorcery on roof-tops is Πεντηκονταρχος sive Quinquaginta Militum Ductor (1622), cap. 27, p. 225, by Laurentius Ramirez de Prado, aka. Lorenzo Ramirez (1583–1658), a Spanish humanist, Castilian politician, antiquarian, and “Familiar del Santo Oficio” (Member of the Holy Inquisition).

⁸³ Spencer (333–34). Paulus Fagius’s gloss on Lev. 19:26 (in Pearson’s Critici Sacri 1:834), explains that “there are those who write that the Israelites in Egypt had offered sacrifices to devils, whom they call ‘shedim,’ and that afterwards, they ate the remains of the sacrifices near the poured-out blood, by which they attracted evil spirits. In this place [Lev. 19:26], God prohibited this idolatrous rite.”

⁸⁴ Spencer (337); Maimonides (Liber 3.46.484) and (Guide 3.46.585–86).

That Clemens mentions those as the worst of Idolathytes, over whose Blood, ψυχὰι ὑπ' ἐξ ἐρεβους, Souls came from the Dead.⁸⁵ Thus Horace,

– pullam divellere mordicus Agnam
Cæperunt, cruor in fossam diffusus, ut indè
Manes elicere Animas Responsa daturas.⁸⁶

But of this enough.

Q. That Law, Yee shall not Round the Corners of your Heads, neither shalt thou marr the Corners of thy Beard: I pray, give mee a few Spencerian Illustrations upon it? v. 27.⁸⁷

A. Tis true, The old pagans did use to Shear or Shave, their Hair, orbicularly about their Heads, leaving above, or behind, a Curle, consecrated either to the Sun, or to Saturn. And whole Synods of great Men, besides Bochart and Grotius, have thought, that this Law forbad the Israelites to symbolize with the Pagans, in such a Ceremony.⁸⁸ The Seventy do accordingly call the Thing here interdicted, Sisoë; which, being the same with, Sisith, signifieth such a Curle, as has been described.⁸⁹ It was the Curle, or, Lock, for which the Thracians were called,

⁸⁵ In his De Civitate Dei (7.35) [PL 041. 0223], St. Augustine draws on Terentius Varro, who believes that the Persians, followed by the Pythagoreans, introduced this type of necromancy in which the sorcerers “inquire at the inhabitants of the neither world, and make use of blood” (City of God 7.35.142), in NPNFi (2:142). Likewise, Clemens Alexandrinus alludes to Homer’s Odyssey (11.37) and relates in Paedagogus (2.1.8.3, line 4) that to the blood fly ψυχὰι ὑπ’ ἐξ ἐρεβους “Souls from Erebus of inanimate corpses” (Instructor 2.1.239), in ANF (2:239).

⁸⁷ John Spencer, De Legibus Hebraeorum (1685), lib. 2, cap. 12, sec. 1, fols. 339–49, supplies Mather with the raw material for his own annotations in the subsequent paragraphs. In his “Note Book of Authors” (Lev. 19:27), Mather recommends “Athanasius, in Op. To. 2. p. 399.” It is uncertain which of the several Greek-Latin editions of St. Athanasius’s works Mather refers to. The French Benedictine scholar Bernard de Montfaucon (1655–1741) produced a highly respected three-volume folio edition of the Alexandrian Church Father’s Opera Omnia quae Extant vel qua ejus nomine Circumferuntur, Ad mss. codices Gallicanos, Vaticanos (Parisiis, 1698). (CE).

⁸⁸ Spencer (339); Samuel Bochart, Geographia Sacra (1707), pars 2, lib. 1, cap. 6, cols. 361–62; and Hugo Grotius, Annotationes Lev. 19:27, in Opera (1:67).

Ἀκροκόμαι:⁹⁰ and many other Nations of Idolaters, have been, yea, still are, famous for it: as wee are informed, by other Authors, besides Herodotus, who tells us, that the Arabians, in Conformity to Bacchus, affected the Wearing of such a Lock.⁹¹ The old Phœnicians, had the Name of τροχοκούριδες, for this Lock, and the old Græcians called it ἐκτόριον κουράν. But it is not likely, that any Man in Israel, would commit so Capital an Offence, as to appear in Public, with an Head thus openly Devoted unto an Idol.⁹² Wherefore, the Author of the Things called, Apostolical Constitutions, urging of Modesty in Apparel, brings this Law, as forbidding all Curiosity about Hair at all.⁹³ But the Law being here placed in the Midst of Superstitions, wee must seek a further Sense for it. Now, tis very certain, that the Israelites did use an Orbicular Cutting of their Hair, which they counted not unlawful. When the old Poet Cherilus, mentions, the τροχοκούριδες, that lived near the Great Lake, Josephus tells us, that he doubtless meant the Jewes, living about the Lake Asphaltites.⁹⁴ Now, whether Josephus expound the Poet right or no, yett hee may bee credited as a competent Relator of that Peoples Manners and Customes. And Antiquity counted an Orbicular Tonsion of the Hair, to bee a venerable Fashion. Varro saies of the Children, Alij sunt circumtonsi; Agathias tells of the Franks, περίτροχον κείρονται, i. e. In orbem tondentur. And Sidonius Apollinaris mentions it, as a Piece of Neatness, Crinis in Rotæ speciem accisus. Or, shall wee say, That the Theseian Tonsure is here prophibited.⁹⁵ So saies Maimonides

90 Julius Pollux, Onomasticon (2.28, line 7). Ἀκροκόμαι, an epithet for the Thracians, suggests “those with hair on their crown.” According to Homer’s Iliad (4.533), the Thracians wore “their hair long at the top” but may have “shaved all their head except the crown” (LSJ).

91 Herodotus (3.8, lines 12–15) tells of the Arabians who, when making a pledge, invoke Dionysus (Bacchus) and Aphrodite (Venus). The Arabians deem these two deities as the supreme ones, Herodotus relates, and “cut their hair in circular shape and shave the temples” in imitation of Dionysus.

92 Choerilus Samius’s Fragmenta epica (fragm. 6, line 4) and Eusebius Pamphilus’s Praeparatio evangelica (9.9.1, lines 5–9) have τροχοκούριδες, “close-cropped hair” or “shorn all around” (Preparation 9.9.412b). Julius Pollux (Onomasticon 2.29.9–30.1) has Ἐκτόρειον ... κουράν, or “a foreign [strange] haircut.”

93 Spencer (340); Constitutiones Sanctorum Apostolorum Per Clementem Episcopum et Civem Romanum (1724), vol. 1, lib. 1, cap. 3, p. 205. See also Constitutions of the Holy Apostles (1.2.3), in ANF (7:392). On Mather’s views on hair styles, wigs, and related hirsute matters, see R. E. Brown’s “Hair Down to There” (495–514).

94 Mather alludes to the Greek epic poet Choerilus Samius (5th c. BCE), author of the epic Persica, which recounts the Greek struggle against the Parthians at the Battle of Salamis (Ζαλὺμοις) (EB). The reference is to the extant Fragmenta epica (fragm. 6, line 4) where the bard mentions those who are “shorn all around.” In his Contra Apionem (1.173, line 4), Josephus Flavius cites the same fragment from the epic poet Choerilus Samius and tells of a people who spoke “the Phœnician tongue,” dwelt in the “Solymean mountains, near the broad lake,” had sooty heads with “round rasures,” and looked like “nasty horse-heads” (Against Apion 1.22), in Works (615).

95 Marcus Terentius Varro, as quoted in an extant fragment in De Compendiosa Doctrina ad Filium (lib. 2, p. 190, lines 6–7), by Roman grammarian Nonius Marcellus (4th–5th c. CE), says that “some [children] are “shorn all around.” The Byzantine poet-historian Agathias Scholasticus (c. 536–c. 582), in his Historiae (p. 13, line 11), speaks of the Franks, whose hair is “clipped upon this Law; Ne quis, Gentilium ritu, capillis sit promissis; ne utrinque, tondeatur, relictis in Medio Capillis; nec a fronte præcidat Capillos, ab unâ Aure ad Alteram, relictâ occipitis Comâ; This, hee saies, was the Prohibition of this Law. But yett, wee must own, that the Galileans, who probably would keep this Law, are by Nonnus, on the Second of John, called, σπισθοκόμους: they wore no Hair before, and long Hair behind.⁹⁶

Wee must therefore enquire a little further.

First then, wee are to know, That it was a Funeral Solemnity, among the Ancient Nations, to Tear or Cutt off the Hair of their Heads or Beards, & cast the same upon the Corpse, or Tomb, of the Dead. Thus in Homer, you have Achilles thus performing his Parentation to the Ghost of Dead Patroclus,

Στας απανευθε πυρης, ξανθην απεχειρατο χαιτην,

*Standing by the Pile; hee cutt off his Shining Hair.*⁹⁷ And elsewhere, hee saies; That Miserable Mortals can do no more for their Dead Friends, but this,

Κειρασθαι τε κομην, βαλλειν τ' απο δακρυ παρειων,

To cutt our Hair, & shed our Tears, for them.⁹⁸ Apollonius mentions this Rite, among those at the Funeral of Jason. And that this Rite obtained among the Romans, wee find in Ovid,

Non mihi te licuit lachrymis perfundere Justis,

*In Tua nec tonsas ferre Sepulchra Comas.*⁹⁹

in a circle.” And the Roman poet and bishop St. Gaius Sollius Sidonius Apollinaris of Lyon (c. 430–489), in his Epistolae (4.13) [PL. 048. 0519], speaks of “the lock of hair cut in the likeness of a wheel.” The Greek hero and mythical founder of Athens, Theseus, wore his hair closely cropped to prevent his fellow combatants from holding on to his pate, hence “Theseian Tonsure,” or κοῦρὰ δὲ Θησῆως, in Polyaeni Strategicon libri octo (lib. 1, p. 9, line 10), by the Macedonian author Polyaeus (2nd c. CE), best known for his Stratagems in War, which he dedicated to the Roman Emperor Marcus Aurelius.

⁹⁶ Spencer (341, 342); Maimonides, De Idololatria (cap. XI, § 2, p. 143), in Gerardus Vossius, De Theologia Gentili (1641) 1:143. A modern translator renders it in Hilchot Avodat Kochavim V'Chukkoteihem (11.1), “We may not shave our heads from the sides and leave hair in the center as they [gentiles] do. This is called a blorit. We may not shave the hair on the front of our faces from ear to ear and leave a growth at the back of our heads as they [gentiles] do” (Mishneh Torah 3:198). In his Paraphrasis sancti evangelii Joannei (fort. auctore Nonno alio), Demonstratio (2, lines 6–7), the Greek epic poet Nonnus Panopolitanus (4th–5th c. CE) here paraphrases the Gospel of John. See also his Dionysiaca (13.420) on “wearing the hair long behind.”

⁹⁹ Spencer (344). In his Argonautica (4.1533–34), the Greek epic poet Apollonius of Rhodius (3rd c. BCE) tells that at the death of Jason, the Argonauts and the maidens gathered around his body and ἐμοιρήσαντο δὲ χαιτάς αὐτοὶ ὁμῶς κοῦραί τε, “they cropped their flowing hair and bewailed” dead Jason's suffering. Likewise, Ovid (Epistolae Heroidum 11.116–17) has Canace (offspring of Enarete and Aeolus) bemoan the demise of her beloved Macareus: “Fate did not permit me to shed o'er thee the tears I owed, nor to bear to thy tomb the shorn lock.”

Yea, so deep root it ha's taken in the Minds of People, that it is to this Day practised: as you may find in the Relation which Cotovicus gives of the Cretian Women.¹⁰⁰

Secondly, In thus divesting themselves of their Hair, the Manner of the Pagans was to endeavour, an Orbicular Tonsion. You have Cointus Smyrnaeus particularly asserting this, when hee reports, how they offered their Hair, at the Funeral of Achilles: hee saies,

— ἀμφὶ δὲ χαίτας
Μυρμιδόνες ἐκείραντο —
— Capillos autem
Myrmidones circumtendent. —¹⁰¹

And so, the Poet Statius, describes the Mourning of Archemorus, for his Dead Son,

— Tergoque et pectore fusam,
Cæsariem ferro minuit, sectisque jacentis
Obnubit tenuia ora comis. —¹⁰²
